The other kind of blaſphemous ſuggeſtions are ſuch, as are without all ſhew of reaſon or appearance of truth, ſenſeleſly abſurd, and no leſſe admirable for their ſottiſhneſſe, than for their helliſh impiety: theſe are ſeldome ſuggeſted into the minds of ciuill worldlings, or of any other who remaine the vaſſals of Satan, vnleſſe it bee ſuch as match himſelfe in impious malice againſt God; for they are aboue the pitch of naturall corruption, and appeare odious and abominable euen by the light of nature; they ſtrike horror and feare euen into the heart of a natural man, and ſeeme ſtrangly wicked to thoſe who are wholly ſwaied with the fleſh and the luſts thereof. And therefore it ſtandeth not with Satans policie, to ſuggeſt ſuch abominable thoughts into the minds of ordinarie ſinners, and ſecure worldlings, leſt hereby he ſhould waken their ſleeping conſciences, rouſe vp their dead hearts, and leaſt hauing vnreſiſtable occaſion to ſee, miſlike and bewaile theſe horrible blaſphemies, they ſhould hereby be mooued to repent, not onely for theſe, but alſo their other ſinnes. But theſe helliſh blaſphemies which cannot without trembling bee thought on, much leſſe named by a Chriſtian, he vſually caſteth into the mind of ſuch, as endeuour to come out of the power of darkneſſe, and to ſerue the Lord in vprightneſſe of heart; not vſing (it may bee) herein the helpe of the fleſh, as in other tentations, it being no fit inſtrument for this imploiment, becauſe theſe blaſphemies are ſo horriblie wicked, that they are aboue the conceit of corrupted nature, but caſteth this helliſh wildfire into the mind with great ſwiftneſſe and violence by his owne immediate ſuggeſtion. Or though the fleſh be vſed heerein, yet it is not with any delight but rather feare and horror ſeeing there is not any pleaſure, or profit to bayt this foule and deuilliſh hooke, but rather an expectation of fearefull and ſpeedy vengeance if they doe ſwallow it by conſenting vnto it.

Sect.5. maine in ſug- g theſe tikes blaſ- mies.

Now Satans maine ſcope herein, is not to moue or perſwade the Chriſtian, to giue aſſent and approbation vnto theſe horrible blaſphemies (although ſuch is his impudencie and audacious boldneſſe, that he will not ſticke to tempt them to the moſt helliſh wickedneſſe) ſeeing hee cannot draw a prophane worldling thus farre with his greateſt power and skill; but hee chiefly aimeth at other ends, as namely, that hereby he may worke in them ſuch aſtoniſhment of mind, horror of conſcience, diſtraction in their thoughts, by reaſon that hee perſwadeth them to thinke that they are their owne wicked imaginations, as that they may become vtterly vnfit to performe any holy exerciſe or dutie which they owe vnto God, as namely prayer, hearing the word, receiuing the Sacrament, reading, meditation and ſuch like, knowing that if either hee can moue them hereby to neglect theſe holy duties, or make them through the vnquietneſſe of their thoughts altogether vnprofitable, hee ſhall ſo infeeble them that hee may quickly obtaine ouer them an eaſie victory. So alſo becauſe hee knoweth that the aſſurance of our ſaluation, dependeth vpon our ſerious and ſound repentance; therfore hee mainely by theſe ſuggeſtions indeuoureth to hinder them in this holy action: for whileſt he wholly exerciſeth their minds and thoughts about theſe horrible ſinnes, which in truth they neuer committed, ſo much as in the leaſt approbation and aſſent, hee cauſeth them to neglect the ſight, ſenſe and ſorrow which they ought to haue, of and for thoſe ſinnes, wherewith indeed they haue offended the Maieſtie of God. Againe, hee laboureth hereby to ouerthrow their faith, and to bring them to vtter deſpaire of Gods mercy, putting them out of all hope that euer hee will bee mercifull vnto them, and forgiue them ſuch outragious ſinnes, ſeeing they doe ſo impiouſly (as he perſwadeth them) blaſpheme him to his face. And therfore leaſt they ſhould by their longer abode in this life multiply theſe horrible ſinnes, and ſo increaſe the fearefull meaſure of their iuſt condemnation, he tempteth them to lay violent hands vpon themſelues, and to ſeeke the mitigation of their helliſh torments, by haſtening their death. Laſtly, after hee hath by manifold experience learned, that by theſe ſuggeſtions hee little aduanceth any of theſe curſed ends; yet ſuch is his inueterate malice towards Gods poore Saints, that hee will not ſurceaſe theſe blaſphemous tentations ſo long as God permitteth him, that he may at leaſt turmoile and vexe thoſe, whom hee hath no hope to ouercome. And finding that theſe weake Chriſtians had rather ſuffer any torment, yea (if it were poſſible) a thouſand deaths, than they would haue their hearts a treaſurie for ſuch Satanicall blaſphemies, therefore hauing no hope to bring them into the paines of hell fire, hee beginneth a hell in their conſciences in this life, and tormenteth their ſoules with ſuch exquiſite malitiouſneſſe, that the moſt wittie and ſpitefull tormentors could neuer deuiſe ſuch helliſh puniſhments.

§. Sect. 6.
Conſolations to ſtrengthen vs againſt wicked blaſphemies.

Now that wee may bee armed againſt theſe impious ſuggeſtions, I will firſt propound ſome conſolations which may vphold vs in this terrible conflict: and then I will adioyne ſome meanes whereby wee may bee preſerued from the danger of theſe tentations. Concerning the former, we are to know and conſider, that they are not our owne thoughts but Satans ſuggeſtions, and therefore they ſhall not be laid to our charge as being our ſinnes, but ſhall be ſet vpon Satans ſcore, vnto whom of right they doe appertaine, together with the puniſhment due vnto them. Yea, but how ſhall wee know that they are Satans ſuggeſtions and not our owne thoughts? I anſwer, it will manifeſtly appeare by theſe infallible ſignes: firſt, in that theſe blaſphemous thoughts are in themſelues ſo outragiouſly wicked, that euen nature though much corrupted is not capable of them, vnleſſe by long cuſtome of malicious ſinning againſt God it is become plainely diabolical. For through Gods mercy there are ſome little ſparkes of the light of nature, and ſome ſmall and diuine reſemlances renewed in euery man, which make him to haue a reuerend eſtimation of Gods Maieſtie, and to abhorre theſe outragious blaſphemies: ſo that though hee remaine deſtitute of any dram of grace, or ſparke of true pietie, and continue a carnal worldling, ſecurely liuing in ſin; yet hee hath no liking or approbation of theſe diuelliſh thoughts, but rather is aſtoniſhed with horror and feare when as they are ſuggeſted in his mind. And therefore how much leſſe are thoſe capable of them, who haue receiued ſome meaſure of grace, and in vprightneſſe of heart deſire to feare, loue and ſerue the Lord? Secondly, they may plainely be diſcerned to bee Satans ſuggeſtions, by the manner of their iniection: which is not voluntarie, vpon deliberation and choice, or ſeldome, as a mans owne thoughts vſually are, but ſudden like a flaſh of lightning, with ſuch vnauoidable violence, that they cannot by any wit or ſtrength of the partie bee preuented, and that continually, one following in the neckes of another. Laſtly, whereas a mans owne thoughts being naturall, worke no extraordinary perturbation of mind; contrariwiſe theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions ſtrike a mans heart with ſuch horror and feare, that therewith the vnderſtanding is aſtoniſhed, the heart quaketh, the minde is diſtracted, the ioynts tremble, and the haire of the head ſtandeth an end; whereby it plainly appeareth, that ſeeing theſe ſuggeſtions are ſo contrary to nature, and worke therein ſuch grieuous and bitter effects, they are meerely præternaturall and diuelliſh; and doe not ariſe from our owne corrupt luſts, with which they haue ſo little familiarity and agreement. But though it were ſuppoſed, that theſe helliſh Blaſphemies were equally to be aſcribed to the fleſh and Sathan, yet is there no cauſe why the weake Chriſtian ſhould bee diſcouraged heereby: ſeeing the fleſh, that is, the corruption of nature and the ſinning ſin is no leſſe wicked and malitious than the diuell himſelfe, and both alike mortall enemies to the regenerate man, in all things oppoſite and contrarie vnto him, and he to them. For what the fleſh liketh, the ſpirit diſliketh, what that willeth, this Nilleth, and what this loueth and deſireth, that loatheth and abhorreth. And therefore the wicked luſts of the fleſh ſhalbe no more imputed to the ſpiritual man than the ſuggeſtions of the diuell, becauſe fighting on Gods part againſt them, it reſiſteth, hateth and aborreth them both alike. Yea if hee could put difference betweene them, hee would hate the luſts of the fleſh more than the ſuggeſtions of the diuell; euen as the attempts of an inward ſecret traytor are more to be hated than the outward and open aſſaults of a profeſſed enemie. And therefore the man regenerate is no more guiltie of the ſinfull luſts of the fleſh, than of the ſuggeſtions of Sathan; Seing he profeſſeth no leſſe enmitie againſt the one than againſt the other; condemning in his Iudgment, and in his affection hating them both alike. And in this regard the Apoſtle Iohn ſaith, that he that is borne of God ſinneth not, and that hee who ſinneth is of the diuell, 1. Iohn 3.8.9. And the Apoſtle Paul giueth the reaſon of it becauſe it is no more he that doth it, but ſinne that dwelleth in him. Rom. 7.17.

1. That theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions are not our owne ſinnes.

§. Sect. 7.
2. That in tentations blaſphemi[es are] common to afflicted Chriſtians.

Secondly, let ſuch as are vexed with theſe ſuggeſtions know to their comfort, that howſoeuer Satan to make their eſtate more deſperate, perſwadeth them that neuer any that belong vnto God haue ſuch blaſphemies caſt into their minds; yet the truth is as (I haue found by manifold experience,) that there is no kind of tentations more commonly incident to Gods deare ſeruants afflicted in mind, and exerciſed in theſe ſpirituall conflicts, than this tentation of blaſphemous thoughts. Yea, ſo ordinarily doth Satan fight with this weapon, that he durſt aſſault therewith our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, howſoeuer hee was the vnſpotted lambe of God, in whom there was no manner of ſin, no not ſo much as the leaſt degree of carnall concupiſcence; for what more horrible blaſphemie could be imagined, then to renounce God and his pure worſhip and ſeruice, and like Satans deuoted vaſſall, to fall downe and worſhip him? And therefore ſeeing no tentation hath taken ken hold of vs which appertaineth not to others, and ſeeing many of Gods ſeruants who haue beene thus tempted, are now by his grace deliuered from this tormenting furie, and in peace of their conſciences, and aſſurance of Gods loue, doe him faithfull ſeruice, and glorifie his name by their holy life and conuerſation: yea ſeeing our head Ieſus Chriſt was in the ſelfe ſame manner tempted like vs, and is therefore touched with the feeling of our infirmities, let vs not bee diſcouraged by theſe ſuggeſtions, but the more that Satan ſeeketh to diſhonor God in our hearts, the more zealous let vs ſhew our ſelues in ſeeking the aduancement of his glory; and the more furiouſly he aſſaulteth vs, the more reſolutely let vs make reſiſtance, and with all the powers of our ſoules repell theſe helliſh blaſphemies, and then we may aſſure our ſelues, that (like other of Gods Saints who haue gone before vs) we ſhall haue an happy iſſue out of all theſe tentations, and inioy a calme peace after all theſe dangerous ſtormes and bluſtering tempeſts.

2.Cor.10.

Thirdly, let them know, that it is not a ſin ſimplie to bee tempted, if wee doe not yeeld to the tentation, but reſiſt it with all our power. It is no fault in a chaſte perſon if a filthie harlot intice him to vncleanneſſe, nor in a mercifull man if hee be prouoked to commit ſome horrible murther; ſo long as they reſiſt theſe tentations, and ſhew their vtter deteſtation of theſe ſins: and ſo in like manner, when as Satan being a ſpirit, doth after a ſpirituall manner, inwardly ſuggeſt immediatly by himſelfe into our imagination or vnderſtanding his wicked blaſphemies againſt God, as his euill inſtruments ſuggeſt their tentations, according to their kind by the outward ſenſes, if we withſtand and abhorre them as wicked and diabolical, ſhewing no kind of liking of them, they ſhall neuer be imputed vnto vs as our ſins, but vnto Satan who is the author of them. For euen Chriſt himſelfe was tempted after the like manner, but was free from ſin, becauſe he withſtood the tentation and repelled the tempter. Neither doth our gratious God who is moſt iuſt, and moſt mercifull, require any thing at our hands which is and euer hath beene impoſſible vnto vs; but not to be aſſaulted with Satans moſt impious tentations, was neuer in our power, no not in the ſtate of innocencie, before the fall; and therefore the Lord doth not require that we ſhould not bee tempted at all, of which himſelfe alone hath the abſolute power and no creature; but only that being aſſaulted by the diuell wee make reſiſtance; and that putting on the whole ſpirituall armour, wee fight valiantly in this ſpirituall conflict againſt the enemies of our ſaluation. Neither hath the Lord promiſed that wee ſhall not be tempted (yea contrariwiſe hee hath giuen vs manifold warning of the malice, furie, and dangerous aſſaults of our ſpirituall enemies) but onely that hee will giue a good iſſue to the tentation, and not ſuffer vs to bee tempted aboue our power.

1.Cor.10.13.

¶. Sect.9.

How we may be aſſured that we reſiſt theſe blaſphemies.

But heere the weake Chriſtian will bee readie to demand, how hee may be aſſured that he hath reſiſted theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions, and not faintly yeelded vnto them, ſeeing his mind is continually troubled and moleſted with them? I anſwere, that in the outward man we reſiſt them, when as we do not ſo actually yeeld by our words or deeds, as that our yeelding is ſubiect to our ſenſes; & inwardly we reſiſt them, when wee neither approue them in our iudgement, nor imbrace them with our will, nor incline vnto them in our affection, with the leaſt liking or delight. And therfore when in our iudgement we condemne theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions, as falſe and damnably wicked, when our will ſhunneth them with great diſlike and is moſt auerſe vnto them; and when in our affection wee abhorre and deteſt them, and are much vexed and grieued that ſuch horrible tentations ſhould enter into our minds; when wee are affrighted and aſtoniſhed at their firſt appearance, and deſire aboue all things in the world to bee freed from them; then doe wee make that couragious reſiſtance which God requireth, and ſhall in the end find that gratious promiſe verefied vnto vs, that thus reſiſting the diuell, he will flee from vs, *Iam.*4.7.

Iames 4.7.

¶. Sect.10.

4. That theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions are not ſinnes to the faithfull but croſſes.

Laſtly, let them know to their comfort, that theſe Satanicall ſuggeſtions with which they are ſo much vexed and moleſted, howſoeuer they are to Satan moſt damnable and outragious ſinnes, yet to them who thus reſiſt them they are not euill; or (if euill at all) the euill of puniſhment, and not the euill of ſinne, which the Lord in his infinit wiſdome and goodneſſe turneth to the good of his children. For when thoſe who belong to Gods election, ſecurely liue in their ſins, and put off the time of their true conuerſion, the Lord ſuffereth Satan to ſcourge them with this three-ſtringed whip, that they may be moued hereby to flee vnto him by ſerious repentance; and to diſcharge againſt them theſe cannons of moſt fearefull tentations, that hee may awake them out of their deepe ſleepe of ſinne, and moue them through this extremitie of danger, to buckle vnto them the ſpirituall armour, whereby they may be enabled to make reſiſtance, not onely againſt theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions, but likewiſe all other ſatanicall tentations, which either draw or allure them to any ſinne. More particularly, when they haue not made that conſcience which they ought, of their ſinfull and wicked thoughts, either not regarding them when they are conceiued, ceiued, or not repenting of them afterwards: the Lord doth oftentimes correct this negligence in his children, and by theſe heauy croſſes moueth them not only to ſet a watch before their lips, that they offend not with their tongue, and carefully obſerue their actions, that they doe not ſcandalouſly tranſgreſſe his Commandements, but alſo that they keepe their hearts with all diligence, leaſt they offend the Lord in their ſecret thoughts.

Pſal.39.1.
Prou.4.23.

§. Sect. 11.
That though our corrupt fleſh be tainted with theſe blaſphemies, yet there is no cauſe of deſpaire.

But it may bee the afflicted Chriſtian will further complaine, that hee ſo much reuolueth theſe blaſphemous tentations in his minde, and hath beene ſo negligent and ſlow in rejecting of them, that hee greatly doubteth leſt hee hath yeelded vnto them ſome liking and approbation, and leſt his ſinfull fleſh be ſomewhat tainted with them, as being the Deuils inſtrument, either in admitting or entertaining them. To this I anſwer, that as there is nothing more vſuall, than for a ſecure conſcience to excuſe, when it is guiltie: ſo nothing is more common, than for an afflicted conſcience to accuſe when it is innocent, & to lay an heauy burthen vpon it ſelfe where the Lord giueth a plaine diſcharge. But that we may imagine the worſt, let all theſe accuſations bee admitted as true & juſt, yet there is no cauſe why they ſhould be thus deſperatly diſcouraged: firſt, becauſe their ſin being committed through infirmitie is pardonable, and therefore if they vſe the meanes of true repentance, as namely, to bewaile their corruption, to hate and abhorre it, to ſtriue and endeuour to mortifie and ſubdue it, the Lord will ſurely according to his gracious promiſes remit and pardon it. Secondly, it is not committed by the Chriſtian man if wee ſpeake properly, but by the fleſh and the vnregenerate part, the ſpirituall part in the meane time loathing and abhorring it, and therefore labouring and ſtriuing againſt it; as may appeare by that ſpirituall conflict which any in this caſe find in their hearts and conſciences. And therefore it ſhall neuer be imputed to the ſpirituall man, who all hee may reſiſteth theſe ſuggeſtions, but vnto the fleſh and part vnregenerate, the which alone ſhall beare the puniſhment, as when it is mortified and ſubdued by Gods Spirit, vſing as his inſtruments for this purpoſe, not only the hammer of his Word, but alſo temporary croſſes and afflictions. Laſtly, they are to know for their comfort and incouragement, that the Lord meaſureth not our ſins, according to the nature and matter of the ſins themſelues, but rather according to the affection of the Sinner, which giueth the forme and being thereunto; in regard whereof the moſt outragious ſin being entertained by the firſt concupiſcence onely, and then ſmothered, choaked and cruſhed, like an Embrio in the wombe, is eſteemed by God a farre leſſe and more pardonable ſin, than the leaſt degree of wickednes which is willingly committed, nouriſhed or defended. And therefore if they haue not ſo much as giuen their aſſent and approbation vnto theſe helliſh blaſphemies, but heartily abhorring them, haue earneſtly laboured to bee rid of them, their ſuite for pardon ſhall at the throne of grace find an eaſie paſſage, if it bee ſollicited and followed by heartie ſorrow and vnfained repentance.

§. Sect.
Of the
to be fre from theſe liſh blaſphemies.
1. Prayer.

And ſo much concerning the conſolations. Now the beſt courſes and meanes which we can vſe to free our minds from theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions, are briefly theſe. Firſt, earneſt and frequent prayer, wherein wee are to intreate the Lord that hee will rebuke Sathan, and reſtraine his malice; that hee will keepe a narrow watch ouer our imaginations, minds & hearts with his holy Spirit, and reſtraine the tempter by his power, that he may not caſt this helliſh wild-fire of blaſphemous thoughts into them, or at leaſt, that hee will preſently quench them at the firſt entrance, that they doe not inflame our concupiſcence with the leaſt liking of them.

§. Sect.
2. We pe proc
innocen

Secondly, ſeeing Satan will often terrifie and aſtoniſh vs, by laying theſe blaſphemies to our charge, as being our ſins; wee are often to appeale vnto the Lord, the ſearcher of the heart and reines as our ſupreame Iudge; and hauing the teſtimony of our owne conſciences to beare witneſſe with vs, we are to proteſt our innocencie; and ſo to diſauow theſe wicked ſuggeſtions, and to profeſſe ſuch hatred of them, that we would rather die a thouſand deaths, than yeeld vnto them the leaſt aſſent or approbation. And ſo this often cleering of our ſelues, will eaſe our minds of the burthen of Satans ſlanders, inflame our hearts with true loue towardes God, when we are not guiltie to our ſelues that we haue thus deſperately offended him, and finally preſerue vs from the leaſt liking of theſe helliſh blaſphemies.

§. Sect.
3. We to make much of theſe phemous geſtions.

Thirdly, we are not to ouer-value, or ſo much to eſteeme of theſe deuilliſh ſuggeſtions, as that thereby our vnderſtandings ſhould be dulled, our minds diſtracted, our ſenſes aſtoniſhed, and our hearts vtterly diſcouraged, and ſo bee made vnwilling, and vtterly vnfit to performe any good duties of pietie towards God, as prayer, reading, meditation and ſuch like, the duties of charitie towards our brethren, and the duties of our owne particular callings. For at this marke Satan principally aymeth in theſe his ſuggeſtions, and therefore if wee let them ſo farre preuaile with vs, he hath attained his deſire. But contrariwiſe rejecting them as abominable, and not worth either the thinking on or anſwering, let vs with a peaceable and reſolued mind goe forward in theſe holy and honeſt exerciſes. Yea the more violent and importune Satan is, in vrging and preſſing vs with theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions, that thereby wee may diſhonour Gods holy Name, the more earneſt and frequent let vs be in performing theſe Chriſtian duties, and the greater zeale let vs labour to ſhew in glorifying our gracious God, whom Satan ſeeketh thus maliciouſly to diſhonour. And thus when we ſhall with vndaunted courages continue all Chriſtian duties, and take occaſion by Sathans ſuggeſtions to bee more zealous and diligent in Gods Seruice, then hee being fruſtrated of his ends, will take no pleaſure to labour not only in vaine, but to loſſe; but will voluntarily put an end to his owne tentations. And herein our Sauiour Chriſt, hath propounded himſelfe as an example for our imitation; for when he was tempted by Satan to fall downe and worſhip him, he did not only repell inſtantly this blaſphemous ſuggeſtion, ſaying, auoid Satan, but alſo tooke occaſion hereby to be put in remembrance of that true worſhip and ſeruice which hee was to performe to his heauenly Father, as being proper and peculiar to him alone, ſaying, It is written, thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerue.

4.10.

ect.15.
ur va-o holy ſes muſt diſcons from ſe of

But heere the afflicted Chriſtian will bee ready to object, that howſoeuer this were a good courſe indeed for men of quiet thoughts; yet it would little auaile him who is ſo diſtracted in all holy duties with theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions, and ſo moleſted and troubled in his mind, that hee can neither pray, nor read, nor conferre with any ſenſe or vnderſtanding; but euer and anon hee is diſturbed in theſe holy exerciſes with theſe helliſh tentations; ſo that his hearing, praying and reading, doe not only become vnprofitable, but alſo are turned (as he feareth) into ſin. I anſwere, that howſoeuer they cannot performe theſe duties as they would, yet they muſt doe them as well as they can; yea and the more they are incumbred and troubled, the more earneſt and inſtant muſt they bee in doing of them. For theſe exerciſes are our beſt ſpirituall weapons, whereby we repell the force of the enemy: and therefore let not Satan perſwade vs, to caſt away our weapons in hope of peace, becauſe wee cannot manage them according to our deſire, for then being vtterly diſarmed, hee will obtaine an eaſie victory, and make vs his ſlaues. They are the Ordinance of God, & means of ſaluation, which he hath enjoyned vs to vſe; and therefore though we find no preſent good, nor haue any other reaſon to mooue vs to ſpend our time in them, yet let this be ſufficient that God hath commanded them, and conſequently ſetting aſide all manner of diſputation, let vs be diligent in performing of them in obedience to Gous Commandement. And ſo in the end we ſhall finde, that howſoeuer for the preſent theſe exerciſes ſeeme not onely vnprofitable vnto vs, but alſo hurtfull and ſinfull, yet the Lord will graciouſly forgiue our infirmities, and waſh them all away in the bloud of Chriſt, hee will accept of all our imperfect endeauours, and giue ſuch a bleſſing vnto them with his holy Spirit; as that they ſhall bring comfort and joy to our hearts, and eternall peace to our troubled conſciences.

§. Sect. 16.
4. We muſt not reuolue theſe blaſphemies in our minds.

Fourthly, if we would be freed from theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions, we muſt not much reuolue them in our minds, nor ſuffer them to haue a continuall reſidence in our thoughts, but forcibly withſtand them, euen when we find them entring into our minds, lifting vp our hearts vnto God in prayer, ſhewing our deteſtation of them, and deſiring the aſſiſtance of his good Spirit to confirme and ſtrengthen vs againſt them; or if they be at vnawares entred, we are preſently to reject them, and not ſuffer them to lodge in our hearts; and hauing giuen them a repulſe, we are to harbour in our mindes ſome holy and heauenly meditations, which hauing taken vp the roome, will keepe them from making ſo eaſie a re-entrance.

§. Sect. 17.
5. We muſt auoid idleneſſe & ſolitarines.

Fiftly, wee muſt haue a ſpeciall care to auoid both idleneſſe and ſolitarineſſe: And contariwiſe we muſt ſpend our whole time, partly in the religious duties of prayer, reading, and holy conferences, and partly in the honeſt workes of our lawfull callings, frequenting as much as conueniently we can, the company of ſuch as being indued with Chriſtian wiſdome, are ready in time of need to miniſter a word of inſtruction or conſolation. For idleneſſe prepareth vs for all tentations, and maketh our hearts like vnmanured grounds fit for nothing but for the weeds of Sathans impious ſuggeſtions; and ſolitarineſſe in this caſe, if in any, bringeth an heauy woe with it; for as much as the weake Chriſtian being falne and foiled in the conflict of tentations, hath none preſent to helpe him vp againe, but receiueth in his conſcience one wound after another, being altogether vnable to make any reſiſtance. And this was the reaſon why Sathan being to tempt our Sauiour Chriſt, made choice of the wilderneſſe, becauſe by manifold experience he had found theſe ſolitary places fitteſt for his purpoſe.

Eccleſ.4.10.

§. Sect. 18.
6. We muſt not too earneſtly ſtriue againſt theſe blaſphemies.

Laſtly, if by the vſe of all theſe meanes we cannot be rid of theſe blaſphemous ſuggeſtions, then muſt wee not too earneſtly ſtriue againſt them, or bee ouermuch vexed and grieued with them: but knowing that they are not ours, but the ſins of the tempter (as before hath beene ſhewed) which ſhall not be laid to our charge, who abhorre and ſtriue againſt them, but be put vpon Satans reckoning, who is the chiefe authour of them:

them; let vs quietly goe forward in our conſtant courſe of godlineſſe and righteouſneſſe, & not ſtriue ouer much with theſe ſuggeſtions, but let them paſſe as they come without any great diſmayedneſſe. For if we ſtop the paſſage of theſe furious wild beaſts with too much oppoſition and contention, they will be ready to run ouer and ſuppreſſe vs; wheras they will not much moleſt vs, if wee ſuffer them to haue an eaſie egreſſe. Neither will Sathan ceaſe to ply vs with theſe hatefull ſuggeſtions, ſo long as hee perceiueth that wee are vexed and turmoyled with them; for hee thinketh his labour well ſpent, though hee cannot ouercome vs, yet if hee can by moleſting and grieuing our afflicted mindes, hinder vs from quiet performance of all holy duties. As therefore a man who is trauailing in a journey of great importance, doth not much regard the barking and bawling of little Curres which ſet vpon him in his way, but conſtantly holdeth on in his courſe, becauſe hee knoweth they cannot hurt him: Whereas if he ſhould run after euery Dogge that commeth out of the doores and barketh at him, hee ſhould vainly ſpend his time and hinder his journey; yea by reſiſtance make theſe Curres much more fierce and eager in purſuing him, which will ſoone be quiet and leaue to follow him, if he neglect them and keepe on in his way: ſo if whileſt wee are trauayling in the wayes of Godlineſſe towards our heauenly Country, wee are ready to re-encounter theſe wicked ſpirits which lying in our way doe labour to ſtop vs in our journey with theſe helliſh tentations: which haue no more reaſon in them than the barking of a Dogge; we ſhall hereby hinder our journey and looſe our time, and make them more fierce and buſie in ſetting vpon vs, becauſe they ſee that they hinder vs in our way; whereas if wee neglect them and quietly hold on our Chriſtian courſe, as not regarding them, they will ſoone leaue vs, and quickly be weary of this bootleſſe labour.

Chap. XII.

Sathans tentations perſwading the Christian that hee hath ſinned againſt the Holy Ghoſt, anſwered.

§. Sect. 1. Of the ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt.

ANd ſo much for anſwere vnto thoſe tentations which ariſe from Sathans blaſphemous ſuggeſtions. Now wee are to come vnto thoſe, whereby hee endeuoureth to perſwade afflicted Chriſtians that they haue committed the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; for taking aduantage vpon the ignorance of weake Chriſtians, hee moueth them to beleeue that they haue committed this vnpardonable ſin, that ſo being paſt all hope of repentance or remiſſion, he may plunge them into deſperation, and ſo vtterly diſcourage them from going forward in the courſe of godlineſſe. The which his tentation is ſo vſuall and common, that there is ſcarce any who are exerciſed in this ſpirituall warfare, if they be conuerted vnto God out of their ignorance, whom he doth not encounter with this weapon. For as much therefore as ignorance is the chiefe ground of this tentation, therefore the beſt meanes to ſtrengthen our ſelues againſt it, is to know what this ſin is, which if we once vnderſtand, there is no danger of being foiled in this aſſault.

What the against the Holy Gho

The ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, is a generall deniall and oppugning of the truth & all Religion, of which the vnderſtanding and conſcience by the illumination of the Spirit are perſwaded and conuicted, proceeding from an obſtinate will and purpoſed malice againſt God and his Truth. The which ſin is committed of two ſorts of men; firſt, of thoſe who haue made profeſſion of the truth, and afterwards become Apoſtatacs, not from ſome part only, but from all Religion, condemning, blaſpheming, and perſecuting as hereticall and impious, that truth which before they profeſſed, and of which they were perſwaded. And thus did Hymeneus and Alexander ſin, of whom Paul ſpeaketh, 1. Tim. 1.20. Secondly, of thoſe who were neuer profeſſors thereof, whoſe conſciences notwithſtanding are conuicted of that Truth which they do oppugne: an example whereof we haue in the Scribes and Phariſes, Mat. 12.24,31. and in many of the learned Papiſts in theſe dayes, who maliciouſly deny and perſecute that Truth which they know and are conuicted of.

1.Tim.1.

Mat.12. Steuen Ga ner. See hi ry in the B of Marty

§. Sect How to di guiſh the againſt th ly Ghoſt other ſinn Hereby therefore it appeareth, that not euery grieuous ſinne againſt knowledge and conſcience is the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt: for thus Dauid offended, who was a man according to Gods owne heart; nor euery denying of the knowne Truth, if it proceed from feare and infirmitie, and not from malice and obſtinate rebellion, for thus Peter ſinned in denying his Maſter; nor all kinde of oppoſing and perſecuting of the Truth, if it be not againſt knowledge and conſcience, but vpon blindneſſe and ignorance, for thus Paul offended before his conuerſion, as appeareth, 1. Tim. 1.13. and many of the Iewes who crucified Chriſt, as the Apoſtle Peter teſtifieth, Acts 3.17. nor all malicious oppoſing againſt euery knowne Truth, but of the truth in generall and all true Religion; for this ſin is an vniuerſall Apoſtaſie from God and his Truth, and not onely a defection from ſome particular point thereof. So that though a man ſinne againſt knowledge and conſcience, through infirmitie, and not of malice; though hee deny the Truth through feare

1.Tim.1.13.

Acts 3.17.

feare and weakneſſe; though hee perſecute it through blindneſſe and ignorance; though he wittingly oppoſe againſt, and willingly perſecute ſome particular point thereof, and yet hold and profeſſe the generall, howſoeuer he hath moſt hainouſly offended, yet he hath not committed this vnpardonable ſin againſt the holy Spirit, and therefore is not excluded from repentance, nor vpon his repentance from pardon and forgiueneſſe. Whereby it manifeſtly appeareth that theſe poore Chriſtians which labour vnder the burthen of ſin, are meerely deluded by Satans falſe ſuggeſtions, and groſly abuſed through their owne ignorance, when as hee maketh them beleeue that they haue ſinned againſt the Holy Ghoſt. But let ſuch know to their comfort, that ſo long as they would not commit this ſin, or feare leſt they haue already falne into it, they are as yet moſt free from it, ſeeing it is not done of infirmitie or at vnawares, but vpon a malicious will, cleere knowledge and ſetled reſolution.

Sect.3. pious & hemous tions

But here the poore Chriſtian is ready to complaine, that hee is continually troubled with impious thoughts, and horrible blaſphemies againſt God and his holy Spirit, which hee feareth to bee the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt. I anſwere as before, that ſeeing theſe thoughts are a trouble vnto him, and ſeeing hee feareth to commit this ſinne, thereby it is manifeſt that he is not falne into it, as appeareth by that which hath beene ſaid. Secondly, hee is to know that his ſtate is common with Gods faithfull children, who are thus vexed eſpecially in the conflict of tentations, and before they haue receiued a great meaſure of faith, and fulneſſe of perſwaſion of Gods loue and fauour, whereby they are moued intirely to loue him againe. Neither needs this to ſeeme ſtrange vnto any who conſidereth of that maſſe of naturall corruption which remaineth in vs, euen after regeneration, which continually boyleth and fometh vp the filthy ſcum of wicked thoughts and blaſphemous imaginations; and of the malice of our ſpirituall enemy Sathan, who is ſtill ready to tempt vs by his ſuggeſtions to the moſt horrible and outragious ſins, if not in hope to ouercome vs, yet at leaſt to vexe and trouble vs. As we may ſee in the example of the holy man Iob, whom hee ſpared not to tempt vnto fearefull blaſphemy. But though wee cannot keepe the Deuill from aſſaulting vs, let not this diſcourage vs, yea, rather let vs be mooued hereby with more care and watchfulneſſe to withſtand him, for if wee *reſiſt him, hee will flee from vs, Iam.*4.7. But in this our reſiſtance, two things eſpecially muſt be obſerued: the firſt is the meanes whereby we muſt giue him the repulſe; which is partly by the Sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, whereby wee beate backe the tentation, proouing the wickedneſſe thereof by ſome teſtimony of Scripture, according to our Sauiours example; and partly by lifting vp our minds vnto God in prayer, deſiring ſtrength to withſtand the tentation. Secondly, we muſt take heed that we doe not reuolue the tentation in our minds, but preſently repell it, leſt theſe helliſh ſparkes taking hold of the tinder of our corruptions, doe at length inflame vs with horrible wickedneſſe, which at their firſt falling might eaſily haue beene extinguiſhed. And if we thus ſpeedily repell theſe horrible blaſphemies ſuggeſted by Sathan, they ſhall neuer be imputed vnto vs, but vnto him from whome they proceede, and that both in reſpect of the fault and puniſhment.

Chap. XIII.

Arguments to proue the certaintie of our perſeuerance grounded vpon Gods will and immutabilitie.

§. Sect.1. Satans tentation mouing the Chriſtian to doubt of his perſeuerance.

ANd thus haue I anſwered Sathans tentations which concerne our ſanctification. Now in the laſt place wee are to intreate of our perſeuerance which hee impugneth with no leſſe ſubtiltie and violence. For though the Chriſtian man haue attained to ſome aſſurance, that hee is elected, called, juſtified, and ſanctified, yet Sathan will not giue him ouer, but laboureth to perſwade him, that notwithſtanding all this hee may finally fall away and become a reprobate. Let it bee granted (will hee ſay) that thy ſtate now is ſuch as thou ſuppoſeſt, yet thou art in no ſafetie, neither canſt promiſe vnto thy ſelfe any aſſurance of attaining vnto euerlaſting life and happines, ſeeing thoſe onely which continue vnto the end ſhall be ſaued: whereas thou haſt no aſſurance of thy perſeuerance; nay, contrariwiſe, thou art in reſpect of thy frailtie and mutabilitie certaine of nothing more than thine vncertaintie. Call to thy remembrance the example of thy firſt parents, who were perfectly righteous and holy, more accompliſhed in all graces than any of their poſteritie, more ſtrong and able to endure and reſiſt all tentations, as being indued with free will, and therefore able both to chuſe the good and refuſe the euill, who notwithſtanding al this were ouercome, and of the children of God made the ſlaues of Sin and Satan. Did they therefore fall who were perfectly righteous, and canſt thou, who art moſt imperfect, hope to ſtand? were not they who were full of all graces able to indure the encounter in the day of triall, and canſt thou hope to make reſiſtance who art full of ſin and corruption? were they van-quiſhed who were ſtrong champions, and doeſt thou, who art weake and feeble, hope for victorie? were they allured by Satans tentations, to commit ſinne, and fall from God, who could freely will the good and nill the euill; and canſt thou hope to perſeuere and continue conſtant, whoſe will is captiued and ouerruled by thy corruption? Conſider further thy mutabilitie and vnconſtancy, thy exceeding weakeneſſe and frailtie, thy corruptions and imperfections; and on the other ſide ſet before thee, the mightie power, the ſubtill policie, the vigilant watchfulneſſe, and vnwearied diligence, of thy ſpirituall enemies who continually aſſault thee: and then thinke with thy ſelfe if there be any poſſibilitie, that thy weaknes ſhould withſtand their power; thy ignorant ſimplicitie their prudent wiſdome, and thy careleſſe negligence their carfull diligence. Laſtly, call to mind the manifold examples which thou haſt both read and ſeene, of ſuch as haue beene of greater gifts and graces, and made a much fairer ſhew than thou, of holineſſe towards God and righteouſneſſe towards men, who notwithſtanding haue finally fallen away and become reprobates, and therefore why maiſt not thou be one of this number? Seeing then the caſe thus ſtandeth, doe not fooliſhly flatter thy ſelfe with a vaine hope, that becauſe thou art elected, called, iuſtified, and ſanctified, therefore thou ſhalt bee ſaued; for though now thou art elected, yet hereafter thou maiſt become a reprobate; though to day thou art a child of God, and in his fauour, yet to morrow thou maieſt through thy ſinnes, bee a child of the diuell, and in Gods diſpleaſure bee reiected; though now thou art a member of Chriſt, thou maiſt become a limme of Satan; and though now thou art indued with the ſpirit of God, and with all the graces and gifts thereof, yet by thy ſinne thou maieſt eaſily loſe both it and them; and bee wholly and finally giuen ouer to runne on in thy former wickedneſſe vnto eternall death and condemnation.

Matth.24.3.

§. Sect. 2. The generall meanes to ſtrengthen the Chriſtian againſt the former tentation.

And thus doth Satan perſwade the Chriſtian man to doubt of his perſeuerance. The which tentations, if wee would withſtand, it behoueth vs not to ground the certaintie of our preſeuerance vpon our owne reſolution, ſtrength and graces which we haue receiued, for theſe are altogether inſufficient to vphold vs againſt the aſſaults of our ſpirituall enemies, who are farre more ſtrong than wee: but wholly diſtruſting in our owne abilitie, let vs reſt and rely onely vpon the Lord: for as it is he alone who hath beſtowed vpon vs all the gifts and graces which we haue receiued, ſo alſo haue we our growth and perſeuerance in them from him onely. And ſo wee may bee aſſured of our perſeuerance, notwithſtanding our owne weakneſſe, and inconſtancy, for it is God which ſtabliſheth vs in Chriſt, as it is, 2.Cor. 1.21. Though in reſpect of any thing that is in vs we might euery houre fall away, yet wee are ſure to continue in thoſe graces which we haue receiued, mauger the malice and power of all our enemies, for wee ſtand not in our owne ſtrength, but are kept by the power of God through faith vnto ſaluation, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 1.Pet.1.4. Though wee ſhould euery day loſe euerlaſting life and happineſſe through negligence, or ſell it away for the vanities of the world and pleaſures of ſinne, if it were in our owne hands, yet all this is not ſufficient to diſinherit vs of our heauenly patrimonie, for it is not at our owne diſpoſition, but our life is hid with Chriſt in God, as it is Col.3.3. And therefore though in our ſelues wee are as weake as reedes, and as vnconſtant and changeable as the wind and weather, yet are wee tenne thouſand times more ſure to perſeuere in that grace which wee haue receiued vnto euerlaſting life, than Adam in the ſtate of innocencie: for he ſtood by his owne ſtrength, which though it were great yet it was finite, but we by the almightie power of God; he by the vertue of his own free will, which was mutable and ſubiect to alteration, but wee by the will of God, which being immutable admitteth of no change.

2.Cor.1.

1.Pet.1.4.

Col.3.3.

§. Sect.3. The ſtate of the con ſie,

But let vs come more ſpecially to ſpeake of this maine controuerſie betweene the true Chriſtian and the enemies of his ſaluation, the ſtate whereof ſtandeth thus; whether he that is elected in Gods eternall counſaile, and is effectually called that is, ſeuered from the world, giuen to Chriſt, and ingrafted into him by the ſpirit of God and a liuely faith, iuſtified, ſanctified, and indued with the ſauing gifts and graces of Gods ſpirit, may after all this fall away, loſe the ſpirit of God and the graces therof, and become as prophane and wicked as euer hee was before his conuerſion, loſe alſo his iuſtification, be cut off from the body of Chriſt, and finally become a reprobate. This the enemies of our ſaluation affirme, but we deny as being a thing impoſſible, not in regard of our owne ſtrength, conſtancie, or great meaſure of grace which wee haue receiued, but in reſpect of Gods will and power who vpholdeth vs, Chriſts interceſſion who prayeth for vs, and Gods holy ſpirit alwayes dwelling in vs, whereby wee are ſo ſtrengthened and confirmed, that all the power of hell cannot preuaile againſt vs.

§. Sect.4. The firſt ar gument gr ded vpon Gods wil

This our aſſertion wee will firſt confirme by vnfallible reaſons, and afterwards anſwere the contrarie obiections which are made againſt this truth by the enemies of our ſaluation. The reaſons which may bee al-alleaged for this purpoſe are many; the firſt ſort are taken from Gods owne nature, as it is deſcribed in his word, and exerciſed in his works towards vs. As firſt wee may bee aſſured of our preſeuerance, becauſe it is grounded vpon Gods will, which may be conſidered either in his ſecret counſaile and decree of election, or in his will reuealed in his word. From the firſt wee may thus reaſon. Whomſoeuer the Lord in his eternall counſaile hath elected to euerlaſting life, they ſhall moſt certainely be ſaued, and perſeuere in the meanes tending thereunto, which are no leſſe contained in Gods decree then our ſaluation it ſelfe. But the Lord in in his eternall counſaile hath elected all the faithfull vnto eternall life. And therefore nothing can hinder their ſaluation, nor yet their perſeuerance, without which it is impoſſible they ſhould be ſaued. The firſt part of this reaſon is cleere and manifeſt; for not to effect that which one hath decreed and purpoſed, argueth either impotencie and want of power, or vnconſtancie, neither of which without blaſphemie can bee aſcribed vnto God; for there is nothing hard vnto him, Iere. 32. 17. but he doth whatſoeuer hee will, Pſal. 115. 3. yea euen thoſe things which vnto men are impoſſible are poſſible vnto him, Mat. 19. 26. for he can doe all things, Iob. 42. 2. Neither is the will of God mutable, for this argueth a want of wiſedome, whereas his wiſedome is infinite and knoweth no end, Pſal. 145. 5. and hee perfectly ſeeth and knoweth all things in one view, paſt, preſent and to come, Heb. 4. 13. and therefore we may conclude with the Apoſtle, that the purpoſe of God in his election remaineth ſure, Rom. 9. 11. and the foundation of God (that is, his vnchangeable decree) continueth firme, and hath this ſeale, The Lord knoweth who are his, 2. Tim. 2. 19. Whoſoeuer then are elected they ſhall moſt certainely be ſaued, neither is it poſſible that they ſhould fall away: as our Sauiour implieth, Mat. 24. 24. whereas hee ſaith, that the falſe Prophets ſhould ſhew ſuch great ſignes, that if it were poſſible they ſhould deceiue the very Elect. Noting hereby that this is altogether a thing impoſſible, that they ſhould bee deceiued and ſeduced with falſe Chriſts and falſe Prophets. The ſecond part of this reaſon, namely, that all the faithfull are elected, is alſo of moſt vndoubted truth; for whoſoeuer haue a true faith they are iuſtified, whoſoeuer are iuſtified are alſo effectually called, elected, and ſhall be glorified; What ſaid I? ſhall bee? nay are already glorified, as the Apoſtle affirmeth, to note the vndoubted certainty of their ſaluation, Rom. 8. 30. Moreouer the Apoſtle maketh faith an inſeparable fruit of our election, and proper & peculiar vnto the elect, calling it the faith of Gods elect, Tit. 1. 1. And Act. 13. 48. it is ſaid, that as many as were ordained vnto eternal life beleeued, where hee maketh Gods election the cauſe of faith. And contrariwiſe our Sauiour telleth vs, that they beleeue not, who are not his ſheep, Ioh. 10. 26. So that it is manifeſt that thoſe who beleeue are elected, & thoſe who are elected ſhall be ſaued.

Act. 13. 48.

Ioh. 10. 26.

§. Sect. 5.
The ſecond reaſon, grounded on his will reuealed.

The ſecond reaſon may be taken from his will reuealed in his word; for whatſoeuer God thus willeth, that ſhall moſt certainely come to paſſe: but God willeth, that all ſhould haue euerlaſting life whom he hath giuen to Chriſt, in which number are all thoſe who are effectually called, as our Sauiour teſtifieth, Iohn. 6. 39. And this is the fathers will which hath ſent mee, that of all which he hath giuen me I ſhould loſe nothing, but ſhould raiſe it vp againe at the laſt day. And he willeth likewiſe, that he that beleeueth in the ſon ſhould be ſaued, as it is verſ. 40. And therfore thoſe who are effectually called and beleeue in Chriſt, cannot poſſibly periſh, but ſhall moſt certainely haue eternall life.

Ioh. 6. 39. 40.

§. Sect. 6.
The third reaſon, taken from Gods immutability in his loue.

The third reaſon may be taken from the conſtancie & immutabilitie of God, both in his loue towards vs, and alſo in his gifts. In the former reſpect wee may thus reaſon: Whomſoeuer the Lord loueth with a conſtant and immutable loue, thoſe ſhall moſt certainely be ſaued, ſeeing it is the nature of loue to deſire the good of the partie beloued, and to ſeeke his welfare as much as it can; but the Lord loueth his faithfull ones with a conſtant and perpetuall loue, as himſelfe teſtifieth, Ier. 31. 3. I haue loued thee with an euerlaſting loue, therefore with mercie haue I drawne thee. So Ioh. 13. 1. Foraſmuch, as hee loued his owne which were in the world, vnto the end he loued them. And therefore all the faithfull may aſſure themſelues that they ſhall bee ſaued, and being once aſſured of Gods loue, they may with the Apoſtle be vndoubtedly perſwaded, that nothing in the world ſhall bee able to ſeparate them from the loue of God which is in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord.

Ier. 31. 3.

Ioh. 13. 1.

§. Sect. 7.
An obiection againſt the former reaſon, anſwered.

But againſt this it may be obiected, that the ſinnes of the faithfull doe prouoke the Lord vnto anger, and moue him to caſt them off in his iuſt diſpleaſure, and to withdraw from them his wonted loue & fauour: and therfore ſeeing ſinne ſeparateth them from Gods loue, it may alſo plunge them into condemnation. To which I anſwere, that indeed the ſinnes of the faithfull doe in themſelues deſerue the euerlaſting wrath of of God and eternall death, if they were not taken away by Chriſt, who hath by his precious bloodſhed ſatisfied his Fathers iuſtice; and that euen now they ſo offend by their ſinnes their gracious Father, that they had need to renew their faith and repentance, be-before they can haue any ſenſible aſſurance that they are reconciled vnto him, and receiued into his loue and fauour. It is moſt true that God is diſpleaſed with the ſinnes of his children, according to that Eſa. 64.5. Behold thou art angrie, for wee haue ſinned. But this anger doth not exclude them out of his loue, ſeeing it is not the anger of an enemie but of a gracious Father, who is not angrie with their perſons to deſtroy them, but with their ſinnes to conuert and ſaue them. As therefore children with their faults prouoke their parents to anger, and moue them to turne their fatherly ſmiles into bitter frownes, and the fruits of their loue into the effects of hatred in outward ſhew, as namely ſeuere countenances, ſharpe reprooſes, and rigorous chaſtiſements; and in reſpect of theſe outward ſignes and effects of their anger they are vſually ſaid to be out of fauour and in their Fathers diſpleaſure, howſoeuer in truth at the ſametime they intirely loue them, and vſe all this wholeſome ſeueritie not becauſe they hate, but becauſe they would reforme them: So Gods children when by their ſins they doe offend him and prouoke his anger againſt them, are ſaid to bee out of his fauour, not that God doth euer change his Fatherly affection, or purpoſeth vtterly to reiect them, but becauſe hee changeth the effects of his loue into the effects of hatred in outward ſhew; as when inwardly he ſuffreth them to bee vexed with the terrors of conſcience, and with the apprehenſion of his anger and diſpleaſure, and outwardly whippeth and ſcourgeth them with temporarie afflictions; all which he doeth not for any hatred to their perſons, for he neuer hateth thoſe whom hee hath once loued in Chriſt, but for the hatred of their ſinnes, and loue of the ſinner, whom by this meanes he bringeth by the rough and vnpleaſant way of repentance, vnto the eternall pleaſures of his kingdome.

Eſa.64.5. How God is ſaid to be angrie with his children.

§. Sect. 8. Our perſeuerance proued by Gods immutabilitie in his gifts.

Rom.11.29.

And thus it appeareth that Gods loue and anger may ſtand together, and that notwithſtanding his momentanie diſpleaſure, his loue may be eternall. Now ſecondly we are to know, that as God is immutable in his loue, ſo alſo in his gifts, as faith, repentance, hope, affiance, charitie, &c. according to that Rom. 11.29. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance. But yet this is to be vnderſtood with diuers cautions; for firſt it is not to be vnderſtood of all the gifts of God, not of temporarie gifts, nor of the gifts of the ſpirit which are cōmon to the wicked with the godly; for theſe being not eſſentiall to a Chriſtian nor neceſſary to ſaluation, the Lord giueth or taketh away, as in his infinite wiſdome hee thinketh beſt; neither yet are wee to vnderſtand it of all gifts of the ſpirit which are proper to the elect, for ſome alſo of theſe being not of the eſſence of faith, but onely effects and fruits thereof, hee taketh away from his children for a time: as namely, the puritie of their conſcience, and the peace which doth accompanie it, the ſenſe and feeling of Gods loue and fauour, cheerefulneſſe of ſpirit, ioy in the holy Ghoſt, patience, the gift of prayer and ſuch like; becauſe his loue and the ſaluation of the faithfull may ſtand with the want of theſe gifts for a time. Neither are we to vnderſtand this of the actions and ſenſible fruits of Gods graces, for theſe alſo haue their intermiſſions, the graces themſelues notwithſtanding remaining. For as the Sunne doth alwaies ſhine, and yet ſometimes the beames thereof are not diſcerned, being hindred from ſpreading themſelues by the interpoſition of the clouds, or of the earth, and the fire doth continue light and hot in it ſelfe, and yet being couered with aſhes doth giue neither light nor heate to the ſtanders by; ſo theſe graces of Gods ſpirit, faith, hope, affiance, loue and ſuch like, may in reſpect of their ſubſtance habitually remaine in vs, and yet for a time not ſend forth the light and heate of ioy, comfort, peace and the reſt; & though they retaine their nature ſtill, yet they may be hindred from exerciſing their actions and functions; as namely, when as the conſcience is wounded with ſome wilfull ſinne commited againſt knowledge, or in the ſpirituall conflict of tentations, as before I haue ſhewed at large. Laſtly, this is not to be vnderſtood of their meaſure and degree at leaſt in our ſenſe and feeling, or in their actions and operations, for theſe graces haue their full and waine, their ebbe and tide, their perfect ſtrength and their faint languiſhing; but of their ſubſtance, habits and true being, in which reſpect they neuer faile, but continue without intermiſſion vnto the end, for as the gift of faith, ſo all other the like graces are the worke of God, as our Sauiour teacheth vs, Ioh. 6.29. and we may aſſure our ſelues of this, That hee that hath begunne this good worke in vs, will alſo finiſh and perfect it vntill the day of Ieſus Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh Phil. 1.6.

Pſal.51.1 11,12,15.

Ioh.6.

Phil.1.6.

Chap. XIIII.

Of the fourth and fifth reaſon to proue the certaintie of our perſeuerance, grounded vpon Gods power and truth.

§. Sect. The fourt reaſon g ded vpo Gods potency.

THe fourth reaſon may be taken from Gods omnipotencie and almighty power: for if God in reſpect of his infinite loue, be willing that we ſhall be ſaued & preſeuere in the means of our ſaluation, and be immutable alſo and vnchangeable in his loue and will, and likewiſe in reſpect of his power infinit and almightie, able to effect whatſoeuer hee willeth: then ſurely being aſſured that we are in the ſtate of grace, and in Gods loue and fauour, there is no doubt but we ſhall be ſaued, and perſeuere in the meanes which are inſeparably ioyned with our ſaluation. But as the Lord in reſpect of his loue is moſt willing, ſo in reſpect of his power he is able, continually to vphold vs in the ſtate of grace, and to fruſtrate and deface all the malice and might of all our enemies, who labour to hinder our ſaluation; for hee is omnipotent and mightie to ſaue, as it is Eſa. 63.1. And though through our frailtie and weakeneſſe wee might continually bee vanquiſhed and drawne from God, yet now there is no doubt heereof, ſeeing wee doe not ſtand in our owne ſtrength, but are kept by the power of God through faith vnto ſaluation, as it is, 1.Pet. 1.5. though in our ſelues we are impotent and feeble, yet we are ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, and being armed with the armour of God, we are inabled to ſtand againſt the aſſaults of the diuell, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh Epheſ. 6.10.11. Though wee are of little force in regard of our owne ſtrength and able to doe nothing, yet are we able to do all things through the helpe of Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth vs, as it is, Phil. 4.13. though we be weake in faith, and vnable to ſtand, yet being the ſeruants of God we ſhall be eſtabliſhed; for God is able to make vs ſtand, Rom. 14.4. In a word, though our ſpirituall enemies are ſtronger then we, yet ſhall they not bee able to plucke vs from Chriſt: For the father which gaue vs to him is greater then all, and none is able to take vs out of the fathers hand, as our Sauiour reaſoneth, Iohn 10.28.29. And therefore when wee are diſcouraged and ready to faint, in the ſight and ſenſe of our owne weakneſſe, and our enemies mightie power, let vs comfort our ſelues in the Lord, ſaying with the Apoſtle, I know whom I haue beleeued, and I am perſwaded hee is able to keepe that which I haue committed to him againſt that day, as it is 2.Tim. 1.12.

The fifth reaſon is grounded vpon Gods truth and fidelitie, which is ſo infallible, that whatſoeuer he hath ſpoken, promiſed, or couenanted, that he will moſt certainely performe: for God is a faithfull and true witneſſe, Apoc. 1.5. and all his promiſes in Chriſt are Yea and Amen, 2. Corinth. 1.20. So that it is more eaſie that heauen and earth ſhould paſſe away, than that one title of Gods word ſhould fall vnaccompliſhed, Luk. 16.17. But the Lord in his word hath aſſured all that beleeue, that he will vphold and preſerue them vnto euerlaſting life, againſt all the furie of their enemies; as may appeare both by his couenant which he hath made with his Church in generall, and alſo by particular promiſes made to al the faithfull. Concerning the firſt, the Lord maketh this couenant with his Church Eſa. 59.21. I will (ſaith hee) make this my couenant with them; my ſpirit that is vpon thee, and my words which I haue put in thy mouth, ſhal not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeede, nor out of the mouth of the ſeede of thy ſeede, ſaith the Lord, from henceforth euen for euer. If therefore Gods ſpirit neuer departeth from them, and they for euer confeſſe and profeſſe his word and truth, then certainly they can neuer fall away nor loſe their heauenly inheritance. For, if the ſpirit of him that raiſed vp Ieſus from the dead dwell in vs, hee ſhall alſo quicken our mortall bodies, becauſe his ſpirit dwelleth in vs, as it is Rom. 8:11. And as many as are led by the ſpirit of God, they are the ſons of God verſ. 14. And if we bee children wee are alſo heires, &c. verſe. 17. So Ier. 32. 38. I will bee their God, and they ſhall be my people. Verſ. 39. And I will giue them one heart and one way, that they may feare me for euer, for the wealth of them and of their children after him, 40. And I wil make an euerlaſting couenant with them, that I will neuer turne away from them to doe them good, but I will put my feare in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me, &c. If therefore the Church and people of God ſhall feare him for euer, If his couenant be euerlaſting, if hee will neuer depart from them, nor they from him, then certainely there is no doubt of their perſeuerance. And chap. 31. 31. 32. The Lord ſaith that hee will make a new couenant with his Church, not according to the couenant which he made with their Fathers. 33. But this ſhall bee the couenant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael, after theſe daies (ſaith the Lord) I will put my Law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will bee their God, and they ſhall be my people, &c. And I will forgiue their iniquitie, and I will remember their ſinnes no more. In which words the Lord couenanteth, that his Law ſhould euer remaine ſo deeply ingrauen in their hearts, that nothing ſhould blot it out, and that they ſhould continually meditate and delight themſelues therein; for thus this phraſe of writing in the heart is vſually taken in the Scriptures. So likewiſe he aſſureth them of the perpetuall pardon of their ſinnes, so that their ſinnes ſhould neuer make fruſtrate that couenant which he had made with them. So Hoſ. . 29. And I will marry thee vnto mee for euer, yea, I will marry thee vnto mee in righteouſneſſe and in iudgement, and in mercy and compaſſion. 20. I will marry thee vnto mee in faithfulneſſe, and thou ſhalt know the Lord. If therefore the Church of God ſhall bee married vnto him for euer in righteouſneſſe, and faithfulnes

Eſa. 59.21.

Rom 8, 11.

Rom. 8.11.14.17.

Ierem. 32.38.39.40.

Ier. 31.31.32.

Rom. 2.15.
2.Cor. 3.3.

Hoſ. 2.19.20.

and in mercie and compaſſion, then can neither their faith and righteouſneſſe towards God, nor his mercy and compaſſion towards them faile, but both ſhall continue vnto the end. Seeing then the couenant which is betweene God and vs, doth aſſure vs of the continuance of his loue and mercy, and of our perſeuerance in his feare and holy obedience, wee need not to doubt either of the ceaſing of his loue, or our falling away. For though the mountaines remooue, and the hils fall downe, yet ſhall not his mercy depart from his children, neither ſhall the couenant of his peace fall away. As the Lord himſelfe proteſteth, Eſay 54.10.

Eſay 54.10.

§. Sect. 3. An obiection taken from our faultineſſe, anſwered.

And thus haue I prooued the certaintie of our perſeuerance, by the Couenant of grace which God hath made with his Church; for whatſoeuer the Lord promiſeth to the whole body of the Church, that hee alſo promiſeth to euery particular member thereof; ſeeing the whole containeth all its parts; ſo that whatſoeuer belongeth to the whole body, that alſo belongeth to all the members. But it may be obiected, that howſoeuer this Couenant on Gods part is firme and eternall, yet by our fault and tranſgreſſion it may bee made void and fruſtrate. I anſwere, that ſo likewiſe the Couenant made with the Iſraelites was firme on Gods part, yet made fruſtrate by their ſins; but the Lord hath made a new Couenant with vs, not of workes but of grace, vpon the condition of faith and repentance, which being obſerued on our part, our ſins and vnworthineſſe cannot make it fruſtrate and of none effect; as before I haue ſhewed more at large.

§. Sect. 4. Of the particular promiſes of our perſeuerance.

Pſal. 1.3.

Ezech. 47.12.

Secondly, we are aſſured of our perſeuerance, by Gods particular promiſes made to his faithfull ones. Pſal. 1.3. it is ſaid of the righteous man, that hee ſhall be like a tree planted by the riuers of waters, that will bring forth her fruits in due ſeaſon, whoſe leafe ſhall not fade, &c. As therefore the tree planted by the Riuer ſide doth not wither, becauſe continually it ſucketh moyſture, whereby it is quickned and refreſhed: ſo the righteous man perſeuereth in his righteouſneſſe, becauſe he is continually reuiued and quickned with that ſpirituall moyſture, which hee ſucketh from Chriſt who is the liuely root, whereof he is a branch. Pſ. 15.5. He that doth theſe things ſhall neuer bee moued. Pſal. 37.24. Though (the righteous man) fall, he ſhall not be caſt off; for the Lord putteth vnder his hand. Pſal. 112.6. Surely hee ſhall neuer be moued, but the righteous ſhall bee had in euerlaſting remembrance. And Verſe 9. His righteouſneſſe remaineth for euer. Pſal. 125.1. They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as mount Sion, which cannot be remoued, but remaineth for euer. Iohn 4.14. Whoſoeuer drinketh of the water that I ſhall giue him, ſhall neuer be more athirſt, but the water which I ſhall giue him ſhall be in him a well of water, ſpringing vp to euerlaſting life. Where by this water we are to vnderſtand the Holy Ghoſt, as appeareth, Iohn 7.38. Hee that beleeueth in mee, as ſaith the Scripture, out of his belly ſhall flow riuers of the water of life. 39. This (ſaith the Euangeliſt) ſpake he of the Spirit which they that beleeued in him ſhould receiue. So that to drinke of this water is through faith in Chriſt to bee made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, whom whoſoeuer receiueth ſhall retaine him vnto the end. As therefore he that hath a liuing fountain continually ſpringing in him cannot be a thirſt; ſo they who haue this fountaine of life perpetually ſpringing in them, they ſhall neuer thirſt any more but it ſhall continually refreſh and quicken them, till they haue attained vnto euerlaſting life. Iohn 6.35. I am the bread of life, hee that commeth to mee ſhall not hunger, and hee that beleeueth in me ſhall neuer thirſt. And Verſe 37. All that the Father giueth mee ſhall come vnto mee; and him that commeth to mee I caſt not away. And Verſe 51. I am the liuing bread which came downe from heauen, if any man eate of this bread he ſhall liue for euer. And Verſe 54. Whoſoeuer eateth my fleſh and drinketh my bloud, hath eternal life, and I will raiſe him vp at the laſt day, &c. Now whoſoeuer beleeue in Chriſt, they eate his fleſh, and drinke his bloud; for faith is the mouth of the ſoule, whereby wee feed on this heauenly food; and therefore all the faithfull ſhall haue euerlaſting life; yea, as hee ſaith, they haue it already, and ſhall not come into condemnation, but haue paſſed from death to life, as it is Iohn 5.24. and Iohn 10.28. I will giue vnto them eternall life, and they ſhall neuer periſh, neither ſhall any plucke them out of my hand. 29. My Father which gaue them me is greater then all, and none is able to take them out of my Fathers hand. In which words he both ſheweth his will in his promiſe, and his power to performe it, and therefore whoſoeuer are the ſheepe of Chriſt, they cannot be taken from him, neither for a time nor eternally: for ſo it ſhould follow (if Chriſts reaſon be of any force) that they who tooke them from him ſhould bee ſtronger than Chriſt and his Father, which were a horrible blaſphemy for any to imagine.

Pſal. 15.5.

Pſal. 37.24.

Pſal. 112.6.

Verſe 9.

Pſal. 125.1.

Iohn 4.14.

Iohn 7.3

Iohn 6.3

51.54

Iohn 5.24. and 10.28.

§. Sect.

An ob tending fruſtrat former ſes,

But here it is obiected, that theſe promiſes are made to all the faithfull ſo long as they continue faithfull, and to the ſheep of Chriſt ſo long as they are his ſheepe, who abide in his word and follow him. But when they ceaſe to beleeue and to bee his ſheepe, they doe not appertaine vnto him, for they onely remayne the Diſciples of Chriſt who abide in his word, and haue his word abiding in them, Iohn 8.31. and 15.7. To which I anſwere, that this is an idle trifling in a circular diſputation, and a vaine begging of the que-

Iohn 8.31. and 15.7.

queſtion in controuerſie. For the queſtion is, whether the faithfull may bee aſſured of their perſeuerance in faith, whether a member of Chriſt may bee aſſured to continue a member of Chriſt, whether a ſheepe of Chriſt may aſſure himſelfe that hee is to remayne for euer a ſheepe of Chriſt. We hold the affirmatiue part, and prooue it by diuers teſtimonies; they denie that theſe promiſes are abſolute, but on this condition, that wee are aſſured none can plucke vs from Chriſt, ſo long as wee continue and retaine the nature of the members and ſheepe of Chriſt. But I would faine know what it is to bee ſeparated and plucked from Chriſt, but to ceaſe to bee a member or ſheepe of Chriſt, and to loſe their nature? and what is it to bee a ſheepe of Chriſt but to heare his word and to follow him? When as then our Sauiour Chriſt promiſeth that none ſhall plucke his ſheepe from him, hee promiſeth that none ſhall be able to make them ceaſe to be his ſheepe, nor depriue them of their nature, which is the eſſentiall forme that maketh them to be his ſheepe, rather then other who neither heare his word nor follow him. Whereas therefore they affirme, that theſe promiſes doe aſſure vs to perſeuere ſo long as wee continue and retaine the nature of the ſheepe and members of Chriſt, what is it but idely to repeate the ſame thing? namely, that Gods promiſes doe aſſure vs to perſeuere, ſo long as we doe perſeuere; that we ſhall not be plucked from Chriſt, ſo long as wee remayne with Chriſt; that wee ſhall continue the members and ſheepe of Chriſt, ſo long as we continue to be his ſheepe and members, that we ſhall not loſe our faith, ſo long as we continue faithfull. And what is it to ſay that the ſheepe of Chriſt ſhal ſo long continue to bee his ſheepe as they retaine their nature, but to grant alſo that they may loſe their nature, and conſequently ceaſe to bee Chriſts ſheepe, and ſo bee plucked from him, which is quite contrary to his promiſe?

Chap. XV.

Of eight other Reaſons which prooue the certaintie of our perſeuerance.

ect.1.
t rea-en from s inter-11.42.

The ſixt reaſon to aſſure vs of our perſeuerance may bee taken from the interceſſion of Chriſt for vs to God the Father. For whatſoeuer Chriſt himſelfe maketh requeſt for in the behalfe of his faithfull, that without doubt the Father granteth vnto him, for God heareth him alwayes, Iohn 11.42. But he continually maketh requeſt for them that their faith faile not, as appeareth, Luke 22.32. He prayeth for them, Iohn 17.9. that the Father would keepe them in his Name whom he had giuen vnto him; That they may be one, as hee and the Father are one, Verſe 11. That hee would preſerue them from euill, Verſe 15. and what greater euill then to fall from grace and God alſo? That they all may be one, as the Father is in Chriſt, and Chriſt in him, Verſe 21. That they be with Chriſt where he is, and may behold his glory, Verſe 24. Hee maketh alſo interceſſion for all thoſe whom he hath redeemed, that they may bee ſaued, notwithſtanding their ſins into which they fall through the ſtrength of their corruptions, as appeareth 1. Iohn 2.1,2. And therefore all theſe things are granted vnto him by the Father, for the faithfull. So that now they may ſay with the Apoſtle, Rom. 8.33. It is God that iuſtifieth. 34. Who ſhall condemne? It is Chriſt which is dead, yea or rather which is riſen againe, who is alſo at the right hand of God, and maketh requeſt for vs. 35. Who ſhall ſeparate vs from the loue of God, &c? And though our corruptions bee many, and our weakneſſe great, yet we need not doubt of our perſeuerance to euerlaſting life. For wee haue an high Prieſt who is able perfectly to ſaue them that come vnto God by him, ſeeing hee euer liueth to make interceſſion for them, as it is *Heb.*7.25.

Luke 22.32.
Iohn 17.9.11.
15.21.
Verſe 24.
1.Iohn 2.1,2.
*Ro.*8.33,34,35
*Heb.*7.25.

§. *Sect.*2.
The ſeuenth reaſon taken from our vnion with Chriſt.

The ſeuenth reaſon may bee taken from that vnion which is betweene Chriſt and the faithfull, whereby hee becommeth their head, and they his members. For there is no head that will willingly permit any of its members to bee rent and torne from it, becauſe then it ſhould haue a maymed and vnperfect body. But Chriſt Ieſus is the Head of all the faithfull, and they the members of his body, *Epheſ.*5.30. And therefore he will not ſuffer any of them to bee pulled from him, and ſo periſhing make a mayme in his bodie, ſeeing he is alſo omnipotent and able to ſaue all thoſe who depend vpon him. Moreouer, ſeeing our Sauiour Chriſt who is our head, hath paſt all dangers, and now liueth and raigneth with God his father, we are alſo aſſured that we ſhall liue and raigne with him. For hee hath obtained this eternall glorie, not for himſelfe alone, but alſo for all the members of his bodie, as appeareth, Iohn 17.21.24. and therefore now there is no doubt at all of our periſhing, ſeeing our life is hid with Chriſt in God, as it is, Col.3.3. and conſequently no leſſe ſafe than his who now raigneth and triumpheth ouer his enemies. Whereof it is that they are ſaid in reſpect of the certaintie of their aſſurance, to haue already euerlaſting life, and to haue paſſed from death to life, Iohn 5.24. 1.Iohn 3.14.

*Epheſ.*5.30.
Iohn 17.21,24.
*Col.*3.3.
Iohn 5.24.
1.Iohn 3.14.

§. *Sect.*3.
The eight rea-

The eight reaſon may bee taken from the Spirit of God dwelling in vs; for ſo long as in ſon taken from the Spirit of God dwelling in vs.

it hath its abiding with vs, we muſt needes perſeuere in grace; neither is it poſſible wee ſhould fall away, ſeeing it is the fountaine and roote from which all graces flow and ſpring, and ſeeing it continually fighteth againſt, and ſubdueth the fleſh and the luſts thereof. But after we haue receiued the Spirit of God, it continually dwelleth and abideth with vs; for this is that ſpirituall water, of which whoſoeuer drinketh ſhall neuer bee more athirſt, but it ſhall bee a well of water ſpringing vp into euerlaſting life, as it may appeare by comparing Iohn 4.14. with Chap. 7.39. So Iohn 14.16. I will pray the Father, and he ſhall giue you another Comforter, that hee may abide with you for euer. 17. Euen the ſpirit of truth, whom the world cannot receiue, becauſe it ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him; but yee know him, for hee dwelleth with you and ſhall bee in you. And 1. Iohn 3.9. Whoſoeuer is borne of God ſinneth not, (that is, with full conſent of will) for his ſeed remaineth in him; neither can he ſinne, becauſe he is borne of God: where the Spirit is called the ſeed of God, becauſe by vertue thereof we are begotten vnto him. If therefore by the vertue of this Spirit we are ſo vpheld and preſerued that wee cannot ſinne with full conſent of will, nor haue it raigning in vs as it did before our regeneration, then certainly wee ſhall bee preſerued thereby from falling away, and notwithſtanding our ſinnes wee ſhall perſeuere in grace to euerlaſting life.

Iohn 4.14. and 7.39. Iohn 14.16.
1. Iohn 2.27.
1. Iohn 3.9.]

§. Sect. 4. The ninth reaſon taken from the effects of the ſpirit.
1. Iohn 2.20,27. Rom. 8.14,17.

The ninth argument may bee taken from the effects of the ſpirit dwelling in vs; for firſt it teacheth and guideth vs in the way of Gods Truth, as appeareth, 1. Iohn 2.20,27. And as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſonnes of God, Rom. 8.14. and thoſe that are ſonnes are alſo heires, euen the heires of God, and coheires with Chriſt, Verſ. 17. Neither is it poſſible that thoſe who are guided with the ſpirit ſhould ſinne with full conſent of will, much leſſe fall away. For whoſoeuer is borne of God ſinneth not, namely, after this manner, neither can euer their ſpirituall enemies finally preuaile againſt them; for hee that is begotten of God keepeth himſelfe, and the wicked one toucheth him not, as it is, 1. Iohn 5.18. Secondly, the Spirit of God witneſſeth to our ſpirits that we are the ſonnes of God, and conſequently heires of his Kingdome, as it is Rom. 8.17. and his teſtimony is true and infallible. It alſo is the earneſt of our inheritance, and a pledge to aſſure vs that God will make good his promiſes vnto vs, Epheſ. 1.14. 2. Cor. 1.22. and thereby alſo wee are ſealed vnto the day of redemption, Epheſ. 4.30. And therefore ſeeing the Lord hath confirmed our aſſurance by the teſtimony of his ſpirit, by this earneſt, pledge and ſeale, wee neede not to feare our falling away, or to doubt of our perſeuerance. But of this I haue alreadie written at large in treating of the certaintie of our election.

1. Iohn 5.18.
Rom. 8.17.
Epheſ. 1.14. 2 Cor. 1.22. Epheſ. 4.30.

Lib. 1. ca
§. Sect.
The tenth reaſon, taken from Gods continua

The tenth reaſon may be taken from Gods continual aid in all trials & tentations; for if hee be alwayes ready to ſtrengthen and ſupport vs, we can neuer finally be ouerthrown, but though we fall, yet wee ſhall not fall away, but ſhall be raiſed vp againe in deſpite of all our enemies. For God is faithfull, and will not ſuffer vs to bee tempted aboue our power, but will giue a good iſſue with the tentation, that we may be able to beare it, as it is, 1. Cor. 10.13. And he knoweth to deliuer the godly out of tentation, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 2. Pet. 2.9. And therefore be our weakneſſe neuer ſo great, yet let vs not feare our finall falling away, but knowing whom we haue beleeued, let vs perſwade our ſelues of our perſeuerance, knowing that he is able to keepe that which wee haue committed vnto him, as it is, 2. Tim. 1.12.

1. Cor. 10.13.
2. Pet. 2.9.
2. Tim. 1.12.

§. Sect. 6. The eleuen reaſon, ta from the na ture of faith.

And theſe are the reaſons drawne from Gods nature in himſelfe and his actions towards vs, whereby we may vndoubtedly be aſſured of our perſeuerance. The ſecond ſort of arguments may be taken from our ſelues, and firſt from the nature of true faith wherewith we are endued, which is not temporary but conſtant and permanent. For he that hath a true and liuely faith, is like the houſe builded vpon the rocke, which neither the raine, nor flouds, nor windes could ouerthrow, Matth. 7.24,25. neither ſhall the gates of Hel ouercome him, Chap. 16. Ver. 18. He is like the good ground in which the ſeed falling is not ſtolne away, nor choked vp, nor withereth for want of root, but hee receiueth the ſeed and keepeth it, and bringeth forth fruit with patience, as it is Luke 8.15. And contrariwiſe, it is a moſt vndoubted marke of an Hypocrite who neuer was indued with a true faith, when as his faith is temporary, and he falleth away, according to that 1. Iohn 2.19. They went out from vs, but they were not of vs; for if they had beene of vs, they would haue continued with vs. But this commeth to paſſe that it might appeare that they are not all of vs.

Matth. 7.24. and 16.18.
Luke 8.15.
1. Iohn 2.19.

§. Sect. 7. The twelfth reaſon, ta from exam ples.

The ſecond reaſon may be taken from the example of thoſe who haue grieuouſly falne, and yet haue continued in the ſtate of grace, and haue beene raiſed and reſtored againe by vnfained repentance: And thus did Dauid fall, and that moſt grieuouſly, and yet was not depriued of Gods Spirit, as appeareth, Pſal. 51.10,11. Thus did Peter fall by denying his Maſter, Noah by drunkenneſſe, Lot by inceſt, and yet they were not depriued of thoſe graces which they had receiued, howſoeuer for the time they were much eclypſed and weakned; neither were they reiected by God, but vpon their true repentance were receiued into his former loue and fauour.

Pſal. 51.10,

The

Sect.8. laſt rea- taken the ina- of the which hinder perſeue- ce.

The laſt reaſon may bee taken from the weakneſſe and inabilitie of the cauſes which ſhould hinder our perſeuerance and make vs fall away. For there is nothing in the world ſo powerfull, but it is altogether too weak to worke this defection. For firſt, afflictions cannot depriue vs of grace, nor hinder our perſeuerance, as it is *Rom.*8.35. for though they are the fiery triall, yet they do not burn vs, but refine vs from our droſſe, neither doe they hinder our ſaluation, but rather cauſe vnto vs a farre moſt excellent and eternall waight of glory, as it is 2.*Cor.*4.17. Nor yet our fleſh: for though it bee neuer ſo ſtrong, yet the Spirit of God dwelling in vs, will in the end mortifie and ſubdue it. Not the world: for our Captaine Chriſt hath ouercome it, not onely for himſelfe, but alſo for his members, Iohn 16.33. yea and he enableth vs alſo by his holy Spirit to ouercome it. For all that is borne of God ouercommeth the world, and this is the victorie that ouercommeth the world, euen our faith, as it is 1.Iohn 5.4. Not the Deuill, for if wee reſiſt him, he will flee from vs, Iames 4.7. And he that is borne of God keepeth himſelfe, and the wicked one toucheth him not, 1.Iohn 5.18. Not our ſinnes, for they are puniſhed and fully ſatisfied for in Chriſt; and if wee ſinne, we haue an Aduocate with the Father, &c. 1.Iohn 2.1, 2. And for the corruption of ſin, though it dwell in vs, yet it ſhall not raigne in vs, *Rom.*6.12. Though wee fall into it, yet not with full conſent of will, 1.Iohn 3.9. for the regenerate man ſinneth not, but his corrupt fleſh dwelling in him, as it is *Rom.*7.17. Not any tentation, for the Lord is faithfull, and will not ſuffer vs to bee tempted aboue our power, but will giue a good iſſue vnto it, 1.Cor.10.13. Not any thing in the world, *Rom.*8.38, 39. for all things whatſoeuer ſhall be ſo diſpoſed by the wiſe prouidence of God, that though they be neuer ſo hurtfull in their owne nature, and apt to draw vs from God, yet they ſhall worke together for the beſt vnto them which loue God, as it is *Rom.*8.28.

CHAP. XVI.

Obiections againſt the doctrine of perſeuerance, taken from teſtimonies of holy Scripture out of the Old Teſtament, anſwered.

Sect.1. the Booke of , & what it be written nd blotted t of it.

And ſo much concerning thoſe reaſons whereby the certaintie of our perſeuerance may be proued. Now we are to anſwere the Objections which are made againſt this truth by the enemies of our ſaluation; all which are reduced to three heads: firſt, teſtimonies: ſecondly, examples: thirdly, reaſons. The teſtimonies which are alleaged to this purpoſe are many. The firſt is grounded vpon the prayer of Moſes, Exod.32.32. Therefore now if thou pardon their ſinne, thy mercy ſhall appeare; but if thou wilt not, I pray thee race me out of thy Booke which thou haſt written. From which place they thus reaſon: Whoſoeuer may bee blotted out of the Booke of life, they may alſo fall away and periſh; but a faithfull man may bee blotted out of the Booke of life; and therefore a faithfull man may fall away and periſh. The aſſumption or ſecond part of this reaſon which wee deny as falſe, they indeuour to prooue: firſt, by the petition of Moſes, for, ſay they, hee requireth to bee blotted out of the Booke of life; and therefore hee might bee blotted out. To which I anſwere: firſt, that Moſes requeſt is not abſolute, but to be vnderſtood with this condition, if it would ſtand with Gods will, and if hee approoued of his petition. Secondly, though it had bin abſolute, yet it followeth not that becauſe he requeſted this, therefore it might come to paſſe; ſeeing God (as appeareth in the Verſe following) diſalloweth and refuſeth to grant his requeſt, ſaying: Whoſoeuer hath ſinned againſt me, I will put him out of my Booke.

Exod.32.32.

§. Sect.2. Of Dauids Prayer.

Yea, will the tempter ſay, but though Moſes could not be blotted out, yet it appeareth by Gods anſwere that Sinners may, for hee ſaith, that hee will blot out him that ſinneth againſt him: and this his Objection hee will further prooue out of the prayer of Dauid, Pſal.69.28. Let them bee put out of the Booke of life, &c. I anſwere, that theſe phraſes of writing in a Booke, and blotting out of it, are metaphoricall and borrowed from the practice of men, and are vſed in the Scriptures, that the things thereby ſignified may be made plaine and eaſie to our capacitie and vnderſtanding. Neither muſt we imagine that God hath a Booke for to helpe his memory, or that he writeth or blotteth out; for all things paſt, preſent, and to come are in his ſight. But he is ſaid to write men in the Booke of life, either when he electeth them in his ſecret counſell, or when he executeth this Decree by receiuing them into his Couenant, and enrolling them in the number of his Church and Family; which is alſo done two wayes: the firſt is proper to the faithfull, who in deed and truth are within the Couenant, and are true members of the inuiſible Church: the other common to the titularie Chriſtian, who profeſſeth and eſteemeth himſelfe to bee in the number of thoſe who are in the Couenant of grace, and elected to euerlaſting life, and is ſo alſo reputed by others, becauſe he is a member of the viſible Church, and made partaker of the Word and Sacraments. Now hee is ſaid to blot men out of the Booke of life, in this laſt reſpect, when as he manifeſtly declareth and maketh maketh it knowne, both to the partie himſelfe and others that hee is no true member of the Church, nor within the Couenant of grace, and conſequently not in the ſtate of ſaluation. For as for thoſe that are enrolled in his Decree and Booke of election, and alſo in the catalogue of his Saints in the Church inuiſible, they can neuer be raced out; for his purpoſe remaineth in his eternall counſell; & the foundation of God continueth ſure, and hath this twofold ſeale, Gods knowledge whereby he acknowledgeth that they are his; & their regeneration wrought by his holy Spirit. Moreouer, if any thing could blot out them who are thus inrolled, it muſt be the filthineſſe and polluted ſpots of their ſinnes and vnworthineſſe: but our ſins and vnworthineſſe cannot mooue the Lord to race vs out of this Booke; for then the foreſight and knowledge of them in his eternall counſell would much more haue hindred him from chuſing and inrolling vs in the Booke of his election, ſeeing euery one knoweth that a leſſe cauſe will hinder the choice of any, then mooue them to reject the perſon choſen. Yea rather becauſe the Lord hath choſen vs, therefore hee will giue vs his holy Spirit, whereby he wil preſerue vs from falling into ſin with full conſent of will, and from giuing our ſelues thereunto with malicious greedineſſe. And as he hath freely choſen vs to eternall ſaluation without any reſpect of our worthineſſe, ſo alſo he will freely execute this Decree by giuing vs all the good meanes whereby we may be ſaued.

Pſal.69.28.

*Rom.*9.11.

2.Tim,1.19.

§. Sect.3.
Exod.32.33.

But let vs fit this generall anſwere to the particular places which are obiected; firſt, thoſe words of the Lord, Exod.32.33. are a threatning not denounced againſt the true members of the Church, who are inrolled in the Booke of Life, but thoſe who are the members of the viſible Church only; and in profeſſion alone, and not in practiſe; in ſhew, and not in truth; in their owne or others opinion, and not in Gods eſtimation, of the Lords Family, and in the number of his ſeruants. Secondly, it is not to be vnderſtood of all that commit ſinne, but of ſuch as ſuffer it to raigne in them, committing it with full conſent of will, purpoſely, and maliciouſly. Thirdly, whereas he ſaith, that he will blot ſuch out of his Booke, we are not to vnderſtand hereby that he would blot them out of the Booke of his election vnto eternall life, wherein they were neuer written, or that he would reject them whom he had choſen, but that he would race them out of the Book and roll of his viſible Church, and declare and make it euident to themſelues that they are not true members of his Church inuiſible, nor belonging to his eternall election.

§. Sect.4.
Pſal.69.28.

Secondly, whereas the Pſalmiſt prayeth that ſome might be blotted out of the Booke of life: Pſal.69.28. it prooueth not that the faithfull who are inrolled in the Booke of Gods election may be caſt out and rejected; for as it appeareth by the reſt of the Pſalme, he ſpeaketh onely of the obſtinate and malicious enemies of Gods Kingdome. And whereas he prayeth that they might be blotted out of the Booke of life, hee doth not deſire that thoſe who were in truth written in this Booke ſhould be blotted out, but that it might be manifeſtly declared that they who in their owne opinion, and in reſpect of their outward profeſſion, in the opinion of others, ſeemed written in this Booke, were not in truth euer inrolled. As though he ſhold haue ſaid; Doe not, O Lord, reckon them in the number thy of faithfull ones; & if in reſpect of their outward profeſſion they are reputed of thy Church and people, diſcouer and diſplay them, that it may manifeſtly appeare that they were neuer written in thy Booke, and ſo thruſt them out of the company of thy Church and children, that all men may know that they were but Hypocrites. For in regard that Gods Decree of election is vnſearchable and incomprehenſible to mans knowledge and reaſon, thoſe in reſpect of their opinion are ſaid to be elected, who are outwardly called and added to the viſible Church, profeſſing themſelues members thereof, which are the outward but not the infallible ſignes of Gods election, becauſe they are common to the Hypocrite with the true Profeſſor; and ſo likewiſe thoſe are ſaid to be blotted out of Gods Booke, whoſe hypocriſie is diſcouered, and who are thruſt out of the company of the faithfull. And therefore Dauid becauſe hee would haue Gods vengeance againſt theſe wicked ones plainly manifeſted, deſireth the Lord to diſcouer them, that all might ſenſibly diſcerne them to be but reprobates.

§. Sect.5.
Pſal.51.10.
Dauid loſt not cleanneſſe of heart and Gods Spirit.

The ſecond place is Pſal.51.10. Create in me a cleane heart O God, and renew a right ſpirit within me. From which place they thus reaſon: They that may loſe cleanneſſe of heart and Gods Spirit, may alſo fall away: but the faithfull may loſe both, as appeareth by the prayer of Dauid; and therefore the faithfull may fall away. I anſwere, that this aſſumption is falſe, neither can it be confirmed out of this place. For firſt it followeth not, that becauſe Dauid in his ſenſe and feeling diſcerned not his cleanneſſe of heart, nor the Spirit of God, that therefore he was deſtitute of them, ſeeing the iudgement of the ſenſe is often deceiued, as before I haue ſhewed, the gifts and graces of God not appearing in grieuous tentations, or being for a time couered with our corruptions. Secondly, Dauid in praying for theſe, doth not proue that he was deſtitute of them, but rather that he was indued with them in ſome meaſure: for vnleſſe his heart had been clenſed, he could not haue deſired cleanneſſe; and if he had not beene indued with Gods ſpirit, hee could neuer haue made this effectuall prayer that Gods ſpirit might bee renewed. Thirdly, this phraſe of creating doth not proue that he was vtterly depriued of cleanneſſe of heart, for it is improperly vſed, as appeareth by the next phraſe of renewing, whereby hee expoundeth his meaning: but therefore he thus ſpeaketh, that hee might in all humility confeſſe his great corruption, which made him think that a little purging was not ſufficient, vnleſſe the Lord, as it were created al anew. Fourthly, this is not ſo much to bee vnderſtood of the ſpirit of God it ſelfe once giuen, as of the gifts of the ſpirit, which were not vtterly loſt, but for a time did lie hidden, and in reſpect of their meaſure and degree which in his ſenſe and feeling were impaired and diminiſhed through his grieuous fall, and therefore he deſireth to haue them renewed and increaſed. Laſtly, Dauid taketh away the force of this obiection in the next verſe, where hee deſireth that the ſpirit of God ſhould not be taken from him; whereby hee implieth that yet hee was not depriued of it. Yea but Dauid (will ſome ſay) ſheweth by this ſpeech that he might loſe Gods ſpirit, otherwiſe he would not haue prayed vnto God, not to take it from him. I anſwer, that this rather proueth that he could not be depriued of it, ſeeing he prayeth in faith and full aſſurance to be heard, and to haue his requeſt granted, according to that, 1. Iohn 5. 14. 15. Secondly, as the Lord hath purpoſed to continue his grace and holy ſpirit vnto his children, ſo he hath ordained, that they ſhould vſe the meanes whereby they may retaine them, one of the chiefeſt whereof is effectuall prayer. And therfore when we vſe this meanes of prayer, it doth not proue that wee are in danger to loſe them, but rather aſſureth vs that wee ſhall perſeuere in them, ſeeing the meanes and the end for which we vſe them, are ioyned together in Gods purpoſe and counſell.

Rom.8.26.

5.24.

The third place obiected, is Eſai. 1. 21. How is the faithfull Citie become an harlot? it was full of iudgement, and iuſtice lodged therein, but now they are murtherers, &c. I anſwere, there is no ſtrength in this argument: for he doth not ſay, that thoſe that are faithfull may fall away and become harlots; but he ſpeaketh of the whole citie which was in times paſt inhabited with the faithfull, but now it was degenerate, and idolaters ſupplied their places: ſo that hee ſpeaketh not of the ſame perſons, but of diuers men in the ſame place, as appeareth plainly by the words following: It was full of iudgement, and iuſtice lodged therein. Secondly, hee doth not ſay, that thoſe who were indued with true faith were fallen away, but generally of all profeſſors of faith, and Gods true religion, amongſt which were more hypocrits then true beleeuers: but as for the true beleeuers and profeſſors they were reſerued by God in this great Apoſtaſie, as he ſheweth, verſe 9. Laſtly, though the faithfull had thus fallen, yet this proueth not that their defection was finall, and they vtterly reiected, ſeeing the Lord inuiteth them to turne vnto him by true repentance, and offereth them mercie and forgiueneſſe, verſe. 18.

1.21.

§. Sect.7.
Ezech.18.26.

The fourth place obiected is Ezech. 18. 26. When a righteous man turneth away from his righteouſneſſe, and committeth iniquitie, hee ſhall euen die for the ſame, &c. From which is inferred that hee who is iuſtified may fall away and die in his ſinnes. I anſwere, firſt, that he ſpeaketh not of one truly iuſtified by Chriſts imputed righteouſneſſe, but of ſuch an one as hauing done ſome outward workes of legall righteouſneſſe, is therefore iuſt in his owne conceit, or the opinion of others. And this appeareth, firſt, by the deſcription of this righteouſneſſe which hee ſpeaketh of, expreſſed verſe 5. vnto the ninth; where he ſetteth downe diuers outward duties of legal iuſtice. Secondly, in that hee calleth it his owne righteouſneſſe, verſ. 24. 26. Whereas the righteouſneſſe whereby wee are iuſtified is the righteouſneſſe of God, imputed vnto vs, Rom. 3. 22. that is, of Chriſt God and man. Thirdly, he ſpeaketh of ſuch a iuſt man as turning away from his righteouſnes doth according to all the abhominations that the wicked man doth, which is not incident vnto thoſe who are truely iuſtified and ſanctified, for whoſoeuer is borne of God ſinneth not. 1. Ioh. 3. 9. that is, committeth not ſinne with greedineſſe, delight, and full conſent of will as the wicked man doth who is not regenerate. This place then is impertinently alleaged, because it is to bee vnderſtood of thoſe, not which are truly iuſt, but in their own and others opinion, as our Sauiour alſo meaneth, whereas he ſaith, that he came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance: Matth. 9. 13. Secondly, though this place were vnderſtood of one truly iuſt, yet it maketh nothing againſt perſeuerance: for hee doth not abſolutely ſay that the iuſt man may fall away, but if hee turne away, verſ. 24. Which ſpeech being conditional, doth not proue that the iuſt man may turne from his righteouſneſſe, but onely ſerueth as a threatning or profitable admonition, whereby God vpholdeth them in their courſe of righteouſneſſe, and preſerueth them from defection by ſtirring them vp with this commination to care and watchfulneſſe and keeping them from retchleſſe ſecuritie. Thirdly, this ſpeech being a commination or threatning is to bee vnderſtood conditionally, if hee goe on in

Rom.3.22.

1.John 3.9.

Matth.9.13.

his wickedneſſe without repentance; but he that is truly iuſt, though hee fall, yet he riſeth vp againe, and notwithſtanding his fall, hee ſhall not be caſt off; for the Lord putteth vnder his hand, as hee hath promiſed Pſal.37.24. The like place vnto this is that, Ezech. 33.13. and therefore we may fit vnto it the like anſwere.

Pſal.37.24.
Ezech.33.13.

CHAP. XVII.

Obiections againſt the doctrine of perſeuerance, taken from teſtimonies of the new Teſtament, anſwered, and firſt out of the Goſpels.

§. Sect. 1.
Mat.7.22.23.

THe fifth place obiected is, Matth.7.22. Many will ſay vnto me in that day, Lord, Lord, haue we not by thy name prophecied? &c. From which is inferred, that if thoſe who haue receiued theſe excellent gifts of the ſpirit, prophecy and power to worke miracles, may loſe them and periſh, then thoſe likewiſe who haue receiued other gifts, as faith, hope, charitie, &c. I anſwere, it followeth not, foraſmuch as men may haue theſe gifts, and yet not bee in the eſtate of grace, elected or loued of God, as our Sauiour plainely ſheweth in his anſwere to them, verſe 23. Then will I profeſſe vnto them I neuer knew you; that is, I neuer acknowledged you for my ſeruants; depart from mee yee that worke iniquitie, that is, yee that haue giuen ouer your ſelues to worke wickedneſſe. Secondly I anſwere, this place is impertinent to the purpoſe, for the queſtion is not of all gifts of the ſpirit, but onely of ſuch ſanctifying graces as are neceſſary to ſaluation, in which number the gifts of prophecie and working miracles are not, ſeeing the wicked may haue them, as appeareth in the example of Iudas; and the godly may want them, as we know by experience.

§. Sect. 2.

The ſixt place is Matth.24.12. And becauſe iniquity ſhall be increaſed, the loue of many ſhall bee cold. Out of which place they thus reaſon: They whoſe charitie may waxe cold, may loſe grace, and ſo fall away: but the elect, who haue this grace of loue may haue it waxe cold, and therefore the elect may loſe it and ſo fall away. I anſwere, firſt, to the propoſition, that our Sauiour Chriſt doth not ſay, that thoſe who are indued with true charity, may haue it extinguiſhed, as the phraſe to waxe cold may ſeeme to proue; but he ſaith, that the loue of many ſhall bee cold, that is, they ſhall bee deſtitute of this grace of loue, and that which they haue not they cannot loſe. Secondly, I anſwere to the aſſumption, that it is falſe, and receiueth no confirmation from this place; for our Sauiour ſaith not, that the true charitie of the elect ſhall be cold, but that the charitie of many, that is, the loue of hypocrites to the Goſpell, whereof they once made outward profeſſion, which was grounded vpon carnall and worldly reſpects, ſhould bee cold when they ſaw it perſecuted, and when they were ſeduced by the falſe Prophets. And of ſuch he ſpeaketh verſ.10. where he ſaith that many ſhould be offended, when they ſhould ſee the grieuous perſecution which ſhould bee raiſed againſt the Goſpell, and ſhould betray one another: which cannot be vnderſtood of the faithfull, but of hypocrites, who made profeſſion of the truth for worldly reſpects, which failing, their profeſſion and loue towards the truth alſo failed. Laſtly, though this ſhould be vnderſtood of the elect, and that it ſhould be thus read that their loue ſhould waxe cold; yet this prooueth not that their loue ſhould bee quite extinguiſhed and periſh, but onely that through the iniquitie of the times it ſhould in its actions and operations languiſh and decreaſe. But they further object, that it is ſaid in the verſe following, that he who indureth to the end ſhal be ſaued; by which, ſay they, is implied that ſome ſhall not indure to the end, and therefore ſhall bee condemned. I anſwer, firſt, that all this being rightly vnderſtood may bee granted; for our Sauiour heere ſpeaketh not of perſeuerance in the ſanctifying graces of his ſpirit, but of continuing and induring in the profeſſion of his Goſpell, notwithſtanding the great perſecutions which ſhould bee raiſed againſt the profeſſors thereof, which hypocrites, who loue the world better than Gods truth would not doe, and therefore ſhould bee condemned. Secondly I anſwere, that though this were to bee vnderſtood of perſeuerance in grace, it maketh nothing againſt it: for our Sauiour ſaith not that ſome of the Elect ſhall not perſeuere, but onely maketh a gratious promiſe of life and ſaluation to thoſe that doe perſeuere to the end, that hereby they may bee incouraged and confirmed in their perſeuerance.

§. Sect. 3.
Luke 8.13.
Of the kinds of

The ſeauenth place obiected is Luke 8.13. But they on the rocke, are they which when they haue heard, receiue the word with ioy; but they haue no roots, which for a while beleeue, but in the time of tentation goe away. From which place they thus reaſon: They that heare and receiue the word with ioy and beleeue, may fall away, but ſuch haue true faith; and therefore ſome that haue true faith may fall away. I anſwere, that the aſſumption, namely, that theſe heere deſcribed haue true faith, is falſe; neither are theſe the inſeparable properties of a true, liuely and iuſtifying faith, but common with the temporary faith, which is the faith of hypocrites. For not onely the faith-full

6.4.5.

full and elect doe heare and receiue the word with ioy, and alſo beleeue, that is, after an hiſtoricall manner giue their aſſent vnto it, but alſo hypocrits and reprobates as the Apoſtle ſheweth, Heb. 6.4.5. But it will bee obiected that Chriſt heere ſpeaketh of true faith, ſeeing hee ſaith that they beleeue, and therefore they want not faith, but onely perſeuerance. I anſwere, that as faith it ſelfe is of diuers kinds, ſo alſo there are diuers kinds of beleeuing, according to the ſeuerall ſorts of faith, whereof they are acts. There is a generall faith, whoſe act is generally to beleeue and giue aſſent to the truth of the Scriptures; there is a temporarie faith, which not onely giueth aſſent, but alſo conceiueth ſome kind of ioy in that which it beleeueth; and there is a true iuſtifying faith, which not onely aſſenteth to the truth, but alſo apprehendeth and applieth that which it beleeueth to the vſe and benefit of the beleeuer. Though therefore the temporarie faith beleeueth, that is, aſſenteth to the doctrine of faith as being true, and ſheweth it ſelfe in an outward profeſſion, and is ioyned with a reioycing in that trueth which it beleeueth and profeſſeth, yet are there diuers things wanting in it, which are the life and ſoule of true iuſtifying faith; for firſt this liuely faith bringeth forth the ripe fruits of true godlineſſe, but this temporarie faith nothing elſe but the blade of an outward profeſſion. Secondly, the true faith is a particular perſwaſion, this onely a generall notion or opinion; that apprehendeth, and applieth peculiarly all the promiſes of life and ſaluation to the beleeuer, but this is deſtitute of this apprehenſion and application: that is conſtant and permanent, but this, as it is grounded vpon worldly and carnall reſpects, ſo when they faile (as they doe in the time of tentation) then this faith alſo faileth.

the diffence be-weene tem-ratie and ſtifying ith,

§.Sect.4.
at our Saui.
r ſpeaketh t of iuſtify-g but tem-arie faith,

Now our Sauiour Chriſt in this place ſpeaketh not of this true iuſtifying faith, of which onely the queſtion of perſeuerance is vnderſtood, but of the other temporarie faith of hypocrites, as may appeare in the text it ſelfe; for firſt it is ſaid that ſuch haue no rootes, but onely beare the leaues of an outward profeſſion, which in the day of tentation, when the ſunne of affliction ariſeth, withereth and dieth; whereas they who haue a true faith, haue for the roote thereof a certaine perſwaſion of Gods loue, and fauour in Chriſt, the remiſſion of their ſins, and eternall life and happineſſe; from which roote ſpring not only the faire greene leaues of an outward profeſſion, but alſo the ripe fruits of holines and righteouſneſſe. Secondly, it is ſaid, that they beleeue for a time only, and in the time of tentation goe away; whereas they who truly beleeue, are like vnto mount Sion, which cannot bee moued, but ſtandeth faſt for euer, as it is Pſal. 125. 1. they are built vpon the rocke Ieſus Chriſt, ſo that though the winds of affliction, and floods of perſecution blow and beate againſt them, yet they ſhall not fall, becauſe they are grounded vpon this rocke, as it is Math. 7.25. Laſtly, they receiuing the ſeed of the word, bring forth only a blade, which is but a ſhew of godlineſſe, and continueth not, but by and by is ſcorched and withereth; but they who are indued with a true faith, like the good ground, receiuing the ſeed of the word in an honeſt and good heart, keepe it, and bring forth fruit with patience. Seeing therefore this place alleaged, is not to be vnderſtood of true iuſtifying faith, but of the faith of hypocrits, which is nothing elſe but a ſhadow or vaine opinion of faith; and the falling away, nothing elſe but the caſting off an outward profeſsion, therefore it maketh nothing againſt the perſeuerance of thoſe who are truly faithfull.

Pſalm.125.1.

Matth.7.25.

§. Sect. 5.
Iohn 15.2.
Of true and rotten branches.

The eight place obiected is Ioh. 15. 2. Euerie branch that beareth not fruit in mee he taketh away, &c. From which place they thus reaſon: All the branches which are in Chriſt are elected and indued with true faith: but ſome branches which are in Chriſt not bearing fruit, are cut from his body, and ſo periſh: therefore ſome who are elected and indued with faith, may be ſeuered from Chriſt and ſo periſh. I anſwere, that the propoſition is falſe; for a branch in Chriſt is nothing elſe but a member of the Church, and both of them generally vnderſtood, doe ſignifie ſuch an one as is outwardly admitted into the Church, which is the body of Chriſt, by the Sacrament of baptiſme, and being outwardly called by the miniſterie of the word, doth make profeſsion of the doctrine of faith therein taught, and communicateth in the vſe of the Sacraments. And ſo generally to be ingrafted into Chriſt, is to bee ioyned as a member to the viſible Church. Now as of members, ſo alſo of branches there are two ſorts; for ſome are not onely ioyned to the viſible Church by the Sacrament of baptiſme, and by an outward profeſsion of the Faith, but alſo are truely vnited vnto Chriſt their head, and ingrafted into the inuiſible Church by the ſpirit of God and a liuely Faith, and ſo communicating of the life and vertue which is in Chriſt their head, & ſucking liuely iuyce from this diuine and holy roote, doe liue in him and bring forth the fruits of godlineſſe and righteouſneſſe. And whoſoeuer are thus ingrafted into Chriſt Ieſus, they ſhall euer remaine fruitful branches, and be neuer cut off and wither, yea rather Chriſt the good husbandman will purge and prune them, and continually water them with the dew of his grace and holy ſpirit, that they may bring forth fruit in more abundance, as it is in this place. So he ſaith, verſ. 16. that whom hee hath choſen, hee hath ordained that they ſhould bring forth fruit, and that their fruit ſhould not fade and wither, but remaine, and continually flouriſh like a tree planted by a riuer of waters, as it is Pſalm. 1.3.

Pſal.1.3.

§. Sect.6.

But there are other members and branches which are onely intertained into the viſible Church, and accounted members thereof, becauſe they haue receiued the ſacrament of baptiſme, and make an outward profeſsion of religion, though in their liues they deny the power therof; which notwithſtanding were neuer truly vnited vnto Chriſt, nor ingrafted into the inuiſible Church, being altogether deſtitute of the bond of this vnion, the ſpirit of God and a liuely faith, and conſequently hauing no communion with our head and root Chriſt Ieſus, nor receiuing any life and vertue from him, they are dead and rotten members, and branches, which hauing onely a ſhew and ſhape of an outward profeſsion, and wanting life, bring forth no fruits of true godlineſſe, and therefore ſhall bee cut off, not from the true bodie of Chriſt the inuiſible Church, into which they were neuer planted and ingrafted, but from the outward body of the viſible Church whereof they were members in ſhew and profeſsion. The which is done when as their vizard being pulled off, they are diſcouered to be but meere hypocrites.

§. Sect.7. Of a twofold liuing in the vine Chriſt.

But heere it is obiected, that it cannot bee called a branch which hath not ſometime liued in the vine: for branches are not tranſplanted, but doe grow in the vine, not dead but liuing; and ſo the faithfull are borne againe in Chriſt, and when they are borne againe, they are not dead but liuing: and yet notwithſtanding if after they are borne againe, they refuſe to beare the fruit of good workes, they are cut off and periſh. I anſwere, that there is a twofold liuing in the vine, in ſhew and outward appearance, and indeed and truth; the firſt is common to the hypocrite, who after a ſort may bee ſaid to be ingrafted into the bodie of Chriſt, and in reſpect of his ſhew and outward profeſſion to liue in him; but the other is proper and peculiar to the faithfull, who are the true branches. But al branches (ſay they) doe firſt truly liue in their vine before they can die and wither. I anſwere, that this is true of all naturall branches, which originally ſpring out of the ſtocke, but not of thoſe which are tranſplanted and ingrafted: For wee know that ſome cions being ingrafted into another ſtocke, doe receiue no life and nouriſhment from it, and yet notwithſtanding they ſeeme for a time to liue, till the heate of the ſunne ſcorching them, for want of inward moiſture they wither, and ſo appeare to bee dead, and neuer to haue receiued life and nouriſhment from the ſtocke. Now that I may fit this ſimilitude, wee are not naturall branches ſprung from Chriſt, but from Adam, who is our roote, and are tranſplanted and ingrafted into Chriſt, but after a diuers manner, ſome into the viſible bodie of the Church, and (as it were) but into the outward barke, who for want of the attractiue vertue of faith, doe receiue no life nor nouriſhment from him: and therefore though they ſeeme to liue for a time in ſhew and outward profeſſion, yet in truth they are dead branches, and ſo will appeare to be, when the ſunne of perſecution and affliction ſcorcheth and withereth them; but other branches are ingrafted into the inuiſible Church and very body of Chriſt the liuing ſtocke, and by a true and liuely faith doe ſucke good iuyce and nouriſhment from him, whereby they liue and bring forth fruit. And they who are thus truly ingrafted into Chriſts body, cannot refuſe to bring forth the fruits of good workes, no more than the liuing branch grafted in a fruitfull ſtocke, can refuſe to bring forth grapes: for as all other powers of body and ſoule are regenerate and renewed, ſo likewiſe their will, whereby they are made not onely willing, but alſo deſirous to bring forth the fruite of good workes.

CHAP. XVIII.

Obiections againſt the doctrine of perſeuerance, taken from teſtimonies out of S. Pauls Epiſtles, anſwered.

§. Sect.1.

Rom.9.3. In what ſe Paul wiſheth to be ſepara- ted from Chriſt.

THe ninth place obiected is Rom.9.3. For I would wiſh my ſelfe to bee ſeparated from Chriſt (or, deuoted to eternall perdition) for my brethren which are my kinſemen according to the fleſh. From which place they thus reaſon: Paul might be ſeparated from Chriſt and periſh: but Paul was elected to ſaluation: therefore ſome who are elected may bee ſeparated from Chriſt and periſh. I anſwere, that the propoſition is falſe, neither doth it receiue any ſtrength from this teſtimonie: for Paul doth not ſay, that hee could bee ſeparated from Chriſt, but onely profeſſeth that ſuch was his zeale of Gods glory, and loue to his brethren the Iewes, that he could find in his heart, if it were poſſible, to be ſeparated from Chriſt, rather than Gods glory ſhould be impeached by the deſtruction of the people. But it may be further vrged, that Paul wiſheth that hee might be ſeparated from Chriſt, and therefore it might be. I anſwere, that hee doth not abſolutely deſire it, but conditionally, if it were poſsible. And therefore hee ſaith not, I doe wiſh; but I would wiſh; that is, I could find in my heart to wiſh this ſeparation, if it could poſsibly ſtand with the immutabilitie of Gods election. But Paul though hee thus ſpeaketh did not thinke that this could poſsibly bee, for he profeſſeth a little before, that he was perſwaded & certainely aſſured, that neither life nor death, nor any thing in the world could ſeparate him from the loue of God in Chriſt, *Rom.*8.38. But to what purpoſe doth hee wiſh this, if it could not be? I anſwere, to this end that he might hereby expreſſe his feruent zeale for Gods glorie, and intire loue of his brethren the Iewes, which were ſo great, that he neglected his owne ſaluation in reſpect of them.

The tenth place obiected is *Rom.*9.20. Well, through vnbeleefe they are broken off, and thou ſtandeſt by faith; be not high minded, but feare. 21. For if God ſpared not the naturall branches, take heed leaſt hee alſo ſpare not thee, &c. From which place they thus reaſon: The naturall branches may be broken off: the naturall branches are the true members of Chriſt elected to ſaluation: therefore ſome members of Chriſt elected to ſaluation may fall away and periſh. I anſwere, that this obiection is like that grounded vpon Iohn 15. 2. and therefore needeth not much to be ſtood vpon. Briefly therefore we are to know, that the aſſumption is manifeſtly falſe; for by naturall branches is not meant the true members of Chriſt elected to ſaluation, but the whole viſible Church of the Iſraelites, as it plainely appeareth by the whole diſcourſe of the Apoſtle in this chapter. The firſt (namely, that hee ſpeaketh not of the true members of Chriſt elected to ſaluation) is manifeſt, verſ. 2. God hath not caſt away his people which he knew before, that is, whom in his eternall counſell he had elected to ſaluation. And verſ. 7. Iſrael hath not obtained that he ſought: that is, the whole people of Iſrael; but the election (that is, ſo many as were elected) hath obtained it, and the reſt haue beene hardned. The other, namely, that hee ſpeaketh of the whole people and Church of the Iewes, and not of the faithfull, is ſo cleere in it ſelfe, that it needeth no borrowed light to illuſtrate it; ſeeing in this whole chapter he reaſoneth of the reiection of the Iſraelites, from being the viſible Church and people of God, and of the calling of the Gentiles. But ſome will ſay, that the Apoſtle calleth them naturall branches, and therefore before their breaking off, they were the true members of Chriſt. I anſwer, that the Apoſtle doth not call them natural, to diſtinguiſh them from dead and fruitleſſe branches, but from the wild branches which were the Gentiles, who of ſtrangers and aliants were called to bee the Church and people of God: whereas the Iewes who had a long time beene planted in the viſible Church were broken off and reiected. By breaking off then of the naturall branches, wee are not to vnderſtand the reiection of the true members of Chriſt and the viſible Church, who are the faithfull and elect, but of the outward members of the viſible Church, who being externally called, made profeſsion of religion, but yet in the meane time were deſtitute of the power thereof, and of all ſauing grace. For the Apoſtle ſaith of this people who were thus reiected, that God had giuen them the ſpirit of ſlumber, eies that they ſhould not ſee, and eares that they ſhould not heare vnto this day, verſ. 8. and that they were broken off through vnbeleefe, wherwith they were ſo wholly poſſeſſed, that they would not receiue either Chriſt or his Goſpell, verſ. 20. and that they did not al this of infirmity but through obſtinacie, verſe 25. profeſsing themſelues enemies to the Goſpell, as it is verſe 28.

§. *Sect.*3.
*Rom.*14.15.
1.*Cor.*8.11.
For whom Chriſt is ſaid to haue died.

The eleuenth place is Rom. 14.15. Deſtroy not him with thy meate for whom Chriſt died. The like place is, 1. Cor. 8.11. And through thy knowledge ſhall thy weake brother periſh, for whom Chriſt died. From which places they thus reaſon: Thoſe for whom Chriſt died may be deſtroyed and periſh: but ſuch are elected and indued with faith: therefore ſome elected and indued with faith may bee deſtroyed and periſh. Vnto which I anſwer, firſt, by diſtinguiſhing of the aſſumption; for Chriſt is ſaid generally and improperly to haue died for the whole viſible Church; but properly and truly for the faithfull only, which are of the Church inuiſible. The firſt phraſe of ſpeech is true in regard of the ſufficiencie of his death, which in it ſelfe was a full and ſufficient price for the ranſome of all, or elſe if wee vnderſtand it by a ſynecdoche of the whole for the ſeuerall parts and members; but not in reſpect of the efficacie of his death, for it is onely effectuall for the redemption and ſaluation of thoſe who apply vnto themſelues the vertue and merit thereof, by a true and liuely faith. All therefore for whom Chriſt is ſaid to haue died, are not elect and faithfull, but onely thoſe to whom the vertue and power of his death and merits are effectually applied. Secondly, Chriſt is ſaid to haue died for euery member of the viſible Church, becauſe being outward members thereof, they are in the iudgement of charitie reputed and eſteemed of the Church, and to be redeemed and iuſtified by Chriſts death, vntill by their Apoſtacie they make it knowne that they were but hypocrites, for whom Chriſt neuer died. And of ſuch may theſe places be vnderſtood, ſeeing the holy Ghoſt oftentimes ſpeaketh of things according to the judgement and eſtimation of men; and alſo by ſuch charitable ſpeeches doth teach vs both to ſpeake and judge charitably; and ſeeing likewiſe we find by experience, that many ſuch Hypocrites as doe for a time profeſſe themſelues members of the Church, and redeemed by Chriſts death, being ſcandalized and offended by the example of ſome others, do fall away from their profeſſion, and ſo vtterly periſh. But if we will vnderſtand it of thoſe for whom Chriſt truly and effectually died, the propoſition is falſe; for Chriſt died for none but his ſheepe, Iohn 10.15. and Chriſts ſheepe ſhall neuer periſh, neither can any plucke them out of his hand. Verſe 28. Yea but it is ſaid, that thy weake brother ſhall periſh. I anſwere, that is not to be vnderſtood of the effect and euent, but of the cauſe and occaſion: for howſoeuer the weak Chriſtian may be ſhrewdly ſhaken, & be grieuouſly wounded in his cõſcience with ſcandals and offences offered by thoſe who are more ſtrong, yet hee can neuer fall and periſh, ſeeing the Lord ſtrengtheneth his weakneſſe, vpholdeth him being ready to fall, and being falne raiſeth him vp againe. Notwithſtanding it might truely bee ſaid in reſpect of the ſufficiencie of the occaſion offered by the offence giuen, that hee ſhould thereby be deſtroyed and periſh: for he that giueth ſuch offences, doth as much as in him lieth, deſtroy his weake brother, the cauſe which he giueth being in it ſelfe of force ſufficient to ouerthrow and deſtroy him, if hee were not ſupported and preſerued by the omnipotent power of God. So that the ſenſe of this place is this, deſtroy not, that is, doe not by giuing ſuch offences, as much as in thee lieth, deſtroy thy weake brother, for whom Chriſt hath died. And ſo through thy knowledge ſhall thy weake brother periſh, that is, by abuſing thy knowledge cõcerning the vſe of things indifferent, thou ſhalt by offending him, as much as thou art able, cauſe him to periſh, becauſe thou offereſt the occaſion, and vſeſt the meanes to bring him to deſtruction.

Iohn 10.15.28.

§. *Sect.*4.
1.*Cor.*9.27.
Whether Paul might become a reprobate.

The twelfth place objected is 1.*Cor.*9.27. But I beat downe my body and bring it into ſubiection, leſt by any meanes after I haue preached to others, I my ſelfe ſhould become a reprobate. From which place they thus reaſon: Paul might become a reprobate, but Paul was elected and indued with Faith; and therefore ſome elected and endued with Faith may become reprobates. The propoſition they endeuour to prooue by this place; becauſe in chaſtiſing his body to this end that he might not become a reprobate, hee ſheweth himſelſe doubtful & fearful leſt he ſhould become one. I anſwer, firſt, that the original word ἀδόκιμος here vſed, which they tranſlate reprobate; may more fitly in this place be tranſlated reproued, as it is in our Geneua tranſlation; for ſo it is ſometimes vſed, as 2.*Cor.*13.7. and *Heb.*6.8. and in this ſenſe it is oppoſed vnto one who is approoued; and ſo it beſt agreeth with the ſcope of the Apoſtle in this place; for he doth not ſpeake of the reprobation of his perſon in Gods counſell, but of the diſapproouing and rejection of his miniſtery by God and his Church, if hee did teach one thing and practice another. For hee is reproued, that is, rejected and diſapprooued of God and the Church, as an euill and vnworthy Miniſter, whoſe life and conuerſation is not agreeable to his word and doctrine. And therefore Paul being appointed an Apoſtle and Miniſter to teach others the wayes of righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, doth carefully beate downe his fleſh, and indeuoureth to mortifie the corruptions thereof, leſt teaching others, and neglecting the practice of his own doctrine, he ſhould be rejected and reprooued as an euill Teacher. Secondly, though this place ſhould be vnderſtood of eternall reprobation, yet it maketh nothing againſt the certaintie of Pauls perſeuerance; for hee doth not ſay that hee could become a reprobate, but that he would vſe this meanes that he might not become a reprobate. Now to vſe the meanes to preſerue himſelfe from becomming a reprobate, doth not prooue the poſſibilitie of his reprobation, but the certaintie of his perſeuerance, ſeeing the means of perſeuerance are no leſſe contained in Gods counſell and decree, then perſeuerance it ſelfe. So that as the Lord hath decreed that wee ſhould not be reprobates, and that wee ſhould perſeuere in grace, ſo alſo hee hath decreed that we ſhould beat down our fleſh, and mortifie the corruptions thereof, that ſo our perſeruerance may be cõfirmed, and we preſerued from defection and reprobation; as hee hath elected vs to eternall life, ſo hee hath alſo decreed that wee ſhould vſe the meanes whereby we might make our election ſure, as hee exhorteth, 2.*Pet.*1.10. and therefore the carefull vſe of theſe meanes doth not ſhew the doubtfulneſſe, but rather the infallible certaintie of our election and perſeuerance. And this appeareth in the Apoſtle Paul, who as hee doth in this place with al diligence vſe this means of mortification, that he might not become a reprobate, ſo in other places hee profeſſeth his certaine aſſurance of perſeuering in Gods loue, & that he neither was nor could become a reprobate.

2.*Cor.*13.7.
*Heb.*6.8.

2.*Pet.*1.10.

*Rom.*8.38.39.
2.*Cor.*13.6.

§. *Sect.*5.
*Gal.*3.3.
What is by begin in the ſpi ending in th fleſh.

The thirteenth place objected is, *Gal.*3.3. Are ye ſo fooliſh, that after yee haue begun in the ſpirit, ye would now be made perfect by the fleſh. From which place they thus reaſon: They that begin in the Spirit, may fall away and end in the fleſh: but they that begin in the ſpirit, are truly regenerate: therefore they who are truly regenerate, may fall away and end in the fleſh: I anſwer, that the aſſumption is falſe: for by ſpirit in this place is not vnderſtood the ſpirit of regeneration, but the doctrine of the ſpirit, or the ſpirituall doctrine, which is the Goſpell; and thus doth our Sauiour Chriſt call the words of the Goſpell which he preached, ſpirit and life, Iohn 6.63. and in this reſpect the Apoſtle calleth the Miniſters of the new Teſtament the Miniſters of the ſpirit, and the preaching thereof the miniſtration of the ſpirit, 2.Cor. 3.6,8. becauſe when the Goſpell is preached, the ſpirit is giuen to thoſe that beleeue. So that the Apoſtle in this place doth not accuſe them for their falling from true regeneration, but from the profeſſion of the Goſpell which had beene taught vnto them. For whereas they had learned by the preaching of the Goſpell, that a man is juſtified by faith alone without the workes of the Law, they fal from this truth which formerly they had receiued, looking to bee juſtified by the workes of the Law. Secondly, I anſwere vnto the propoſition, that by the fleſh we are not to vnderſtand the ſtate of man vnregenerate, but the fleſhly doctrine of the falſe Apoſtles which ſauoured wholly of carnall and worldly wiſdome, becauſe they taught that they ſhould not reſt wholly vpon the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt for their juſtification, and ſo aſcribe vnto him the ſole glorie thereof, but rather in part they ſhould relie vpon their owne legall righteouſneſſe, and ſo ſhare with Chriſt in the prayſe of their juſtification; the which may well be called a fleſhly doctrine, ſeeing nothing is more agreeable and pleaſing to fleſh and bloud, then to rob God of his honour, that we may arrogate it vnto our ſelues. And therefore to be perfected by the fleſh, cannot ſignifie falling away into the ſtate of vnregeneration, but a defection from the profeſſion of the doctrine of the Goſpell, which teacheth that we are juſtified by faith alone in Chriſt, vnto the doctrine of the falſe Apoſtles, who taught them to looke for the perfecting of their righteouſneſſe which was begunne by the Goſpell, by performing the works of the Law, and by receiuing the legall Sacrament of Circumciſion which was made in the fleſh, without which they affirmed that Chriſt would not profit them. The which their practice hee condemneth of extreame folly, becauſe they left the doctrine of the Goſpell, which brought them into the glorious libertie of the ſonnes of God, and reduced themſelues into the ſtate of ſeruitude and bondage vnder the Law and the curſe thereof, from which Chriſt hath deliuered thoſe that beleeuing in him, doe wholly and ſoly reſt vpon him for their juſtification and ſaluation. And this expoſition agreeth moſt cleerly with the context of this Chapter, and the maine drift of the Apoſtle in this place. But though we ſhould expound theſe words according to that ſenſe which they force out of them, yet would they make nothing for their purpoſe: for he doth not write this vnto particular beleeuers, who were truly juſtified and ſanctified, but vnto thoſe fooliſh Galathians who had left the doctrine of the Goſpell, of which formerly they had made ſome profeſſion, and imbraced the doctrine of the falſe Apoſtles. And therefore he ſaith not, that they were truly and throughly regenerated by Gods ſanctifying Spirit, but only that they had begun in the ſpirit, that is, had in ſome meaſure beene inlightned and taſted of the heauenly gift, and the Word of God, receiuing it for the preſent with joy, and making an outward profeſſion thereof, like thoſe temporizers of whom our Sauiour Chriſt, & the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, Mat. 13.20. Heb.6.4,5.

*Matth.*13.20.
*Heb.*6.4,5.

§. Sect. 6.

*Gal.*5.4.
How the Galathians were ſaid to be aboliſhed from Chriſt.

The fourteenth place objected, is Gal.5.4. Ye are aboliſhed from Chriſt (or, as it is in the originall, ye are made void and emptie of Chriſt, that is, Chriſt is vnto you vnprofitable) whoſoeuer are juſtified by the law, yee are falne from grace. From which place they thus reaſon: The Galathians looking to be juſtified by the Law were aboliſhed from Chriſt and did fall from grace: but they were elected and indued with Faith: and therefore ſome who are elected and indued with Faith, may bee aboliſhed from Chriſt and fall from grace. I anſwere firſt to the aſſumption, that thoſe Galathians which looked to be juſtified by the Law, were not elected, if they did perſeuere in this their hereſie; and therefore it maketh nothing againſt our queſtion if the propoſition be vnderſtood of ſuch; for wee grant that they who ſeeke for juſtification by the workes of the Law by themſelues performed, being not elected may be aboliſhed from Chriſt, and fall from grace. Yea but, ſay they, theſe Galathians were in Chriſt once, and in the ſtate of grace, or elſe they could not fitly bee ſaid to be made void and emptie of Chriſt, and to haue falne from grace: for how can they bee made emptie of Chriſt Ieſus and fall from grace, who were not firſt filled with Chriſt and in the ſtate of grace? I anſwere, that theſe phraſes are too much racked, to the end they may force them to make a confeſſion againſt the truth; for to be made void of Chriſt ſignifieth to haue no part and communion in Chriſt, nor any profit by his death and righteouſneſſe, in which ſenſe the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in this place, namely that thoſe who looke to be juſtified by the workes of the Law, ſhall haue no communion, part nor profit in Chriſt. And ſo it accordeth with the ſecond Verſe, If yee bee circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing. And to fall from grace ſignifieth not to fall from ſanctifying grace, but from the doctrine of grace, namely, the Goſpell. So that the ſenſe is this, whoſoeuer will not content themſelues with the righteouſneſſe of Faith, but ſeeke for righteouſneſſe in the Law, they haue no communion with Chriſt, and are falne from the doctrine of grace taught in the Goſpell, to the righteouſneſſe which is of the Law. And whereas whileſt they did imbrace the doctrine of the Goſpel, they ſeemed to be in the ſtate of grace, they now falling from the profeſſion of this truth, and imbracing the righteouſneſſe which is of the Law, doe make it manifeſt, that they are not in the ſtate of grace, and that they neuer from their hearts imbraced the doctrine of the Goſpell, ſeeing they renounce the free grace therein offered and ſubiect themſelues to the bondage of the Law.

§. Sect.7. 1.Tim.1.19. 4.1. and 5.8. and 6.10. What is meant by denying, departing from, and making ſhipwrack of faith.

The fifteenth place obiected is, 1.Tim.1.19. Hauing faith and a good conſcience, which ſome haue put away, and as concerning faith haue made ſhipwracke. The like places vnto this are theſe, 1.Tim.4.1. Now the Spirit ſpeaketh euidently that in the latter times ſome ſhall depart from the faith. And 5.8. If there be any that prouideth not for his owne, &c. he denieth the faith, and is worſe than an infidell. And 6.10. The deſire of mony is the root of all euill, which while ſome luſted after they erred from the faith. From which places they thus reaſon: They that may make ſhipwracke of faith, and deny, depart and erre from the faith; they may loſe their faith, and conſequently fall away and periſh; but ſome may make ſhipwrack of their faith, &c. and therefore ſome may loſe their faith, fall away and periſh. I anſwere, that this word faith is diuerſly taken in the Scriptures; ſometimes for the doctrine of faith: So Act.6.7. And a great company of Prieſts were obedient to the faith. Gal.3.2. Receiued you the ſpirit by the workes of the Law, or by the hearing of faith? So Rom.12.6. Gal.3.23. Sometimes for fidelitie or faithfulneſſe in the performance of ones word and promiſe. So Rom.3.3. Shall their vnbeliefe make the faith of God without effect? Sometimes for a perſwaſion whereby wee beleeue God. So Heb.11. And hereof alſo there are diuers kinds beſides the true iuſtifying faith; as the faith of miracles, a generall or hiſtoricall faith, a legall faith, a temporary faith; of all which the queſtion is not to be vnderſtood, but onely of a true, liuely and iuſtifying faith, whereby the Beleeuer doth apprehend and apply vnto himſelfe particularly Chriſt and his righteouſneſſe and merits. Now the places before alleaged are not to be vnderſtood of this iuſtifying faith, but of the doctrine of faith, and therefore make nothing againſt the doctrine of perſeuerance. For firſt, whereas Paul ſaith that Hymeneus and Alexander had made ſhipwracke of faith, his meaning is, that they were become Heretikes and Apoſtates from that truth which they had profeſſed. And this appeareth, 2.*Tim.*2.18. where ſpeaking of this Alexander and Phyletus, hee ſaith, that they had erred concerning the truth, ſaying, that the reſurrection was paſt alreadie. Whereupon hee addeth that notwithſtanding their back-ſliding from the truth, Gods Decree of election was not hereby impeached, ſeeing they neuer belonged vnto it. Neuertheleſſe (ſaith hee) the foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, hauing this ſeale, the Lord knoweth them that are his. Secondly, whereas hee ſaith, 1.*Tim.*4.1. that ſome ſhould depart from the faith, he expoundeth his meaning in the words following, ſaying, that they ſhould giue heed to the ſpirits of errour, and doctrine of Deuils, that is, they ſhould leaue the ſincere truth of the Goſpel, and ſuffer themſelues to bee ſeduced with the Hereſies of Antichriſt. Thirdly, whereas he ſaith, Chap.5.Verſ.8. that they that prouide not for thoſe who are vnder their charge, deny the faith; he meaneth the doctrine of faith, which teacheth vs to haue care not onely of our ſelues but alſo of thoſe that belong vnto vs. Laſtly, wheras he ſaith, that couetous men doe erre from the faith, hee meaneth the doctrine of the Goſpell, which teacheth that wee ſhould not lay vp our treaſures vpon the earth nor ſerue this vnrighteous Mammon. And ſecondly, though it ſhould bee vnderſtood of iuſtifying faith; it were nothing to their purpoſe, ſeeing a couetous worldling may erre from the faith, though he were neuer indued therewith. Seeing then theſe places are to be vnderſtood of the doctrine of faith, which a worldling & reprobate may know and profeſſe as well as the elect, therefore they make nothing for prouing of the poſſibilitie of a defection from a true iuſtifying faith, and conſequently infringe not the doctrine of perſeuerance.

Act.6.7. Gal.3.2.

Rom.12.6. Gal.3.23.

Rom.3.3.

Heb.11.6.

2.Tim.2.18.

1.Tim.4.1.

§. Sect.8. Heb.6.4. expounded.

The 16. place obiected is, Heb.6.4. For it is impoſſible that they which were once lightned, and haue taſted of the heauenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt. 5. And haue taſted of the good word of God, and of the powers of the world to come. 6. If they fall away ſhould be renewed againe by repentance, ſeeing they crucifie againe to themſelues the Sonne of God, and make a mocke of him. From which place they thus reaſon: Thoſe who are inlightned and haue taſted of the heauenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, and taſted, &c. they may ſo fall away, as that they cannot be renewed by repentance: but ſuch are the elect of God and his faithfull ones; and therefore the elect and faithfull may ſo fall away as that they cannot bee renewed by repentance. To which I anſwere, that there is no ſound part in this ſyllogiſme; for firſt the aſſumption is to bee denied as falſe; neither can it be proued that the Apoſtle doth here vnvnderſtand an elect and faithfull man in this deſcription, but an hypocrite, who hath onely a temporarie faith; ſeeing hee doth not here ſet downe peculiar properties of the elect and faithfull; but ſuch as are common vnto them with temporizing hypocrites; as may appeare if wee examine the particulars. For by illightning hee vnderſtandeth the illumination of the minde with the knowledge of the Goſpell, which is common to the faithfull with hypocrites, who oftentimes attaine vnto an hiſtoricall knowledge of the great myſteries of Chriſtian religion, ſo as they can diſcourſe of them in ordinarie talke, yea and become Preachers and teachers thereof vnto others; as appeareth in the example of Iudas, Demas, Iulian and many others. And thus doth the Apoſtle expound himſelfe, Heb. 10. 26. If wee ſinne willingly after wee haue receiued the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſinnes. So likewiſe by taſting of the heauenly gift of the word of God, and of the powers of the world to come, wee are to vnderſtand ſome generall approbation of theſe things in the iudgement, which inclineth alſo the affection to like of and to deſire them; but yet ſeuered from a reſolute purpoſe to compaſſe and inioy them. And this alſo is common vnto hypocrites; for as the Merchant being about to buy a parcell of wines, doth taſte of them, and thereupon doth approue them as good, like of and deſire them; and yet when hee knoweth what a deare price he muſt giue for them, chuſeth rather to leaue them vnbought and to goe his way: ſo the hypocrite hearing what excellent things are prepared for Gods faithfull ones, doth like and deſire them, but howſoeuer hee liketh the taſte and relliſh of them, yet when hee knoweth that whoſoeuer will buy them, muſt deny himſelfe and his worldly luſts, forſake the world and the vanities thereof, mortifie the fleſh, and take vp his croſſe and follow Chriſt, he leaueth them as being too deare, and rather will haue none of them, then he will come to ſo high a price. And ſuch are thoſe temporizing hypocrites which our Sauiour deſcribeth in the parable. Luk. 8. 13. But they that are on the ſtones, are they which when they haue heard, receiue the word with ioy, but they haue no rootes, which for a while beleeue, but in the time of tentation goe away. Such an one was Balaam, who perceiuing what great bleſſings were reſerued for the righteous, deſired to die their death, that hee might inioy them, but yet would not liue their life, nor to obtaine aſſurance of theſe ioyes, leaue couetouſneſſe and impietie. So the young man in the Goſpell deſired to attaine vnto eternall life, and came vnto Chriſt to bee inſtructed in the meanes whereby he might come vnto aſſurance thereof; but when he heard that hee muſt ſell all he had, and giue it to the poore, and take vp his croſſe and follow Chriſt, he relinquiſhed his former ſuit and went away ſorrowfull.

is meant lightning.

b.10.26.

is meant ſting the enly gift.

3.13.

What is meant by being made partakers of the holy Ghoſt.

Laſtly, by being made partakers of the holy Ghoſt, hee vnderſtandeth the gifts of the holy Ghoſt, which alſo are of two ſorts: firſt, ſuch as are the gifts of the ſanctifying ſpirit, but not the gifts of ſanctification, which are alſo common to Hypocrites, as knowledge of the Goſpell, a ſudden and temporary ioy in hearing the word, a deſire to be conformable thereunto in ſome things, and ſuch like. Secondly, ſuch as are the gifts of the ſpirit as it ſanctifieth, or the gifts of ſanctification, as Faith, charitie, repentance and ſuch like, which are peculiar to the elect. Now we are to vnderſtand the Apoſtle in this place of the former common gifts, and not of theſe latter which are proper to the faithfull.

Marke 6.20.

§.Sect.9.
What is meant by crucifying Chriſt againe.

But it is further vrged, that we are here to vnderſtand the elect and faithfull which fall away, becauſe hee ſaith that they crucifie Chriſt againe vnto themſelues; whereof it followeth, that hee was once crucified for them before, and conſequently that they were elected, ſeeing Chriſt died onely for ſuch. I anſwere, firſt, that the word (againe) is not to be referred to the words following (vnto themſelues) but to the word crucifying going before. Secondly, by crucifying vnto themſelues, wee are not to vnderſtand crucifying or dying for them, or for their ſaluation, whereby is noted the finall end of Chriſts death, but his crucifying by them (as they were the ſpitefull and malitious inſtruments of his death) vnto their iuſt condemnation. For as the Iewes did once malitiouſlie crucifie Chriſt our Sauiour vpon the croſſe, ſo thoſe are ſaid to crucifie him againe who deſpiſe and contemne him, and his ſufferings, and make a mocke of them. And in this ſenſe Paul ſaith, that the world was crucified vnto him, and hee vnto the world, Gal. 6. 14. that is, as the world did contemne and baſely eſteeme him, ſo did he contemne and baſely eſteeme the world and the vanities thereof.

*Gal.*6.14.

§.Sect.10.
The ſpeech of the Apoſtle not abſolute but conditionall.

Secondly I anſwere, that there is no ſoundneſſe of truth in the propoſition, although the aſſumption ſhould be granted; for he doth not ſay, that ſuch as he had formerly deſcribed might fall away, but by way of ſuppoſition, if they did fall away, then they could not be renewed by repentance, becauſe they had committed the vnpardonable ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, which is not poſſibly incident to any of the elect and faithfull. Now from a meere ſuppoſition wee cannot inferre an abſolute concluſion. Yea rather the holy Ghoſt vſeth theſe words as a terrifying admonition to deterre ſome

downe carnall ſecuritie, to preſerue the faithfull from making a generall Apoſtaſie, and to ſtrengthen them in their perſeuerance, ſeeing their relapſe and backſliding would bring vpon them ineuitable deſtruction. As may appeare by the words following, verſ. 9. 10. 11. where hee taketh occaſion vpon this admonition to exhort them to diligence, conſtancie, and patience, that ſo they might bee inheritors of Gods gracious promiſes.

§. Sect. 11. Heb.10.26. expounded. What is meant by ſinning willingly.

The ſeuenteenth place obiected is Heb. 10. 26. For if wee ſinne willingly, after we haue receiued the knowledge of the truth there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſinnes. 27. But a fearefull looking for of iudgement, and violent fire which ſhall deuoure the aduerſaries. From which place they thus reaſon: They who ſinne willingly after they haue receiued the knowledge of the truth, doe fall away from grace and periſh: For the Apoſtle ſaith that there remaineth no more ſacrifice for their ſinnes, but a fearefull looking for of iudgement, and violent fire which ſhall deuoure them. But the faithfull may ſinne willingly after they haue receiued knowledge of the truth, and therefore they may fall away from grace and periſh. I anſwere, firſt the propoſition is falſe, if the argument bee vnderſtood in the Apoſtles ſenſe; for they who ſinne willingly, as the Apoſtle meaneth, were neuer in the ſtate of grace, and therefore cannot fall away from it. If wee vnderſtand it in their ſenſe, namely, of ſome particular ſinne committed willingly, yet through infirmitie, as whoredome, drunkenneſſe murther and ſuch like, then is it alſo falſe, being vnderſtood of the faithfull, for as much as they, notwithſtanding theſe ſinnes, doe not fall away from grace nor periſh. Secondly, the aſſumption being vnderſtood in their ſenſe maketh nothing for their purpoſe, and being taken according to the Apoſtles meaning is vtterly falſe; for the Apoſtle here by voluntarie ſinning vnderſtandeth not particular ſinnes, which the faithfull may fall into willingly through infirmitie, ſeeing then Dauid, Peter and many other of Gods deare Saints being thus ouertaken; ſhould haue beene in a deſperate caſe; but a generall Apoſtaſie from Chriſt and Chriſtian religion not through feare and infirmitie, but willingly, that is, with full conſent of will, liking and approuing what they doe, and vpon a deſperate malice and determined reſolution, which is that vnpardonable ſin againſt the holy Ghoſt.

§. Sect. 12. Verſ. 23.25.

And this appeareth by the whole drift of the Apoſtle, and the circumſtances of the place; for hauing exhorted them to keepe the profeſſion of their hope without wauering, and that they ſhould not forſake the Chriſtian fellowſhip which they had with one another in the Church, as ſome did who made an Apoſtaſie from the faith, he annexeth this terrible commination to preſerue them from this apoſtaſie. So in that compariſon which he maketh from the leſſe to the greater, he plainely ſheweth his meaning, namely, that as the deſpiſers of the whole Law of Moſes, and not the tranſgreſſors of particular commandements were condemned to death without mercie; ſo they were worthie of farre greater puniſhment who deſpiſed the whole Goſpell of Chriſt, and not euery one who willingly tranſgreſſed ſome Euangelicall dutie. Laſtly, whereas he ſaith, that they did tread vnder their feete the Sonne of God, and counted the blood of the Teſtament an vnholy thing, and deſpited the ſpirit of grace; by all this is ſignified that they contemned Chriſt and his religion as execrable or baſe, and with reſolued malice deſpited the ſpirit of God, which had illightned them with the knowledge of Gods truth. Into which kinde of generall Apoſtaſie it is impoſſible through Gods grace that any of the elect ſhould fall, for the ſeede of regeneration abideth in them, and they cannot thus ſinne becauſe they are borne of God, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 1. Ioh.3.8.9.

Verſ.28.

1. Ioh.3.9.

§. Sect. 13. Verſ.29. What the A- poſtle mea by being ſan ctified with the blood of Chriſt.

Yea, but it is heere ſaid, that they who thus willingly ſinne are ſanctified with the blood of Chriſt, and therefore he vnderſtandeth it of the faithfull, ſeeing thoſe who are ſanctified, they are alſo called and iuſtified. I anſwere, that as beſides the inward and effectuall calling, there is an outward calling common to hypocrites, and as there is a true iuſtification before God proper to the elect, ſo there is an outward iuſtification before men, when as thoſe who in their outward carriage and conuerſation doe ſhew themſelues iuſt, are in the iudgement of charitie ſo reputed and eſteemed: there is in like manner a twofold kind of ſanctification, the one internall before God, when as the heart is purified by faith; the other externall before men, when as wee profeſſe our ſelues members of the Church, and ſuch as are ſanctified with the blood of Chriſt; confeſſe the Chriſtian Faith, and bring forth ſome outward fruites in our liues and conuerſations; and this latter ſanctification is common vnto hypocrites, who whileſt they profeſſe themſelues members of the Church, which is the bodie of Chriſt ſanctified by his blood, word, and ſpirit, and make outward ſemblance and ſhew hereof in their liues, are called and reputed Saints in the iudgement of charitie, which iudgeth the beſt where it ſeeth no appearance of euill.

§. Sect. 1 What the words ſa fied by the Yea, but the ſpirit of God who ſearcheth the heart and raines here ſaith, that they were ſanctified by the bloud of Chriſt, and therfore signific.

fore they were not only outwardly, but alſo internally ſanctified, not in the iudgement of men alone, but alſo in the iudgement of God. I anſwere, it followeth not; for commonly the ſpirit of God in the Scriptures ſpeaketh not according to his owne knowledge, but according to the opinion and common eſtimation of men. So all Iſrael are called the peculiar people of God, becauſe they made outward profeſſion of his religion, though many of them did not belong to the election of grace. So the Apoſtles writing to whole Churches call them the Saints of God; though there were amongſt them many hypocrites. The which the holy Ghoſt hath purpoſedly done, to teach vs by his example to ſpeake and iudge charitablie of our brethren; and not to cenſure them as hypocrites, vntill they haue plainely diſcouered their hypocriſie. Laſtly, I anſwere to this argument, that though wee ſhould take the words according to their own ſenſe and meaning, yet nothing inferred by them would follow neceſſarily, ſeeing the ſpeech is not abſolute but conditionall, and by way of ſuppoſition, if any doe ſinne willingly, &c. which may rather bee taken as an admonition to keepe the faithfull from falling into condemnation, than as an argument of their fall.

CHAP. XIX.

Other obiections againſt the doctrine of perſeuerance, taken from teſtimonies out of the Epiſtles of Peter and the Reuelation, anſwered.

Sect.1.
1.9,ex-ded.

THe eighteenth place obiected is 2. Pet. 1.9. For he that doth not theſe things is blind and cannot ſee farre off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old ſinnes. From which place they thus reaſon: They who were purged from their old ſinnes may fall away from grace, for they may become blind, and forget that euer they were thus purged: but they who are purged from their ſinnes are elect and faithfull; and therefore the elect and faithfull may fall away from the ſtate of grace. I anſwere, firſt, that theſe words haue only in them the force of a ſuppoſition, namely, that if any profeſſing Chriſtianity, neglect all Chriſtian vertues, they are thus blind and forgetfull; and therefore ſeeing nothing is poſitiuely affirmed, not any thing can herehence bee neceſſarily concluded, but that wee muſt carefully take heed we do not neglect theſe holy vertues, ſeeing this negligence would bring men into this deſperate condition. Secondly, I diſtinguiſh vpon the aſſumption, for men are ſaid to be purged from their ſinnes either really and truely, when the blood of Chriſt is aphlied vnto them by his ſpirit, and a liuely Faith, or when as they are onely purged in their owne opinion and profeſſion; or in the iudgement of others, who charitably account thoſe purged from their ſinnes, who haue receiued the outward purging and waſhing in baptiſme, and haue by their outward profeſſion giuen their names to Chriſt. And of this latter purging common to hypocrites, wee are to vnderſtand this place, and not of the true purging by Chriſts blood, in which whoſoeuer are waſhed, can neuer become blind, nor forget that they were purged by him; and therefore the aſſumption being vnderſtood according to the Apoſtles meaning is directly falſe.

§. Sect. 2.
2.Pet.2.10.
expounded.

The ninteenth place obiected is 2. Pet. 2. 20. For if they after they haue eſcaped from the filthineſſe of the world through the knowledge of the Lord, and of the Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, are yet tangled againe therein and ouercome, the latter end is worſe with them than the beginning. 21. For it had beene better for them not to haue knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, than after they haue knowne it, to turne from the holy commandement giuen vnto them. 22. But it is come vnto them according to the true prouerbe, The dogge is returned to his vomit, and the ſow that was waſhed to the wallowing in the mire. From which place they thus reaſon: They who haue eſcaped the filthineſſe of the world, through the knowledge of God and Chriſt, and haue caſt off their ſinnes which oppreſſed their ſoules and conſciences, and haue beene waſhed from their corruptions, may fall away from grace and become reprobates; for they may be tangled in the world and ouercome, they may haue their latter end worſe than the beginning, they may turne from Gods commandements, they may returne to their vomit of ſinne, and wallow themſelues againe in the filthie mire of their corruptions: but ſuch are elect and faithfull: and therefore the elect and faithfull may fall away from grace and become reprobates. I anſwere, firſt, that here againe is no direct aſſertion that ſuch as hee here deſcribeth ſhould fall into this ſtate, but a conditionall ſuppoſition, if they doe thus behaue themſelues; and therefore though wee ſhould by this deſcription vnderſtand the faithfull, no ſuch thing could bee neceſſarily inferred. Secondly, I deny the aſſumption. For the Apoſtle doth not here vnderſtand the elect and true beleeuers, whom elſewhere hee affirmeth to be borne anew not of mortall ſeede, but of immortall, by the word of God which indureth for euer; and to bee kept by the power of God through faith vnto ſaluation: But only temporizers and Hypocrites, who ſuffer themſelues after they

1.Pet.1.23.25.
Verſe 5.

they haue been inſtructed in the knowledge of the truth, and haue made ſhew of ſome outward reformation in their liues, to be ſeduced by falſe teachers, and to be intangled againe in the world, and in the luſts of their fleſh. And this appeareth firſt by the whole drift of the Apoſtle in this Chapter, which is to inueigh againſt ſuch falſe Teachers as ſeduce the vnſtable out of the way of Truth into the by-paths of their owne errours; and after they haue beene conuerted by the preaching of the Goſpell from the groſſe errours of Paganiſme, vnto the knowledge and acknowledgement of Gods Truth, and haue beene purged from ſome outward enormous ſinnes, are againe by their falſe doctrine corrupted, and ſo plunged againe into their old errours in doctrine, and enormous crimes in their liues. Secondly, the Apoſtle doth not here deſcribe a true Beleeuer, by ſetting downe any notes proper and peculiar vnto him, ſeeing whatſoeuer is here ſpoken may belong to a temporizing Hypocrite: for ſuch an one may bee cleane eſcaped from the errours of Pagans and Heretikes, and not onely know, but alſo acknowledge Gods Truth inwardly in his judgement, and outwardly in his profeſſion; and yet in the meane time remayne deſtitute of a liuely faith, and of the inward ſanctification of the heart: euen as a man may diſauow the errours of Poperie, and yet continue vnregenerate and without the power of godlineſſe. He may, after hee hath attained the knowledge of God and Chriſt, eſcape the filthineſſe of the World, that is, he may haue his groſſe faults and the externall filthineſſe of the world in part reformed (as we may ſee in the example of Herod, who heard Iohn gladly, and did many things according to his doctrine) and yet nouriſh ſecret corruptions in his hart, which will afterwards burſt out into his works and actions. Hee may eaſe his heart and conſcience for a time, by caſting vp his groſſeſt ſinnes (as it were) in his vomit, but becauſe he is not throughly purged from the corrupt humours of ſinne, nor hath his heart ſound and vpright before God, the corruptions will gather againe, like bad humours in the ſtomacke ill diſpoſed, the ſickneſſe of his ſoule will be renewed, and hee will returne to his former wicked courſes, like the Dogge to his vomit, or the Sow to the mire.

Verſe 18.

Mark.6,20.

§. Sect.3.

Apoc.2.4.
What the Lord vnderſtandeth by loſing their firſt loue,

The twentieth place objected is Apoc. 2.4 Neuertheleſſe, I haue ſomewhat againſt thee, becauſe thou haſt left thy firſt loue. From which place they thus reaſon: They who loſe their Charitie may loſe their Faith alſo, and finally fall from grace; but the Angell of the Church of Epheſus loſt his charity: Ergo. I anſwer, the aſſumption is manifeſtly falſe, & quite contrary to the teſtimony alleged: for in the former part of the Epiſtle, as the Lord had highly commended the Angell of this Church, for many ſingular graces, approued by diuers excellent fruits of his Faith, ſo eſpecially he prayſeth his conſtancy and perſeuerance in theſe godly and religious courſes, in the next verſe going before. Whereas therefore hee admoniſheth him that hee had left his firſt loue, and willeth him to remember from whence hee was falne, his meaning is, not that hee had vtterly loſt his Charitie, and was falne from Faith and Grace, of which there ſtill remained ſo excellent fruits and infallible ſignes; but that he had left that high degree of loue, and that ardent affection, which he had formerly ſhewed towards God and his Saints, in reſpect that through negligence his loue was decayed in ſome particular actions and operations. Neither doth hee abſolutely ſay that hee had loſt his Charitie altogether, but his firſt Charitie; That is, his zealous heate of loue, which he had ſhewed ſoone after his firſt conuerſion, which was very extraordinary and ſingular, as appeareth in the ſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtles. And this nothing impugneth that truth which we maintaine, for though wee hold that Gods ſanctifying graces cannot be vtterly loſt, and quite extinguiſhed; yet they may decay, be weakned and diminiſhed in their meaſure and degree: at leaſt in our ſenſe and feeling, and in reſpect of their functions and operations, though their habits, or the graces themſelues do remaine in their wonted perfection.

§. Sect.4.

Apoc.3.5.

The one and twentieth place objected, is Apoc. 3.5. He that ouercommeth ſhall be clothed in white array, and I will not put out his name out of the booke of life, but I will confeſſe his Name before my Father, and before his Angels. From which place they thus reaſon: If they who ouercome ſhall not be blotted out of the Booke of life; then contrariwiſe it followeth by like reaſon, that thoſe who doe not ouercome ſhall be blotted out; but the firſt is true, therefore the ſecond likewiſe. This argument I haue already taken away in my anſwere to the firſt teſtimony objected againſt perſeuerance: briefly we are to anſwere, that if they meane by blotting out, Gods declaring that they were neuer written therein, we doe not deny it, as making nothing for them, nor againſt our queſtion. But if they vnderſtand a blotting out of ſuch as are already written, then we deny their conſequence, there being not the like reaſon betweene theſe two: for howſoeuer they who ouercome may fitly be ſaid not to be blotted out of Gods Booke, becauſe they are written in it, yet it cannot bee ſaid that they, who doe not ouercome ſhall bee blotted out, ſeeing they were neuer written in this Booke of life.

§. Sect.5.
Admoni and threa

Laſtly, they object the admonitions and threatnings, which are common in the Scriptures, whereby the Holy Ghoſt ſeemeth to doe not that wee ll from 20.11.

13.
Booke
3.

to inferre, that the faithfull are in danger to fall away from grace, and to loſe their faith, and other gifts of Gods Spirit. As, let him that thinketh hee ſtandeth, take heed leſt hee fall. Take heed leſt at any time there bee in any of you, an euill heart and vnfaithfull, to depart from the liuing God. But this argument I haue already anſwered, when as I proued the certaintie of our election, and tooke away the objections againſt this aſſurance; vnto which place for breuitie ſake, I referre the Reader for his fuller ſatisfaction.

CHAP. XX.

Obiection againſt the doctrine of perſeuerance grounded vpon examples, anſwered.

Sect.1. example euill

AND thus much for anſwere to thoſe Objections againſt perſeuerance which are grounded vpon teſtimonies of Scriptures. Now wee are to come vnto the examples which are alleaged to the ſame purpoſe; amongſt which diuers are vtterly impertinent to the queſtion in hand; for whereas it is thus propounded, whether a man elected, juſtified, and ſanctified, may fall from this his ſtate, loſe his faith and all ſanctifying graces, and become a reprobate, and a caſt-away, they object the example of the euill Angels, Saul, Iudas, and ſuchlike whom we vtterly deny to haue euer had faith, juſtification, or any other ſauing grace; ſo that their apoſtaſie from their former profeſſion, was not a falling from faith which they neuer had, but onely a detection and diſcouery of them, whereby was made manifeſt what they in truth were, namely, that what ſhew ſoeuer they had formerly made, yet they were neuer in the ſtate of grace, nor yet indued with a true juſtifying faith. But that we may deſcend vnto particulars; firſt they alleage the example of euill Angels, which, howſoeuer they were Gods moſt excellent creatures, and indued plentifully with many ſingular gifts and graces, yet they perſeuered not in this eſtate, but loſt their graces, and made a fearefull apoſtaſie from God. But if we would ſee what force this, and the reſt of the examples produced, haue to the preſent purpoſe; wee ſhall eaſily diſcerne it, if wee diſpoſe the example which is their argument, whereby they conclude their queſtion, together with the queſtion it ſelfe in a Syllogiſme after this manner:

xample
e Angels.

The Angels fell from grace, loſt their juſtification, and Faith, and became caſt-awayes:

But the Angels were men in the ſtate of grace, juſtified and indued with true Faith:

And therfore certain men being in the ſtate of grace, juſtified and endued with true Faith, may fall from grace, loſe their juſtification and Faith, and become caſt-awayes.

Whereby the impertinencie of this allegation to the concluding of this queſtion plainly appeareth. For firſt the Angels are not men, of whom alone the queſtion is propounded; they were not in the ſtate of grace, as the queſtion vnderſtandeth it, that is, the grace of redemption, but of creation onely; they were not juſtified by Chriſts imputed righteouſnes, but ſtood juſt in their own inherent righteouſneſſe; they had no juſtifying Faith, ſeeing there was neuer any promiſe made vnto them that Chriſt ſhould be giuen as their Mediatour, by whoſe righteouſneſſe they ſhould be juſtified.

§. Sect. 2.
The example of our firſt Parents.

The ſecond example is of our firſt parents which is alike impertinent in euery reſpect, ſauing that they were of humane nature; for before the fall they were only in the ſtate of grace by creation, and not by redemption; they were juſt by their owne inherent righteouſneſſe, and not by the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt; they had no juſtifying Faith, for as yet they had no promiſe of a Mediatour, nor needed his righteouſnes to juſtifie them, ſeeing they ſtood in their owne righteouſneſſe. Yea, but if the Angels and our firſt parents, who in their creation were farre more excellent, and much more ſtrong in grace, then we, did loſe their grace, and fall from God; then we who are weaker, and euery way inferiour vnto them, may much more eaſily loſe thoſe graces wherewith wee are indued and fall away. I anſwere, that this reaſon were of ſome force if we ſtood in our owne ſtrength, and perſeuered through our owne excellencie; for if we ſhould be left of God vnto our ſelues, as they were, we ſhould not be able to indure the leaſt aſſault of our ſpirituall enemies, nor perſeuere in the ſlighteſt tentations. But now it is farre otherwiſe, for our perſeuerance is not grounded vpon our owne ſtrength, but vpon the promiſes and power of God, who will, becauſe hee hath ſaid it, and can becauſe he is omnipotent, vphold vs againſt all the power of Hell. And howſoeuer wee are moſt feeble and weake in our ſelues, yet wee haue a ſure ſtay which continually vnderproppeth vs when wee are ready to yeeld and faint, euen the interceſſion of Ieſus Chriſt, who continually mediateth in our behalfe for Gods promiſed aſſiſtance, and prayeth when Sathan deſireth to winnow vs, that our Faith faile not. Neither doth our perſeuerance and ſaluation depend vpon our owne will as Adams did, for then wee ſhould eaſily be ouerthrowne and periſh, but vpon the will of God. And therefore howſoeuer wee are much more weake, yet our perſeuerance is incomparably more certaine; for though his will was free, and neuer ſo reſolute and ſtrong, yet it was finite and mutable, and therefore ouer-ruled by a grea-

Eſay 59.21.
Ier. 33.31.
and 32.40.
Pſal. 125.1.
Luke 22.32.

Adam accepit poſſe ſi vellet, non habuit velle quod poſſet, &c. Auguſt. de corrept. & grat. c. 11,12. *Tom.*7.

greater power, but Gods will is immutable, and cannot be ouer-ſwayed in regard of his infiniteneſſe in power and wiſdome. Adam receiued grace to perſeuere if he would, but not to will that he could; whereas the Lord hath granted vnto vs both power and will to continue in his grace vnto the end.

§. Sect.3.
The example of Saul.

The third example alleaged is of Saul, whom they affirme to haue beene elected and ſanctified, and yet to haue falne from grace and periſhed: From which example they reaſon thus:

Saul fell away from grace, loſt his Faith, and became a caſt-away:

But Saul was elect and regenerate.

Therefore certaine men being elect and regenerate, fall from grace, loſe their Faith, and become caſt-awayes.

1.Sam 9.2.

I anſwer, that both theſe propoſitions are falſe; for firſt, Saul neuer was in the ſtate of grace, and therefore could not fall from it; he neuer had true juſtifying Faith, and therefore could not loſe it. The aſſumption alſo is alike vntrue; for neither was Saul elected by God to eternall life, nor regenerate by his ſpirit. But this they labour to prooue by 1.Sam.9.2. which they thus reade: Saul was elect and a good man, and there was not a man amongſt the children of Iſrael better than hee. If therefore hee was elect and good, yea ſo good, that there was none better, then ſurely, ſay they, he was regenerate, or elſe there was none in Iſrael regenerate: but the former is true, therefore the latter. To this I anſwere, that they take aduantage vpon the equiuocation of the words, which they tranſlate, elect and good. For the former word, howſoeuer it ſignifieth in ſome places an elect man, yet it is commonly vſed for a * young or choice man, ſo called becauſe hee is apt and fit for all imployments, and is therefore elected and choſen from amongſt others for theſe purpoſes. So the other word ſignifieth not onely good, but alſo * faire and beautifull, & ſo it is to be taken in this place, as the wordes following expound it; Amongſt the children of Iſrael there was none fairer, or goodlier than hee, from the ſhoulders vpward hee was higher than any of the people. So that the meaning of theſe wordes is, that Saul was a choice yong man, and more beautifull and of goodlier perſonage, than any of the people. Yea, but it is ſaid, 1.Sam.10.24. that the Lord had choſen Saul; and therefore he was elect. I anſwere, that there is a twofold choice or election, the firſt to an Office or Function, the other to eternall ſaluation. Now wee are not to vnderſtand this place of this latter election, of which here is no ſpeech; but of the former, namely, that God had elected and choſen him, amongſt all the people to be the King of Iſrael, as all the circumſtances of the place plainly ſhew. But it is further ſaid, that the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul; and therefore Saul both had Gods Spirit, and alſo loſt it. I anſwere, that by the Spirit of the Lord wee are here to vnderſtand the gifts of the Spirit, as it is vſuall in the Scriptures; not his ſanctifying and ſauing graces which are proper to the Elect, but thoſe morall, ciuill and ordinary gifts, which are common to them with the vnregenerate; namely, the ſpirit of Prophecie, Wiſdome, Fortitude and Gouernment, with which Saul was formerly indued, when as he was choſen to be King of Iſrael, and not the ſpirit of adoption, and regeneration, which he neuer had. And thus the Holy Ghoſt expoundeth himſelfe: 1.Sam.10. 6,9. and Chap.11.6.

* Deut. 32.25. 1.Sam.6.1. 2.Chron.25.5. Pſal.148.12.

* Gen.6.2. and 24.16.

Exod.2.2. 1.Sam.11.2.

1.Sam.10.24.

Exod.31. Judg.13 and 15.1

1.Sam.10.6 and 11.6.

§. Sect.4.
The exam of Dauid.

The fourth example alleaged is of Dauid, from which they thus conclude:

Dauid loſt his Faith, and ſo for a time, fell from the ſtate of grace:

Dauid was elect and regenerate:

Therefore ſome elect and regenerate, may loſe their Faith, and fall from the ſtate of grace.

Pſal.51.11.

I anſwere, that the Propoſition is moſt falſe; for howſoeuer Dauids Faith was ſhaken, yet it was not ouerthrowne; though it loſt its former vigour and ſtrength for a time, ſo as he had not that ſenſible aſſurance of Gods fauour, nor that comfort and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, as hee was wont to haue in time paſt, yet the ſeed of Faith and Gods grace remayned in him; howſoeuer it was aſleepe (as it were) or brought into a deadly ſwoune for a while, yet it was not quite dead, but awakened againe by the preaching of Nathan, and reuiued when vpon his vnfained repentance, hee was re-aſſured of Gods loue and the remiſſion of his ſinne.

Yea but, ſay they, the Propoſition may further be confirmed by this reaſon:

He that committeth any hainous ſin willingly againſt his knowledge and conſcience, deſtroyeth his Faith.

But Dauids ſinne was ſuch, Ergo.

I anſwere, that Dauid did not ſinne with full conſent of will, but in part vnwillingly, the ſpirit ſtriuing againſt the fleſh, and diſallowing and diſſwading from that, vnto which hee was violently carried through the vehement concupiſcence of the fleſh. Hee did not ſinne maliciouſly, but through infirmitie, the fleſh rebelling againſt the ſpirit, and leading him captiue vnto ſinne; and therefore his ſin was not ſo powerfull to ſeparate him from Gods loue, as Chriſt was to retaine him in his fauour. Againe, theſe ſinnes of infirmitie though neuer ſo hainous in themſelues, and fearefully aggrauated, in that they are committed againſt our knowledge and conſcience, are not exempted from Gods mercie, nor exclude vs from hauing our part in thoſe gracious promiſes of pardon and forgiueneſſe, ſo we vnfainedly repent of them and forſake them; and conſequently they cannot deſtroy the Faith of Gods elect, ſeeing they ſtill haue the ground of their Faith, Gods mercy and gratious promiſes remaining, whereby it is renewed, and repaired, when as it is ſhaken and battered with their ſinnes and the violence of tentation.

Sect.5. example alomon.

The fifth example obiected againſt the certaintie of perſeuerance, is of Salomon; from whence they thus reaſon;

Salomon loſt his Faith, and fell from the ſtate of grace:

Salomon was elect and regenerate:

Therefore ſome elect and regenerate, may loſe their Faith, and fall from grace.

To which I anſwere, by denying the propoſition as falſe: for howſoeuer Salomon fell grieuouſly, yet he did not fall away from grace, nor loſt his Faith, nor was euer reiected out of Gods fauour, but liued and died a veſſell of grace, and in the loue of God, as may appeare by theſe reaſons. Firſt, becauſe God loued him, & that in ſuch ſpeciall manner, that he cauſed Nathan to giue him his name Iedidiah as a ſigne and Sacrament of his loue, as we may ſee, 2.Sam. 12. 24. 25. Now Gods loue is immutable, for whom he loueth, to the end hee loueth them: Iohn 13.1.

am.12.24.

13.1.

Secondly, he is ſaid to haue loued God, and to haue walked in the ordinances of Dauid his Father, onely through infirmity doting vpon his wiues, hee ſacrificed and offered incenſe in the high places: 1.King. 3. 3. So it is ſaid, that the godly Prieſts and Leuites, and ſuch as ſet their hearts to ſeeke the Lord, ioyned with Rehoboam in Gods worſhip and ſeruice, and ſtrengthened his kingdome three yeeres long, in which time they walked in the way of Dauid and Salomon: 1.Chron. 11. 16. 17.

King.3.3.

hro.11.16.

Thirdly, vnto him was made a promiſe from God, that his mercy ſhould neuer bee taken from him, though hee ſinned againſt him; but his ſinne ſhould be corrected with temporall chaſtiſements: 2. Sam. 7. 14. I will be his Father, and hee ſhall be my ſonne, and if he ſin, I will chaſten him with the rod of men, and with the plagues of the children of men. 15. But my mercie ſhall not depart away from him, as I tooke it from Saul, whom I haue put away before thee. The which promiſe is applied to all Gods elect to the ſame purpoſe: Pſal. 89. 29. 30. 31. &c. And this promiſe alſo was accordingly, accompliſhed, for when Salomon fell into that fearefull ſin of idolatrie, God threatneth to chaſtiſe this his ſinne with the diuiſion and renting of his kingdome, which was but a temporarie puniſhment. 1. King. 11. 11.

am.7.14.

89.29.30.

ing.11.11.

Yea, but this promiſe is made not concerning his ſpirituall eſtate, but concerning his worldly kingdome and gouernement. I anſwere, this obiection is confuted by experience; for Salomons ſinne was puniſhed in his next ſucceſſour, by taking from him ten tribes of the twelue, ſo that the greateſt part of his worldly gouernement ceaſed in his ſonne, and that which remained was in times ſucceeding taken from his poſteritie. And therefore Gods promiſe could not bee vnderſtood after a worldly and carnall manner, ſeeing in that reſpect it was not accompliſhed, and made good vnto him.

Fourthly, hee was a type of Chriſt, and his kingdome of the flouriſhing and peaceable gouernment of the Meſſias.

Fiftly, he was a penman of an excellent part of holy Scripture, and therefore hee was an holy man of God, who was inſpired immediately by the holy Ghoſt, as the Apoſtle Peter aſſirmeth 2.Pet. 1. 21.

2.*Pet.*1.21.

Laſtly, he repented of his ſinne in his old age, and wrote the booke of Eccleſiaſtes for a teſtimonie of his vnfained repentance, and conuerſion vnto God, as the Hebrewes who write of him generally affirme.

It is true, wil ſome ſay, that Salomon was a iuſt and faithfull man, but yet he fell away from grace, and loſt his Faith, if not finally, yet at leaſt for a time: for he doted vpon his wiues and concubines, and liued in filthie whoredome and horrible vncleanneſſe, he worſhipped the falſe gods of the Heathens, and ſo committed ſhamefull idolatrie, and his heart was not vpright before the Lord his God, as was the heart of Dauid his Father, as it is plainely affirmed: 1. King. 11. 3. 4. 5. 6. I anſwere, that theſe indeede are fearefull ſinnes into which Salomon fell, which (for the time he liued in them) did no doubt ſtupifie his Faith, and tooke away from him that liuely ſenſe and feeling, which hee formerly had of Gods loue and Fauour, and together with it the peace of conſcience, and ioy in the holy Ghoſt. But yet the ſeeds of Faith did all this while lie vnder (as it were) the heauie clods of his ſinne, doubting, and infidelitie, till God cauſed it to ſprout out againe, being watred with the dew of his grace, and with the teares of his vnfained repentance. And howſoeuer the flame of his Faith appeared not in his workes of pietie and righteouſneſſe, yet the ſparkes thereof remained, which againe ſhewed themſelues when God blowed vpon him with his holy ſpirit. In a word, though the act of Faith, which gaue him aſſurance of Gods Fauour, & brought forth the Fruits of vnfained repentance, was for a time interrupted and hindred with his fearefull ſins committed againſt his knowledge and conſcience, yet the habite of Faith remained with him, for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance; and Chriſt prayed for him that his Faith might not vtterly faile, though it were ſhreudly ſhaken. Laſtly, whereas it is ſaid that his heart was not vpright before God, as was his Father Dauids; we are not ſimplie and abſolutely to vnderſtand it, that it was neuer vpright at all, but that it was not vpright, as his Fathers, that is, in that meaſure and degree, as appeared by thoſe many and grieuous ſinnes into which he fell.

1.*King.*11.3.4.

*Rom.*11.29.

*Luk.*22.32.

§. Sect. 6. The example of Peter.

The ſixth example obiected is of Peter, from which they conclude as from the reſt:

Peter loſt his Faith, and fell from grace:

But Peter was elect and regenerate:

And therefore ſome elect and regenerate, may loſe their Faith, and fall from grace.

Auguſt.

Matth. 16. Luk. 22. 32.

The propoſition, which is falſe, they indeuour to proue, becauſe Peter contrarie to his knowledge and conſcience, fell into that hainous ſinne of denying his Maſter. But this argument is of no force, ſeeing Peter fell into this ſinne not vpon deſperate malice, or with full conſent of will, liking and approuing his Apoſtaſie; but through infirmitie and preſent Feare, he was violently carried capiue into this ſinne, diſallowing his backſliding, and ſtriuing againſt his Fearefulneſſe. So that as one ſaith, Confeſſio defecit in ore, ſed fides non defecit in corde: The conſtant and open profeſſion of his Faith was wanting in his mouth, but Faith was not wanting in his heart. And this will manifeſtly appeare if wee conſider the former gracious promiſes made vnto him by Chriſt, namely, that the gates of Hell ſhould not preuaile againſt that Faith whereof hee had made confeſſion, and that howſoeuer Satan had deſired to ſift him as wheate, yet ſo earneſtly had he praied vnto his Father, that his Faith ſhould not faile. And therefore either Chriſts promiſe was voide, and his prayer vaine, (which without Blaſphemie cannot be affirmed) or elſe Peters Faith failed not, howſoeuer he was ſhreudly ſifted and ſhaken with Satans tentations.

Heb. 1. 12.

But againſt this they obiect, that Chriſts meaning was, that his Faith ſhould not finally, and vtterly faile, and therefore it might for a time bee quite extinguiſhed, and afterwards againe renewed. I anſwere, Chriſts meaning is better vnderſtood by his owne words, than by their vncertaine gueſſes. Now Chriſt doth not ſay, Peter I haue prayed that thy Faith faile not vtterly, or that failing it may againe bee renewed, but that it might not faile at all, as the word ἐκλείπῃ alſo ſignifieth, which is not to be referred to the time, as though this ſhould bee the meaning, it ſhall not faile for euer, but vnto the thing, that it ſhould not faile at all. And thus the ſame word is vſed, Heb. 1. 12. and oppoſed not onely to periſhing and waxing old, but alſo to all manner of change. Againe, if Peters Faith ſhould haue failed at all, though it had againe beene renewed, yet theſe abſurdities muſt needs follow; both that hee muſt haue had a new Faith, differing at leaſt, as we ſay in number, from his firſt Faith, which had failed, and was loſt and periſhed, and alſo that Chriſts prayer was not heard, who prayed, not that his Faith might bee againe renewed after it was loſt, but that that Faith which which Peter now had might not faile.

§. Sect. The exa of Simon Ma gus.

The ſeuenth example is of Simon Magus, which is altogether impertinent to the purpoſe, ſeeing hee neuer had iuſtifying Faith, nor ſauing grace, and therefore could not loſe them. But let vs conclude their reaſon, and then anſwere it:

Simon Magus loſt his iuſtifying Faith and fell from grace:

Simon Magus was a beleeuer, elected to eternall life:

Therefore ſome who beleeue and are elect, loſe their Faith, and fall from grace.

Acts 8. 13.

I anſwere, both the premiſſes are falſe, and therefore the concluſion cannot be true. For firſt Simon Magus could not loſe that which hee neuer had, namely Faith and ſauing grace, and therefore the propoſition is vntrue: Secondly, the aſſumption being vnderſtood according to the queſtion, of a true iuſtifying Faith, is likewiſe falſe. For wheras they vrge that Simon Magus is ſaid to haue beleeued, and to haue beene baptized, and therefore was regenerate and indued with a true iuſtifying Faith, it followeth not; for he onely had an hiſtoricall Faith, whereby hee gaue his aſſent to the truth of their doctrine, wrought in him by the admirable miracles which hee ſaw done by the Apoſtles, which was ſeuered from the power of ſanctification and true godlineſſe. He was waſhed onely with the outward water in baptiſme, and not in the lauer of regeneration by Gods ſpirit; as it plainely appeareth by Peters iuſt accuſation and reproofe, whereby hee chargeth him, that his heart was not vpright in the ſight of God, (though he had made a plauſible ſhew before men) that hee was in the gall of bitterneſſe, and in the bond of iniquitie; and therefore when he was at the beſt, he was but a meere Hypocrite and no true beleeuer.

§. Sect. 8. The exa of Iuda.

The eight example alleaged is of Iudas; from which they thus reaſon:

Iudas loſt his Faith, fell from grace, and became a reprobate:

But Iudas was elected, and indued with iuſtifying Faith:

Therefore ſome elected and indued with iuſtifying Faith, may fall from grace and become reprobates.

I anſwer to the propoſition, that Iudas could not loſe that which he neuer had, nor fall from that eſtate in which he neuer was. Secondly, the aſſumption is to be denied as be-being vtterly falſe, and directly repugnant to the Holy Scripture; for before the diuell entred into him, mouing him to betray our Sauiour Chriſt, hee was an egregious Hypocrite, and a wicked perſon, howſoeuer then firſt he plainely diſcouered his wickedneſſe, and Hypocriſie; for although hee ſpake in the behalfe of the poore, yet it was but in Hypocriſie, not that he cared for the poore, but becauſe he was a theefe and bare the bagge, with that which was giuen: Ioh. 12.6. Hee followed Chriſt, not for any loue vnto him or his truth, but for his own gaine and aduancement, which comming farre ſhort of his expectation (which was to bee ſome great peere of an earthly kingdome) the ſame greedie deſire of gaine moued him to betray him for a reward. Hee is called the child of perdition, Iohn 17.12. whoſe deſtruction was foretold long before in the Scriptures, as appeareth, Pſalm. 109. verſ. 7. to the 20. which is applied vnto him, Act. 1.20. Yea our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe who beſt knew him, as being the ſearcher of the heart and reines, expreſly calleth him a diuell: Iohn 6.70. Haue not I choſen you twelue, and one of you is a diuell? 71. Now he ſpake it of Iudas Iſcariot. And that this wicked traitor had neuer any true Faith, what ſhew and profeſſion ſoeuer he made, it may eaſily appeare, verſe 64. But there are ſome of you (ſaith Chriſt) which beleeue not; for Ieſus knew from the beginning which they were who beleeued not, and who ſhould betray him.

But it is further objected, that our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, Ioh. 17.12. that Iudas was giuen vnto him by his Father, and conſequently, it followeth, that hee was elect and indued with Faith. I anſwer, that there is a twofold giuing vnto Chriſt, and a twofold election: the firſt is, when as men are giuen vnto Chriſt that they may bee vnited vnto him, and ſo be redeemed, juſtified, and ſaued, and when as they are elected in Gods eternall counſell vnto eternall life; and in this ſenſe Iudas was not giuen to Chriſt, nor elected by God, ſeeing hee was the ſonne of perdition, whoſe deſtruction was foretold, and no better than a diuell by Chriſts own teſtimonie. The other giuing to Chriſt and election is, when they were giuen vnto him of God, and elected by Chriſt to beare the office of an Apoſtle, and to be his diſciples; and thus onely Iudas was giuen by God, and elected by Chriſt, to this Apoſtolicall office and function, according to that, Haue I not elected or choſen you twelue, and one of you is a diuell? Neither can we vnderſtand it of the other donation and election, vnleſſe wee will ſay, that Chriſt redeemed not thoſe whom God elected, or that he wanted power or will to effect his Fathers end, ſeeing hee did not ſaue him, who was giuen vnto him by his Father that hee might bee redeemed. To conclude, wee may rather inferre from this place, that none who are giuen vnto Chriſt can periſh or be loſt, ſeeing our Sauiour ſaith plainely and without exception, that none giuen vnto him by his Father, are by him loſt, but this Iudas the child of perdition, who was giuen to be his Apoſtle, but not to bee redeemed and ſaued, ſeeing this would haue directly croſſed the prophecies of Holy Scriptures which foretold his deſtruction.

And theſe are the examples which are alleaged, and obiected againſt the certaintie of our perſeuerance by Bellarmine, the great Goliah of the Romiſh Philiſtims.

§.Sect.9. The example of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſſe.

Beſides which ſome others are obiected to the ſame purpoſe by other men. As firſt the example of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſſe. From which they thus conclude:

All the Iſraelites in the wilderneſſe were indued with Faith, and were iuſtified and regenerate:

But ſome of them loſt their Faith, fell from grace and periſhed:

Therefore ſome who are indued with Faith, juſtified and regenerate, may fall from grace and periſh.

But if wee conclude their argument in right forme, it ſhould be thus:

All the Iſraelites in the wilderneſſe loſt their Faith, fell from grace and periſhed:

But ſome of them were indued with Faith, juſtified and regenerate:

Therefore ſome indued with Faith, iuſtified and regenerate, may fall from grace and periſh.

But to let paſſe the forme I anſwere their argument, and deny that all the Iſraelites were indued with true Faith, iuſtified and ſanctified. The which they endeuour to proue by the ſaying of the Apoſtle, 1.Cor. 10.2.3.4. where it is ſaid, that all the Iſraelites were baptized vnto Moſes in the cloud, and in the ſea, and did all eate the ſame ſpirituall meate, and drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke, for they dranke of that rock which followed them, and that rocke was Chriſt. From which place they inferre: that ſeeing they did all feed of this ſpirituall meate, and drinke of this ſpirituall drinke, which could no otherwiſe bee done, but after a ſpirituall manner, namely, by a true Faith, that therefore they muſt needs haue this true Faith, whereby feeding vpon Chriſt, they were juſtified and ſanctified. I anſwere, that by ſpirituall meate wee are to vnderſtand the Manna, wherewith they were fed, and the water which iſſued out of the rocke, which were called ſpirituall, not onely becauſe they were miraculouſly ſent from heauen, and forced out of the rocke by vertue of Gods ſpirit; but alſo becauſe they were types and ſacraments of the ſpirituall nouriſhment of our ſoules with the body and blood of Chriſt; euen as the bread and wine are ſaid to be ſpirituall meate and drinke in the vſe of the ſacrament, not becauſe they are ſo in their owne nature, but only as they are ſet apart for this ſpirituall vſe, to nouriſh our ſoules vnto eternall life. Now howſoeuer many of the Iſraelites who were indued with Faith, did not onely receiue the outward ſignes of Manna and water, but alſo the things ſignified, namely, the body and blood of Chriſt, whereby they were ſpiritually nouriſhed to life euerlaſting: yet many of them did onely eate of this meate with their bodily mouthes, hauing no Faith to receiue Chriſt inwardly for the nouriſhment of their ſoules, and ſo receiued theſe outward ſpirituall ſignes to their further iudgement and condemnation. And this appeareth by Chriſts owne teſtimonie: Ioh. 6.49.50. where hee ſaith, that many of the Iſraelites did eate Manna in the wilderneſſe, that is, the outward elements onely with their bodily mouthes, and not the things ſignified thereby, namely, his body and blood; and therefore they died and periſhed both in body and ſoule; whereas contrariwiſe, thoſe who eate of the ſpiritual bread of life, which came downe from heauen, they die not, but liue for euer. Yea, but it is ſaid that they all did eate of the ſame ſpirituall meate, and did drinke of the ſame ſpirituall drinke, which came out of the ſpirituall rocke, which was Chriſt; I anſwere, that they did eate of the ſame ſpirituall meate indeed, but not after the ſame maner. For there is a twofold kind of eating; Firſt, when as wee eate this ſpirituall meate the Sacrament, that is, the outward ſignes and elements in the Sacrament with our mouthes onely; and thus all the fathers were ſaid to haue eaten the ſpirituall meate in the wilderneſſe, becauſe they were all partakers of the outward ſignes: the other manner of eating this ſpirituall meat is, when as wee doe not onely receiue the outward ſignes with the bodily mouth, but alſo the things ſignified thereby, namely, the body and blood of Chriſt with the mouth of the ſoule, a true and liuely Faith; and thus many of the fathers in the wilderneſſe did not eate this ſpirituall meate, ſeeing they died and periſhed; whereas thoſe who feede vpon the fleſh of Chriſt, the bread of life, and drinke his blood ſpiritually by faith, they ſhall liue for euer as our Sauiour ſpeaketh. Neither doth it helpe them at all, that it is ſaid that this rocke whereof they dranke was Chriſt, ſeeing wee are not hereby to vnderſtand, that it was Chriſt himſelfe, but onely a ſacrament of his blood; it being vſuall in the Scriptures to call the ſignes by the name of the things ſignified.

1.*Cor.*10.2.3.4.

*Iohn.*6.49, 50.

§.*Sect.*10.

The ſecond example obiected is of the Corinthians. From which they thus conclude:

The exa of the Co thians.

All the Corinthians were indued with true faith, iuſtified and ſanctified:

But ſome of the Corinthians loſt their faith, and fell from grace, for they committed ſinnes which ouerthrow faith, and deſtroy the conſcience, as namely, they liued in drunkenneſſe, they maintained fornication, they denied the reſurrection, &c.

Therefore ſome hauing faith, and being iuſtified and ſanctified, may loſe their faith, and fall from grace.

To ſay nothing of the forme of this ſyllogiſme, I anſwer vnto their argument, that as it cannot bee truely ſaid in the generall, that all the Corinthians were indued with faith, iuſtified, and ſanctified, ſo neither that all did liue in theſe ſinnes, or maintaine that damnable hereſie, that there ſhould bee no reſurrection: but ſome only were faithfull and iuſtified, and ſome other onely committed and maintained theſe ſins. If therefore it bee generally ſaid of all that they had faith, or that they fell from grace by maintaining theſe ſinnes, it is vtterly falſe: if either bee affirmed but of ſome only, they doe not diſpute ad idem, and ſo conclude nothing. Yea but the Apoſtle ſaith, that they were ſanctified, iuſtified, and waſhed from their ſinnes by Gods ſpirit. I anſwere, that he doth not ſay, all were, but ſome onely. Such were ſome of you, but you are waſhed, &c. But though it ſhould bee granted that hee had ſaid ſo of them all, as he calleth all at Rome Chriſtians & Saints, and all at Galatia the ſonnes of God; yet nothing would hereof follow. For to be iuſt and ſanctified is taken two wayes; firſt, generally and improperly before men: ſecondly, ſpecially and properly before God. In the former reſpect men are ſaid to bee iuſt, and holy, when as they haue receiued the Sacrament of regeneration, and doe profeſſe themſelues members of the Church which is iuſtified and ſanctified, and make ſhew of religion and outward ſanctification; and this is before men, who call ſuch iuſt and holy in reſpect of their hope, and in the iudgement of charitie; in the other reſpect men are truly and properly ſaid to be iuſt and holy, in the ſight and iudgement of God, when as they are ſo indeed and truth, and not in outward ſhew onely. The reaſon of this diſtinction is, that men cannot ſearch the heart, and therefore according to the rule of charitie, muſt iudge well of thoſe who make a good ſhew, though they be hypocrites, if they haue not diſcouered their hypocriſie; but God ſeeth not as man ſeeth, but hee ſearcheth and trieth the very heart and reines. Now to applie this diſtinction, the Apoſtle being a man, and writing vnto men, ſpeaketh not ac-

1.Cor.6.11.

according to the ſecret judgement of God, but that profeſſing themſelues the Church and people of God, they were to bee reputed in the judgement of charitie juſt and holy.

Sect. 11. example e Gala-ns.

The third example objected is of the Galathians, whom they affirme to haue had Faith and juſtification, and afterwardes to haue loſt this Faith, and falne from grace, becauſe they were carried away with the doctrine of the falſe Apoſtles as though they had beene bewitched, as the Apoſtle affirmeth. This Obiection is all one with the former, and therefore I will not ſtand vpon it. Briefly I anſwere, that as all the Galathians were not juſtified and indued with true Faith, ſo all did not imbrace the doctrine of the falſe Apoſtles. And therefore this accuſation belonging properly to the Hypocrites and vnregenerate (although in reſpect of their ſocietie and neere communion, it bee directed to the Church in generall, as being all of one bodie) doth not touch thoſe who were indued with true Faith and regenerate, and conſequently impugneth not their perſeuerance.

Sect. 12. example las the con, 6.

Laſtly, they object the example of Nicolas the Deacon, ſpoken of Acts 6.5. from which they thus conclude:

Nicolas the Deacon loſt his Faith, and fell from grace:

Nicolas the Deacon was juſtified and regenerate;

Therefore ſome juſtified and regenerate, loſe their Faith, and fall from grace.

The Propoſition they proue, becauſe hee was the authour and firſt Founder of the wicked Hereſies of thoſe Heretikes, which after his name were called Nicolaitanes, whoſe doctrine, approouing ſpirituall and carnall whoredome, God hated, as appeareth, Apoc. 2.15. I anſwer, that if this were the ſame Nicolas (which doth not appeare by any neceſſary proofe, but ſtandeth onely vpon ſome probable conjecture) yet the Propoſition is falſe, ſeeing he neuer had faith, nor was euer in the ſtate of grace, and therefore could not loſe that hee neuer had, nor fall from that eſtate in which he neuer was. For had hee euer beene truly juſtified, then hee ſhould haue beene alſo glorified, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, Rom. 8.30. Had he beene of the faithfull, hee would ſurely haue continued with them, and not departed from them by this foule hereſie, as Iohn affirmeth 1. Epiſt. 2.19.

But that hee was juſtified and regenerate, they aſſume and indeuour to prooue by that teſtimony, Acts 6.3: where the Apoſtles bid the Diſciples chuſe ſeuen men of honeſt report, and full of the Holy Ghoſt, and of wiſdome, to be their Deacons, who ſhould diſtribute to the poore. And accordingly they choſe them, and amongſt the reſt this Nicolas. Their reaſon ſtandeth thus:

They who are full of the Holy Ghoſt, are juſtified and ſanctified:

Nicolas was full of the Holy Ghoſt:

Ergo.

I anſwere that here by the Holy Ghoſt we are not to vnderſtand the ſanctifying Spirit of God, and the ſauing graces thereof; but thoſe common gifts of his holy Spirit, wherby he was fitted for that office and Function of a Deacon, vnto which hee was called; namely, wiſdome, faithfulneſſe, carefulnes, prouidence, loue to the poore, pitifulneſſe, kindneſſe and ſuch like, all which are common to the vnregenerate with the regenerate. Secondly, though wee ſhould grant that here is vnderſtood Gods ſanctifying graces, yet it followeth not that this Nicolas was indued with them. For the Spirit of God ſaith not, that theſe ſeuen Deacons elected were indued with Faith and the Holy Ghoſt (for he onely giueth this teſtimony vnto Stephen) but that the Apoſtles injoyned the Diſciples to chuſe ſuch as in their judgement were thus qualified. Now it is one thing to be full of the Holy Ghoſt, juſtified, and ſanctified in the judgement of the Church, and another to bee ſo in the judgement of God; for the Lord who ſearcheth the hearts and reines neuer erreth in his judgement, but the Church judging according to outward ſignes and effects, and according to the rule and direction, not of omniſcience which they haue not, but of charitie which they ought to haue, judgeth thoſe indued with Gods holy Spirit juſtified and ſanctified, who make profeſſion of Religion, and bring forth ſome outward fruits thereof; in which their judgement they are as often miſtaken and deceiued, as they haue to deale with cunning diſguiſed Hypocrites, before they haue vnmasked themſelues, and by their euill fruits diſcouered their Hypocriſie.

Chap. XXI.

Reaſons alleaged againſt the doctrine of perſeuerance, anſwered.

§. Sect. 1.

AND thus haue I anſwered vnto ſuch Objections againſt the certaintie of perſeuerance, as are grounded vpon examples. Now in the laſt place, I will propound their Reaſons vſually alleaged to the ſame purpoſe; which I will anſwere briefly, becauſe they may eaſily bee refuted by that which hath beene already ſaid. Firſt, then they reaſon thus:

All habits may be loſt:

Iuſtifying Faith is an habite:

Therefore juſtifying Faith may be loſt.

I anſwere to the Propoſition, that if it be true at all (as it is queſtionable) then only of naturall habits, which in proceſſe of time are gotten by mans induſtry and labour. But Faith is no naturall habit attained vnto by mans induſtry, but is the meere gift of God, infuſed into vs by his holy Spirit; in which we conſtantly perſeuere vnto the end, not by the vertue, ſtrength and nature of this habit of Faith in it ſelfe, but through the promiſed power of Gods aſſiſtance, and the interceſſion of Ieſus Chriſt, againſt which the gates of Hell can neuer preuaile.

Ephes.3.8.

But they further confirme the former propoſition by this reaſon:

Hee that doth an act of infidelitie, loſeth the habit of Faith:

Hee that hath an habit of Faith may doe an act of infidelitie:

Therefore he that doth an act of infidelity loſeth the habit of Faith.

§.*Sect.*2.

I deny the Propoſition: for as we ſay, One Swallow maketh no Summer; one or two particular acts cannot deſtroy the habit, howſoeuer they interrupt it for the time. One cruell act doth not deſtroy the habit of clemencie and mercy, one fond act doth not ouerthrow an habite of wiſdome, neither doth one act of intemperancy extinguiſh the habit of temperance; becauſe the habit doth not depend vpon the act, but the act on the habit.

The ſecond reaſon is thus concluded:

Many baptized in their infancie, when they come to age ſinne grieuouſly, and ſo are damned:

All baptized in their infancie are predeſtinated vnto life, and by Baptiſme receiue faith and are juſtified:

Therefore many predeſtinated vnto life, juſtified, and indued with faith, doe ſin grieuouſly and are damned.

I anſwere that the aſſumption is manifeſtly falſe; for as our Sauiour ſaith, Many are called, but few choſen; that is, many there are who are outwardly called to bee members of the Church, entred thereinto by Baptiſme, made partakers outwardly of the Word and Sacraments, but few of theſe belong either to Gods eternall election, or are effectually called and choſen to be members of the Church inuiſible. Neither doth the outward receiuing of the Sacraments ex opere operato, by the deed done, conferre grace, as the Papiſts falſly affirme, but onely to the true Beleeuer, who not onely receiueth the outward ſignes, but alſo the things thereby ſignified by a liuely and juſtifying faith.

The third reaſon is thus concluded:

§.*Sect.*3.

IF the elect cannot loſe juſtifying faith, there could be in the world no Heretikes and Apoſtataes: but there are in the World Heretikes and Apoſtataes; therefore the elect may loſe juſtifying faith. The conſequence of the propoſition they endeuour to prooue, becauſe this is the difference betweene Pagans and Heretikes, that Pagans neuer had faith, Heretikes haue had, but loſt it. I anſwere, firſt, that the Propoſition hath in it no force, vnleſſe we preſuppoſe that onely the elect become Heretikes, which is vtterly falſe. Neither is the proofe of the Propoſition to any purpoſe, ſeeing their faith which diſtinguiſheth Heretikes from Pagans is not a true juſtifying faith, but the doctrine of faith, which they hauing formerly profeſſed afterwards denie. And in this ſenſe they are ſaid to haue departed from the faith, and to haue made ſhipwracke of faith, as before I haue ſhewed more at large, *Chap.*18. *Sect.*7.

§.Sect.
*Lib.*2.Chap

The fourth reaſon is, that if the elect may not fall away, then all admonitions and threatnings are in vaine. But vnto this Objection I haue alreadie anſwered, and therefore I will paſſe it ouer.

The fifth reaſon is thus concluded:

The opinion which brings deſperation is not true:

But this opinion, that the elect cannot loſe juſtifying faith, bringeth deſperation:

Therefore this opinion that the elect cannot loſe juſtifying faith is not true.

I anſwere to the aſſumption, that rather that opinion which teacheth vs that we may loſe juſtifying faith, and that we can haue no certaintie of perſeuerance bringeth deſperation; for vncertaintie cauſeth doubting, and doubting deſperation; and when our faith hath no firme ground to reſt vpon, but flickereth and wauereth (as it were) in the aire, then at laſt being tired and wearied, it muſt needs faint and fall.

Yea but if our grace, faith, and juſtification cannot be true, vnleſſe we be alſo certain, that we ſhall perſeuere in them, then muſt this needs bring doubting and deſperation, ſeeing we cannot be ſure of future euents, and oftentimes doubt whether we ſhall perſeuere in theſe graces or no. I anſwere, that if theſe future euents had no other ground but our owne will or power, they would certainly be vncertaine, but ſeeing their certaintie is grounded vpon the infallible promiſes, immutable loue & omnipotent power of God, we may as well be aſſured of them, as of any thing preſent. And howſoeuer we are often aſſaulted with doubting, and cannot aſſuredly determine of our perſeuerance, when we looke vpon our own weaknes and frailtie, yet this followeth not, that our grace, faith, and juſtification are not true, if we doe not nouriſh this doubting, but labour and ſtriue againſt it, and renew our aſſurance of faith by meditating vpon the infinite truth, power and goodneſſe of God, and the mediation and interceſſion of Ieſus Chriſt.

Laſtly, it is objected, that if wee cannot fall from the grace of God, then God cannot bee angry with vs for our ſinnes; for anger and loue will not ſtand together: but the latter is falſe, & therefore the former alſo.

Sect. 5.

I anſwere, that the conſequent of the propoſition is falſe; for loue is not oppoſed to anger, but to hatred. The Lord indeed is angry with the ſinnes of his faithfull, and in his anger correcteth them; but this correction is not ſo much a puniſhment of the ſinne paſt, as a preuention of ſinne to come. He is angry with them as a louing Father is angry with his Sonne, not in hatred but in loue, not to hurt or forſake them, but that by his juſt conceiued diſpleaſure hee may reſtraine them from falling into the like ſins, and ſo ſtill retaine them as worthy to be beloued.

Sect. 6.
e concluſiof this con uerſie, and the whole atiſe,

And thus haue I prooued the certaintie of our perſeuerance, and alſo anſwered ſuch objections as are commonly ſuggeſted by Satan, and ſtiffely vrged by his wicked inſtruments the Popiſh rabble againſt this truth. And ſo by Gods gracious aſſiſtance I haue finiſhed this Treatiſe containing the chiefe controuerſies betweene Sathan and the true Chriſtian. The which with all other my labours I commend to Gods bleſſing, who being the ſole fountaine of all true comfort and conſolation only is able by the aſſiſtance of his holy Spirit, to make them effectuall to the aduancing of thoſe ends, for which I haue intended them: deſiring the Chriſtian Reader who ſhall finde fruit and profit by theſe my labours; that as I haue not beene wanting vnto him in my paines and beſt endeuours, ſo hee will not be wanting to remember mee in his prayers vnto Almightie God for the continuance, increaſe and holy vſe of all his gifts and graces which he hath beſtowed on me, ſo as it may be moſt for the aduancing of his glory, the benefit of his Church, and the furthering of mine owne ſaluation. To this God moſt wiſe, moſt gracious, and moſt infinite in all perfections, the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt, be aſcribed all glory, prayſe, power, and dominion, both now and euermore. Amen.

FINIS.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE,

The Second Part.

OR THE CONTEMPT OF THE WORLD:

TENDING TO ARME AND CONFIRME THE WEAKE CHRISTIAN AGAINST THE tentations of proſperitie, and to preſerue him from the immoderate loue of earthly things; by prouing vnto him, that both the World and worldly Vanities are ſo baſe and worthleſſe, that they deſerue not to be eſteemed and loued of a Chriſtian, in compariſon of Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly Joyes.

WRITTEN AS AN ANTIDOTE AGAINST THE POYSON OF WORLDLY LOVE, WITH WHICH IN THESE DAYES SO many are infected; and that it might reuiue that heauenly fire of ſpirituall and diuine Loue, which is ſo much cooled and abated.

By I. DOWNAME Bachelar in Diuinitie, and Preacher of GODS Word.

I. IOHN 2. 15.

Loue not the World, neither the things that are in the World. If any man loue the World, the loue of the Father is not in him.

LONDON, Printed by WILLIAM STANSBY, 1633.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE SIR THOMAS EGERTON KNIGHT,

Baron of Elſmere, Lord High Chancellor of England; and one of his Majeſties moſt Honorable Priuy Counſell, J. D.* wiſheth all grace and proſperitie in this life, and eternall happineſſe in the life to come.

WHen I conſidered, Right Honourable, the great puiſſance, and preuailing ſtrength, of theſe arch-enemies of our ſaluation, the world and worldly vanities, manifeſted in their daily conqueſts, not onely of thoſe, who voluntarily yeeld at the firſt onſet, & are willingly content to become their vaſſals and ſlaues, for the vncertaine tenure and baſe wages of earthly vanities; but alſo of ſuch as hauing giuen their names to Chriſt, by receiuing his Sacrament, profeſſed themſelues to bee his Souldiers and ſeruants, and that amongſt other enemies, they would valiantly fight his battailes, againſt the World, and worldly luſts: who notwithſtanding their oath and promiſe, either yeeld ſubjection to the World vpon the offer of earthly profits, pleaſures, and preferments, or ſtand in a cold neutralitie, deſiring to doe ſeruice to the World and God too; but without all indifferencie, ſeeing hee hath onely the ſeruice of their lips, and ſome outward deuotions, meerely complementall, and ceremoniall; whereas the other maſter hath the ſeruice of their hearts, and all their care, labours, and painfull indeuours imployed about him. And when as I ſaw the glorious Trophees of the Worlds Victories erected, not onely in euery corner of the Common-wealth, but euen in the Temple and Church of God, to his great diſhonour, and the diſgrace of his true Religion; I thought I could not ſpend my ſtrength in a better quarrell, than in oppoſing againſt this enemie of our ſaluation; to the end, that I might abate his preuailing forces, and weaken the very ſinewes of his ſtrength, wherein he moſt glorieth and triumpheth; by ſhewing that the wages of iniquitie whereby he inticeth men to leaue Gods Standard, and to fight vnder his colours, is but baſe and counterfeit coine, beeing examined by the touch-ſtone of Gods Truth, and therefore not to be receiued of a Chriſtian for good pay; much leſſe to be preferred before that Crowne of Victory, euerlaſting Glory, and thoſe al-ſufficient treaſures of our heauenly Kingdome, which God promiſeth to all thoſe who fight his battailes, and valiantly ouercome. Neither did I thinke that I could more profitably ſpend my ſtudies in any other argument, eſpecially in theſe times, wherein the loue of the World ſo greatly preuaileth, that with Demas men daily fall from the profeſsion of Gods Truth, and imbrace the World, hauing onely ſo much loue of Religion, as the loue of the World worketh in them; and either not ſeruing God at all, or only that they may ſerue their owne turnes, in worldly and carnall reſpects. For if by plaine teſtimonies of holy Scriptures, and by effectuall reaſons (as it were a Proclamation ſent from the great King of Heauen and Earth) I could cry downe the high rates and prices of theſe baſe and Copper Coynes, and bring them to their owne value; by ſhewing that there is no excellencie and true worth in them, but onely as they ſerue for the preſent neceſsitie of our earthly ſtate, and to furniſh vs in our trauaile towards our heauenly Countrie; then would there many and great benefits be hereby deriued vnto vs. For if wee could contemne the World and worldly vanities, as things of ſmall worth, then would they not be as heauy clogs to hinder vs from running the Chriſtian race, and from aſcending in our meditations into Gods Kingdome, to take poſſeſsion for the preſent of our heauenly inheritance with our minds and thoughts, till our ſoules and bodies doe come thither: then would we not ſuffer them to take vp all our cogitations, care, ſtudie, and labour, about the getting or preſeruing them, ſo as wee haue little or no time left to performe ſeruice vnto God; or if at all wee doe it, yet with much diſtraction and perturbation: then would the tentations of the Deuill haue no power to draw vs into ſinne, wanting this wages of iniquitie, and theſe alluring baits, wherewith he inticeth vs to come into his nets of perdition For who would ſerue Satan for nought, or for ſuch things as hee contemneth, or but lightly valueth, leauing the ſeruice of his Creatour and Redeemer, and thereby hazarding the eternall loſſe of thoſe heauenly excellencies which hee hath promiſed vnto his ſeruants in the life to come? Then ſhould we haue a true golden age, free from all Oppreſsion, Bribing, Extortion, Fraude, Wrongs, Diſſenſions, Treaſons, Rebellions, and innumerable other outrages, which are cauſed and occaſioned through the immoderate loue of theſe earthly things; and perfect loue and charitie being entertained amongſt men, they would ſtriue who ſhould exceed other in all good and Chriſtian duties, louing vertue and goodneſſe for their owne ſakes: then would not thoſe who abound with theſe worldly things be euer the prouder, or with ſcornfull inſolence ouerlooke their Brethren; for who is proud of that which he contemneth? Neither would thoſe that want them be much troubled, hauing for the preſent Gods better gifts, euen his ſanctifying and ſauing graces, and for the time to come farre more excellent hopes, life eternall, and the vnſpeakable ioyes of Gods glorious Kingdome. For who bewaileth the want, or lamenteth the loſſe of thoſe things which he lightly eſteemeth, eſpecially hauing both in poſſeſsion and hope, ſuch things as are of farre greater worth and excellencie? Finally, if we were perſwaded to contemne the World and worldly vanities, and highly to eſteeme of the ioyes of Heauen, then would we not feare the approch of death, but bid it welcome with a cheerefull countenance? ſeeing it taketh vs from the things which we doe not much regard, and entreth vs into the poſſeſsion and fruition of our better hopes; euen a Kingdome matchleſſe, and glory endleſſe. Whereas contrariwiſe, when theſe worldly things be ouer-valued, and too much loued and deſired, they wholly take vp mens meditations, and diſable them for Gods ſeruice, they lay them open to Satans tentations, and make them readie to perpetrate and commit any wickedneſſe, which may further them to the obtaining of the things which they affect; neither is there any ſtop in the way to hinder their headlong courſe in ſinne, vnleſſe it be when their worldly deſires doe croſſe one another. They puffe men vp with pride when they enjoy them, and conſume them with griefe and diſcontent when they want them: and to conclude, they make death moſt terrible, becauſe it plucketh them violently from theſe delights, vnto which their hearts are faſt glued, and forceth them to leaue the things which they dearely loue hauing no aſſurance or hope of a better life. For the auoiding of all which euils, and for the furthering and aduancing of the former benefits, I haue laboured in this argument, euen aboue my ſtrength, God ſhewing his power in my weakneſſe, and cauſing my deſire to ſupply that which was wanting in my health. Of which my labours I haue choſen your Lordſhip for Patron, partly to ſhew my loue and dutie vnto you, from whom I haue had, both all the meanes of my maintenance which I enjoy, wherewith I haue beene enabled to labour; and opportunitie to exerciſe that poore talent which I haue receiued from my great Lord and Maſter: and partly becauſe I thought, I could not dedicate vnto you a Booke of a fitter argument, wherein your ſelfe may at your beſt leaſure meditate; ſeeing on the one ſide the greatneſſe of your place, and height of your Honours and preferments may (without your greater vigilance and circumſpection) incline your affections too much to the loue of theſe earthly things, and on the other ſide your age is not likely in courſe of nature to allow vnto you any long poſſeſsion of theſe momentanie things. In regard of both which, your Honour cannot bee too well armed againſt the immoderate loue of theſe worldly vanities, nor haue your heart too much inflamed with that diuine loue of Heauen, and thoſe moſt glorious joyes in Gods preſence, which you ſhall inherit for euermore; becauſe hereby you ſhall injoy Gods bleſsings more ſecurely whileſt you haue them, when as your heart is not ſo fixed on them but that you can be content to leaue them; and part with them alſo with joy and comfort, when as you are aſſured, that you ſhall exchange them for thoſe heauenly joyes and rich treaſures of Gods glorious Kingdome, which infinitely exceed all earthly preferments in worth and excellencie. Which if my poore labours, added to your better helps, and holy meditations, might any way further, I ſhould much more reioyce in being a poore inſtrument of your ſpirituall good, than in the injoying of thoſe earthly benefits which I haue receiued from you.

The Lord more and more inrich your noble heart with all ſpirituall and ſauing grace, and after a long and happy life on earth, vouchſafe vnto yuo the euerlaſting fruition of his glorious pre-ſence, and that fulneſſe of joy which is at his right hand for euermore.
Amen.

Your Honours in all humble

dutie moſt bounden,

Iohn Downame.

To the Chriſtian Reader.

THe Chriſtian mans life is a continuall warfare, wherein he is daily aſſaulted (I know not whether, with greater ſubtiltie or furie, policie or power) by three puiſſant Enemies, the Deuill, the World, and the Fleſh; euery one of which haue many Legions vnder their conduct, which are readie to ſecond and ſuccour them, when they giue ſigne of battaile. The Deuill is the grand Captaine, and Generall of all theſe forces; the World and the Fleſh, are chiefe Commanders vnder him, who haue many Millions of ſpirituall Enemies vnder their Enſignes, that continually fight againſt vs. Sathan ordereth the battaile, and guideth all theſe forces to his beſt aduantage, and our ruine; the World miniſtreth vnto him weapons and munition, whereby this fight is maintained; and the Fleſh like a wicked Traitour openeth the gates of our ſoules when we are aſſaulted, and receiuing the pay of worldly vanities, ioyneth with theſe externall forces to worke our finall ouerthrow. The iſſue of this fight is either their, or our victorie; the former is accompanied with the Deuils triumph, and our perpetuall captiuitie and thraldome in the chaines of darkneſſe; yea, with the moſt exquiſite and ineffable torments of Hell fire: the other, with the crowne of victory which our great Commander, the Lord of Hoſts, hath promiſed to thoſe that ouercome; euen that ſuperexcellent and eternall waight of glory reſerued in the higheſt Heauens. 2.Cor.4.17.

The conſideration whereof, as it ſhould moue all Chriſtians valiantly to fight the Lords battailes, to forget all labour, and to contemne all danger, eſpecially ſeeing they haue the power of God to aſſiſt them, and his gracious promiſe, that if they will be his Souldiers, they ſhall alſo be Conquerours; if they will but fight, they ſhall aſſuredly ouercome: ſo alſo ſhould it incite all Gods faithfull Miniſters, who are appointed by him to be in this ſpirituall warfare, not onely Souldiers, to fight in their owne perſons, but alſo the Lords Captaines to teach, guide and direct, both by word and example, thoſe who are committed to their charge, yea as much as in them lieth the whole Armie of the Church Militant; that they alſo be carefull and diligent to teach the ignorant the Lords march, the diſcipline of his warre, the order of his battailes, and how to manage their ſpirituall weapons for their beſt aduantage: that they likewiſe incourage and hearten the white-liuered, and freſh-water Souldier to the fight; that they rouze vp the ſluggiſh, by often ſounding in their eares the terrible thunder of Gods threats, and the ſweete tunes of his promiſes; that they moderate the heate, and mitigate and reſtraine the deſperate boldnes of thoſe, who are ouer-carried in their blind Zeale, with ſpirituall wiſdome and diſcretion, which are otherwiſe apt in themſelues to be intrapped with the ſubtiltie, and to fall into the ambuſhments of their Enemies, to their vtter ruine and deſtruction.

Being therefore called through Gods vndeſerued grace to this function, I thought it my dutie, beſides my other labours in my Miniſtery, to attempt this worke; the which I acknowledge might haue been much better atchieued by ſome of the Lords great Worthies, vnto the leaſt degree of whoſe ſtrength and excellencie I haue not attained: but being by them either omitted, or but by the way, as ſome ſpeciall occaſion required, briefly touched; I thought it better, notwithſtanding my great weakneſſe to vndertake it, than that it ſhould be wholly neglected; and by doing in this the Lords buſineſſe what I could doe, to put others in mind who are of greater abilitie, what they ſhould doe; drawing them on by my example to perfect that, which I haue but rudely attempted; wherein my poore labours ſhall but ſerue as foiles, to ſhew the greater glory of their ſurpaſſing excellencies, and but as courſer wares, to make their finer ſtuffes more ſaleable and commendable. And hauing through Gods aſsiſtance finiſhed and ſet forth the firſt part of this Chriſtian Warfare, wherein I haue laid open the ſubtiltie, power, politicke ſtratagems, and pernicious tentations of Satan our grand Enemy; and withall haue armed and furniſhed the weake Chriſtian with ſuch meanes and ſpirituall weapons, as may by the bleſſing and aſsiſtance of Gods holy Spirit ſtrengthen him in the incounter, repell the enemy, and obtaine victory; and hauing found that the Worke, like courſe meat in the time of a great dearth, hath beene eſteemed of many hungry ſoules aboue deſert, their neceſsitie, and not any ſelfe excellencie, giuing worth vnto it, and making it, though in it ſelfe but homely fare, pleaſing and acceptable to their ſharpened appetites: I haue the rather beene incouraged to ſet vpon the ſecond part of this Warfare, and to arme the Chriſtian againſt all thoſe aſſaults, which the ſecond Enemy of our ſaluation, the World, aſſaileth him with; which as the following diſcourſe and the experience of all times ſufficiently ſhew, are no leſſe dangerous and pernicious then the other. And becauſe I hold a ſtrange paradox in the conceit of worldly men, maintaining that theſe earthly things are baſe and of little worth, and therefore to be contemned or lightly valued, which they ſo much magnifie in their iudgements, adhere vnto in their hearts and affections, and both get and keepe with ſo great care and labour, and loſe with ſuch bitter griefe; I thought it fit (beſides my wonted order) not onely plentifully to confirme this Truth by the holy Scriptures, but alſo to alleage the ſayings of the godly learned, and ancient Fathers, who haue liued in former ages, to ſhew the conformitie of our iudgements, and our vnanimous conſent in expounding thoſe places of holy Scriptures, which ſerue for the cleering and prouing of thoſe points, for which I alleage them; leſt perhaps mine owne Writings and Aſſertions might ſeeme to haue proceeded out of ſome melancholicke or diſcontented humour, which might make me to contemne the World, becauſe it hath alwayes contemned me, and ſo carrie no credit with them, if I were not backed with their better authoritie. And to the ſame purpoſe, I haue alſo more plentifully then is my vſuall cuſtome, alleaged the ſayings of the wiſeſt Heathens, and moſt learned Philoſophers; becauſe hauing to deale with carnall Worldlings, who notwithſtanding make ſhew and profeſsion of Chriſtian Religion, I might moue and perſwade them, if not in the feare of God, and for conſcience ſake, yet at leaſt for ſhame to aſſent vnto that Truth, vnto which Pagans and Infidels haue yeelded and ſubſcribed, who haue had no other knowledge to guide them, but the light of nature. The which my labours, I humbly ſubmit to the graue cenſure of the iudicious, learned, and godly Reader: the which I hope to find more fauourable; becauſe my errours may more iuſtly be excuſed, ſeeing I doe not trauell in a path beaten by others, who haue gone before me, but in an vncouth and vnuſuall way, where I haue not had the tract of other mens ſteps for my direction; there being none that I know of, eſpecially of our Countrimen, that haue purpoſely laboured in this argument. The Lord bleſſe theſe and all other my labours, that they may be powerfull and effectuall, for the aduancement of his glory, the good of his Church, and the comfort and edification of all the particular members thereof, who ſhall haue any vſe of my poore Miniſtery; that being armed and ſtrengthened hereby, againſt the politicke furie, and powerfull cunning of our ſpirituall Enemies, they may obtaine a full and finall victory ouer them, and alſo the Crowne of victorie, euerlaſting glory, and happineſſe in Gods Kingdome. Amen.

Thine in the Lord,

London, the ſeuenth of May, Anno Dom. 1611.

J.D.

A Methodicall Table, ſhewing the order obſerued in the whole Booke.

- In this Chriſtian Warfare againſt the World two things are conſidered, Lib.1.
  - 1. The enemy againſt whom wee fight, where is expreſſed
    - The nature of the Enemy, where is ſhewed.
      - 1. What he is, Chap.1.
      - 2. Of what condition and qualitie & that both; Ch.2.
        - In himſelfe, to wit, euill, and that becauſe hee is
          - Subiect vnto Sathan. §.1
          - Contrary and oppoſite God. §.2.
        - To vs, to wit, very dangerous and that both in reſpect of his
          - Will, being exceeding mallicious, §. 4.
          - Power, becauſe he is
            - Prudent and ſubtill. §. 5.
            - Strong as appeares both by
              - Reaſon, namely, becauſe hee is ſtrong in
                - His owne ſtrength. §.6.
                - Through ai of our corrup fleſh. §.7.
              - Experience of
                - Ancient times, §.8.
                - Our owne times, and that both in
                  - Worl lings, §. 10.
                  - Faithfu §.11.
    - Reaſons encouraging vs to fight, which are taken from Chap.3.
      - 1. The Commandement of God.§ 1.
      - 2. From the Paſſion of Chriſt. §.2.
      - 3. The neceſſitie of the fight, which appeares by diuers reaſons. §.3. to 9.
      - 4. Our aſſured hope of victory. §. 9.
      - 5. The greatnes of the reward promiſed to thoſe that ouercome.
  - 2. The manner of his fight, and weapons which he vſeth, which are tentations eyther on the
    - Right hand. See A.
    - Left hand.

- A. Right hand, to wit, ariſing from proſperitie, of which
  - 1. In generall, where is ſhewed,
    - 1 What it is in it ſelfe, to wit, good, and the gift of God. §.3.
    - 2. In reſpect of vs, to wit, of an indifferent nature,
      - Good to the good, who vſe it well, where is ſhewed what is required hereunto.
      - Euill to the euill, who abuſe it, to the which a wee are prone. §.5. and ſo proſperitie becom a dangerous enemy, againſt which we muſt be armed, Chap.5,6.
  - 2. In ſpeciall, where the tentations are diſtinguiſhed diuerſly in reſpect of their matter and ſubject from whence they ariſe, in which reſpect theſe tentations are eyther
    - Inword, ariſing out of our ſelues, and that either from ſomething in our
      - Soules & reſpect either
        - Morall vertues, of which
          - 1. In generall, where is ſhewed that morall vertue is vaine, being ſeuered from faith and godlineſſe. Chap.7.
          - In ſpeciall, whereof wiſedome, which is either
            - Spirituall, which is much to bee eſteemed, Chap.8.
            - Worldly and carnall, which is much to b contemned. Chap.9.
        - Certaine gifts & ornaments of the minde which are
          - 1. Learning. Chap.10.
          - 2. Knowledge which is eyther of
            - Mechanicall ſciences. Chap.11.
            - Of the true Religion without the power of godlineſſe. Chap.12.
      - Bodies, which are tentations, ariſing either from
        - Beauty, which is eyther
          - True Chap.13.
          - Counterfeit: whereof painting, Chap. 14.
        - Strength. Chap.15.
        - Health. Chap.16.
    - Outward ariſing from externall obiects; as from
      - Perſons of Worldlings, who corrupt with their euill company, & that eyther by their
        - Euill example and communication. Chap.1
        - Friendſhip. Chap.1
      - Worldly things. See B.

B. Worl

B. orldly things,
which are re-red to three ads,to wit,hon, riches, and ſures, of ich it is eneated in the ſend Booke: and

- 1, Generally, where is ſhewed what they are
  - In their owne nature. Chap. 1. §. 1, 2.
  - In their vſe to vs, to wit, indifferent,
    - Good to the good who vſe them rightly. Chap. 1. §. 5.
    - Euill to thoſe who abuſe them.
- 2. Specially, where is entreated of honours, riches and pleaſures, which are either
  - Good, and thus
    - Honours are good,
      - In their owne nature. Chap. 2. §. 2.
      - Vnto vs, in their vſe, namely, to the good of them who vſe them well. §. 5, 6. &c.
      - Of whom they are to be deſired. §. 15, 16.
    - Riches are good,
      - In their owne nature. Chap. 3. §. 1.
      - Vnto vs when they are well vſed, where is ſhewed
        - 1. That riches are not abſolutely to be contemned. §. 6. to 10.
        - The cautions which are to be obſerued to their right vſe, Chapter 4.
    - Pleaſures are good, Chap. 5. and that both
      - Diuine pleaſures, which are chiefly good and deſirable. §. 1, 2.
      - Naturall and Ciuill, which are good,
        - 1. In their owne nature. §. 3. to 6.
        - 2. Vnto vs, when they are well vſed. §. 6. to 10.
  - Euill when they are abuſed, and thus men abuſe them, when they make them their Idols, by preferring them in their iudgments, affections and practice, before ſpirituall graces and heauenly ioyes, in compariſon whereof, they are to be contemned, vnto which contempt the following Treatiſe perſwadeth, Chap. 6. where is propounded,
    - 1. The ſignes of this worldly Idolatry, and carnall loue whereby we may know whether wee bee infected with this diſeaſe, Chap. 7.
    - 2. Remedies. See C.

C. emedies to e vs of it,
ered the ar-ments which ſwade to the tempt of the rld, which d to ſhew that ldly things not to bee c-ned and loin compari-of ſpirituall heauenly:
her

- In themſelues:
  - Firſt, becauſe they bring not vnto vs any true or certain good, becauſe they are not
    - In their own nature of any great goodnes, though we ſhould obtain them, and that becauſe they are
      - Vaine and of no excellencie, from whence it followeth, that they doe not ſatisfie thoſe that haue them: Chap. 8. to 20.
      - Vnprofitable, and mixt with many miſeries: Chap. 20. to 26.
    - Nor yet haue in them any certaintie in reſpect eyther of our
      - Getting them: Chap. 26.
      - Keeping them: Chap. 27. to 30.
  - Secõdly, becauſe through our corruption they are cauſes of much hurt, being occaſions and prouocations vnto all ſin, both againſt
    - God. Chap. 30, 31.
    - Our Neighbour, Chap. 32.
    - Our ſelues as they deriue vnto vs many euils, and that both
      - Temporall, which are either
        - Ciuill, and meerely humane: Chap. 33.
        - Spirituall: Chap. 34.
      - Eternall: Chap. 35.
- Not in reſpect of vs, becauſe wee are
  - Pilgrimes on earth. Lib. 3. Chap. 1.
  - Citizens of Heauen, and heires of thoſe eternall ioyes and happineſſes which infinitely exceed all worldly things. Chap. 2, 3. &c.

A Methodicall Table, ſhewing the order obſerued in the whole Booke.

- In this Chriſtian Warfare againſt the World two things are conſidered, Lib.1.
  - 1. The enemy againſt whom wee fight, where is expreſſed
    - The nature of the Enemy, where is ſhewed.
      - 1. What he is, Chap.1.
      - 2. Of what condition and qualitie & that both; Ch.2.
        - In himſelfe, to wit, euill, and that becauſe hee is
          - Subiect vnto Sathan. §
          - Contrary and oppoſite God. §.2.
        - Toys, to wit, very dangerous and that both in reſpect of his
          - Will, being exceeding malicious. §. 4.
          - Power, becauſe he is
            - Prudent and ſubtill. §. 5.
            - Strong as appeares both by
              - Reaſon, namely, becauſe hee is ſtrong in
                - His owne ſtrength. §.6.
                - Through aid of our corrupt fleſh. §.7.
              - Experience of
                - Ancient times, §.8.
                - Our owne times, and that both in
                  - Worldlings, §.9. 10.
                  - Faithfull. §.11.
    - Reaſons encouraging vs to fight, which are taken from Chap.3.
      - 1. The Commandement of God. §.1.
      - 2. From the Paſſion of Chriſt. §.2.
      - 3. The neceſſitie of the fight, which appeares by diuers reaſons. §.3. to 9.
      - 4. Our aſſured hope of victory. §.9.
      - 5. The greatnes of the reward promiſed to thoſe that ouercome.
  - 2. The manner of his fight, and weapons which he vſeth, which are tentations eyther on the
    - Right hand. See A.
    - Left hand.

- A. Right hand, to wit, ariſing from proſperitie, of which
  - 1. In generall, where is ſhewed,
    - 1 What it is in it ſelfe, to wit, good, and the gift of God. §.3.
    - 2. In reſpect of vs, to wit, of an indifferent nature,
      - Good to the good, who vſe it well, where is ſhewed what is required hereunto.
      - Euill to the euill, who abuſe it, to the which wee are prone. §.5. and ſo proſperitie becom a dangerous enemy, againſt which we muſt be armed, Chap.5,6.
  - 2. In ſpeciall, where the tentations are diſtinguiſhed diuerſly in reſpect of their matter and ſubject from whence they ariſe, in which reſpect theſe tentations are eyther
    - Inward, ariſing out of our ſelues, and that either from ſomething in our
      - Soules & reſpect either
        - Morall vertues, of which
          - 1. In generall, where is ſhewed that morall vertue is vaine, being ſeuered from faith and godlineſſe. Chap.7.
          - In ſpeciall, whereof wiſedome, which is either
            - Spirituall, which is much to bee eſteemed. Chap.8.
            - Worldly and carnall, which is much to be contemned. Chap.9.
        - Certaine gifts & ornaments of the minde which are
          - 1. Learning. Chap.10.
          - 2. Knowledge which is eyther of
            - Mechanicall ſciences. Chap.11.
            - Of the true Religion without the power of godlineſſe. Chap.12.
      - Bodies, which are tentations, ariſing either from
        - Beauty, which is eyther
          - True Chap.13.
          - Counterfeit: whereof painting. Chap.14.
        - Strength. Chap.15.
        - Health. Chap.16.
    - Outward ariſing from externall obiects; as from
      - Perſons of Worldlings, who corrupt with their euill company, & that eyther by their
        - Euill example and communication. Chap.
        - Friendſhip. Chap.
      - Worldly things. See B.

B, Worl

- B. orldly things,
  which are re-red to three ads,to wit,hos, riches, and asures, of ch it is enated in the sed Booke: and
  - 1. Generally, where is ſhewed what they are
    - In their owne nature. Chap. 1. §. 1, 2.
    - In their vſe to vs, to wit, indifferent,
      - Good to the good who vſe them rightly. Chap. 1. §. 5.
      - Euill to thoſe who abuſe them.
  - 2. Specially, where is entreated of honours, riches and pleaſures, which are either
    - Good, and thus
      - Honours are good,
        - In their owne nature. Chap. 2. §. 2.
        - Vnto vs, in their vſe, namely, to the good of them who vſe them well. § 5, 6. &c.
        - Of whom they are to be deſired. §. 15, 16.
      - Riches are good,
        - In their owne nature. Chap. 3. §. 1.
        - Vnto vs when they are well vſed, where is ſhewed
          - 1. That riches are not abſolutely to be contemned. §. 6. to 10.
          - The cautions which are to be obſerued to their right vſe, Chapter 4.
      - Pleaſures are good, Chap. 5. and that both
        - Diuine pleaſures, which are chiefly good and deſirable, §. 1, 2.
        - Naturall and Ciuill, which are good,
          - 1. In their owne nature. §. 3. to 6.
          - 2. Vnto vs, when they are well vſed. §. 6. to 10.
    - Euill when they are abuſed, and thus men abuſe them, when they make them their Idols, by preferring them in their iudgments, affections and practice, before ſpirituall graces and heauenly ioyes, in compariſon whereof, they are to be contemned, vnto which contempt the following Treatiſe perſwadeth, Chap. 6. where is propounded,
      - 1. The ſignes of this worldly Idolatry, and carnall loue whereby we may know whether wee bee infected with this diſeaſe, Chap. 7.
      - 2. Remedies. See C.
- C. medies to e vs of it, reof the arents which swade to the empt of the ld, which d to ſhew that ldly things
  not to bee c-med and loin compari-of ſpirituall
  heauenly:
  her
  - In themſelues:
    - First, becauſe they bring not vnto vs any true or certain good, becauſe they are not
      - In their own nature of any great goodnes, though we ſhould obtain them, and that becauſe they are
        - Vaine and of no excellencie, from whence it followeth, that they doe not ſatisfie thoſe that haue them: Chap. 8. to 20.
        - Vnprofitable, and mixt with many miſeries: Chap. 20. to 26.
      - Nor yet haue in them any certaintie in reſpect eyther of our
        - Getting them: Chap. 26.
        - Keeping them: Chap. 27. to 30.
    - Secōdly, becauſe through our corruption they are cauſes of much hurt, being occaſions and prouocations vnto all ſin, both againſt
      - God. Chap. 30. 31.
      - Our Neighbour, Chap. 32.
      - Our ſelues as they deriue vnto vs many euils, and that both
        - Temporall, which are either
          - Ciuill, and meerely humane: Chap. 33.
          - Spirituall: Chap. 34.
        - Eternall: Chap. 35.
  - 1 Not in reſpect of vs, becauſe wee are
    - Pilgrimes on earth. Lib. 3. Chap. 1.
    - Citizens of Heauen, and heires of thoſe eternall ioyes and happines which infinitely exceed all worldly things. Chap. 2, 3. &c.

Hh 3

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE,

The ſecond Part.

CONTAYNING DIVERS ARGVMENTS, WHEREBY WEE MAY BE ARMED againſt the tentations of proſperitie, and perſwaded to contemne worldly Vanities, in compariſon of GODS ſpirituall GRACES and heauenly IOYES.

The firſt Booke.

CHAP. I.

Of the World, the ſecond enemy of our ſaluation, and what it is.

Sect. 1.
hat there is ne crowned, t he that ch ouerme.
poc. 3.21.

There is none ſhall bee thought fit to raigne with Ieſus Chriſt in the kingdome of heauen, but thoſe who haue beene conquerors here on earth; not of ſome ſmall countrey or petite kingdome, for that great glory ſhall neuer be the crowne of ſo meane a victorie; nor (like Alexander) of the greateſt part of the earths knowne territories; for ſo a man may attaine to the height of this glory; and yet remaine a ſlaue to his owne paſſions and ambitious luſts, and be a vaſſall after his victorie to that which hee ſeemeth to haue ouercome. But he who will raigne with Chriſt, muſt conquer the whole world, not with the ſword and arme of fleſh, but with the ſpirit of God, and the ſhield of Faith, whereby hee repelleth all the tentations thereof; both the charming allurements whereby he might be infeebled, and the fiery darts of affliction and perſecution, whereby hee might bee diſcouraged; neither ſo admiring the one, nor regarding the other, as that he ſhould ſuffer them to hinder him in his way to his heauenly countrie. Yea he muſt together with the world ouercome the prince of the world, and all the power of hell; and which is a victorie of greateſt difficultie, hee muſt ouercome himſelfe, and his owne corruptions; which conqueſt whoſoeuer obtaineth, hee putteth to flight theſe forraine forces at the firſt onſet: whereas contrariwiſe it is in vaine to haue warres abroad, if in ſtead of peace and ſubiection there be nothing but treaſon, diſcord, and rebellion at home; theſe inbred enemies being alwayes readie to betray and loſe, that which is recouered and wonne with great paine and difficultie, and to

oh. 5.4.

yeeld into the enemies power in a day, that which hath beene got with a yeeres labour.

§. Sect. 2. That the world is ſometime taken in good part, and ſo to be loued as a friend.

Concerning the meanes of reſiſting and ouercomming our firſt and chiefe enemy Satan, I haue already intreated in the firſt part of my Chriſtian Warefare: And now it remaineth, that being aſſiſted with the ſame ſpirit, wee encounter alſo the world, which is the ſecond enemie of our ſaluation, and teach the weake Chriſtian how he may ſo manage his ſpirituall weapons, as that he may be aſſured of a triumphant victorie. But leaſt whileſt we fight againſt our enemie, wee ſhould bend our ſtrength againſt thoſe that bee our friends, becauſe they are intitled by the ſame name, let vs learne to diſtinguiſh the one from the other, and conſider in what ſenſe wee are here to take the world, which is a word of ambiguous ſignification, and how it is to bee imbraced as a friend, and how to bee auoided or withſtood as a mortall enemie. To this purpoſe wee are to know, that the world in the Scriptures is ſometimes taken in a good, and ſometime in an euill ſenſe. In the former it ſometime ſignifieth the whole vniuerſe and goodly frame of heauen and earth, and ſo it is an excellent creature of Gods making, approued as good by his owne teſtimonie, whereby the glory, wiſedome and power of the mightie Creator is manifeſted and declared, according to that of the Pſalmiſt: The heauens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth the worke of his hands. Sometime it ſignifieth the whole earth and ſea, which is appointed of God to bee the place of habitation for his creatures, in both which ſenſes it is taken, Iohn 1. 10. He was in the world, and the world was made by him: and in this ſignification alſo the world is good, ſauing, onely that it is defiled with mans ſinne, as being the ſtage whereon hee acteth all his wickedneſſe. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that the world is ſaid to lie wholly in euill, not becauſe it ſelfe is euill, but becauſe euils are committed in it by men: euen as the woods are infamed when they harbour theeues, and as wee hate the ſword wherewith mans blood hath beene ſhed, and the cup in which poyſon hath beene tempered, not becauſe of any faultineſſe that is in them, but becauſe of their wickedneſſe who haue abuſed them vnto euill. Sometime the world is taken for all mankind that liueth in the world, both good and bad, beleeuer and infidell; and in this ſenſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that by one man ſinne entred into the world, that is, into all mankinde, who were corrupted in Adam as ſinning in his loynes. Neither are we to hate and fight againſt the world, being vnderſtood in this generall ſignification, leaſt wee ſhould be found (like that curriſh Timon) haters of humane ſocietie, and enemies of our owne nature. Finally, the world ſometime ſignifieth the faithfull onely; not becauſe they are of the world; for being in the world, Chriſt hath choſen them out of the world; but becauſe the world was created, and is continually preſerued for their vſe and benefit, namely, that it might ſerue as a place of triall, where they ſhould be fitted for Gods kingdome, & a paſſage through which they might trauell into their heauenly countrey, the new Ieruſalem. And in this ſenſe it is ſaid, that God ſo loued the world, that hee gaue his onely begotten ſonne, that whoſoeuer beleeued in him ſhould not periſh, but haue euerlaſting life. And the Apoſtle ſaith, that God was in Chriſt and reconciled the world vnto himſelfe, not imputing their ſinnes vnto them. And Chriſt is ſaid, to be a propitiation or reconciliation, not for the Apoſtles and Diſciples onely, but for the ſinnes of the whole world, that is, for all in the world that ſhall beleeue in him. Now in this ſenſe wee are not to fight againſt the world, ſeeing it is reconciled and at peace with God, nor to loath that which God ſo dearely loueth: yea wee muſt loue thoſe who are of this world, as our ſelues, as being ſubjects of Chriſts kingdome, and fellow members of his body.

*Act.*17.24.

*Gen.*1.31.

*Pſal.*19.1.

*Ioh.*1.10.

1. *Joh.*5.19. Mundus in maligno poſitus, non quòd mundus ipſe ſit malus; ſed quòd mala in mundo fiant ab hominibus, &c. Hieron. in 1. ad Galat.

*Rom.*5.12.

*Joh.*3.16.

2.*Cor.*5.19.

1.*Ioh.*2.2.

§. Sect. 3. In what ſenſe the world is to be reputed our enemy.

But this word is alſo taken in the Scriptures in euill part, and that moſt vſually, and ſo it ſignifieth ſometime reprobate, wicked, and vnbeleeuing men, who hauing yeelded themſelues ouer, as voluntarie ſlaues vnto Satan, for the wages of worldly vanities, willingly yeeld obedience vnto him as their Prince and ſoueraigne, and ſubmit themſelues to be ruled by the Law of ſin, imprinted by him in their corrupt natures, which is flatly oppoſed to the Law of nature, written in the hearts of our firſt parents, and afterwards in the tables of ſtone, by the finger of God; oppoſing with all their malice, power and policie, againſt God, and the kingdome of Ieſus Chriſt; hindring as much as in them lieth the proſperitie, encreaſe and propagation thereof, and hating, enuying, and perſecuting thoſe, who will not bee allured by any worldly baits to renounce the ſeruice of Chriſt, and to ioyne with them in the ſeruice of ſinne and Satan. And thus the world is taken, Iohn 15. 19. If yee were of the world, the world would loue his owne, but becauſe yee are not of the world, but I haue choſen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. And 16. 20. Yee ſhall weepe and lament, but the world (that is, the wicked of the world) ſhall reioyce. And this is that world, which the Apoſtle Iohn ſaith lieth wholly in wickedneſſe, and is therefore excluded by our Sauiour Chriſt from hauing any part in his prayers, or benefit by his mediation: Ioh. 17. 9. I pray for them

2.*Tim.*2.26.

*Rom.*7.23.

*Ioh.*15.19.

and 16.20.

1.*Ioh.*5.19.

them, I pray not for the world. Now theſe are called the world, becauſe they are the worlds citizens, which minde only worldly things, and ſetting their hearts and affections vpon the earth and earthly vanities, doe in compariſon thereof contemne God and his kingdome.

Sometime by the world are ſignified worldly things, which Satan and wicked men vſe as meanes to draw men from the ſeruice of God, to the ſeruice of ſinne, whether they bee alluring baits whereby they intice vnto wickedneſſe, as pleaſures, profits and preferments; or diſcouragements, whereby they ſeeke to diſharten and hinder them in the way of godlines, as troubles, afflictions, and perſecutions.

And ſometime both theſe are ioyned together, in which ſenſe the Apoſtle Paul ſaith, that he was crucified to the world, and the world to him; where by world he vnderſtandeth whatſoeuer in the world, whether men or other creatures, are oppoſed to the kingdome of Chriſt, all which were as little valued by this holy Apoſtle, as a crucified or dead man eſteemeth of the things of the liuing. And ſo the Apoſtle Iohn ioyneth them, though not in the ſame word, yet in the ſame ſentence, 1. Ioh. 2. 15. Loue not the world, nor the things of the world. And thus wee will take the world in this diſcourſe; vnderſtanding thereby whatſoeuer in the world, either in its own nature, or through abuſe, allureth vs to the ſeruice of ſin and Satan; or diſcourageth and hindreth vs in the ſeruice of God, and the meanes of our owne ſaluation; whether it bee wicked men, or the creatures abuſed by Satan and our corruption, as occaſions and motiues vnto euill. Or more briefly thus: Whatſoeuer in the world is the inſtrument of the diuell, to draw vs vnto ſinne.

Whereby it appeareth that wee are not to oppoſe againſt, as our enemies, and to purſue with our hatred, wicked men in the world abſolutely, or as they are men, but reſpectiuely as they are wicked, and hating their ſin we may, yea we ought to loue their perſons, as being the creatures of God in reſpect of their eſſence, who haue in them (how wicked ſoeuer) ſome good naturall parts, and common gifts of the ſpirit which precious pearles are to bee valued euen when they are found in theſe filthie dunghils. And as our hatred ought not to bee generall and abſolute in reſpect of the object, ſo in reſpect of the quality it ſhould not be deadly and malicious, but it muſt bee mixed and ſweetned with compaſſion and commiſeration, yea with ſorrow of heart, that they are no better, and with a deſire of their conuerſion and amendment, that ſo enmity ceaſing they might become worthy of our loue. Our hatred muſt like (our Sauiour Chriſts anger) be ioyned with holy mourning, becauſe their hearts are ſo hardned in ſinne; and though wee are to eſteeme them enemies, yet our eyes (like Dauids) muſt guſh out with riuers of waters, becauſe they haue not kept Gods Law. The like alſo may be ſaid of all other creatures in the world, abuſed by Satan and his wicked imps, as baits to allure vs vnto ſinne; which are to be contemned and loathed, not in their owne nature, but in reſpect of the abuſe onely, as afterwards ſhall appeare.

Pſal. 119. 136.

CHAP. II.

Of the nature and quality of our enemie the world.

§. Sect. 1.
That the world is euill and wicked in it ſelfe, yeelding obedience to Satan, as the prince therof.

And thus haue I ſhewed what the world is, and as it were haue ſingled our enemies out of the company of our friends; leaſt our loue of theſe ſhould ſlacken and abate our zealous courage in oppoſing againſt our mortall foes; or our hatred of thoſe ſhould make vs to diſlike and hate our wel-deſeruing friends. In the next place we wil conſider of the nature and quality of our enemie; and then ſhew his weapons and forces which hee vſeth in this fight, that ſo we may know the better how to auoid his furie, and to arme our ſelues againſt the encounter. And for the cleering of the former wee will briefly ſhew what the world is in it ſelfe, and then reſpectiuely what it is to vs. In it ſelfe, the Scripture ſaith of it, that it is euill, yea ſo euil, that Chriſt Ieſus ſpared not to giue his owne moſt precious blood, to deliuer his ſeruants out of this ſpirituall Egypt: and leaſt wee ſhould thinke that this euill hath but a little tainted it, or that it is corrupted but in part only, the Apoſtle Iohn telleth vs, that the whole world lieth in wickedneſſe, not a little ſprinkled or dipped, but ſourced and ſunke into a deepe and bottomleſſe gulfe of ſinne. The which will more manifeſtly appeare if wee conſider that this wicked world, like a rebellious traitor, hath denied and refuſed to haue the Lord and great Creator of heauen and earth for his Soueraigne and King, and will not yeeld any obedience vnto his Lawes and commandements, but contemneth his promiſes and rewards, as alſo his threatnings and puniſhments. And contrariwiſe hath ſubmitted himſelfe to Satan as his prince and gouernour, yeelding obedience vnto his will, and ſubiecting himſelfe to be ruled by the Law of ſin, for the wages of worldly vanities, as pleaſures, profits, and preferments. Wherof it is that in the Scriptures the diuel is called the [a] prince of the world, and the [b] gouernour thereof; not becauſe he is indeed the

Gal. 1. 4.

1. Ioh. 5. 19.

a Ioh. 12. 31. and 16. 11.
b Epheſ. 6. 12. Epheſ. 2. 2.

the ruler and gouernour of heauen and earth, to diſpoſe of all at his pleaſure (for this is Gods royall prerogatiue, whoſe ſlaue and vaſſall Satan is, and forced to doe his will when hee moſt oppoſeth it) but becauſe hee ruleth in the children of diſobedience, hauing them alwayes [c] ready as his deuoted bondſlaues to doe his will: who are called the world, becauſe they ſet their hearts and affections vpon it; it being the nature of loue to transforme as much as may be the lover into the nature of the thing beloued, and ſo to denominate the one according to the name of the other. Yea he not only as a king ruleth their outward actions, but alſo in their hearts and conſciences, cauſing them to yeeld vnto him free, willing and abſolute obedience: and therefore he is alſo called the god of the world, who with his miſts of falſehood blindeth the eyes of infidels and worldings, ſo as they cannot ſee his vgly filthineſſe and palpable lies, nor the diuine purity and excellencie of their Creator, and the glorious light of his truth.

[c] 2.Tim.2.26.

2.Cor.4.4.

§. Sect.2.
That the world fighteth vnder Satan againſt God.

And as the world yeeldeth this ſubiection vnto Satan as his king and ſoueraigne, ſo alſo it maketh choice of him for his captaine and chiefe commander, receiuing his colours and cognizance, marching vnder his conduct, and fighting vnder his ſtanderd with like inueterate malice, both againſt God himſelfe, and all his Church and children. Againſt God the world oppoſeth with ſuch deadly and implacable hatred, that it is impoſſible for any to [a] adhere vnto the world, but hee muſt neceſſarily bee diuided from God; nor [b] ſerue it, but he muſt neglect and diſobey the Lord; nor [c] loue it, but God and he muſt bee at enmitie. Neither doth it onely, oppoſe againſt the diuine nature, but alſo againſt euery perſon of the Deitie; it rebelleth againſt God the Father and Creator, by refuſing to ſerue him as his creature, but contrariwiſe diſobeyeth his will, and deſperately reiecteth all his commandements, yeelding voluntary obedience to his arch-enemie the diuell; it [d] receiueth not the Son Ieſus Chriſt as its Sauiour and Redeemer, but treadeth vnder foote his precious blood, and maketh but a mocke of all his ſufferings; neither doth it [e] receiue the holy Ghoſt the ſanctifier, but checketh all his motions, and ſcorneth all his ſanctifying and ſauing graces, preferring before them worldly toyes and baſe vanities of no value. Needs therefore muſt the world be exceeding wicked, which ſubmitteth it ſelfe to bee ruled and guided by that wicked one Satan; needs muſts it bee outragiouſly euill, which purpoſely and malitiouſly oppoſeth it ſelfe againſt God the author and fountaine of all goodneſſe.

[a] 1.Ioh.2.15.

[b] Matth.6.24.

[c] Iames 4.4.

[d] Ioh.1.11.

[e] Ioh.14.17.

§. Sect.3.
That the world is a most d gerous e mie.

And thus we ſee what our enemie is in himſelfe: now to vs he is exceeding dangerous; for hee is ſo malitiouſly ſubtile, ſo treacherouſly cruell, and armed with ſuch forces and power, that vnleſſe the Chriſtian man bee well fitted with the ſpirituall armour, and mightily ſtrengthened and defended with the ſpirit of God, hee is ſure either to bee vanquiſhed and ouercome, or elſe to receiue ſhamefull foyles. This danger is by one thus deſcribed: There (ſaith hee) is the world, whereas there is much malice, little wiſedome, where all things are limie and catching, all things ſlimie and ſlipperie, all things couered with darkneſſe, and beſet with ſnares; where ſoules are endangered and bodies afflicted, where all is vanitie and affliction of ſpirit. Another ſaith, that the world is pitch, which defileth thoſe who come neere it with the leaſt touch. It is birdlime, which intangleth his admirers with ſin and eternall death; it is a ſnare, which with his pleaſures and riches, as it were offered baits, allureth and catcheth vnwarie men, and draweth them with it into the net of deſtruction: and therefore impoſſible it ſeemeth to mee that hee who liueth according to the Lawes of the world, ſhould paſſe away hence pure and vndefiled from the filth of the world. In reſpect of which danger the world is fitly compared to a perillous ſea, in which howſoeuer ſome eſcape ſhipwrack, yet none eſcapeth danger. For with vaine hopes as with a proſperous gale of winde, men are allured to hoyſe vp the ſailes of their deſires, and to enter into this perillous paſſage and courſe of worldlings, but before they can arriue at the wiſhed hauen, they encounter a thouſand deſperate dangers; one while they are toſſed with tempeſtuous ſtormes of troubles, croſſes, and vexations; ſometime lifted vp with their hopes, as though they ſhould touch the Heauens; ſometime deiected and caſt down with feare, as though they ſhould bee ſwallowed in the gulfe and (as it were) Hell of deſpaire; now they are in danger to daſh againſt the rockes of violence and oppreſſion, and ſoone after to ſplit their ſhip vpon the ſands of treacherie and falſehood: ſometimes they are carried into an vncouth vaſtnes in hazard to loſe themſelues in the bywaies of error, vnleſſe following the aduice of their skilfull Pilots, Gods meſſengers and Miniſters, they ſuffer themſelues to be guided and directed with the Card of Gods word: ſometime they are driuen into the ſtraits, where they are beſet with perils, heere Scylla, there Charybdis, being ready to fall into the one, whileſt with improuident care they auoid the other. Which being paſſed, their danger is not paſt; for though the ſtorme, rocks, and ſands ſpare them, yet are they beſet with ten thouſand wicked fiends, which like cruell pirats are ready to rob them of all thoſe rich wares of Gods ſpirituall graces, and to enchaine them in

Mundus vp vbi malitia rimum, vbi ſa pientie mo cum,&c.
Bernard.

Dugo Phil in Tilium de ſcient, bene mo rien. fol.21.

in their galleys of endleſſe bondage. But ſay they are not encountred with theſe rough dangers of troubles and croſſes, ſay that they haue a faire calme of proſperitie, and a comfortable ſun-ſhine of worldly fauours; ſurely howſoeuer their ſecuritie may be much more, yet their danger is not abated, yea rather it is much increaſed. For being thus encalmed, they haue neither power nor will to go forward to the bleſſed hauen of eternall happineſſe, but contrariwiſe being bewitched with thoſe Syrens ſongs of carnall-alluring pleaſures, they caſt themſelues headlong into the gulfe of perdition, they now deuouring them which before allured them. This danger by another is thus expreſſed: This world (ſaith he) is to Chriſtians a dangerous ſea: for as the ſea being ſtirred with aduerſe ſtormes doth mount aloft, and cauſeth a tempeſt to the paſſengers; ſo the world being moued with the conſpiracie of wicked men, doth trouble the mindes of the faithfull; and with ſuch diuerſitie is this effected by the enemie, that a man can hardly know what is firſt to bee auoided: for if higher powers ceaſe to oppoſe, it exaſperateth the mindes of priuate men againſt vs; if their rage be alſo appeaſed, it ſetteth all on fire by thoſe who are of a mans owne familie; and if this alſo be quieted, by his art hee ſetteth diſcord betweene brethren and neere kindred, that ſo tempeſtuouſly beating vpon the houſe on euery of the foure corners, he may on one ſide or other cauſe a ruine. For which cauſe it is with one conſent to be fled from of all Chriſtians, &c. And this he inforceth elſewhere: Flee (ſaith hee) the ſea of the world, and thou ſhalt not need to feare ſhipwracke, &c. In the ſea when as the windes rage, though all bee not caſt away, yet all are ſubiect to great danger.

niorſ. in m.3.

laſia.Lev.
ſmi.

§.Sect.4.
hat the world s malicious emie.

But how dangerous this enemie is, it will better appeare, if wee doe conſider the will and abilitie, the malice and power thereof; which if they bee in an high nature and degree ioyned together, the perill muſt needs bee out of meaſure perillous.

Concerning the malice of this enemie, it is exceeding great and vnreconcilable, inueterate and perpetuall. For as taking part with our arch-enemie Satan, it malitiouſly oppoſeth againſt God, ſo alſo againſt all thoſe who profeſſe themſelues his children and ſeruants. And as the Libbard ſo hateth man, that with furious malice it will flie vpon his picture or image, ſo this Serpents brood the world, as it maligneth God himſelfe, ſo alſo with like hate it purſueth thoſe in whom the image of God is repaired. And as with outragious malice and deadly outrage it perſecuted our head Ieſus Chriſt, ſo with equall furie it rageth againſt all the true members of his body. Of this our Sauiour gaue vs warning, Ioh.15.18. If the world hate you, you know that it hateth mee before you. 19. If ye were of the world, the world would loue his owne; but becauſe ye are not of the world, but I haue choſen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. 20. Remember the word that I ſaid vnto you, the ſeruant is not igreater than his Maſter. If they haue perſecuted me, they will perſecute you alſo. And this appeareth by continuall experience euen from the beginning of the world. Caine a wicked worldling perſecuteth and murthereth his religious brother Abel, as ſoone as hee ſaw that God reſpected him. The ſonnes of men with giantlike furie oppreſſe the ſonnes of God, the Sodomities maligne holy Lot, Iſmael perſecuteth Iſaac, Eſau Iacob, the idolatrous Egyptians cruelly oppreſſe Iſrael, the people and Church of God, with more than barbarous furie, Saul purſueth Dauid, Ieſabel the true Prophets, the Heatheniſh Gentiles the Church of the Iewes; the Scribes and Phariſees, Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and the vnbeleeuing Pagans, the beleeuing Chriſtians. In a word, there was neuer any eſcaped, but aſſoone as they haue beene friends with God, they were preſently accounted the worlds enemies; and no ſooner doth God receiue them into fauour, but the world purſueth them with malice and hatred.

15.18.19.

§. Sect.5.
That the world is a ſubtill enemie.
Luke 16.8.

But as the world is exceeding malitious, and therefore willing; ſo alſo it is very powerfull, and therefore able to hurt vs, ſeeing neither policie nor ſtrength is wanting vnto it; for the children of this world are wiſer in their generation than the children of the light, as the wiſeſt of men, and wiſedome of God, giueth teſtimonie; and a thouſand cunning ſleights they haue to deceiue vs, and tenne thouſand ſubtill policies to betray and circumuent vs. So that Chriſtian wiſedome which dares not exceed the bounds of ſimplicitie and truth, ſeemeth vnto them doltiſh ſottiſhnes, and ſilly fooliſhneſſe; and in regard of their aduantages of diſſimulation, lying and baſe treacherie, it were moſt eaſie for them to ouermatch and goe beyond them, did not the Lord by his infinite wiſdome and power defeate their policies, and conuert the wiſedome of theſe Abitophels into meere fooliſhnes.

§. Sect.6.
That the world is a powerfull enemie in regard of its own ſtrength.

So alſo it is exceeding ſtrong both in its owne ſtrength, and in reſpect of the great forces which our owne corrupt fleſh doth miniſter vnto it. In it ſelfe it is ſo puiſſant, that Satan maketh choice of it as his chiefe champion to fight againſt vs; it is his right hand wherewith he ſtriketh vs; it is the armorie which affoordeth vnto him all thoſe mortall weapons wherewith hee woundeth vs; it is the treaſurie which yeeldeth vnto him all that wages whereby hee hireth vs to offend God, and all thoſe alluring baites wherewith hee inticeth vs vnto ſin: neither could Satan hurt vs with his ſharpe hookes of Helliſh tentations, vnleſſe they were couered with the ſweete baites of wordly vanities; hee could not get vs ſtoope, and intangle our ſelues in his nets and limetwigs of ſinne and wickedneſſe, vnleſſe he vſed ſtales in our owne likenes, and betraied vs by the example and perſwaſions of men like vnto our ſelues. Thus he inticed Eue with a faire apple, the ſonnes of God with the beautie of the daughters of men, Lot with the pleaſures of Sodom, Achan with the wedge of gold, the chiefe of the Iewes with the glory of the world: yea in theſe baites of worldly vanities his ſtrength ſo mainly lieth, that when he was to vſe all his policie, and imploy all his forces, to get the victorie of the Sonne of God himſelfe, hee maketh choice of theſe worldly weapons, and inticeth him to ſinne by offering vnto him the baites of worldly neceſſaries, honours and preferments; with which when hee could not ouercome, hee fleeth from him as deſpairing of victorie. So that wee may here learne, that Satans chiefe ſtrength conſiſteth in the worlds aides, and that in the conflict of tentations hee will flee when the world cannot ouercome, as deſpairing of the conqueſt when his chiefe forces faile him.

Matth.4.11.

Neither doth Satan with his owne foule hands offer vnto vs theſe baits and bribes to allure vs vnto ſinne, but hee chuſeth as his meſſengers and deputies thoſe who are in our owne likeneſſe, and couered with the ſame fleſh. He inticeth chaſt Ioſeph to commit vncleannes, by the perſwaſions of his wanton Miſtreſſe; the Iſraelites to filthineſſe, by the wicked Moabites; the people of God to Idolatrie, by the example of the curſed nations, and Salomon by his outlandiſh wiues. Whereby it commeth to paſſe that his counſailes haue more free audience, his perſwaſions greater authority, and his gifts wherewith hee allureth vs to commit ſinne, are leſſe ſuſpected and miſtruſted. By all which it plainely appeareth that the worlds forces are not weake, ſeeing in them conſiſteth Satans chiefe ſtrength, and that his power and policies are not ſecurely to bee contemned, ſeeing our arch-enemie the diuell placeth in them his chiefe confidence for the obtaining of victory.

§. Sect.7. That much ſtrength is added to the worlds forces through our corruption.

But no little are theſe forces ſtrengthened for our ouerthrow, through the aide and helpe which our owne corrupt fleſh miniſtreth vnto them. For as the world is Satans wildfire, wherewith he inflameth vs; ſo our fleſh is the tinder which receiueth and nouriſheth this fire, as ſoone as it is caſt into it; and ſuch a neere league of friendſhip there is betweene our fleſh and worldly vanities, that Satan can bee no more ready to offer, than it to receiue this wages of ſinne: whereof it commeth to paſſe, that when by the word of God, or the motion of his holy ſpirit, we thinke vpon theſe earthly vanities, that wee may learne the better to flee and contemne them, they ſticke to our fingers when wee would throw them away, they catch vs when wee would flee from them; and being inſnared with theſe worldly lime-twigs (like the ſilly bird) the more we ſtruggle to get out, the more we are intangled and diſabled. So that it fareth with vs as with the fooliſh louer, who fondly louing, but yet worthily diſliking his ill-deſeruing miſtreſſe, groweth to a ſeeming reſolution to forſake her companie, & armeth himſelfe with many forcible arguments to ſtrengthen him in his purpoſe; but at the next meeting he is ſo allured with her lookes, and ſo bewitched with the leaſt apparance of a proffered fauour, that he doteth on her againe with more than wonted fondnes. The reaſon hereof is, becauſe it is as naturall for our corrupt fleſh to loue the world, as for the looſe youth to loue the cunning harlot, for the water to run downe the hill, the fire to aſcend vpward, or for the tender hearted mother to loue her deare bought and only babe. So that it needeth no arguments to perſwade vs to imbrace his ſinfull vanities, for onely the ſight of them is ſufficient to allure vs, our owne affections more violently drawing vs, than the inticing eloquence and well framed reaſons of the beſt perſwading Oratour.

§. Sect.8. The power of the world ſhewed by the experience of former times.

But if wee would haue yet a more plaine and euen palpable demonſtration of the great power and puiſſance of this our enemy, let vs propound the experience of former times, and of our owne dayes, and take a view of thoſe trophies of victorie, which the world hath erected in all ages for the eternizing of his owne glorie; and you ſhall finde that the greateſt Potentates of the earth, the great Commanders of conquering armies, they who haue moſt excelled in wiſedome and policie, in power and fortitude, in temperance and in all other ciuill and morall vertues, haue after all their victories, beene vanquiſhed by the world, fettered in the chaines of his vanities, tied to his triumphant chariot; offering themſelues euen after they haue ſubdued the greateſt part of the earth, to become the worlds ſlaues and ſworne vaſſals, for the baſe and contemptible wages, either of windy honors, vncertaine riches, or carnall pleaſures. Neither hath this beene the caſe of the worlds deuoted ſeruants onely, but of the ſtoicall contemners of the world, who hauing caſt downe the gauntlet of defiance, and (as it were) challenged to fight with it in ſingle combat; haue at vnawares receiued foyles, in the very time of challenge, with their owne weapons, affecting the praiſe of the world by their diſpraiſes of it, and being tickled with vaine pleaſures, whileſt they haue declaimed againſt the vanitie of pleaſures; and when as by the waight of their arguments they haue ouercome their epicuriſh aduerſaries, themſelues haue beene ouercome with pleaſure no leſſe vaine and carnall, although more ſubtile and refined. Yea this puiſſant enemie hath not onely conquered the heathen multitude, and ruled amongſt them as an vniuerſall Monarch, (for if this were all, his power were not ſo terrible, ſeeing they wanted a Captaine to guide them, ſpirituall eyes to direct them, and the ſhield of faith which might beate backe the force of the worlds furies) but not contented with his owne territories and dominions, he hath made fearefull inrodes euen into the holy land, and hath fought many fierce battels in the middeſt of Gods viſible monarchie, vanquiſhing ſome of Gods profeſſed ſeruants through their own trecherie or cowardize, and leading them captiue to doe his will; foiling many euen of his great Worthies, through their ſecure negligence; and finally murthering and killing (though not ouercomming) others who reſiſted his furie and would not yeeld. In the formoſt ranke was Saul, whom of Gods elected and anointed king, he made his owne deuoted vaſſall; Abſalon, whom of the ſonne of a holy and religious king, he made with the baite of honour a blood-thirſtie rebell, and (it is to be feared) the ſonne of perdition; Demas, who of a diſciple became an Apoſtate; and Iudas, who being hired with the wages of iniquitie, of an Apoſtle became a diuell. In the ſecond was iuſt Noah foiled with intemperance, righteous Lot defiled with filthie inceſt; the tenne Patriarkes, ſome of which were ouercome with luſt, ſome ſtained with blood, and all ouerborne with pride and bitter enuie; holy Dauid, firſt defiled with luſt, and then embrued with innocent blood, the feare of God for a time being beaten backe with the feare of loſing his credit in the world; religious Ezechias ſwolne with a cruell blow of vainglory which the world gaue him, through his great conceit of his riches and treaſures; a diſeaſe much more dangerous than that ſwelling ſore, of which through the mercy of God hee had recouered. And to theſe wee might adde the ſtrong Sampſon, and the wiſe Salomon, whom the world ouercame by his female forces; and the Diſciples themſelues, enuying one another their greatnes, & contending for ſuperiority there where the meaneſt inferiour is much more glorious than the earths greateſt Monarch. In the laſt march that armie of glorious Martyrs, againſt whom the world raged with barbarous crueltie, and ſo farre preuailed in the fight, that he foiled, yea murthered their bodies, though hee could not hurt their ſoules, they being inuiſible and immortall.

§. Sect. 9.
The power of the world ſhewed, by the experience of theſe preſent times.

But leauing former ages, let vs come vnto our owne, where we may obſerue a world of victories; which the world hath through his force and cunning obtained, euen in theſe latter times, which are ſtill freſh in our memories and daily ſubject to our view. And to ſay nothing of the barbarous Heathen and wild Indians, who ſcarce acknowledge any other maſter (vnleſſe it be the prince of the world) nor expect any other wages but what is paid vnto them out of the worlds exchequer; to paſſe by the Turkes and Saracens, the worlds deuoted vaſſals and ſworne ſouldiers, waged by him to fight continually againſt the kingdome of Ieſus Chriſt; and not to ſpeake of the whole kingdome of the Romiſh Antichriſt, whoſe whole religion is nothing elſe but a mixture of ſuperſtition, hypocriſie, and worldly policies, of purpoſe inuented and contriued, that they may attaine their worldly ends, and maintaine their glory and authoritie, inrich their cheſts, and wallow themſelues in the filthy ſinke of voluptuous pleaſures; euen amongſt our ſelues who haue giuen our names to Ieſus Chriſt, and do make profeſſion of his holy Goſpell how many are there, who hauing in their baptiſme taken vpon them the badge of Chriſtian profeſſion, doe make apoſtaſie from their faith, and in the whole courſe of their liues ſhew, that they are profeſſed worldlings, ſeruing this wicked maſter with all their thoughts, words and workes, for the wages of worldly vanities; minding onely earthly things, and being in their cogitations and hearts faſt glued vnto the ground, ſo as they haue neuer any leiſure to lift them vp in any holy and heauenly meditation; talking of nothing but of their worldly buſineſſes and delights, and how they may compaſſe & archieue their worldly deſignes; and all their actions aiming at this marke how they may increaſe or continue their riches, pleaſures or preferments? How many are there (who not daring for feare of that helliſh condemnation, which they heare is ſo terrible, to giue themſelues ouer wholly to the ſeruice of the world) doe notwithſtanding vnequally ſhare themſelues betweene God and Mammon, giuing the world their hearts, yea and their bodies too, ſauing that they doe an houre or in two in a weeke, make (as it were) a tender of them to the grand Lord, offering vnto him the ſmall pepper corne of their outward deuotion, for feare of forfeiting the tenure of their ſaluation? How many diſguized hypocrites are there, who offer vnto God more ſeruice, but with as ſmall deuotion, and profeſſing religion, oftentimes with ſhew of zeale more than ordinarie, doe notwithſtanding ſecretly reconcile themſelues vnto the world, ſwearing vnto him their alleageance for the hire of earthly trifles? who offer vnto the Lord onely the ſacrifice of their lips, and take vpon them the vizard of religion, that their ſhew of godlineſſe may increaſe their gaine, and ſet forward their worldly ends; but when God and the world, religion and their pleaſure, profit and preferment, are ſo diuided, that they cannot together be imbraced, then they vnmaske themſelues, caſt aſide the Lords liuerie; and openly profeſſe that if they muſt haue but one, then the world alone ſhall bee their Lord and Maſter.

§. Sect. 10
That the world often preuaileth with Gods ſeruants.

And all theſe proclaime the worlds force and power by their vtter ouerthrow and baſe ſlauerie. But how many are there beſides who in the ſinceritie of their hearts serue the Lord, and fight vnder his ſtanderd, who feele often the force of the worlds blowes, and receiue deepe and grieſly, though not mortall wounds, in this conflict? How many are there who hauing eſcaped out of the diuels ſlauerie, and had the vpper hand in many combats of tentation, after they haue put him to flight, and obtained a glorious victorie, are purſued and ouertaken by the world, which encountring and cloſing faſt with them, either caſteth them downe, or grieuouſly foileth them, by wounding their conſciences with ſome knowne ſin, or maketh them to ſtand ſtill, or at leaſt exceedingly hindreth their race in the courſe of Chriſtianitie? How many are there who haue loſt their firſt loue, and are much abated in their zeale, becomming cold and negligent in the duties of Gods ſeruice, and in the workes of mercie and charitie towards their brethren, after that the world hath combated with thẽ? And yet alas ſo ſecure we are, that though this enemie bee much more dangerous and pernicious than Satan himſelfe, ouercomming more through his treacherous flatteries, than his grand captaine by his open violence, yet the moſt thinke not of it, as of a mortall foe, but as though it were a kinde friend, they impart vnto it a great ſhare in their loue and affection, eſteeming it aboue Gods ſpirituall graces whileſt they haue it, and mourning with ſorrow and bitter griefe when they are forced to part from it. And howſoeuer they profeſſe enmitie againſt the world, as being commonly reckoned for one of the enemies of our ſaluation, yet their quarrell is but againſt an idle name: for as for the nature of the world, what it is, and the dangerous effects which it worketh, they know it not, much leſſe doe they with any care furniſh themſelues with ſuch ſpirituall weapons as might enable them to fight againſt it. Whereof it commeth to paſſe that they are vanquiſhed by the world at vnawares, and liue in ſubiection to this dangerous enemie, and neuer feele the burthen of their bondage, because it is ſweete and pleaſing to the fleſh.

Chap. III.

Reaſons to moue vs to reſiſt and fight againſt our enemie the world.

§. Sect. 1.
God comm deth vs to op poſe again the world.

And thus haue I ſhewed the dangerouſnes of this enemie, both in reſpect of his malice and power, by the firſt whereof is inferred the neceſſitie of the fight; for ſuch is his malice that hee will hearken vnto no peace, but if we will not ouercome him, he will ſurely ouercome vs; by the other carnall ſecuritie is taken away, and we ſtirred vp with all diligence to prepare our ſelues againſt the encounter; ſeeing we are not to fight againſt a weak and contemptible enemie, but againſt a politike and powerfull champion, with whom few haue combated, but either they haue beene ſhamefully foyled, or vtterly ouerthrowne. But that we may the rather be incouraged to proclaime warre againſt the world, with which wee are too too prone in our owne corrupt nature to be in league and amitie, let the reaſons following induce vs. Firſt, the Lord hath by ſpeciall commandement inioyned vs to haue no amitie or correſpondencie with the world and worldly vanities, but to renounce and contemne it, both in our actions, and alſo in our hearts and affections, as being vnworthy both our labour and our loue. The former, Rom. 12. 2. Faſhion not your ſelues like vnto this world but bee yee changed by the renewing of your mindes. And elſewhere hee willeth vs, to vſe this world as though wee vſed it not, as being a falſe and treacherous friend, who will deceiue and betray vs when we moſt truſt it, becauſe (ſaith he) the faſhion of this world goeth away, or as the words may more fitly ſignifie, becauſe the beautie and glorie of this world doth ſeduce vs, and like a falſe guide miſleadeth in directing. The other, 1. Iohn 2. 15. Loue not the world, nor the things that are in the world, &c.

Rom. 12. 2.

1. Cor. 7. 31.

1. Iohn. 2. 15.

§. Sect. 2.
The ſecond reaſon take from the pa ſion of Chri

The ſecond argument may be taken from the paſſion of Chriſt; for he ſhed his precious blood to cleanſe vs from theſe worldly and wicked luſts, and victoriouſly triumphed ouer the world vpon his croſſe on our behalfe, not that wee ſhould yeeld our ſelues to the ſubiection thereof againe, being thus dearely redeemed from it, not that we ſhould ſtill haue our hearts and affections faſt nailed to the earth, and glued (as it were) vnto worldly vanities, but that wee ſhould contemne and tread them vnder our feete, as being partners in his victorie, and that being riſen with Chriſt, in glorious triumph ouer them, we ſhould ſeeke thoſe things that are aboue, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God, and ſet our affections on things that are aboue, and not on things which are on earth. And though our abode bee vpon earth, yet our conuerſation ſhould be in heauen, from whence we looke for a Sauiour euen the Lord Ieſus Chriſt; in compariſon of whoſe infinite worth wee are with the Apoſtle Paul to eſteeme all earthly things droſſe and dung, yea euen loſſe that we may gaine him. And this argument the Apoſtle Peter vſeth to encourage vs to fight againſt and forſake worldly luſts: 1.*Pet.*4.1. For as much as Chriſt hath ſuffered for vs in the fleſh, arme your ſelues likewiſe with the ſame minde, which is, that hee which hath ſuffered in the fleſh, hath ceaſed from ſinne. 2. That hee henceforward ſhould liue (as much time as remaineth in the fleſh) not after the luſts of men, but after the will of God. 3. For it is ſufficient for vs that we haue ſpent the time paſt of our life after the luſt of the Gentiles, walking in wantonnes, luſts, drunkennes, in gluttonie, drinkings, and in abbominable idolatries, &c. amongſt which one of the moſt hainous and commoneſt is, to ſet vp the world as an idoll in our hearts, which ſhould bee the temple of the holy Ghoſt.

. Sect.3. e third rea- n from ſſitie of s fight, ſe- g the friends the world e enemies God.

The third argument is taken from vnauoidable neceſſitie: for firſt it is neceſſarie that wee fight againſt the world, or elſe we ſhall fight againſt God, there being oppoſition betweene them without meane, & therfore no neutralitie admitted, but whoſoeuer ioyneth not with God, is on the worlds part, whoſoeuer loueth the world hateth God, & who ſo loueth God hateth the world. This is plaine, *Iam.*4.4. Know you not that the amitie of the world is enmity with God? Whoſoeuer therefore will bee a friend of the world, maketh himſelfe the enemie of God. And the Apoſtle Iohn vſeth it as an argument to diſſwade vs from the loue of the world, becauſe we cannot loue the world and God too: If any man (ſaith hee) loue the world, the loue of the father is not in him. For as ſoone as the loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts, it moueth vs to loue him againe, who hath thus dearely loued vs, and louing him to loue his friends alſo, and to hate his enemies. As ſoone as we are reconciled vnto God and become his ſeruants, we preſently oppoſe againſt all thoſe who make oppoſition againſt our Lord and maſter, and as wee are made his ſonnes by adoption and grace, wee cannot chuſe in our filiall affection, but take our fathers part, breaking off all friendſhip with thoſe which are his enemies, and making warre againſt thoſe who fight againſt him. To this purpoſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that as ſoone as the grace of God, that is, the doctrine of grace and reconciliation, doth appeare, it teacheth vs to denie vngodlines, and worldly luſts, and to liue ſoberly, and righteouſly and godly in this preſent world. So that the loue of the world and the loue of God, peace with the world, and peace with God, will not ſtand together. And therefore the Apoſtle Paul ſaith, that Demas forſooke him, and together with him the ſeruice of God, when he began to imbrace the world. And our Sauiour telleth vs plainly, that no man can ſerue theſe two maſters, being ſo oppoſed one againſt the other, for either he ſhall hate the one, and loue the other, or elſe he ſhall leane to the one, and deſpiſe the other: yee cannot (ſaith he) ſerue God and mammon. As well then may wee reconcile fire and water, light and darkneſſe, righteouſneſſe and vnrighteouſneſſe, Chriſt and Belial, as God and the world: and therefore when Ieboſaphat, though otherwiſe a godly King, would haue beene friends to both, the Lord ſendeth Iehu the Prophet vnto him with an ambaſſage of ſharpe reproofe. Wouldeſt thou (ſaid he) helpe the wicked, and loue them that hate the Lord? therefore for this thing, the wrath of the Lord is vpon thee, 2.Chro.19.2.

Tit.2.11.12.

2.Tim.4.10.

Matth.6.24.

2.Chron.19.2.

§. Sect.4. Vnleſſe we renounce the world, we are not of the number of the faithfull.

Secondly, of neceſſitie we muſt renounce the world, and flying out of this ſpirituall Babylon adioyne our ſelues vnto the kingdome of Ieſus Chriſt, or elſe we cannot bee reckoned in the number of the faithfull, nor haue any part in their priuiledges. We muſt bee ſheepe of Chriſts flocke ſeuered from the goates, or elſe wee ſhall haue no ſhare in the benefit of his death and interceſſion. For Chriſt hath choſen his faithfull ones out of the world, and hath disfranchiſed them of all the carnall liberties thereof, as ſoone as he made them partakers of that glorious libertie of being the ſonnes of God. So hee ſaith, that becauſe the faithfull are not of the world, but hee had choſen them out of the world, therefore the world hateth them. And more plainly elſewhere: They (ſaith he) are not of the world, as I am not of the world. And as thoſe who adhere to the world cannot be reckoned in the number of the faithfull, ſo can they haue no intereſt in the death and mediation of Chriſt, or in any other benefits which are appropriated vnto them, as their peculiar priuiledges. For Chriſt laid downe his life for his owne ſheepe, and not for goates and wolues, he beſtowed his life for his friends alone, and therefore not for worldlings, who are ſtrangers, or rather profeſſed enemies; he gaue himſelfe for his Church, and conſequently thoſe who are ſeuered from the communion of Saints, and adhere to the world, which is the Ioh.15.19.

Ioh.17.16.

Ioh.10.15.

Ioh.15.13.

Eph.5.25.

ſynagogue of Satan, haue no intereſt in this gift. And as they haue no part in his death, ſo neither any benefit in his interceſſion; for himſelfe hath excluded them in that diuine prayer which hee made to his father: I pray (ſaith he) for them, I pray not for the world, but for them which thou haſt giuen me. Heere therefore wee are put to our choice; either wee muſt renounce the world, or renounce our part in Chriſt; we muſt with the bleſſed Apoſtle be crucified and die to the world, or elſe we can haue no benefit in the death of Chriſt; wee muſt ceaſe to be citizens of the world, and diſclaime our intereſt in its ſinfull vanities, or wee ſhall haue no part in Chriſts mediation & interceſſion. Take then which you will, for both you cannot haue; and thrice bleſſed is hee that chuſeth the better part, for that ſhall neuer be taken from him.

Iohn.17.

Gal.6.14.

§. Sect.5. Chriſtian religion requireth that we ſhould renounce the world.

Thirdly, of neceſſitie wee muſt vndertake this combat againſt the world and worldly vanities, becauſe our religion in a great part doth conſiſt in abandoning of them, whereof it is that at our firſt entrance into the courſe of Chriſtianitie, when as in our baptiſme wee take vpon vs the name of Chriſt, wee renounce the world with all the vaine pompe and glorious vanities thereof, and profeſſe that wee will couragiouſly fight againſt them vnder the ſtanderd of Ieſus Chriſt. As ſoone therefore as we ceaſe this fight, and become friends with the world, ſetting our hearts and affections more vpon worldly vanities than vpon ſpirituall things, wee ſteale out of Chriſts campe like runnagate ſouldiers, we caſt aſide Chriſts liuerie, wee ſlide backe from our religion in truth, whatſoeuer wee profeſſe in words, and ioyning in league with Chriſts enemie wee traiterouſly make warre againſt him. To this purpoſe the Apoſtle Iames ſaith, that pure religion and vndefiled before God, euen the Father, is this, to viſit the fatherleſſe and widowes in their aduerſitie, and to keepe a mans ſelfe vnſpotted of the world. The which we cannot doe vnleſſe we abandon and renounce it; for this peſtiferous aire infecteth all that liue in it, and as impoſſible it is to haue familiar conuerſation with this wanton harlot, and not to bee inueigled in her bands, and defiled with her vncleannes, as to liue in a Mill and to keepe our ſelues cleane from meale and duſt.

Iames.1,27.

§. Sect.6. The way of the world is the way of ſinne. Ephes.2.1.2.

Fourthly, the neceſſitie of leauing the world and renouncing carnall vanities hereby appeareth, in that whileſt wee continue in the way of the world, we are in the way of ſinne, and the way of ſinne is the way of death and deſtruction. So the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt hath quickned vs that were dead in treſpaſſes and ſinnes, wherein in time paſt we walked according to the courſe of the world, and after the prince that ruleth in the aire, euen the ſpirit that now worketh in the children of diſobedience, &c. And the Apoſtle Iohn ſaith, that the whole world lieth in wickedneſſe. If therefore wee will not breake off companie with the world, wee walke with it in the way of ſinne and death; If wee make the world our bedfellow, well may our corrupt fleſh thinke our bed ſoft as downe, and ſweete as roſes, and ſo cauſe vs to ſleepe a dead ſleepe in carnall ſecuritie, yet in truth like filthie ſwine wee wallow in the ſinke and puddle of ſinne and wickedneſſe; and if euer wee awake out of this ſpirituall lethargie, wee ſhall ſee our eſtate moſt deſperate and damnable, till wee bee ſeuered from this companion, and cleanſed from that filthineſſe, wherewith hee hath defiled vs. So that we may conclude where the holy Pſalmiſt began, Pſal.1.1. Bleſſed is the man that doth not walke in the counſell of the wicked, nor ſtand in the way of ſinners, nor ſit in the ſeate of ſcorners.

1.Ioh.5.19.

§. Sect.7. We muſt fig againſt the world if we be Chriſts diſciples.

Fiftly, if wee vvill bee the ſeruants and Diſciples of Ieſus Chriſt, wee muſt of neceſſitie make warre againſt the world, for it will haue no peace with vs, but as ſoone as it diſcerneth that we are choſen by him, it will purſue vs with mortall hatred; ſo that vvee muſt fight againſt it, or it will fight againſt vs, and ſo deſtroy vs for vvant of reſiſtance; vnleſſe vve can bee content to renounce the ſeruice of our Sauiour, and yeeld our ſelues as ſlaues to the world, ſinne and Satan, who will reward vs for the preſent with the wages of vanity, and afterwards vvith the wages of death. And this argument the Apoſtle Peter vſeth, 1.Pet.2.11. Dearely beloued, I beſeech you as ſtrangers and pilgrimes, abſtaine from fleſhly luſts, which fight againſt the ſoule.

1.Pet.2.11.

§. Sect.8. We become poſtates if we fight not againſt the world.

Sixtly, if wee doe not fight againſt the vvorld, but ſuffer our ſelues to bee againe defiled with vvorldly luſts, after that Chriſt hath ſhed his blood to waſh and cleanſe vs, vvee ſhall fall into a fearefull relapſe, and make our latter end much worſe than our beginning; vve ſhall like filthy dogges returne to our vomit, & with the ſow that was waſhed, to our wallowing in the mire. And this the Apoſtle Peter plainly affirmeth, 2.Pet.2.20. For if they (ſaith hee) after they haue eſcaped from the filthineſſe of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord, and of the Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, are yet tangled therein againe, and ouercome, the latter end is worſe with them than the beginning. 22. For it had beene better for them, not to haue knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, than after they haue knowne it, to turne from the Holy commandement giuen vnto them. &c.

2.Pet.2.20.

§. Sect.9. The fourth reaſon t from our red hope of victorie.

The fourth argument to incourage vs to this fight againſt the world and worldly vanities, is our aſſured hope of obtaining victorie: for howſoeuer (as hath beene ſhewed) ſhewed) the world is a malitious, politike, and puiſſant enemie, and wee (being conſidered in our ſelues) are altogether vnable to make reſiſtance, ſeeing our nature is weake, and our forces fraile, and which is worſt of all, that weake ſtrength we haue being diuided, and ciuill warres at home, our ſelues contending againſt our ſelues, and the fleſh which is our greater and ſtronger part, rebelling and luſting againſt the ſpirit, and traiterouſly ioyning with the world to worke our ouerthrow: yet being by a liuely faith knit vnto Chriſt, aſſiſted with his ſpirit, and armed at all points with the ſpirituall armour of his ſanctifying and ſauing graces, there is no doubt of getting victorie. For we doe fight againſt but a conquered enemie, whom Chriſt already hath ſubdued, not onely for himſelfe, but alſo for all vs that are true members of his body. And this argument of incouragement our Sauiour vſeth, Ioh. 16. 33. In the world (ſaith he) yee ſhall haue affliction, but be of good comfort I haue ouercome the world. Yea this conqueſt Chriſt obtained at an high rate, for he gaue his life to free vs from the worlds thraldome, as the Apoſtle witneſſeth, Gal. 1. 4. which gaue himſelfe for our ſinnes, that he might deliuer vs from this preſent euill world. And therefore hauing ſo dearely bought this victorie, and our freedome, hee will not ſuffer his paines to be ſpent in vaine, but hauing all power in heauen and earth committed vnto him, he will giue vs alſo ſtrength to ouercome, if we will lay hold on Chriſt by faith, profeſſe our ſelues his ſouldiers and ſeruants, and valiantly fight vnder his ſtanderd, againſt theſe ſpirituall enemies of our ſaluation. And this comfort and incouragement the Apoſtle Iohn giueth vs: All (ſaith he) that is borne of God ouercommeth the world, and this is the victorie that ouercommeth the world, euen our faith. Who is it that ouercommeth the world, but he that beleeueth that Ieſus is the ſonne of God? 1. Ioh. 5. verſ. 4. 5.

16.33.

1.4.

5.4.5.

§. Sect. 10.
...laſt reaſon
...n from our
...rd which
...mpanieth
...rie.

...im.4.8.

...3.21.

...19.29.

The laſt argument to moue vs, is the great reward which accompanieth this victorie, for hauing fought this good fight wee may aſſuredly expect, with the bleſſed Apoſtle, a crowne of righteouſneſſe; and to raigne with Chriſt in glory, as himſelfe hath promiſed: Apoc. 3. 21. To him (ſaith hee) that ouercommeth, will I grant to ſit with me in my throne, euen as I ouercame, and ſit with my father in his throne. Yea we ſhall enjoy all bleſſedneſſe and happineſſe, for wee ſhall haue the fruition of God himſelfe, and together with him enioy all good things. For ſo he promiſeth, Apoc. 21. 7. Hee that ouercommeth ſhall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he ſhall be my ſonne. What therefore though in this conflict we loſe, or be driuen to forſake houſes, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children or lands, for Chriſts names ſake, ſeeing wee ſhall haue the worth of theſe benefits redoubled vnto vs a hundred fold, euen in this life in Gods ſpirituall graces, and in the world to come ſhall inherit euerlaſting life? What if wee be driuen for a moment of time, to beare the eaſie burthen of ſome light affliction, if wee ſhall afterwards bee rewarded with a farre moſt excellent and an eternall waight of glory? Yea what though in this fight wee loſe a temporarie life, if we may bee rewarded with life eternall, and that glory and happineſſe which doth accompanie it?

2. Cor. 4. 17.

Luke 9. 24.

And theſe are the reaſons which may incourage all Chriſtians to encounter this ſpirituall enemie of our ſaluation: now if we vvould know how vvee may thus fight againſt the world, and bee aſſured alſo that wee haue obtained victorie; vvee are ſaid thus to combat vvith it, when vvee reſiſt and ouercome all worldly tentations, which moue or draw vs vnto ſinne; and more eſpecially, when being allured to commit ſinne, or to neglect any duty which God requireth, by the worldly baites of riches, pleaſures, and preferments, vvee doe renounce theſe vvorldly luſts, and contemne theſe baſe offers, preferring farre before them our obedience towards God, and the reward thereof, his loue and fauour in this life, vvith all other his ſpirituall gifts and graces, and the eternall ioyes of his kingdome, reſerued for vs in the life to come. And contrariwiſe vvhen being diſcouraged in our courſe of Chriſtianitie, or vrged and enforced to commit any ſinne, vvith croſſes, troubles, afflictions and perſecutions which the world and wicked vvorldlings raiſe againſt vs, vvee arme our ſelues vvith patience to beare the brunt of the worlds furie, accounting ſinne the greateſt euill, and the burthen of Gods wrath due vnto it the greateſt torment; and therefore chuſe rather to endure any extremitie, yea to haue our liues taken away, vvith moſt exquiſite tortures, than we vvill be forced to make ſhipwracke of a good conſcience, or incurre the diſpleaſure of our moſt gracious God by committing any ſinne.

§. Sect. 11.
How we are ſaid to fight againſt the world, and to obtaine victorie.

CHAP. IIII.

Of the manner of the worlds fight, and how he aſſaulteth vs, on the one ſide with proſperitie, and on the other ſide with aduerſitie.

THus hauing diſcouered the worlds forces, and incouraged euerie Chriſtian ſouldier to the fight: let vs in the next place conſider of the chiefe and moſt preuailing weapons which hee

§. Sect. 1.
With what weapons the world aſſaulteth vs.

vſeth to ouerthrow vs, and obtaine the victorie, and the manner of his warring vvith vs in the day of battell. His weapons and munition are of two ſorts, either his allurements and baits, wherewith he inticeth vs vnto ſinne, reſerued againſt the day of battell in the ſtorehouſe of proſperitie; or his weapons of affliction and perſecution, wherby hee ſeeketh to daunt and diſcourage vs in our Chriſtian march, and cauſe vs to make a ſtand, or retire backe, and ſhamefully flee away, which he ſtoreth vp in the armorie of aduerſitie. The former may bee called his bullets and gunſhot, which kill at vnawares, we not ſeeing or knowing who hurt vs: the other his ſwords and ſpeares, more terrible in ſight, but leſſe dangerous in their vſe, becauſe being plainly ſubiect to our view, wee may the better defend our ſelues againſt them, and repell their force, either by warding or declining.

§.Sect.2.
The manner how the world fighteth with vs.
2 King 18.31.32

The manner of his warring with vs, is either by perſwading in a cunning and deceitfull parley, or by encountring vs with all his forces: in the one playing the dangerous traitor, in the other an open enemie. In the former like a ſubtile Rabſhakeh, in his maſter Satans name, hee offereth vnto vs peace, and maketh many faire promiſes of great plenty and ſecuritie vnder his protection, if wee will be content to lay aſide our armes, and ſubject our ſelues as ſlaues and vaſſals vnto his gouernment. And leaſt theſe allurements might not preuaile, hee mixeth threatnings, and boaſteth of his great ſtrength, whereby hee is able to ouercome by force, if fairer meanes will not perſwade a yeelding; blaſphemouſly diſabling the power of our mightie God, the Lord of hoſts, as though he were not able ſo well to prouide for vs, or to ſhield and defend vs againſt his furie. But if his bewitching eloquence will not moue vs, then he marcheth againſt vs with all his forces, and imployeth all his ſtrength and policie to work our ouerthrovv; ſometimes hiding the troupes of his temptations in the ambuſhments of worldly vanities, that is, either behind the high hils of ambitions honours, or in the low delightfull medovves of voluptuous pleaſures, or elſe in the pricking thickets of thornie riches, that ſo he may aſſault vs in our greateſt ſecuritie; and obtaine an eaſie victorie: and ſometimes hee draweth out his forces in open vievv, and marcheth againſt vs with a terrible armie of afflictions and perſecutions, preſuming to ouercome vs through force and violence. And this is the manner of the worlds fight, wherin as you ſee he leaueth no meanes vnaſſaied to vvork his own vvill, and our ouerthrow: for being reſolued to catch and make a pray of vs, like a cunning fiſher-man, hee either allures vs to ſwallow the hookes of ſin with the baits of vvorldly vanities; or if he cannot ſo preuaile, hee aſſaieth to driue vs by force into his nets of perdition, beating vs forward vvith the ſtaues of trouble and affliction; or like a dangerous theefe intending to ſpoile vs of the rich treaſures of Gods graces, either he cheateth and deceiueth vs, by perſwading vs to exchange with him theſe precious iewels, for ſome counterfeite trifles and baſe vvorldly vanities; or if his coſening cunning preuaile not, like a ſtrong theefe by the high vvay ſide, hee will cruelly aſſault vs, and endeuour to robbe vs by force and violence. So that it behoueth the Chriſtian man alwayes carefully to watch and to ſtand vpon his guard, both in the time of proſperitie and aduerſitie that hee be not either allured vvith the one, or oppreſſed with the other; either inticed vvith worldly baits to fall into the nets of deſtruction, or diſcouraged in his courſe of Chriſtianitie, vvith troubles and afflictions.

Nec proſperi vita eligenda eſt, & ſola aduerſa declinanda, ſed vtraque cauenda eſt; ne corrumpat, iſta ne frang Auguſt. in Pſal.

§.Sect.3.
That proſperitie is good in its owne nature.

And thus haue I ſhewed how the vvorld on euery ſide aſſaulteth vs; on the right hand vvith proſperity, on the left hand vvith aduerſitie; before vs he ſetteth the bewitching baits of worldly vanities, to intice vs forward in the broad way of deſtruction: behinde, hee purſueth vs with terrors and feares, that ſo wee may not dare to looke backe; and if wee ſeeme but to make a ſtand, he whippeth vs forward with many ſharp & many ſtringed whips of croſſes and afflictions. Now let vs more ſpecially deſcend to ſpeake of the vvorlds tentations, and of the meanes to arme our ſelues againſt them, beginning vvith the tentations of proſperitie, and then afterwards deſcending to the tentations of aduerſitie. And leſt wee ſhould vndiſcreetly caſt away the ſound with the rotten and declaime againſt Gods bleſſings, becauſe of the worlds abuſe; let vs conſider what this proſperitie is, and hovv wee are to eſteeme of it in its owne nature, and how it becommeth the worlds aſſiſtant, through his abuſe and our corruption, to work our ouerthrow. Proſperitie therfore is nothing elſe but a confluence or concurrence of all earthly & temporal benefits; as the fauour and friendſhip of men, health, wealth, peace, libertie, honour, pleaſure, and the like. Now if we would know how to eſteeme of it, we muſt conſider what it is in its owne nature, & what in our vſe. In its owne nature it is good, becauſe it is the gift & bleſſing of God, vvhich he beſtovveth vpon his ovvne ſeruants, as a revvard of their loue and obedience. So the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that [a] they who loue Gods Law ſhall haue great proſperitie, and they ſhall haue no hurt. And the Lord exhorteth the people of Iſrael [b] to keepe the words of his couenant, that they might proſper in all that they ſhould doe: to the

[a] Pſal.119.165.

[b] Deut.29.9. and 6.18. 2.King.18.7.

the ſame purpoſe are diuers other places. The giuer therefore doth ſufficiently commend the gift, and comming from him as a revvard it muſt needes be good. Secondly, the Lord loueth and taketh [c] delight in the proſperity of his ſeruants, as the Pſalmiſt plainly affirmeth; and it is the good of his Saints, and not their hurt, wherewith he is ſo well pleaſed. Thirdly, proſperitie in it ſelfe is a motiue cauſe to make vs render to the Lord praiſes and thankſgiuing, and is the ſubject matter of our Hymnes and religious ſongs, as may plentifully appeare in the booke of Dauids Pſalmes: now as it is good to praiſe God, ſo that is good for which wee praiſe him. Fourthly, the ſeruants of God haue prayed vnto him for this proſperitie, and that both for themſelues, and alſo for the whole Church. Of the former wee haue an example: Pſal. 118. 25. O Lord I pray thee ſaue now: O Lord I pray thee giue now proſperitie. Of the other: Pſal. 122. 7. Peace be within thy walles, and proſperitie within thy palaces. Laſtly, it is made a ſigne of Gods fauourable preſence with his ſeruants, and thus the Lord is ſaid to haue beene with Ioſeph, for whatſoeuer he did he made it to proſper. So it is ſaid of Dauid, that he proſpered and grew, for the Lord God of hoſts was with him. And of Ezechias, that the Lord was with him, and he proſpered in all things which he tooke in hand.

ſal.35.27.

al.116.12.13

al.118.25.

122.9.

n.39.2,3.

Sam.5.10.

.Sect.4.
at proſpe-tie in reſpect our vſe, is of indifferent ure.

And thus it appeareth that proſperitie in it ſelfe is good: but being conſidered in our vſe, it is not abſolutely good, but indifferent, both in reſpect of the ſubject and the vſe; for it is good to the good, euill to the euill; good to thoſe who vvell vſe it, and euill in thoſe vvho abuſe it vnto ſinne. In the former reſpect proſperitie is good when it is enioyed by a faithfull man, who being in Chriſt, hath recouered that right in all Gods bleſſings vvhich vvee loſt in Adam. In the other, when it commeth vnto him by lawfull meanes, as the gift and bleſſing of God; and being enioyed, is ſanctified vnto him by the vvord of God and prayer: as alſo when as it is moderatly loued and deſired, with a willingnes to hold it, as long as God will, and wee may by lawfull meanes; and vvith contentedneſſe to leaue it, when it pleaſeth God to take it from vs. Finally, it is good when as it is vſed and imployed for the aduancement of Gods glorie, who is the fountaine and giuer of it, the benefit of the faithfull, and the furthering of our owne ſaluation. And if any ſuch enioy proſperity and thus vſe it, in this manner, and to theſe ends, it is to bee accounted vnto them Gods ſingular bleſſing, and as a temporall pledge of eternall happineſſe. But contrariwiſe, proſperity is euill to the wicked and vnregenerate, who haue no right vnto Gods creatures; as alſo when it is vnlawfully compaſſed, and naughtily vſed, as when it is immoderately loued and deſired, namely, aboue God, his heauenly bleſſings, and ſpirituall graces: for as one ſaith, it is the concupiſcence of the world, and not the world it ſelfe that hurteth vs. So alſo when as we ſo dote vpon it, that wee cannot with patience thinke of leauing it, and immoderately mourne when it is taken from vs; vvhich carefull poſſeſſion and not ſimply the vſe is condemned. To this purpoſe the Heathen man ſpeaketh diuinely: A wiſe man (ſaith he) would haue theſe things contemned, not that they ſhould not be had, but that they ſhould not bee poſſeſſed with care; he will not driue them away from him, but if they bee going he will follow them ſecurely, &c. Hee loueth not riches, but hee had rather haue them than be without them; hee receiueth them not into his heart, but into his houſe; neither doth he refuſe them being poſſeſſed, but keepeth them, and deſireth to haue more large matter or fuell miniſtred to exerciſe his vertue. Finally, proſperity is euill to thoſe who are thereby made more forgetfull of God, and negligent in performing the duties of his ſeruice, more iniurious to men, and more ſlacke in vſing the meanes of their ſaluation. But of theſe points I ſhall haue occaſion to ſpeake more hereafter when I intreate of the chiefe parts of this proſperitie.

1.21,

Plus concupiſcentia mundi, quam ſubſtantia nocet. Bernard in Mat.19

Ait iſta debere contemni, non ne habeat, ſed ne ſollicitus habeat; non abiget illa à ſe, ſed abeuntia ſecurus proſequetur, &c. Senec. de vita beat, cap. 21.

§. Sect. 5.
That we are apt to abuſe our proſperitie vnto ſinne.

And thus wee are to diſtinguiſh betweene proſperity it ſelfe which is good, and the abuſe thereof which is euill; in which reſpect alone wee are to eſteeme it the worlds friend and aſſiſtant, whereby hee tempteth vs, and our enemie, which wee muſt labour to ouercome: and therefore for diſtinction ſake, let vs, if you pleaſe, in this diſcourſe call it worldly and carnall proſperitie; becauſe it is abuſed as a tentation of the world, to inflame our corrupt fleſh with concupiſcence and ſinne. Vnto which abuſe wee are naturally, exceeding prone: for as fruite is vnto a childe, libertie to the licentious, cockring loue to an vndutifull ſon, a ſword to a mad man, beauty to the laſciuious, and good drinke to a filthy drunkard, ſuch is worldly proſperity vnto vs. And hence it is that the Lord like a wiſe Phyſition (feeling our pulſe, and finding that our nature inclineth vs to this pluriſie of proſperity, whereby our braines are ſo intoxicated, as wee forget God and all goodneſſe) doth purpoſely labour to preuent it, and maketh wholeſome preſeruatiues of admonitions to keepe vs from it, in many places of holy Scriptures, as hereafter wee ſhall ſee. In the meane while we may obſerue the exceeding corruption of our vile nature, which ſo poyſoneth and infecteth Gods good gifts and bleſſings, that they become cauſes and occaſions of euill: and whereas the Lord through the infinite goodneſſe of his nature, bringeth good out of euill, and by afflictions, which are ill in their owne nature, worketh our good euen our conuerſion, ſanctification and ſaluation, wee contrariwiſe through the diuelliſh tainture of our ſinne turne good into euill, and out of Gods benefits, and rich bleſſings, worke our owne woe, and haſten and ſet forward (vnleſſe God preuent vs with his grace) our owne deſtruction and damnation.

Chap. V.

Of the dangerouſneſſe of worldly proſperitie.

§.Sect.1. That the worlds tentations on the right hand are very dangerous.

NOw hauing ſeene what this worldly proſperitie is, and in what reſpect it is our enemy, namely, when it is a tentation of the world to allure vs vnto ſinne, (as it is vnto all thoſe who immoderatly loue and ſet their hearts vpon it, more than vpon heauenly and ſpirituall things) let vs in the next place conſider of the dangerouſneſſe of theſe worldly tentations which are on the right hand, that accordingly wee may prepare our ſelues to make reſiſtance. The danger of worldly proſperitie is exceeding great; for as by Hippocrates rule the height of health, is the firſt degree to ſome dangerous ſickneſſe; ſo when our worldly eſtate ſeemeth moſt healthy, ſtrong, and vigorous, then is our corrupt nature prone to fall into the perillous diſeaſes of ſinne, which are attended vpon with eternall death and deſtruction. And therefore the wiſe man ſaith, that eaſe ſlaieth the fooliſh, and the proſperitie of fooles deſtroyeth them. Where by fooles hee vnderſtandeth ſinners and wicked men, who abuſe their proſperity, by ſetting their hearts vpon it, louing and truſting in it more than in God, and ſtrengthening themſelues thereby to commit all manner of ſinne and wickedneſſe. So that worldly men enioying proſperitie, and taking all their delight and felicitie in it, are not vnfitly compared to little infants, who ſit at the hole of the Aſpe, and plaie with the Cockatrice, whoſe paſtime is their ruine, and their pleaſure death. Or like the child playing with the fire; who no ſooner toucheth it with his finger but is burnt, and changeth his ſport into teares and crying; ſauing that herein they are much more fooliſh than little children, for they feeling the ſmart doe euer after dread the fire; but theſe being often burned with the bright ſhining flames of worldly proſperitie, are not warned, nor made more warie by their owne harmes, but as being beſotted in their loue, they ſtill imbrace their ruine, and hunt after that which moſt hurteth them; like vnto the fooliſh flye, which is ſo delighted with the light of the candle, that it regardeth not the heate of the flame, but burning one legge after another, taketh no warning till he be wholly deſtroyed and conſumed. And ſo doth the doting loue of theſe fond worldlings bereaue them not onely of all religion, but alſo of the vſe of reaſon; yea it ſo ſtupifieth the ſenſes that they are deafe to all admonition; inſenſible of their owne ſmart, and in no poſſibility of being ruled, and gouerned, ordered, or contained by any Law: in which reſpect Chryſoſtome compareth them to ſuch a man, as dwelling with a faire maide whom he fondly affecteth, is by ſtrict order inioyned, that hee preſume not to looke vpon her with laſciuious and wanton glances; a thing to him no leſſe vnpleaſant than impoſſible.

Seneca.

Prou.1.32.

Chryſoſt.in Matth.11.ho-mil.41.

§.Sect.2. That the of proſperi is much dangerous than the of aduerſiti

But the great danger of worldly proſperitie will more plainly appeare, if wee doe but conſider, how farre it exceedeth the danger of the ſtate oppoſed thereunto, aduerſitie and affliction. For whereas affliction being an open enemie, terrible in appearance, and making ſhew at the firſt ſight of all his forces, and ſometimes of more than hee hath, ſetting before vs ſhadowes, in ſtead of ſubſtantiall enemies, doth make vs more carefull and watchfull to prepare and arme our ſelues; that we may make reſiſtance: Proſperitie is a ſecret traitor, which hideth hatred and hoſtility, vnder the vizard of loue and friendſhip, and thereby maketh vs ſo retchleſſe and ſecure, that in ſtead of oppoſition, we are ready to receiue this ſerpent into our boſome, and when hee incountreth vs with all his forces, ſo bewitched we are with the pleaſing ſight of this glorious enemy, that wee cleere all the paſſages, and ſet wide open the gates of our ſoules, to giue him entertainment, voluntarily offering our ſelues to digge in his mines, and in moſt ſlauiſh manner to row in his galleys, ſo as we may be aſſured to enioy his company. And the reaſon hereof is, becauſe hee deceiueth vs with his treacherie: for at his firſt comming he diſplaieth not his bloody enſigne, but ſetteth vp a flagge of friendſhip hee aſſaulteth vs not with open force and violence, nor marcheth againſt vs in a terrible and hoſtile manner, but like a ſubtile ſerpent he cunningly glideth and inſinuateth himſelfe into our companie; neither doth he as a martiall enemie ſtrike at vs with downe right blowes, but rather like a craftie witch hee beſotteth vs with his pleaſing charmes, and with cunning inchauntments, before hee conquereth vs, hee maketh vs willing to be ouercome. Hee doth incline, and not conſtraine, perſwade, and not conquere, or rather conquereth by perſwading; and moſt forcibly conſtraineth by mouing and inclining. Hee doth not vſe againſt vs any outward terrible forces when he doth beſiege vs, but (Simon like) with bewitching eloquence, and counterfeit gifts, hee allureth vs to breake downe the wals of our ſtrength, and with our owne hands to make a cleere paſſage for our owne ouerthrow. He doth not when he commeth to execution, vſe the dreadfull Sword, but rather ſweet & wel-taſting poyſons, which hurt with delight, and whileſt they ſeeme to nouriſh, caſt vs into a Lethargie or dead ſleep of deep ſecurity. Finally, he inflicteth on vs no grieſly wounds, nor bringeth vs to our end by a foule death; but as it were tickleth vs to death with inueighing pleaſures, making vs moſt to laugh when we are moſt tormented, and in a Chariot of Gold, ſtrawed with Roſes, he ſwiftly carrieth vs into Hell.

. Sect. 3.
we are carefully heed of world
...
...

Let vs therefore learne to contemne and hate the World our wicked enemy, as well when hee fawneth as when hee frowneth, when he allureth by flattery and deceit, as when he conſtraineth by force and violence: for though he be then more amiable in view, yet is he no leſſe malicious in truth; and becauſe hee is then leſſe ſuſpected, hee is much more dangerous, as hauing better opportunitie to vſe all his forces and to effect all his malicious deſignes. Why then, alaſſe, ſhould we giue eare to the Worlds flatteries? Why ſhould we beleeue this diſſembling Ioab who will mortally ſtab vs, whileſt hee profeſſeth friendſhip, and offereth in kindneſſe to embrace and kiſſe vs? why ſhould we liſten to this ſweet ſinging Syren, ſeeing hee bewitcheth in delighting, and maketh vs leape into the Sea of deſtruction? why ſhould his flattering perſwaſions joyned with Crocodile teares, moue vs, ſeeing hee either weepeth for joy to thinke on his pray, or for ſpite becauſe his hopes are ſo long deferred? why ſhould the glorious beautie of his golden Cup allure vs, ſeeing we know that the potion within it is full of deadly poyſon, which whoſoeuer drinke ſhall eternally periſh? why ſhould we be moued with his inticing gifts to admire his kindneſſe, ſeeing by theſe baits hee allureth vs to ſwallow the hookes of ſinne, and offereth theſe carnall toyes and earthly trifles, no leſſe vaine in themſelues, than momentany in their continuance, that hee may coozen vs in the exchange, mouing vs to giue for them the precious jewels of Gods graces, and our heauenly patrimony in his Kingdome. To this purpoſe one fitly ſpeaketh: How great things (ſaith hee) doth the world ſpeake vnto thee? How great things doth it clamour behind thee to intice thee to looke backe, that is to ſay, that thou mayſt place thy hope in things preſent (if at leaſt they may be ſaid to be preſent, which are alwayes moueable and mutable) and mayſt turne thy mind from that which Chriſt hath promiſed, and not yet giuen (but will giue becauſe he is faithfull) and reſt thy hopes vpon this neuer reſting and periſhing world? Whereof it is that God mixeth bitterneſſe with the ſweetneſſe of earthly felicitie, that we may ſeeke after another felicitie, whoſe ſweetneſſe will not deceiue vs. And in another place: O world (ſaith hee) filthy, fraudulent and treacherous; art thou not much more dangerous when thou art kind, than when thou art troubleſome? art thou not much more to be feared whileſt thou allureſt, than whileſt thou deſpiſeſt? art thou not much more odious whileſt thou diſſembleſt loue, than when thou profeſſeſt mortall hatred? To the ſame purpoſe ſpeaketh that learned Idiote; Although (ſaith hee) euery eſtate is to bee feared, yet rather the proſperous eſtate than the afflicted, becauſe this, whileſt it rageth, informeth and teacheth vs; the other whileſt it flattereth, ſeduceth vs; this ſharpneth a mans ſight, but the other maketh him ſtarke blind. O my God, exceedingly art thou incenſed againſt that ſinner, vnto whom thou permitteſt all things to ſucceed according to his wiſh, and afterwards makeſt him to beare deſerued puniſhment. Let vs therefore be alwayes watchfull ouer our ſelues, but eſpecially when the World fawneth vpon vs in the time of proſperitie, for it is more dangerous being our friend, than being our enemy, and more to bee taken heed of when it inticeth vs to loue it, than when it forceth vs to contemne it; for it ſmileth that it may rage, it flattereth that it may betray vs, it inticeth that it may kill vs, and exalteth that it may ouerthrow vs. Although therefore this dangerous Sea looketh ſmooth, and as it were ſmiling vpon thee, like a ſtanding water, and hath ſcarce a wrinkle raiſed on it by the winde; yet this large plaine hath great hils, the danger is within included, within the enemy lurketh. Weigh therefore your anchors, hoiſe vp your ſailes, let the croſſe be faſtned to the ſaile-yard, for this calme will proue a tempeſt.

...ent.
...in Philos.
...1.

O munde immunde fallax & proditor, nunquid non periculoſior es blandus quàm moleſtus? Aug. ſerm. de fallacia mundi, tom. 10. ſer. 31.

Jdiota inter orthodoxogr. lib. de patient. vera contemplatione, cap. 1.

August. Epiſt. 144. tom. 2.

Arridet mundus vt ſæuiat, blanditur vt fallat, illicit vt occidat, extollit vt deprimat; Cyprian. Hieronym. ad Heliodorum, tom. 1. pag. 3.

§. Sect. 4. The fruits of affliction much better then of proſperitie.

But how farre the ſtate of proſperitie is more dangerous & pernicious than the ſtate of aduerſitie, it may hereby more cleerly appeare; in that whereas affliction commonly maketh vs carefull of our wayes, increaſeth Gods ſpirituall graces, cauſeth vs to bee more reſpectiue of our dutie, and either preuenteth or mortifieth our ſinnes: Proſperitie moſt vſually worketh in vs the contrary effects; for it makes vs proud, inſolent, forgetfull of God, and of all duties which wee owe vnto him, it choketh and extinguiſheth, or at leaſt cooleth and abateth the heate and vigour of all grace and vertue in vs; and as the Iuy, whileſt it embraceth the Oake, ſucketh the ſap from the roote, and in time maketh it to rot and periſh; ſo worldly proſperitie killeth vs with kindneſſe, whileſt it ſucketh from vs the ſap of Gods graces, and ſo maketh our ſpirituall growth and ſtrength to decay and languiſh; neither doe men euer almoſt ſuffer an eclypſe of their vertues and good parts, but when they are in the full of worldly proſperitie. And as it ſtayeth our courſe in godlineſſe, and quencheth our vertues, ſo alſo it increaſeth our corruptions, corrupteth our manners, and maketh vs prone to fall into all ſin, if we be but a little touched with the leaſt tentation. And as the fertile ſoile being more fat and ſlippery, is apter to giue a fall to thoſe that walke vpon it, than that which is grauelly and barren; ſo this rich and fruitfull ground of proſperitie is much more ſlippery, than the barren heaths of aduerſitie and affliction, and not one of a thouſand doth goe long vpon it, but he catcheth many down-fals, not only into ſinne, but alſo into danger and puniſhment which border faſt vpon it. To this purpoſe one of the Ancients ſpeaketh fitly, that abundance of proſperitie is a notable baite to draw vs vnto ſinne, for it puffeth vs vp with pride, and maketh vs to forget the Authour of our welfare. And in this reſpect another ſaith, that felicitie is more to be feared than miſery, ſeeing miſery for the moſt part bringeth good fruit, from the bitter roote of tribulation; whereas felicitie corrupteth the ſoule with peruerſe ſecuritie, and maketh way for Satan the tempter. By which it appeareth that our danger is farre more when the World allureth vs with the baits of proſperitie, than when it threatneth and afflicteth vs with trouble and aduerſitie: from whence an ancient Father obſerueth, that Chriſt comming into the World that hee might ſhew vs the way to Heauen, both by his doctrine and example, made choice rather of the afflicted way, than of the faire paſſage of worldly proſperitie, that we might follow his ſteps, as being farre the ſafeſt way to bring vs to our heauenly Countrie. Our Sauiour Chriſt (ſaith hee) might by beſt right haue raigned ouer them as King, whom himſelfe had created: but becauſe he therefore appeared in the fleſh, that he might not only redeeme vs with his Paſſion, but alſo might teach vs by his conuerſation, ſhewing himſelfe an example for vs to follow, he refuſed to be made a King, and contrariwiſe voluntarily offered himſelfe to ſuffer on the Croſſe; hee auoided the glory of regiment, and embraced the puniſhment of a ſhamefull death; to this end, that his members might hereby learne, to flee the Worlds fauours, and little to feare his threats and terrors, to loue aduerſitie for the Truth ſake, and fearing proſperitie to auoid it; becauſe this oftentimes defileth the heart with ſwelling pride, and that helpeth to purge it by repentance. In that the mind doth exalt it ſelfe, by this after it is thus exalted, it is againe humbled; In that a man forgetteth himſelf, in this whether he will or no, he is forced to remember that which he had forgottẽ; in that good things before done periſh, in this faults committed long agoe are cleanſed and purged. For oftentimes, with the tutillage of aduerſitie, the heart is kept downe vnder diſcipline, whereas if it ruſh vp to the ſterne of gouernment, forthwith it is changed in pride through vſe of vaine glory.

Ambroſ. de Interpell.lib. 2,cap.5.

Aug enarrat. in Pſal.67.

Gregor. paſtoral.curæ,1.par. cap.3.

§.Sect.
The grea ger of p ritie ſhe by exam of former ages.

But this may yet more plainly appeare if we conſider the effects of both, in the examples as well of former ages, as of our owne times. For how difficult, and almoſt impoſſible it is to walke in this Sun-ſhine of proſperitie and not to bee tanned, to breathe this infected aire and not to be corrupted with noyſome and carnall luſts, it is euident both on the one ſide, by the huge multitudes of thoſe who in abuſing it, haue beene abuſed by it; and on the other ſide, by the exceeding raritie and paucitie of thoſe, who by the good vſe thereof, haue beene made more vertuous, and better fitted for the ſeruice of God. For if you take a computation of both, you ſhall find a greater diſparitie betweene them in their number, than betweene the ſeruants of God and the ſeruants of Baal, according to Elias account; the one exceeding the Starres in the multitude, the other being as rare as blacke Swans, vnleſſe we will reckon of ſome few, who had their proſperitie tempered with a great meaſure of affliction, which as an Antidote expelled the poyſon of the other, and like a cold froſt nipping their rankneſſe, made them to become more fruitfull. How many haue wee read and heard of, that haue valiantly reſiſted the aſſaults of aduerſitie, and haue patiently endured pouertie, and that which is worſe, loſſe of wealth, ſickneſſe and diſeaſes, baniſhment, and impriſonment, yea, death it ſelfe, and horrible tortures, much worſe than death? But ſhew mee enow to intitle a number, of thoſe who haue by worldly proſperitie, riches, honours, and pleaſures, beene made more religious and zealous in Gods ſeruice, more vertuous, wiſe, humble, temperate, and more carefull and watchfull ouer their wayes, that they might not offend God the Authour of their wel-fare. Yea ſhew mee almoſt the man, that hath not by worldly proſperitie beene made worſe, more forgetfull of God, more negligent in Chriſtian duties, and vicious in his whole courſe and conuerſation. Whereas contrariwiſe a whole age were too little to reckon vp thoſe who haue come out of the fire of affliction more purified, profited vnder this Schoolemaſter, and by theſe fatherly chaſtiſements haue increaſed in their loue towards God, & in their care to pleaſe him by their holy obedience.

§.Sect.
The grea
ference b tweene t

Yea, let vs if you will obſerue the ſame men, and you ſhall ſee them not the ſame, but exceedingly differing from themſelues in theſe different eſtates: looke vpon Saul in his meane condition, and you ſhall ſee him modeſtly hiding himſelfe, as vnworthy to be King; but being once ſeated in the thron, & ſwelled with drinking this royal poiſon, how proud he is and inſolent, diſobedient and rebellious, louing his Kingdome better than his God, and againſt his knowledge and conſcience, making warre with Heauen, rather than he would not haue it continued to him and his poſteritie, though he were iuſtly depoſed for his ſinne. See alſo how in the entrance into his raigne hee ſpareth his enemies, and deliuereth offenders from deſerued puniſhments, but afterwards with deadly & implacable malice perſecuteth his friends, and tyrannically murthereth the guiltleſſe and innocent. But if worldly proſperitie were only powerfull with wicked worldlings, it were no great wonder: ſee therefore how it hath alſo preuailed againſt Gods Saints. Behold holy Dauid, who in his afflicted eſtate exceeded all in Pietie, and was eſteemed by God worthy that prayſe, to be pronounced a man according to Gods owne heart; how fouly hee was foiled with eaſe and proſperitie, and after many famous victories, now enjoying ſecure peace, was aſſaulted and vanquiſhed with his owne luſts. See here his great humilitie, comparing himſelfe to a dead Dogge and a Flea; and there (not content with the Royalties of a Kingdome, vnleſſe hee knew ouer how many hee commanded) enjoyning, yea, forcing in pride of heart, his ſeruant Ioab to number the people. In this conſider his tenderneſſe and pious mercie, ſauing his enemy when hee had him in his power, his conſcience checking him for cutting the lap of his garment, when he ſpared his throate; but in that, murthering his faithfull and well deſeruing Souldier, for no other fault but becauſe his Wife was too beautifull for a Subject, yea rather than hee would not haue him diſpatched, adjoyning others of his innocent ſeruants in the cruell Maſſacre. Which bloudy ſinne he was now able to digeſt without remorſe for a long ſpace, and ſtifly to ſtand vnder this intolerable waight, who before was very crooked with the farre lighter burthen of his infirmities. So looke vpon Ezechiah in his bed of ſicknes, and there you ſhal ſee him humbling himſelfe before God, and praying; and then behold him being recouered to his health, & you ſhall find him glorying in his wealth, & in pride of heart boaſting of his treaſures.

And if theſe ſingle victories ouer theſe great Worthies doe not ſufficiently ſhew the ſtrength of this enemy; ſee what conqueſts this worldly proſperitie hath made of whole Nations: and to ſay nothing of heatheniſh people, nor of the foure great Monarchies, who hauing conquered all others, were themſelues ouercome by their proſperitie, which firſt made them licentious in all manner of ſinne, and afterwards ſlaues to their conquered enemies; looke vpon the Iſrael of God, in the whole time of the Iudges and Kings, and you ſhall ſee them in the time of aduerſitie, religious and deuout, forſaking their ſinnes and ſeeking the Lord; but being reſtored and repoſſeſſed of Gods bleſſings, and flouriſhing in proſperitie, you ſhall find them polluting Gods Houſe, erecting Idolatry, forſaking God, and worſhipping Deuils. And this good Ezra obſerued and confeſſed, namely, that the people hauing obtained but a little breathing time from their afflictions, did take occaſion thereby to forſake Gods Commandements. And Nehemiah acknowledgeth that the people abounding with all plentie did eate, fill themſelues, and became fat, and then grew rebellious and diſobedient, committing all manner of ſinne and outrage; for which being deliuered into the hands of their enemies and afflicted, they humbled themſelues and cried vnto the Lord for mercy and deliuerance, but hauing againe obtained reſt, they returned to doe euill before him.

Ezra.9.8,10.

Nehem.9,25, 26,27,28.

§. Sect. 8.

The danger of proſperity ſhewed by the experience of theſe preſent times.

But vnto the experience of ancient ages, we may adde our owne times: for who ſeeth not that commonly where there is moſt affliction, there is alſo moſt deuotion, Religion, and obedience? and contrariwiſe where there is proſperitie and plentie of all things, there is moſt want of the feare of God, and greateſt penurie of grace and vertue. For the cleering of this, compare the Priſon with the Court, and the houſe of mourning with the houſe of feaſting and rejoycing; & whereas in the one you ſhall heare religious diſcourſes, Prayers to God, and inuectiues againſt the Worlds vanities; in the other you ſhall find nothing but riot and ribauldry, vaine jeſting and blaſphemous ſwearing, ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe, chambring and wantonneſſe, audacious boldneſſe in euill, and ſhamefaſtneſſe in nothing, vnleſſe at vnawares, being among their wicked Conſorts, they haue ſaid or done ſomething that ſauoureth of Religion; as though there were neither God, nor Deuill, Heauen nor Hell, and as though they had ſold themſelues vnto ſinne, and had exchanged the eternall joyes of Gods Kingdome, with the temporarie vanities of the World. But leſt this diſſimilitude of behauiour ſhould ſeeme to ariſe from the difference of the perſons, and not of their eſtates, let vs conſider the diuers effects of theſe two eſtates in the ſame men. And leauing Worldlings to the World, who ſeeth not that thoſe who make profeſſion of Religion, are exceedingly cooled in their zeale, and corrupted in their liues and conuerſation, through the proſperitie of the World? and that not only counterfeit Chriſtians, but euen ſuch as in their meaner and more poore eſtate, would rather haue ſuffe-

red

ted any perſecution, euen to the taking away of their liues, than they would diſgrace their profeſſion by offering any ſcandall, or bee drawne to ſlacken their pace in the way of godlineſſe, are by degrees ſo carried away with the inticing baites of proſperitie, that firſt they abate of their heate, and afterwards become luke-warme, or key-cold in their religious profeſſion and practice? And howſoeuer they retaine ſtill the name of Chriſtians, leſt they ſhould be branded with that dreadfull badge of Apoſtaſie, yet come to the touch-ſtone of their liues, and to their carriage and demeanour in their particular places and callings, and you ſhall find many of them, as worldly, couetous, and niggardſy in contributing to religious and charitable vſes, yea, as proud and vaine in apparell, as deceitfull in their dealings, and riotous in needleſſe and idle expenſes, as profeſſed Worldlings. So that whereas aduerſitie could not foile them with his ſharpeſt encounters, when he purpoſely bent all his forces againſt them; proſperitie hath ſubdued them, and made them captiues to the world, as it were in play, taking no great paines to obtaine the conqueſt.

§. Sect. 9.
The reaſons why proſperitie is ſo dangerous.

Now the reaſons why wee are ſo eaſily foiled and ouercome by worldly proſperitie, are, becauſe it doth ſoften and effeminate our minds, ſo as they can indure no labour, nor ſuſtaine the leaſt force and violence: for as the Lute ſtring being ſoftned in water ſwelleth much in bigneſſe, but loſeth all its ſtrength; ſo our hearts being moiſtned and mollified with theſe waters of proſperitie, exceedingly ſwell in pride, but in the meane time loſe all their ſtrength and Chriſtian fortitude, ſo as they cannot indure the leaſt incounter of an enemy. Or elſe it is becauſe it maketh vs retchleſſe and ſecure, ſo as wee fearing no aſſault neuer muſter vp our forces, that we may haue them in a readineſſe, and ſo being taken at vnawares, and vnprouided, we are not able to ſtand or make reſiſtance: for as the cold of aduerſitie gathers and vnites all the powers of the ſoule, and by vertue of this vnion inables them to make reſiſtance, when they are incountred; ſo the heat of proſperity diſſipating & ſcattering them, maketh them much more eaſie to bee ouercome. Or which is moſt probable, becauſe proſperitie puffeth men vp with pride, and making them leaue their dependancy on God, cauſeth them to truſt in themſelues and their owne ſtrength; and ſo God reſiſteth them in their pride and forſaketh them, who had firſt forſaken him; and therefore no maruell it is if being left of God, they be eaſily ouercome of the weakeſt enemy. Whereas contrariwiſe affliction maketh vs flee vnto God for helpe, and diſtruſting in our ſelues to relie on his power and promiſes; and ſo though we haue to deale with a mightie enemy, yet being ſhrouded vnder the ſhadow of his wings, we become ſafe through his protection.

§. Sect
That a g meaſure grace is red to th managing our proſp

And thus haue I manifeſted the great power of this Monarch, by the greatneſſe of his victories, and haue ſhewed how much more dangerous he is than affliction and perſecution. Whereby it appeareth, that a far greater meaſure of grace and Chriſtian reſolution is required, to beare and reſiſt the encounters of worldly proſperitie, than of the other which ſeemeth to fleſh and bloud ſo terrible and vnreſiſtable. For as it is much more intollerable to indure a tickling itch than a ſmarting paine; ſo it is much more impoſſible to retaine a Chriſtian conſtancy in the courſe of godlineſſe, when the World tickleth vs with this itch of proſperitie, than when we feele the ſmart and paine of troubles and afflictions; For where there is greateſt liberty of eſtate, there vertue hath the greateſt imployment. To this purpoſe one ſaith fitly, that it is a note of ſingular vertue, to ſtriue and contend with worldly felicitie, that it may neither allure, corrupt, nor ouerthrow vs, and great vnhappineſſe to bee ouercome of this earthly happineſſe.

Vbi plus ne licenti plus virtu negotium.
Aug. ſerm.
tom. 10.

§. Sect.
The we to keep a row wa uer our ſe in the tim proſperit

The conſideration whereof ſhould make vs to keepe a narrow watch ouer our ſelues, as at all other times, ſo eſpecially in our flouriſhing proſperitie, becauſe (as hath beene ſhewed) this enemy is much more dangerous, and wee, through our retchleſſe ſecuritie, and carnall loue of earthly things, much more vnable to make reſiſtance. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that when the perſecution of enemies ceaſeth, our heart is much more vigilantly to be obſerued: for in the time of peace whileſt men haue libertie to liue, we take (liberty) alſo to couet, & compaſſe our ambitious ends. The which was practiſed by another, as himſelfe profeſſeth: I feare no leſſe (ſaith hee) proſperitie than aduerſitie; for proſperitie maketh mee with its ſweetneſſe retchleſſe, and ſo deceiueth me; but aduerſitie, becauſe it hath ſome mixture of bitterneſſe, like vnpleaſant potions, makes me fearefull and ſuſpitious. Whoſe practice let vs alſo follow, caſting aſide carnall ſecuritie, and carefully arming our ſelues againſt the tentations of proſperitie, which are pleaſantly pernicious, and moſt hurt vs, when they moſt delight vs, and ſeeme to threaten leaſt danger. Now if we would know how to fight againſt this enemy, where our chiefe ſtrength lyeth, and what are the beſt weapons to bee vſed for the obtayning of victory, wee muſt conſider that the Chriſtian Champion muſt not vndertake this Combate, nor enter the Liſts in his own name, but (as David againſt Goliah) we muſt come out againſt him in the Name of the Lord; wee muſt not relye vpon our owne ſtrength, but vpon the Lords aſſiſtance, and vpon the power of his might,

Greg.
Homil.

Bernard.
dicit

through which alone we are inabled to ouercome; neither muſt our comfort and confidence be grounded vpon any conceit, that wee are able in our ſelues to ſubdue this enemy, but in this, that our Captaine Ieſus Chriſt hath ouercome him for vs. And this muſt make vs to flie vnto him by earneſt and effectuall prayers, deſiring the helpe and aſſiſtance of his holy Spirit, whereby we may be deliuered in the day of tentation, and may haue theſe worldly luſts killed and crucified in vs.

With which our prayers wee muſt ioyne a Chriſtian care to arme vs for the fight, not with Sauls carnall armour, for this being vnfit and cumberſome, will rather betray vs to the enemy, than defend vs from his force; but with the ſpirituall armour of a Chriſtian, euen the gifts and graces of Gods ſanctifying ſpirit. And being armed, wee muſt obſerue the beſt manner of fight for obtaining the victory: to which purpoſe let vs know, that we proclaime warre againſt proſperitie and worldly vanities, and manfully reſiſt in the combate of tentations, when we thruſt them out from hauing a chiefe place in our hearts, making them as ſlaues to follow and obey vs, and not as Lords to rule and raigne ouer vs. When as wanting them, wee doe not greatly deſire their company, much leſſe vſe wicked and vnlawfull meanes, for the obtaining of this vnprofitable ſocietie. When as hauing them wee doe not ſet our hearts vpon them, but eſteeme them baſe and contemptible, in compariſon of the rich jewels of Gods graces, and the externall joyes of his Kingdome; being contented to loſe them, rather than in the leaſt degree to hazard the other. And when we immoderately grieue not, but reſt well contented, if it bee the pleaſure of God to take them from vs; yea when wee our ſelues can willingly caſt them away for Chriſts ſake, and renounce and forſake them, when as they will not ſtand with our profeſſion and practiſe of Religion; being content to leaue all the Worlds glory, and to take vp our croſſe and follow Chriſt. In a word, we fight againſt worldly proſperitie, when we defie it; we kill it, when we contemne it, we obtaine the victory when we flee from it, and renounce it; as often as it is the Deuils Solicitour to perſwade vs vnto ſinne, or a Corriuall with God or his graces wooing vs for our hearts; or an alluring bait which inticeth vs to ſwallow the hook of tentations, and to giue entertainment to the wicked ſuggeſtions of the Deuill.

CHAP. VI.

Reaſons which may moue vs to contemne worldly proſperitie.

§. Sect. 1. Proſperitie ſeldome bettereth our ſpirituall eſtate.

NOw that wee may not thus ſet our hearts and affections immoderately vpon worldly proſperity, but may deſpiſe and contemne it when it commeth into compariſon with Gods fauour and grace, or the glory of his Kingdome, or allureth vs vnto ſinne; there are many arguments which may perſwade vs. As firſt, becauſe proſperity doth very ſeldome better our ſpirituall eſtate, and further our ſaluation, but almoſt alwayes maketh vs worſe, more prone vnto ſinne, and further off from God and godlineſſe. For as the Moone being in the full, is furtheſt diſtant from the Sunne, from whom ſhee receiueth her light and brightneſſe; ſo when wee are in the full of proſperity, wee are furtheſt off from God the Authour and fountaine of all our good. But of this I haue alreadie ſpoken.

§. Sect. 2. The meane eſtate is to bee preferred before great proſperitie.

Secondly, let vs know that the meane eſtate is much to bee preferred before the greateſt proſperity and abundant plenty of theſe earthly thinges, not only for the reaſons aboue alleaged, but alſo becauſe it is moſt ſafe and free from danger, as not being ſo low to bee trod vpon, nor ſo high as to bee alwayes ſeated in the eye of enuy; not ſo weake as to lie open to all oppreſſion, nor ſo mighty as to be made the marke of conſpiracies and ſecret treaſons. For as the low ſhrubs are made the prey of the beaſts to brouze vpon, and the ordinary fuell of the fire, and the higheſt trees are moſt ſubject to Lightning and Thunder, and expoſed aboue al others to the violence of euery tempeſt; whereas the trees of middle growth are free from both theſe dangers: ſo thoſe who are in the loweſt eſtate of pouerty, are often oppreſſed with wrong and injury, thoſe who are placed in the high top of worldly proſperity, are made more obnoxious to the rage of ſuperiour powers; being either had in jealouſie for their greatneſſe, as aſpiring too faſt, as though they would ouer-top them, or thought in reſpect of their abundance a fit bootie to ſeize vpon. And only the meane eſtate is moſt free from theſe extreame perils, being below enuy, and aboue contempt. And this the very Heathen man could diſcerne by the light of nature: It is (ſaith hee) the property of a great minde, to contemne great things, and to deſire ſufficiency and mediocrity, rather than abundance and ſuperfluity; for thoſe are profitable, and euen vitall, but thoſe as much as they abound and ouer-flow, hurt. So too much rankneſſe maketh the Corne to lie and rot, ſo boughs are broken with too much bearing, and too much fruitfulneſſe commeth not to ripeneſſe; and

Iob 12.5.

Magni animi eſt magna contemnere, & mediocria malle quam nimia; &c. Senec. Epiſt. 39.

the ſame happeneth to mens minds, which immoderate felicity burſteth, ſo as they are not only iniurious to others, but alſo to themſelues. Vnto this we may adde the wiſe Hagurs authority, as it is ſtrongly backed with his powerfull reaſons: Giue mee not (ſaith he) pouerty nor riches, but feed me with food conuenient for mee, leſt I bee full and deny thee, and ſay, who is the Lord? or leſt I be poore and ſteale, and take the Name of my God in vaine. The meane eſtate is therefore moſt to bee deſired, ſeeing it preſerueth vs from forgetfulneſſe of God, irreligion, and prophaneneſſe, which accompanieth proſperity, from the vſe of vnlawfull meanes to maintaine our ſtate, and from impatiency, murmuring and repining againſt God, to which we are tẽpted in pouerty & aduerſitie.

Prou.30.8.

§. Sect. 3. That proſperitie is but one of Gods ordinary gifts, which hee alſo beſtoweth on the wicked.

Thirdly, let vs conſider that this worldly proſperity is but one of Gods ordinary gifts, which is of no great excellency and worth, being compared with his rich jewels, his ſpirituall graces, and eternall joyes; as it may hereby plainly appeare, in that he ſcattereth them as common and triuiall trifles, amongſt his enemies, as well as his friends, and beſtoweth them as well on thoſe, who contemne and rebell againſt him, as vpon thoſe that loue and ſerue him; yea moſt commonly hee giueth to his children theſe earthly bleſſings with a ſtrait and ſparing hand, and affordeth them to ſtrangers and enemies in great plentie and abundance, both becauſe they are things of ſmall value, and therefore more fit to bee the wages of ſeruants and ſlaues, then the patrimony and portion of children: and alſo becauſe through our corruption, they are (as I haue ſhewed) baits to catch vs, and ſnares to entangle vs. And that God thus diſpenſeth of theſe earthly things, it may appeare plainly by euident places of holy Scripture: the holy man Iob ſaith, that the tabernacles of robbers doe proſper, and they are in ſafety which prouoke God, whom God hath enriched with his hand: and in another place he doth at large deſcribe the great proſperity of wicked men, in that they attained to old age, abundance of wealth, and enjoyed peace with immunitie from afflictions; in that all which they tooke in hand ſucceeded, and all about them proſpered, in that to their profits were joyned pleaſures, and both continued not only to themſelues euen to their death, but alſo to their children and poſterity. So the Pſalmiſt telleth vs that the wicked boaſteth that hee hath his owne hearts deſire, and that his wayes alwayes proſper and ſtandeth ſo firme in his owne conceit, that he can neither be moued, nor be in danger. Seeing therefore theſe worldly things are ſo common, baſe and contemptible, let not vs who are heires of all Gods promiſes eſteeme them worthy our loue, whereas Gods deſpiſed ſlaues, and traiterous enemies haue them in ſuch great abundance: but let vs fixe our hearts and affections vpon that heauenly inheritance which is prepared for vs, which being of infinite value, is worthy of our loue, as being that rich treaſure, which the Lord hath peculiarly reſerued as a patrimony for his owne children. And as we are exhorted, Let vs vſe this world as not ouer vſing, or abuſing it; that with his goods we may doe good, and not be made euill, becauſe in their owne nature they are good, neither are they giuen vnto men by any other then by him, who hath all power in heauenly and earthly things; the which hee hath giuen to good men, leſt they ſhould bee thought euill; and to euill men, leſt they ſhould be thought excellent, and gifts of greateſt value; and are taken from good men, that they may be tried, and from euill men, that they may be tormented. And in another place hee ſaith, that it ſeemed good to the diuine prouidence, to prepare for the time to come good things for the iuſt, which the vniuſt ſhall not enioy; and euils for the wicked, with which the good ſhall not be tormented: But hee would haue theſe temporall things, good and euill, common to both, that neither the good things ſhould be ouer greedily deſired, which the wicked alſo enioy, nor the euill things ſhould be diſhoneſtly and vnlawfully auoyded, the which are commonly incident to the good.

Iob 12.6.

Iob 21.7.10.16.

Pſal.10.3.5.6.

1.Cor.31.

Sic vtaris ho mundo tamq non vtens, vt bonis eius bo facias, non lus fias, &c.
Aug. Epiſt.ad
Bonifacium Epiſt.70.

Aug. de Ciu.
Dei, lib.1.c

§. Sect. 4. Worldly pro ſperity and heauenly h pineſſe ar dom be on the ſam men.

Fourthly, let vs remember that very rarely the ſame man is richly rewarded, both in earth and heauen, or enjoyeth the glory of the World, & the glory of Gods Kingdome, the treaſures of earth, and the treaſures of heauen; temporall pleaſures, and eternall joyes: I ſay rarely, leſt any ſhould deſpaire, and but rarely, and not often, leſt any ſhould preſume, and thinke that hee may ſecurely, and with eaſe enjoy both. So our Sauiour pronounceth them bleſſed that hunger now, for they ſhall be ſatisfied, and that weep now, for they ſhall laugh, and that are perſecuted now, for they ſhall richly be rewarded in heauen: But contrariwiſe he denounceth a woe againſt thoſe that be rich, becauſe they haue receiued their conſolation; and to thoſe that are full, for they ſhall hunger; and to thoſe that laugh, for they ſhall waile & weep: & elſewhere he telleth his Diſciples, that they ſhall weep and lament, and the world ſhall reioyce, that they ſhould ſorrow, but their ſorrowes ſhould be turned into ſuch ioy, as ſhould neuer be taken from them. And the Apoſtle telleth vs, that it is a righteous thing with God, to recompence tribulation to ſuch wicked worldlings as trouble his ſeruants; but to them that are troubled, reſt with the Saints, when the Lord Ieſus ſhall ſhew himſelſe from Heauen with his mighty Angels. And, who can doubt but that the Iudge of Heauen and Earth will judge righteous judgement? With this agreeth the ſaying of a Father, who bringeth in a worldling, demanding, whe-

Luke 6.
21.&c.

Iohn 16.
22.

2.Theſ.1.

ther a man might injoy reſt here, and reſt in Heauen; and maketh this anſwere: This is impoſſible, O man, and in the number of thoſe things which thou vainly hopeſt. It cannot be, it cannot be, I ſay, that he who hath liued in ſloth and ſecurity, and hath continually ſpent, euen all his dayes in worldly delights, and hath improuidently and negligently paſſed his time, that ſuch an one ſhould attaine that honour and glory which is reſerued in Heauen. To this purpoſe it is that the Scripture allotteth to euery one their portion, both the wicked and the godly; the wicked doe receiue theirs in this life, euen the pleaſures and proſperity of the World, but the godly theirs in the life to come, when hauing finiſhed their race, they ſhall receiue the crowne of glory. So the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that the men of the world haue their portion in this life, whoſe bellies God filleth with his hid treaſures: their children haue enough, and leaue the reſt of their ſubſtance for their children. But I (ſaith hee) will behold thy face in righteouſneſſe, and when I awake, I ſhall be ſatiſfied with thy Image. And our Sauiour deſcribing the ſtate of men both heere and in the life to come, in the perſons of Diues and Lazarus, diuideth to either his owne portion; to Diues, and with him to all pompous worldlings, coſtly apparell, delicious fare, and plenty of all things in this World, but eternall torments in the World to come: to Lazarus, and with him, to almoſt all the faithfull, pouertie heere, and a great meaſure of miſery and affliction; but after this life a large portion of eternall joy and bleſſedneſſe in Gods Kingdome. And leſt I might ſeeme to force the parable, you ſhall ſee that our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe doth purpoſely thus apply it, where hee bringeth in Abraham ſpeaking thus to the rich man; Sonne remember that thou in thy life time receiuedſt thy pleaſure (or as the wordes in the originall more emphatically ſignifie thy good things, or thy portion of good) and likewiſe Lazarus paines (or his portion of euils) now therefore (ſaith he) is he comforted, and thou art tormented. Which reaſon of Abraham being ſyllogiſtically framed, inferreth to worldlings a fearefull concluſion: Thoſe who in their life time liue in plentie and voluptuous pleaſures, ſhall bee tormented in Hellfire; and thoſe who patiently endure miſeries and afflictions, ſhall be in joy and bleſſedneſſe: but thou rich man liueſt in all plenty and voluptuous pleaſures, and Gods poore ſeruants patiently endure miſeries and afflictions; and therefore thou muſt be tormented in Hell, whereas they ſhall inherit the joyes of Heauen. And in truth what ſhew of hope haue theſe ſecure worldlings, that they ſhould be preferred before the deare ſeruants of God, or what reaſon haue they to imagine, that they ſhall haue a double portion in Gods gifts, both in this life, and in the life to come, when his owne children muſt be contented with a ſingle; though a moſt excellent part, and may ſeldome bee ſuffered to enjoy both heauenly glory, and worldly proſperity, vnleſſe it bee tempered and ſeaſoned vnto them with manifold croſſes and afflictions? Yea let them know, and knowing tremble, that the righteous Iudge of Heauen and Earth doth adminiſter righteous judgement; and becauſe there is none ſo bad, but haue in them ſome good naturall parts, ſome reſtrayning graces, and haue beene the inſtruments of doing ſomething which at leaſt hath had the appearance of good; therefore God being infinite in bountie, will not let any thing, that hath but a ſhew of goodneſſe goe vnrewarded, but giueth to worldlings for theſe good things in them, or done by them, temporall bleſſings and benefits, wherewith being rewarded to the full, and farre aboue their deſerts, they can expect no more, ſeeing they haue no part in Chriſts merits. Againe, becauſe there is none ſo good and holy, but they are blotted and ſtained with infirmities and imperfections: therefore the Lord being infinite in juſtice, doth not only puniſh theſe ſinnes in his owne deare Sonne, but doth alſo chaſtiſe and correct his faithfull ſeruants themſelues, that they may bee examples of his righteous judgements, and teach wicked Worldlings what they are to expect for their trayterous rebellion, and outragious ſinnes, when as Gods faithfull Seruants and deare Children, are ſo ſharply afflicted for their ſlips and ſmaller faults, which haue beene already fully puniſhed in their Sauiour. O that this were but well conſidered, and then would Worldlings haue little cauſe to be puffed vp with pride, becauſe they exceed others in worldly pompe and proſperity: then would all (who are not extreamely ſecure) when they are greatly aduanced in their worldly eſtate, carefully take heed that their ſpirituall eſtate bee not as much impaired, and feare leſt this temporall proſperity bee all the portion that euer they ſhall receiue: then would not thoſe who want theſe earthly benefits immoderately deſire them, and ſeeke vnlawfull meanes to attaine vnto them, but would reſt contented with their ſmall pittance and ſhort allowance, hopefully expecting to receiue their portion in the life to come: then would not thoſe that haue them, ſet their hearts vpon them, but would willingly part with them to good vſes, that in exchange they might haue the aſſurance of Gods loue, and their owne ſaluation, more certainly confirmed vnto them. And hauing this baſe and brazen money of worldly abundance come to their hand, they would not hoord and ſtill retaine it in their poſſeſſion, but part with it vpon the next good oc-ſeſt. de n,Conc.

a.pag.

17.14,15.

16.25.

Ier.25.29.

caſion, leſt death comming the value thereof ſhould bee cryed downe, and ſo become to be of no worth.

§. Sect. 5. Proſperity abuſed increaſeth their condemnation who abuſe it.

Laſtly, let vs conſider that worldly proſperitie immoderately loued, or otherwiſe abuſed, not only depriueth vs of our portion in our heauenly inheritance, but alſo procureth a portion for ſuch as thus abuſe it with Hypocrites in Hell, where there is weeping, wailing and gnaſhing of teeth; for wee vnto them that now laugh, for they ſhall not only ceaſe their mirth, but contrariwiſe ſhall waile and weepe: ſo that worldly mens plenty is their ſnare, and their proſperity their ruine, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh. Now if wee would alſo remember how prone wee are to this abuſe (as before I haue ſhewed) there would bee little reaſon, why wee ſhould greatly deſire this worldly proſperitie, if wee haue it not, or not feare it when wee haue it, and much leſſe that wee ſhould take more paines for the obtayning of it, than the rich treaſures of Gods Kingdome; or ſet our hearts vpon it with more feruent loue, being both baſe, momentany and dangerous, than vpon thoſe heauenly and eternall joyes which are prepared for vs in the World to come. And thus much ſhall ſuffice for thoſe arguments which may generally perſwade vs to contemne worldly proſperity, comming in compariſon with ſpirituall and heauenly things, and to flie and renounce it, when it is vſed as the Deuils, or the Worlds baite to allure vs vnto ſinne: vnto which many more might bee added; but that I reſerue them, and the more full and effectuall vrging of this point, till I come to ſpeake of the contempt of the chiefe parts of this proſperitie, namely the honours, riches and pleaſures of the World.

Luke 6.26.

Pſal. 69.22.

CHAP. VII.

Of morall and ciuill vertues, which are in Worldlings, and that they are to bee contemned being ſeuered from ſanctifying Grace.

§. Sect. 1. That ciuill vertues doe not benefit, but hurt thoſe that reſt in them.

WEE haue ſpoken in generall concerning the tentations of proſperity, and of the meanes whereby wee may reſiſt them: now wee will deſcend to more particulars, and intreat of the ſeuerall kindes of theſe tentations. To which purpoſe wee are to know that the tentations of proſperity may diuerſly bee diſtinguiſhed, in reſpect of the matter or ſubject of them from which they ariſe; for they are either inward, and in our ſelues, or outward in ſome externall worldly object. The inward eyther ariſe from ſome thing in our ſoules, or in our bodies; the tentations of the former kind reſpect, eyther vertues, or ſome other gifts and ornaments of the ſoule. By vertues I vnderſtand not thoſe which are truely Religious Graces and holy Duties joyned with the knowledge, loue, and feare of God; but thoſe Morall, Ethicall, and Ciuill Vertues, which are in a man vnregenerate before his Conuerſion, which may well bee reckoned as parts of Worldly proſperity, ſeeing there is no earthly comfort, nor Worldly happineſſe without them. The which in this Diſcourſe I purpoſe not to take ſtrictly, but to comprehend vnder this name the facultie with the function, the internall habit with the externall act and operation; all which in themſelues are good, as being the gifts of God, eyther which wee haue naturally and ordinarily beſtowed vpon vs in our Creation, or more extraordinarily wrought in vs by Gods Spirit, which may bee called peculiar gifts, if wee reſpect the former, becauſe they are not beſtowed vpon all that are vnregenerate; but are vſually by diuers called the common gifts of the Spirit, being oppoſed to ſanctifying and ſauing Graces, becauſe they are common to the Elect with the Reprobate. But howſoeuer they are good, as Gods gifts, and in their owne nature, yet they are not good in vs, becauſe they are imperfect and mingled with corruption; not good to vs, becauſe Sathan, the World, and our owne ſinfull Fleſh abuſing them, doe rayſe out of them a moſt dangerous tentation; namely that becauſe they excell all other worldly things, and wee excell in them the ordinary ſort of men, therefore wee muſt ſo dote on them, and ouer-weene their worth, as though our chiefe happineſſe conſiſted in them, neglecting in the meane time all ſanctifying Graces as needleſſe, becauſe theſe Morall and Ciuill Vertues are ſufficient for our Saluation. And thus the whole Sect of Stoickes were abuſed and deluded in ancient times, and herewith the Papiſts in our owne times are (though not quite blinded, yet) ſhrewdly bleered; and amongſt our ſelues many Worldlings, and vnregenerate men, are pittifully miſlead, euen to their vtter ruine and deſtruction; imagining that becauſe they excell the off-ſcourings of the World, deſperate Atheiſts, and prophane Ruffians, in Morall and Ciuill Vertue, and be louers of Iuſtice, Fidelity, Honeſty, Temperance, and the like, that they may hereby be approued of God in this life, and that after they may ſerue as a ladder, whereby they may aſcend into Heauen. In the meane time contenting themſelues to be without all ſanctifying graces, as the true knowledge of God, faith, repentance and the like.

ſ. 3. s requi-n vertue on that be truly and ac-le, firſt e perſon generate ngrafted Chriſt.

But that all ſuch may ceaſe to bee proud of theſe good parts, to ſet their hearts vpon them, to ouervalue them aboue Gods ſauing graces, and to place in them their chiefe happineſſe, as though they were ſufficient for their ſaluation; and contrariwiſe, that they may learne to contemne and baſely to eſteeme of them, in compariſon of Chriſt and his righteouſnes applied by faith: let them know that though their vertues, duties, and actions bee glorious in the ſight of men, yet they are not acceptable vnto God, nor ſufficient for the ſauing of their ſoules. Yea and that they are ſo farre from that high degree of excellencie which they dreame of, that they deſerue not the name of good. For that a vertue, duty, or action may be truely good, it is required, that it be good not onely for the matter and ſubſtance of it, but alſo that it bee well done: for, as Auſtine ſaith, a man may doe a good thing, and not doe well in doing it, because he faileth in his end and manner of doing. Now that it may bee thus well done there are diuers conditions required. And theſe either reſpect the perſons indued with theſe vertues, and doing theſe duties, or the ground and foundation whereon they are built, and the fountaine whence they flow, or elſe the ends which are chiefly and mainly propounded to them. Firſt for the perſon it is required, that he who is to doe a good action be ingrafted into Chriſt Ieſus, and be a true and liuely member of his body; for vnleſſe we be in him, wee cannot bring forth any fruites of vertue or Chriſtian duties: as himſelfe plainly telleth vs: Abide (ſaith he) in me and I in you: as the branch cannot beare fruite of it ſelfe, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye except ye abide in me. I am the vine, yee are the branches: he that abideth in me and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit; for without mee yee can doe nothing. So the Apoſtle ſaith, that we are Gods workmanſhip created in Chriſt Ieſus vnto good workes. It is therefore the roote Ieſus Chriſt from which we ſucke the ſap of vertue and goodneſſe whereby wee liue, and bring forth the fruits of godlineſſe. It is this Sunne of righteouſnes, from which we borrow all our light of grace and vertue: for whatſoeuer goodneſſe there is in vs, it is either his inherent righteouſneſſe and holines imputed and belonging vnto vs, as being members of his body; or elſe wrought in vs by his Spirit of ſanctification dwelling in vs, which alſo wee haue by vertue of that vnion which is betweene vs and him. To this purpoſe Bernard ſpeaketh fitly: what (ſaith he) haue you to do with vertues, which are ignorant of Chriſt the vertue of God? Where, I pray you, is true wiſedome, but in the doctrine of Chriſt? where is true righteouſnes, but in the mercie of Christ? where is true temperance, but in the life of Chriſt? where is true fortitude, but in the paſſion of Chriſt? Therefore thoſe alone are to be accounted wiſe who are inſtructed in his doctrine; thoſe alone iuſt, which through his mercie haue obtained the pardon of their ſins; thoſe alone temperate, who ſtudy to imitate his life; and thoſe only indued with true fortitude, who in aduerſitie doe couragiouſly embrace his leſſons of patience. So that a man laboureth in vaine to attaine vnto vertues, if he thinke they may be hoped for elſewhere, than from the Lord of vertue, &c.

...Bern.
...ſup.Can...ſerm.22.

Againe, the perſon being in Chriſt, muſt through faith in him bee reconciled vnto God; for the perſon muſt be accepted before the vertue or duty can be acceptable; it being otherwiſe impoſſible that the actions of an enemie ſhould bee well eſteemed by him to whom hee is an enemy, eſpecially when many iuſt exceptions may be taken againſt them. Now wee are all naturally before we are ingrafted into Chriſt by faith the children of wrath, and enemies vnto God, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, and therefore nothing in vs can be pleaſing to God whileſt wee remaine in the ſtate of vnbeliefe.

Eph.2.3.
Rom.5.10.
Col.1.21.

Finally, before wee can bring forth any good fruites of vertue, and holy duties, it is neceſſarie that wee be firſt regenerate and ſanctified with his ſpirit, and our hearts muſt bee purified by faith, before they can worke by loue; for ſeeing all vertues and graces are the fruites of Gods ſanctifying ſpirit, therefore all thoſe who are not indued with this ſpirit, are deſtitute alſo of all true grace and vertue. So our Sauiour telleth vs that wee muſt firſt be good trees of Gods owne planting, before we can bring forth any good fruites. A good tree (ſaith he) cannot bring forth euill fruit, neither a corrupt tree bring forth good fruite. And in another place: Either make (ſaith he) the tree good, and his fruite good, or elſe make the tree euill, and his fruit euill; for the tree is knowne by his fruite. To the ſame purpoſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that to the pure all things are pure, but to them that are defiled and vnbeleeuing, is nothing pure, but euen their mindes and conſciences are defiled. Neither in truth is it poſſible that wee ſhould doe any thing truly good, and acceptable vnto God, before we are regenerate and borne againe of water and of the ſpirit, ſeeing wee are ſo corrupted and diſabled through originall ſinne, that all our [a] imaginations are only euill, and that continually, that we cannot ſo much as [b] thinke a good thought, nor [c] will that which is good, but as we are inabled thereunto by Gods ſpirit. For we are not onely ſicke, but (as the Apoſtle ſaith) [d] ſtarke dead in our ſinnes, vntill by his quickning grace wee are reuiued; and therefore as vnable naturally to doe any ſpirituall and ho-

Act.15.9.
Gal.5.6.21.22.
Matth.7.18.
Matth.12.33.
Tit.1.15.

[a] Gen.8.21.
[b] 2.Cor.3.5.
[c] Phil.2.13.
[d] Ephe.2.1.

ly dutie, as the dead man is to doe the workes of the liuing. Seeing then theſe ciuill worldlings wanting faith, and the ſpirit of God, are not in Chriſt, and conſequently are not reconciled to God, nor regenerate by his ſpirit; therefore in vaine doe they flatter themſelues with an opinion of their morall vertues, and ciuill honeſtie, in vaine doe they dote vpon, and proudly boaſt of their naturall good parts: in vaine doe they reſt vpon theſe meanes for their ſaluation, ſeeing their vertues are but falſe and counterfeite, and their workes hauing no true goodneſſe in them, are not accepted in the ſight of God.

§. Sect. 3. Our vertues muſt ariſe from the true worſhip of the true God.

The ſecond condition, is that theſe vertues and duties haue a good foundation and fountaine, from which they ariſe and ſpring: as firſt generally, that they ariſe from the true worſhip of the only true God, performed in vprightneſſe of heart, with a good conſcience, without which euen thoſe actions of Gods ſeruice which himſelfe hath commanded, are odious and lothſome vnto him: ſo when the Iſraelites offered outward duties and failed in theſe, the Lord ſaith vnto them by his Prophet, Who required this at your hands to treade in my courts? bring mee no moe oblations in vaine; incenſe is an abomination vnto me: I cannot ſuffer your new moones, nor Sabbaths, nor ſolemne dayes (it is iniquitie) nor ſolemne aſſemblies: my ſoule hateth your new moones, and your appointed feaſts, they are a burthen vnto me, I am wearie to beare them. And in another place hee ſaith, that he that killed a bullocke was as he that ſlew a man, hee that ſacrificed a ſheepe, as if he cut off a dogges necke; hee that offred an oblation, as if he offred ſwines blood, he that burned incenſe, as if he bleſſed an idoll, &c. Not becauſe theſe things were not good in themſelues, for God had enioyned them, but becauſe they were not ioyned with Gods true worſhip, but done with wicked and hypocriticall hearts, and in a cuſtomable and formall manner, without any loue, faith or feare of God. To this purpoſe Ambroſe ſaith, that without the worſhip of the true God, that is ſinne which ſeemeth to be vertue; neither can any man pleaſe God, without God: and he that pleaſeth not God, whom pleaſeth he but himſelfe and the diuell? So that there is no true vertue out of the Church, where the onely true God is worſhipped after a true manner.

Eſa 1.12.13.14

Eſay 66.3.

Sine cultu veri Dei etiam quæ virtus videtur eſſe peccatum eſt; nec placere vllus Deo ſine Deo poteſt, &c. Ambroſ. de vocat. Gent. lib. 1. cap. 3.

§. Sect. 4. Our vertues muſt be grounded on true godlineſſe. Pietas eſt fundamentum omnis virtutis. Ambroſ. de offic. li. 1. cap. 27.

More eſpecially there is required that theſe vertues and good duties, doe proceed from ſome chiefe fundamentall vertues; as firſt from true godlineſſe, for pietie and honeſty muſt be ioyned together, and where the one is wanting, there the other is hypocriticall and counterfeit: neither is it poſſible that there ſhould bee any ſound iuſtice, honeſtie or loue ſhewed towards men, vnleſſe it proceed from religious duty firſt performed vnto God. Hereof it is that pietie is called the foundation of vertue, becauſe whatſoeuer vertue is not built vpon it, like a houſe without a foundation, it is ſubject to ruine, when thoſe weake props of worldly reſpects are pulled away. As for example, he that is vertuous becauſe hee is vnder gouernment, will ceaſe to be vertuous when he is ſet at libertie; hee that imbraceth vertue that thereby hee may be had in honour, is ready to abandon it and become vitious, when it will ſtand with his credit: he that is faithfull for hire, will for hire become treacherous: but he that entertaineth vertue in pietie and dutie towards God, will conſtantly perſeuere in it, when all worldly reſpects diſcourage him, becauſe the foundation is immoueable, and cannot be ouerthrowne. And heereof it is that the leaſt graines of vertue ioyned with godlines, are iuſtly preferred before the greateſt meaſure, and higheſt degree which is ſeuered from it; becauſe it is both conſtant and vnchangeable, and alſo is continually in growth, whereas the other is ſubject to decline and vaniſh, when the fuell thereof faileth. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that although that vertue be neuer ſo much praiſed, which being ſeuered from true godlineſſe, doth tend to the aduancement of men vnto the glory of the world; yet it is not to be compared to the ſmalleſt beginnings of vertue in the Saints, all whoſe hope is firmely ſeated in the grace and mercie of the true God.

Princip vincitur fide. Se Agamem 18.

Aug. de ci- uit. Dei, lib. cap. 19.

§. Sect. Our vert muſt ariſe true cha Lib. de & libera 1. Tim. 1. 5.

Secondly, they muſt ariſe from true charitie and vnfained loue of God, and our neighbours for Gods ſake: neither is there any good fruit which ſpringeth not from the roote of charitie, as Auguſtine ſpeaketh. And this the Apoſtle maketh the groundworke of all obedience, where hee ſaith, that the end of the Commandement is loue out of a pure heart, and a good conſcience, and faith vnfained. In the ſame reſpect hee ſaith, that loue is the fulfilling of the Law, becauſe it is the fountaine of all dutie towards God and man; which who ſo hath ſpringing in him, from him iſſue and flow the ſtreames of all obedience; but if the fountaine faile, then the ſtreames are quickly dried vp: neither is there any other vertue or dutie acceptable to God, or of any worth and excellencie, vnleſſe it be ioyned with this charitie, as the Apoſtle doth ſhew at large. With this agreeth the ſaying of Bernard, Charity (ſaith he) is the root of all vertues, without which, whatſoeuer we do it doth not profit vs, &c. And a little after; there carnall concupiſcence raigneth, where there is no place to diuine charitie, &c. And againe, ſo great is the vertue of charity, that where it is wanting, all other vertues are had in vaine.

Rom. 13. 8.

1. Cor. 13. Bernard. de modo bene viuendi. ſerm.

Thirdly

Sect.6. vertues be grounon true wledge.

Thirdly, all our vertues and duties muſt be grounded on the true knowledge of God, and his will reuealed in his word; for wee muſt not take vertues vpon the worlds commendation, nor performe duties which haue no other ground than our owne wils, inuentions, and good meanings, for ſo may we intertaine vice for vertue, and offer to God for duty, that which he hath expreſly condemned as wicked, idolatrous and ſuperſtitious; but wee muſt ſearch into his word and reuealed will, declining therefrom, neither on the right hand nor on the left: for as one ſaith, Perfect vertue is not without the knowledge of the truth, nor the truth without the loue of vertue. Blind deuotion therefore will not profit vs, neither will it auaile vs, that we run on headlong in an ignorant zeale: for as Auſtine ſaith, he that runneth moſt ſwiftly, being out of the way, is ſo much the more miſerable, becauſe the faſter he runneth, the further he is from his iorneyes end. And therefore it is better to halt in the way of truth, than to runne apace in the way of error, yea it is poſſible that in the feruencie of our deuotion, being ignorant of the truth, wee may be perſecuters of it, and thoſe who profeſſe it; as wee may ſee in the example of Paul, who in his blind zeale perſecuted the members of Chriſt, and afterwards was himſelfe perſecuted out of the ignorant deuotion of certaine honorable women. So that if wee haue not the light of the knowledge of God and his truth to guide vs, in our good meanings and beſt deuotions, wee may bee no better than cruell perſecuters, and conſequently ſubject to Gods wrath, to which all the ignorant are liable; for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt Ieſus ſhall ſhew himſelfe from heauen with his mighty Angels, in flaming fire, rendring vengeance vnto them that do not know God, and which obey not the Goſpell of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

…ſecta virtus
…ſine cog-
…e verita-
…ec veritas
…amore vir-
…is.
…nard.ſer.2.
…Salue re-
…a.
…uſt.præfat.
…Pſalm.
…13,50.
…1.6,11.
…heſ.1.8.

Sect.7. vertues be ioyned
…true
…h.

Fourthly, all our vertues and good duties muſt bee ioyned with faith, as the Apoſtle requireth, for without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, becauſe whatſoeuer is not done of faith is ſinne. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that if faith be not firſt beget in our hearts, other vertues cannot be good, although they ſeeme good, &c. becauſe it is written, that without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God. Where we are not to vnderſtand an hiſtoricall faith, whereby we know and beleeue, that vertue which we embrace, or that dutie which we performe, is warranted and commanded in the word of God, but a true liuely and iuſtifying faith, whereby we lay hold vpon Chriſt and all his benefits for our iuſtification. For without this neither our perſons, nor workes are accepted of God: not our perſons, because we are enemies, vntill by Chriſt we be reconciled; not our vertues, duties, and workes, becauſe they are imperfect and ſtained with our corruptions, and therefore they cannot indure the ſight of Gods iuſtice, till their imperfection bee couered with Chriſts perfect righteouſneſſe, and their pollution cleanſed and waſhed away with his moſt precious blood. So that whoſoeuer are not endued with this faith haue no true vertues, but counterfeit ſhadowes, their beſt actions are but glorious ſinnes; which howſoeuer they are magnified among men, yet are they odious and abhominable in the ſight of God. And to conclude, when they are moſt iuſtified in the world, they are in the ſtate of death and condemnation; for the Apoſtle ſaith, that all, without exception, ſhall be damned which beleeue not the truth; which doome is ſo certaine, that our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, that hee who beleeueth not is condemned already; becauſe he beleeueth not in the name of the only Sonne of God.

…11.5.
…r.11.6.
…1.23.
…des prima
…rde noſtro
…gignitur, ne
…e virtutes
…eſſe non
…nt, etiamſi
…e videantur
…Gregor.
…l.lib.2.
…4.
…1.5.

2.Theſſ.2.12.

Ioh.3.18.

§.Sect.8.
All our vertues muſt be imbraced, and good workes done in obedience towards God.

Fifthly, all our vertues muſt be imbraced, and all duties muſt be performed in obedience to God, & becauſe he hath commanded & cōmended thē vnto vs in his word: for if they ariſe frō ſelf-loue, or loue of the world, either for feare of puniſhment, or becauſe we would haue the praiſe of men, or otherwiſe aduance our worldly ends, they cannot be pleaſing vnto God, becauſe we doe not reſpect his will, but our owne, nor ſerue him, but our owne turnes.

§.Sect.9.
With all our other vertues we muſt ioyne humility.

Sine cauſa laborat qui virtutes ſine humilitate congregat. Bernard. de ordine vitæ. lib.8.

Bernard. de duob. diſcip. eunt. in Emmaum, Homil.

Bernard. ep.42.

Bernar. Serm. ſer.61.

Chryſoſt. in Gen.14. Hom. 35.

Sixthly, with our other vertues we muſt ioyne humilitie, which is that precious ornament that beautifieth all other vertues and good parts in the ſight of God and men: without which humility (as one ſaith) he laboureth in vaine which gathereth other vertues: for in another place he ſaith, He that gathereth other vertues without humility, doth as it were carrie duſt into the wind. True humility therefore doth open the eyes, whileſt it doth keepe downe and extenuate other vertues, which might be blinded with the wind of pride, and by it a man commeth to know that himſelfe is nothing of himſelfe. And looke how much a man decreaſeth by deſpiſing of himſelfe, and ſo much he profiteth in the knowledge of God. And againe, Humility is ſo neceſſary to other vertues, that without it they haue not ſo much as the ſhew of vertues, &c. for God giueth his grace only to the humble, and vpon the humble alone the ſpirit of the Lord reſteth. And elſewhere he ſaith, that the building of vertue is erected vpon humility, as vpon his proper foundation. With him agreeth Chryſoſtom, affirming, that that is not vertue which hath not humility ioyned with it. In all our vertues therefore and good parts let vs carefully keepe humilitie, and flee pride, which is the canker of vertue, and the poyſon, which being mixed with theſe pleaſant and wholſome potions, Ambroſ. lib. epiſt. 10. ep. 84.

doth make them to become deadly. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that becauſe ſeldome any is ſo impudent as to boaſt of his vices, and if he doe, he is eaſily deſpiſed, that glorieth in his ſhame; therefore the euill of pride it muſt carefully to be auoided of the vertuous, becauſe none it more eaſily betraieth, than thoſe who haue deſerued praiſe and commendation, &c. for Satan by vaine glory creeps into the hearts not of the ſluggiſh and ſlothfull, but of the induſtrious and diligent, that he might caſt downe by pride, thoſe whom he could not moue by perſwaſion. For how much more famous they were for their deſerts, ſo much the fitter he found them to be intangled with his ſnares.

§. Sect. 10. All our vertues and workes muſt haue Gods glory propounded to them as their chiefe end.

Matth. 5. 16.

Eſa. 61. 3.

And theſe are thoſe fundamentall vertues vpon which all other muſt be built. Now the laſt condition is, that all our vertues, duties, and good parts, muſt haue as their chiefe and maine end the glory of God propounded vnto them: for as our Sauiour ſaith, therefore our light muſt ſhine before men, that they ſeeing our good workes, may glorifie our father which is in heauen. And the Prophet Eſay ſaith, that therefore the Lord hath made vs trees of righteouſneſſe of his owne planting; that himſelfe might be glorified, by our fruites of obedience. Whereof it is that the Apoſtle chargeth vs to propound this as the maine end to all our actions, and whether we eate or drinke, or whatſoeuer we doe, to doe all to the glory of God. Which end if we aime not at, our vertues are of no value: for (as Auſtine ſaith) our vertues are diſcerned from vices, not by their offices and functions, but by their ſcope and leuell, and are eſteemed not by their actions, but by their ends. For if a man doth any thing, wherein he ſeemeth not to ſinne, if he doth it not for that end which he ought, he is conuinced of ſin; for true vertues in men ſerue God, from whom they haue receiued them. And whatſoeuer good is done of man, and is not done for that for which true wiſedome teacheth vs it ought to be done, although in the duty it ſelfe it may ſeeme good, yet the end being not right, it is a ſinne. And therefore ſome good things may be done, and they not done well of whom they are done, &c. For it is vniuſt and ſacrilegious to make vice the end of vertue, and to enforce it baſely to ſerue our voluptuous, couetous, and ambitious luſts. And elſewhere hee ſaith, that vertue ought not to waite vpon glorie, honour, and ſoueraigntie, which good men did deſire, & indeuoured to compaſſe by good meanes, but they ought to waite vpon vertue: for that is not true vertue, which doth not tend to that end, which is the chiefe good of man, before which nothing is to be preferred. The which end if wee leaue, and aime at our owne glorie and praiſe, though our vertues and actions in themſelues be neuer ſo excellent, yet they are but hypocriticall, and ſhall (as our Sauiour ſaith) haue no other reward from God but the reward of hypocrits, the glory of the world and praiſe of men.

Non actibus ſed finibus penſantur officia, &c. Auguſt. contra Iulian. Pelag. lib. 4. tom. 9. col. 1032.

Auguſt. de Ciuit. Dei lib. 5. cap. 12.

Matth. 6. 2

§. Sect. 11. That worldlings in their ciuill vertues and works ob- ſerue none of the former conditions.

And theſe are the conditions which giue vnto all vertue and duties the title of goodneſſe. Now if we take a view of thoſe meere morall vertues and ciuill duties which haue heretofore beene in Heathen men, and are at this day in our ciuill honeſt worldlings; wee ſhall finde none of theſe conditions obſerued; for in them they were ioyned with the worſhip of Idols and falſe gods, and in theſe with the falſe worſhip of the true God, whereby they draw neere vnto God with their lips, when as their hearts are farre from him, and contenting themſelues with an outward ſeruice for faſhion and cuſtomes ſake, and reſting in the deed done, they neuer worſhip God aright, in ſpirit and in truth. To ſay nothing of thoſe who caſt God out of their hearts, and ſet vp the idoll of the world, honours, pleaſures and riches, which they ſerue in the place of God. So alſo their morall vertues and ciuill honeſtie, are not ioyned with pietie, and the true feare of God; for howſoeuer theſe worldlings ſeeme to make ſome conſcience of their dealings with men, and to carrie themſelues iuſtly in the world, keeping their fidelitie in their words and promiſes, yet they haue no care of performing their dutie towards God, but contemne his ſeruice, neglect the vertues of the firſt table, which reſpect God, make no account of blaſphemie and curſed ſwearing, nor of neglecting and prophaning his holy Sabbaths. Neither doe they embrace theſe vertues, nor performe theſe duties in loue towards God, (for true charitie is a fruite of the ſpirit, and they are fleſhly and carnall) but for ſelfeloue, that they may the better atchieue their worldly deſires. Neither are they ioyned with the true knowledge of God and his will, ſeeing they remaine vtterly ignorant, euen of the very principles of religion, hauing onely the ſmall glimſe of the light of nature to guide them, and their owne good meaning and blind deuotion to pricke them forward. And therefore wanting ſauing knowledge, of neceſſitie they be alſo deſtitute of a liuely and iuſtifying faith; for before we can come vnto God by faith, we muſt firſt know that God is, and conſequently their vertues & duties wanting faith to apply vnto them Chriſts righteouſneſſe to couer them, and his blood to purge them, doe lie open to the eye of Gods iuſtice, in their naturall filthineſſe and pollution. Neither can they obſerue the Apoſtles conditions of doing theſe duties with a pure heart and a good conſcience; for it is faith that purifieth the heart, and it is the blood of Chriſt, appli-

Gal. 5. 22.

Act. 15.

applied by faith, that purgeth our conſciences from dead works, and enableth to ſerue the liuing God. So alſo they doe not embrace theſe vertues, and doe theſe duties, in obedience to God, becauſe he hath commanded them, but either for feare of men, or to gaine credit, or auoide ſhame, or elſe the better to attaine vnto their worldly ends. They are not ioyned with humilitie; for as pride firſt is the Vſher that bringeth them in, and giueth them intertainment; ſo being intertained they increaſe their pride, making them to haue an high conceit of their owne worth, and in compariſon of themſelues, to contemne all others, as wee may ſee in the example of the proud Phariſie. Finally, theſe ciuill worldlings doe not propound to themſelues Gods glory, as the end of all their vertues and duties, but their owne profit and vaine glorie; as appeareth in the practiſe of the Romans, who placed the temple of vertue, & the temple of honour together, becauſe they propounded to themſelues honour for the end of their vertue, as Auſtine obſerued; and may alſo euidently appeare in the courſe of ciuill worldlings, amongſt our ſelues, which embrace ciuill and morall vertues for their credit, and becauſe they would be well eſteemed amongſt their neighbours; or for their profit, hauing hereby better opportunity to increaſe their eſtates, in their trades and intercourſe of dealings; which worldly ends failing, their honeſtie, fidelitie, friendlineſſe, and all other their morall vertues doe faile alſo.

Seeing therefore there is no worth or excellencie in theſe morall ciuill vertues, and duties of worldlings, and ſeeing they doe not tend to the aduancement of Gods glory, nor further the ſaluation of our owne ſoules; yea ſeeing they are no better in Gods eſteeme, but filthy ſinnes which are guilded ouer with a gloſſe of vertue, and are ſo far from ſetting vs forward in the true way to heauen, that they are the matter and ground of a dangerous and pernicious tentation of Satan and the world, whereby they deſtroy the ſoules of innumerable multitudes, by perſwading them to reſt in this morall vertue, and ciuill honeſtie, as ſufficient for their ſaluation; and ſo to ſleepe ſecurely in their ſinnes, vtterly neglecting true repentance, and ſound conuerſion vnto God, and all the meanes of obtaining a liuely faith in Ieſus Chriſt, whereby they might be iuſtified before God, ſanctified, and ſaued: therefore ſeeing it is not onely baſe in value, but alſo pernicious in its effects; let no worldling hereafter ſet his heart on it, and be puffed vp in pride becauſe herein hee excelleth others; but as the Apoſtle Paul contemned his legall righteouſnes, though he had attained to ſuch perfection therein, that he was vnrebukeable, counting it for Chriſts ſake, and for the excellent knowledge of him, loſſe, and iudging it dung, ſo he might winne Chriſt; and deſired that he might be found in him, not hauing his owne righteouſneſſe which is of the Law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, euen the righteouſnes which is of God through faith: So much more let vs all learne to contemne our morall vertue, and ciuill honeſty, which is farre more imperfect, baſe and contemptible, than Pauls legal righteouſnes; & turning vnto God with all our hearts, by vnfained repentance for all our ſinnes, let vs hunger and thirſt after the righteouſneſſe of Ieſus Chriſt, and deſire aboue all worldly things to be made partakers thereof, by a true and liuely faith, and to be indued with his ſpirituall ſanctifying and ſauing graces, that ſo we may performe all duties both of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, and not onely doe that which is good, but alſo doe it well, laying a good foundation for all our vertues and duties, and exerciſing our ſelues in them in a good manner, with a pure heart, a good conſcience and faith vnfained: and finally propounding vnto our ſelues as our chiefe end, the aduancement of Gods glory, and ſo glorifying God in our holy conuerſations, he will glorifie himſelfe in the eternall ſaluation of our ſoules, and make vs partakers of euerlaſting happineſſe.

1.Tim.1.5.

CHAP. VIII.

Of ſpirituall wiſdome.

§.Sect.1.
Of ſpirituall wiſedome, which is commended vnto vs in the Sciptures.

AND thus haue I ſhewed that worldly, carnall and ciuill vertues are to be contemned, in compariſon of Gods ſpirituall graces, as being the ground of a moſt dangerous tentation, wherby our eternall good and ſaluation are exceedingly hindered; the truth whereof might further be ſhewed and exemplified, by taking a view of all the ſpirituall vertues comprehended vnder the generall. But becauſe this would bee ouer long; and beſides, it is very eaſie for any to fit that which hath beene generally ſpoken, to the ſpecials, I will only inſiſt in one particular, namely, worldly and carnall wiſedome, wherewith many are bewitched with ouer much cunning, cozening themſelues both of Gods grace and of their own ſaluation. And leaſt for want of diſtinct knowledge, we ſhould contemne the good with the bad: I will firſt ſhew what kinds of wiſdome are warrantable and commendable, that ſo wee may the better vnderſtand what that is which is worldly, wicked, and to bee condemned: and afterwards I will ſet downe ſome reaſons to perſwade all Chriſtians to contemne and hate it. For the former, wee are to vnvnderſtand, that wiſedome is either diuine and ſpirituall, or elſe morall and ciuill. Diuine and ſpirituall wiſdome is a gift and grace of Gods Spirit, beſtowed only vpon the elect and faithfull, whereby wee know God and his will reuealed in his word, and carefully and conſcionably make a holy vſe of this knowledge in our liues and conuerſations: where I call it Diuine, becauſe God only is truly wiſe, and the fountaine of wiſdome, from whom thoſe little ſtreames, and ſmall drops which are in vs, doe flow and diſtill: where alſo I diſtinguiſh it from that which is diabolicall, euen the deceitfull wiſdome of the ſubtill ſerpent. And I ſay that it is ſpirituall, not only becauſe it proceedeth from the Spirit of God; but becauſe it is alſo chiefly exerciſed in ſpirituall and heauenly things. This wiſedome is the gift of God: for as Iob ſaith, With him is wiſedome and ſtrength, and he hath counſell and vnderſtanding; and howſoeuer there is a ſpirit in man, yet the inſpiration of the Almighty giueth vnderſtanding. And Salomon ſaith, that the Lord giueth wiſdome, and out of his mouth commeth knowledge and vnderſtanding: whom another imitating, ſaith, that all wiſdome commeth of the Lord, and hath beene euer with him, and is with him for euer. Now this wiſdome the Lord giueth by his Spirit, and therefore the Spirit of God is called the Spirit of wiſdome and vnderſtanding, the Spirit of counſell and ſtrength, the Spirit of knowledge and of the feare of the Lord: and he giueth it not vnto all, but vnto his elect and faithfull ſeruants alone, who are good in his ſight, as the Wiſe man ſpeaketh. To which purpoſe the ſonne of Syrach, ſpeaking in the perſon of Wiſdome, ſaith thus: The Creator of all things gaue me a commandement, and he that made me, appointed me a tabernacle, and ſaid, let thy dwelling be in Iacob, and take thine inheritance in Iſrael, and root thy ſelfe among my choſen. And laſtly by the Author this ſpirituall wiſedome is diſtinguiſhed, from that worldly and carnall wiſdome, which is inſpired by the wicked ſpirit, the ſubtile world and our owne corrupt fleſh.

Rom, 16,27.

Iob 12.13.16.

*Chap.*32.8.

*Prou.*2.6.

*Ecclus.*1.1.

Eſay 11.2.

*Eccleſ.*2.16.

*Eccleſ.*24.11.

§. Sect. 2.
Wherein ſpirituall wiſdome conſiſteth.

Now this diuine & ſpirituall wiſdome doth conſiſt in our knowledge of God, and of his will, and in a holy obedience thereunto, in the whole courſe of our liues; for it is partly ſpeculatiue and in contemplation, and partly practicall and in operation: the former is vſually called ſpirituall wiſdome, whereby out of Gods word we know generally what is truth, and what is falſehood, what is good, and what is euill; and anſwerably in our judgements approue and chuſe the one, and condemne and refuſe the other. The latter is called ſpirituall prudence, whereby wee are able to bring the former into vſe vpon euery ſpeciall occaſion, putting difference betweene truth and falſehood, good and euill, chuſing the one and refuſing the other, according to thoſe diuers circumſtances, of perſons, times, places, meanes and ends. So that the former is exerciſed in things general and neceſſary, ſhewing what is lawfull, and what vnlawfull in it ſelfe; the other in things ſpeciall and contingent, ſhewing what is fit and conuenient, and what vnfit and inconuenient in reſpect of circumſtances: which difference the Apoſtle maketh, where ſpeaking of things indifferent, he ſaith, that all things were lawfull vnto him, but not all things profitable or expedient.

1.Cor.6.1

§. Sect. 3.
Spirituall
domeis alwayes ioyned with practi and obedience.

Spirituall wiſdome therefore conſiſteth in the knowledge of God, and his will ioyned with a practicall and holy vſe thereof in our liues and conuerſations; for without this the other is but an idle ſpeculation, which deſerueth not the name of wiſdome or Chriſtian prudence, the which is operatiue, cauſing a man to make vſe of that hee knoweth, according to that, *Iam.*3.13. Who is a wiſe man and indued with knowledge among you? let him ſhew by good conuerſation his workes, in meeknes and wiſdome. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that the chiefe wiſdome is a commendable life, and a pure mind before God, by which the pure are ioyned with the pure, and the holy aſſociated with the holy. And another ſaith, that that is wiſedome worth eſteeme, which doth not flie in the wind of words, but conſiſt in the operations of vertue. But when this wiſdome and obedience are joyned together then are we truly ſaid to haue attained vnto ſpirituall wiſdom, whereby as our iudgements are informed, ſo alſo are our affections ſanctified, and our liues reformed and amended. And hereof it is that true wiſdome is ſaid in the Scriptures to conſiſt in the feare of God; The feare of the Lord is wiſdome, and to depart from euill is vnderſtanding. And the beginning of wiſdome is the feare of the Lord, all they that obſerue them haue good vnderſtanding. his praiſe endureth for euer. Becauſe, where the true feare of God is, it will make thoſe who are indued therewith, to labour after the knowledge of Gods will, that knowing what is pleaſing vnto him, they may imbrace it, and what diſpleaſing, that they may auoid it. And for as much as they are alwayes in his ſight, it will cauſe them awfully to demeane themſelues as in his preſence, obſeruing his will, and yeelding obedience to all his Commandements. And thus the Prophet ioyneth theſe together, ſaying, that the Spirit of the Lord ſhould reſt vpon Chriſt, the Spirit of knowledge, and of the feare of the Lord, and ſhould make him prudent in the feare of the Lord.

Nazianzen Apolog.

Sapientia lau-clara eſt, non quæ verbis volat, ſed quæ tutibus con Gregor. in moral.

Iob 28.28.
Pſal.111.10.
Prou.1.7.

Eſay 11.2.

§. Sect.
Spirituall dome i

Now this ſpirituall wiſdome conſiſting in knowledge, obedience, and feare of the Lord, is to bee learned no where elſe, but out of Gods Word, in which hee hath reuealed his will, and vſed many effectuall reaſons to mooue vs to obedience, for ſo the Prophet Dauid ſaith, that the law of the Lord is perfect, conuerting the ſoule; the teſtimony of the Lord is ſure, and giueth wiſdome to the ſimple. To which purpoſe another ſaith, that the Word of God moſt high is the fountaine of Wiſdome, and the euerlaſting Commandements are the entrance vnto her. And Hierome affirmeth, that true wiſdome is a treaſure which only groweth in the field of the Scriptures, the which is a jewell worthy to be bought with many Pearles. So Dauid aſcribeth all his wiſdome to the inſtruction of this Schoolemaſter: By thy Commandements (ſaith he) thou haſt made me wiſer than mine enemies; for they are euer with me. I haue had more vnderſtanding then all my teachers, for thy teſtimonies are my meditation. By thy precepts I haue gotten vnderſtanding, therefore I hate all the wayes of falſhood. Of which whoſoeuer are ignorant (though they excell in worldly wiſdome, yet) they are very fooles; as Ieremy concludeth: Surely (ſaith he) they are poore, they are fooliſh, for they haue not knowne the way of the Lord, nor the iudgement of their God. And againe, Lo they haue rejected the word of the Lord, and what wiſdome is in them?

And thus it appeareth wherein true wiſedome conſiſteth; the properties whereof the Apoſtle Iames thus deſcribeth: The wiſdome (ſaith hee) that is from aboue, is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, eaſie to be intreated, full of mercy, and good fruits, without iudging, without hypocriſie. Vnto which diuers others might bee added, as firſt, that it is ſpirituall, and exerciſeth it ſelfe in ſpirituall things, namely, in the getting and well ordering of Gods ſpirituall graces, and in the aſſuring and furthering the eternall ſaluation of our ſoules. Secondly, it is humble and ioyned with meekneſſe of ſpirit; for ſo the Apoſtle exhorteth him that would be eſteemed a wiſe man and indued with knowledge, to ſhew by good conuerſation his workes in meekneſſe of wiſdome. To the ſame purpoſe one ſaith, that we muſt take ſpeciall care, leſt hauing receiued wiſdome, when it doth inlighten the darkneſſe of ignorance, it doe not take away the light of humility. And ſo it ceaſeth to be true wiſdome; for although it ſhine with the vertue of eloquence, yet it doth darken the heart of the ſpeaker with the vaile of pride. Thirdly, it is ſincere and ſimple, and void of all fraud and diſſimulation. For as our Sauiour Chriſt requireth, that his ſeruants ſhould be as wiſe as Serpents, ſo alſo as ſimple and innocent as Doues. And the Prophet Dauid ſaith, that as ſoone as by Gods precepts hee had gotten vnderſtanding, hee preſently hated all the wayes of falſhood. To which purpoſe Bernard ſpeaketh to the Church after this manner: O Spouſe of Chriſt (ſaith he) there ought not to be in thee the wiſdome of the Serpent without the ſimplicity of the Doue, nor the ſimplicity of the Doue without the wiſdome of the Serpent; for as much as the wiſdome of the Serpent warneth the Doues ſimplicity to beware of guile, and the ſimplicity of the Doue tempereth the wiſdome of the Serpent, that it may doe good. And a little after hee ſaith, that wee ought to be ſo ſimple in innocency of life, as that alſo with this ſimplicity of life, we ſhould ioyne wiſdome; for he that doth not mixe prudence with ſimplicity, is (according to that of the Prophet) as a Doue deceiued without an heart. And another affirmeth, that wel-ſighted ſimplicity is good, when as it ſo excludeth diſſimulation, as that it be not blind in the truth.

De modo bene viuendi. Ser. 55 de Prudentia.

Hoſe 7.11.

Gillebert. ſup. Cant. ſerm. 22.

§. Sect. 6. That ſpirituall wiſdome is to be highly eſteemed.

Prou. 1.7.

And this is that diuine and ſpirituall wiſdome which is oppoſed vnto that which is diuelliſh, worldly, and carnall; the which is not to be contemned, ſeeing the wiſe man telleth vs that none but fooles deſpiſe this wiſdome. Yea, contrariwiſe wee are highly to value it, as being a Pearle of more worth than all the World, and much to be preferred before the richeſt jewels and moſt precious ſtones. To which purpoſe Iob ſpeaketh excellently, Chap. 28. 13. Man (ſaith hee) knoweth not the price thereof; for it is not found in the Land of the liuing. 15. Gold ſhall not be giuen for it, neither ſhall ſiluer be weighed for the price thereof. 16. It ſhall not be valued with the wedge of Gold of Ophir, nor with the precious Onyx, nor the Saphire. 17. The gold nor the Chryſtall ſhall be equall vnto it, nor the exchange ſhall be for the plate of fine gold. 18. No mention ſhall be made of Corall, nor of the Gabiſh; for wiſdome is more precious than pearles. 19. The Topaze of Æthiopia ſhall not be equall vnto it, neither ſhall it be valued with the wedge of pure Gold. And thus alſo Salomon eſteemed it, pronouncing the man bleſſed that findeth wiſdome, and getteth vnderſtanding; becauſe the merchandiſe thereof is better than ſiluer, and the gaine thereof is better than gold. It is more precious than Pearles; and all things that thou canſt deſire are not to be compared vnto her, &c. And therefore according to this ſurpaſſing excellency ought euery mans loue to be towards it: and his care in vſing all good meanes to attaine vnto it, ought as much to exceed the care of worldly men in compaſſing earthly vanities, as this rich jewell excelleth all worldly trifles.

Prou. 3.13,14, 15. & 8.10,11.

Chap.

Chap. IX.

Of ciuill and worldly wiſdome, and how farre forth to be imbraced, and in what reſpects to be contemned.

§. Sect. 1. Of ciuill wiſedome and of the cautions thereunto required, that it may bee good and lawfull.

AND ſo much concerning diuine and ſpirituall wiſedome: Ciuill and Morall wiſedome is a common gift of Gods Spirit beſtowed on man, whereby the vnderſtanding being inlightened, hee is able to judge and diſcerne, what is truth, and what falſhood, what good, and what euill in humane and worldly affaires, that being hereby guided and directed, hee may wiſely and diſcreetly manage all his words and actions, eſpecially in thoſe buſineſſes which more properly reſpect his place and calling. And this wiſdome is in its owne nature good, as being the gift of God, beſtowed vpon mankind, to a good end, namely, that hee may the better bee inabled to performe all duties of his place and calling. And howſoeuer it is not to be eſteemed in compariſon of diuine and ſpirituall wiſdome, yet if wee compare it with any worldly and temporall gifts of God, the higheſt place of excellencie is due vnto it. whereof it is that Salomon being put to his choice what hee would haue of God, asketh this wiſedome, that thereby hee might be fitted for his Kingly calling, and enabled to performe the duties of gouernment; the which his wiſh was approued of God, and according to his deſire this wiſdome was granted vnto him. But being conſidered as it is in vs, it is neither abſolutely good or bad, but according to the vſe, good to thoſe that vſe it well, and euill vnto thoſe who abuſe it vnto euill. Now in reſpect of the vſe, Ciuill policy and wiſdome is good, lawfull and laudable, when it is vſed with theſe cautions: firſt, when it is joyned with meekneſſe and humility. Secondly, when it is tempered and moderated with Chriſtian ſimplicity and ſincerity, ſo as wee may ſay with the Apoſtle, Our reioycing is this, the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly pureneſ, and not in fleſhly wiſdome, we haue had our conuerſation in the world. Thirdly, when it is joyned with truth and fidelity, juſt and vpright dealing. Fourthly, when onely lawfull and good meanes be vſed for the effecting and accompliſhing of our deſignes, for that onely deſerueth the name of wiſdome, when by the vſe of honeſt and lawfull meanes a man can bring to paſſe things of difficultie. Fiftly, whenas therein wee aime at good ends, as the aduancement of Gods glory, the furtherance of his religion, the good of the Church and Common-wealth, and the benefit and wel-fare either of our ſelues, or our neighbours. And laſtly, when being indued with this wiſdome wee doe not glory in it nor ſet our hearts vpon it, preferring it in our loue, before that wiſdome which is diuine and ſpirituall, nor truſting and relying vpon it more than vpon Gods promiſes, prouidence and aſſiſtance. Whereby it appeareth, that if we will entertaine ciuill and worldly wiſdome, we muſt deliuer it from many corruptions to which vſually it is inthralled: and as one ſaith, if wee be in loue with this captiue woman because ſhe is beautifull to the ſight, we muſt ſhaue off her alluring haires, take away the deceitfull ornaments of her inticing words; cut off the dead nailes of rapine and greedineſſe, and waſh her cleane with that fullers ſope and niter of the Prophets, that is, purge and reforme her according to the doctrine of the Prophets, and Word of God. And if theſe cautions bee thus obſerued, then is it lawfull to vſe this ciuill policie, and to our Doue-like ſimplicitie, to adde the Serpentine wiſdome. As for example, we may in Chriſtian policie make queſtion of mens faire pretences, when wee haue no ſound reaſon whereupon wee may ground our beliefe, and may make triall before wee truſt them, eſpecially in matters of great importance, hauing for our preſident the example of our Sauiour Chriſt, who though many profeſſed that they beleeued in him, when they ſaw his Miracles, yet knowing their vnconſtancie, hee would not commit himſelfe vnto them. So likewiſe we may vſe all good and lawfull policie, to preſerue the peace of the Church, and to further the Goſpell: and thus Paul by the aduice of the other Apoſtles aſſociates himſelfe with the foure Nazarites in their purifications and offerings, as though himſelfe had beene one alſo, that hereby hee might giue ſatiſfaction to the Iewes, who were zealous in the Ceremoniall Law, by ſubmitting himſelfe to the rites thereof. And thus it is lawfull to vſe the like policy for the auoyding of perſecution; as the Apoſtle Paul did, when in that diuided aſſembly hee profeſſed himſelfe a Phariſie. And Iacob, when as being in danger of his Brother, he vſed all good policy to abate, or at leſt auoid his fury. Finally, theſe cautions obſerued, wee may lawfully vſe all good policies and ſtratagems in the time of warre, as wee may ſee in the practice of Ioſhua, of the Iſraelites againſt the Benjamites, and of Dauid, guided & inſtructed herein by Gods own word.

1.King.3.9,10.

2.Cor.1.12.

And thus much concerning that ciuill wiſdome which is lawfull and good: whereby it may alſo appeare, when it is to be eſteemed vnlawfull and wicked, namely, when theſe cautions are not obſerued; as firſt of all, when it is joyned with pride, arrogancy and vain-glory: for this the Lord condemneth by his Prophet, forbidding the wiſe man to glory in his wiſdome; but if he will glory, to glory in this, that hee vnderſtandeth and knoweth God: So the Wiſe man forbiddeth vs to be wiſe in our owne eyes; telling vs elſewhere, that there is more hope of a foole, than of him who is thus wiſe in his owne conceit. And the Apoſtle willeth vs, that wee ſhould not be high minded nor wiſe in our ſelues. Yea ſo great is this ſin, that a grieuous woe is denounced againſt it; woe vnto them that are wiſe in their owne eyes, and prudent in their owne ſight. Into which ſin and wo many fal: who haue no true ground for their conceit, but are ſo vtterly deſtitute of wiſdome, that they haue not knowledge enough to ſee their ignorance, nor ſufficient wit to diſcerne their folly. Neither is it a ſigne of true wiſdome, to make a ſhew thereof, ſeeing there are not ſo many wiſe, as profeſſors of wiſdome: and (as one ſaith) If we were truly wiſe, we would not think ſo; much leſſe boaſt of it; for to conceit a mans own wiſdom is the firſt degree to folly; & the next ſtep is, to profeſſe and vaunt of it: whereas he who is truly wiſe glorieth not in that he hath, but ſeeing his defects, groaneth for that he wanteth. To which purpoſe another demandeth; Doeſt thou (ſaith hee) waxe proud in reſpect of thy wiſdome? but it is not the property of wiſdome to be proud: for by being proud, like a ſelfe-robber thou ſpoyleſt thy ſelfe of that whereof thou glorieſt.

Secondly, worldly policie is vnlawfull and wicked, when as it is ſeuered from Chriſtian ſimplicitie & ſinceritie; for theſe our Sauiour hath conjoyned, willing vs to bee as wiſe as Serpents, & ſimple as Doues; & therefore no man ought to ſeuer them which he hath coupled: & this the Apoſtle expoundeth; I would (ſaith he) haue you wiſe, to that which is good, & ſimple concerning euill. For which ſimplicity Nathaniel is commended by Chriſt; Behold (ſaith he) a true Iſraelite, in whom there is no guile. So alſo it is euill when as it is not joined with truth & righteouſneſſe. For true wiſdom promiſeth, that her mouth ſhall ſpeak the truth, & her lips abhor wickednes, that all the words of her mouth ſhalbe found righteous; that there ſhalbe no lewdnes nor frowardnes in them; and that ſhe will cauſe her followers to walk in the way of righteouſnes, & in the midſt of the paths of iudgement. So the ſonne of Syrach ſaith, that true wiſdome is farre from pride and deceit, and men that lie cannot remember her, but men of truth ſhall haunt her, and ſhall proſper euen to the beholding of God. Againe, it is euill and vnlawfull; when as men vſe wicked and vnjuſt meanes for the accompliſhing of their deſires, as lying, facing, ſwearing, forſwearing, treacherie and double-dealing: or when as they propound vnto themſelues, in their policies, vngodly and ſinfull ends, whereby either God is diſhonoured, their brethren endamaged, or their owne conſciences wounded, and ſaluation hindered: for (as one ſaith) to be wiſe vnto euill, is not to play the wiſe man, but the foole. Finally, this ciuill wiſedome is euill to them who haue an ouer-weening conceit of it, extolling and magnifying it aboue its worth, and placing in it (with Ariſtotle) their chiefe happineſſe; as alſo to thoſe who in their loue ſo dote on it, that they preferre it before that wiſdome which is diuine and ſpirituall, whereas it ſhould be but an handmaid vnto it, giuing it precedence and place when both cannot ſtand together. To conclude, it is euill to thoſe who put their truſt in their owne wiſdome and policies, eyther for prouiſion of thoſe things they deſire, or for their preſeruation from dangers, more than in God himſelfe, who is our onely preſeruer and protector; contrarie to the perſwaſion of the wiſe man, who exhorteth vs to truſt in the Lord with all our hearts, and not leane vnto our owne wiſdome.

ſed deſipere. Bernard. de Grad. humilit.
Ariſtot. in Ethic. lib. 8.
Prou. 3. 5.

§. Sect. 4.
Worldly wiſdome is to be contemned; firſt because God eſteemeth it not.

And thus haue I ſhewed, how and in what reſpects this ciuill wiſdome and policie is to be accounted warrantable and good, and how it is to bee eſteemed euil and vnlawfull: in which reſpect wee are not to ſet our hearts on it, but to contemne and hate, ſhun and auoid it. Which that wee may doe, let theſe reaſons mooue vs: firſt, becauſe this worldly and carnall wiſedome is not good, nor of any worth and excellencie, but euill, baſe and contemptible: and ſecondly, becauſe it bringeth vnto vs no true good or profit, but hurt and diſaduantage. That there is in it no worth or excellency, it appeareth, becauſe God eſteemeth it not: for whereas he reſerueth his chiefe jewels, and gifts of value, onely for his owne ſeruants and children, he beſtoweth this ciuill and morall wiſdome, as a common gift both vpon the godly and the reprobate, as appeareth in the example of Achitophel, who though he were deſperately wicked, as wee may plainly ſee in that curſed counſell which hee gaue to Abſolon, yet had receiued from God ſuch a large meaſure of this gift of ciuill wiſdome, that hee was not only thought meete to be a chiefe Counſeller to Dauid, but the counſell which he gaue in thoſe dayes, was eſteemed as if one had asked counſaile at the oracle of God: ſo was all the counſell of Achitophel both with Dauid and with Abſolon. And the like might be ſaid of many others, which for breuitie I ouerpaſſe. Againe, that the Lord eſteemeth and regardeth not theſe great Politicians who are wiſe in their owne conceits, Elihu plainly ſaith it, and Gods dealing with them as plainly proueth it; for being to gather vnto himſelfe a ſelect multitude, whereof to make his Church, and ſeruants of his owne Family, whom hee will ſanctifie in this life, and ſaue, glorifie and crowne with eternall happineſſe in the life to come; he paſſeth by theſe great Politicians, and vouchſafeth not to call many of theſe wiſe men after the fleſh, as the Apoſtle affirmeth, but leauing them to enjoy their glory, of being Counſellers to Princes

2. Sam. 16. 23.
Iob 37. 24.
1. Cor. 1. 26.

Ll and

Matth.11.25.

and Potentates of the World; which they moſt deſire and value, he maketh them none of his counſaile, but keeping all his ſecrets cloſe from them, hee reuealeth them to ſuch as they eſteeme babes and fooles. And therefore ſeeing the Lord ſo baſely eſteemeth of worldly policie, let vs (making his infinite wiſdome the rule according to which we are to conforme & ſquare our judgement) learne alſo to ſcorne and contemne it; and labour after that ſpirituall and diuine wiſedome, which will make vs wiſe vnto God, and further our glory and euerlaſting happineſſe.

§. Sect. 1. That the Deuill is the Author of worldly wiſdome.

Iames 3.15.

But this may further our contempt of this worldly wiſedome, if we conſider that it is not onely not good, or of any worth, but alſo corrupt and exceeding euil. For firſt, if we wil deriue the pedigree of it, we ſhal find that it is more ancient than noble, the Deuill himſelfe being the father and firſt founder of it, for the Apoſtle Iames plainly telleth vs, that this worldly wiſdome which deſcendeth not from aboue, is earthly, ſenſual and deuilliſh. Earthly, becauſe it mindeth only earthly things, and maketh vs neuer to forecaſt how after wee depart from the earth wee may come to Heauen: ſenſuall, not only becauſe it beleeueth nothing, but that which is ſubject to the ſenſes, or may bee demonſtrated by carnall reaſon, but becauſe it alſo mooueth men to pamper themſelues in ſenſuall delights, and voluptuous pleaſures; as thinking that there is no other Paradiſe but the earthly Eden; and deuilliſh, becauſe it came from the Deuill as the firſt Authour, and is continually taught by the ſame Schoolemaſter; and will alſo bring them to the Deuill who vſe and practice it, vnleſſe they preuent their damnation by vnfained repentance.

§. Sect. 6. Worldly wiſdome reſembleth Satan in malicious oppoſing againſt God.

Rom. 8,7.

1.Cor.1.17.

But that we may more plainly perceiue that this curſed childe doth not degenerate from this wicked parent, if we further conſider of it, wee ſhall finde that it exceedingly reſembleth him in the very countenance. For firſt, as the Deuill with deſpitefull malice oppoſeth himſelfe againſt the Majeſtie of God: ſo this worldly wiſdome being his of-ſpring, taketh the fathers part, and oppoſeth it ſelfe with like malice againſt the wiſedome of God. For ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that the wiſedome of the fleſh is enmitie againſt God. And contrariwiſe the wiſedome of God oppoſeth againſt the wiſedome of the World, and ſo deteſteth it, that he cannot abide that there ſhould bee any mixture thereof with his ſpirituall wiſdome, in the worke of his Miniſtery, which hee hath ordained for the gathering of his Church, and for their edification in the holy faith. So the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt ſent him to preach the Goſpell, not with wiſdome of wordes; leſt the Croſſe of Chriſt ſhould be made of none effect. That his preaching ſtood not in the enticing ſpeech of mans wiſdome, but in the plaine euidence of the ſpirit and power, and that hee did not ſpeake the wiſedome of this World, neither of the Princes of this World which come to naught, but the wiſdome of God, which none of the Princes of this World hath knowne, &c. And by reaſon of this oppoſition, the one doth not allow and approue of the other, but interchangeably cenſure and condemne one the other of meere folly. So the wiſdome of the World judgeth of the wiſedome of God; for the Apoſtle ſaith, that the preaching of the Goſpell is to them that periſh, and to the wiſe Grecians, eſteemed fooliſhneſſe: and therefore when Chriſts worldly kindred heard him in his Sermons deliuer this ſpirituall wiſdome from his Father, they went to lay hold on him, becauſe they thought him out of his wits. The reaſon hereof is, becauſe worldly wiſdome can reliſh nothing, but that which is ſubject to the ſenſes, or may be demonſtrated by carnall reaſon; to which rules Gods wiſdome ſubmitteth not it ſelfe, but oftentimes ſoareth an higher pitch, ſpeaking and doing things which are beſides, aboue, and contrary to naturall reaſon, that the infinite depth and power thereof may better appeare. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that there is another wiſdome of the fleſh, which being puffed vp with worldly reaſons, doth deny that any thing can be done, of which a naturall reaſon may not be giuen, and therefore it ſcorneth and derideth the myſteries of Religion.

So contrariwiſe the wiſdome of God condemneth the wiſdome of the World of meere fooliſhneſſe: for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that the * wiſdome of the World is fooliſhneſſe with God. And the reaſon is, becauſe it is alwayes mixt with ſinne, which God eſteemeth the greateſt folly; whereof it is that vſually in the Scriptures ſinne is called by the name of * folly, and Sinners are termed fooles. Thus the Prophet concludeth that they are a fooliſh that doe not know the way of the Lord, and that there is no poſſibilitie that there ſhould bee any wiſdome in them that reject the Word of God: [b] they haue (ſaith hee) rejected the Word of the Lord; and what wiſdome is in them? And the Wiſe man ſaith that they are [c] fooles, who deſpiſe wiſdome and inſtruction, that is, the feare of the Lord and true godlines, as he there expoundeth it. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that to be wiſe vnto euill is to play the foole. And another affirmeth, that this falſe wiſdome is true folly. And in truth what is more fooliſh than to gaine the World, yea, ſome ſmall trifles in the World, and to loſe a mans ſoule? than to embrace carnall things, and contemne ſpirituall; to exchange for earthly and momentanie vanities, our heauenly inheritance, and that eternall waight of glory? What more abſurd than by wilfull ſinning to caſt a mans ſoule into Hell, for the gaining of that which he is euery day in danger to loſe? the which folly who ſo will not acknowledge here, that he may forſake it, ſhall be ſure to confeſſe it, in Hel fire, with bitter griefe and horrible anguiſh, as it is notably ſet downe in the Booke of Wiſdome. Let vs therefore in time embrace this ſpirituall and heauenly wiſdome, and reject and hate that which is worldly and carnall, for ſuch contrarietie there is betweene them, that they cannot be reconciled nor joyned together. To this point one ſpeaketh fitly: If (ſaith hee) thou wouldeſt be accounted the Spouſe of Chriſt, what haſt thou to doe with the wiſdome of the fleſh, which is enmitie with God? Wouldeſt thou reconcile this enmitie, and haue in thee both the wiſdome of the fleſh and of the ſpirit? A little leauen ſowreth the whole lumpe, and how much more when the leauen is much, and the lumpe little? What fellowſhip is there betweene the Law of concupiſcence, and the law of Charitie? that ought not to be ioyned with this, becauſe it will not be ſubiect to it: for the wiſdome of the fleſh either reſiſteth the law of God, and ſo is an enemy, or vtterly periſheth and commeth to nothing; either it reſiſteth, or elſe wholly deſiſteth; it may be deſtroyed, that it may ceaſe to bee, but it cannot be kept vnder that it ſhould obey, &c.

a

Secondly, whereas Sathan is the father of lies, and the chiefe authour of diſſimulation, treachery and treaſon; this worldly wiſedome is a compounded monſter of all this helliſh brood. For who ſeeth not that worldly Politicians doe ſo accuſtome their tongues to ſpeake vntruths, that lying may ſeeme to be their naturall language, ſeeing they ſpeake it with ſuch facilitie? that they place a great part of their policie, in making their tongues and hearts ſo to differ the one from the other, that a man by their ſpeeches ſhall leaſt of all gueſſe at their meanings? and were it not that like the Deuill their Schoolemaſter, they did in policy ſometimes ſpeake truth, that they may the better gaine credit when they lie, you might as wel know the meaning of their words by a Dictionary of contrarietie, as by that which naturally they ſeeme to ſignifie. Finally, that they account him but an heauy headed fellow, and little better then a foole, who is open hearted, and ſpeaketh as he thinketh. Wherein what doe they elſe but peruert the courſe of nature, and joyne with the Deuill againſt God? for whereas hee hath purpoſely made the tongue to be the interpreter of the mind and heart, they make it to deliuer their meanings as it were in an vnknowne Language which cannot bee vnderſtood, and to giue darke Riddles in ſtead of plaine reſolutions? and what do they elſe hereby but proclaime, that their wiſedome is not the wiſedome of God, ſeeing her mouth ſpeaketh the truth, and her lips abhorre wickedneſſe, but the wiſdome of the old Serpent, who being oppoſed vnto God, taketh delight in lies and falſehood?

§. Sect. 9. Worldly wiſdome grounded vpon diſſimulation and deceit.

So alſo they ground their policies vpon diſſimulation, deceit and fraud, which haue great affinitie with the former, and are able to do litle without her help. And hereby they make faire weather, when they intend a ſtorme ſhall follow, they carry two faces vnder one hood, making ſhew of loue where they mortally hate, and ſmile vpon thoſe whom they deſire to kill, like their predeceſſor Ioab, who ſtabbed whileſt he embraced, and Iudas who by kiſſing, betrayed. The floud of their malice is alwayes ſmootheſt where it is deepeſt, and where for ſome wrong, either receiued or imagined, they intend greateſt miſchiefe, there they vſe moſt complements, of cap and knee, faire words and kind embracings; becauſe according to the rule of their politickes, profeſſed hatred loſeth opportunitie of reuenge. Yea ſo farre are they in loue with this deepe diſſimulation, and out of liking with Chriſtian ſimplicitie, innocencie and ſinceritie, which is oppoſed thereunto, that in their language, ſimplicitie and folly are all one, and fooles are vſually called by the name of innocents. Yea ſo contrary are ſimplicitie and puritie to worldly wiſdome, that the Apoſtle alſo oppoſeth the one to the other, ſaying, that he had his conuerſation in the world in ſimplicity and godly pureneſſe, and not in fleſhly wiſedome; implying thereby, that theſe two are ſo oppoſed, that they can by no meanes ſtand together.

Profeſſa odia tollunt vindictæ locum.

2.Cor.1.12.

§. Sect. 10. That worldly wiſdome is grounded on treachery and treaſon.

Vnto this wee may adde their treacherie and treaſons, as chiefe pillars of worldly policie, whereby they are readie to betray all thoſe that truſt them, and to cut their throats who haue put their liues into their hands, and choſen them as Sanctuaries of refuge; to falſifie their word & promiſes, confirmed by many vehement proteſtations, bitter imprecations, and deepe oathes; when as either at the firſt they intended nothing leſſe, or afterwards find that the performance of their promiſe will not ſtand with their profit and aduantage. In which treacheries they are ſo fleſhed, that they acknowledge no friendſhip, nor regard the neereſt kindred, but without reſpect of perſons, tread all vnder foot, which ſtand in their way, and ſeeme to hinder their wicked deſignes. The which their treaſon and villany being diſcouered, doth not at all daunt them in their curſed courſes, but one injury occaſioneth another, and when they haue no other reaſon of doing wrong, they will ſtill doe it, becauſe they haue done it; and according to their Prouerbe, whom they haue once injured, they will neuer forgiue, but adde one wrong vnto another; like cruell cowards, ſtill keeping downe him whom they haue vnjuſtly ouerthrowne, leſt riſing againe and recouering ſtrength hee might reuenge himſelfe for theſe wrongs receiued.

§. Sect. 11.
Worldly wiſdome propoundeth wicked ends.

Finally, to make vp a perfect wickedneſſe, vnto theſe euill meanes they adjoyne as euill ends; neuer reſpecting in any of their proceedings the glory of God, the good of his Church, or the ſaluation of their owne ſoules; but rather, joyning with Sathan in all their courſes, they ſeeke how they may moſt diſhonour God, vexe and afflict his children and ſeruants, and ingage their own ſoules to eternall deſtruction, by adding one wickedneſſe to another; or to take them at the beſt, the chiefe workes which they aime at, are either honours and preferments, which they aſpire vnto by treading others vnder foot; or riches, the Mammon of iniquitie, which they ſeeke to compaſſe and obtaine by fraud and deceit, injuſtice and violence, oppreſſion and crueltie: or voluptuous pleaſures which are wicked and vnlawfull, the which they often procure and raiſe out of the griefe of their poorer Neighbours, delighting themſelues with their hurts; and making way to their ſuperfluous pleaſures, by wringing from them thoſe neceſſaries which ſhould mayntaine their liues; like that wicked Achab, who muſt haue Naboths inheritance to make him a Garden.

§. Sect. 12.
That worldly wiſedome hath beene alwayes embraced and much eſteemed in the World.
Gen. 4.8.
Exod. 1.10.
1. Sam. 18.21.

And this is that wicked worldly wiſdom, which hath beene ſo much in vſe among carnall men from the beginning of the World; thus Caine ſpoke peaceably to his brother, when his meaning was to murther him: Pharaoh dealeth politikely in ſuppreſſing Gods Church: Saul offereth to Dauid his daughter in marriage, when his purpoſe was to make it the occaſion of his death, and maketh alliance to ſerue as a ſnare to catch him: Ioab embraceth and killeth, and Iudas kiſſeth and betrayeth; and if we looke to Ieremies times, you ſhall heare him complaining, that the Politicians of that age did bend their tongues like their bowes for lies; that they had no courage for the truth vpon the earth, but proceeded from euill to worſe, not knowing the Lord: and therefore hee counſelleth euery one to take heed of his Neighbour and not to truſt any brother becauſe euery brother vſed deceit, and euery friend dealt deceitfully. So one of the Ancients deſcribing the worldly policy which was vſed in his dayes, ſaith that it conſiſted in gathering treaſure, and in ſcraping together worldly goods, in lying, ſwearing, cunning peruerting of juſtice, and ſuchlike carriage in all their courſes: all which (ſaith he) is but meere fooliſhneſſe in the ſight of God. So another ſpeaking according to the experience of his times, ſaith, that this is the wiſdome of the world, to hide the heart with cunning deuices, to diſguiſe a mans meaning with his words, to make thoſe things which are falſe to ſeeme true, and thoſe things which are true to appeare falſe. This forſooth is that wiſdome which is knowne of young men by vſe, and learned of children at deare rates: who ſo know this, they ſhew their pride in deſpiſing others, and thoſe who are ignorant hereof, as underlings and timorous perſons admire it in thoſe that haue it; becauſe this ſame doubleneſſe, being cloaked with iniquity, is loued of them, whileſt peruerſitie of mind is called courtlineſſe. This wiſdome commandeth thoſe that obey it, to clime into the higheſt ſeate of honour, and to reioyce in the vanitie of temporall glory, when they haue obtained it; to take manifold reuenge for ſingle injuries: to giue place to none that oppoſe againſt them, as long as their ſtrength laſteth, but when all poſſibilitie of power faileth them, that which they are not able to atchieue by profeſſed malice, they muſt effect by diſſembling peaceable kindneſſe. But contrariwiſe, this is the wiſdome of the iuſt, to faine nothing in outward ſhew, to declare their meaning by their words, to loue truth, and auoid falſhood, to doe good freely, and to ſuffer euill more willingly than to doe it, not to ſeeke reuenge of injuries, but to thinke it gaine to bee reproched for the truth. But this ſimplicitie of the juſt is ſcorned, becauſe the vertue of innocencie is by Worldlings eſteemed folly. For whatſoeuer is done innocently is queſtionleſſe with them thought fooliſh, and whatſoeuer in any worke the truth approueth, that ſoundeth as ſilly to carnall wiſdome. For what can ſeeme more fooliſh to the World, than to ſhew a mans meaning by his words, not to faine any thing with cunning fetches, to offer no contumelies for injuries receiued; to pray for them that curſe; to ſeeke pouerty, to leaue preſent poſſeſſions, not to reſiſt him that taketh by violence, to turne the other cheeke to him that ſmiteth? &c. But what is thought an abomination to the Ægyptians, that the Iſraelites offer to God, and this ſimplicitie of conſcience which all vniuſt Worldlings deſpiſe as weake and abiect, is made the ſacriſice of the iuſt.

Ier. 9.3,4,5.

Auguſtin. ad fratr. in eremo ſerm. 36.

Gregor. moral. lib. 10. cap. 16.

And another of latter times cõplaineth, that wel-ſighted ſimplicity, which is ſo void of diſſimulation, as that it is not blind in the truth, is in theſe dayes a rare bird to bee found on earth, or if her haunt be any where, it is very ſecret, and hid in the clefts of the rockes, and in hollow walls, or about the riuer bankes. For how is the Doues eye of ſimplicity obſcured and hid? Who now followeth not the Worlds deceits? who ioyeth not to vſe them? who loueth not to haue them, or to be ſaid that he hath them in him? who is not aſhamed of the Doues eyes, and glorieth not in the eyes of Kites? &c. And if this complaint were juſtly taken vp by theſe men in thoſe times, how much more would they haue inueighed againſt this wicked policie of the world, if they had liued to haue read Machiauels

Gildas
Conſ

Lectures of diuelliſh impiety, and ſeene the practiſe of many of his ſchollers, who farre excell their maſter in the deepe skill of worldly ſubtilties and helliſh myſteries?

*Sect.*13. at worldly dome vn-ſtandeth the ſpirill things of d.

And thus haue I ſhewed how wicked this worldly wiſedome is in it ſelfe, and hurtfull to others. In the next place let vs conſider what it is to thoſe that vſe it; where vpon due examination wee ſhall find, firſt, that it doth not bring vnto them any true profit: ſecondly, that it is exceeding hurtfull. It profiteth not: for firſt, whereas the chiefe vſe of wiſdome and vnderſtanding is to know the ſpirituall things of God, and the meanes and myſteries of our ſaluation, the eye of worldly wiſdome is not onely dimme ſighted, but euen ſtarke blind in diſcerning this light: and as he that hath no eyes cannot poſſibly ſee, becauſe he wanteth the organ and inſtrument of ſeeing: ſo it is as impoſſible that the carnall worldling (how wiſe ſoeuer he be) ſhould perceiue the things of God, becauſe he wanteth the inſtrument of this ſpirituall diſcerning, euen the Spirit of God, whereby alone the darke minde of man is illuminated with the knowledge of the truth. And this reaſon the Apoſtle rendreth of the ignorance of carnall worldlings, where he ſaith; That the naturall man perceiueth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are fooliſhnes vnto him, neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned. But hee that is ſpirituall diſcerneth all things. And therefore our Sauiour Chriſt ſpeaking generally of the world, ſaith, that it did not know God his Father; and his holy Apoſtle teſtifieth, that when Chriſt the Sonne of God came into the world, the world knew him not. So that it is impoſſible for a meere worldling to attaine to the knowledge of God, and of his Son Chriſt, or of the worke of redemption and ſaluation wrought by him: whereof it is, that when Peter acknowledged Chriſt to be the Sonne of God, our Sauiour telleth him, that fleſh and blood had not reuealed it vnto him, but his Father which is in heauen. To which purpoſe the Apoſtle alſo ſaith, that ſeeing the world by wiſdome knew not God, in the wiſedome of God, it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſſe of preaching to ſaue them that beleeue. Whereby it appeareth, that worldly wiſedome helpeth not the to knowledge of ſpirituall things, nor at all furthereth the ſaluation of our ſoules: but ſerueth onely worldlings (like the Oſtrich wings) to this vſe, to haſten their ſpeed, and make them to outrunne others vpon the earth, and in earthly things; but cannot helpe them to flie towards heauen, by the ſpirituall knowledge of God and our Sauiour Chriſt.

The reaſon why worldlings by their worldly wiſedome cannot vnderſtand the things of God, is, becauſe this ſpirituall knowledge is hid from them, as appeareth by that thankſgiuing of our Sauiour Chriſt: I giue thee thankes O father, Lord of heauen and earth, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe, and men of vnderſtanding, and haſt reuealed them vnto babes. And this reaſon our Sauiour rendreth why hee ſpake to worldlings in parables, and to his Diſciples plainely; Becauſe to theſe it was giuen to know the ſecrets of the kingdome of heauen, but to them it was not giuen. And this hapneth vnto them by the iuſt iudgement of God, that they ſhould thus be giuen ouer to their owne blindneſſe: firſt in regard of their pride, which cauſeth them to withdraw themſelues from God, and to ſhut their eyes againſt the light of his reuealed will, preferring farre before it, their owne wiſdome and deepe policie, vpon which can nothing follow but palpable darkneſſe; for as when the face of the Moone looketh directly vpon the Sun, from whom ſhee borroweth her brightneſſe, ſhee is full of light, but being auerted and turned from it, doth loſe all, ſauing only a ſhadow of light which is her owne: ſo when we ſet our face vpon the Sunne of righteouſnes Ieſus Chriſt, and depend vpon his inſtruction for our illumination, we are full of the light of ſauing knowledge; but when we turne our backs vpon him, we loſe all our brightnes, ſauing that light of nature and of carnall wiſdome, which in compariſon of this ſpirituall light of ſauing knowledge, is no better than a ſhadow. Beſides, when they are proud of this earthly traſh, the Lord will not giue them the true treaſure; and becauſe they glory ſo much in a glittering counter, that they forget the giuer, the Lord will not vouchſafe to beſtow vpon them his pure gold and richeſt iewels. Neither doe they, being conceited of their owne wiſedome, make any account of the wiſedome of God, and knowledge of his will, nor vſe meanes appointed by God to attaine vnto it: yea their owne carnall wiſedome ſo puffeth them vp with pride, that in compariſon thereof, they skorne the wiſedome of God, and of his Goſpell, and eſteeme it no better than meere fooliſhnes. And therefore no maruell if the Lord doe withhold his gifts from thoſe that doe contemne them, and deny to giue this precious pearle of heauenly wiſdome, and ſauing knowledge, to theſe filthy ſwine, who would but tread it vnder their feete. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that thoſe cannot behold the wiſdome of God, who are wiſe in their owne eyes; for as much as they are ſo farre diſtant from this light, as they are from being humble in themſelues: for whileſt the ſwelling of pride doth increaſe in their mindes, it doth dimme the ſight of contemplation, and when they begin to imagine that they ſhine more than others, then they de-

derſtandeth not the things of God.

*Matth.*11.25.

*Matth.*13.11.

1.*Cor.*1.18.

Gregor. Moral.
lib.37.cap,37.

Ad veram ſapientiam venire non poſſunt qui falſæ ſuæ ſapientiæ fiducia decipiuntur. Gregor.Moral. lib.17.cap.14.

depriue themſelues of the light of truth. Finally, worldly men make an idoll of their wiſedome, by truſting in it for their prouiſion and protection, more than vpon God himſelfe; and therefore Gods ſpirit, which is the fountaine of true wiſdome, will not lodge in that heart, where this idoll is erected, neither will God and this earthly Dagon dwell together. So the ſame author ſaith, that they cannot attaine vnto true wiſedome, which are deceiued with the confidence of their owne wiſedome, which is falſe and counterfeit, &c. And hence it is that the Apoſtle Paul perſwadeth thoſe who are carnally wiſe to become fooles, that ſo they might attaine vnto true wiſedome. Let no man (ſaith he) deceiue himſelfe. If any man among you ſeeme to be wiſe in this world, let him be a foole that he may be wiſe. And the former author exhorteth vs to forſake this hurtfull wiſedome, and to learne that laudable folly, becauſe it is written, that God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world to confound the wiſe.

1.Cor.3.18. Relinquamus noxam ſapientiam, diſcamus laudabilem fatuitatem. Gregor.Moral.lib.37.cap.27.
1.Cor.1.27.

§.Sect.15 Worldly wiſedome doth not certainly aſſure men of the vaine things of this life.

Secondly, this carnall and worldly wiſdome doth not certainely aſſure vs of the vaine things of this life, for the compaſſing whereof it imploieth all its ſtrength; for ſeeing it oppoſeth it ſelfe againſt God, and truſteth and dependeth wholly vpon its owne abilities, thinking to thriue in euill deſignes by the vſe of wicked meanes; therefore the wiſedome of God oppoſeth againſt it, bringing it to nothing, and making all theſe deepe policies and cunning deuices vaine and fruſtrate; as appeareth both by teſtimonies of Scripture & examples. David ſaith that the worldlings deceit is vaine, and notwithſtanding their policies God treadeth them downe when they depart from his ſtatutes. And the Apoſtle telleth vs, that God will deſtroy the wiſedome of the wiſe, and will caſt away the vnderſtanding of the prudent, that the wiſedome of the world, and the Princes of the world, commeth to nought: and that their wiſdom is fooliſhnes, becauſe he catcheth the wiſe in their owne craftineſſe. And howſoeuer their policies may ſeeme deepe in themſelues, and their counſels vnreſiſtable by humane power; yet ſeeing they plot them againſt God himſelfe they cannot ſtand: for, as the Wiſeman teacheth vs, there is no wiſdome, neither vnderſtanding nor counſel againſt the Lord. Examples hereof we haue in the builders of Babel, whoſe policies and power the Lord ſoone defeated, by confounding their languages. In Pharaoh, who when he thought to doe moſt wiſely, was fruſtrate of his end, and in deſpite of all his policy Gods people were deliuered, and hee deſtroied. In Achitophel, whoſe ſubtill counſell tooke no effect, becauſe, as the text ſaith, God was purpoſed to deſtroy it. In Haman, who with his cunning policies brought himſelfe to the gallowes, and aduanced him whom he intended to ruine.

Pſal.119.118.
1.Cor.1.19. Eſa.29.14.
1.Cor.2.6. Chap.3.19.
Prou 21.30.
Exod.1.10.
2.Sam.17.14.

§.Sect.16 God turneth worldly wiſdome into fooliſhnes.

Yea the Lord doth not only defeate their carnall wiſedome but alſo doth turne it to ridiculous folly, and when they thinke to be admired for their deepe policies, hee cauſeth them to bee skorned for their ſhallow fooliſhnes. Thus Eliphaz affirmeth, that God taketh the wiſe in their craftineſſe, and the counſell of the wicked is made fooliſh. And the Apoſtle ſaith that the Gentiles, when they profeſſed themſelues to bee wiſe, they became fooles. And elſewhere he demandeth where is the wiſe? where is the Scribe? where is the diſputer of this world? hath not God (ſaith hee) made the wiſedome of this world fooliſhnes? Not vnfitly therefore are fooles in our accuſtomed ſpeech called naturals, ſeeing the wiſeſt man who is but meerely naturall is a very foole, both becauſe hee is vtterly deſtitute of ſpirituall and ſauing wiſedome, and alſo becauſe the Lord turneth that carnall wiſdome he hath into ſottiſh fooliſhnes. So when Saul, leauing the Lord, began to be directed by his owne wiſedome, the Prophet Samuel telleth him, that hee had done fooliſhly, in not keeping the commandement of God. And into what extreame folly did the wiſe counſell of Achitophel bring him, cauſing him to hang himſelfe, for feare of a worſe turne; and to auoide the Kings deſerued diſpleaſure, by leaping into hell? The reaſon hereof is apparant, for though mans wiſedome be neuer ſo great, yet it is not infinite; he cannot foreſee future contingents, much leſſe diſpoſe them, and therefore whileſt he auoideth one dãger which he forſaw he is ouer taken by another which was without the compaſſe of his prouidence; and hauing ſetled his counſels vpon the ground of many probabilities or certainties, one whereof ſeemeth to cohere with another, ſome thing which either was not, or could not bee foreſeene, happening, diſordreth and confoundeth all the reſt, and ſo bringeth all his policies to nothing; like a chaine which falleth aſunder when but one linke thereof is broken. Who therefore would eſteeme of this wordly wiſedome, ſeeing it doth not with any certainty procure that good, for which it is only good, nor attaineth vnto oftentimes theſe worldly vanities, whereof when it faileth it ſelfe is vaine and to no vſe?

Iob 5.13. Eſa 44.25. Rom.1.22.
1.Cor.1.20.
1.Sam.13.13.

§.Sect.17 Worldly wiſdome hindereth the fruition of ſpirituall benefits.

But much leſſe doth it helpe vs to the fruition of ſpirituall benefits; for as I haue ſhewed, it is a great enemie to ſauing knowledge, and to the growth of all ſanctifying graces, making the ſeed of the word vnfruitful, & the meanes of ſaluation vnpowerful & vneffectual, whẽ it is ioyned with them, yea it ſo puffeth men vp with pride, that they neuer deſire to vſe the meanes of their ſpiritu-

1.Cor.8.1.

all welfare, and though they be diſeaſed to the death, yet feeling not their paine, they haue no care of being cured and recouered. And therefore one preferreth the knowledge which is ioyned with paine and griefe, before this which puffeth vp; becauſe paine deſireth that health which this ſwelling counterfeiteth; and hee is neere vnto health that deſireth it, becauſe hee that aſketh doth alſo receiue. And as it hindreth grace in this life, ſo alſo glory in the life to come; for ſo wholly is it taken vp with earthly things, that it hath no leiſure to thinke on heauenly; and trauelleth ſo much in atchieuing worldly deſires, that it hath no time to take paines in trauelling that way which leadeth to life eternall; and hee that buſieth himſelfe about other buſineſſe, and ſetteth not one foote forward in the way, ſhall neuer come to his iourneys end. So one ſaith, that this worldly wiſedome helpeth not forward to the attaining of eternall life; for it is wholly intent about honour, trifling profits in heaping vp of wealth; and not in treaſuring vp good workes. Finally, it is wholly conuerſant about worldly rudiments, being a wiſedome rather in pompous ſhew than in deed and truth. And ſuch is all Philoſophy which ſeeketh after ſtrange things, and is ignorant of it ſelfe; ſearcheth the climats of heauen, and the regions of the world which profit not, and knoweth not God and our Sauiour Chriſt. And who ſeeth not this verified by daily experience? for who are more ignorant euen in the principles of religion, who more prophanely contemne the ſeruice of God, and all meanes of their ſaluation, who more neglect prayer and preaching & all exerciſes of Chriſtian religion, than the great Politicians of the world, being ſo wholy taken vp with the affaires of earthly kingdomes, that they quite forget the way to the kingdome of heauen?

Finally, this worldly wiſedome doth not priuiledge men from Gods fearefull iudgements, neither will this ſubtill fence ward off the downe right blowes of his puniſhing hand: it cannot exempt men ſo much as from a temporary death, for as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, the wiſe men die, as well as the fooliſh, and leaue their riches vnto others. Much leſſe can it free them from eternall vengeance, which ſhall be inflicted on all that doe not know God, nor obey the Goſpel of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. For if Satan himſelfe, who farre excelleth all men in wiſdome and ſubtile pollicie, cannot with all his wit and long experience, find out any tricke or ſhift to eſcape damnation, how much leſſe ſhall they who come farre behind him in this skill and cunning? And if Achitophel the arch-politician, whoſe words were oracles, could not with all his wiſdome, when he was purſued with Gods iuſt vengeance, procure a pardon of himſelfe, for himſelfe, nor ſo much as intreate a repriue from his owne furie, but rather than iuſtice ſhould not bee executed became his owne hangman, and not waiting for outward force, did with his owne hands wilfully caſt his ſoule into hell fire: how much leſſe ſhall they obtaine a pardon of the righteous Iudge of heauen and earth, when at the great aſſiſes they ſhall be called to an account for all their Machiauellian trickes, and diuellish policies, wherwith they haue diſhonoured God, circumuented and iniured their neighbours, and made deepe wounds in their owne conſciences?

§. Sect.19. That worldly wiſedome bringeth with it much hurt.

But as this worldly wiſdome helpeth not, ſo contrariwiſe it exceedingly hurteth, for as it maketh men fooliſh vnto good, ſo exceeding politike and prone to act the workes of darkenes: according to Gods complaint by his Prophet; My people is fooliſh and haue not knowne me, they are fooliſh children, and haue no vnderſtanding; they are wiſe to do euill, but to doe well they haue no knowledge. And though in rapine, greedy ſcraping, and cunning circumuenting all that deale with them, they haue as many eyes as Argus, and are as ſharpe ſighted as the Eagle: yet in the workes of God, and in the duties of loue, they are as blind as beetles or moales. It hindreth men from profeſſion of religion, becauſe it is ioyned with worldly contempt, eſpecially when it is accompanied with the croſſe; thinking it great madneſſe to contend much for religion; to leaue their Prince, to follow the truth; and to hazard their preferments in the world, which they haue already in poſſeſſion, for ſome bare promiſes (as they account them) of better things in the world to come. It bringeth not with it ſo much as worldly ioy and pleaſure, but rather vexation of ſpirit, and much heauineſſe: And as the Wiſe man ſaith, who had moſt experience of it; In the multitude of wiſdome is much griefe, and he that increaſeth knowledge increaſeth ſorrow; for hee is ſtill iealous of his ſtate, and alwayes ready to caſt doubts: he hath more skill in foreſeeing euils, than in preuenting them; and long before they come he doth anticipate them with his feare and care; grieuing long before the cauſe of griefe approcheth, and making himſelfe preſently miſerable, becauſe hee expecteth miſery in time to come; yea and oftentimes he thus tormenteth himſelfe with a ſhadow, and through falſe feare indureth true ſorrow, the euill which he feared and expected neuer happening vnto him. But if the euil which he feareth commeth, then to what end ſerueth this worldly wiſdome, but to make it giue a deeper wound with ouer vehement apprehenſion? to gather arguments to amplifie his griefe, and with the waight of opinion, to make his burthen more intolerable? wher-

Ierem.4.22.

Iohn 7.48.and 12.42.

Eccleſ.1.18.

as thoſe whoſe wit hath a ſhorter reach; lay not hold of miſeries before they touch them, nor complaine of more than they ſenſibly feele; and oftentimes ſhadowes of ill grounded hopes, bring vnto them for the preſent, ſubſtantiall comfort.

*§.Sect.*20. Other euils into which worldly wiſedome plungeth men.

Valde difficile eſt vt is qui ſe ſapientem æſtimat, mentem ad humilitatem reducat, &c. Gregor. moral. lib. 16. cap. 17.

Rom. 8. 7.

Eſay 47. 10.

1. Cor. 3. 19.
Pſal. 7. 15. 16.

.Kings 12. 26. 27. 28.

1. Kings 13. 34.

Rom. 8. 6.

Againe, this worldly wiſdome puffeth men vp with pride, and maketh them to haue an ouerweening conceit of their owne excellencie; ſo that it is a thing as rare as a blacke Swan, to find a man both worldly wiſe and truly humble. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that it is hard to find one who conceiting himſelfe wiſe, reduceth his mind to humilitie, and either beleeueth thoſe who informe him in the truth, or layeth aſide his own peruerſe meaning and opinion. And this pride is ioyned with rebellion againſt God, for when they thinke themſelues too wiſe to depend vpon him, they become ſo fooliſh as to oppoſe againſt him. So the Apoſtle ſaith, that the wiſdome of the fleſh is enmity againſt God; and the Lord complaineth of Babylon, that her wiſdome and knowledge cauſed her to rebell; and to ſay in her heart I am and there is none elſe. And conſequently, this carnall and worldly wiſedome bringeth deſtruction: for when in pride of heart they oppoſe againſt God, then hee alſo oppoſeth againſt them, and their rebellion turneth to their owne ruine: yea he turneth their owne wiſdome to their deſtruction, and intangleth them in their owne wilie ſnares, which they haue laid for others. So it is ſaid, that God catcheth the wiſe in their owne craftineſſe, and after he hath digged a pit, he cauſeth him to fall into it himſelfe, and maketh his miſchiefe to returne vpon his owne head. And thus was Ieroboam inſnared in thoſe nets of ſubtilty which himſelfe made; for fearing leaſt the people by going to the Temple at Ieruſalem, and conuerſing with their brethren, the men of Iuda, might be perſwaded to leaue him, and to reunite themſelues to the kingdome of Dauid; he politikely deuiſed to ſtay them from this reuolt, by erecting golden calues in his owne countrey, that in them the people might worſhip God, and ſaue a labour in going further; but as the the Spirit of God obſerueth, This thing turned to ſinne vnto the houſe of Ieroboam, euen to roote it out, and deſtroy it from the face of the earth. And the like might bee ſaid of Saul, Achitophel, Haman and many others. And though theſe wiſe worldlings could with their ſubtile policies eſcape this deſtruction in this life, yet it will ſurely ouertake them in the life to come, and caſt them headlong into the pit of perdition: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, the wiſedome of the fleſh cauſeth death: that is, not onely the firſt death, whereby they die vnto righteouſneſſe & all goodneſſe, but alſo the ſecond death, whereby dying they ſhall neuer die, but liue to die that dying life, or liuing death, in thoſe intolerable and euerlaſting torments of hell fire.

§.Sect.
That wee to con worldly w dome labour that wh diuine and ſpirituall.

Seeing therefore this worldly and carnall wiſedome is ſo euill and wicked in it ſelfe; and the cauſe of ſo many euils vnto vs; let vs not enuie worldlings this their happines wherein they ſo much boaſt and glory; but learne to contemne and hate it, as being an enemy to God and our owne ſaluation. For what will it aduantage to vs to be admired for it in the world, and to be deſpiſed in the ſight of God? to haue it commend vs, and God and our owne conſciences to condemne vs? to bee aduanced by it to the counſel of Princes, and to haue Gods counſailes and the myſteries of our ſaluation hid and concealed from vs? Finally, what will it auaile vs, if by it wee ſhould bee exalted to the greateſt offices of ſtate, and higheſt places in the kingdome, if wee be excluded thereby from hauing ſo much as the loweſt place in the kingdome of heauen? What will it profit vs to gaine with our policies worldly vanities, and thoſe temporarie trifles of honours, riches and earthly pleaſures, of which wee haue not one dayes aſſurance, and to loſe thereby thoſe eternall ioyes and vnſpeakable pleaſures, which are at Gods right hand for euermore? Leauing therefore this carnall wiſedome, to carnall worldlings; let vs labour to be wiſe vnto God, and ſeeke thoſe things in the firſt place which tend to his glory, and the ſaluation of our owne ſoules. And let vs vſe all good meanes to furniſh our hearts and minds with all ſanctifying and ſauing graces, and eſpecially with that ſpirituall wiſedome, whereby wee vnderſtand his will reuealed in his word, and endeauour to conforme our ſelues vnto it in all holy obedience, both in our hearts and affections, and in our liues and conuerſations, and ſo will the Lord approue, loue and fauour vs in this life, and crowne vs with euerlaſting ioy and happineſſe in the life to come.

CHAP. X.

That worldly learning ſeuered from true godlineſſe, is to be contemned.

*§.Sect.*1.
That lea in it ſe rare is good and very c mendable.

ANd thus haue I ſhewed that meere ciuill vertues, and particularly the wiſdome of worldlings, may and ought to be contemned and deſpiſed of Chriſtians, as being not onely voyd of any worth and excellencie, which might inflame their loue; but alſo ſo full of ſinne and corruption, and ſo hurtfull and pernicious to thoſe who ſet their hearts on them, that they iuſtly deſerue to be hated and reiected. Now it followeth, that according to my order propounded, I adde ſome thing of the gifts and ornaments of the mind, namely, the gifts of humane learning, and of ſcience and knowledge which the world abuſeth as occaſions and grounds of dangerous tentations. And firſt I will ſpeake briefly of humane learning; conſiſting principally in the knowledge, memory and skilfull vſe of arts and languages; the which is in its owne nature good, as being an excellent gift of God, whereby the mind of man is adorned, and his naturall gifts and faculties much improued, poliſhed and perfected; ſo as it is a queſtion diſputable, whether nature, or this art & learning are of greater vſe & efficacie, for the directing & perfecting of ſuch human affaires, as are of greateſt excellencie. By it the harſhnes and roughneſſe of nature is mollified and mitigated, barbariſme baniſhed, ciuilitie preſerued and increaſed, all things which tend to the well-being and bettering of humane ſocietie perfected; and in a word, hereby the rough fallow grounds of our hearts are (as it were) ploughed vp, & fitted and prepared to receiue the ſeeds of diuine knowledge. In its owne nature therfore, humane learning is not onely good but very excellent, and is not contemned and hated by any, but thoſe who are rude and ignorant, yea it ought in this ſenſe to bee eſteemed and ſought after as a pearle of price, which is much to be preferred before all the treaſures and honors of the world; as being a ſingular ornament of the minde, which euen in the judgement of Gods Spirit maketh his faithfull ſeruants more praiſeworthy; for thus the holy Ghoſt commendeth Moſes for his excellent learning, ſaying, that he was learned in all the wiſdome of the Ægyptians, among whom learning in thoſe daies chiefely flouriſhed; and Apollos, whom he alſo praiſeth for his eloquence and knowledge.

But if we conſider of this learning as it is in vs, then is it to be eſteemed among things indifferent, the which according as they are vſed by the partie that hath them, are either good when they are well vſed, or euill when they are abuſed, and the nature of them infected and poyſoned through the contagion of our corrupt nature. And thus learning is good, when it is well vſed for thoſe good purpoſes aboue mentioned, to which in its owne nature it inclineth, and furthereth thoſe good ends for which God hath ordained it; and euill, when as it is abuſed through our corruption; as namely, when as we was ſo proud of this gift of God that wee forget the giuer, or inſult ouer our brethren who are not equalified with it, for as learning is the ornament of the minde, ſo humility is the ornament of learning. Secondly, when as being idle and fruitleſſe it helpeth not forward thoſe ends for which it was giuen vs, neither bettering the minde, nor ordering the affections, nor reforming the life and manners, nor increaſing ciuilitie, nor yet fitting and preparing vs for true religion; but contenting our ſelues with an idle theorie and ſpeculation, wee vſe our knowledge onely to know, as the Athenians were ſaid to vſe their mony, only to tell it; vnleſſe it be now and then, when wee affect the praiſe of learning in diſcourſing with others. Thirdly, when as we ſet our hearts wholly vpon it, and ſpend all our time in attaining vnto it, and hauing obtained it, doe finally reſt in it; as though it were the cauſe of our comming into the world, and the very end of our liues, to get humane learning; whereas it ought to bee the way, and not our marke and chiefe ſcope, and as an handmaide to trimme and adorne vs, and ſo to vſher vs into the preſence of vertue and true godlineſſe, and not to bee eſteemed and adored as our chiefe Lady and ſoueraigne Princeſſe. For this were to content our ſelues to liue in the porch, and neglect the beautifull lodging which it leadeth vnto; and like Penelope her ſuiters, to leaue the Miſtriſſe, and make loue to the handmaid. Fourthly, when as wee haue an inſatiable deſire in hoarding vp theſe rich treaſures, being neuer ſatisfied, but euer curiouſly prying into the very hidden bowels of natures ſecrets: for the Apoſtle telleth vs, there is a meaſure of our vnderſtanding, as well as of our ſtature, aboue which when it is racked, it bringeth as much torment to the mind, as the other to the body; and that there is a ſobriety in our ſoules, which contenteth it ſelfe with a competent portion of this ſpirituall food of learning and knowledge; the which being exceeded, cauſeth a ſurfet, and caſteth the minde into diuers and dangerous diſeaſes which are hardly cured. And another demandeth, if he be to be reproued, which gathereth needles ſuperfluities, and in his houſe ſetteth out to the ſhew an outward pompe of precious things; and he to be excuſed which is too much occupied, in gathering ſuperfluous abundance of learning and humane knowledge? Yea (ſaith he) to deſire to know more than enough, is to be reprehended, as being a kind of intemperance. Laſtly, this learning is abuſed when we ouer-value and eſteeme it, as whē we place therin our chiefe happines, or prefer it before the knowledge of God and his true religion, or the reſt of his ſanctifying and ſauing graces, aduancing the handmaides aboue their miſtriſſe, and eſteeming the confuſed languages of Babel, aboue that excellent language of the ſpirituall Canaan.

Rom. 12.3.

Plus ſcire velle quam ſit ſatis, intemperantiæ genus eſt. Senec. epiſt. 88.

§. Sect. 3. That worldly learning is to commeth vnto vs euill, worldly and wicked, and is therefore of all Gods ſeruants to be contemned and deſpiſed, loathed and abhorred. Now that wee may contemne this worldly and wicked learning, which is ſo much admired among carnall men who haue attained vnto it, let vs conſider, firſt, that it bringeth with it no true profit; and then, that it is the cauſe of much hurt. That this learning of carnall worldlings profiteth them not, it may appeare by induction of particulars. For what doth it auaile them to be good Logicians, when as they are neither skilfull in finding out what the good and perfect will of God is, nor able to iudge betweene that which is good and euill, nor to confute the ſubtill ſophiſtrie and dangerous paralogiſmes of our ſpirituall enemie the diuell, whereby out of falſe premiſes he frameth againſt their ſoules moſt damnable concluſions? What doth it profit them to bee good Rhetoricians in perſwading of others vnto what they liſt, by ſetting a faire gloſſe vpon a falſe cauſe, if they haue not found eloquence enough, to perſwade and aſſure themſelues of their owne ſaluation? What doth it helpe them to be good Grammarians, and to haue the knowledge of all tongues and languages, if there be no congruitie betweene Gods Law, and their life and manners, and hauing their heads full fraught with this learned skill, their hearts bee emptie of loue and charitie? What benefit haue they by their exquiſite skill in Arithmetike, whereby they are able to number numbers numberleſſe, if they want skill to number their daies, that they may apply their hearts to true wiſedome? What though like good Geometricians they could meaſure all the parts of the earth, and take the height, & demonſtrate the bignes of all the ſtars of heauen; if they haue no meaſure in their paſſions, appetites, and earthly deſires? What though like cunning Aſtronomers and Aſtrologians, they knew the number of the ſtarres, with all their motions, the conſtellations, aſpects, and influences of theſe celeſtiall bodies, and could neerely gueſſe at future contingents, and things to come; if their hearts and affections remaine faſtned to the earth, when their eyes are lift vp to heauen, ſo as they can neuer raiſe them on high with any ſpirituall and holy meditation? What though like cunning Muſitians, they be skilfull in all the moods, chords, & proportions; if they cannot accord the iarring diſcords of their owne paſſions, nor make that ſweete harmonie in Gods hearing, by cauſing their heart, tongue and hand to accord and agree together, in a holy & vpright profeſſion and practiſe of godlines & righteouſnes? What will it helpe skilfull Philoſophers, though they were able to vnbowell the ſecrets of nature, to know the cauſes and yeeld the reaſon of all things, which curioſitie her ſelfe could inquire; if they bee ignorant of the great Creator, and of themſelues, neither knowing the corruption of their nature, nor the meanes how to be freed frō it? What will it profit them if like skilful Hiſtorians, they can relate what hath bin don in all countries in all ages, if they be not wel acquainted with the hiſtorie of the Bible, & the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt, nor know what he hath done for their ſaluation? What though like cunning Lawyers they bee learned in the Lawes of men, if they be ignorant in the Law of God, and lawleſſe and licencious in their liues and conuerſations? What will it auaile them if being skilfull Phyſitians, they can gueſſe at other mens diſeaſes by feeling of their pulſes and ſeeing their vrines, and can applie fit remedies for the curing of their bodies; if they cannot iudge of the diſtempered paſſions of their owne hearts, nor know by what meanes their ſoules ſick in ſin, may be cured and recouered? And to conclude, what benefit ſhould wee reape, though being learned Diuines, wee are able to diſpute of the deepe myſteries of religion; if wee doe not make a holy vſe of this knowledge, for the ſanctifying of our hearts, and the reforming of our liues and conuerſations?

In which reſpects when learning is abuſed, it degenerateth from its owne nature, & becommeth be contemned, firſt becauſe it doth not profit vs.

1.Cor.13.2.

§. Sect. 4. That world learning is vaine, and o no excel

Secondly, the vnprofitablenes of worldly learning hereby is manifeſt, in that it is vaine and of no excellency; for firſt it is ſo farre from conferring of true wiſdome, conſiſting in the knowledge and feare of God, that it is oftentimes disioined from that wiſdome which is morall and ciuill, and according to the prouerbe which is grounded vpon common experience, The learnedeſt Clerkes are not alwayes the wiſeſt men; they being ſo wedded to their book-learning and the theorie of knowledge in ſpeculation only, that they neglect that practicall knowledge which is chiefly perfected by obſeruation and experience. Now, as one ſaith, A man learned and vnwiſe, is like an aſſe decked with coſtly ornaments, which make him to bee more looked on, but not more eſteemed. Secondly, the vanity of worldly learning may appeare, in that it hath in it no ſelf excellencie to giue contentment to him that hath it by its owne worth, vnleſſe that oſtentation thereof be made vnto others, that ſo they may admire and praiſe it. To which purpoſe the Satyriſt ſaith, that it nought auaileth to know, vnleſſe another knoweth that thou haſt this knowledge; but this is that which is thought worth eſteeme, to be pointed at with the finger, and to bee noted for excellencie aboue others. Laſtly, worldly learning without true godlineſſe is vaine, becauſe it doth not fill and ſatisfie him that hath it; for hee that hath ſpent moſt paines in ſtudy, and hath at-attained to the greateſt meaſure of Learning and Knowledge, is no more contented or ſatiſfied, than he was when he had learned but the firſt rudiments: becauſe the more hee knoweth, the more hee ſeeth his want of knowledge; and the higheſt degree of Learning in this ſtate of imperfection, conſiſteth in the knowledge of a mans own ignorance. And therefore the Wiſe man ſaith, that hee that increaſeth knowledge increaſeth griefe, becauſe hee doth not receiue ſo much pleaſure by that which he hath found out, as ſorrow for that vnto which hee is not able to attaine; like vnto thoſe who being yet athirſt are pulled from the waters, or that cannot hold in their hands that which they thinke they haue, or like vnto thoſe who are inlightned with the brightneſſe of the lightning; which light preſently leauing them, they remayne in more groſſe darkneſſe than before. And this vanity of humane Learning is the cauſe why the Saints of God haue ſo contemned it; for hauing attained to the knowledge of God and his will, of our Sauiour Chriſt, and the work of ſaluation wrought by him, they haue in compariſon of this excellent knowledge, accounted the other baſe and of no worth. An example whereof we haue in Paul, who being indued with a great meaſure of this humane Learning, contemneth it, profeſſing that he cared not to know any thing, ſaue Ieſus Chriſt and him crucified. As alſo in the Epheſians, who being conuerted to the faith, and indued with ſome meaſure of ſauing knowledge, brought their Bookes, out of which they had learned their curious Arts, and burned them before all men, the price whereof amounted to fiftie thouſand pieces of ſiluer.

Scire tuum nihil eſt, niſi te ſcire hoc ſciat alter. At pul chrum eſt d monſtrari & dicier, hic eſ Perſ. Sat.

Laſtly, the vnprofitableneſſe of worldly Learning hereby appeareth, in that it furthereth not our ſaluation, nor bringeth vs neerer vnto God, neither in this life by grace, nor by glory in the life to come: for it helpeth not at all to inrich vs with any of Gods ſanctifying and ſauing graces, but excelling all others in this kind of Learning, we may bee as miſerably poore in thoſe ineſtimable treaſures as the moſt ſimple Idiots. And this the examples of former times and of our owne dayes doe plainly manifeſt: for who more learned than the Ægyptians, and who more groſſe Idolaters? Who more learned than Pharaohs Inchanters, and Aſtrologians, and who more Deuilliſh Sorcerers? who more learned than the Scribes and Phariſies, and who more graceleſſe and wicked? Finally, who more learned than thoſe great Clearkes, and profound Doctours, which vphold (vpon the ſtrength of their ſhoulders) the declining Monarchy of the Babyloniſh Antichriſt, and yet who more licentious in their liues? who more malicious oppoſers againſt the Kingdome and Truth of Ieſus Chriſt? who more cruell perſecuters of the Saints of God. But let vs deſcend to more particulars, this worldly learning doth not at al inlighten our minds with ſauing knowledge, nor inricheth our vnderſtanding with ſpirituall wiſdome; as may alſo appeare by the former examples; for there was neuer any in their times excelled thoſe before named in this learning; and neuer any more blindly ignorant, euen in the rudiments and firſt principles of true Religion. In which reſpect, they may fitly bee compared to Battes and Owles, which ſee very acutely in the darke, but are dim-ſighted and pur-blind when the Sunne ſhineth: ſo theſe remayning in naturall darkneſſe, ſee very cleerly the vnprofitable and nice quiddities of vaine Philoſophy, but when the light of the Goſpell cleerly ſhineth, they are not thereby inlightned, for their Owle-like eyes cannot endure this brightneſſe, neither doth it helpe their ſight, but makes them more pur-blind than before. So alſo it doth not profit vs for the attaining of faith, yea, rather it confirmeth and encreaſeth naturall infidelitie; for whereas faith is of things not ſeene, and not grounded on ſenſe, but reſteth vpon Gods Word and promiſes, as being truth it ſelfe which cannot deceiue, theſe learned Worldlings credit no more than they ſee, nor beleeue any thing which may not bee demonſtrated by the rules of their Learning. And for this we haue the Phariſies teſtimonie againſt themſelues, where ſpeaking to their ſeruants, who were aſtoniſhed with Chriſts doctrine, they demand, if any of the Rulers and Phariſies beleeue in Chriſt? But (ſay they) this people that know not the Law are curſed. And ſo we ſhall find that the doctrine of faith taught by the Apoſtle Paul, was neuer more vnprofitable and vnfruitfull, than among the Athenians, neuer more oppoſed, nor more derided, nor euer fewer in any place by ſo much preaching conuerted to the faith, than among theſe learned Philoſophers. The like might bee ſaid of all other ſanctifying graces: for who are more dotingly fond of worldly vanities, of riches, pleaſures and preferments, and ſhew leſſe loue to God in their holy obedience, than the learned Worldlings? who truſt more in the arme of fleſh and inferiour meanes when they haue them, or are more deſperately diſcouraged and diſcomfited when theſe meanes faile them? Who ſhew leſſe hope than they, when they are in any affliction or vpon their ſicke beds? who leſſe feare of God in all their proceedings? of leſſe humilitie in their carriage and conuerſation? In a word, who are more barren and fruitleſſe in good works, in the workes of Iuſtice, Charity and Compaſſion towards their brethren?

Hebr.11.1.

Iohn 7.48.

Acts 17.18,32.

§.Sect.6.
Worldly learning helpeth

And as it is no furtherance in attaining vnto Gods graces in this life, ſo neither in ob-not to the attayning of life eternall.

obtayning glory in the life to come; for theſe inſeparably goe together, neither doth any euer come into this Citie of glory, but hee hath his entrance by the Suburbs of grace. And hence it is that the Lord paſſing by in all ages theſe learned Worldlings, maketh choice of ſimple and vnlettered men to conuert and ſaue them. Thus he left the learned Egyptians, and made the ſimple Iſraelites his Church and people; hee paſſed by Amaziah chiefe Prieſt to Ierobóam, and chuſeth ignorant Amos for his ambaſſage: hee neglected the famouſly-learned Scribes and Phariſies, and maketh choice of ſilly fiſher men to be his Apoſtles and Diſciples: and ſo in latter times hee hath not called and conuerted the great Rabbines of the earth, the ſubtile-learned Schoolemen, and profound Doctors of the Romiſh Babylon; but ſuch ſilly and ſimple men, whom in compariſon of themſelues, they eſteeme ignorant and very Idiots.

Amos 7.14.

§. Sect. 7. That worldly learning much hurteth thoſe which ſet their hearts vpon it.

And thus it appeareth that worldly learning doth not profit. But if we conſider thereof aright, wee ſhall finde that it alſo much hurteth them who moſt eſteeme it, and think themſelues beſt furniſhed with it: whereof it is that the Apoſtle Paul doth not only diſſwade vs from imbracing it as a friend, but alſo warneth vs to take heed of it, as of a mortall enemy: Beware (ſaith hee) leſt there be any man that ſpoyle you, through Philoſophie and vaine deceit. For it maketh thoſe who are indued with it, to reſt in it, and ſo bewitcheth them with pleaſure and delight, that they thinke their whole life too little to ſatisfie their curioſitie, and to furniſh them with theſe learned treaſures: in the meane time vtterly neglecting the ſtudy of the Scriptures, which alone are ſufficient to make them wiſe to their ſaluation. It puffeth them vp with pride, and maketh them in the ouer-weening conceit of their owne excellencies to contemne all others, and that which is worſt of all, to deſpiſe the ſimplicitie of the Scriptures, and to eſteeme the preaching of the Goſpell meere fooliſhneſſe. Yea and becauſe they diſdaine to be learned after the vulgar faſhion, they coine new conceits, and after much paines and long trauaile they are deliuered of the vnnaturall births, and miſhapen monſters of errour and falſhood, which they ſo curiouſly adorne with their pleaſing ornaments of wit, eloquence and ſubtile learning, that their deformities are not diſcerned by an ordinary vnderſtanding, nor ſeeme vnhandſome to an vnjudicious beholder. In ſo much as it may truly be ſaid, that as pride is the Father, ſo this worldly learning is the Mother of all dangerous Errours and damnable Hereſies: and ſeldome (as one ſaith) haue there beene any great Errours, which haue not beene the of-ſpring of great wits. And as they are readie to broach Errours and Hereſies, ſo alſo are they moſt ſtiffe in mayntaining and defending them, their learning making them able to contend, and their pride impatient of receiuing any foile.

*Col.*2.8.

1.*Cor.*1.23.

Magni rarò errores, niſi ex magnis prodiere ingenijs.

§. Sect. That worl learning be conte in compa of the tru knowled God,

And therefore ſeeing this wordly learning, being ſeuered from ſauing wiſdome and true godlineſſe, doth not profit vs, as being vaine and of no excellency; ſeeing it doth not inrich vs with Gods ſpirituall graces, nor at all furthereth the ſaluation of our ſoules; yea ſeeing it doth much hurt vs, by making vs more proud and erroneous, ſchiſmaticall and hereticall; let vs not ſuffer our ſelues to be bewitched with the alluring notes of this Syren. Let vs not ouer-value this well decked worldly vanitie, preferring it to the true knowledge of God and his ſauing grace; but eſteeming a dram of ſpiritual wiſdom & true pietie, before many pounds of this worldly learning, let vs neglect it, or rather purge it from this worldly filth of ſin & corruption, & ſetting our hearts chiefly on that heauenly and diuine learning, which is taught in the Scriptures, by that neuer erring Schoolemaſter, Gods holy Spirit, let vs pull downe this humane learning out of the ſeat of ſoueraigntie, and make it attend as an humble handmaid, on that heauenly and diuine Princeſſe ſpirituall wiſedome and ſauing knowledge, which alone maketh vs wiſe vnto God, and giueth vs aſſurance of the ſaluation of our ſoules.

Chap. XI.

That worldly Sciences are of no worth, in compariſon of ſpirituall knowledge and ſauing grace.

§. Sect. Arts and Sciences Scriptures, of God.

IN the next place we are to ſpeak of the tentations which ariſe from worldly ſcience and knowledge; the which are either the skill and knowledge of Ciuill and Mechanicall Arts and Sciences, or of the holy Scriptures, and of the poines of Chriſtian Religion; both which are in themſelues good, as being the common gifts of Gods Spirit, and his profitable talents which being well vſed, doe much redound to the glory of God, the author of them, and to the good of the Church and Common-wealth, for whoſe ſake principally theſe gifts of God were conferred and beſtowed. And this appeareth in the example of Aholiab and Bezaliel, of whom it is ſaid, that the Lord called them by name, and filled them with his ſpirit, in wiſdome and vnderſtanding, and in knowledge and in all workmanſhip, to finde out curious workes, to worke in gold, and in ſiluer, and in braſſe; alſo in the art to ſet ſtones, and to carue in timber, and to worke all manner of workmanſhip for the ſeruice of the Sanctuarie. And therefore Exod.31.2. 3.and 36.

fore theſe Arts and Sciences are not ſimply to bee contemned, yea rather they are to bee much valued and eſteemed, as being Gods good gifts, which hee hath beſtowed vpon ſome ſpeciall men, for his owne glory, and the common good of humane Societies; but only as they are abuſed by carnall worldlings excelling in them.

And thus they abuſe them, firſt, when in ſight of their owne excellencie they are puffed vp in pride, and contemne others, eſpecially of their owne facultie, who haue not attained vnto their skill. Secondly, when they ſet their hearts vpon them, preferring and eſteeming them before Gods ſpirituall graces and ſanctifying gifts, and neglecting them together with the meanes whereby they may attaine vnto them, whileſt they ſet and imploy all their deſires and endeauours about theſe earthly Sciences. And laſtly, when as they ſeuer theſe common gifts of the Spirit, from Gods ſanctifying and ſauing graces, being content to remayne vtterly deſtitute of the true feare of God, Knowledge, Faith, Repentance, and the reſt; as though they needed them not, being qualified aboue others with this worldly skill.

But in theſe reſpects, theſe Sciences and cunning skill, though good in themſelues, are to be contemned and deſpiſed: for if it bee a great ſinne to be proud of Learning and the knowledge of ingenuous and Liberall Arts, yea, of morall vertues and ciuill wiſdome; and if they are to be all contemned and deſpiſed, when they come in compariſon of Gods holy and heauenly graces; then how much more is it a grieuous ſin to waxe proud of theſe inferiour Sciences; or in reſpect of ſuch contemptible qualities, to ſet light by, and contemne thoſe vnualuable excellencies and heauenly treaſures? Which ſinne that all may auoid, and may learne to deſpiſe theſe Sciences as baſe trifles, when they come in compariſon with the ſauing knowledge of Gods Truth, and our aſſurance of his ſpirituall treaſures and eternall happineſſe; let them conſider that theſe Sciences are but common gifts beſtowed both vpon the Elect and Reprobates, and vpon Pagans as well as Chriſtians, and therefore notwithſtanding them, if they want Gods ſpirituall and ſanctifying graces, they are ſtill in the ſtate of death and condemnation; let them know that God hath giuen them theſe talents not that they ſhould bee puffed vp in pride, or neglecting his more excellent gifts, they ſhould ſet their hearts on them, but that they ſhould vſe them to the glory of him who beſtowed them, and the good of the Church and Common-wealth; and therefore if they abuſe them to contrary ends, the Lord will take away from them his gifts; or if he ſuffer them to haue the vſe of them, it ſhall bee to bring vpon them a more heauy judgment, and to increaſe their condemnation at the day of his generall Aſſiſes, for their great abuſe of his rich talents. Finally, let them remember that theſe worldly Sciences ſerue but to procure vnto them ſome temporary profit or aduancement, which is but of ſmall worth, and of momentany continuance; and therefore they ſhall ſhew extreame folly if they more highly eſteeme, and take more care, and ſpend more labour, in compaſſing theſe tranſitory trifles, than in attayning vnto the vnualuable riches of Gods grace, and that eternall waight of glory, and vnſpeakable happineſſe in his Kingdome.

CHAP. XII.

That vnfruitfull knowledge of God and his true Religion is vaine and vnprofitable.

§. Sect. 1. Knowledge of God and his truth in it ſelfe an excellent gift of God; but yet liable to the abuſe of worldlings.

THe other kind of Science, which I propounded to ſpeake of, is the knowledge of God, and of the doctrine of his true Religion, which in his Word he hath reuealed vnto vs. The which in it ſelfe is an excellent gift and grace of Gods Spirit, and farre to be preferred before Worldly Sciences, humane Learning, yea, aboue all meerely morall and ciuill vertues; as being that ſpirituall Light which guideth vs in the paths of righteouſneſſe, that lead vs to Gods Kingdome, and the very ground and foundation of all ſanctifying and ſauing graces; for wee cannot loue God, nor beleeue, hope and truſt in him, vnleſſe wee know him; nor yeeld any obedience vnto him, vnleſſe we be acquainted with his Word, wherein he hath reuealed his will vnto vs. But yet this excellent gift of God is lyable to the abuſe of worldlings; (or if not that ſpeciall grace of ſauing knowledge which is alwayes accompanied with all other ſpirituall gifts, yet at leaſt the counterfeit of this pure gold, which is ſo cunningly ſtamped and coyned, that it cannot poſſibly be diſcerned from the other, vnleſſe it be brought to the touchſtone of true obedience) and ſo is made the ground of diuers dangerous tentations: as namely, when men can no longer be led hood-winckt with ignorance, in the broad way that leadeth to deſtruction, but plainly diſcerne that the knowledge of God and his will is moſt neceſſary to their ſaluation, then the Deuill and the World giue them liberty to take what paines they will in attayning vnto the knowledge of Gods true Religion, yea, and oftentimes egge them on, when as they haue found out ſome neceſſary knowledge, curiouſly to pry into Gods hidden ſecrets, and to ſearch out that knowledge which is ſuperfluous and vnneceſſary, to the end that in the meane time they may neglect the knowledge of things which are of better vſe. And when they haue proceeded thusfarre, then they labour to make them proud of this knowledge, and to take all their delight in this ſpeculatiue ſtudy and contemplation, and in ſetting it forth to the prayſe of men, in all their diſcourſes; but withall they mooue them to reſt in this bare knowledge, as being ſufficient to gaine for them the glory of the World, and of Heauen too; ſeuering it in the meanetime, from all ſanctifying and ſauing graces, and from the fruitfull practice of that they know, in holy obedience to Gods will.

§. Sect.2. That our knowledge is maymed and imperfect.

Which tentations that we may ouercome, let vs conſider, that this idle knowledge (which ſwimmeth in the braine, and ſanctifieth not the heart; but being wholly taken vp, and exerciſed in ſpeculation & diſcourſe, is ſeuered from the true loue of God and our Neighbour, and from all ſanctifying and ſauing graces, as alſo from the practice and holy vſe of that we know in true obedience) is not at all to bee eſteemed of vs, but to be vtterly deſpiſed and contemned: firſt, becauſe it is in it ſelfe of no worth or excellency: Secondly, becauſe to vs it is vnprofitable: Thirdly, becauſe it is hurtfull and pernicious. For the firſt, this idle knowledge which is in Worldlings, is of no worth or excellency, becauſe it is imperfect and but a dimme ſhadow, in compariſon of the cleere Light; for that we know is nothing in compariſon of that we know not; neither doe we ſee theſe few things with the cleere eye of a diſtinct vnderſtanding, but (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) as it is were in a glaſſe dimmely and darkly; and when wee thinke that wee ſoare an high pitch aboue others, wee doe in truth but creepe vpon the earth; or if at all wee are carried aloft, it is in opinion only, and that with the wings of pride and ſelfe-loue, and not of knowledge and vnderſtanding. For if euen the Apoſtle himſelfe, who had an exceeding meaſure of knowledge in compariſon of vs, being from his childhood brought vp in the ſtudy of the Scriptures, and of other Learning, and after his calling, not onely extraordinarily inlightened with the illumination of Gods Spirit, but alſo had receiued from God (as himſelfe ſaith) abundance of reuelations; did neuertheleſſe confeſſe in his owne and others behalfe, that they did know but in part; and that they know nothing as they ought to know, who haue a conceit that they know any thing: then what ſhall wee thinke of our ſelues, who are but pur-blind in compariſon of his cleere ſight; and ſottiſhly ignorant in reſpect of his great knowledge and vnderſtanding? If the wiſe Agur complayneth that he had not the vnderſtanding of a man in him, and that he had not learned wiſdome, nor attained to the knowledge of holy things: then ſurely wee who come ſo farre ſhort of him, may juſtly acknowledge that wee are in the number of thoſe, who are beaſts by their owne knowledge, as the Prophet Ieremy ſpeaketh. And if wee would know vnto what beaſt wee may fitly compare and liken our ſelues in reſpect of our naturall ignorance of ſpirituall things; it is not the ſubtile Dogge, the wily Fox, or the vnderſtanding Ape, but as Zophar telleth vs, wee are herein like the wilde Aſſe Colt, which of all other beaſts is moſt ſottiſh by nature, & being wilde hath not any tincture of wit by humane ſociety and inſtruction, and being not the Aſſe her ſelfe, but her yong Colt, hath no increaſe of naturall wit by age and brutiſh experience. Vaine man (ſaith he) would be wiſe, though man borne is like a wilde Aſſe Colt.

1.Cor.13 12.

2.Cor.12,7.

1.Cor.13.9,12.

1.Cor.8.2.

Prou.30.2,3.

Ier.10.14.

Iob 11.12.

§. Sect.3. That va full know is vaine a to no purp

Againe, there is little cauſe that we ſhould be proud of this ſmall knowledge which we haue, or that wee ſhould thinke it of any worth or excellency, being ſeuered from piety and true obedience, becauſe it is vaine and to no purpoſe; for if that be vaine which attaineth not to its end, and if the end of all Science and knowledge be vſe and practice; then muſt it needs follow, that ſeeing the end of our knowledge is not to know; but that we ſhould make an holy vſe of it, and cauſe it to ſerue as a ſpirituall eye to guide vs in obedience, through the whole courſe of our life and conuerſation; then that knowledge which is idle and fruitleſſe, ſwimming in the braine, and onely exerciſed in ſpeculation, and not in action hath not attained to his end, and is therefore vaine; and conſequently, no man hath cauſe to bee proud of this knowledge; ſeeing hee that doth excell therein, doth but excell in worthleſſe vanitie. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that ſome deſire knowledge to this end, that they may only know, and this is filthy curioſitie; and there are ſome that deſire to know, that they may ſet their knowledge out to the ſale, offering to ſell it for mony or preferments; and this is diſhoneſt gaine, to ſell as a ſlaue that which was free-borne: and there are ſome who deſire to know, that they may be knowne; and this is fooliſh vanity. Idle knowledge therefore is to bee contemned as a thing vaine and of no value; yea, ſo worthleſſe it is, that the leaſt will to good, and weakeſt deſire to pleaſe God, is much to be preferred before it. And though it were ſuppoſed, that there were in this knowledge ſome worth and excellencie; yet the ſmalleſt ſparke of true Charity and Piety were much to bee preferred before it: ſeeing long after this light of worldly knowledge is vaniſhed, the heat of true loue remayneth euen for euer: for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that loue doth neuer fall away, though that propheſyings be aboliſhed, or the tongues ceaſe, or knowledge vaniſh away.

Bern Cant

But

Sect.4. vnfruit- knowledge profita-

r.13.2.

ſenten. ard.ſuper ſerm.36.

But as it is in it ſelfe vaine, ſo it is vnto vs vnprofitable, when it is ſeuered from true Charitie and the feare of God: and this the Apoſtle plainly affirmeth, that if he had the gift of prophecie, and knew all ſecrets and all knowledge, and had not loue, it were all nothing worth, yea, he himſelfe were nothing. And another ſaith, that we do not truly know that which is good, vnleſſe we attaine vnto it to this end, that we may practiſe it; and that hee doth vnprofitably meditate in the Law of God, which laboureth to retaine that in his memory, which hee hath no purpoſe to practiſe in his actions. For this idle knowledge doth not beget or nouriſh in vs the ſauing graces of Gods Spirit, nor makes vs any whit more ſtrong and vigorous in our ſpirituall eſtate, yea, rather it impaireth our ſoules health, and weakeneth our ſtrength in grace. In which reſpect knowledge idlely ſwimming in the braine, is fitly compared to meat floting on the ſtomacke which is vndigeſted; for as ſuch meate for want of fit concoction doth not nouriſh vs, but begetteth ill humours and corrupteth the body: ſo much knowledge negligently caſt into the ſtomack of the ſoule, which is the memory, if it bee not concocted with the heat of Charity, and ſo transfuſed and digeſted into the ſeuerall parts, and (as it were) the outward limmes of the ſoule, namely, our manners and actions, that ſo it ſelfe may be made good by the things it knoweth, the life and manners according with it, ſhall not that knowledge for want of digeſtion turne into the corrupt humours of ſinne, and in ſtead of nouriſhing vs impaire our ſpirituall health, ſwelling vs with the winde of pride, and gnawing and griping vs with that torturing Collicke of an euill conſcience? neither will it helpe forward our journey towards our heauenly Country, but when we mount vp higheſt in our owne proud conceit, thoſe waxen wings of knowledge and ſpeculation, not enduring the heat of Gods juſtice, will moſt faile vs when wee moſt truſt in them, and let vs fall without hope or helpe into that bottomleſſe Gulfe of Hell and condemnation. And as it little profiteth a man for the running of a race and gaining of the Garland, though he plainly ſee the way, and diſcerne the Goale, if hee either idlely lie ſtill and refuſe to run, or is ſtarke lame in all his limmes, and not able to ſet one foot forward in the way: ſo it will nought auaile for the obtayning of this Crowne of eternall happineſſe, that wee clearly ſee the way of righteouſneſſe, if we wilfully refuſe to goe in it, or wanting all other vertues, which are the ſinewes and ſtrength of the ſoule, we, through this ſpirituall lameneſſe, be vnable to ſet forward in the race.

Sect.5. vnfruit- full knowledge doth much hurt vs; and firſt in reſpect of our bodies.

And thus it appeareth that this idle and vnfruitfull knowledge doth not profit vs, and therefore is not to bee valued or eſteemed: but much more are wee to deſpiſe and contemne it, ſeeing it doth not onely not bring vs any good, but alſo much hurt and diſaduantage, and that both in this life and in the life to come: in this life it hurteth both our bodies and our ſoules; our bodies by weakning them, our ſoules by vexing and corrupting them. For though this knowledge bee idle, light and vaine, yet it is not idlely procured, or bought with the light Coyne of ſome ſmall labour, but it is purchaſed at deare rates, and attained vnto with much ſtudy and exceſſiue paines, which abateth the ſtrength, impaireth the health, and oftentimes bringeth the body into deepe conſumptions, and deadly diſeaſes. Yea, the more vaine the knowledge is, the more labour commonly it requireth, as being much more myſticall and ſubtilly curious, than that which is ſolid and ſubſtantial. To which purpoſe, one ſayth, that only vnprofitable truth lyeth hidden in the deepe; and that wee haue no cauſe to complaine of hard meaſure; becauſe there is nothing difficult in finding out, but that whoſe finding is accompanied with this only fruit, that wee haue found it; and whatſoeuer may ſerue to make vs better & more bleſſed, that lyeth in the open plain, & neere at hand. In which reſpect theſe curious pryers and ſearchers into hidden Myſteries and abſtruſe knowledge, are not vnfitly compared to Spiders, who ſpend their owne bowels to make their curiouſly wrought webs, which a blaſt of winde, or a ſmall bruſh of a beſome, doe take away, and bring to nothing: for ſo theſe doe ſpend their ſtrength, impayre their health, and ſhorten their liues, in attayning ſuch a ſlight and vaine knowledge, as will not vphold them, when the leaſt blaſt of tentation bloweth vpon them; and toyle themſelues in taking farre greater paines to attaine vnto this frothy, idle, and vnprofitable knowledge, which cannot priuiledge them from death and deſtruction, than they ſhould need to take for the obtayning of that ſound, ſubſtantiall, and ſauing Knowledge, which bringeth with it euerlaſting bleſſedneſſe. And in the ſame reſpect their curious knowledge, may fitly be reſembled to curious imagery, grauen or carued in ſumptuous buildings; which ſeruing only for ornament and ſhew, doth neuertheleſſe require more coſt and labour, than the mayne poſts and pillars which vphold the building, & make it profitable for the vſe of the inhabitants; for ſo theſe idle ſpeculations, ſeruing only for ornament and diſcourſe, and to gaine the applauſe and wonder of men to thoſe that haue them, for their ſubtile wits, and deepe reaches, doe require more ſtudy and labour, and ſpend more time in attayning to them, than the chiefe pillars, and fundamentall

Nullius rei difficilis inuentio eſt, niſi cuius inuenta, hic vnus fructus eſt, inueniſſe, &c. Senec.lib.7.de benef.cap.1.

principles of Chriſtian Religion, which are neceſſarily required to our building vp in our holy faith, and to the euerlaſting ſaluation of our bodies and ſoules.

§. Sect. 6. Vnfruitfull knowledge much hurteth vs in reſpect of our ſoules, firſt, as it puffeth vs vp with pride.

And as this vaine and vnfruitfull Knowledge doth hurt our bodies; ſo alſo our ſoules by corrupting and defiling them with ſinne. For when worldly minded men finde that they doe herein excell others, in ſtead of being thankfull vnto God for his gifts, or humbled in conſideration of that account which they are to make of the Lords talent, they are preſently puffed vp with pride, and both forget God, and diſdaine their brethren. And thus the Apoſtle ſaith, that knowledge puffeth vp, but loue edifieth. Yea, and not only they who haue attayned vnto this knowledge in greateſt meaſure, are ſubiect to this ſwelling diſeaſe of pride (for as I ſaid, oftentimes thoſe who haue moſt knowledge, doe the more cleerely ſee how many things they know not, and therefore are no more exalted with the conceit of that they know, than deiected and humbled in the ſight of their ignorance) but alſo (yea and eſpecially) thoſe who haue but a ſmattering of knowledge, and are but a little warmed in this Sun-ſhine, are ſo puffed vp in conceite thereof, that they forget God, and themſelues too. And this reaſon the Apoſtle rendreth, why hee would not haue a Biſhop to bee a young Schollar, leſt (meaſuring his worth according to his aduancement) hee ſhould be puffed vp, and ſo fall into the condemnation of the Deuill. And hereof it is that one ſayth, the ſwelling Hill of Pride raiſed vpon the opinion of a mans owne knowledge, is the worſt and moſt dangerous; vpon which neuertheleſſe wee may ſee euen at this day, many of the ſonnes of Adam, creeping along with great deſire; as if they did not know how much their Father in clyming of that Hill, deſcended, yea, how grieuouſly he fell, and how fearefully by his fall, his whole Poſterity was deiected and bruiſed in pieces. The wounds which were inflicted on thee in aſcending this Hill, although thou waſt yet in thy Fathers loynes, are not yet cured; and doeſt thou now in thine owne perſon ſtriue to clime vpon it, and ſo to make the laſt errour worſe than the firſt? O that this damnable deſire ſhould ſtill poſſeſſe wretched men! O yee ſonnes of men, how long being ſlow in heart, will you loue vanity, and ſeeke lies!

1. Cor. 8. 1.

1. Tim. 3. 6.

Bernard. de Aſcenſ. domini ſerm. 4.

Pſal. 4. 2.

§. Sect. 7. Vnfruitfull knowledge aggrauates our other ſinnes.

But as this idle and vnfruitfull knowledge doth make men ſwell in pride, and ſelfe-conceit, ſo doth it make all our other ſins to ſwel alſo in Gods ſight, increaſing their guilt, and making their faultineſſe, great and monſtrous. For whereas ignorance, if it be not wilfull (though it doth not take ſinne away, yet) it much leſſeneth it, knowledge contrariwiſe doth much aggrauate it, making it to be contemptuous, and rebellious; againſt the conſcience, and preſumptuous, as being committed wittingly & willingly, and with a high hand againſt God, neglecting and deſpiſing his will and Commandements reuealed vnto vs. And this appeareth by our Sauiours cenſure of the Scribes and Phariſies; If (ſaith hee) yee were blinde, yee ſhould not haue ſinne; but now yee ſay, we ſee, therefore your ſinne remayneth. And the Apoſtle implyeth, that if his ſinnes of blaſphemy and perſecution, had beene ioyned with knowledge of Gods will, he ſhould neuer haue receiued mercy. So alſo it increaſeth the greatneſſe of our ſins, by adding vnto them the ſinnes of others, into which they led and plunged them, by giuing ſcandall & offence; for it is a ſtrong inducement to mooue an ignorant man to commit any ſinne, when hee ſeeth thoſe, who are indued with knowledge make no conſcience of it; becauſe he thinketh with himſelfe, that none is ſo deſperate to leape into the gulph of perdition wittingly and willingly; and that if there were any danger in that he doth, hee would not vpon knowledge, and, as it were, on ſet purpoſe runne into it. Finally, hee ſinneth againſt himſelfe, in making his condemnation more iuſt, and his fault more vnexcuſable; for if the ſins of the Gentiles became vnexcuſable, becauſe they were committed againſt the Light of Nature; then how much more are their ſinnes without excuſe, who haue much more perfect knowledge of Gods will, as it is reuealed in the holy Scriptures?

Iohn 9. 41.

1. Tim. 1. 13.

Rom. 1. 20.

§. Sect. 8. Vnfruitfull knowledge increaſeth our reckoning in the day of iudgement.

And thus doth this vaine and idle knowledge hurt thoſe that haue it in this life: in the life to come, they ſhall finde it much more pernicious. Firſt, becauſe it ſhall increaſe their bils of account, when at Gods great Audit they ſhall giue a reckoning, how they haue vſed and imployed that rich talent of knowledge, which God vouchſafed to lend vnto them; how much they haue excelled thoſe, who wanted of their great meaſure, in true obedience, how much by it they haue glorified God, edified their brethren, and reformed their own liues and conuerſations: for according to the meaſure of Gods gifts muſt our accounts be, and he that hath receiued the greateſt portion, and hath either vnprofitably buried it, or abuſed it vnto ſinne, the greater and more fearefull ſhall his condemnation be. And this is the laſt and greateſt euill which our vnfruitfull knowledge will bring vnto vs, namely, that as it aggrauateth our ſinne, ſo alſo it will increaſe our puniſhment; for as our Sauiour ſaith, the ſeruant that knoweth his Maſters will, and doth it not, ſhall bee beaten with many ſtripes. And hence it is, that he threatneth more heauy condemnation againſt Tyre and Sidon, than againſt Sodome and Gomorrah; becauſe the light of the Goſpel, encreaſed and confirmed by admirable miracles, racles, did much more clearely ſhine vnto them, than vnto the other: and the Apoſtle Peter affirmeth, that it had beene better for them (againſt whom he inueigheth) not to haue knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, than after they haue knowne it, to turne from the holy commandements giuen vnto them.

Luke 12. 47.

Seeing therefore this idle, and vnfruitfull knowledge is not onely vaine and vnprofitable, but alſo exceeding hurtfull, both in this life, and the life to come; let vs not eſteeme and reſt in it, but contemne and deſpiſe it, labouring after that fruitfull knowledge, which alone will make vs wiſe to our ſaluation. And as the Apoſtle Peter exhorteth, let our knowledge bee lincked in the chaine of all other vertues, ſeaſoned with pietie, and the true feare of God, and fruitfull in all holy obedience; and then, though it make not ſo great a flouriſh in worldly diſcourſes, nor winne the applauſe and praiſe of men; yet ſhall it make vs approued vnto God, and will certainely guide vs in that way, which in the end will bring vs to endleſſe ioy, and heauenly happineſſe.

CHAP. XIII.

That beautie is to be contemned in reſpect of ſpirituall graces, or heauenly excellencies.

AND thus much concerning the tentations of worldly proſperity, ariſing from the faculties and properities of the mind. In the next place wee are to intreate of ſuch, as haue their beginning and growth from the properties and qualities of the body; as for example, from beautie, ſtrength, and health. For howſoeuer theſe are all good in themſelues, as I ſhall particularly ſhew, yet they are abuſed through the malice of the diuell, and our owne corruption, as baites to allure, and draw vs vnto ſin. Concerning the firſt; Beautie (as Auſtine defineth it) is a proportionable congruity, and fit agreement of all the parts of the body, ioyned with a certaine ſweetneſſe of colour and countenance. The which in its own nature is good, as being a gift of God, the which hee beſtowed in greateſt meaſure vpon our firſt parents in their creation, and farre aboue any of their poſterity, whom ſinne defaced and deformed, as well in their body as in their ſoule, and reſerueth a farre moſt excellent degree and portion thereof for the glorified Saints of heauen. And this is acknowledged both by Heathens and Chriſtians; for euen the Ethnicke Poet could ſay that, Beauty is the gift of God. And with him agree the Ancients of the Church. One ſaith, that beautie is a part of the bodies felicity, a bountifull aduantage, or acceſſion of the diuine creation, and a ciuill and comely garment and ornament of the ſoule. And another: Theſe gifts O Lord are thine, and are good, becauſe thou the chiefe goodneſſe haſt created them; and there is nothing in them ours, but our ſinne in ouerlouing them; for neglecting all order, we are ready to preferre the creature, aboue thee who haſt created it. And Ambroſe ſaith, that there is no fault in beautie, if it be free from counterfaiting art; and if allurement ceaſe, fauour and the grace of beauty, are to be eſteemed innocent and faultleſſe. Yea, it is a fit habitation for vertue, modeſtie and ſhamefaſtnes to dwell in; and as a good workman vſually worketh beſt when hee hath fit matter: ſo modeſtie doth moſt excell, when it is ſeated in a beautifull body, if this beautie bee not affected, but naturall and ſimple. Yea, the ſpirit of God himſelfe doth take notice of it, in thoſe vpon whom it was beſtowed, and affordeth vnto it, due and fit commendations. Thus Sarah, Rebeccah, Rahel, Ioſeph, and many others are ſaid to haue beene very faire and beautifull; and when God reſtored and augmented the proſperitie of Iob, it is ſpecially noted as an extraordinary bleſſing, that hee had not only many children, but that in all the land were no women found ſo faire as the daughters of Iob. But we ſhall not neede to ſay much of this point, ſeeing by inſtinct of nature, all men owe a kind of homage to beautie where they find it, and being much delighted therewith doe extraordinarily fauour and reſpect it. And therefore one being asked, why beautifull things were ſo much loued, anſwered, that none but a blind man need to aske ſuch a queſtion. But to ſay nothing of Heathens, euen the Saints and ſeruants of God haue beene mooued thereby to loue and liking. This made Iacob to preferre Rachel before Leah; this made Moſes mother to fauour and reſpect him, and in ſauing him aliue becauſe he was faire, to hazard her owne life. And holy Samuel being affected with Eliabs beautie, concluded hereupon that the Lords annointed was before him; yea the Lord himſelfe is ſaid to take pleaſure in the beautie of his Church; vnto whom nothing agreeth that is euill, not ſo much as by an allegorie or ſimilitude.

Beauty therefore being good may be moderately loued and eſteemed, when it is in a good and vertuous ſubiect, the outward beauty of the body, & the inward beauty of the minde being ioyned together: ſeeing it helpeth to adorne vertue to the outward ſenſe, and cauſeth it to bee accepted with more applauſe and liking, when it is found in a beautifull body, than in one ill-fauoured and deformed; euen as a precious Iewell is more graced when it is kept in a rich cabi-

Tertul. de cult. foemin. lib.

Hae tua ſunt, bona ſunt, quia tu bona illa creaſti, &c. Auguſt. de ciuit. dei lib. 15. cap. 22.

Ars deſit, nullum eſt crimen decoris, &c. Ambr. lib. 9. epiſt. 44.

Ambr. offic. lib. 1. cap. 19.

Gen. 12.14. & 24.16. & 29.17. & 39.6.

Iob 42.15.

Ariſtot. apud Stobaeum.

Gen. 29.30.

Exod. 2.2.

1. Sam. 16.6.

Pſalm. 45.11.

§. Sect. 2. What is required to make beautie good vnto vs.

Gratior & pulchro veniens in corpore virtus, adiuuat. Virg. Aeneid. lib. 5.

Bernard. lib. de ordine vitæ.

net, than in an vnſeemely box. As alſo when it is well vſed by thoſe that haue it, that is to ſay, when firſt it is not too much affected and vnnaturally forced; to which purpoſe one ſaith, that as an artiſan worketh better when he hath fit matter to worke vpon, ſo alſo modeſty doth ſhine more clearely, when it is in a comely body: yet ſo, that this beauty of the body be not too much affected, but naturall, ſimple and neglected, rather than ouer earneſtly deſired; not ſupported and helped with ouer pretious and glorious garments, but with ſuch as are ordinary, that ſo neither any thing bee wanting to neceſſity and honeſt comlineſſe, nor any thing added to cleanly neatneſſe. Secondly, when it is ioyned with modeſty and ſhamefaſtneſſe; for nothing is more oppoſed to vertuous beautie, than immodeſty and bold impudencie. Thirdly, if the beautie of the body bee an effectuall reaſon to moue them that haue it, to a more diligent care of adorning their minds with vertue and true piety, and to keepe a vigilant watch ouer all their actions, that they doe not commit any thing foule and faulty, miſbeſeeming ſuch a beauty. And thus the wiſe Socrates is ſaid to haue perſwaded his ſchollers, that they ſhould often looke themſelues in their glaſſes, that he who was pleaſed and delighted with his beauty, might earneſtly indeuour not to diſgrace the dignity and comlineſſe of his body with euill conditions; and that he who found himſelfe ill-fauoured ſhould ſtriue to couer his deformities with his vertues and good manners. To which purpoſe alſo an ancient Father demandeth, Art thou (ſaith he) of excellent beautie? why then let it moue thee to this care, that the beauty of thy minde may be of anſwerable brightneſſe to the beauty of thy body. Finally, this beauty is vſed aright, when as we doe not reſt in it as being fraile and momentany, but vſe it as a little ſtreame to conduct and bring vs to God the fountaine of all beautie and goodneſſe; and bee mooued thereby to this meditation, that if a ſparke of this beauty imparted to the creature, worke ſuch loue and admiration; then how much more is that infinite flame of beauty in our Creator, from which this is deriued, to bee admired and loued! If this heauenly Sunne reflect a ſhadow ſo full of brightneſſe vpon earth and clay, then how infinitely glorious is hee in his owne nature and perfections! Finally, if wee eſteeme it a part of our earthly happineſſe to haue our ſelues and neereſt friends adorned with this beauty; then how much more happy ſhall we be, when being in thoſe heauenly ioyes, we ſhall not only our ſelues exceed the Sun in the firmament in beauty and brightnes; but alſo ſhall haue the viſion and fruition of our gracious and glorious God, in compariſon of whoſe purity the heauens are filthy and vncleane, and in regard of whoſe infinite beauty and glory the Sunne it ſelfe is groſſe darkneſſe; and the moſt excelling beautie in heauen or earth but meere deformity?

Lucius Apuleius de Magia. lib. 1.

Eximia forma eſt? id agat, ut animi pulchritudo, corporis pulchritudini ſplendore reſpondeat. Nazianzen. in Maximum.

And thus haue I ſhewed that beauty in its owne nature is good, and a gift, and bleſſing of God to thoſe who haue alſo a right vſe of it: euen as contrariwiſe deformity is in its owne nature euill, as being a fruit of ſinne; and therefore ſuch as were crooked, lame, or blemiſhed, are by God forbidden to offer his ſacrifices. But if wee conſider it as it is in our nature corrupted with ſinne, it is not abſolutely good, but to bee numbred among things indifferent, the which (as all other the benefits of proſperity) is more often abuſed, than well vſed, and ſo becommeth vnto vs, through the malice of our ſpirituall enemies an inducement vnto ſinne, and the ground of many dangerous tentations. And thus this gift of God is abuſed, when as wee reſt in it alone, and content our ſelues with this ſhadow neglecting the ſubſtance, vertue and true godlineſſe, and thinking it enough to haue beautifull bodyes, though in the meane time our minds and ſoules be vgly and deformed. For the inward beauty of the mind ought not to bee ſeuered from the outward beauty of the body, ſeeing (as one ſaith) beauty is the flower which ſpringeth from the root of vertue, and therefore being parted from it, it muſt needs wither and come to nought. To which purpoſe another ſaith, that the mind is more to be regarded than the body; for the outward beauty profiteth not, when a good minde is not ioyned with it: neither is that to bee eſteemed a perfect beautie, but lame and moſt vnperfect, which conſiſteth in the outward colour of the skin; when the minde and ſoule is vgly and deformed. For what is this better than a faire cabinet full of filth and rubbiſh, and a goodly ſepulchre full of ſtench and rottenneſſe? which is not indeed truly beautifull, but onely ſeemeth ſo, through the imperfection of our ſight; for if (as one ſaith) our eyes like the Linxes could pierce into the inward parts, or rather if wee could ſee as God ſeeth, the ſecrets of the heart and reines, then ſhould wee more loathe and abhorre them for their inward vglineſſe and filthineſſe, than admire or like them for their outward feature. So that it is not their owne naturall excellency, which intitleth them to the name of beauty, but the weakeneſſe of our ſight which can pierce no deeper than the outſide of the skin. And therefore of ſuch it is ſaid, not abſolutely that they were beautifull, but only that they were faire to looke vpon, 2. Sam. 14. 27. Let none then content themſelues with this painted ſcabard, which §. Sect.

Beautie body the be the mind nought.
Lev.22.19.

Plutarch.
Eurip. in Oedipo.

Ariſtot.
Boëthius Conſol.

Jam.

which hath in it but a wooden or leaden dagger, nor take delight in this flower which hath a faire colour, but no ſweetneſſe: but ſeeing wee are all as the flowers of the field, let vs labour to become roſes in Gods garden, hauing the beauty of colour ioyned with the ſweetneſſe of vertue, that ſo when the outward complexion is faded, the odour and perfume of a godly life may ſtill remaine.

Againe, this beauty is abuſed, when as in conceit thereof thoſe that haue it are puffed vp with pride, and ſo forget God who gaue it, and all duty which they owe vnto him, and deſpiſe their neighbours, as comming farre ſhort of their excellencie. For howſoeuer this beauty bee vaine and of ſmall worth, momentany, and oftentimes but of a dayes continuance; yet there are many ſo deſtitute of all goodneſſe, that for want of better matter in them, they are proud of this vaine ſhadow; and being void of vertue, by their beauty alone doe ſeeme vnto themſelues glorious. Moreouer, it is thus abuſed, when as wee doe too much affect and ſet our hearts vpon it, and ſpend ouer much time and labour either in getting, preſeruing, or increaſing it, neglecting in the meane time things of more neceſſitie and greater value. Vnto which abuſe vaine worldlings, (eſpecially of the weaker ſex) are much addicted, who ſuperſtitiouſly abſtaine from thoſe things which they moſt loue; and are content to vſe thoſe things which they loathe, to get or recouer this vanity; thinking no paines too much, no puniſhment which they take on themſelues too great, nor their precious health too deare, to giue for the purchaſe of this fading trifle; and ſpending more time in the combing and curling of their haire, in waſhing, ſweating and bathing, dreſſing and trimming, and in many other their hidden myſteries, (of which wilfull ignorance is no ſinne, and thereof I am not aſhamed herein of my ſimplicity) than in all their ſpirituall deuotions towards God, or their duties of Chriſtianity towards their neighbours. So that no body that is wiſe would enuie vnto them their ſuppoſed happineſſe, conſiſting in this vaine beauty, if he did but conſider at what deare rates it is bought, and how much more excellent things they doe in the meane time loſe, whileſt they are procuring or preſeruing this trifling vanity. Finally, thoſe abuſe it vnto ſinne who ouer value it in themſelues or others, preferring it before the gifts of the minde, vertue, Gods ſanctifying graces, and the meanes of their ſaluation; yea more eſteeming of this periſhing fauour, than of the eternall fauour and loue of God; for howſoeuer this gift of beauty bee good as proceeding from God, yet it is in compariſon of the former of no excellencie, being a good temporall, carnall and of the meaneſt and loweſt degree; and therefore it is impiouſly loued (as one ſaith) when in reſpect thereof, the eternall God, our internall and ſempiternall goodnes is neglected; but as righteouſneſſe is forſaken, and gold loued of couetous men, not through the fault of gold, but of the man, ſo is it in this. Now leaſt any ſhould thinke that but few fall into this folly, let them know, that as many are guilty of it, as vſe greater care and labour, and ſpend more time in procuring, or preſeruing this fading beauty, than in attaining Gods fauour, the graces of his ſpirit, or in vſing the meanes of their owne ſaluation; for as wee preferre our ends, ſo alſo the meanes accordingly which leade vnto them.

August. de Ciuit. Dei. lib. 15. cap. 22.

§. Sect. 5. Beautie is but a gift, common with the brutiſh creatures.

And thus haue I ſhewed how this gift of God is abuſed vnto euill, and becommeth the ground of diuers tentations, whereby Satan and the world, through the corruption of our fleſh, allureth vs to ſinne. Againſt which, that wee may be armed, let vs not, if we want it, immoderately deſire it, and if wee haue it, let vs take heed that wee bee not ouertaken with pride, nor ſet our hearts and affections vpon it, preferring it before ſpirituall and ſauing graces, and the meanes of our owne ſaluation. Yea, when it commeth in compariſon with theſe, let vs learne to deſpiſe and contemne, lothe and abhorre it, as becomming through abuſe, a ſnare of the diuell, whereby he hindereth vs from going forward in the way of ſaluation. But becauſe the moſt that haue it, doe thus abuſe it, and in ſtead of being made better, and more thankfull vnto God, become more vaine and proud, wanton and wicked, let ſuch know, that whatſoeuer beauty is in its owne nature, to them it is of no worth or excellencie, altogether vnprofitable, yea, very hurtfull and pernicious, both to themſelues and others. And firſt that it is of no value, or excellencie, being ſeuered from vertue and true godlineſſe; it may appeare, in that it is common to man with the brutiſh creatures, and what excellencie is in that, in which the horſe and greyhound, the peacocke and ſwan, doe alſo excell as well as he? yea, of what worth is it, ſeeing euen the flowers of the field, as the roſe and lilie, doe in the beauty of colours goe farre beyond him? and therefore mans excellencie is not in this, wherein he is exceeded by ſuch meane creatures, but in the right vſe of ſanctified reaſon, and in the hidden vertues of the minde. For as there is nothing more excellent in beaſts, than that which is outwardly ſeene and diſcerned; ſo in man there is nothing inferiour to that which lieth open to the view, and is ſubiect to the ſenſes; for whereas hee conſiſteth of ſoule and body, the body which is ſeene doth ſerue

Nihil in beſtijs plus reperias quàm quod videtur, in homine nihil eſt inferius. Ambroſ. de Inſtitut. virg. cap. 3. tom. 1.

and obey, and the ſoule which is not ſeene doth beare rule and gouerne; and therefore man is not to be ſo admired for his beautie and outward parts, as for his ſecret vertues, and hidden operations of his minde. Neither in truth doth the excellencie of the outward parts, which doe chiefly intitle a beautie, conſiſt herein that they are beautifull, which is onely their ornament, but in their ſeuerall offices and functions, for which they were ordained. As for example, this is not the excellencie of the eyes, that they are gray or blacke, glancing or rolling, but that they excell in the acutenes and vigor of ſeeing; it is not the excellencie of the noſe or eare, that they are of this, or that colour or faſhion, but in their perfection of hearing and ſmelling; nor of the hand that it hath a fine proportion, or white colour, but in that it is a ready and expert inſtrument of all our actions; nor of the teeth to be white and euen, but that they be fit to prepare conuenient nouriſhment for the ſtomacke; in all which excellencies, the deformed and beautifull exceed not one another, but are both equall.

Chryſoſt.in 1.Tim.Homil.4.in.Mor.

§. Sect.6. The vanitie of beauty proued by teſtimonies.

But the worthleſnes of this beauty which is ſeuered from vertue and true wiſdome, may more plainly appeare both by teſtimonies and reaſons. The wiſeſt among the ſons of men ſaid, that fauour is deceitfull, and beautie is vanitie, but a woman that feareth the Lord, ſhee ſhall be praiſed. And ſuch ill harmonie he thinketh to be betweene beauty and folly, that hee iudgeth it as abſurd and ridiculous, to ſee a faire woman lacking diſcretion, as a iewell of gold in a ſwines ſnout. Another compareth a beautifull body with euill conditions to a faire houſe, and a bad inhabitant; and another, to a good ſhip that hath a bad pilot. To which purpoſe alſo Chryſoſtome ſaith, that he doth not ſo much require the beautie of the body, as the honeſty of the minde. For what (ſaith he) is a beautifull woman? a painted ſepulcher, vnleſſe ſhe be ſober, chaſt and modeſt; and beautie without theſe vertues, is an open gulph, and a poiſon compounded for ſoules to drinke, &c. And therefore if thou ſeeſt a man or woman beautifull, doe not admire them: for the lofty and ſtrong okes, although they be thicke with faire greene leaues, and tall in ſtature, yet they beare no fruit fit for men, but only maſte to feed hogges; whereas the vine creeping on the earth bringeth forth pleaſant grapes.

Prou.31.30. Prou 11.22. Diogenes apud Laertium de vit.& morib.Philoſ. Iſocrates. Nolo pulchritudinem corporis, honeſtatem mentis requiro, &c. Chryſoſt.in Pſalm.50.Homil.1.

§.Sect.7. The worthleſnes of beautie proued by reaſons: firſt becauſe God eſteemeth it not.

The reaſons why wee ſhould eſteeme it baſe, and of no worth without vertue, or in compariſon of ſpirituall graces, are, firſt becauſe God doth ſo eſteeme it; for he looketh not to the outward ſhape and countenance, but principally regardeth the heart, and the inward beautie of the mind. And this the Lord ſheweth to Samuel, when he was ſo much in loue with Eliabs beautie, and goodly perſonage, willing him not to looke on his countenance, nor on the height of his ſtature, ſeeing he had refuſed him: becauſe God ſeeth not as man ſeeth; for man looketh to the outward appearance, but the Lord beholdeth the heart. But how little the Lord valueth his gifts of beautie and outward ſhape, may appeare, by his manner of beſtowing them; for he reſerueth them not, as ſpeciall and chiefe iewels for his owne children and ſeruants, but as trifles of ſmall value, he maketh them common to the wicked & reprobate, who are but ſlaues & enemies. And thus he inriched Saul with a large portion thereof, of whom it is ſaid, that he was a goodly young man and a faire, ſo that among the children of Iſrael, there was none goodlier than he: ſo Adoniah had this gift in great meaſure, who is ſaid to haue beene a very goodly man. And Abſolon, though he had not the birthright, nor the bleſſing, yet in this had a double portion, for in all Iſrael, there was none to be ſo much praiſed for beauty as hee; from the ſole of his foote to the top of his head, there was no blemiſh in him. From whence it appeareth, of how ſmall worth in compariſon, this beauty is, ſeeing it hath beene ſo plentifully beſtowed on ſuch worthleſſe men: to which purpoſe one ſaith, that the beauty of the body is indeed the gift of God, but he hath therefore beſtowed it on the euill alſo, leaſt it might ſeeme to the good, to be of any great value. Yea, hee hath beſtowed it on the brute creatures, as well as men; and therefore howſoeuer it be good, yet it exceedeth not a brutiſh excellencie. To this purpoſe one demandeth: art thou (ſaith he) faire and beautifull? why, this is the glory of dames, and not of men. Thou art not fairer than the peacocke or the ſwan; and oftentimes baſe boies and girles, harlots and effeminate men, haue had a great ſhare in this glory. And is this therefore of ſuch worth, that for it thou ſhouldeſt be exalted and extolled? Seeing therefore Gods eſtimate, which being grounded on infinite wiſedome and iuſtice, crieth downe the value of this vaine beauty, which is raiſed vp by carnall men to ſuch high rates; let vs learne to conforme our iudgements vnto his, ſlightly accounting of this outward forme and colour, to which mans vaine opinion hath giuen it chiefe excellencie, and highly valuing the inward beauties of the minde, the vertues and ſanctifying graces of Gods ſpirit, which how vnhandſome ſoeuer wee ſeeme before men in our outward feature, will make vs to appeare beautifull in the ſight of God, and of our husband Ieſus Chriſt, whom if wee pleaſe, it little skilleth, though we bee vnpleaſing in the eyes of men.

1.Sam.

1.Sam.9.2.

1.King.1.6.

2.Sam.14.25.

Pulchritudo corporalis

Chryſoſt.

§.Sect.8.

Againe, the worthleſneſſe of beauty may hereby appeare, in that if it bring any delight, it is rather to thoſe who ſee it, than to thoſe that haue it; or if at all it be pleaſing to the owners, it is in regard of the liking and admiration of the lookers on, hauing nothing in themſelues to reſt vpon for their contentment, but depending vpon the iudgment and cenſures of others, either to bee extolled by their commendations, or to bee abaſed by their diſpraiſes; and what worth is in that, which riſeth and falleth at euery ones deuotion? or how cannot that bee eſteemed vaine, which hath its being and ſubſiſtence in the vaine breath of the vulgar multitude? Neither in truth would they at all admire it, or though they ſhould, yet would not their idle breath puffe vs vp with the wind of pride, if either they or we did but conſider, what loathſome matter lieth hid vnder this faire skinne. For if our eyes cannot pearce any deeper than the outſide only, yet looke what filthy excrements iſſue out of the noſe, eares, pores and other paſſages, and judge what the fountaine it ſelfe is, from which proceed ſuch loathſome ſtreames: conſider what wee were before our birth, and what afterwards, then placed in the middeſt of excrements, and now made the receptacles of dirt and filth. And therefore when the beautie of the skinne doth moſt exalt vs, wee ſhould bee ſufficiently humbled, if wee would but conſider the vgly loathſomnes of that which it containeth.

But though this beautie were of ſome excellencie whileſt it continueth, yet is it to bee eſteemed of little worth, in regard that it is ſo momentanie and ſo mutable. In reſpect whereof the Wiſe man ſaith, that it is not onely vaine, but deceitfull alſo, giuing men the ſlip when they thinke that they hold it faſteſt, like a ſhadow that vaniſheth whileſt one thinketh to embrace it: for if man himſelfe be ſo momentanie, what ſhall we thinke of beautie which is but an accident of this ſubject, and commonly vaniſheth, the ſubſtance ſtill remaining? if he be but a flower of the field, which is but of a day or weekes continuance; then how fraile and fading is the colour of this flower which often fadeth a great while, of this ſmall time, before the flower dieth? If man be but a cloude then ſurely beautie, may be fitly reſembled to the bright lightning which iſſueth out of it, and vaniſheth in the twinckling of an eye. Whereof it is that the kingdome of beautie is ſaid to be a tyrannie, which is violent for the time, but of ſhort continuance. To this purpoſe one ſaith that as the hearb ſpringing with his beautifull flowers, doth delight the eie, & by little & little fading loſeth his beautie, & is turned into hay; ſo all the beautie of men buddeth in the ſpring of childhood, flowreth and flouriſheth in the ſummer of youth, and perfect age, and ſuddenly when the winter of age commeth, the head vnwittingly groweth gray, the face wrinkled, the skinne writhled, and ſo farre is he now from beautie, that hee hath ſcarce the vſe of his lymmes for the ſloweſt and weakeſt motion.

Et repente dum neſcit, incaneſcit caput, rugatur facies, &c.

But as it is momentany, ſo alſo is it mutable, and vncertaine to continue this ſhort time; for this flower of beautie is ſubject to bee blaſted with innumerable accidents, a little ſcratch impaireth it, and a greater wound doth quite deforme it; a dayes ſicknes much abateth it, and if it bee but of a weekes continuance, doth quite deface it; yea ſo fading it is that a little ſun-ſhine robbeth vs of it, this earthly beautie being not able to endure that heauenly brightneſſe. Or though it be preſerued from the violence of extraordinarie accidents, yet time, which by little and little brought it vnto vs, till we attained to the height of its perfection, doth then as ſtealingly take it away; neither is it more poſſible to preuent this decay of beautie, than to ſtop the courſe of time; for euen whileſt it is admired and praiſed, it ſecretly fadeth and declineth. And though (through the ſtrength of art and nature conſpiring together) it were poſſible to preſerue this beautie vnto old age; yet then behold the vtter ruine of this faire building; for when age commeth it ploweth deepe furrowes in the moſt beautifull viſage, it changeth the colour, rotteth the teeth, tainteth the breath, wrinkleth the brow, bleereth and dimmeth the eyes, crookneth the backe, writhleth the hands, ſtifneth and lameth the ioynts, deaffeneth the eares, and maketh the voyce hoarſe and vnpleaſant, which before was ſweete and tunable. In a word, it worketh ſuch a change and alteration, that if after ſome long diſtance of time, a man ſhould behold his viſage in a glaſſe, he would ſeeme a ſtranger to himſelfe, and ſcarce acknowledge that he is ſtill the owner of the ſame body wherwith formerly he was delighted.

Florem decoris ſinguli carpunt dies, Senec. in Octauia.

Or let it bee imagined that through the extraordinary vigour of nature, there doth a kinde of comely beauty remaine euen in the elder age; yet remember what will become of it in the next houre that death hath ſeazed vpon it, and hath thruſt the ſoule out of her poſſeſſion, till his leaſe alſo be expired. Call to minde that the moſt amiable face and countenance after two or three dayes buriall, will bee ſo vgly and deformed, that none would now more loath it, than thoſe who before did moſt admire it; and were it not priuiledged with that only benefit of ſenſeleſneſſe, and want of vnderſtanding, ſelfe-horrour would make it breake open the priſon of the graue, and cauſe it to ſtriue by flight to eſcape and auoide its owne company.

Iob.17.14.

§. Sect. 10. That contemning this outward beautie,

And thus haue I ſhewed the worthleſſe vanitie and vnprofitableneſſe of worldly beautie; which ought to moue vs to deſpiſe

and we muſt affect the inward beautie of the minde.

Pulchrius eſt pulchrum fieri quam naſci: illud enim caſus, hoc ſtudij eſt. Petrarch.

and contemne it, as being of no value, when as it is ſeuered from true godlineſſe. And becauſe naturally wee are affected with beautie, let vs turne the edge of our loue from this earthly traſh, to ſpirituall and heauenly treaſure ſetting our hearts on that inward beautie of the mind which conſiſteth in vertue, and the ſanctifying gifts of Gods Spirit, and on that glorious beautie, which ſhall adorne our bodies and ſoules in the kingdome of God; for as this beautie is in it ſelfe ten thouſand times more excellent than the other, ſo ſhall it be of euerlaſting continuance; for old age can neuer make any wrinckles in the face of vertue, ſickneſſe cannot hurt it, violence cannot deface it, griefe and ſorrow cannot impaire it, yea death it ſelfe cannot blemiſh or diſgrace it; yea rather it ſhall bee a meanes to crowne this beauty of grace with the beautie of glory, which as it ſhall bee full of vnſpeakable excellencie, ſo ſhall it be free from all outward iniurie, and from all inward cauſes of decay, and conſequently vnchangeable and euerlaſting.

§. Sect.11. Beautie too much affected doth make the body tender, ſoft and ſickly.

But if this will not weane our hearts from the loue of worldly beauty, becauſe it doth not profit vs: let vs further conſider that it doth alſo bring much hurt both vnto our ſelues and alſo vnto our neighbours. It hurteth our ſelues both in our bodies, ſoules and names; our bodies thereby are made more tender, ſoft and effeminate, yea alſo more weake and ſickly, and that not onely through the vſe of vnwholeſome medicines, and the neglect of wholeſome food, both which are ordinarie with thoſe who ouermuch affect the praiſe of beautie, but alſo becauſe they neglect that conuenient labour and exerciſe which preſerueth health and increaſeth ſtrength, and giue themſelues ouer to ſloth and daintines, the ordinarie enemies and impairers of them both. And this needeth no other proofe but common experience, and by comparing the ordinarie ſort, who feed wholeſomely, and diligently imploy themſelues in the duties of their calling, with the gentilitie of the land, who no more exceed the common people in forme and beautie than theſe ſurpaſſe them, in health and ſtrength.

§. Sect.11. Beauty hindereth vertue, and furthereth vice.

But howſoeuer this worldly beautie doth much hurt the body, yet nothing in compariſon of that hurt which it bringeth vnto the ſoule, which it much hindreth in the courſe of vertue, and alſo plungeth into many vices. In both which reſpects this tentation of worldly beauty hath ouercome the moſt that haue had it, whom it hath firſt effeminated and made wantonly delicate, ſo as they could not endure the paines of climing the high hill of vertue, nor of trauelling in the ſtrait and afflicted way of true godlineſſe, but rather deſire to goe downe the eaſie-declining hill of vice, and to walke in the plaine and faire way that leadeth to deſtruction: and thoſe whom it hath not ouercome, it hath thoroughly exerciſed all their ſtrength in making reſiſtance; and very valiantly haue they behaued themſelues in this conflict, if they haue not had in the way of vertue many rubs, & receiued many foiles. To this purpoſe one fitly ſaith, that they who haue beautie, haue a couer for their eyes, a ſnare for their feet, and birdlime for their wings; ſo as they cannot eaſily diſcerne the truth, nor follow vertue, nor flie aloft in heauenly meditations. And many hath it made barren in the duties of pietie, ſtopped in the courſe of vertue, and turned aſide into the by-paths of vice: in reſpect of which vnfruitfulnes in goodnes, the beautifull perſon is compared to the tall faire oake, which bringeth only acornes for hogs; and they who want it, and are indued with the beautie of the minde, are likened to the vine, which being deformed in ſhape, bringeth grapes and wine fit for kings.

Petrarch. remed. lib. dial.2.

Chryſoſt. in Pſal.50.

§. Sect.1 Beauty and chaſtitie ſeldome mee together. Rara eſt ad concordia formæ atq; pudicitiæ. Iuuenal. Satyr.10. Cum pereu magno tur quod placet.

The truth whereof will more clearely appeare in ſome particulars: for if wee take a view of former times and of our own dayes, wee ſhall find that beauty and chaſtitie are often at oddes, and doe ſeldome dwell together, not becauſe thoſe who are beautifull may bee in their owne nature and inclination as chaſt as others, if (as I ſaid before) they doe not mollifie and effeminate their minds with ſloth and daintines, and ſo grow light and wanton in their deſires; but becauſe they are more expoſed to the tentations and aſſaults of worldly wicked men, who are ſet on fire with their brightnes, and allured to luſt with the bait of their beauty. Now that is moſt hardly preſerued, which is of ſo many loued and deſired, eſpecially when it cannot bee hidden, but is ſubject to open view, like vnto a rich treaſure which is carried vncouered by the high way ſide, which offereth a kinde of violence to their deſires that ſee it, and cauſeth them to offer violence to the owners, and to ſeaze vpon by force, that which had firſt ſeazed on their concupiſcence. And thus the beautie of Bethſabe betrayed her chaſtitie vnto Dauid, and Thamars vnto Amnon, and thus alſo did it endanger Saraes vnto Pharaoh and Abimelech, and Ioſephs vnto his miſtreſſe. And therefore one ſaith, that although beautie be not to be accuſed, as being the felicitie of the body, &c. yet is it to be feared in reſpect of the iniurie and violence of the beholders; as it alſo cauſed Abraham, the father of the faithfull, to feare, becauſe of the beautie of his wife, and faining that Sarah was his ſiſter, redeemed his ſafetie with a reproch. Whereas contrariwiſe wee ſhall finde them who want this beautie, eaſily freed from many impediments; for theſe faulkners for Deprau Grego.

2.Sam.11. and 13.2. Gen.12. 20.

Tertull. lib.

Chryſoſt. 1.Tim.

for beautie are not very earnest in bringing them to their lure of lust, but like the simple Lambe they feed in quiet and in silence in the presence of their shepheard, there being no Wolfe to disturbe their peace. And thus it appeareth true which one ſaith, That beauty hath made many adulterers, but neuer any chaſt; and hath beene often the Bawd and baite which hath betrayed chaſtity, but neuer patrone to defend it. And though there be ſome that haue been innocent of this fault, and haue beene rich in beauty and in chaſtity too, yet few of them haue with all their skill and innocency kept their names vnblemiſhed, and free from the ſpots of ſuſpition and jealouſie. For whereas (as one ſaith) thoſe who are not adorned with this beauty, are not only free from fault, but alſo from ſuſpition; the beautifull woman, vnleſſe ſhee vſe great care, and much modeſty and honeſty, though ſhee be innocent in fact, yet will eaſily make way to an ill opinion. Let vs therefore not ſo much affect this earthly beauty, which oftentimes is an occaſion of ſinne, and ſeldome freed from the ſuſpition thereof; but rather ſet our hearts and affections on vertue & ſpiritual graces which adorne the mind with inward beauty, which is not only free from danger of ſinne, but alſo preſerueth vs from the leaſt ſuſpition and jealouſie of euill; and place all our loue on that heauenly beauty and diuine glory, of which wee ſhall haue the ſight and fruition after our diſſolution; Which (as one ſaith) is not burthenſome to the owners, nor pernicious to them that loue and affect it, nor dangerous to thoſe who are neere vnto vs, nor expoſed to tentations, nor compaſſed with ſcandals; but bringeth much joy to them that behold it, and endleſſe happines to them that haue it.

Sect.14.

Finally, this worldly beauty much hurteth thoſe that haue it, by making them proud and inſolent, and conſequently forgetfull of God and of all good duties which they owe vnto him; neither is there any thing ſo vaine that maketh ſo proud; of ſo ſmal worth, that doth cauſe the heart to ſwel more in loftineſſe of conceit, or doth more fill it with ſelfe-loue and admiration of their owne excellency. Nothing of ſuch ſlight importance that cauſeth greater negligence in the duties of Gods ſeruice, ſeeing it vſually hindreth thoſe that haue it, or that deſire to haue it, from comming to the exerciſes of Religion, their time being wholly taken vp in decking and adorning of their bodies, that ſo their beauties may be ſet out to the ſhew; and alſo much diſtracteth them when they come, carrying away their thoughts from the exerciſes of Religion, and fixing them vpon that which they haue made their Idoll. For when they looke vpon others, they either view their forme and beautie, diſdayning thoſe who are inferiour, vying with thoſe who are equall, and enuying thoſe who being ſuperiour, ſeeme to rob them of the title of excellency; or elſe they obſerue their habits and attires, that out of this glaſſe of vanity they may learne to decke themſelues more curiouſly againſt their next comming. And as it maketh them proudly to neglect all duty to God, ſo alſo inſolent towards men, as appeareth in the example of Vaſhti, who being puffed vp with pride, becauſe the King was ſo rauiſhed with her beauty, that he deſired to make ſhew of it to his Princes, refuſed to yeeld obedience vnto his Commandement, making no queſtion but that her beauty would haue made peace betweene them at the next parley. Whereby it appeareth, that as nothing more than it adorneth the body in the eyes of men, ſo nothing more deformeth the ſoule in the ſight of God, ſeeing it ſpotteth and polluteth it with this filthy leproſie of pride, which of all other vices hee moſt loatheth and abhorreth. Whereof it is that the Lord denieth vnto them his ſanctifying graces, which he vouchſafeth only vnto the humble, and oppoſeth himſelfe againſt them, punishing them oftentimes in that wherein they glory, and catching them in their owne inueigling nets, which they ſpred out for others, like Abſalon who was hanged with his owne haire, that wherein hee chiefly gloried, being made by God the inſtrument of his ruine.

Heſt.1.11,12.

§. Sect. 15.
Beauty deceiueth and allureth vnto ſin.

But as this worldly beauty is hurtfull to them that haue it, ſo alſo to others that behold it: for firſt, it ſerueth for nothing being ſeuered from vertue and true godlineſſe, but for a curious vaile to hide vnder it all ſin, and to make wickedneſſe it ſelfe, when it is diſguiſed with it, to paſſe vnſuſpected. And this was that Vizard wherewith that notable Hypocrite Saul was ſo adorned, that he deceiued both good Samuel, and all the people, cauſing him to extoll him, as not being to be matched among all the reſt, and mouing them to ſhoute for joy, and to cry aloude, God ſaue the King. But much more doth it hurt, as it is vſed by the Deuill and the World for a baite to allure men vnto ſin; and a ſhining flame to ſet their hearts on fire with vnlawfull luſts. In which reſpect a beautifull woman without vertue, is compared to a ſweet poyſon which killeth with delight, and their glancing looks to the ſtroke of Scorpions, or the ſting of Vipers, which bringeth death in a ſweet ſlumber; or elſe to a burning coale, which being it ſelfe firſt kindled, inflameth thoſe alſo that are neere vnto it; or as Salomon compareth it, to a Sword, which, whileſt it glittereth, woundeth, yea, a two edged Sword, the one hurting thoſe that haue it, with pride, the other thoſe which behold it, with luſt and wantonneſſe. And thus were the ſonnes of God wounded, whileſt they beheld the beautie of

the

1.Sam.10.24.

Formoſa meretrix dulce venenum. Vultus mulieris habet ictum ſcorpionis.

Prou.5.4.

Gen. 6. 1, 2.
Gen. 39. 2.
2. Sam. 13. 1, 2.
1. Sam. 11. 2.
Prou. 5. 24, 25.
In quæſt. ex vtroq; mixtim. 115.
Baſil, Admonit. ad filium ſpirit.

the daughters of men; thus was Putiphars Wife inflamed with the ſight of Ioſeph; thus was Amnon ſicke of luſt, hauing ſuffered his eyes to drinke their fill of this ſweet poyſon; yea, and with this ſnare was holy Dauid caught, whileſt his eyes wantonly wandred and beheld the beauty of his ſeruants Wife. And hence it is that Salomon ſeeking to preſerue his youthfull Scholler from the ſinne of vncleannes, thinketh it not enough to haue him ſo farre off from the beautifull Harlot, that he cannot heare the bewitching eloquence of her flattering tongue, but alſo that he ſtand aloofe, and keepe himſelfe (as it were) out of the Gun-ſhot of her deadly wounding eyes. The conſideration whereof made the beautifull Thuſcan (as Auguſtine recordeth) to deforme his ouer-louely face with grieſly wounds, leſt it ſhould become a ſnare to intangle the beholders with vnlawfull luſts; being herein, as I take it, as blind in their raſh & inconſiderate zeale, as he was bright in beauty. Seeing it might haue ſufficed to haue couered it with the chaſt vaile of a ſober and graue countenance, which by taking away all hope of obtayning, would alſo haue quenched the heate of wanton deſires; neither ought he to haue kept others from abuſe, by abuſing it himſelfe, nor to haue rejected Gods gift which to him was good, for feare leſt others ſhould abuſe it vnto euill. But as wee are not to joyne with him in this extreame, ſo let vs as carefully auoid the other: and hauing beautie, let vs not wantonly diſcouer it as though wee brought it to the market; or being in others, let vs either with Iob turne away our eyes, that wee doe not behold it, or at leaſt let vs looke vpon it through the glaſſe of modeſty, chaſtity and ſobriety, and ſo this Cockatrice ſhall neuer hurt vs. And this counſell the Sonne of Syrach giueth vs: Turne away (ſaith he) thine eye from a beautifull woman, and looke not on others beauty, ſeeing many haue periſhed by the beautie of women, for through it loue is kindled as a fire. To which accordeth the admonition of another: Let vs ſhun (ſaith hee) theſe pernicious beauties, leſt they enjoyne vs to commit all manner of euill, &c. Take heed my ſonne of viewing thoſe formes, by which thou ſeeſt many haue periſhed; doe not drinke, I pray thee, of that cup wherewith ſo many haue beene poyſoned, feed not of that meate whereon ſuch multitudes haue ſurfetted, ruſh not vpon that rocke, whereupon ſo many haue ſuffered ſhipwracke, and carefully auoide thoſe hidden ſnares wherein thou haſt ſeene ſo many taken.

§. Sect. 16.
Beauty oftentimes hurtfull to the friends of thoſe who excell in it.

But as this worldly beauty is hurtfull to ſtrangers, ſo oftentimes to neereſt friends; for it is a common occaſion, and the vſuall fuell, wherewith the conſuming fire of jealouſie is kindled, whileſt the Husband beholding his Wiues beauty with the eye of Loue, groweth in feare of Riuals, and conſidereth the great difficulty of appropriating that to his owne vſe, which is of ſo many affected and deſired; the which feare making him fit to entertaine all ſuſpitions, and many ſuſpitions ſeruing to his jealous minde for an euident demonſtration, doe make way for rage againſt his Wife, the ouer-flowing of loue turning into the gaule of fury, for enuy and hatred againſt his ſuppoſed Riuall, and for torment and vexation to his owne ſoule. Againe, this worldly beauty ſeuered from vertue doth often expoſe neereſt friends to many dangers, as ſometimes to ſecret poyſons, and ſometimes to open violence, becauſe they ſtand in the way, and hinder thoſe who are intangled with it, from ſatisfying their luſts, and enjoying their wanton and laſciuious deſires. For if this beautie had theſe dangerous and deadly effects in Sara, who thereby vnwillingly expoſed Abraham to the hazard of his life; and in Bethſabe, whoſe beauty was the cauſe of her Husbands ruine, both which notwithſtanding were vertuous women, & feared God: how much more pernicious is it in thoſe who are deſtitute of vertue, modeſty and ſobriety, who are not only occaſions, but alſo acceſſaries and helpers forward of theſe miſchiefes, being allured hereunto by their wicked Louers?

§. Sect.
That we fix our diuine

Seeing then this worldly beauty hath in it no worth or excellency, but is altogether vnprofitable, yea, hurtfull and pernicious, both to them that excell in it, and to thoſe that are neere vnto them: let vs weane our hearts from the loue of this vanity, & learne to contemne and deſpiſe it both in our ſelues and others; and if we will needs be enamored with beautifull objects, let vs fixe our hearts vpon God, who is not only beautifull, but beauty it ſelfe, and ſo infinite in this and all other perfections, that all the beauty of all the creatures in Heauen and Earth is but as a ſmall ſparke in compariſon of the glorious brightneſſe of this Sunne. And therefore let the beauty of the creatures ſerue but as a Scale, whereby our meditations may aſcend to contemplate the infinite beauty of the Creatour: for neglect of which vſe of the creatures excellencies, the Authour of the Booke of Wiſdome condemneth men: Surely (ſaith he) all men are vaine by nature, and are ignorant of God, and could not know him that is, by the good things that are ſeene, neither conſider by the workes the worke-maſter, &c. though they had ſuch pleaſure in their beautie, &c. yet ſhould they haue knowne, how much more excellent hee is that made them; for the firſt author of beautie hath created theſe things.

§. Sect.
That the

And if we will needs be in loue with any thing in our ſelues, let vs place our chiefe affection

the ſoule ch more llent then auty of ody.
ſt in h.10. l.35.

fection next vnto God vpon our ſoule, as being in it ſelfe much more excellent in beauty than our bodies, and the cauſe alſo of all bodily beauty; for according as the ſoule is affected, ſo is the beauty of the body increaſed or abated. If the minde be merry, the face is beautified with a cheerefull countenance; if touched with griefe and ſorrow, preſently all outward beauty vaniſheth: if the minde be terrified and affrighted, preſently this aſtoniſhment appeareth in the gaſtly paleneſſe of the viſage; if it bee in peace and quietneſſe, then the face alſo is pleaſant and amiable; if the minde be affected with enuy, it maketh the body and face leane and wanne; if with loue which is honeſt and moderate, it maketh the face alſo to looke with a louely ſweetneſſe; if the minde bee inraged, the looke alſo is furious, if well pleaſed, contentment appeareth in the very countenance; if the ſoule bee adorned with modeſtie, it will ſhew it ſelfe in the baſhfulneſſe of the looke, but if it bee impudent, the face alſo is bold and ſhameleſſe. So that the chiefe beauty of the body is deriued from the ſoule, and hereof it is that many haue no gracefulneſſe in their countenance, who haue no blemiſh in their face, nor imperfection in their fauour; and contrariwiſe, that many who haue little excellency either in their fauour or complexion, doe neuertheleſſe exceed in a louely gracefulneſſe, which they haue not from the body, but from ſome ſecret operation of the ſoule. But moſt cleerely this appeareth in the vnion and ſeparation of the ſoule and bodie; for whileſt they are joyned together their beauty alſo flouriſheth and continueth; but no ſooner are they diuided, and the body parted from the ſoule, than the beauty alſo is parted from the body, ſo that that face which not an houre agoe was admired and loued for beauty and excellency, is now abhorred and loathed for vglineſſe and deformity. And therefore ſeeing the body hath nothing but what it borroweth, and only yeeldeth a place or roome wherein the ſoule may ſhew forth its excellencies; let vs not dote vpon this bodily beauty, but ſet our hearts and affections on the inward beauty of the ſoule, labouring more and more to adorne it with vertue and Gods ſanctifying graces, which will not fade and periſh, that ſo alſo wee may attaine vnto the fruition of that eternall beauty and goodneſſe, which will bring with it fulneſſe of joy and happineſſe, that ſhall endure for euermore.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the vanitie and wickedneſſe of painting the face.

§. Sect. 1. That the Deuill was the inuenter of this art of painting.

AND thus haue I ſhewed that worldly beauty is to be contemned of Chriſtians, and the reaſons which may induce them to deſpiſe it: I will adde ſomething of the counterfeit thereof, painting and colouring of the face, commonly vſed by vaine women, that hereby they may get the prayſe of beauty by their art, which nature hath denied vnto them. The which is not like the other, euill onely in regard of abuſe, but vtterly vnlawfull, wicked and abominable in its owne nature, and in the generall practice thereof; as offending not only againſt the Law of God, but alſo the light of Nature; ſeeing they who haue not a dram of grace, nor a ſparke of true knowledge, doe brand it with the note of ignominy and reproach whereſoeuer it is diſcouered; yea euen thoſe who practiſe it doe condemne it in their own conſciences, and would bee much aſhamed (if long cuſtome hath not made them impudent) to bee taken with the fact. But that all Chriſtians may be mooued to deteſt and abhorre this wicked practice; let them conſider that God is not the author of this beauty, but the Deuill himſelfe, who bringeth the workes of God into diſgrace, not only by counterfeiting them, but by labouring to excell them. With this accordeth the judgement of that godly Father, and bleſſed Martyr Cyprian, who thinketh that when the wicked Angels (profeſſing loue to lewde women that they might deſtroy them) abuſed their bodies to filthineſſe, for the hire and wages of their wickedneſſe, they taught and inſtructed them in this art of painting; and thereof inferreth, that theſe painted parts are not of Gods making, but of the Deuils ſtayning and corrupting. Now what impiety is this in thoſe who profeſſe Chriſtianity, that being formed by God, they ſhould ſeeke to be reformed and perfected by the Deuill? To the ſame purpoſe Tertullian ſayth, that the Deuill hath certainly deuiſed theſe arts, that hee might in vs oppoſe himſelfe againſt God. And affirmeth that to bee Gods worke which is borne, and that the Deuils which is counterfeited: and what helliſh wickedneſſe is this, to adde vnto Gods works the Deuils arts and ornaments? our ſeruants borrow not from our foes, the ſouldier deſireth nothing from the enemies of his chiefe Commander; and ſhall a Chriſtian deſire helpe of that wicked one, who is Gods and their profeſſed enemie?

Hæc non ſunt membra quæ Deus fecit, ſed quæ Diabolus infecit. Cyprian. de Velan. Virgin. lib.

Ille indubitatè huiuſmodi ingenia conſummauit, vt in nobis quodam modo manus Deo inferret. De cult. fœmin. pag. 514.

§. Sect. 2. Painting both the effect and cauſe of ſinne.

Againe, let them conſider, that as it hath an euill authour, ſo it is in it ſelfe euill, as ſpringing from the root of ſinne, and bringing forth abundance of theſe curſed fruites.

The root from which it ſpringeth, is ſometimes pride, which moueth them, when they cannot match others in naturall beauty, to vſe theſe artificiall helpes, that thereby they may excell them in that which is counterfeit. And ſometime it ſpringeth from luſt, and the inward vncleanneſſe of the heart, which mooueth them to vſe theſe inueigling arts, that by ſeeming more beautifull than they are, they may enſnare the affections of thoſe who looke vpon them. And as it is bred of theſe curſed Parents, ſo it ſelfe is exceeding fruitfull in bringing forth the impious offſpring of manifold ſinnes committed both againſt God, their Neighbour and themſelues. Againſt God they offend; by preſuming to adulterate his worke, and by taking vpon them to amend that, which, (as they ſuppoſe) he hath made amiſſe; for they ſecretly reprehend the workman, when they are diſpleaſed with his worke, and ſeeme to taske him for want of wiſdome and cunning, when they take vpon them to correct and make better that which he hath left vnperfected. To this purpoſe is that of Cyprian: God ſaith, Let vs make man according to our image and ſimilitude, and dare any preſume to change & alter that which God hath made? In ſo doing, they offer violence to God, when as they ſtriue to reforme, & transforme that which hee hath formed; for that which is borne, is the worke of God, and that which is changed, the worke of the Deuill. If a skilfull Painter, hauing cunningly limb'd the portraiture of a mans body, and ſeeing another take vpon him to mend his workmanſhip, would bee mooued to anger, and thinke himſelfe much injured; doeſt thou thinke to goe vnpuniſhed for thy raſh boldneſſe, in preſuming to amend the worke of God?

Cyprian, tract. 2. de habit. virg. pag. 109.

§. Sect. 3. That theſe Painters deceiue and abuſe others.

Fucum facere, id eſt, decipere. Abſque fuco, id eſt, candidè & apertè.

They offend alſo againſt men, by deceiuing and abuſing them; making them to admire a painted picture, in ſtead of the worke of God; and ſo notable is this couſenage, that in the Latine phraſe, they are ſaid to colour or paint, who by their words or actions deceiue another, and to vſe no painting or colouring, who deale ingenuouſly, truly, and in ſimplicitie. But much more doe they ſin againſt them, whileſt by theſe deuilliſh arts counterfeiting beauty, they inflame the hearts of thoſe, who behold them, with filthy and vnlawfull luſts; the which was (as I take it) the chiefe cauſe why Satan inuented it, and wicked women practice it. And hence it is, that one calleth this painting, and counterfeit beauty, the fire of youth, the ſmell of luſt, and the ſigne which ſheweth where an vnchaſt heart dwelleth.

Hieronym.

§. Sect. 4. That they moſt of all offend againſt themſelues: In

But moſt of all doe they, who vſe this art, wrong themſelues, and ſinne againſt their owne bodies and ſoules; for if they offer great injury to their friends, who when they come into company, are aſhamed of them; then much more doe they thus offend, who are aſhamed of themſelues? And therefore being diſpleaſed with their owne colour and countenance, like Players, they come diſguiſed in the ſimilitude of other perſons; and for want of a better, they act their part in the habit of an Harlot. Now what is this but vnnaturally to deny themſelues, and to thruſt (as it were) another into their owne place? What is it but to make themſelues counterfeit Idols, that vnto them luſt may offer the ſacrifices of vncleanneſſe? What is it, but to expoſe themſelues to the ſcorne and laughter of thoſe, who hauing ſeene their glorious Beauty which they counterfeited, ſhall afterwards happen to ſee them in their owne complexion and naturall fouleneſſe, like a Player, who hauing acted a Kingly part, and put off all his gorgeous ornaments, doth now appeare in his owne perſon and attire; ſauing that herein it is much more abſurd, in that they profeſſe this diſguiſing, and theſe diſſemble it, deſiring that it ſhould be taken in good earneſt, which the other doe in jeſt to make ſport.

being d
of their perſon.

§. Sect. 5.
That they d ſtroy their n turall beauty, and diſgra their names.

Againe, whileſt they labour to attaine vnto this counterfeit complexion, they loſe that true beauty which they haue by nature; for with their medicines and minerals which they vſe to this purpoſe, they make their colour pale and wan, they wrinckle the face, yea, oftentimes poyſon the skin, and dimme the eyeſight, and ſo ouer-greedily ſeeking falſe Beauty, they get true deformity, and make themſelues loathſome indeed, that they may appeare beautifull in ſhew. And yet this is but the leaſt part of their loſſe: for as they blemiſh their skin, ſo they blot and diſgrace their Names, whileſt following the practice of Harlots, they deſeruedly gaine for all their labour, their reputation; and to bee ranged and eſteemed in their fellowſhip, whoſe manners they imitate. For this outward painting of theſe earthly houſes, maketh men thinke that they are to bee let; and by hanging out this ſigne of Luſt, they ſeeme to inuite Cuſtomers, and to offer their honeſtie to the ſale at eaſie rates. Of which fault, though ſome may bee free, (as falling into this folly by the example of others, and through the corruption of the times) yet few or none eſcape juſt jealouſie and ſuſpicion; (and Chriſtians ſhould auoid not onely euil, but the appearance thereof) for who would buy this vaine Beauty with the hazard of their ſoules, but they, who mind to ſell that which they haue thus dearely bought, when they haue fit occaſion? Neither in truth is it likely that they will long ſtand firmely vpon this ſlippery ground; but vſing the meanes, will come to the end, and (as one ſaith) hauing adulterated their face, they will ſoone after thinke of adulterating their chaſtitie, and defiling their bodies.

1.Theſ.5.

De a tur a Caſtitat.
Ambroſ. virginal.

Fi-

Sect. 6.
y that vſe nder their feſſion of igion.

Finally, as they diſgrace their names, ſo alſo their profeſſion of Religion, whileſt profeſſing themſelues the members of Chriſt, they behaue themſelues like the limmes of Satan. For what a ſhame is this, that there ſhould be no difference between a Chriſtian, and a Pagan, a Matrone and a Strumpet, the Spouſe of Chriſt, and a filthy Harlot, betweene one that profeſſeth her ſelfe, bought with the precious bloud of Chriſt, and another, that is ſold ouer to worke wickednes, and is branded with the marke of impietie to acknowledge the ſale? but that both alike ſhould vſe the ſame light habit and attire, and the ſame deuilliſh arts to commend themſelues by a falſe Beauty? The beſt Beauty of a Chriſtian Woman is modeſty and ſhamefaſtneſſe, and their beſt ornament is ſimplicity, and humility; but how farre are they from ſimplicitie and truth, who lie and diſſemble, euen when they ſay nothing, ſpeaking in a reall language falſhood and diſſimulation, euen with their very countenance, to as many as looke vpon them? vnleſſe they thinke that onely verball vntruth is forbidden, and actuall falſhood permitted; or that it is a greater fault to diſſemble in ſpeeches, than to deceiue in deeds and actions. And how farre are they from this Chriſtian humility, who rather than they will not ſhew their pride, vaunt themſelues of a counterfeit Beauty, and for want of better matter, grow high in their owne conceit, becauſe they haue this falſe ſhadow of true Beauty, which indeed is it ſelf but a ſhadow, in reſpect of any ſubſtantiall good? How far are they from that graue decency, which the Apoſtle requireth in Chriſtian Matrons, ſeeing they cannot content themſelues with Gold, precious Iewels, and Broydred Haire, vnleſſe they alſo adorne their heads with the ſpoyles of the dead, and grace themſelues with a graceleſſe and whoriſh Beauty? But let ſuch know, that they deceiue themſelues with a title of Chriſtianity, ſeeing they deny the truth thereof in their liues; and that howſoeuer they adorne themſelues with the profeſſion of Chriſtians, yet (as one ſaith) they can neuer put on the true garment Chriſt Ieſus: neither will the oyle of his ſanctifying graces, and theſe beautifying waters, and minerall duſt euer mix together.

r. 5. 8.

3. 3.

lan, de Virgi-lib.

ct. 7.

But here ſome will ſay, that for themſelues they take no great delight in theſe practices, but that they vſe them to pleaſe their Husbands, that by giuing them contentment, they may retaine their loue and affection; and appropriating it wholly to themſelues, may preſerue them from the loue of ſtrange women. For anſwering whereof, let ſuch know, that they ought not to pleaſe men by diſpleaſing God; and therefore though it could be imagined that any man is ſo ſilly and deſtitute of vnderſtanding, that he would haue his Wife, whom hee deſires to keepe honeſt, to vſe the qualities and conditions of an Harlot, yet ſhe ſhould not giue him contentment, by burthening her ſoule with a knowne ſinne. Neither can it be imagined that hereby they can wind themſelues into their Husbands loue, or preſerue him from vnlawfull luſts; for if neither the feare of God, nor the terrour of his judgements, death, hell, and condemnation, nor yet the puniſhment inflicted by humane Lawes, and the danger of falling hereby into innumerable euils, will deliuer him from following theſe courſes; nor finally the loue of God and his ſweet promiſes will allure him to the performance of his dutie; then how can it be imagined, that hee ſhould be inticed with a painted Vizard to imbrace this Conjugall loue, or be preſerued from ſtrange luſts with a falſe and counterfeit Beauty? Yea contrariwiſe, let them reſt aſſured that they make themſelues hereby loathſome to their Husbands, when as theſe artificiall ſupplies put them in minde of their naturall defects, and this counterfeit Beauty, of that reall deformitie which it hideth; like a rotten poſt which is painted, and gilded ouer to make a ſhew. And therefore (as one ſaith) they take a fooliſh courſe in ſeeking to approoue themſelues to their Husbands judgement, by diſapprouing them in their own; & to thinke to pleaſe others, when as being helped with ſelf-loue they cannot pleaſe themſelues. For if they thought nothing wanting, they would not ſeeke by ſuch means to make a ſupply; if they did not thinke themſelues deformed, they would neuer ſeeke grace from a falſe beauty. If then thou wouldeſt haue thy Huſband eſteeme thee, obſerue rather a ſober grauitie, than affect a counterfeit Beauty; and decke thy minde with the ornaments of vertue, humilitie, meekneſſe, conjugall loue, fidelitie, chaſtitie, modeſtie and the reſt, which being permanent and vnchangeable, will make his loue alſo conſtant and perpetuall; and teach him not with theſe deceitfull arts to tie his loue to the Beauty of the face, leſt being accuſtomed for this cauſe to affect and loue, hee be taken with beauty of an Harlot, when he findeth it more excellent. Whereas if thou inureſt him to loue in thee vertue, good qualities, modeſty, & ſobrietie, hee will not eaſily bee inſnared by the adultreſſe, ſeeing ſhe hath no ſuch baits to allure his loue. Finally, doe not teach him to bee willingly deceiued, with wanton laughter, and with a nice and affected gate; for ſo ſhalt thou but miniſter vnto him weapons, the point whereof may bee turned againſt thy ſelfe; but rather ſeeke that hee may take delight in chaſtity, modeſty, and ſobriety, and ſo ſhall hee haue armour of proofe to defend and preſerue him from the incounters of an Harlot.

Ambroſ. de Virgin. lib.

Chryſoſt. in 1. Tim. 1. Homil. 4.

Chap. XV.

That bodily ſtrength is not much to bee eſteemed, as being of ſmall worth and excellencie.

§. Sect. 1. That bodily ſtrength being in'it ſelfe good, is often abuſed through our corruption.

HAuing ſpoken of thoſe worldly tentations; which are grounded vpon Beauty. Wee are now to ſpeake of thoſe which ariſe from ſtrength and health, both which are in themſelues the good bleſsings of God, whereby wee are the better inabled to ſerue him in all good duties; for in them our firſt parents excelled in the ſtate of innocencie, & we alſo ſhal much excel them in the ſtate of glory; for our bodies are ſowne in corruption, but they ſhall riſe in vncorruption, they are ſowne in weakneſſe, but they ſhall bee raiſed in power, as the Apoſtle telleth vs. And therfore being the gifts of God, wherewith hee moſt inriched vs in the ſtate of innocencie, and will crowne vs in the ſtate of glory, they muſt needs be good in their owne nature, and to thoſe who haue a right vſe of them. But yet through the malice of our ſpirituall enemies theſe gifts of God (like all other benefits of proſperitie) are vnto vs the grounds of their tentations, wherewith they draw vs vnto ſinne; and their nature being infected with our corruption, they are oftentimes abuſed vnto euill. As when hauing them we glory in them, or preferre them before ſpirituall graces, and the meanes of eternall glory; or finally, when by them we are hindred in the courſe of godlineſſe, or furthered and ſtrengthened in the way of wickedneſſe. And therefore in the next place wee are to arme the Chriſtian, that he may not be ouercome of his own ſtrength, & that his health be not vnto him the means of bringing him to ſickneſſe of ſoule and death eternall. But I ſhall not need to ſpeake much of this, ſeeing that armour which was brought out to defend vs againſt the aſſaults of worldly beauty, may by the wiſe Reader bee eaſily fitted againſt theſe incounters alſo; and ſeeing alſo this decrepit age of the World (which now ſeemeth almoſt quite abandoned of that ſtrength and vigorous health wherein the former ages haue excelled; and to bee fully repleniſhed with all manner of infirmities, ſickneſſe, and weakneſſe) needeth not ſo much to be confirmed and preſerued againſt the tentations which are grounded on this Lion-like ſtrength, as againſt thoſe which ariſe from Serpentine ſubtilty, and Fox-like wilineſſe.

1. Cor. 15. 42.

§. Sect. 2. That it is a great vanity to glorie in ſtrength, ſeeing God eſteemeth it not, and the beaſts excell in it.

And yet becauſe ſtrength is no more abated, than pride increaſed; and men are apt to glory in theſe things, though nothing in themſelues, yet when being compared they exceed others of our owne times; it ſhall not be amiſſe to vſe briefly ſome reaſons whereby wee may be preſerued againſt theſe tentations. And firſt concerning ſtrength (vnder which I alſo comprehend, actiuitie, nimbleneſſe, ſwifneſſe, and ſuch like eſteemable properties of the bodie) we are not, as the Lord exhorteth vs, to glory in it, nor ouer-weening the worth of it, to preferre it before things of much better value; becauſe being thus compared, it is of no great excellency, and vnto vs oftentimes vnprofitable, and ſometimes alſo hurtfull and inconuenient. It is of no great worth, ſeeing the Lord himſelfe doth little eſteeme it: for as Elihu ſaith, he regardeth not them that excell in ſtrength: and as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, he hath no pleaſure in the ſtrength of an horſe, neither delighteth he in the legs of man. And therefore he maketh this alſo one of his common gifts, which he giueth to the Reprobate, as well as to the Elect, and vnto beaſts (and that in farre greater meaſure) as well as vnto men. How vaine therfore are thoſe who are proud of ſuch baſe vanities, wherein many wicked men match them, and many beaſts doe farre excell? them how little good haue they in them, when they are faine to glorie in that, in which when they haue attained vnto the greateſt meaſure which poſſibility incourageth them to deſire, yet they come farre ſhort of Giants among men, and of the Horſe, Bull, Lion, and many other among the bruiſh creatures? To this purpoſe Chryſoſtome demandeth; Art thou ſtrong (ſaith hee) and art thou therefore proud? Why the thing wherein thou glorieſt is baſe, for the Lion is hardier than thou, and the Bore ſtronger; yea, Robbers, Theeues, and Ruffians, and thine owne ſeruants herein excell thee, and doeſt thou thinke this a thing eſteemable or praiſe worthy? The like alſo may be ſaid, of nimbleneſſe, actiuitie, and ſwifneſſe. For when in nimbleneſſe and actiuitie thou exceedeſt all men, yet an Ape doth farre ſurpaſſe thee; and though thou couldeſt runne as ſwiftly as Aſahel, yet the ſilly Hare would far outſtrip thee. Seeing therefore God hath vouchſafed thee the honour of a man, glory not in that wherein the beaſts excell thee, and ſeeing he hath made thee a Chriſtian, abuſe not ſo much the worth of thine owne excellencies, as (ſetting aſide all thy better parts) to bee proud of that wherein Pagans and Heathens haue ouer-matched thee. But (as one ſaith) when thou haſt this ſtrength, vſe it whileſt it is preſent; and when it is abſent, neuer much deſire it.

Jer. 9. 23.

Job 36. 19.
Pſal. 147. 10.

Fortis, e tum ſqui res uiſſim nam & la ti audac que ſortio Homil. ad p
40. Tom. 4.

Iſ dum aſ aſſi rit. Cic.
Senil.

§. Sect.
That b ſtrength momen and but o ſhort c nuance.

Againe, let vs conſider that if it were of any worth and excellencie, yet it is not much to bee eſteemed, becauſe it is momentanie, and of ſuch ſhort continuance. For oftentimes it is by a weeks ſicknes weakned and impaired, euen in the prime of youth, & ſo forſaketh vs, as ſoone as it hath but ſaluted vs, as though it had only come to take leaue: our youthfull yeeres and perfect age remaining as weake and decrepit, as if wee had continued the time of the longeſt liuer. But ſay that ſickneſſe ſpareth vs, yet as old age approcheth, ſtrength decreaſeth, after which death haſteneth which doth wholly aboliſh it, making the ſtrongeſt giant and the weakeſt wretch both alike. Conſider further, that this huge ſtrength of the body, is commonly ioyned with great weaknes of the mind; and where there is the greateſt bone, there vſually is the leaſt wiſedome and vnderſtanding. In which reſpect Themiſtocles compared the Eretrienſes, a people more ſtrong than wiſe, to the Swordfiſh, which hath a weapon but wants a heart. Neither doth it helpe to furniſh the minde with any vertues, or maketh it more ready to any vertuous actions; but as thoſe trees which are moſt great and ſtrong, are commonly moſt vnfruitfull; ſo oftentimes thoſe who excell in ſtrength, are moſt barren in bearing the fruits of vertue, and leaſt forward in ſuch actions as ſauour of goodneſſe. Nor doth this bodily ſtrength aſſiſt the ſoule in moderating of our affections, and in ouerruling of our paſſions; it doth not helpe to aſſwage anger, to bridle luſt, or to ſtoppe our courſe, when wee runne to take reuenge yea contrariwiſe being abuſed by our corruptions, it pricketh forward our rage with the ſpurres of armed furie; it maketh men more able ſlaues to their owne filthineſſe, and in ſtead of ſtopping vs in reuengefull courſes, it rather haſteth vs forward with headlong ſwiftneſſe, and putteth a ſword of violence into our hands, whereby wee may not onely requite old iniuries, but alſo reuenge apparances of wrongs with extreame crueltie. Yea it not only encourageth thoſe that haue confidence in their owne ſtrength, without reaſon or conſcience, to oppreſſe and tyrannically to tread vnder foote thoſe whom they find themſelues able to ouermatch; but ſo puffeth them vp in pride in regard of their owne abilities, that they are ready with deſperate furie to make warre againſt heauen, and hauing gotten the victorie ouer men, to ſet vpon and encounter God himſelfe. As appeareth in the example of that mightie Nimrod and his aſſociates; and in Goliah, who not onely inſulted ouer all Sauls armie in confidence of his owne ſtrength, but alſo was at defiance with God himſelfe, and railed on the holy one of Iſrael.

Finally, let vs conſider that this vaine ſtrength wherein men truſt, cannot deliuer them from thoſe innumerable dangers and euils vnto which our fraile life is daily ſubiect; for as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, The King is not ſaued by the multitude of an hoſt, neither is the mightie man deliuered by his great ſtrength. It cannot defend them from the iudgements of God in the day of his viſitation, nor from the furious aſſaults of their ſpirituall enemies when they encounter them. It cannot keepe away ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, much leſſe deliuer them from the power of death: yea rather it expoſes men to danger, their ſtrength miniſtring vnto them more incouragement and boldneſſe to runne into perils, than power and abilitie to eſcape or ouercome them. For ſeldome is there any ſo ſtrong, but that at one time or other he meetes with one as able as himſelfe; and though there be none to match him, yet (like Milo) he may be catched in his owne trap, and his owne ſtrength may bee the cauſe of his ruine, whileſt his pride maketh him to vndergoe a greater burthen than he is able to beare, and to attempt matters which are aboue humane power to accompliſh and performe. And therefore ſeeing this bodily ſtrength is vaine and momentanie, vnprofitable, and oftentimes hurtfully and dangegerous: let vs not glory in it, nor too much value and eſteeme it, but rather let vs deſire to be powerfull in the inner man, and to wax ſtronger in all vertues and ſpirituall graces; but eſpecially let vs carefully deſire to bee ſtrengthened with the power of Gods might, whereby (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) we ſhall bee inabled to doe all things, and to ſtand manfully in the day of battaile againſt all the cruell aſſaults of our ſpirituall enemies, with aſſured hope of victory: which will eaſily ouercome vs notwithſtanding our bodily ſtrength, if this ſpirituall power and ſecret vertue of Gods ſpirit do faile and forſake vs in the time of triall.

Epheſ. 6.10.

Philip.4.13.

Chap. XVI.

That bodily health is but of ſmall worth and excellencie.

§. Sect.1. Health in it ſelfe, is a great bleſſing, but much abuſed through our corruption. Eccluſ.30.15.16

THe like alſo may bee ſaid of health, which in it owne nature is the good bleſſing of God, and a notable helpe to thoſe that vſe it well, for the better performance of all good duties: in which reſpect the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, That health and ſtrength are aboue gold, and a whole body aboue infinit treaſure, there is no riches aboue a ſound body, and no ioy aboue the ioy of the heart. Yea in truth there is ſcarce any earthly bleſſing to be compared with it, ſeeing it much leſſens all our ſorrowes and afflictions, and ſweetneth all other comforts and worldly benefits, which being ſeuered from it, become tedious and loathſome. Howbeit this bleſſing of God through our corruption is continually ſubiect to great abuſe; as when we eſteeme it aboue Gods ſpirituall graces, and the health of our ſoules, and doe ſet our hearts ſo vpon it, as that wee will not sticke to vse wicked and vnlawfull meanes, to preserue it whilest wee haue it, or recouer it when wee want it; or finally, when thereby we are not furthered in the seruice of God, and in all good and Christian duties. For howsoeuer whilest wee haue it, wee are with all thankfulnesse to esteeme it, as being a great blessing of God; and when we want it, to desire it moderately, and to vse all good meanes for recouery of it: yet when it commeth in comparison of Gods sanctifying gifts, or the spirituall health of the soule, which is accompanied with eternall life, it is to bee contemned and despised, as being light, vaine, and of no value.

§. Sect. 2.
That health is but a common gift, which is imparted also to the wicked.
Sanitatem corporis ne putes magnum bonum esse, quod habet & malus August. Serm. 12. tom 10 col 57.
Psal. 73.4.5.7.

To which purpose let vs consider, that howsoeuer health bee good, yet it is but a common good, which the Lord imparteth to the wicked, as well as to the godly: and therefore (as one saith) we are not to esteeme bodily health a great good, which euen wicked men also enioy: and oftentimes in a farre greater measure than Gods dearest seruants: for as the Psalmist obserued, The wicked are lustie and strong, they are not in trouble as other men, neither are plagued with other men, their eyes stand out with fatnes, and they haue more than heart can wish. Yea it is communicated vnto the bruit beasts, many of which enioy it longer, & in a much more perfect and excellent manner than man doth. To which purpose one saith, Why doe yee wonder because these men enioy health, when as ye heare the Psalmist saying, O Lord thou makest whole, or conseruest men and beasts? that men might not waxe proud because they haue temporall health, the beasts are ioyned with them: why therfore doest thou reioyce O man because of health, seeing this benefit is common to thee with thine asse, &c. and therefore rest not in this, but rather seeke to obtaine the speciall benefits which are promised to the sonnes of men: for to what purpose serue reason and the excellent wit of man, if hee attaine vnto nothing better than that which is common to him with the beasts?

August. Serm. in festo paschæ de Alleluia. tom.10.c.1533.
Psalm.36.6.

§. Sect. 3.
That bodily health is momentanie and vncertaine.

Againe, how worthlesse and void of excellencie this bodily health is, it may appeare, first, in that it is momentanie and vncertaine. For euen when it is at the height, euery trifling accident doth ouerthrow it; too much heat, or too much cold, want of nourishment or a little excesse, ouermuch labour or too much ease, besides a thousand secret and inward causes, ouerturne health and make way for sicknesse and diseases. In which respect one saith, that this which we vsually call health of the body, is in truth sicknesse; seeing ease it selfe is sufficient to bring it into a consumption, and labour also doth cause it to faile: being spent with fasting, it is refreshed with meate, that it may continue, and being tired and wasted with ouermuch eating, it is relieued with abstinence, that it may grow stronger: the body is washed with water, that it may not be ouer drie, and then wiped with clothes, that it may not be too much moistned and softned; it is refreshed with labour, that it may not grow sluggish with ease; and cherished with rest, that it may not sinke vnder the burthen of labour; it is wearied with watching, and repaired with sleepe, and being oppressed with too much sleepe, this sluggishnesse is shaken off with watchfulnesse, least it should be spent and wearied more with rest, than with its labour. It is couered with clothes, that it may not feele the iniuries of the weather, and fainting with ouermuch heate, it is refreshed with the fanning of the coole aire. And hauing found troubles and griefes in that wherein it thought to haue auoided them, being sore wounded (as I may say) it languisheth, and waxeth weaker with the very medicine, that should haue cured it. Though therefore feauers be absent, and griefes of body cease, euen our very health is no better than a sicknes, vnto which necessity of cure is neuer wanting: for looke how many helpes and comforts we seeke out for the vse of life, euen so many medicines doe wee find to free vs from diseases; and oftentimes the salue it selfe turneth to a wound; because vsing an excellent remedy a little too long, we are much impaired by that, which wee prouided for our cure. To the same purpose another saith, that that which is called the health of this life, to them that vnderstand it aright, and doe compare it with that which we shall enioy in our eternall rest, it is not esteemed worthy the name of health. For if we doe not eate, hunger vexeth vs, and what is this hunger, but a naturall disease? because nature it selfe by Gods iust vengeance is made vnto vs a punishment; and that which to the first man was punishment, is vnto vs turned into nature. &c.

Gregor. Moral. lib.8. cap.20.

Augu 37.co tom.1.

§. Sect.4.
That bodi health is im perfect, and full of in ties.

Secondly, it is most imperfect, our whole life being like a continuall ague, which, euery second or third day, interchangeth health with sicknesse; neither is there any so strong and healthie, that hath not some griefes and infirmities which often vex him; although the pleasures and businesses of the world giue him not leasure to take any great notice of them; and the youth and strength of his body doth enable him to beare his burden with more ease and cheerefulnesse. Or though it should bee granted, that a man were quite free from all these bodily infirmities; yet if he hath many diseases in his soule, hee cannot bee said to haue any perfection of health, when as his best part is thus affected. For as it were ridiculous, if a man should glory in his health, because he is sound in his outward limmes, when in the meane time he hath the megrim in his head, the conſumption in his lungs, and incurable diſeaſes about his heart, and other chiefe and vitall parts; ſo is it no leſſe abſurd to be proud of our bodily health, when as our ſoules which are the chiefe part of man, and the life of all the reſt, are deſperatly ſicke in the diſeaſes of ſinne. For what is this, but to haue a faire skinne, and ſicke heart, a beautifull outſide, full and faire, and within, a deſperate dropſie, or vnrecouerable pleuriſie? like vnto an apple, which is faire to the eye, and rotten at the core. But ſo long as wee carie about with vs the old man, and dwell in theſe houſes of clay, we are continually ſubject to theſe diſeaſes of the ſoule, and will we nill wee, we ſhall often wound our conſciences, and make our ſelues ſicke with ſinne; the which our bodily health is ſo farre off from helping and curing, that oftentimes it occaſioneth, and moſt commonly increaſeth theſe ſpirituall diſeaſes; in regard whereof one ſaith, a ſicke minde dwelleth no where worſe than in a ſound body. And therefore little cauſe haue wee to bragge of this bodily health, being in it ſelfe vaine, fraile and imperfect, and beſides alwaies accompanied with the ſoules ſickneſſe, which is ſo dangerous and grieuous, that nothing can cure it but the blood of Chriſt.

But as this bodily health is not much to be eſteemed, in reſpect that it bringeth vnto vs little good; ſo much leſſe in regard, that through our corruption, it is often the cauſe of much hurt. For who knoweth not, that where there is the moſt healthfull body, there commonly is the ſickeſt ſoule? who ſeeth not great difference betweene them, who lie in their ſicke beds, and thoſe whoſe health is neuer impaired with any dangerous ſickneſſe? Yea, who findeth not great diſſimilitude betweene himſelfe being ſicke, and himſelfe inioying perfect health? how deuout hee is then, how fearefull to offend God, how watchfull ouer his wayes, how ready he is to call himſelfe to a reckoning, that hee may ſet things ſtraight betweene God & himſelfe. And contrariwiſe, how negligent he is now, how hard harted and carnally ſecure, putting away from him the euill day, and together with it the day of repentance; preſuming vpon his health and ſtrength, and thinking that hee may haue time enough hereafter to repent, and make euen his reckonings with God. Whereby it appeareth, that the health of the body is oftentimes a cauſe of the ſoules ſickneſſe, euen as contrariwiſe, the bodies ſickneſſe is often a meanes of the ſoules recouerie, and ſeldome ſhall wee find them both in any great meaſure in the ſame man; vnleſſe the corruptions which vſually attend vpon health, bee purged away with ſome other bitter potion of affliction. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that God foreſeeing that ſome would fall through the abuſe of their health into ſinne, doth correct them for their profit with weakeneſſe of body, that they may not offend; and maketh it more profitable vnto them to be broken with griefes to their ſaluation, than to remaine in health to their condemnation. For that health is pernicious which leadeth to diſobedience, euen as that ſicknes is wholeſome, which by Gods correction, doth break and humble the hardneſſe of the heart. Finally, nothing more than this bodily health doth naile mens hearts to the earth, or make them more in loue with the world, and worldly vanities, nothing more cauſeth men to giue themſelues ouer to voluptuous pleaſures; from which weakneſſe and infirmity weaneth them; which being intertained, like vnthankfull gueſts, thruſt out of the doores their hoſt that gaue them their beſt welcome. For as nothing more eaſily moueth vs to admit and imbrace theſe voluptuous pleaſures of the fleſh, than bodily health, ſo nothing more impaires, and baniſheth health than they, when they are intertained. And therefore ſeeing this bodily health through our abuſe, doth more often hurt, than helpe vs in our ſpirituall eſtate; and doth much more weaken the ſoule, than ſtrengthen the body; let vs not too much dote on it whileſt wee haue it, nor much bewaile our loſſe, when it is taken from vs. But ſeeing it is ſo ſubject to abuſe, let vs keepe a ſpeciall watch ouer our ſelues whileſt wee injoy it, that we may ſo vſe it, that God who gaue it, may bee more glorified and better ſerued, and we who haue it, may bee helped forward in all good duties, and grow more and more in grace, and in the aſſurance of our ſaluation. For otherwiſe it will rather be a curſe vnto vs than a bleſſing, which wee were much better profitably to want, then ſo hurtfully to inioy. And (as one ſaith) let vs being in health bee admoniſhed, that we ſo vſe this bodily health, as that it may further the ſpirituall health of our ſoules, leaſt peruerting the benefit of our health to the practiſe of wickedneſſe, wee be made worſe by Gods gift; and ſo receiue more grieuous puniſhments hereafter, the leſſe we haue feared to abuſe ſo bountifull bleſſings of God vnto ſinne.

Quoſdam praeſciens deus peccare poſſe, in ſalutem flagellat eos infirmitate corporis ne peccent. Bernard. de interior. domo, cap. 46.

Admonendi ſunt incolumes vt ſalutem corporis exerceant ad ſalutem mentis, &c. Gregor. paſtoral. par. 3. cap. 13.

CHAP. XVII.

That ſociety and neere familiarity with wicked worldlings is to be ſhunned and auoided.

WEE haue don with ſuch worldly tentations, as haue their ground and foundation on ſomething which is in our ſelues: Now it followeth that §. Sect. 1. That the world allureth vs by wicked companie, to ſe-company them in ſinne.

that I intreate of ſuch, as are cauſed and occaſioned by ſomwhat that is without vs. For as the world, and the prince therof ſeeke to ouercome vs, by cauſing our ſelues to betray our ſelues, and to become the inſtruments of our owne ruine; ſo if they faile of this, then they buſilie muſter againſt vs forren forces, and with them beſiege the fort of our ſoules, that ſo they may ſacke and ſpoile vs of all ſpirituall graces, and may lead vs captiue to deſtruction. Now theſe forces conſiſt either in the perſons of worldlings themſelues, or in worldy things, which they vſe as their baites and allurements, wherewith they intice vs vnto ſinne. In the former reſpect the world tempteth vs, when it draweth vs into the fellowſhip and ſocietie, or neere familiaritie, and inward friendſhip of wicked men, that being corrupted with their company and friendſhip, we may either be hindred in our courſe of godlineſſe, or allured to goe with them in the broad way of ſinne, that bringeth to deſtruction:

§. Sect. 2. That all ſocietie with wicked men is not vnlawfull.

Which tentation that wee may ouercome, let vs arme our ſelues againſt it; and leaſt wee ſhould reject the good with the euill, in the firſt place let vs conſider in what reſpects ſocietie with worldlings is permitted as lawfull, and how it is condemned as vnlawfull, and euill; that ſo neither going aſide on the right hand, nor on the left, wee may hold on in that ſtraight way which the word of God preſcribeth vnto vs. For the former, wee are to know, that not all manner of ſocietie with wicked men is forbidden, nor yet to all men: For (as one ſaith) he muſt goe into the ſolitary deſerts, who will liue onely with thoſe who are innocent. And the Apoſtle telleth vs, that if we will not at all come into the companie of fornicators of this world, or with the couetous, or with extortioners, or with idolaters, we muſt then leaue the world alſo. And therefore we muſt not follow the fooliſh dotage of Popiſh Hermits and Anchoriſts, who make it a high degree of their perfection to liue alone, and to ſequeſter themſelues from all ſocietie of men; for as the Heathen man could ſay, he that will content himſelfe with himſelfe, and leaue the companie of all others, had need to bee either a God, whom none can mend, or a ſauage beaſt, who hateth humane fellowſhip, and will not come neere them, vnleſſe it bee to deſtroy or hurt them.

Quærat ſolitudinem qui vult cum innocentibus viuere.

1. Cor. 5. 10.

Ariſtotle rep. lib. 1. cap. 2.

§. Sect. 3. In what caſes it is lawfull to come in company with wicked men.

It is lawfull then in ſome caſes to keepe companie with wicked worldlings. As for example, when humane ſocietie, and common ciuilitie doth require it; neither is it poſſible to liue in a common wealth, vnleſſe wee obſerue the rules of ciuilitie, and performe mutuall duties of citizens, and neighbours one to another, whether they bee profeſſours of religion, or but meere worldlings. For without this, not only all trading, buying, ſelling, and ſuch other commerce, wherewith the Common-wealth is maintained and preſerued, decaieth, and quite ceaſeth; but euen duties required neceſſarily to the preſeruing of life, and of our being in the world, ſhould alſo be neglected. As then euery man ought in the time of a common plague, to preſerue his health, by keeping himſelfe from comming amongſt infected perſons; and yet in ſome caſes, his comming neere them is not onely lawfull, but alſo neceſſarie, as to quench a fire, to help a woman in her labour and childbirth, and to miniſter vnto them ſuch neceſſaries as may preſerue their liues; ſo is it lawfull in theſe, and ſuch like caſes to come into the cōpany of thoſe who are ſpiritually infected with the plague of ſinne. But the company of wicked men is to be auoided, in reſpect of neere frendſhip and familiar conuerſation, when as wee take delight to frequent their company, as it were, of our owne choice, neither ciuill conuerſation, nor humane neceſſitie vrging vs thereunto. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that we ought to flee the companie of wicked men, in reſpect of priuate fellowſhip, and not in reſpect of publike communion; and that rather with our hearts and affections, than with our bodies and outward actions. And this is that familiar acquaintance which good Iehoſaphat had with Ahab, Iehoram & Ahaziah; and the reſt of that family, for which hee is ſo often taxed and cenſured in the booke of God.

Malorum co ſortia fugere debemus, qua priuatam co ſuetudinem, n quoad public conuerſation corde, quam co pore. Ambroſ. Offic. lib. 1. ca 2. Chron. 18. and 19. & 19.

§. Sect. 4. That it is la full to comp ny with wick men that we may conuert them vnto God.

But as it is lawfull for all men in ſome caſes, to come into the companie of wicked worldlings, ſo for ſome men eſpecially more frequently, namely ſuch as hauing a calling of God hereunto, are furniſhed alſo with ſuch a meaſure of grace, knowledge, and ſanctification, that they may iuſtly conceiue more hope of conuerting them vnto God, than there is feare that the other ſhould peruert and corrupt them with ſin; if withall in ſinceritie and vprightnes of heart they propound vnto themſelues this as their chiefe and maine end, and not worldly and ſiniſter reſpects. For as it is lawfull, yea laudable, for the Phyſitians of the body, to frequent the companie of them who are ſicke of infectious and contagious diſeaſes, that they may cure and recouer them, eſpecially when as they doe not goe armed onely with their deſperate boldneſſe, but vſe good preſeruatiues and wholeſome meanes, to preuent and repell the infection; ſo alſo it is lawfull for the ſpirituall Phyſitians of the ſoule, to come into the companie of thoſe who are ſicke of the leproſie of ſinne, and the plague a of ſcandalous life, if they vſe the good meanes of meditation, prayer, and ſuch other wholeſome preſeruatiues, whereby they may be kept ſound from the tainture of this ſpirituall infection. And for this wee haue our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe for our precedent, who being the Phyſitian of our ſoules, frequented the companie of publicans and ſinners, who had moſt neede of his helpe. For howſoeuer it is not ſo fit for vs, as it was for him, to come into ſuch companie, becauſe hee was free from ſinne, and from the tainture of all corruption, and therefore needed no preſeruatiues, but what he had in himſelfe; and alſo becauſe through the puritie of his nature he was able purely, and without any worldlineſſe and wickedneſſe, to propound thoſe ends of doing others good, and of ſauing them from their ſinne; whereas wee being full of the corrupt humours of ſinne, and of the ſeedes of all wickedneſſe, are apt to receiue the outward infection; neither can wee purely without the mixture of our corruption, propound ſuch good ends to our workes and actions; yet ſeeing it was done by our Sauiour Chriſt it is not abſolutly vnlawfull in vs; ſo that we endeuour to doe it in his manner, and to the ſame ends, vſing all good meanes to preſerue our ſelues from hurt, whileſt we labour after others good. For ſeeing by the rule of charitie wee are bound to loue our neighbours as our ſelues, it followeth that wee may lawfully hazard a ſlippe or foyle (in the meane time vſing all good meanes whereby wee may be enabled to ſtand vpright) if we haue any hope that by our helpe our brother may bee pulled backe from the gulfe of deſtruction whereinto he is falling. Howbeit in this caſe circumſpection is to bee vſed, leaſt whileſt wee labour to raiſe others vp, wee our ſelues doe catch a downfall, and whileſt wee endeuour to cure their diſeaſes, wee our ſelues bee tainted and infected with their contagion. For ſuch is our pronenes to fall into this ſickneſſe of the ſoule, that vnleſſe wee vſe all good preſeruatiues, they will not bee bettered, and wee ſhall become much worſe, and bring our ſelues into grieuous, but yet vnpitied, diſeaſes. For as the ſonne of Syrach ſaith, who will haue pitie of the charmer that is ſtung of the ſerpent? or of ſuch as come neere wilde beaſts (to tame their wildneſſe?) ſo is it with him that keepeth companie with a wicked man, and wrappeth himſelfe in his ſinnes.

…12.13.

…Sect.5.
…hat caſes
…ompanie
…icked
…dlings is
…condem-

And thus haue I ſhewed in what caſes the companie of worldly and wicked men is lawfull and warrantable; whereby alſo it is eaſie to gather in what reſpect it is vnlawfull and condemned; namely, when it is vſuall and familiar, voluntarie and not of any neceſſitie, or vrgent occaſion, raſh and deſperate, without vſing any meanes whereby wee might bee preſerued from being corrupted by their ſocietie. And finally, when as wee doe not in vprightneſſe of conſcience, propound as our maine end their ſpirituall good, and conuerſion vnto God, but our owne worldly ends. As for example, when we aime by our familiar acquaintance with them, at our owne priuate profit and aduantage, or at the ſatiſfying of our owne voluptuous pleaſure, as when we delight in their ſharpnes of wit, merrie conceits, and in their pleaſing conuerſation; which oftentimes are baites to allure vs to enter into, and inſnare our ſelues in the nets of perdition. For with this ſweetneſſe is mixed the poyſon of worldly prophaneneſſe, ribauldrie, blaſphemie, and ſuch like wicked diſcourſes; all which being in their companie, we muſt needs heare, (vnleſſe wee will ſtop our eares) and hearing muſt of neceſſitie either be corrupted or offended. In which regard one admoniſheth vs to take carefull heede, leaſt whileſt by ſuch companie we deſire to recreate our mindes, we doe not loſe all harmonie and concord of good workes, becauſe cuſtome oftentimes doth incline nature.

Caueamus ne dum relaxare animum volumus, ſoluamus omnem harmoniam, quaſi concentum quendam bonorum operum. Ambroſ. Offic. lib.1. cap.20.

§.Sect.6.
That the company of the wicked is forbidden and condemned.

In all which caſes and reſpects, the companie of worldlings is a notable tentation to draw vs vnto ſinne, and to hinder vs in the courſe of vertue and godlineſſe, and therefore is moſt carefully of all Chriſtians to bee ſhunned and auoided. To which purpoſe let vs conſider, firſt, that this ſocietie with the wicked is often forbidden, and condemned in the word of God. So the Wiſe man eſpecially, chargeth vs not to keepe companie with drunkards, or with gluttons; and generally, neither to be enuious againſt euill men, nor to deſire to be in their companie, becauſe their hearts imagine deſtruction, and their lips ſpeake miſchiefe. And thus the Lord commandeth the Iſraelites to haue no manner of ſocietie or friendſhip with the wicked nations, leaſt by their example and prouocation they ſhould be moued vnto idolatrie and ſin. And the Apoſtle Paul willeth vs in the name of the Lord, to come out from among wicked men, to ſeparate our ſelues from them, and to touch no vncleane thing; for if the touching of a thing vncleane ceremonially defiled a man, how much more the familiar aquaintance of thoſe, who are defiled with ſinne? But with greater care and circumſpection are wee charged to auoid the company of thoſe who making profeſſion of Chriſtian religion, doe diſgrace the ſame with their wicked and vngodly liues and conuerſations, becauſe of all other their ſocietie is moſt dangerous; their ſinnes being more ſcandalous, and their example more forcible to allure vs vnto ſinne. If any (ſaith he) that is called a brother, be a fornicator or couetous, or an idolater, or railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with ſuch an one eate not. And thus he commandeth the Theſſalonians, in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, that they ſhould withdraw themſelues from euery brother that walketh inordinatly, and

Prou.23.20.

Prou.24.1.

Exod.34.16. Deut.7.3 4.

2.Cor.6.17. Leuit.7.19.

1.Cor.5.11.

2.Theſſ.3.6.

Apoc.18.4.

not after the inſtruction which he had receiued from him. And thus the voice from heauen crieth vnto all the ſeruants of God, to come out of the ſpirituall Babylon, that they be not partakers in her ſinnes, and that they receiue not of her plagues.

§. *Sect.*7.
That Gods Saints haue carefully ſhunned the companie of the wicked.

*Pſal.*26.4.5.

*Pſalm.*120.5.6.

2.*Cor.*6.14.15.

*Eccl.*13.16.17.

Ambroſ. ad Virgin. deuot. lib. cap. 1.

And as the Lord hath forbidden this ſociety with the wicked; ſo alſo haue the Saints carefully auoided it. Thus Dauid profeſſeth, that hee had not haunted with vaine perſons, neither kept company with the diſſemblers; yea that hee hated the aſſembly of the euill, and had not companied with the wicked. And when through his grieuous perſecutions he was forced, whether hee would or no, to haue this wicked fellowſhip, hee grieuouſly complaineth hereof, crying out; Woe is me that I remaine in Meſhech, and dwell in the tents of Kedar. Whoſe example let vs learne to imitate, approuing our ſelues to be true Iſraelites by our abhorring all fellowſhip with theſe filthy ſwine, who take delight to wallow themſelues in the loathſome puddle of ſinne and wickedneſſe. And to this end let vs further conſider, that there ought to be no communion or fellowſhip betweene the faithfull and theſe worldly infidels: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, what fellowſhip hath righteouſneſſe with vnrighteouſneſſe? and what communion hath light with darkneſſe? and what concord hath Chriſt with Belial? or what part hath the beleeuer with the infidell? With which accordeth the ſaying of the Sonne of Syrach, All fleſh (ſaith hee) will reſort to their like, and euery man will keepe company with ſuch as he is himſelfe: how can the Wolfe agree with the Lambe? no more can the vngodly with the righteous. And to the ſame purpoſe another demandeth, What (ſaith he) haſt thou to doe with worldly men, or what commerce canſt thou haue with them? to what purpoſe doeſt thou deſire to know with them the way of perdition, which they follow? If thou ſeekeſt for chaſtitie, they haue it not; if for faith, who is faithfull among them, whom thou ſhouldeſt imitate? If thou ſeekeſt for Chriſt, he remaineth not in them, &c.

§. *Sect.*8.
That wicked companie is a notable inducement to draw vs vnto ſinne.

*Pſal.*119.115.

*Ecclſ.*13.1.

1.*Cor.*5.6.

Senec.

Secondly, let vs call to minde that this ſociety with wicked worldlings doth bring vnto vs much hurt, as being the cauſe both of the euill of ſinne, and the euill of puniſhment. For it is a ſpeciall meanes of the tranſgreſſion of all Gods Lawes and therefore the Prophet Dauid being reſolued to yeeld his obedience thereunto, ſaith, Away from me yee wicked, for I will keepe the commandements of my God. Implying that there was no hope of yeelding ſuch obedience as hee deſired, vntill hee had freed himſelfe from wicked mens company. For this wicked ſociety doth exceedingly corrupt and defile thoſe that frequent it, like vnto a gangrene, which hauing tainted one member, neuer reſteth till it haue runne ouer the whole body; or like vnto the ſpreading leproſie or plague, which beginning in one houſe proceedeth to another, vntill it haue infected the greateſt part of a towne or citie. In which reſpect the ſonne of Syrach compareth wicked company to pitch, which by touching defileth vs; and the Apoſtle, to leauen, a little whereof ſoureth the whole lumpe of dough. And by others, wicked men in this regard are compared to ſcabbed ſheepe, one of which is enough to infect the whole flocke; and to rotten apples, which taint and corrupt all the ſound ones that lie about them. Wherby it appeareth that it is a thing of great difficultie to conuerſe with wicked men, and not to be tainted with their corruptions: for beſides that they are apt to infect, wee alſo are moſt apt to receiue the infection, hauing the ſeeds of ſinne remaining in vs, which are ready to ſpring and ſprout vp, when they are (as it were) watered with the breath of euill company. We are in our owne nature prone to goe downe the hill of vice, how then ſhall we keepe our ſelues from running headlong, when we are thruſt forward with theſe wicked aſſociates? In our ſelues wee are ſluggiſh in trauelling the way of righteouſneſſe which leadeth to life eternall: and therefore what will become of vs when theſe briars and thornes catch hold of vs and hinder vs? Surely they will either cauſe vs to make a ſtand, and to proceed no further in our Chriſtian race, or will ſcratch and rent vs when wee ſeeke to breake from them. So that it is a thing of great difficulty to continue doing well, amongſt thoſe, who are euill; or not to bee hindred in our courſe of godlineſſe, when as wicked companions doe (as it were) hang on our neckes, and with all their power and policie labour to ſtay vs. And this that wiſe Heathen obſerued in his owne experience: I confeſſe (ſaith he) mine owne weakeneſſe: I neuer bring home thoſe manners which I caried abroad; but ſomething which I had well compoſed is diſturbed and put out of order; ſome of thoſe vices which I had put to flight, againe returne: and as it befalleth them that haue beene vexed with a long ſickneſſe, who remaine ſtill ſo weake, that they cannot without ſome danger come abroad into the open aire; the ſame happeneth vnto vs, whoſe minds are ſomewhat recouered out of the tedious ſickneſſe of vice and ſin: the conuerſation of the wicked multitude is a great enemie vnto vs, euery one being ready to commend vnto vs, or to thruſt vpon vs ſome vice, or at leaſt to taint and infect vs therewith, at vnawares, &c. So that I alwayes returne home either more couetous, ambitious or voluptuous, yea more cruell and inhumane, becauſe I haue beene amongſt men. As therefore it is hard to dwell with a Colliar and not to be ſmutted; to haue our conuerſation amongſt theeues, and not, one time or other, to bee robbed of our rich treaſures: ſo and much more difficult it is to keepe familiar company with wicked Worldlings, and not to be collowed with their corruptions; to liue amongſt theſe ſpirituall theeues, and not to be ſpoiled of the riches of Gods grace: in which reſpect they are ſo much more hurtfull and pernicious vnto vs, than theeues and robbers; as much as the ſoule exceedeth the bodie, and Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly joyes which they ſteale from vs, exceed in worth, earthly gold and momentany treaſures, of which time will rob vs, though theeues ſpare.

And therefore ſeeing it is a thing of ſo great danger, to haue our conuerſation among wicked worldlings, leſt wee ſhould be tainted with their corruptions, let vs be exceeding warie and carefull in making choice of our company: and as one ſaith, let vs be no more reſpectiue what wee eate and drinke, than amongſt whom wee eate and drinke: for as vnwholeſome meates and drinkes may poyſon the body, ſo vngodly company poyſon the ſoule, vnleſſe wee be preſerued with ſome ſoueraigne Antidotes miniſtred vnto vs by Gods Word and holy Spirit: and ſeeing this is a ſtrong temptation to draw vs vnto euill, let not vs who daily pray that we may not be led into tentations, wittingly and willingly run into them. Neither let vs, vnleſſe we haue a calling hereunto, and be furniſhed and prepared with a great meaſure of grace and ſtrength, preſume vpon our owne abilities, and flatter our ſelues with a conceit, that we can by keeping them company draw them to vertue and goodneſſe, and in the meane time receiue no hurt, ſeeing it is much more likely, vnleſſe we be very skilfull Phyſicians, that they ſhould infect vs, than that we ſhould cure them. For (as one ſaith) this is the ordinary courſe of humane affaires, that when the good and euill are ioyned together, the euill man is not made better by the good, but the good rather is corrupted by the euill. And this was ſignified by the Ceremoniall Law, in which the holy fleſh carried in the skirt of the garment did not make it holy, but the polluted perſon touching any holy thing, with his filthineſſe did make it vncleane, as the Prophet Haggai ſheweth; to note vnto vs, that it is a matter of farre greater difficultie to cleanſe and purifie, than to defile and make vncleane. The reaſon whereof is cleare and manifeſt; for they are wholy fleſh, and wee but in part ſpirituall and regenerate; ſo that they pull vs with full ſwinge of will, and with all their power and might: whereas both our will and power being diuided, cannot haue ſuch force and vertue. Againe, they run ſwiftly downe the hill and ſtreame of vice, but wee with great labour and difficultie creepe ſoftly forward in the way of vertue, and (as it were) vp the hill, and againſt the ſtreame of our corruptions, which naturally carry vs another way; and therefore if by familiar company, we catch hold to ſtay them, and grapple with them, it is a thouſand to one, if wee be not aſſiſted with a power farre ſuperiour to our owne, they will rather carry vs away with their violence, or at leaſt naturall motion; than that we ſhall make them ſtay, or force them backe by true repentance.

§. Sect. 10.
That it is hard to keepe company with the wicked, and not to be acceſſary to their ſinnes.

Neither are wee alone corrupted and infected with the tainture of their ſinnes, and become euill by imitating their wicked examples; but alſo we are made either acceſſary to their ſinnes, which they commit in our company, or elſe wee acquit our ſelues with much griefe and trouble. For hearing their blaſphemies, ribauldry and prophaneneſſe, we either beare with them, and paſſe all ouer with ſilence, or elſe wee admoniſh and reprooue them for their ſinnes. By the former we become acceſſaries, for whileſt wee beare with, and winke at our friends faults, wee make them to become our owne, by our ſilence giuing a ſecret conſent to their wickedneſſe. And ſo whileſt we labour to haue our ſocietie pleaſing vnto men; we doe much diſhonour and diſpleaſe God; whileſt wee ſhew a falſe loue to our companions, wee make it manifeſt, that there is but little true loue of God remayning in vs. For if no louing ſonne can indure to heare his father diſgraced; if no good ſeruant can abide to heare his Lord and Maſter diſhonoured and abuſed; and therefore will ſhew their diſlike, either by rebuking the offenders, or by forſaking their company: then thoſe that can with delight frequent the company of wicked men, who in all their words & actions, doe nothing elſe but diſhonour God, doe plainly ſhew that they neither loue the Lord as their Father, nor reuerence him as their Lord and Maſter. But if hearing and ſeeing theſe abuſes, they doe reprooue them, then doe they become to their companions irkeſome and tedious, mouing them, when they feele themſelues gaulled with reproofes, to bitterneſſe and anger, yea, ſometime to rage and furious reuenge; and ſo whileſt by their abſence they might haue had them friendly ſtrangers, by this neerer acquaintance, they become knowne enemies. And both theſe ſhold be carefully auoided, either to diſpleaſe God by pleaſing of men; or willingly to diſpleaſe, & to be at enmitie with men, when as we may auoid it without Gods diſpleaſure.

Vitia amici ſi feras facis tua.

§. Sect. 11.
That keeping wicked company brandeth our names with infamy.

But as wicked company defile vs with their ſinnes; ſo alſo they ſubiect vs to their puniſhments; for they brand our names with the blacke marke of infamy and reproch, whilſt keeping them company; wee are reputed and cenſured to be of the ſame diſpoſition and conuerſation. For ſeeing euery like is delighted with his like, and ſeeing ſimilitude in manners and affections, and delight in the ſame pleaſures and recreations, is the vſuall bond that linketh men together in the ſame ſocietie, they receiue no wrong (although they may haue ſome goodneſſe in them) who frequent the company of wicked men, when as they are thus cenſured; ſeeing they are either preſently euill, or will bee euill within a while; it being the nature of company, either to find men alike, or to make them alike. To which purpoſe one ſaith; that the good and bad are ſo ioyned together; that either they become like one another, or elſe they are quickly ſeuered and diſioyned, for friendſhip findeth or maketh this ſimilitude. Iuſtly therefore is hee reputed euill, who taketh delight in frequenting euil company; for though he bē not yet come to the height of ſinne, yet hee faſt climeth thereunto, and is euen at the very next degree of being himſelfe wicked, when with a quiet and contented mind, he can be a daily beholder of other mens wickedneſſe; for as the Wiſeman ſaith, A wicked man is an abomination to the juſt, and hee that is vpright in his way, is abomination to the wicked.

Bonus ſic malo connectitur, vt aut pares reddantur, aut citò ab inuicem ſeparentur, &c. Chryſoſt., ſuper Matth.

Prou.29.27.

§. Sect. 12. Wicked company maketh vs lyable to Gods iudgements.

Finally, wicked company is carefully to be ſhunned and auoided, becauſe they make euen the deare ſeruants and children of God, liable and ſubject to common judgements. For as the Wiſe man ſaith, hee that walketh with the wiſe, ſhall be wiſe; but a companion of fooles ſhall be afflicted. Affliction followeth ſinners, but to the righteous, God will recompenſe good. And thus was righteous Lot led away in that common captiuitie with the Sodomites; and dearely bought the pleaſures of the Countrie, by partaking in the puniſhments of the people. Thus whoſoeuer adhered to Dathan and Abiram, were alſo with them ſwallowed of the earth aliue, and as they conſorted with them in their rebellion, ſo they bore them company into the gulph of deſtruction. And thus was Iehoſaphat diſcomfited, and hardly eſcaped with his life being in the company of wicked Ahab, and afterwards had his ſhips broken, and his works and enterprizes fruſtrated and deſtroyed, becauſe he joyned himſelfe with Ahaziah. From which judgements and puniſhments, when God would haue his ſeruants priuiledged and preſerued, he calleth vnto them with a voice from Heauen, ſaying, Goe out of her my people, that you be not partakers in her ſinnes, and that you receiue not of her plagues. Implying their danger of being tainted with the ſinnes of the Whore of Babylon, and the impoſſibilitie of eſcaping her puniſhments, if they did not forſake her wicked fellowſhip.

Prou.13.20,21.

Gen.14,12.

Numb.16.26.

1.Kings 22,32.

2.*Chron.*20.37

*Apoc.*18.4.

§. Sect. 13.

But as all ſociety with wicked worldlings, is a very dangerous tentation to draw vs vnto ſinne, and to ſubject vs vnto puniſhment, ſo eſpecially when we enter into the neereſt bonds of affinitie and marriage with them; for they who are thus vnequally yoked with vnbeleeuing worldlings, are ſure either to go quietly with them in the way of ſinne, or to be ſhrewdly gauled, whileſt they make reſiſtance, and draw another way. And for this fault, good Iehoſaphat had his reputation blemiſhed, of whom it is ſaid, that hee had riches and honour in abundance, but hee was ioyned in affinitie with Ahab. The which bond of alliance made him profeſſe to the enemie of God, deſiring his aſſiſtance, I am as thou art, and my people as thy people, and we will ioyne with thee in the warre. And this is the reaſon which the Holy Ghoſt rendreth of Iehorams Idolatry, becauſe the Daughter of Ahab was his wife; and alſo why Ahaziah did euill in the ſight of the Lord, like the houſe of Ahab, becauſe hee was the ſonne in law of the houſe of Ahab. Yea, with this ſnare was wiſe Salomon catched, being drawne by his Idolatrous wiues to leaue the Lord (who had in extraordinary manner bleſſed him aboue all the Kings of Iſrael) and to ſerue the Idols of the Heathens.

Chap. XVIII.

That the company of the wicked is very dangerous, by reaſon of euill examples, and corrupt communication.

ANd thus haue I ſhewed the manifold euils, which come of frequenting wicked company. In the next place let vs conſider of ſome ſpeciall meanes, whereby principally this ſocietie becommeth vnto vs thus hurtful and pernicious; and theſe are either by their examples, or by their allurements and perſwaſions. For the firſt, the ſocietie of wicked worldlings is exceeding hurtfull vnto vs, becauſe thereby there are daily ſet before vs examples of euill, whereby we are either allured to imitate & follow their wicked and vngodly practice, or at leaſt, are much vexed and grieued, to ſee God ſo diſhonoured by their ſinnes. In the former reſpect, looke how many euill examples are before our eyes; and ſo many ſtumbling blockes are laid before our feet, to hinder vs in our ſpirituall race, and to ſtop vs in our way, as wee are traueling to our heauenly Country; and ſuch is the corruption of our nature, that wee need no other perſwaſions to draw vs vnto ſinne, for euen the ſight thereof is a baite ſufficient to allure vs to imitation. Whereof it is, that euen the Heathen man reckoneth this as a chiefe cauſe of all our euils, becauſe we liue after the example of the multitude, and are not compoſed and ruled by reaſon, but are carried away with cuſtome; and whereas if few ſhould doe it, wee would not imitate them, when as many begin to doe it, wee follow for company, as though it were more honeſt, becauſe it is more common: and ſo errour, when as it is made publicke and cuſtomable, is eſteemed of vs in the place of truth. Whereby it appeareth, that ſeeing examples are admitted of vs in place of rules and precepts, therefore the examples of wicked Worldlings muſt needs be very powerfull, both in weaning vs from that which is good, and in alluring vs vnto euill. In the former reſpect one ſaith, that men oftentimes deſire to heare Gods Word, but whileſt they behold others contemptuouſly turning away their eares, they alſo neglect the ſauing hearing of the truth. And many alſo deſire to reſt contented, and to ceaſe turmoyling in worldly buſineſſe, and reſolue not to ſubiect themſelues to earthly deſires; but whileſt they behold others by vnquiet labouring to come forward in the World, and to be aduanced vnto riches and honours; being not as yet firme and well ſetled in the way of truth, by the euil example of others, they ſlide back into the way of wickedneſſe. And as they eneruate and weaken our good reſolutions, ſo alſo they corrupt vs with ſinne; in regard wherof one ſaith, that the tender mind which is vnſetled in that which is right, is to be withdrawne from beholding the multitude; becauſe we are prone to goe with company; and euen Socrates, Cato & Lælius, might change their mind, and be brought to alter their good reſolution by the diſſenting multitude; ſo vnable is any of vs, when as our diſpoſition is beſt compoſed, to beare the aſſault of vices, when as they come againſt vs ſtrengthened with ſo great a troope. And if one example of luxuriouſneſſe or couetouſneſſe doth much hurt; if one delicate, nice and wanton companion doth by little and little weaken and effeminate vs; if one rich Neighbour doth kindle our concupiſcence; and if a malicious companion doth rub off his ruſt, euen vpon him that is innocent and ingenuous, what thinke you will befall them, againſt whom combined wickednes doth make a common aſſault? As therefore thoſe who haue ſound eyes, doe carefully refrain looking vpon theirs which are ſore and bleared, becauſe euen by ſeeing them, a ſecret poyſon and infection is tranſmitted, whereby they alſo are tainted; and as men in time of the plague, do carefully make choice of their aire and company, and auoid them who are infected, and haue running ſores vpon them: ſo with no leſſe care are wee to auoid the ſight of wicked examples, and the fellowſhip of ſuch as are infected with the plague of wilfull and preſumptuous ſinne, becauſe a poyſon and infection ſecretly commeth from them (as from the Cramp-fiſh to the hand of the Angler) by the contagion whereof we alſo are tainted and infected. For ſin like the Plague or Leproſie, is of a ſpreading nature, going from one to another, vntill it haue infected a whole Country. And as a ſtone caſt into a great water, troubleth not only that part into which it fell, but ſtirreth vp certaine circled wrinkles in the face or ſuperficies of the water neere about it, and theſe being moued, doe alſo after the ſame manner mooue thoſe parts which are contiguous the one to the other, till it extend to the very bankes: ſo wicked ſuggeſtions being caſt into the minds of Worldlings, are thence produced into act, and ſo being made examplary to thoſe that are about them, doe not reſt there, but by contagion ſpread themſelues ouer all the Country. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that no man erreth to himſelfe alone, but doth diſperſe and communicate his folly to his Neighbours, and interchangeably receiueth the like from them. And the vices of the people are in euery particular man, becauſe the people communicates them, and is made worſe it ſelfe whileſt it maketh others worſe, It learneth ill things, and then teacheth them; and ſo wickedneſſe groweth to a monſtrous greatneſſe, that being all caſt into one heape, which euery one knoweth to be worſt.

Nemò errat vni ſibi, ſed dementiam ſpargit in proximos, accipitque inuicem. &c. Senec. Epiſt. 94.

§. Sect. 3.
Euill examples of Superiours are moſt pernicious.

Now as theſe euill examples are in all very hurtfull; ſo they are moſt pernicious when they are obſerued in ſuperiours: for ſeldome doe theſe tall Cedars fall, but they beat down alſo all the low ſhrubs that ſtand about them. And thus doe Maſters by their euill examples corrupt and poyſon their ſeruants, Parents Children, Magiſtrates the People, Miniſters their flockes; and moſt of all Princes their Subjects, ſeeing all the Country is ready, either for feare, or flattery, to conforme it ſelfe to the example of their King, in regard whereof (one ſaith) that Princes actions ſtand for precepts, and their examples haue the power of a Law to draw their Subjects to imitation.

Ea conditio eſt principis vt quicquid faciat præcipere videatur Quint.

§. Sect. 4.
Euill examples nouriſh pride, and hinder repentance.

But as theſe euill examples are very hurtfull, as they corrupt vs with ſinne, ſo alſo in nouriſhing pride and ſecuritie, and in hindring of repentance; whileſt comparing our ſelues with others, which haue burſt out into greater wickedneſſe, we are ready through ſelfe-loue to conceit our owne excellencies; and ſo whileſt wee are wholly taken vp in thinking how farre wee exceed them in vertue and goodneſſe, wee neuer thinke how far ſhort we come of that which God requireth of vs. To ſay nothing of that incouragement which men take vnto themſelues, of committing wickedneſſe, when they ſee others doe the like, and yet ſcape vnpuniſhed and flouriſh in the World. For as the Wiſe man ſaith, becauſe ſentence againſt an euill worke is not executed ſpeedily, therefore the heart of the children of men is fully ſet in them to doe euill. And therefore ſeeing wee

Eccleſ. 8. 11.

Baſil. Aſcetica.

Pſal. 141.3,4.

are ſo greatly endangered with wicked ſocietie, by beholding their euill examples, let vs carefully auoid them; or if at vnawares we happen to come into ſuch company, let vs (as one exhorteth) be very watchfull ouer our ſelues, that we doe not ſucke in theſe inticing baits of ſinne, neither by our eyes, nor by our eares, leſt by little and little wee be inured to it, and leſt certaine figures and characters of thoſe euils, which wee haue ſeene and heard, doe remaine ſtill in our minds to our ruine and deſtruction. And becauſe wee cannot ſufficiently with our owne watchfulneſſe, preſerue our ſelues from being ouer-taken with this deceitfulnes of ſin, let vs with Dauid (hauing ſet a watch before our eyes and eares) deſire the Lord that he will not ſuffer our hearts to be inclined vnto euill, that we ſhould commit wicked workes with the men that worke iniquitie.

§. Sect. 5.
Euill examples of the wicked vex and grieue Gods ſeruants

2. Pet. 2.7,8.

Pſal. 119.136, 139.

Marke 3.5.

And thus it appeareth that euill examples of wicked worldlings are very hurtfull and pernicious as they corrupt and infect vs with ſin: but though we were ſo preſerued by Gods Spirit that there were no danger of taking hurt by this contagion, yet many other euils are incident vnto vs, if we be daily beholders of theſe wicked examples. For being the children of God it muſt needs bee grieuous vnto vs to ſee our heauenly Father thus diſhonoured; being faithfull ſeruants of the great King of heauen & earth, it cannot chuſe but much vex and trouble vs, when we ſee the glory of our Lord and Maſter impeached by wicked Miſcreants, yea, and ſeeing wee are of the ſame fleſh & bloud with theſe worldly men, the workmanſhip of the ſame Creatour, yea, people of the ſame Country, and (as it were) children borne by the ſame mother; it muſt needs afflict our ſoules with griefe and bitter ſorrow, when we behold them daily running on in a courſe, which will bring them to eternall deſtruction, both in their ſoules and bodies. And thus was righteous Lots ſoule grieued, when he ſaw the filthy conuerſation of the wicked Sodomites. For hee being righteous and dwelling among them, in ſeeing and in hearing, vexed his righteous ſoule, from day to day, with their vnlawfull deeds. And holy Dauid profeſſeth that his eyes guſhed out with riuers of waters, and that his zeale euen conſumed him, becauſe his enemies kept not Gods Law, but forgot his words. Yea, thus our Sauiour Chriſt himſelf being conuerſant among the wicked Iewes, mourned when he ſaw the hardnes of their hearts.

§. Sect. 6.
If we doe not follow the euill examples of the wicked, we procure their hatred.

Finally, by being with wicked men, and not doing as they doe, nor following their examples, we doe thereby exceedingly prouoke their malice and hatred: for it is a ſufficient quarrell for a wicked man againſt thoſe that feare God, if they bee innocent, and ſeeme to make conſcience of thoſe ſinnes which they ſee them commit, becauſe their abſtinence from euill ſeemeth to proclaime their wickedneſſe who doe commit it, and awakeneth their ſleeping conſciences, when as they are galled with their refuſal. Whereby oftentimes it commeth to paſſe that the godly being ſpectators of theſe euill examples, and denying to joyn with them in their enormities, doe not onely thereby endanger their names to be branded with their obloquies, reproches, and diſgraces, but alſo their perſons to their violence and furie; as we may ſee in the example of Lot, who though he did in moſt louing and humble manner refuſe to communicate with the Sodomites in their ſins, yet ſo incenſed them to rage hereby, that they would haue laid violent hands vpon him, had not God miraculouſly deliuered him from their fury. And as it mooueth them to hate vs; ſo through our naturall corruption wee are readie to extend our hatred beyond its due limits, abhorring not only their ſin, but their perſons alſo. All which euils as they ought, ſo they may eaſily be auoided, if we will ſhun the ſocietie of wicked men, and frequent the company of the vertuous; for ſo ſhall wee neither bee allured nor grieued by their examples, nor yet nouriſh this open hoſtilitie between vs, but may liue like ſtrangers one to another, ſeeing we cannot liue as friends. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that if wee be ſpectators of the euil conuerſation of wicked men, we muſt of neceſſity, either imitate or hate them; both which are to bee auoided, leſt thou ſhouldeſt either bee like to wicked men, becauſe they are many, or an enemy to many, becauſe they are vnlike: and therefore it is beſt for a man either to bee conuerſant with himſelfe, or to keepe company with thoſe who may better him, or whom he may better.

And thus haue I ſhewed the manifold euils which come of wicked company, through their bad examples: vnto which we may adde the hurt which wee are apt to receiue by their ſpeeches and communication. In which reſpect the ſocietie of wicked worldlings is dangerous and hurtfull: firſt, in regard that by their ſpeeches they corrupt vs; for being either worldly or prophane, and ſpent either about earthly things, as profits and preferments, or in vain mirth, ribauldry, filthines, fooliſh jeſting, & ſuch like wicked diſcourſes; it commeth to paſſe that by frequenting their company wee become as worldly as they, hauing not only our hearts faſt nailed to the earth, but our tongues tuned to the ſame key, vttering nothing but that which ſauoureth of the world and worldly vanities, or which is worſe, being corrupted with their filthy communication, wee in the end grow, if not to imitate, yet at leaſt to like, or not ſo much to diſlike them as we ought. For there is a ſecret poiſon in worldly & wicked ſpeeches, which when they are admitted into our eares, infuseth it ſelf into our minds, whereby they being corrupted, doe taint alſo all our ſpeeches and actions; of which the Apoſtle Paul warneth vs to take heed, Be not (ſaith he) deceiued, euill words corrupt good manners. Or if they doe not thus corrupt vs, then of neceſſitie they do much vex & grieue vs, when as wee heare our heauenly Father thus diſhonoured, and ſee thoſe, whoſe company we frequent, running ſwiftly the way to deſtruction and condemnation.

Secondly, the ſpeeches and familiar communication of wicked Worldlings, are hurtfull and pernicious; as they are the Deuils ſpokeſmen to woo our hearts from God, perſwading, alluring and inticing vs to withdraw from him all true obedience, by neglecting the duties which hee requireth, or committing the vices which he hath forbidden. For we are to know that in this regard worldlymen are very impudent, not ſticking in plaine tearmes to blow the trumpet of rebellion againſt God; and when they cannot catch vs with their wicked company, nor allure vs by their euill examples, they ſtay not heere, but in direct ſpeeches ſolicite the Deuils ſuite, either diſcouraging vs from vertuous actions, by telling vs that they are needleſſe, or too troubleſome, either that they wil not ſtand with our credit, but traduce our names, and impeach our reputations; or that they are againſt our profit and preferment in the World, or elſe prouoking & perſwading, yea, alluring and incouraging vs to commit with them ſin and wickednes by all manner of perſwaſions, inticing ſpeeches, faire promiſes and kind vſage: by which baites they labour to draw all who frequent their company into the ſnares of deſtruction and perdition. An example whereof we haue in Putiphars Wife, who laying aſide all modeſtie, inticed Ioſeph vnto ſin; in the harlot alluring the young man to folly; and in wicked Ahab, who gaue vnto Iehoſaphat and his followers bountifull entertainment, that hee might hereby intice him to goe vp againſt Ramoth Gilead. Againſt which perſwaſions and inueigling baits, the Wiſeman armeth vs, ſaying, My ſonne, if ſinners doe intice thee, conſent thou not: If they ſay, come with vs, we will lay wait for bloud, and lie priuily for the innocent without a cauſe, &c. We will find all precious riches, and fill our houſes with ſpoile. Caſt in thy lot among vs, we will haue one purſe: My ſonne walke not thou in the way with thē, refrain thy foot from their path, &c.

The which counſell that wee may follow with the greater care, let vs conſider that theſe tentations are exceeding dangerous, being vrged by men in our own likeneſſe vnder colour of loue, with pretence of our own profit and aduantage; ſeeing the Oratour which perſwadeth, and the Theame whereon hee diſcourſeth, are ſo pleaſing and well accepted of our corrupt nature. But that we may reſiſt ſuch wicked allurements, let vs know that they are but Syrens Songs which intice to leape into the ſea of deſtruction, and but the Worlds inchantments, whereby conſpiring with Satan, it laboureth to carry vs ſwiftly vnto Hell; like vnto that pleaſing diſcourſe vſed by the old Serpent to our firſt parents, which promiſed to equall their eſtate with Gods, but in truth made them in as bad caſe as the Deuill, had not the Lord in mercy deliuered and reſtored them. And therefore let vs ſtop our eares againſt theſe worldly allurements, whereby wicked men intice vs vnto ſinne, and like the Deuils Aduocates perſwade vs by the hazarding of our ſoules, to obtaine worldly vanities; or rather let vs, becauſe we will not heare their bewitching tunes, abandon their company: for as one ſaith, Wee are in good forwardneſſe towards the obtaining of our ſoules welfare, when as wee leaue the company of thoſe who perſwade vnto wickedneſſe, and goe farre off out of this hurtfull ſocietie. And though they would ſtill tie vs vnto them in the bonds of loue; yet let vs abhorre their company and breake off from them, eſteeming them of all others our moſt dangerous enemies; ſeeing vnder colour of good will, they expoſe our ſoules to vtter deſtruction; and our moſt pernicious perſecutors, who by inticing vs vnto euill, doe not kill the body alone, but plunge both body and ſoule into euerlaſting death.

Magna pars ſanitatis eſt, hortatores inſaniæ reliquiſſe, &c. Senec. Epiſt. 94.

Greg. Moral. l. 3. cap. 11.

CHAP. XIX.

That the friendſhip of wicked Worldlings is to be contemned, and carefully auoided.

§. Sect. 1. That true friendſhip is much to be eſteemed.

ANd thus haue I ſhewed the dangerouſneſſe of the Worlds temptations, which haue their ſtrength from wicked company. In the next place wee are to ſpeake of thoſe which are grounded on worldly friendſhip, and to propound ſome reaſons which may moue vs to contemne and auoid it. Where firſt wee are to know that the following diſcourſe tendeth not to the diſgrace of true friendſhip, or to take away this neere loue and kindneſſe betweene man and man; for this is not only one of the chiefe comforts which ſweetens worldly miſeries, but a notable help and furtherance in the courſe of godlines. And as the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, A faithfull friend is a ſtrong defence, and he that findeth ſuch a one findeth a treaſure. A faithful friend ought not to be changed for any thing, and the waight of gold and ſiluer is not to bee compared to the goodneſſe of his faith. A faithfull friend is the medicine of life and immortality, and they that feare the Lord ſhall find him: who ſo feareth the Lord ſhall direct his friendſhip aright and as his owne ſelfe, ſo ſhall his friend be.

Eccl. 6.14, 15. &c.

Solem è mundo tollunt, qui tollunt amicitiam. Ambroſ. de amicit. cap. 7.

Sine amicis omnis cogitatio eſſet tadium, omnis operatio labor, omnis terra peregrinatio, &c. Caſſian in Epiſt.

Which who ſo take away from amongſt men, they take away (as it were) the Sun out of the firmament, and ſpoile them of their chiefe comfort: for as one ſaith, without friends all our cogitations are tedious, our workes toyleſome, euery Country is an exile or pilgrimage, all life a torment, and without their ſolace life were no better than death.

§. Sect. 2.
In what reſpects friendſhip with the wicked is to be auoided.

Amicus verus diu quæritur, vix inuenitur, difficilè ſeruatur. Hieron. Epiſt. ad Ruff. Tom. 1.

Of this true friendſhip which is only among thoſe that are good, in good, and to good ends and purpoſes wee doe not here ſpeake; yea, rather wee ought earneſtly to wiſh, that this vertue no leſſe excellent than rare and hard to be found, might againe returne to the ſonnes of men from Heauen, vnto which it ſeemeth fled, that their comfort in this ſweet fruition of their mutuall good might be inlarged and increaſed. But the following diſcourſe tendeth to the contempt of that worldly, wicked, falſe and counterfeit friendſhip entertained among men, which is betweene the euill alone, or the good and bad together in euill things, and for the accompliſhment of euill ends: in which reſpects when this friendſhip is admitted, it quite excludeth the true loue of God. Neither would I haue Gods ſeruants to withdraw themſelues from Worldlings in reſpect of ciuill kindneſſe, and to profeſſe open enmitie againſt their perſons, but only from hauing neere friendſhip and familiaritie with them, or any communion and fellowſhip in that which is euill. For howſoeuer wee are to hate their ſinnes, yet wee muſt loue their perſons, and though wee may not in reſpect of the former euils entertaine them as friends, yet if it be poſſible, and as much as in vs lieth, wee are to haue peace with all men: and to further with our beſt indeuours their conuerſion vnto God, that ſo being of one family, wee may loue them as our brethren and fellow ſeruants: and for the preſent ſeeing wee cannot haue them our friends, let vs not willingly haue them (if wee can by lawfull meanes auoid it) our foes and enemies.

Rom. 12. 18.

Paucis ſis charus, multis ignotus, nemini otioſus, &c. Hos omnes amicos habere operoſum eſt: ſatis eſt inimicos non habere. Senec. Epiſt. 14.

§. Sect. 3.
That we cannot hold friendſhip with worldlings, & peace with God.

But to come to our purpoſe: wee are carefully to take heed of worldly friendſhip, when it is an occaſion to break off our friendſhip with God (as it is, when as it prouoketh or allureth vs to the committing of ſin, or to the neglect of any good duty) and labour to pleaſe God rather than men, when wee cannot pleaſe both together: eſteeming ſuch kind of friendſhip the moſt hatefull enmitie, and ſuch carnal friends, to be no better than treacherous enemies who doe vs more miſchiefe than thoſe who openly diſcouer their malice, & ſhew their hatred by offering all outward violence. Whereof it is that one thus exclaimeth againſt this wicked friendſhip: O friendſhip (ſaith he) too much our enemy, as being a ſeducer not eaſily to bee diſcerned; from which proceedeth an appetite and greedy deſire of doing hurt, and endamaging others, (as it were) by way of ſport and play, without any deſire of gaine or reuenge; but whilſt companions ſay, let vs goe togither, let vs doe it, and they are aſhamed not to be as impudent as their ſetters on. With which wicked friendſhip that wee may not be abuſed and inueigled, let vs conſider, firſt, that we cannot hold this friendſhip with Worldlings, but we muſt breake our league and couenant with God, and, as it were, proclaime warre againſt him; for as the Apoſtle Iohn telleth vs, hee that loueth the World, the loue of the Father cannot abide in him: and Iames plainly affirmeth, that the amity of the World is enmity with God; and therefore whoſoeuer will be a friend of the World, maketh himſelfe the enemy of God: into which ſinne when Iehoſhaphat fell, hee is ſharply reproued by the Prophet, Wouldeſt thou, (ſaith hee) helpe the wicked, and loue them that hate the Lord? therefore for this thing the wrath of the Lord is vpon thee.

Aug. Con lib. 2. cap.

1. Iohn 2.

Iames 4.

§. Sect.
That fri ſhip with worldlings falſe and counterfei

Secondly, let vs conſider that this friendſhip with wicked worldlings is not true, but falſe and counterfeite. For there is no true friendſhip, but that which is betweene the vertuous and faithfull, and grounded vpon the true loue and feare of God; for whoſe ſake they alſo loue their brethren, whereby they helpe one another forward in vertuous actions, and further their good ends and indeuours. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that all true friendſhip ariſeth and beginneth betweene thoſe that are good encreaſeth among the good, and is moſt perfect among thoſe who are beſt and moſt vertuous. And another affirmeth, that wee cannot be true friends vnto men vnleſſe wee bee firſt friends vnto the truth. With whom alſo a third agreeth, ſaying, that all loue of the fleſh is corrupt, and that all worldly friendſhip is falſe and counterfeit, which is not knit together with the band of Gods feare; there being no true fidelitie in the ſeruants of the Deuill. Neither is it the fruit of true friendſhip, that our faith towards God ſhould through it be violated; for he cannot be a true friend vnto man, who hath ſhewed himſelfe vnfaithfull vnto God: nor yet can it be in euill, ſeeing (as one ſaith) Friendſhip is the keeper and preſeruer of pietie; and therefore that friendſhip which is with wicked Worldlings, is to be contemned and abhorred, as being falſe and counterfeit, ſeeing it is with the euill, in euill, and for euill ends, and not grounded vpon the loue of God, but vpon worldly reſpects to ſerue their owne turnes; and vpon ſelfe-loue that they may haue profit or pleaſure by them; in eating, drinking, diſcourſing, gaming, ſporting, and ſuch other carnall delights. Whereupon it followeth that it is deceitfull and inconſtant: for whereas true friendſhip is immutable and perpetuall, becauſe it is grounded on vertue, and on the loue of God, which is vnchangeable; this world-worldly friendſhip is flickering and vnconſtant, laſting no longer than theſe worldly reſpects and ends of pleaſure and profit laſt, whereupon it wholly reſteth and relieth. And therefore (as one ſaith) hee fouly erreth, who ſeeketh for a friend in the court, and trieth him at a banquet; neither can a worſe thing befall a man much imployed in the world, and flouriſhing in proſperity, than that he imagineth them to be friends vnto him, vnto whom hee is not; thinking that his benefits are powerfull enough to procure friends: whereas ſome men the more they are obliged, the more they maligne their benefactors: for ſmall moneyes lent make debters; but great ſummes, enemies; becauſe all hope is taken away of requitall, and pride maketh them to hate thoſe, vnto whom their neceſſitie enforceth them whether they will or no, to ſtand indebted and beholding.

Vera amici tatem inter bonos oriri inter bonos ficit, inter mos conſu tur. Caſſian ſuper. Aug. Epiſt. Macedon Tom. 2.

Chryſoſt. Mat. 10. 24. tom. 2. 908. Pietatis amicitia. Baſil. Hom de ira. Amicitia de eſſe Aug. ad C lent.

Such friends therefore as are tied vnto vs in theſe worldly bonds, are not to be eſteemed, for when the bonds are broken the friends are ſcattered; like chaffe or ſome ſuch light matter; which lieth with the good wheate in the ſun-ſhine and calme, but ſeparateth it ſelfe and flieth away when the leaſt blaſt of wind bloweth; or like vnto the reed which ſtandeth vpright, and ſeemeth ſtiffe and ſtrong in faire weather, but boweth and bendeth any way when the ſtorme commeth: ſo theſe worldly friends whileſt the ſunne of proſperitie ſhineth, doe adhere vnto vs and ſeeme firme and conſtant, as though they would neuer leaue vs; but when the leaſt tempeſt of trouble commeth, and when the world ſeemeth to frowne, they either hang downe the head and will not ſee vs, or frame idle excuſes why they cannot helpe vs, or like Iobs miſerable comforters they make pouerty a crime, and argue and inferre our guiltineſſe and faultines, becauſe wee are fallen into this miſerie and affliction. And therefore let vs not make choice of ſuch friends if wee haue them not, nor truſt vnto them if wee haue them; for like the reede they will bow and flee from vs, when being almoſt drowned in miſerie, we labour to catch hold of them; or elſe breaking in our hands will wound vs, when as wee reſt and rely vpon them: or finally like the brier they will fleece vs of our wooll when wee flee vnto them for ſuccour: or like an old ruinous houſe, when we come vnto them for ſhelter and protection againſt the ſtorme, they will fall vpon vs and bruiſe vs to the ground with their oppreſſions. Let vs therefore follow the aduice of the ſonne of Syrach: If (ſaith hee) thou wouldeſt get a friend, proue him firſt, and be not haſty to credite him. For ſome man is a friend for his owne occaſion, and will not abide in the day of thy trouble. &c. Againe, ſome friend is but a companion at thy table, and in the day of thine affliction be continueth not, but in thy proſperity hee will be as thou thy ſelfe, and will vſe liberty ouer thy ſeruants; if thou be brought low he will be againſt thee, and will hide himſelfe from thy face. Depart from thine enemies, and beware of thy friends.

§. Sect. 6. Worldly friends in time of aduerſitie oftentimes become enemies.

Yea, theſe worldly friends doe not onely become in time of aduerſitie, as vnprofitable as ſtrangers, but alſo as hurtfull as enemies, their kindneſſe and loue degenerating into malice and hatred: and this the former authour alſo obſerued. There is ſome friend, ſaith he, that turneth to enmity, and taketh part againſt thee; and in contention he will declare thy ſhame. And in another place: There is ſome companion, which in proſperitie reioyceth with his friend, but in the time of trouble he is againſt him. Of which the Prophet Dauid hauing experience, complaineth, My familiar friend (ſaith he) whom I truſted, which did eate of my bread, hath lift vp his heele againſt me. So that in this worldly friendſhip the prouerb truely taketh place; Too much friendſhip maketh way for hatred: yea, in truth there is no emnity ſo dangerous, as that which hath its foundation vpon the ruines of loue; and as in nature, the pureſt ſubſtance is turned into the moſt loathſome corruption; ſo the hotteſt loue, which hath no other ground but carnall reſpects, degenerates oftentimes into the moſt deadly hatred, and hurtfull emnitie. For being priuie to all their friends ſecrets and counſels, and well acquainted with their ſtate and condition, they are the more enabled thereby to doe them the greater miſchiefe when their loue is turned to ſpite and malice. Euen as a traitor is much more dangerous than a profeſſed enemie, and a fugitiue ſouldier more pernicious in time of warre, than he that aſſaulteth with open violence. To which purpoſe one ſaith: that an enemy may be ſhunned, but a friend cannot if he meaneth to be treacherous; and we may eaſily take heed of him, vnto whom wee haue not committed our counſels, but it is ſcarce poſſible to preuent his miſchiefes, to whom we haue entruſted them.

Eccleſ.6.9.

Cap.37.4.

Pſal.41.9.

Amicitia nimia facit odij locum.

Inimicum vitare poteſt, amicum non poteſt ſi inſidiari velit, &c. Ambr. offi. lib.3. cap.13.

§. Sect. 7. Worldly friendſhip pernicious to our ſoules.

But as this worldly friendſhip is very dangerous and hurtfull to our outward eſtate when it breaketh off, ſo it is much more pernicious to our ſoules, and ſpirituall eſtate whileſt it laſteth and continueth; as being one of the moſt forcible meanes, which either Satan or the world hath to poiſon and corrupt vs with ſinne; and one of the moſt pearcing arrowes in all their quiuer of tentations, wherewith they inflict deepe and incurable wounds into our conſciences; whileſt on the one ſide wee frequent their company, ſee their euill examples, heare their wicked ſpeeches and diſcourſes, and Noxiæ ſunt amicitiæ quæ cum malitia contrahuntur, &c. Baſil. Hom. 9. de Ira.

giue them audience, when as they allure and intice vs vnto ſinne; and on the other ſide are ready to yeeld vnto them in all their deſires, for feare of diſpleaſing them; and to like of all they doe, becauſe wee affect their perſons. In regard whereof one ſaith, that that friendſhip is very harmefull, which is contracted with maliciouſneſſe. For it is the Law and condition of this friendſhip, by a ſimilitude and likeneſſe of nature to infuſe wickedneſſe into thoſe who are in amitie with them. For as in peſtilent places, the aire ſtealingly and by little and little attracted, doth infect the bodie with an hidden diſeaſe; ſo through wicked acquaintance, we ſucke in manifold euils, although wee doe not preſently perceiue the diſcommoditie of it. In which reſpect wee are to contemne, yea, to hate this friendſhip of wicked worldlings, as being but like ſugar, which inticeth vs to drinke the poiſon of ſinne; and the diuels moſt preuailing orator, in perſwading vs to neglect all dutie, and to ſet our hearts open for the entertaining of ſinne.

§. Sect. 8. Their obiection anſwered, who ſay they haue had no hurt by the friendſhip of the wicked.

Sanè nemo repente fit turpiſſimus, & vix aliquis in hunc affectum nequitiæ niſi praua conſuetudine pertranſijt. Bernard. declamat. in Mat. 19.

Iſidor. lib. ſoliloq.

Senec. epiſt. 114.

And thus haue I ſhewed the manifold euils which come vnto vs, through the familiar ſociety and friendſhip of wicked worldlings. Againſt which, if any ſhall obiect their owne experience, namely, that they haue frequented ſuch company, and intertained ſuch loue and amitie, and yet feele themſelues neuer the worſe: to ſuch I anſwere, that either they are ſo bad alreadie, that they cannot bee made much worſe; or haue but a while beene lincked in this fellowſhip, and ſo the poiſon hath not as yet his operation; or if longer time they haue conſorted with them, and yet feele no ill, it is becauſe wickedneſſe hath growne on them by degrees, and hath therefore through their negligence bin inſenſible, they hauing rather declined by little and little, than ſuddenly fallen into theſe miſchiefes. But let not this incourage them in their courſe, their caſe herein being common with thoſe who are deepely plunged into ſinne; For there is not any man that is ſuddenly outragiouſly wicked, but commeth to the height of this diuelliſh habit, by degrees, and through a continuall euill cuſtome. Great floods doe not ſuddenly riſe, but after much dropping; mettals are not preſently melted, as ſoone as they are put into the furnace; greene wood doth not forthwith flame out, as ſoone as it is laid on the fire: but yet within a while with much and often raining the waters ariſe, with great and continuall heate the mettals melt, and the greene wood after ſome weake reſiſtance is burned and conſumed. And ſo although the fire of Gods grace burning in vs is not quenched at firſt (as it were) with this water of worldly wickedneſſe; yea rather perhaps it may through oppoſition, make it to gather its ſtrength, and burne more hotly; but yet if it be much and often caſt vpon it, it will in the end put it cleane out. Although (ſaith one) thou were made of Iron, yet ſtanding continually before a great fire, thou wouldeſt at laſt be diſſolued and ſoftned; and he that ſtill dwelleth at the next dore to danger, cannot long be ſafe. By aſſiduitie a man is often deliuered ouer as captiue to ſinne, and oftentimes familiarity hath intangled men, and miniſtred vnto them occaſion of ſinning; and what the euill at the firſt could not, that lingring aſſiduitie and cuſtome hath atchieued. At the firſt, it may be a Chriſtian mans heart riſeth, and his ſoule abhorreth the wickedneſſe which hee ſeeth committed euen by his deareſt friends, but at the ſecond time hee is not ſo much moued, and when he is a little inured thereunto, the loue of his friend weakning the hatred which hee beareth the ſinne, he is content to winke at it, and then to tolerate it, and after to like it, and by and by to imitate it, and within a while after to approue, defend, and boaſt of it. At the firſt hearing of blaſphemie, ribauldrie & corrupt communication, it may be for the preſent we feele not our ſelues hurt and infected, but yet (as one ſaith) it leaueth ſeeds in the minde, and euen after we are departed from them, euill ſprouteth vp. And as thoſe who heare pleaſing muſicke, haue, when the melody is ceaſed, the tunes ſtill ſounding in their eares; ſo the talke of wicked men doth longer continue with vs, than it is in hearing: and it is not eaſie to forget a ſound which is ſo ſweet to our corrupt fleſh. Neither doth the lingring growth of our corruptions, which by degrees creepe vpon vs leſſen our hurt and danger, but rather much increaſeth them, ſeeing it ouercommeth vs, before wee feele our ſelues incountred, and inthralleth vs in the deepe dungeon of ſinne, before wee perceiue our ſelues taken priſoners. As therefore thoſe diſeaſes which grow vpon vs by degrees vpon ſmall and not apparant cauſes, are of all others moſt dangerous and incurable: ſo theſe ſpirituall diſeaſes of the ſoule, which ſteale vpon vs by little and little, are not eaſily cured, and moſt endanger vs, becauſe they are not diſcerned, vntill cuſtome hath giuen them full poſſeſſion, and (as it were) turned them into nature. And as men are no leſſe fearefull of a lingring conſumption, than of a hot burning ague, becauſe it doth more certainly deſtroy vs, though it doth not aſſault vs with like violence: ſo that corruption, which ſtealingly infecteth vs through the familiaritie and neere frendſhip which wee haue with a ciuill worldling, doth oftentimes more endanger vs, than all the violent prouocations of men notoriouſly wicked, whereby they labour ſuddenly, and all at once to plunge vs headlong into wickednes.

The end of the firſt Booke.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

The ſecond Part.

WHEREIN THE CHRISTIAN IS ARMED AGAINST THOSE TENTATIONS Of the World, which are grounded, on the alluring baites, of Honour, Riches, and Pleaſure.

The ſecond Booke.

Chap. I.

Of thoſe tentations generally which are grounded vpon worldly things.

Sect.1.

WEe haue in the former booke ſpoken of thoſe worldly tentations, which ariſe from the perſons of wicked worldlings, both in regard of their ſocietie and friendſhip. Now we are to proceede vnto thoſe which are grounded vpon worldly things; all which by the Apoſtle Iohn are referred to three heads, to wit, voluptuouſnes, whoſe obiect are vnlawfull and immoderate pleaſures; couetouſneſſe, whoſe obiect are riches; and ambition, whoſe obiect are honours & preferments. All (ſaith he) that is in the world, as the luſt of the fleſh (that is, voluptuouſnes) the luſt of the eyes (that is couetouſnes) and the pride of life, (that is, ambition) is not of the Father, but is of the world. And theſe are the chiefe things which Satan, and the world vſe, as their alluring baites and intangling ſnares, wherewith they allure vs vnto ſinne, and withdraw our hearts from God, and the loue of ſpirituall things. Theſe are thoſe bands wherewith they tie our hearts faſt vnto the earth; theſe are the Idols which they ſet vp in our hearts with which worldlings (forſaking the true God) commit groſſe idolatrie, by louing and truſting in them more than vpon Gods power and promiſes. Finally, theſe are the rewards and wages, wherewith Satan and the world hire men to doe them ſeruice, and to tire themſelues, ſpend their ſtrength, and conſume their life, in the workes of darkneſſe.

2.16.

§. Sect.2. That theſe worldly things honours, riches, and pleaſures are in their owne nature good and the gifts of God.

Againſt which tentations it behoues vs to bend all our ſtrength, if wee would not bee ouercome, and to put on all the ſpirituall armour preſcribed in Gods word, whereby wee may be inabled to make reſiſtance. But leaſt in auoiding one extreame wee runne into another, reiecting the creatures of God, becauſe of our owne corruption, and leauing the lawfull vſe, becauſe of the vnlawfull abuſe; I will ſhew what theſe things are in themſelues, and what vnto vs; in what reſpects they are to be loued, deſired, and vſed as good; and in what reſpects to bee contemned and reiected as euill; how they are to bee accounted Gods bleſſings, and how the worlds baits to allure vs vnto ſinne. All which I will ſhew, firſt generally, and then particularly. For the former wee are to know, that all theſe three, to wit, honours, riches, and pleaſures, are in their owne nature good; for they are the good creatures and gifts of God, which were approued by his owne teſtimonie; where it is ſaid, that God ſaw all that he had made, and loe it was very good. And leaſt we ſhould thinke that together with man, they alſo haue loſt all their goodneſſe through his fall, the Apoſtle ſpeaking of the creatures, as they are now in their owne nature, ſaith, that euery crea- ture of God is good, and nothing ought to bee refuſed, if it bee receiued with thankeſgiuing. To this purpoſe one ſaith: Theſe things O Lord are thine, and they are good, becauſe thou the chiefe goodneſſe haſt created them; there is nothing of ours in them, but that wee ſinne in ouermuch louing them, inordinately preferring the creatures before thee who haſt created them. Yea they are not only creatures of Gods making, but alſo bleſſings which hee promiſeth vnto thoſe that ſerue him, as temporall rewards of their loue and obedience. For ſo the Wiſe man ſaith, that the reward of humility and the feare of God, is riches, and glory, and life, where pleaſures alſo are implyed, without which life is no life. Neither hath any but the faithfull any true right vnto theſe gifts of God, but are meere vſurpers, ſeeing they doe not performe the condition of Gods donation, in louing, fearing, and ſeruing him; and to thoſe only belongs the right of inheritance, vnto whom the bleſſing alſo appertaineth. Finally, the Lord hath beſtowed theſe his gifts vpon his ſeruants to good vſes and ends, namely, that he might be glorified in them, and they furthered and incouraged in the performance of all good duties. And therefore needs muſt theſe things be good, ſeeing they are good creatures, gifts and bleſſings, created and beſtowed by our good God, on good and faithfull men, and that to good ends and purpoſes.

Gen.1,31.

1. Tim. 4. 4. Hæc tua ſunt, bona ſunt, quia tu bonus iſta creaſti, nil noſtrum eſt in ijs, &c. Aug. in ciuit. dei. lib. 15. cap. 22. Pro. 22. 4.

§. Sect. 3. That theſe worldly things are mutable good, & therefore ſubject to abuſe and corruption. Rom. 8. 19. 20. 21.

But yet howſoeuer theſe things are good, yet not abſolutely and immutably, ſeeing they are ſubject vnto corruption, and to bee abuſed by man; in regard whereof the Apoſtle ſaith, that the feruent deſire of the creature waiteth when the ſonnes of God ſhall bee reueiled; becauſe the creature is ſubject to vanity, not of its owne will, but by reaſon of him who hath ſubdued it vnder hope; becauſe the creature alſo ſhall be deliuered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious libertie of the ſonnes of God, &c. And to the ſame purpoſe Auguſtine ſaith, that theſe things mutably good, are therefore good, becauſe they are made by the chiefe goodneſſe, and therefore mutable, becauſe they are not made of his owne ſubſtance, but of nothing; in regard whereof they are ſubiect to corruption, and apt to degenerate, vnleſſe they bee continually preſerued by the ſame powerfull goodneſſe, by which they were at the firſt created. By reaſon of which mutabilitie they are not good in any high degree of excellencie, but to bee reputed among ſuch good things as are of meaneſt eſteeme, as being of an indifferent and low qualitie and nature, in compariſon of ſpirituall and heauenly things. Neither doe they vnchangeably hold this degree of goodneſſe which they haue, but as the Chameleon changeth her colour according to the thing vnto which it adioyneth; ſo they hold their vertue and goodneſſe whileſt they are in the poſſeſſion of the good and vertuous; but become euill to the euill, and ready inſtruments of all manner of ſinne and wickedneſſe, whileſt they are vnder the gouernment of the wicked and vngodly. So that in reſpect of vs theſe things are neither good nor euill, but of an indifferent nature, good to thoſe who vſe them well, and euill to thoſe that abuſe them vnto ſinne, and accordingly they are beſtowed of God indifferently both to the good and euill. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that God would haue theſe temporall things lie out in common betweene the godly and the wicked, becauſe if he ſhould giue them only the good, the euill would thinke that for their ſakes the righteous ſerued God: and if he ſhould giue them only to the euill, thoſe who are weake in goodneſſe would feare to be conuerted, leaſt theſe things ſhould bee wanting vnto them, &c. Againe, if theſe earthly things ſhould be taken away only from the good, the ſame feare would hinder the weake from turning to God; and if they ſhould be taken away onely from the wicked, it would be thought the only puniſhment which euill men ſhall ſuffer: whereas therefore he giueth theſe things to the good, he doth therefore comfort trauellers and pilgrimes; and whereas he giueth them to the euill, he admoniſheth thereby the good, that they deſire ſuch things as are not common to the wicked.

Bona mutabilia propterea bona ſunt, quoniam a ſummo bono facta ſunt, &c. Aug. in Aduerſar. legis & prophet. lib. 1. cap. 5.

Aug. in Pſal. 66. enarra. tom. 8.

Yet neuertheleſſe becauſe they are in their owne nature good, and the bleſſings of God, we muſt haue no quarrell againſt the things themſelues, but onely againſt their abuſe and corruption; neither muſt we contemne and reiect them, when God hath beſtowed them on vs, but rather labour to make a good and holy vſe of them to the glorie of God, the good of our brethren, and the furtherance of our owne ſaluation, and ſo ſhall they retaine their owne nature, and become truely good vnto vs; whereas on the other ſide, by rejecting the gifts of God, wee ſhall offer wrong to the giuer, in contemning his benefits, and but bewray a certaine Cynicall and Papiſticall pride, as wee ſhall afterwards more plainly ſhew. And therefore (as one ſaith) theſe earthly bleſſings are more profitablie retained with humilitie, than reiected with pride. To which purpoſe another exhorteth vs to flie the world and worldly things, with our conuerſation, and not with our body, for they hold not on the diuels part by nature, but by corruption. But excellently doth that wiſe Seneca write, and fitly for our vſe, if wee doe but change his Philoſophie into true Chriſtianitie: auoid (ſaith hee) ſlouenly attire, a head vntrimmed, and vncombed; a rough and neglected beard, profeſſed hatred againſt money, §. Sect. 4. That we ought not to reiect theſe worldly things but their abuſe.

Vtilius [illegible] quaintur humilitate, quam ſuperbia relinquuntur. Aug. de [illegible] eccleſ. Cath.

Fuge mundum conuerſatione, non corpore, &c. Chryſoſt. in Math. 11. Homil. 39.

money, lying vpon the ground, and whatſoeuer elſe, whereby men labour to attaine vnto their ambitious ends, though they goe a contrarie way: euen the name of Philoſophy in its ſelfe is odious enough, although it be profeſſed with all humanitie and ciuility; and how much more if we begin to withdraw our ſelues from the cuſtome and conuerſation of men? Let vs labour to haue all things vnlike worldlings within vs, but let our outward countenance and ſhew agree with them: let not thy clothes glitter, let them not be ſluttiſh; let vs not affect to haue ſiluer plate deepely inlayed and imboſſed with gold: neither let vs thinke it a ſigne of frugality to want gold and ſiluer. Let vs ſtudie to lead a better life than the common ſort, and not a contrarie; otherwiſe whileſt wee labour to amend them, we ſhall driue them away, and turne them from vs; yea it will hereby come to paſſe, that they will imitate nothing in vs, whileſt they feare leſt they ſhould imitate all things. Philoſophie doth in the very entrance promiſe the vſe of common reaſon, humanitie and ſocietie, from which this diſſimilitude of profeſſion diuideth vs. Let vs take heed leaſt theſe things, for which we deſire to be admired, do become ridiculous & odious. We propound vnto our ſelues to liue according to nature; but this is contrarie to nature to torment a mans owne body, to hate eaſily-procured handſomeneſſe, to affect beaſtly naſtineſſe, and to feed on meats not onely courſe and homely, but ſluttiſh and lothſome. As it ſauoureth of luxurioſneſſe to deſire delicacies, ſo of folly to auoid the vſe of common meates, which may be prouided at eaſie rates. Philoſophie requireth frugalitie, not puniſhment and torture, &c. He is a man abſolute and complete that vſeth earthen veſſels as though they were ſiluer; and hee alſo which vſeth ſiluer as though it were earth. It is a ſigne of a weake minde not to bee able to endure riches.

Seeing therefore theſe earthly and worldly things are not bee contemned and rejected, becauſe they are in their owne nature good, and the bleſſings of God; and in reſpect of vs, good vnto the good who vſe them well, and profitable ſeruants when as they are gouerned and diſpoſed by a wiſe and vertuous mind; let vs in the next place conſider how we may ſo vſe them, as that they may bee vnto vs truly good and eſtimable bleſſings receiued from God. And firſt wee are to know, that if we would haue theſe earthly things good, wee muſt labour that they may ſerue a good maſter, and that wee who are owners of them may bee truly iuſtified, ſanctified, and the adopted ſonnes of God, who in Chriſt haue recouered the right and dominion ouer the creatures, which we loſt in Adam. For if wee bee not the children of God and heires of his promiſes, we haue no title to his goods, but intrude vpon them by vſurpation: if we continue vnregenerate and defiled in our ſinnes, we ſhall taint theſe bleſſings of God with our corruptions, and turne them into ſinne; and if wee who gouerne and diſpoſe of them bee euill, wee ſhall imploy them to euill ſeruices, and making them to accompliſh our euill ends & purpoſes, we ſhall cauſe them to be vnto vs euill & pernicious. Fooliſh therefore is their practiſe, who labour to haue euery thing good about them, and neglect goodneſſe in their own perſons, and ſeeke to excell all others in all good things which they poſſeſſe, themſelues remaining euill and deſtitute of all goodneſſe, ſeeing through their corruption they will defile theſe gifts of God, and of bleſſings make them to become curſes, and notable hinderances of their ſaluation.

§. Sect. 6. That we muſt not ouervalue theſe earthly things or prefer them before Gods ſpirituall graces.

Secondly, although wee are to eſteeme theſe earthly benefits as being the gifts of God, yet wee muſt take heede we doe not ouervalue them, by preferring them before either Gods ſpirituall and ſanctifying graces, or the eternall ioyes and happineſſe of his kingdome: for looke how much more excellent the ſoule is than the body, eternall things than thoſe that are temporall, the Creator than the creatures; and ſo much are wee in our iudgements to preferre Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly ioyes before theſe earthly and tranſitorie trifles. Neither ſhall wee receiue any hurt by this valuation, for the more lightly wee account of theſe temporall things, and the more highly wee prize thoſe which are ſpirituall and heauenly, the liker wee are to receiue both from God, and to retaine them when we haue them: as wee may ſee in the example of Salomon, who eſteeming wiſedome aboue all worldly pompe and wealth, had both beſtowed vpon him by God. Whereas if we ouervalue theſe earthly things, and prefer theſe trifles before the rich treaſures of Gods graces, and our heauenly inheritance and patrimonie in his kingdome, the Lord in mercie will either withhold them from vs, if we be his children, or if wee haue them, will diſpoſſeſſe vs of them for our abuſe, vntill wee haue learned to make a right vſe of them. And therefore thoſe who enioy this worldly proſperitie are to be admoniſhed, that when they haue all things according to their hearts deſire, they doe not neglect to ſeeke after the chiefe fountaine of all their goodneſſe, nor fix their minds vpon theſe things when they enioy them, leaſt they eſteeme and loue their pilgrimage in ſtead of their countrey, and turne the helpes and comforts of their iourney into hinderances of attaining to their iourneyes end, and leaſt they bee ſo delighted with the light of the Moone, as that they neglect the fruition of the Sunnes brightneſſe; but eſteeming theſe earthly things, the comforts of their calamitie, and not the rewards

1. Kings 3.

Admonendi ſunt, qui in hoc, quod temporaliter appetunt, proſperantur, ne cum cuncta ad votum ſuppetunt, dantem quærere negligant, &c. Greg. paſtor. par. 3. admon. 27.

of retribution: let them lift vp their minds aboue all worldly fauours; leſt with all their hearts delight they wholly reſt in them: for he that contemneth not worldly proſperity, in compariſon of that loue which he beareth to a better life, he turneth the fauours of this tranſitorie life, into the occaſion of eternall death. Finally let them ſo eſteeme and vſe theſe outward things; as that they may not withdraw their minds from the deſire of heauenly loue, and that they doe not take away the griefe of our pilgrimage, ſeeing they ſhould onely ſerue for ſome ſmall comfort in the place of our baniſhment; nor cauſe vs ſo to reioyce in theſe tranſitorie things, as though wee had attained vnto happineſſe, ſeeing as long as we poſſeſſe them, we are depriued of thoſe ioyes that are eternall.

§. Sect. 7. That we ought not to ſet our hearts & affections vpon theſe earthly things.

Thirdly, as we are not in our judgements to ouervalue them, ſo wee ought not to ſet our hearts and affections vpon them; immoderately louing, and ouer eagerly deſiring them; but vſing them as though wee vſed them not, let vs giue God our hearts, and ſet our affections and deſires vpon ſpirituall and heauenly things. Let vs afford vnto them ſome reliques of our loue, and ſo much onely as better things leaue; for that which is luke-warme and too cold for God, and thoſe heauenly excellencies is hot enough for theſe earthly trifles, and as one ſaith, Let vs rather tolerate than loue them, becauſe as the worlds aduerſitie is manifeſtly pernicious ſo his proſperitie is but falſe flatterie: & in another place, Loue not (ſaith he) temporall things, which if they might bee well loued, that man would haue loued them, which the Sonne of God aſſumed; neither yet feare contumelies, croſſes and death, becauſe if they would hurt a man, he would not haue ſuffered them. But this is to be vnderſtood comparatiuely in reſpect of ſpirituall things, as hee expoundeth himſelfe elſewhere: God doth not (ſaith he) forbid thee to loue theſe things, if thou doe not loue them as thy chiefe happineſſe, but ſo to allow and commend them, as that thou mayeſt much more loue thy Creator: for if the bridegroome hauing giuen his ſpouſe a ring, ſhee ſhould more loue it than the bridegroome himſelfe, ſhould ſhee not euen in the very gift of her huſband ſhew an adulterous minde, although ſhee ſhould loue her huſbands gift? And in another place, The Apoſtle willeth vs, not to loue the world: he doth not (ſaith he) forbid vs to haue it, but to loue it: but thou haſt it, poſſeſſeſt it, and loueſt it: and ſo this loue of earthly things becommeth the birdlime that entangleth thy ſpirituall wings. Howſoeuer therefore wee may affect theſe worldly things with ſome ſmall loue, yet it ought to bee as farre ſhort of that intire loue which wee beare to God, and his ſpirituall and heauenly gifts, as theſe vaine trifles come ſhort of them in worth and excellencie yea in truth the loue of Gods temporarie gifts, ſhould ſerue but as little ſparkes to inflame our hearts with the loue of the giuer; and but as ſteps whereby we may aſcend and mount aloft vnto that diuine and heauenly loue. For why doe wee loue theſe worldly things, but becauſe they are beautifull; and can they bee ſo beautifull as he that made them? Thou admireſt theſe things, becauſe thou ſeeſt not his excellencies, but learne by thoſe things thou admireſt, to loue him whom thou doeſt not ſee. Queſtion and inquire of the creature, and if it haue its being of its ſelfe, then reſt in it, but if it haue its being from him, it is in no other reſpect hurtfull to him that loueth it, but as hee preferreth it before him that created it. And therefore purge thy loue, and turne the ſtreame thereof from the filthy ſincke and channell of the world, into the garden and Paradiſe of God; and what heate and feruencie it hath to the world, let it be all beſtowed on the Creator of the world.

Toleremus potius præſentia quàm diligamus: aduerſorum manifeſta eſt pernicies, proſperorum falſa eſt blanditie. Aug. in Luc. 28. Serm. 19. tom. 10.

Nolite amare temporalia quæ ſi benè amarentur, &c. Aug. de Agon. Chriſt. lib. cap. 11.

Non te prohibet Deus iſta amare, ſed non diligere ad beatitudinem, &c. Aug. in 1. Ioh. Tract. 2.

Non dixit nolite habere, ſed nolite diligere. Ser. 33. tom. 10

Quare am iſte mundus niſi quia pu chra ſunt ſunt iſta pulchra qu ille à qu ſunt? Aug. Pſal. 79. Purga am tuam, aqua fluentem in cl acam ad hortum. In Pſal. 31.

Finally, howſoeuer we may vſe theſe earthly bleſſings when God beſtoweth them, yet we are to be carefull that wee doe not take our chiefe ioy and comfort in them, but rather in the Lord who gaue them; in the fruition of his ſpirituall graces, and in the aſſurance of our heauenly kingdome. For God did not giue vs theſe wordly cottages that wee ſhould ioy in them, and neglect our ſtately palace; hee did not beſtow on vs theſe toyes and trifles that wee ſhould reſt in them, and contemne our heauenly patrimony; but only hee giueth vs theſe courſer meates, to ſtay our ſtomacks for a time, till we come to the great ſupper of the Lambe; and caſteth vnto vs, as vnto little children, theſe pleaſing vanities, to keepe vs from crying and complaining, till wee come to age, and are capable of his heauenly excellencies, and of thoſe glorious gifts of incomparable value. And therefore as wee are not alwayes to bee children in knowledge, ſo neither let vs bee children in affection, doting vpon theſe earthly trifles which were onely giuen vs for a time to vſe, and neglecting in reſpect of them Gods ſpirituall graces, and that heauenly happineſſe, which is prouided for vs to enioy. For as one ſaith: There are ſome things of which wee are to haue the fruition, ſome things which wee are to vſe, and ſome things which wee are both to enioy and vſe. Thoſe things wee are to enioy, doe make vs bleſſed; with theſe things which we are to vſe wee are helped and relieued, whilſt we are trauelling towards this bleſſedneſſe, that ſo wee may attaine vnto it, and ſet our hearts vpon it. Now if wee who poſſeſſe and vſe them, hauing them ſet before vs, will enioy thoſe things, which wee ſhould onely vſe; our courſe and iourney is thereby ſtaied, and ſometimes alſo wee are put out of our way, or at leaſt hindred in our courſe, or turned backe againe,

Res aliæ ſunt quibus fruendum eſt, aliæ quibus vtendum, aliæ quæ fruuntur & vtuntur, &c. Aug. de doct. Chriſt. lib. 1. cap. 3. 4.

from the obtaining of thoſe things which wee ſhould enjoy, being intangled with the loue of theſe terreſtriall vanities. For to enjoy a thing, is with all our loue to adhere vnto it, for it owne ſake; to vſe it, is to refer that which we vſe, to the obtaining of that which we loue, if at leaſt it be worthy to be beloued: for vnlawfull vſe is rather to bee tearmed abuſe. As therefore if being Pilgrimes, which cannot liue happily but in our owne Country; and being diſtreſſed in this our pilgrimage, and deſiring to haue an end of our miſeries, wee ſhould reſolue to returne into our owne countrie; for which purpoſe wee ſhould haue need to vſe either Ships or Waggons, that ſo wee might come to our country, which we were to enjoy: but if now the ſweetneſſe and pleaſantneſſe of the journey, and our riding in the chariot, ſhould ſo delight vs, that we ſhould begin to enjoy theſe things, which we ought only to vſe, we would not make any haſte to end our journey; and being intangled with this outward ſweetneſſe, our minds would bee alienated from our country, whoſe true and ſolid delights would make vs happy: ſo being Pilgrimes and Exiles from God in this mortall life, if wee will returne into our country where we may be bleſſed, wee muſt only vſe this world and not enjoy it, that we may behold the inuiſible things of God in our vnderſtandings, by thoſe creatures which are viſible, that ſo after the vſe of corporall and temporall things, wee may attaine vnto the fruition of thoſe which are ſpirituall and eternall. To which purpoſe alſo he ſaith elſewhere: I am not ignorant that fruit is of fruition, vſe of vſing; and that this difference is betweene them, that wee are ſaid to enjoy that thing, which is not referred to another, but delighteth vs for it owne ſake; and to vſe that thing, which is deſired for another: and therefore wee are rather to vſe temporall things than to enjoy them; that ſo we may obtaine thoſe things which are eternall: and not to bee like thoſe peruerſe men, who will enjoy their gold, and vſe their God; becauſe they do not beſtow their money for Gods ſake, but only worſhip God for their monies ſake.

And thus are we to vſe theſe earthly things both in reſpect of our eſtimation in judgement, and affection, in louing and deſiring them, and accordingly muſt our practice alſo be in ſeeking them: for ſeeing they are to be baſely valued, and coldly loued, in compariſon of ſpirituall and heauenly things, thereof it alſo followeth, that in reſpect of theſe, they are to bee ſlackly followed and ſought after in our practice, and thoſe things chiefly, and in the firſt place to bee laboured for, that are of a much more excellent nature, which being enjoyed will make vs truly bleſſed. For as in worldly things, ſuch as are eſteemed of great value are ſought after in the firſt place, and thoſe which are of meane worth, are put off to better leiſure; ſo anſwerably (theſe heauenly and ſpirituall treaſures, much more excelling all worldly things, than the richeſt Diamond in the the World, the vileſt peeble ſtone) it were no better than ſottiſh madneſſe, if wee ſhould not giue vnto them the firſt place, as in our deſires, ſo in all our labours and endeuours; eſpecially conſidering, that it will be no hindrance at all to the attaining of worldly benefits, if we giue the prioritie to thoſe which are heauenly; both becauſe it is as impoſſible by our owne care and induſtry to adde any thing to our ſtint in our earthly eſtate, as to adde thereby one cubit vnto our bodily ſtature; and alſo becauſe wee haue a promiſe from God, whoſe bleſſing only maketh our eſtate proſperous, that if we will ſeeke thoſe better things firſt, theſe which are worſe ſhall be caſt vpon vs, as it were aduantages into the maine bargaine. For ſo our Sauiour exhorteth vs, firſt to ſeeke the kingdome of God, and his righteouſnes, and all theſe things ſhall be miniſtred vnto vs.

Matth. 6. 27.

Matth. 6. 33.

§. Sect. 9.

That wee muſt not ſeeke theſe earthly things for their owne ſake.

And as wee are not to ſeeke theſe earthly benefits in the firſt place, ſo neither muſt we at all ſeeke them for their owne ſake, propounding them as the maine end of our labour: for this were to make them our ſummum bonum, and of inferiour and meane goods, to eſteeme them chiefe and principall; but we muſt in labouring after them, ayme chiefly at the glorifying of God by the vſe of them, at the good of the Church, Commonwealth, and of our Neighbours; and finally at the furthering of our owne ſaluation. Neither muſt wee euer be at reſt, though by our induſtry wee haue attained vnto abundance of theſe things, vnleſſe in the vſe of them we further theſe ends: nor at all regard theſe creatures, vnleſſe we imploy them ſo, as that their vſe doth giue vnto vs ſome aſſurance of the loue of the Creatour. For whatſoeuer we haue without our God, it is not ſweet; neither are we to eſteem any thing which he giueth vnles alſo he giue vs himſelf who giueth all. And as the Infant being richly adorned with precious jewels, and coſtly clothing, doth not at all eſteeme them when he is hungry, but taketh all his delight in ſucking the mothers breſt: ſo a Chriſtian man, euen when he aboundeth in all worldly things, taketh little pleaſure in them, in compariſon of that wonderfull delight, which his hungry ſoule taketh in God his heauenly Father.

Quicquid nobis adeſt prater Deum noſtrum, non eſt dulce: Nolumus omnia quæ dedit; ſi non dat ſeipſum qui omnia dedit, Aug. in Pſal. 85.

Velut infans circundatus margaritis & indumentis pretioſis, &c. Macarius Hom. 45

§. Sect. 10.

That wee muſt vſe thoſe meanes onely which are lawfull for compaſſing of theſe earthly things.

And if wee thus eſteeme, affect and ſeeke theſe worldly things in our judgement, heart and practice, then will it alſo neceſſarily follow, that we will only vſe lawfull meanes in the attaining vnto them; contemning and deſpiſing them, when as they are offered vnto vs vpon euill and vnlawfull conditions, as being the Deuils alluring baites, wherewith he inticeth vs to offend God, and to hazard the loſſe of thoſe ſpirituall, heauenly and eternal excellencies for the obtayning of theſe baſe, earthly, and momentany vanities. And then alſo will wee not bee much troubled, though wee faile of them when wee ſeeke them, or haue them taken from vs when wee poſſeſſe them: ſo that in ſtead of them, the Lord giueth vs his ſpirituall graces, and aſſureth vs of his heauenly joyes; as not thinking it much to want theſe trifles, when we are inriched with thoſe incomparable treaſures, and gifts of farre better value. Neither will wee then enuy the flouriſhing eſtate of wicked Worldlings, no more than the heire apparant of a Kingdome, enuieth the preſent poſſeſſions of a poore Cotager.

§. Sect. II. Of the lawfull vſe of theſe earthly things, in regard of our poſſeſſing and diſpoſing them.

And thus haue I ſhewed the lawfull vſe of theſe worldly bleſſings, in regard of our eſteeming, louing, and ſeeking after them. Now we are alſo to adde ſomething of their lawfull vſe, in regard of our poſſeſſing and diſpoſing them; leauing the more full handling hereof, till I come to ſpeake of the particulars. And to ſay nothing of thoſe former points of eſteeming and louing them, which are common both to the ſeeking and poſſeſſing of theſe things, becauſe it is eaſie for the diſcreet Reader to apply it alſo to this purpoſe; we are further to know, that if wee would haue a lawfull vſe of theſe things, ſo as they may indeed be bleſſings of God vnto vs, then muſt wee in the firſt place ſanctifie them vnto our vſe by the Word of God and Prayer; according to the Apoſtles rule, euery creature of God is good, being ſanctified by the Word of God and Prayer. By the Word, as it doth ſhew and warrant the right vſe of it, ſo as it may bee done in Faith; and by Prayer, as it is a meanes to deriue Gods bleſſing vpon it, and to obtaine the aſſiſtance of his holy Spirit, whereby wee are inabled to vſe it aright, and according to Gods Will reuealed vnto vs. Secondly, we muſt not when wee haue theſe things, ſacrifice to our owne nets, as the Prophet ſpeaketh; nor aſcribe the praiſe either to our owne merits or to our induſtry and labour; for this were to rob God of his royall prerogatiue, and to take occaſion by his gifts to diſhonour the giuer; but acknowledging with all humility, that whatſoeuer we haue, wee haue receiued it from the Lord of his meere bounty & goodneſſe, wee muſt returne vnto him all prayſe and thankſgiuing, the which is that tribute and homage which our heauenly King requireth of them, who hold their poſſeſſions, by the tenure of his free mercy. And this is one of the conditions which the Apoſtle requireth to the making of the creature good to our vſe; Euery creature of God (ſaith hee) is good if it be receiued with thankeſgiuing. Finally, poſſeſſing theſe earthly bleſſings we are carefully to imploy and vſe them, ſo as they may ſerue for furtherances and helpes vnto vs, for the better performing of all Chriſtian duties, that ſo thereby God may be glorified, our Neighbours edified, and our owne ſaluation furthered, and more and more aſſured vnto vs: and that we vſing our Maſters talents to the beſt aduantage, may, being found faithfull in little, be made rulers ouer much, and enter into our Maſters joy.

1.Tim.4.4.

Habac.1.16.

1.Tim.4.4.

Matth.

CHAP. II.

Of Honours, and what cautions and conditions are required vnto them, that they may be vnto vs good and lawfull.

§. Sect. I. Of the kinds of ho- nours.

AND thus much in generall of the lawfull vſe of worldly things. In the next place wee are to ſpeake particularly of the right vſe of Honours, Riches and Pleaſures. Where firſt wee are to know, that Honours are of two ſorts, the one lawfull and laudable, the other worldly and wicked. The former conſiſteth not onely in the approbation, which God and our owne conſciences giue to our vertuous actions and good parts; but alſo in the good opinion, and eſtimation of the wiſe, vertuous and religious, joyned with their free applauſe & commendation of thoſe gifts, which God hath beſtowed on vs; & of thoſe good workes, and honeſt and religious actions, which through his grace are performed by vs. The which may be either in priuate Chriſtians of meane place and calling, or in publicke and eminent perſons, joyned with authority and rule, or other worldly dignities and preferments. The other is the applauſe and praiſe of the rude, ignorant, and vnconſtant multitude, joyned with worldly aduancement and preferment, either procured by ſubtill deuices and wicked arts, making ſhadowes and appearances of vertues and good actions, to ſtand for thoſe which are true and ſubſtantiall, or immoderately and ambitiouſly affected for thoſe things in them, or done by them, which in their owne nature are good and commendable. The former kind of honour is lawfull, and to be deſired moderately of all Chriſtians, the other is to be contemned and deſpiſed.

§. Sect. The in it ſelf good 1.Sam.

The lawfulneſſe of that honour, and of the moderate deſire thereof may appeare, firſt, becauſe it is the gift of God; for it is hee that raiſeth vp the poore out of the duſt, and lifteth vp the beggar out of the dunghill, to ſet them among Princes, and to make them inherit the ſeat of glory, as Hannah ſpeaketh. And Dauid acknowledgeth, that riches and honours come from God, and that it is his hand that maketh great, and giueth ſtrength to all. And therfore theſe ſtreames muſt needs in themſelues be pure and good, ſeeing they flow from God, the fountaine of all goodnes, vn-

1.Chro.

vnleſſe they be polluted through the Deuils malice, and mans corruption. Secondly, theſe honours are promiſed and beſtowed by God vpon his children & ſeruants, as his bleſſings, and rewards of their faithfull ſeruice. So when Iſaac bleſſed Iacob, this was one part thereof, that people ſhould be his ſeruants, and nations bow vnto him; that hee ſhould be Lord ouer his brethren, and his mothers children ſhould honour him. To ſhew vnto vs, that honour and bleſſedneſſe may well goe together, and that wee may rule ouer men, and at the ſame time be the faithfull ſeruants of our great Lord and Maſter. Thus the Lord promiſeth the people of Iſrael, that becauſe they had ſet vp the Lord to be their God, to walke in his wayes, and to keepe his Ordinances, therefore he alſo would ſet vp them, and make them high aboue all Nations which hee hath made in praiſe, and in name, and in glory; ſo the Lord ſaith, that he will honour thoſe that honour him; and that the righteous ſhall be had in euerlaſting remembrance, and that the memoriall of the iuſt ſhall be bleſſed. And the Apoſtle Paul allotteth vnto Elders that gouerne wel, a double portion of this honour as a reward of their faithfull ſeruice. Neither is it to bee eſteemed a reward of ſmall value, being compared with other temporary and worldly benefits, but of great worth and eſteeme; for, as one ſaith, a good Name is a ſecond patrimony; yea, it is to be preferred before Lands and worldly wealth: For, as the Wiſe man ſaith; A good name is to bee choſen aboue great riches, and louing fauour is aboue ſiluer and gold. With which accordeth the ſaying of the Sonne of Syrach, Haue regard to thy name, for that ſhall continue with thee, aboue a thouſand treaſures of gold. And ſo alſo it is more to be eſteemed than all worldly pleaſures, in which reſpect, the preacher preferreth a good name before a precious ointment, both becauſe it is much more ſweete and comfortable to him that hath it, and thoſe which are about him, and alſo becauſe this ſweet ſcent and ſauour ſpreadeth it ſelfe much further, doing them good which are farre diſtant, and is of much longer continuance, for the ſmell of the Oyntment endureth but a while, whereas the odour of a good Name laſteth for euer: for as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, The righteous ſhall be had in euerlaſting remembrance. Finally, it is ſaid of a good Oyntment, that it doth make the face ſhine, and the countenance chearefull, but of a good Name, that it euen filleth the bones with marrow and fatneſſe. Yea, in truth a mans fame and good report is to be preferred before life it ſelfe; ſeeing the life of an ingenuous & honeſt man is as bitter as wormwood, when as he hath out-liued his reputation: as alſo becauſe the beſt life is but ſhort and momentany; whereas the fame of the righteous is perpetuall and euerlaſting. And this reaſon the ſonne of Syrach rendreth. A good life (ſaith he) hath the dayes numbred; but a good name indureth for euer.

Ecclus. 41. 13.

§. Sect. 3.
That honours ſerue for diuers good vſes.

Moreouer, as theſe honours, fame and good report, are in themſelues good, ſo they ſerue for good vſes, as being notable meanes inſtituted and ordained of God, both to reſtraine vs from the committing of ſin, becauſe it impaireth our good name and reputation, and to ſtirre vs vp to all honeſt, good and vertuous actions, becauſe they are not onely commanded by God, but commended alſo amongſt men. And howſoeuer wee may not chiefly ayme at our owne honour in our obedience, but at Gods glory, yet ſubordinately and in an inferiour place, we may ſomewhat reſpect it. Seeing the Lord hath naturally ingrafted in vs a loue of our credit, and a deſire to haue a good name among the vertuous, that it might as a bridle, curbe vs in from running on in ſinne, and as a ſpur pricke vs forward in all vertuous actions. So the Apoſtle ſaith; Wilt thou be without feare of the power? doe well; ſo ſhalt thou haue prayſe of the ſame. And the Apoſtle Peter affirmeth, that Gouernours are ſent of God, for the puniſhment of euill doers, and for the prayſe of them that doe well. And Paul exhorteth vs, that if there bee any thing of good report, if there be any vertue, or if there be any prayſe, we ſhould thinke of theſe things. Neither is there in truth a greater incouragement on the earth to vertuous and good actions, than the approbation and commendation of thoſe who are godly, wiſe and judicious; both becauſe it cheareth the heart, and putteth ſtrength to the bones; as alſo becauſe being often deceiued through our owne ſelfe-loue, which maketh vs to ouer-weene our good parts and actions, and to thinke them excellent which are ſcarce indifferent; we dare not reſt in our owne judgement when wee doe well, becauſe it doth ſo vſually abuſe vs, and conſequently through our timorouſnes and doubting, we are weakened, and made more faint in doing well; but when generally thoſe who are vertuous and judicious do approoue and commend our actions and good parts, then theſe feares and doubts being remoued, wee receiue notable incouragement hereby to proceed in our good courſes, and vertuous actions.

Excitat auditor ſtudium, laudataque virtus creſcit, & immenſum gloria calcar habet. Ouid. de Pont. 4. Eleg. 2.

Honos alit artes, omneſque incendimur ad ſtudia gloriâ, iacentque ea ſemper, quæ apud quoſque improbantur. Cic. Tuſcul.

Rom. 13. 3.

1. Pet. 2. 14.

Prou. 15. 30.

§. Sect. 4.
The lawfulnes of honours proued from the examples of thoſe who haue beene truly honourable.

Laſtly, from the examples of thoſe who fearing God, haue been highly in his fauour, we may conclude that fame and vertue, honour and religion may well ſtand together. As of Abraham, the Father of the faithfull, who was greatly reuerenced and reſpected, euen among the Heathen Nations; Ioſeph, not onely among the Iſraelites, but alſo among the Egyptians, and ſo likewiſe of Moſes, Dauid, Ioſias, Iehoſhaphat, Ezechias, and the reſt of the godly Kings, with many others. And in the new Teſtament, we haue

Gen 23. 6.
2. Chron. 18. 1.

Marke 15.43.
Acts 8.27.
1.Sam.2.26.
Luke 2.52.

the examples of Ioſeph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus, Rulers of the Iewes, the Queene Candaces Eunuch; vnto which if need were, more might be added; as the Prophet Samuel, of whom it is ſaid, that hee was in fauour both with the Lord, and alſo with men. Yea, our Sauiour Chriſt himſelf, vnto whom the holy Ghoſt giueth the ſame teſtimonie: from all which wee may conclude, that honour and eſtimation amongſt men, are in themſelues lawfull and good, for otherwiſe the Lord would neuer haue beſtowed them vpon his owne deere ſeruants, neither would they haue retained them. As alſo that they are not onely good in their owne nature, and as they are the gifts and bleſſings of God, but euen in the vſe of the faithfull, ſeeing we haue hereof ſo many precedents.

§. Sect. 5.
That we muſt firſt and principally ſeeke honour from God.

*Rom.*2.29.
Iohn 12.43.
Iohn 5.44.
1.Iohn 3.20.
Acts 24.16.

But howſoeuer honours are good, yet not abſolutely and immutably, ſeeing they are ſubject to be abuſed by mans corruption; and therefore whoſoeuer would haue honours truly good vnto them, ſo as they may haue comfort in injoying them, they muſt carefully labour to haue a holy vſe of them, and to this purpoſe to obſerue many cautions. As firſt, they muſt ſeeke to haue theſe honours from thoſe that are truly honourable, and to be praiſed of thoſe who are prayſe worthy; and principally becauſe the Lord is the beſtower of all true honours, they muſt ſeeke in the firſt place to be approued and prayſed by him. And to this end they muſt labour to approue, not onely their outward actions, but alſo their hearts and ſecret affections vnto God, ſetting themſelues alwayes in his preſence, and performing all their actions as in his ſight: and ſo walking before God in integritie and vprightnes of heart, they ſhall ſhew themſelues to be ſuch true Iſraelites as the Apoſtle deſcribeth: He is a Iew which is one within, and the circumciſion is of the heart, in the Spirit, and not in the letter, whoſe prayſe is not of men but of God. And not like thoſe ambitious Iewes, who (as our Sauiour ſaith, of them) loued the prayſe of men, more than the prayſe of God: and receiued honour one of another, and did not ſeeke the honour which commeth of God alone. Now wee cannot thus approoue our ſelues vnto God, vnleſſe wee approoue our thoughts, words and workes vnto our owne conſciences: for as the Apoſtle Iohn telleth vs, If our heart condemne vs, God is greater than our heart and knoweth all things. And therefore in the next place we muſt with the Apoſtle endeauour to haue alwayes a cleere conſcience towardes God and towardes men: that ſo it may approue and giue a good teſtimony vnto vs. For what will it auaile vs to be commended of men, who are our fellow-malefactors, when as God, who is our Iudge, condemneth vs? What will it profit vs to haue them not only excuſing, but commending and extolling vs, when as our own conſcience, which is as good as a thouſand witneſſes, accuſeth and giueth teſtimonie againſt vs? whereas on the other ſide, though men ſhould defame vs, yet we might with the Apoſtle rejoyce in this, the teſtimonie of our conſcience, that in ſimplicitie and godly pureneſſe, and not in fleſhly wiſdome, but by the grace of God, we haue had our conuerſation in the world.

Nil conſcire ſibi, nulla pallef-cere culpa: Hic murus aheneus eſto, Horat.

2.Cor.1.1

§.Sect.
That in th next place muſt be hono of the good and vertuo
Acts 24.16.

1.Cor.2.1

And thus hauing approued our ſelues vnto God and our owne conſciences; wee muſt in the next place labour to bee approued vnto men: for this was alſo a part of Pauls exerciſe, to haue a cleere conſcience euen before men. Howbeit wee are not thus to labour that wee may commend our ſelues vnto all, ſeeing this is often impoſſible, in reſpect of the contrarietie of mens judgements; but next vnto God and our owne conſciences, we are to endeauour that we may be approued and commended of the godly, vertuous, wiſe and judicious: for theſe being indued with the Spirit of God, are beſt able to diſcerne the things of God, and moſt fit and competent Iudges of vertue and goodneſſe, themſelues being good and vertuous, and their teſtimonie alſo and approbation will bring vnto thoſe that haue it moſt joy and comfort, becauſe it is ſubſtantiall and well grounded. As for the teſtimony of the wicked and vngodly, it is not to be deſired if we haue it not, nor to be valued and eſteemed if wee haue it. So Auguſtine ſaith, I deſire not to be prayſed of euill liuers, I abhorre and deteſt it; it is rather a griefe than a pleaſure vnto me; but if I ſhould ſay that I deſire not to be prayſed of thoſe that liue well, I ſhould but diſſemble: if I ſhould ſay I doe deſire it, I feare leſt I ſhould be more greedy of vanitie than of ſoliditie: what therefore ſhould I ſay? I neither fully will it, nor fully nill it: I doe not fully will it, leſt I ſhould be indangered by humane prayſes; neither doe I fully nill it, leſt they ſhould bee vngratefull to whom I preach. As therefore it is the nature of all men to deſire prayſe, ſo it is the propertie of thoſe who are truly wiſe and vertuous to deſire this prayſe of thoſe that are prayſe-worthy; becauſe wicked worldlings are readie to applaud and commend men when they do euill, and keepe them company in their vngodly courſes: in reſpect whereof a man hath juſt cauſe to ſuſpect himſelfe, and to examine his actions, when impious men commend them. So the Heathen man hearing that he was prayſed by ſuch as he reputed euill, was jealous of himſelfe; Haue I (ſaid hee) done any euill at vnawares, that ſuch commend me? And the Lacedemonian when as his King was by lewd perſons highly commended, was readie to aske; Can any (ſaith he) be happy, and not be bitter and diſtaſtefull to wicked men? yea, our Sauiour Chriſt him-

Laudari à viuentibus abhorreo, ſtor; dolo eſt, tati,&c.
hom.25.

Antiſthenes apud Laer de vit.Phil 6.cap.1.

Plutarch.
Apoth Lac

himſelfe denounceth a woe againſt thoſe of whom all men ſpeake well, becauſe euill men will not long be in loue and liking with the actions of the good: For as the wicked man is an abomination to the iuſt, ſo he that is vpright in his way, is an abomination to the wicked: and our Sauiour hath told vs, that the Diſciple is not aboue his Maſter, nor the ſeruant aboue his Lord, &c. If therefore they haue called the Maſter of the houſe Beel-zebub, how much more them of his houſhold?

But is it then vnlawfull to bee prayſed of Worldlings? and are their commendations alwayes to be contemned and rejected? No aſſuredly, their good word rather than their euill is to be deſired, and wee are as much as in vs lieth, to walke vnblameably before all men, and to be without reproofe. For euen the Apoſtle himſelfe laboured in the declaration of the truth to approue himſelfe, to euery mans conſcience in the ſight of God. And leſt any man ſhould limit this indefinite ſpeech to the Church only; hee requireth alſo, that hee who is to bee choſen to the office of a Biſhop, ſhould be well reported of, euen of them which are without, leſt he ſhould fall into rebuke, and into the ſnare of the Deuill: becauſe as by our good liues wee ſhould edifie our brethren, ſo alſo as much as in vs lieth, wee ſhould helpe forward the conuerſion of them that are not yet called. Whereas then we are required to neglect and contemne the good report of Worldlings, it is to be vnderſtood reſpectiuely, in compariſon of the approbation of God, our owne conſciences, or the godly, when both cannot ſtand together. Neither muſt we in our actions mainly ayme at their prayſes; but rather our care muſt be, to giue vnto them no juſt cauſe of euill report; and then neither to bee much troubled if they defame vs, ſeeing our caſe is common with our Maſter, nor yet too much affected with their prayſes, when they doe commend vs; but yet if continuing in weldoing and in an vpright courſe, pleaſing both to God and good men, we may haue their good word, in reſpect that they through ſome common grace receiued, doe begin to like ſome morall vertues in vs, or doe loue our perſon by reaſon of ſome naturall parts which they affect, or in reſpect of common humanitie, kindred, alliance or ſome benefit receiued, we are to nouriſh rather than neglect it, not only for our owne ſakes, who naturally deſire to be well ſpoken of by all, but for theirs eſpecially, in that hereby wee may helpe forward their conuerſion, and bring them by degrees from the louing of our perſons, to the liking and embracing of our religion and conuerſation.

And ſo much for the perſons from whom honour and good eſtimation is to be ſought: the next thing to be obſerued, is, that as wee are to ſeeke it from the good, ſo alſo for true vertues and good actions. For honour is the reward wherewith God crowneth vertue, and his good gifts and graces in his ſeruants, and therefore thoſe that take it vpon them, being deſtitute of theſe, are but vſurpers who intrude vpon other mens right. As for example, thoſe who deſire to be honoured for their ſinnes and vices, for bowſing and drinking, for rioting and waſtefull ſpending, for quarrelling, fighting, reuenging wrongs and ſuch like: which howſoeuer they may make men eſteemed and well ſpoken of among wicked men, like vnto themſelues, yet nothing maketh them more baſe and contemptible in the ſight of God, and of all that are good and vertuous. Luke 16.15. Secondly, men vnjuſtly arrogate this honour vnto themſelues for vanities and things of no worth, neither doth ſo rich a reward as true honour belong vnto men for euery friuolous trifle. And thus did they who built the tower of Babell to get them a name. Gen. 11. And Abſolon hauing no vertues to eternize his memory, erected a Pillar and called it after his owne name, that hereby his fame might continue to poſterity. 2.Sam. 18,18. And ſo the Pſalmiſt obſerueth; that the wicked imagining that their houſes and habitations ſhall contiune for euer, call their Lands by their owne names, that ſo when their liues end their fame may continue. Pſal. 49.11. And thus many among our ſelues erect goodly houſes which they neuer inhabit, and ſtately tombes to lay in their rotten bodies, that by theſe meanes their honour may bee preſerued, and their fame remayne in after ages. Laſtly, they vnjuſtly challenge honours who being deſtitute of all true good, doe put on a Vizard of vertue, and make ſhew of that goodneſſe which they neuer ſo much as loued or deſired; not caring at all to be vertuous and religious, but only counterfeit them hypocritically, that by ſeeming that they are not, they may obtaine that honour and prayſe which they haue no hope of hauing, if they appeared in their owne likeneſſe. Wherein what do they elſe but play the Impoſters and Deceiuers, challenging the precious and true coine of honour and glory, for their falſe and counterfeit wares, worthy in this reſpect rather to ſtand vpon the pillory, that all men may take notice of their coozenage, and learne by their example to ſcorne their baſe ſhifts, than to bee aduanced into the ſeate of honour. If therefore wee would haue true honour, let vs labour to bee that wee ſeeme, and indeauour more to approoue our hearts vnto God, than our outward actions vnto men, otherwiſe our honour being but a ſhadow of a ſhadow, vaine in it ſelfe, and grounded vpon a vaine and falſe cauſe, is like but to haue a ſhort raigne. For God abhorring hypocriſie, will in the end pull off the hypocrites Vizard, and ſhewing him in his owne naturall deformity, will expoſe him to the ſcorne and contempt of all men. And following the Apoſtles example, let vs deſire to haue prayſe attend vpon vertue and goodneſſe, and not goe before it, and build it not on the ſandy foundation of falſe ſhewes and deceitfull colours, if we meane to haue it of any continuance, but on truth, honeſtie, iuſtice, puritie and the workes of loue: Whatſoeuer things (ſaith he) are true, whatſoeuer things are honeſt, whatſoeuer things are iuſt, whatſoeuer things are pure, whatſoeuer things pertaine to loue, whatſoeuer things are of good report, if there be any vertue, or if there be any prayſe, thinke on theſe things.

Phil.4.8.

§. Sect.9.
That we ought to affect ſuch honours as are moderate and proportionable to our deſerts.

Finally, as wee are to deſire honour and prayſe for that which is honeſt and prayſeworthy, ſo in reſpect of the meaſure they ſhould be moderate, and in ſome proportion fitted to our vertues and good parts; for as it is impious to deſire prayſe, for that which is euill; ſo is it vnequall and vnjuſt, to affect great honours for ſmall deſerts; and proud ambition, to deſire to bee preferred before thoſe who far exceed vs in vertue and goodneſſe. In which reſpect wee are carefully to take heed of ſelfe-loue, which makes vs to amplifie our owne good parts, and in compariſon of them to extenuate other mens; and cauſeth vs to looke (as it were) thorow a truncke of a far vnequall bore, turning the ſmall end to our Neighbours vertues, which ſcanteth them to our ſight, and maketh them appeare leſſe and fewer than they are; and the great end to our own, whereby our ſight is ſo inlarged that wee ſee all and more too. But aboue all things let vs take heed, though we be neuer ſo excellent, that we ſuffer and admit thoſe prayſes only which belong vnto men, not daring or preſuming to encroach vpon Gods Titles and Royalties. In which reſpect Herod offended, when hee aſſumed vnto him the prayſe due to his Creatour; and the Heathen Emperours, whoſe pride made them forget their mortality, and to aſpire vnto diuine worſhip. And thus (as I take it) doth this flattering age offend, which giues vnto Princes and great Perſonages the higheſt and moſt tranſcendent titles of vertue and goodneſſe, as moſt mighty, moſt excellent, moſt high, moſt gracious, moſt diuine and ſuch like. Which howſoeuer they may bee excuſed, that they are not giuen them abſolutely, but comparatiuely in reſpect of other men; or that onely thereby is ſignified, that they are very excellent in theſe things: yet herein theſe phraſes and titles thus aſcribed, admit of no excuſe, in that they leaue none that are higher for God himſelfe; and becauſe men hereby in ſhew & ſound of words match themſelues with him, which being at leaſt an apparance of euill, Chriſtians ought to auoid. For whereas it may bee alleaged, that Princes are ſaid in the Scriptures to bee Gods; to this I anſwere, that this name is attributed vnto them, not in reſpect of any thing in their perſons, but onely in regard of their office and miniſtery; becauſe they ſtand in the place of God, as his Vicegerents and Deputies, and therefore they haue his title, ſeeing they ſuſtaine his perſon: in which ſenſe alſo the Lord ſaith vnto Moſes, that hee had made him Pharaohs God, that is, his owne Deputy and Ambaſſadour vnto him. Neither in this reſpect is this title giuen onely vnto great Princes, but is common with them vnto any inferiour Magiſtrates, as appeareth in other places. And therefore this title giuen vnto them in reſpect of their calling and office, excuſeth not thoſe, who giue vnto them Gods peculiar attributes, in reſpect of their perſons; in which regard if any ſhould giue the title of God vnto any mortall man, hee ſhould commit horrible blaſphemy and ſacrilegious impietie.

Acts 12.

Pſal 82.1.6.

Exod.21.6. & 22.8.

Pſal.82.6.

§. Sect.
That ho ought no be imm rately d

But as honours ought not to be ſought vnmeaſurably in reſpect of the quantitie, ſo neither immoderately, and ouer greedily in reſpect of our affection. In regard whereof wee ſhould rather haue it preſſed vpon vs, than ſnatch it with violence; and rather ſtay till it come voluntarily to attend vpon vertue, than to ſend for it in poſt haſte; or to compell it by force to performe this dutie: for as it is not to be rejected when it proffereth its ſeruice, ſo it is not to be preſſed hereunto, leſt we make it ſlauiſh and baſe, which in its owne nature is free and generous. To this purpoſe, Auguſtine aduiſeth vs, that wee ſhould not wholly accept, nor wholly reject, all that honour which is offered vnto vs; for hee that deſpiſeth all honour and fame, for his good parts, and for that which hee hath well done, ſeemeth to abaſe, and not thankfully to acknowledge the gifts of God, which is not agreeable with Pietie; and on the other ſide; hee that embraceth all that is offered, doth not a little exceed the bounds of modeſtie. And as we are not to doe good actions purpoſely to this end, that wee may haue the prayſe of men, for then wee ſhall haue the Hypocrites reward; but for loue of God and goodneſſe, and to aduance his glory: rather affecting to do thoſe things which deſerue fame, than the obtayning of fame it ſelfe; becauſe honour muſt bee the fruit and effect of well-doing, and not the chiefe motiue or finall cauſe; and (as one ſaith) It is good to bee prayſed, but better to bee prayſeworthy. So on the other ſide when we haue done vertuouſly and to good ends, and haue due commendation attributed vnto vs, wee are not to neglect or deſpiſe it; for this were to ſhew no true humility, but contemptuous pride, and diſdainfull arrogancie, whereby men attribute ſo much to themſelues, that they care not what others thinke of them. Yea, ſeeing honour is the reward wherewith God euen in this life crowneth vertue, it

Non requ mitate of nec penit re, ſub ueri, hoc Conc. Del
Phil 4.8.
Laus hu nos quod die facien ſequi deb faciendu de Sat. D Bonum eſt dari, ſed ſtantius e dabilem e Senec.

it is altogether as vnlawfull to reiect his gift when hee proffereth it vnto vs, as ambitiouſly to deſire it before it is offered. Which moderation if wee would obſerue in our affection, it behoueth vs firſt, to obſerue this golden meane in our iudgments: for as on the one ſide we are not baſely to eſteem of honor and a good name, leſt we reiect it, when it is lawfully offered; ſo on the other ſide we are not to ouervalue it, eſteeming it of greater worth and excellencie than Gods ſpirituall graces, or the glorie of his kingdome, leſt the gaining of this which is but imperfect and of momentanie continuance, weane our hearts from that which is moſt abſolute and eternall.

And if wee neither ouervalue it in our iudgements, nor too eagerly purſue it with our affections, then will it alſo follow, that wee will vſe onely good meanes for the obtaining of it; for euen common reaſon will teach vs, not to hazard things which wee eſteeme of ſuch infinite value, for the obtaining of thoſe which in compariſon we doe but meanely reſpect. Whereas contrariwiſe when as wee ouerpriſe honours and preferments, and too much ſet our hearts vpon them; it is a ſtrong tentation to moue vs, to the vſe of wicked and vnlawfull meanes, for the compaſſing of them, when as thoſe which are lawfull faile; as wee may ſee in the example of Caine, Abimelech, Abſolon, Haman and many others. And thus ordinarily men offend who affect their owne praiſes by others diſpraiſes, and grace themſelues by the diſgrace of their neighbours, treading vpon the necks of thoſe, who are better than themſelues, that they may ſerue as ſteps whereby they may riſe into the ſeate of honour. And ſo likewiſe they who labour to aduance themſelues by Machiauellian policies, treacherie, falſehood, hypocriſie and deceit; not caring how diſhoneſt the meanes bee, nor how foule the way, ſo they may at their iourneys end come to the palace of honour, and attaine vnto the glory of the world. But among many other, I cannot omit that vſuall courſe of bribing, ſo much practiſed in theſe dayes; whereby men bluſh not to aſpire vnto all preferments, although it were ſo odious euen to the very Heathens, who had nothing but the light of nature to guide them, that they made lawes againſt this ambition, condemning him who aſpired by gifts to honours and preferments, in an hundred peeces of gold, and with perpetuall infamie and diſgrace. And yet among vs who profeſſe Chriſtianitie, no way ſo commonly leadeth to the palace of honour as this ſiluer ſtreete. But if wee would haue our honours lawfull, ſo as wee may haue true comfort in enioying them, wee muſt auoid all theſe wicked courſes, and vſe onely thoſe meanes which are lawfull and honeſt for the procuring of them.

§. Sect. 12.
That we muſt not propound our owne honour as our chiefe and maine end.

Furthermore, if wee would haue our honours good and lawfull vnto vs, wee muſt not in our courſes and actions propound them as our maine and principall ends, but alwayes make them inferiour and ſubordinate to the glorie of God, ſetting that before vs as our chiefe and laſt end, in all our words and actions, and onely deſiring our owne fame and reputation, as it doth like an humble handmaid attend vpon it. And this end our Sauiour propoundeth, willing vs, to let our lights ſhine before men, that they ſeeing our good workes may glorifie our Father which is in heauen: And his holy Apoſtle chargeth vs, that whether wee eate or drinke, or whatſoeuer we doe, that all bee referred to the glory of God. Now this wee doe, when as finding our actions tending to the aduancement of Gods glory, wee reſolutely goe forward in them, although that they tend to our diſcredit and diſgrace among men; not caring who ſpeake euill of vs, ſo that wee be aſſured that God approueth vs; according to the example of the Apoſtle, who conſtantly went forward in his Chriſtian couſe, by honor and diſhonor, euill report and good report. And when as holding on in this way, wee are diſhonoured among men, yet ſhall wee haue no want of honour, ſeeing the Lord himſelfe will be our glory, and lift vp our heads, when as men ſeeke to tread vs vnderfoot, as the Prophet Dauid ſpeaketh. Wheras on the other ſide, if wee chiefly aime at our owne praiſe, wee ſhall haue the hypocrites reward; if wee affect popularitie, and ſeeke in the firſt place to pleaſe men, that ſo we may be had in honour and eſteeme, we ſhall haue little comfort by it, ſeeing wee plainely ſhew hereby, that we are not the ſeruants of Ieſus Chriſt; if wee loue the praiſe of men, more than the praiſe of God; and thus immoderatly ſeeke the praiſe one of another, we are deſtitute of true faith, as our Sauiour telleth vs.

Laudari haud metuam, neque enim mihi cornea fibra eſt: ſed recti finemque extremumq́; eſſe recuſo. Euge tuam & bellè, &c. Perſ. Sat.1.

*Mat.*5.16.

1.*Cor.*10.31.

2.*Cor.*6.8.

*Pſal.*3.3.& 62.7.

*Mat.*6.2.7.

Gal 1.10.

*Ioh.*5.44.

§. Sect. 13.
We muſt not let honour reſt with vs, but returne it wholly vnto God.

Moreouer if we would haue our honours good and lawfull, we muſt not let them, when they are aſcribed vnto vs, reſt with vs; but returne them wholly vnto the Lord, from whom we haue receiued whatſoeuer is commendable, and praiſe-worthy in vs. And as bright ſhining and golden veſſels, doe not retaine the beames of the Sunne which they receiue, but returne them backe, and double them by reflection, ſo hauing from the Sun of righteouſnes theſe bright beames of his grace and vertue, not onely to warme our hearts, but alſo to ſhine in our words and actions, wee are to reflect them backe againe with all praiſe due vnto them, ſeeing from him alone wee haue receiued them. For euery good and perfect gift commeth from him; and what haue wee that wee haue not

*Iam.*1.17.

1.*Cor.*4.7.

receiued, from this fountaine of all goodneſſe? And as the riuers receiuing their fulneſſe from the Ocean, pay their tribute by returning their ſtreames vnto it backe againe, which homage if they ſhould denie to yeeld, their ſwelling waters would beare downe their owne banks, and drowne the countries ſo we receiuing from the infinite Ocean of all goodneſſe, whatſoeuer fulneſſe wee haue of grace and vertue, and the praiſes which are due vnto them, are by humble acknowledgement and thankſgiuing, to returne vnto him the whole honour of them; which tribute if we refuſe to pay, and ſhew our rebellion againſt our great Lord, by incroching vpon his right, thinking to grow rich by robbing of him, and keeping all to our owne vſe; theſe gifts thus retained, will make vs but to ſwell with pride, and breaking downe the bankes of modeſtie and humilitie, will not onely emptie vs of all grace and goodneſſe, but make all our good parts wee haue, hurtfull and pernicious vnto all that are about vs. And therefore let vs, when God giueth vs his graces, and the honour due vnto them, crie out with the people of God: Not vnto vs O Lord, not vnto vs, but vnto thy name giue the glorie, for thy louing mercie, and for thy truths ſake. Let vs when we are fruitfull in the workes of piety and righteouſneſſe, confeſſe with the Apoſtle, that it is not we, but the grace of God that dwelleth in vs; and when wee haue theſe crownes of honour beſtowed on vs for our vertues and good parts; let vs with the foure and twentie Elders, caſt them downe at Gods feete, before his throne, acknowledging him alone worthy of all honour, glory and power, becauſe he is the author and creator of all goodneſſe; and with the bleſſed Angels and Saints, crie out aloud ſaying; Praiſe and glory, and wiſdome and thanks, and honour and power, and might, be vnto our God for euermore, Amen. For the fuller our mouthes are of Gods praiſes, and our hearts of humilitie and thankfulnes, the more will the Lord inrich vs with his graces, and powre into minds and ſoules, the precious oile of vertue and all goodneſſe, when the wind of pride and vaine glory is quite expelled.

*Pſal.*115.1.

1.*Cor.*15.10.

*Apoc.*4.10.11.

*Apoc.*7.12.

§. Sect. 14. We muſt employ our honours vnto good vſes.

Laſtly, that our honours and good name may be vnto vs truely good and lawfull, we muſt, when wee haue them, imploy them to good vſes, and make them ſerue not onely for the aduancement of Gods glory, of which I haue already ſpoken, but alſo to the good and ſaluation, both of our neighbours and our ſelues. As namely, wee ought to vſe all the loue, authoritie and credit which we haue with men, as cords to pull them backe in the headlong courſe of ſinne, and as allurements to intice them to follow our example, in thoſe vertues & good parts, for which wee are ſo commendable. And for our ſelues, when we conſider that God by furniſhing vs with his gifts and graces, hath made vs not onely eſteemable in his owne ſight, but alſo honourable among men; let this rich reward make vs to yeeld vnto God all thankfulneſſe and obedience: let this our credit and reputation make vs carefull in auoiding all ſinne, whereby our honour will bee blemiſhed and impeached; and let this garland of earthly honour ſerue to incourage vs, more chearefully to runne on in our Chriſtian race, that ſo alſo wee may obtaine that precious and heauenly crowne of euerlaſting glory.

§. Sect. 15. That law- full honours are to be de- red for Gods glory.

And thus haue I ſet downe the cautions which are required vnto lawfull honours, which being obſerued, they are good and warrantable; and therefore to bee moderatly deſired if wee haue them not, and duly eſteemed if wee haue them. Neither is it to be eſteemed true humility, but ſtupiditie and ſenſleſneſſe, not to bee affected with the ſweet odour of a good name. And howſoeuer ambition, vaine glorie, and worldly and carnall honours, are to be contemned of all Chriſtians, as wee ſhall afterwards ſhew, yet theſe lawfull honours, fame and reputation, wherein the former conditions are obſerued, both in compaſſing and vſing them, may, yea ought to bee deſired and eſteemed, ſeeing they tend to Gods glory, the good of our brethren, and the furthering of our owne ſaluation. For when as wee ſhine glorioully in the eyes of men, in the light of a godly life, then is our heauenly Father glorified, as our Sauiour telleth vs; both becauſe he is the author and fountaine of all theſe graces and good gifts, and our Lord and Maſter, vnder whoſe rule and gouernment we thus profit in vertue and goodneſſe: and alſo becauſe whatſoeuer praiſe we haue of men, wee thankfulfully returne it vnto him. Euen as contrariwiſe when as we diſhonour our ſelues by our ſinnes, wee alſo cauſe the name of the Lord to be blaſphemed and euill ſpoken of by thoſe who are ſtrangers to his grace. And therefore though there were no other reaſon mouing vs to ſeeke this honour and good report, yet this were ſufficient, that by it our heauenly father is alſo glorified: though wee did not reſpect our fame, for our owne ſakes, yet for Gods ſake wee muſt reſpect it, becauſe our diſcredit doth alſo tend to his diſhonour.

*Matth.*5.16.

2.*Sam.*12.14.

§. Sect. 16. That we are to deſire law- full honours for our neigh- bours good; and firſt be- cauſe there- he doth his dutie.

So alſo wee are to deſire and eſteeme this lawfull honour for our neighbours good; firſt, becauſe performing a dutie inioyned them by God, they are alſo made partakers of his promiſes and rewards. For the Lord requireth in the fifth Commandement, that we ſhould honour them who are ſuperiour vnto vs in gifts, and that wee ſhould acknowledge and giue due reſpect to his graces whereſoeuer we finde them; and in the ninth Commandement, that we ſhould be carefull in preſeruing the fame and reputation of our neighbours; the Apoſtle alſo chargeth vs, that in giuing honour, wee ſtriue to goe one before another; and that wee ſhould honour all men, loue brotherlie loue, feare God and honour the King. And to his Commandement the Lord hath added the promiſe of long life, as a type of life euerlaſting, and the earthly Canaan, as a pledge of our heauenly inheritance, of which it is a moſt manifeſt ſigne that we are heires, when as wee loue, reuerence and reſpect the children of God, for thoſe gifts and graces which wee ſee ſhining in them; as appeareth in the fifteenth Pſalme, where it is made a marke of one that is to inherit Gods Kingdome, to contemne a vile perſon, or a deſperate ſinner, and to honour them that feare the Lord. And therefore when our neighbours doe thus reſpect and reuerence vs, for our vertues and good parts, wee are exceedingly to reioyce, not onely in reſpect of God, becauſe his will is done on earth, or our ſelues, becauſe wee are adorned with this crowne of vertue; but alſo in regard of our neighbours, from whom we haue this honour, becauſe they performe that dutie which God requireth of them, and thereby manifeſt that they ſhall be partakers of his promiſes, and heires of euerlaſting life.

Sect.17.

Secondly, wee are to deſire this honour and good eſteeme for our neighbours ſake, that he may thereby be edified, when as he not onely ſeeth our good example, but alſo liketh and approueth it; for it is a notable degree to the imbracing of goodneſſe in a mans ſelfe, when he beginneth to honour and reuerence it in another. Beſides, there is alwayes with this honour and reſpect, great authoritie ioyned in the partie who is thus honoured, ouer him who yeeldeth it vnto him, which is not forced, but willing and voluntary; and this is very effectuall and powerfull to draw men vnto all good and religious courſes, becauſe it procureth audience & reſpect vnto their words & perſwaſions. And therefore we ought carefully to maintaine our honor, that ſo we may alſo preſerue our authoritie, for the good and edification of our brethren; in which reſpect, the Apoſtle chargeth Timothy and Titus to preſerue their credit from contempt, that ſo hauing more authority with the people, their miniſterie might bee more effectuall to perſwade them to imbrace the truth, and follow good and vertuous courſes. Whereas contrariwiſe when a mans credit is impeached, and his good name blemiſhed, he loſeth all authoritie and meanes of doing good; either by perſwading to that which God requireth, or in diſſwading from ſin; ſeeing no man is willing to receiue his phyſicke, of whom the fame goeth, that he hath long had the ſame diſeaſe, and cannot cure himſelfe.

§. Sect. 18. That we muſt preſerue our honour and good name to auoide ſcandall.

Laſtly, as we are to preſerue our good name and credit for the edification of our brethren; ſo alſo to preſerue them from ſcandall; leaſt taking offence at our liues, in regard of the ill rumours they heare of vs, they alſo grow to diſlike our profeſſion and religion. The conſideration whereof ſhould moue all Chriſtians, to an earneſt care of preſeruing their good name and reputation, not onely by auoiding ſinne, but alſo all appearances of euill; becauſe in this caſe ſuppoſed euils, rumours and iealouſies doe as much offend our brethren, caſting downe the weake, grieuing the ſtrong, and hardning thoſe who are not called, as thoſe which are truely and really committed. And thus it appeareth that wee ought to haue great care of our fame and reputation, in regard that it is a notable meanes of our neighbours good. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that a good life is neceſſarie vnto vs, and a good name neceſſary vnto our brethren; and as wee muſt labour to haue a good conſcience before God, ſo alſo to haue a good report among men for our neighbours ſake. And therefore cruell and vncharitable is their concluſion, who affirme that they will approue their actions to God and their own conſciences, and not at all care what men ſpeake or thinke of them, ſeeing the wounds which they ſuffer in their reputation, without euer warding them off, do through their names pierce into the conſciences of their neighbour, and oftentimes wound their ſoules to the very death, for which Chriſt Ieſus ſhed his precious blood.

Nobis neceſſaria eſt vita noſtra, alijs fama noſtra. Aug. de bon. viduit. cap. 22.

§. Sect. 19. That we ought to deſire honour for our owne ſake, that it may reuiue and refreſh vs.

And as wee ought to ſeeke this lawfull honour and good report, in regard of God and our neighbours, ſo alſo in reſpect of our ſelues: neither is it enough that we haue the ſhining brightneſſe of a good conſcience, vnleſſe wee haue alſo the ſweet odour of a good name: becauſe by this ſweet perfume, not onely the ſtanders by are refreſhed, but alſo our owne ſpirits reuiued, and our hearts cheared, ſo as wee may with more comfort and courage hold on and proceed in our good courſes. For as not onely the ſight or remembrance of the crowne or prize, but alſo the applauſe of the ſtanders by refreſheth the ſpirits, and giueth ſtrength to the limmes of thoſe who runne in an earthly race: ſo alſo in the running of our ſpirituall race, not onely the remembrance of the crowne of glory, which they that runne ſhall obtaine, but alſo the commendation of the godly and faithfull doth exceedingly reuiue and ſtrengthen vs, to continue conſtant in our courſe vnto the end. And therefore Hæc duo ſufficiunt, nitorem bonæ conſcientiæ & odorem bonæ famæ.

fore conſidering how weake and faint we are, inſomuch as we are daily ready in our ſelues to ſlacken our pace, ſtand ſtill, or turne backe againe; it behoueth vs to deſire, and much to eſteeme this and all other good incouragements and comforts, whereby wee may bee ſtrengthened and helped forward in running this Chriſtian race of righteouſneſſe.

§. Sect. 20. That we are bound by Gods Commandement to preſerue our honour and good name.

Againe, wee are bound by the Commandements of God, to doe all that we lawfully can to obtaine a good name, and to preſerue our honour and reputation among men: for whereas wee are commanded to honor our parents, vnder whom are vnderſtood all ſuperiours, whether it be in gouernment and authoritie, or in Gods graces, gifts and vertues; wee are alſo inioyned to haue the like care of our owne honour, when there is this ſuperioritie in our ſelues; becauſe that loue beginneth at home; and our owne loue is the rule of that loue which wee owe to others: whereof it is that the Apoſtle chargeth Timothie that he ſhould not deſpiſe Gods gifts beſtowed on him. And ſo alſo, whereas in the ninth Commandement God requireth that we ſhould neither hurt, nor yet be wanting to the fame and good report of our neighbour, it is alſo commanded that we be alike carefull to keepe our fame and reputation, without blemiſh or impeachment; or elſe we tranſgreſſe the commandement of Almightie God, and wound our owne conſciences with ſinne: for as hee is guiltie of the breach of the ſixth Commandement, who is wanting vnto himſelfe, in the meanes of preſeruing his owne life, and of the ſeuenth who doth not vſe all good meanes to preſerue his owne chaſtitie; ſo likewiſe of the fift and ninth Commandements, who hath not a lawfull and laudable care of preſeruing his owne honour and reputation. And hereof it is, that becauſe neglect of our fame is a ſinne, and ſinne is Satans ſnare, wherewith hee catcheth and intangleth vs, therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that a Biſhop muſt be well reported of, euen of them which are without; leſt he fall into rebuke, and into the ſnare of the diuell. And thus haue I ſhewed both what is required to lawfull honour, and the reaſons which ſhould moue vs to deſire and eſteeme it, to the end that thoſe reaſons which ſhall hereafter be brought to perſwade vs the contempt, and ſhew the vanitie of worldly and carnall honours, may not make vs to neglect the good with the bad, or deſpiſe that which God would haue vs to value and deſire, for want of due diſtinction.

1.Tim.4.14.

1.Tim.3.7.

CHAP. III.

Of riches, and that they are good in themſelues, and indifferent in reſpect of their vſe.

§. Sect. 1. That riches are good in their owne nature.

IN the next place we are to ſpeake of riches, which alſo are in their owne nature good, as being the creatures of God, whoſe goodneſſe was approued by his owne [a] teſtimonie: neither were they only good in the ſtate of innocencie, but euen after the fall, ſeeing in the Scriptures they are ſaid to bee the [b] gifts of God: for ſo it is ſaid, that God gaue Iob his wealth; and the Lord profeſſeth, that he gaue vnto the Iſraelites their [c] corne, and wine and oyle, and multiplied their ſiluer and gold. yea they are not only ſaid to be gifts, but benefits and [d] rewards, which God promiſeth to beſtow vpon them that ſerue him, as we may ſee at large in the booke of Deuteronomie; and threatneth it as a puniſhment of ſinne to depriue them of theſe benefits; and ſo the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that riches and treaſures ſhall be in his houſe that feareth the Lord. And that which is yet more, they are called the [e] bleſſings of God: ſo the Wiſe man ſaith, that the bleſſing of the Lord maketh rich, and he doth adde no ſorrowes with it: and thus it is ſaid in the Scriptures by a vſuall phraſe, that God [f] bleſſed thoſe who were inriched, and ſo they waxed rich. And as the Lord beſtowed riches as his gifts, benefits and bleſſings, ſo hee required that they ſhould bee offered vnto him againe in ſacrifices and oblations; and vouchſafed vnto them this honour, to haue his [g] Tabernacle and Temple made and adorned with them. Finally, the Lord hath beſtowed them vpon many of his good ſeruants, and made them to bee vnto them true benefits and bleſſings, as [h] Abraham the father of the faithfull, Iſaack, Iacob, Iob and many others; who did not onely poſſeſſe theſe gifts of God, but alſo by the holy vſe of them, glorified him, and were the better inabled to all good and Chriſtian duties.

§. Sect. 2. That riches are not abſolutely good, and of no great excellencie.

But howſoeuer theſe riches are good in their owne nature, and as they proceed from God the fountaine of all goodneſſe, yet they are not abſolutely and immutably good, but ſubiect to alter their nature according to their owners, and to bee corrupted and abuſed by mans ſinne, who hath them in poſſeſſion: and therefore howſoeuer they are good, yet in reſpect of the degree of their goodneſſe they are but of a low and meane nature, and of little worth & excellencie, if they be compared with Gods ſpirituall graces, or the eternall ioyes of his kingdome. For howſoeuer the Apoſtle Paul accounted theſe creatures of God good

[a] Gen.1.31. Gen.2.11.12.

[b] 1.Tim.6.17. Iob 42.10.& 1.21.

[c] Hoſ.2.8.

[d] Deut.28. 2.4.16.17. Pſal.112.3.

[e] Pro.10.22. Deut.8.18.

[f] Gen.26.12. 39.5.30.27. Iob 42.12.

[g] Exod.25.

[h] Gen.13.2. 24.35.26.13. 36.7. Iob 1.3.

1.Tim.4.4. 1.Tim.6.17. Phil.3.8.

good and profitable helpes, for the performance of the workes of mercie; yet comparing them with the ſpirituall riches of Chriſt and all his benefits, hee eſteemed them no better than droſſe and dung, yea loſſe in reſpect of the other. And this may further appeare in that the Lord doth appropriate his ſpirituall graces as his chiefe iewels vnto his owne children and ſeruants; whereas he giueth riches as common gifts both to the good and bad, and more commonly and in greater meaſure to wicked worldlings, than to thoſe who truely feare him. And with this argument one concludeth, that riches are not abſolutely good, or of any excellent nature: For (ſaith he) if gold had beene good abſolutely, without queſtion Chriſt would haue giuen it to his Diſciples, vpon whom he beſtowed gifts of vnſpeakeable value; but he was ſo farre from giuing it them, that he did prohibite them to haue it: and therefore the Apoſtle Peter was not only not aſhamed of his pouerty, but alſo ſeemeth to glory in it, ſaying, ſiluer and gold haue I none. So another ſaith, that riches are giuen by God both to the good and euill, leſt they ſhould be thought euill, or a good of any excellent nature. If (ſaith he) gold and ſiluer were giuen only to the good, they might rightly be thought to be of ſome eminent goodnes: and if they were only wanting to the euill, pouertie might ſeeme a great puniſhment. And if they were only wanting to the good, pouerty would ſeeme bleſſedneſſe. But now that wee may know that gold may lawfully be poſſeſſed, the good haue it, and that it may appeare that it is not the cauſe of their goodneſſe, the wicked alſo enioy it, &c. and therefore God hath diſtributed gold and ſiluer vnto men, as being good in their owne nature, although they be no chiefe or great good, but in their meane degree and order, ſet forth the praiſe of God the Creator of the world.

Yea ſo farre are they from any abſolute, eminent and perfect degree of goodneſſe, that they are to vs but of an indifferent nature, good to the good, who vſe them well; and euill to the euill, who abuſe them vnto ſinne, making no man that hath them by their owne vertue and power either the better or the worſe, but are good ſeruants when a good minde ruleth them, and wicked tyrants ouer an abiect and baſe maſter. To this purpoſe the Son of Syrach ſaith, that the principall things for the whole vſe of mans life, are water, fire, iron, ſalt, meale, wheat, hony, milke, the blood of the grape, oyle and clothing. And all theſe things are for good to the godly, but to the ſinners they are turned vnto euill. With whom Auguſtine agreeth: Thou deſireſt (ſaith hee) to haue gold and ſiluer, and they are I aſſure thee good, but not vnleſſe they bee well vſed, and thou canſt not vſe them well if thy ſelfe be euill: and whereby gold and ſiluer are euill to the euill, and good to the good, not becauſe they doe make them good, but becauſe finding them good, they communicate with them in their goodnes. They are not therefore abſolutely good (like Gods ſpirituall graces) for then they would make vs good, but of a meane and indifferent nature, good in their owne nature, but much corrupted through the fall of Adam.

Aurum & argentum habere vis. Ecce & hoc dico bonum eſt, ſed ſi bene vſus fueris, &c. Aug. Serm. 12. tom. 19. col. 57.

Neuertheleſſe, to thoſe who are raiſed by Chriſt and are renued and regenerate by his Spirit, they are truely good, both as they are incouragements to ſtirre them vp to thankefulneſſe and obedience, and meanes and inſtruments of performing that good to which they are incouragements: and finally, as they are vnto them pledges of Gods loue, and earneſt pennies of their ſaluation. For the faithfull receiuing theſe gifts and bleſſings from God, and hauing nothing to returne vnto God in lieu of all his benefits, do take vp that wholſome cup of thankeſgiuing, and doe praiſe the name of the Lord, and labour to expreſſe their thankfulneſſe in all holy obedience to his will, being incouraged with theſe rewards, the which in our eſtimate iudging according to ſenſe, and too much reſpecting things preſent, are precious and of great worth. For howſoeuer in truth theſe earthly things being compared with Chriſt and his ſpirituall and heauenly graces, are as the Apoſtle reputeth them no better than dung, yet in regard of our weakneſſe, and too much loue of theſe earthly things, wee are more incouraged with them to doe God ſeruice than with better gifts, and our minds alreadie inclinable to goodneſſe, being manured with this earthly dung, become more fruitfull in obedience: as the old wilie Serpent cunningly obſerued; Doth Iob (ſaith he) ſerue God for nought? haſt thou not made an hedge about him, and about his houſe? and about all he hath on euery ſide? thou haſt bleſſed the worke of his hands, and his ſubſtance is increaſed in the land.

§. Sect. 4. Riches are truly good to the regenerate who haue a right vſe of them.

Pſal. 116. 13.

Phil. 3. 7. 8.

Iob 1. 9. 10.

And as they incourage Gods ſeruants to doe good, ſo are they vnto them inſtruments of well doing, and helpes and meanes, whereby they are the better enabled to accompliſh their godly and Chriſtian deſires. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that riches, power and ſtrength hauing in themſelues no true felicitie, are the inſtruments of vertue to thoſe that vſe them well; and therefore he is a wretched man that abuſeth them; like vnto him who taking into his hand a ſword to fight againſt his enemies, doth turne the point thereof againſt himſelfe for his owne deſtruction. But eſpecially we are hereby inabled to performe the workes of mercie and of Chriſtian liberalitie, in helping the diſtreſſed and relieuing the poore; in which §. Sect. 5. Riches are the inſtruments and meanes of well doing.

Baſil. de Inuid. Homi. 11.

bountie and beneficence we more reſemble our Creator, than in almoſt any other vertue. And howſoeuer vertue and true godlineſſe doth not conſiſt chiefely in the outward fact, neither are any excluded from it through the want of externall things; for a man is to eſteemed bountifull who hath a bountifull heart, and is eſteemed of God a liberall benefactor to the poore, who hath a large minde and a ready hand to giue, though it be out of ſmal ability (as appeareth by the example of the poore widow caſting in her two mites, and in Chriſts promiſe of reward to him that ſhould giue but a cup of cold water to any of his diſciples) yet herein rich men haue a priuiledge aboue others, in that they haue meanes to expreſſe and ſhew their bountie, and to giue a viſible teſtimonie of their inuiſible vertue, in actuall relieuing of the poore, whereby they outwardly receiue much good, and the giuers inwardly much comfort. And thus the Apoſtle would haue rich men charged aboue others, to doe good, and to be rich in good workes, and ready to diſtribute and communicate, laying vp ſtore for themſelues, a good foundation againſt the time to come, that they may obtaine eternall life. And our Sauiour Chriſt willeth them, to make vnto them friends with the riches of iniquity, that when they ſhould want, they might bee receiued into euerlaſting habitations. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that gold is reputed good, not becauſe it maketh vs good, but becauſe it enableth vs to doe good. Neither is it bee doubted (ſaith another) but that a wiſe man hath more matter and larger ſcope of ſhewing and laying open his minde in riches than in pouertie; for whereas the chiefe vertue to bee ſhewed in this, is to beare it with patience and not to ſinke vnder the burthen; in the rich eſtate he hath a large field wherein hee may ſhew his temperance, liberalitie, diligence, diſpoſition and magnificence. A wiſe man will not deſpiſe himſelfe, though he bee of a dwarfiſh ſtature, but yet he would rather chuſe to be of a manly and tall pitch; hee will ſhew the power of his wiſdome in a weariſh body, or hauing but one eye, but yet he would rather haue a body ſtrong and perfect, and yet ſo, as knowing that he hath a ſtronger thing within him; hee can beare with ſickneſſe, but hee wiſheth health. For there are ſome things which although they bee but ſmall in compariſon of the chiefe parts, ſo that they may be taken away without the ruine of the principall good, which notwithſtanding adde ſome thing to the continuall ioy that ſpringeth out of vertue. And thus riches doe affect him and make him cheerefull, as a proſperous wind doth him that ſaileth, and as a faire day and a ſunnie bancke in the cold of winter. Let therefore no man altogether reject riches, becauſe others abuſe them vnto ſinne, ſeeing the fault is not in riches themſelues, but in thoſe who doe not know how to vſe them: for as they are hinderances to wicked men, ſo they are furtherances to the good, whereby they are ſet forward in the courſe of vertue. Finally, theſe riches are to thoſe that vſe them well, not only good in themſelues, but alſo pledges of Gods loue, and of our eternall inheritance in his kingdome; for they who haue beene faithfull in theſe ſmall things, ſhall be made rulers of much; they who haue well vſed theſe earthly talents, they ſhall enter into their maſters heauenly ioyes, as our Sauiour teacheth vs. And thus were the holy Patriarchs by the poſſeſſion of earthly riches aſſured, as by types and pledges, of the eternall treaſures in Gods kingdome; by long life, of life euerlaſting; by Manna in the wilderneſſe, of that heauenly food which neuer periſheth; and by the poſſeſſion of the earthly Canaan, that they ſhould for euer remaine in the ſpirituall Sion, and heauenly Ieruſalem. And therefore Dauid concludeth, that becauſe God had beſtowed on him the bleſſings of this life, he would without queſtion continue vnto him his loue, and make him to dwell with him for euer in his heauenly habitation.

1.Tim.6.17.18.

Luk.16.9.

Aurum bonum eſt, non quod te faciat bonum, ſed vnde facias bonum. Aug. in Mat.7. Serm.5. tom.10.

Seneca de vit. beat. cap. 22.

Diſcant non in facultatibus crimen hærere, ſed in ijs qui vti neſciunt, &c. Ambroſ. in Luc.19.

Matt.25.21.

Pſal.23.6.

§.Sect.6.
The reaſo the followi diſcourſe.

And thus it appeareth that riches are the good bleſſings of God, to thoſe that are good, and haue alſo a good vſe of them. The which point may ſeeme to neede little proofe, or enforcing in this couetous age, wherein the moſt men eſteeme riches their chiefeſt good, and ſeeke more earneſtly after them, than the glory of God, or the ſaluation of their owne ſoules. But yet becauſe Satan is ready to bring vs from one extreame to another; and as he doth vſe all alluring inticements, to cauſe worldlings to fix their hearts vpon them; ſo when hee hath to deale with a weake Chriſtian, whoſe affections are weaned from the world, hee contrariwiſe perſwadeth him to hate theſe gifts of God, and vtterly to reiect them, as being in themſelues vnlawfull to bee poſſeſſed. And finally, becauſe there haue beene ſome ſo farre deluded with theſe tentations, drawing them to this extreame, that they haue not onely condemned the vſe of riches, and affected voluntarie pouertie, but alſo haue perſwaded others to doe the like; as among the Heathens Crates a Philoſopher at Thebes, a man of great riches, who when he went to ſtudy Philoſophie at Athens, caſt a great treaſure of gold into the ſea, ſaying that hee would deſtroy it, leſt it ſhould deſtroy him; whoſe practice Hierome approueth, who alſo being poſſeſſed with this conceit, runneth much on this ſtring, abaſing riches, and magnifying pouertie. And in our times diuers orders among the Papiſts

Hieron.ad Paulinum tom.1.

as the begging Friars, the Heremites, and Anchoriſts doe religiouſly abſtaine from the vſe of riches, and profeſſe voluntary pouertie: It ſhall not therefore be amiſſe to adde ſome thing more concerning this point, that thoſe who maintayne this errour may bee conuinced, and the weake conſcience confirmed in the lawfull vſe of theſe gifts of God.

Let this then be the poſition, that Riches are not to be condemned and rejected, but to be vſed of them that haue them to the glory of the giuer, the benefit of Gods Church, and the furthering of the owners in all Chriſtian and honeſt duties. And this appeareth, becauſe they are the gifts and bleſſings of God, which cannot be contemned and caſt away, without contempt to his Majeſtie who beſtowed them, vnleſſe it be in ſome caſes in which himſelfe requireth it. Againe, they are (as I haue ſhewed) the inſtruments of doing good, eſpecially of Chriſtian beneficence, and therefore hauing thoſe meanes granted vnto vs by God, wee are not contemptuouſly to reject them, but to vſe theſe talents to the glory of our great Lord and Maſter who hath intruſted them to our vſe. So our Sauiour Chriſt doth not bid vs to caſt them away, but to make vs friends of them, by liberall beſtowing them to charitable vſes, that ſo we may be receiued into euerlaſting habitations. And the Apoſtle Paul doth not condemne the poſſeſſion of riches, but would haue rich men diſſwaded from their abuſe, and perſwaded to a right vſe of them. Yea contrariwiſe the Holy Ghoſt teacheth vs to pray againſt pouerty, as being in it ſelfe ſo farre from a ſtate of perfection, that it is euill, and both a cauſe and fruit of ſin: ſo the wiſe Agur prayeth, Giue me not (ſaith he) pouertie, leſt I be poore, and ſteale, and take the Name of my God in vaine. And ſo farre is he from enjoyning this wilfull pouertie, that he commandeth vs to labour and take paines in our lawfull callings that wee may haue ſufficient, not onely to relieue our owne wants, but alſo that wee may bee able to relieue the neceſſities of other men.

But they object, that our Sauiour Chriſt and his Apoſtle calleth riches the mammon of iniquitie, thornes, which choke the good ſeed of the Word, and ſnares to intangle and drowne vs in perdition. To which I anſwer, that our Sauiour in calling them ſo, aymeth not at riches as they are in their own nature, the gifts and bleſſings of God, nor as they are poſſeſſed and vſed by the faithful to good purpoſes; but as they are abuſed by wicked Worldlings vnto ſinne, either by their vnlawfull getting of them, or as in their poſſeſſion they are puffed vp with pride, or truſt in them more than in God himſelfe; or finally as they commonly abuſe them, as their inſtruments, to accompliſh and bring to paſſe their wicked deſignes. And to this purpoſe one ſaith, that there is neither holineſſe in pouerty nor fault in riches; but as luxurionſneſſe infameth and diſcrediteth wealth, ſo holineſſe commendeth pouertie. And elſewhere hee ſaith, that riches are very good to them that know how to vſe them, but to him that knoweth it not, they do indeed become euil. He hath diſtributed and giuen to the poore, (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) his righteouſneſſe remayneth for euer. What therefore is better than of thy riches to giue to the poore, by which God becommeth thy debter, in a certaine kind of godly vſury? It is not therefore riches themſelues, but their ſinfull abuſe, which Chriſt condemneth of iniquitie and euill; neither doe they make a man better or worſe, but as they are vſed. For as one ſaith, There are ſome rich whoſe wealth doth not lift them vp in pride, but exalt them by the workes of mercie; and there are ſome who abounding in worldly wealth; do not ſeek after the true riches which are of God; neither yet are in loue with their eternall Country, becauſe they thinke it ſufficient for them to bee ſupported with theſe temporall things. And therefore it is not wealth that is in fault, but the corrupt affection. For all things that God created are good; but hee that abuſeth his goods, behaueth himſelfe like the Glutton, who through greedineſſe killeth himſelfe with that food, wherewith his life ſhould be preſerued. Poore Lazarus attained vnto euerlaſting reſt; and the rich Glutton was tormented, but yet it was rich Abraham which did hold poore Lazarus in his boſome, &c. Againe, there are others who are deſtitute of earthly riches, and yet are puffed vp in pride in their owne conceit: theſe men wealth doth not lift aloft to make oſtentation of their power, and yet the wickedneſſe of their diſpoſition doth place them in the number of reprobate rich men. Whomſoeuer therefore the loue of life eternall doth not humble, the Scripture accounteth him in the number of the wicked rich, becauſe when God ſhall come to judgement there will bee no difference, whether wee are puffed vp with our goods, or with our diſpoſitions and affections. But being well vſed they ceaſe to be in reſpect of our vſe of this indifferent nature, and become truly good vnto vs. For as the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, Riches are good vnto him, that hath no ſinne in his conſcience, and pouertie is euill in the mouth of the vngodly. And the Heathen man could ſay, that howſoeuer riches are blinde if they haue not the eye of prudence to illuminate them, yet they ſee acutely when they follow wiſedome.

Ambroſ. in Luc. 17.

Pſal. 112. 9.

Crimen non eſt in rebus, ſed in vſu agentis. Bernard.

Greg. Moral. lib. 9. cap. 18.

Lazarus pauper fuit, Abraham in cuius ſinum leuatus eſt diues fuit, Aug. in Pſal. 9. Ser. 1 Tom. 10.

Eccluſ. 13. 25.

Plato.

§. Sect. 9. In what ſenſe the Apoſtles are ſaid to haue forſaken all. Mat. 19. 27. Luke 18. 28.

Secondly, they object that a Chriſtian man is to follow the example of Chriſts Diſciples who forſooke al, and followed Chriſt. I anſwere, that the Apoſtles were ſaid to haue left all, firſt in regard of their eſtimation, when in compariſon of Chriſt and his be-benefits they lightly eſteemed them, and (as the Apoſtle Paul profeſſeth) reputed them no better than dung. Secondly, in regard of their hearts and affections, when as they did not adhere vnto them as before time, but contemned them as baſe in reſpect of Gods ſpirituall graces, and heauenly treaſures. Thirdly, in reſpect of their diſpoſition, reſolution, and readines to leaue all, rather than they would deny Chriſt and the profeſſion of the Goſpell. In which reſpects our Sauiour likewiſe requireth that wee ſhould forſake, yea, hate our father, mother, wife, and children, yea, that wee ſhould deny our ſelues, and hate our owne liues. Not that hee would haue vs to do thus abſolutely, for that were to ſin againſt Gods Commandements, but comparatiuely rather than wee ſhould deny Chriſt and the profeſſion of his Goſpel, when both the loue of theſe earthly things and our loue towards them, will not ſtand together. And in the ſame ſenſe our Sauiour requireth that we ſhould forſake our riches: for the Apoſtles themſelues who are ſaid to haue forſaken all, did notwithſtanding after this retaine their goods in their poſſeſſion; howſoeuer in regard of their extraordinary calling whereby they were tied to goe out of their Countrey ouer all the World to preach the Goſpell, they had not the daily vſe and comfort of them.

Phil.3.7,8.

Luke 14.26.

For after that Leui is ſaid to haue left all, and to haue followed Chriſt; in the next words hee is alſo ſaid, to haue made Chriſt, and many with him, a great Feaſt at his owne houſe, the which he could not haue done, if he had forſaken all, in reſpect of right and poſſeſſion, but onely in the former reſpects.

Luke 5.28,29.

And Peter alſo who ſaith, that he had forſaken all, retained ſtill his houſe at Capernaum, with other neceſſaries and prouiſion, as were fit to giue vnto Chriſt intertainment.

Matth.19.27.
& 4.20,22.
& 8.14.
Iohn 21.3.

And ſo likewiſe, hee had his nets and boats, and other neceſſaries for his fiſhing, euen after the reſurrection of Chriſt, as Iohn recordeth. And therefore of neceſſitie, their leauing and forſaking of all, muſt be vnderſtood, not abſolutely and actually, but comparatiuely in reſpect of their eſtimation, affection and reſolution of putting it in practice, when as they ſhould be called thereunto of God. In which regard, wee alſo are bound to forſake all, not only in diſpoſition but in act; firſt, in caſe of Chriſtian apologie and profeſſion of Gods true Religion, when wee are by perſecutors put to our choice, either to leaue our riches, or to leaue Chriſt and his Truth.

Matth.10.
Luke 14.
Marke 8.

In which reſpect alſo we are to leaue our liues, as our Sauiour himſelfe in many places requireth. Secondly, when it concerneth the generall good of the Church; for the common and publike good is to be preferred before our owne priuate and particular. And laſtly, when as in time of grieuous perſecution, the neceſſitie of many of our brethren is great, and cannot be ſupplyed by any other meanes, than by ſelling away of our poſſeſſions, that the money may be imployed to the common vſe, as was the caſe of the primitiue Church in the Apoſtle times.

The ſay Chriſt to young pounded.
Matth.19.

Fourthly, they object the ſaying of our Sauiour Chriſt to the young man: If thou wilt be perfect, goe ſell that thou haſt, and giue it to the poore, &c. I anſwer, that this was but a particular trial which our Sauiour tooke of this young Iuſticiarie, who bragged that he had obſerued and kept the whole Law of God; whereby our Sauiour ſhewed him how farre he was off from that perfection of righteouſneſſe which God therein requireth in that hee had not profited thus far, as to preferre God in his loue and affection before his riches, but would rather leaue Chriſt, than leaue them, if he muſt needs forſake one of both: That ſo being admoniſhed of his owne imperfections and wants, hee might flee out of himſelfe, and abandoning his owne righteouſneſſe, he might reſt himſelfe wholly vpon Chriſt and his righteouſneſſe, for his juſtification and ſaluation. Finally, they object the ſaying of our Sauiour, that it is eaſier for a Camell to goe thorow the eye of an Needle than for a rich man to be ſaued. But the anſwere is eaſie; for our Sauiour ſpeaketh not of the poſſeſſion of riches, but of their abuſe, when as rich men men truſt more in them, than in God. For ſo hee expoundeth himſelfe vnto his Diſciples; Children, how hard is it for them that truſt in riches, to enter into the Kingdome of God?

CHAP. IV.

Of the manifold cautions and conditions which are required to the right and lawfull vſe of riches.

ANd thus haue I ſhewed that riches in themſelues are not to bee rejected and contemned, as being the gifts and bleſſings of God, which being well vſed, may be helpes and furtherances vnto the performance of many Chriſtian duties. In the next place we are to conſider of thoſe manifold cautions and conditions which are required vnto this lawfull vſe, whereby they are made truly good vnto vs; and theſe are of three ſorts: for either they reſpect the acquiſition and getting of riches, or their poſſeſſion, or finally their adminiſtration, beſtowing, and imployment. And firſt, in reſpect of their acquiſition and getting, it is required that it be Chriſtian, juſt and honeſt. In which regard wee muſt not who profeſſe by our Religion, that wee haue better hopes, giue our ſelues vp wholly to the ſcraping and raking of wealth together, ther, ſuffering our thoughts, our words and actions to be altogether ſpent about this ſubject, as being the mayne end at which wee ayme. But conſidering that they are not good abſolutely, nor in any high degree of excellencie and perfection, but of a meane and indifferent nature; wee muſt giue them their due place, and neither in our judgement eſteeme them, nor in our affection loue them, nor in our practice ſeeke them aboue their deſerts, or before Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly excellencies. But as wee are in our judgements, when they come in compariſon with theſe, to deſpiſe and contemne them, and in our affections to loath them, eſteeming them no better than droſſe and dung, in reſpect of Chriſt and his benefits; ſo neither are we in our acquiſition and ſeeking of them, to giue vnto them the firſt place, but according as our Sauiour commandeth, wee muſt firſt ſeeke the Kingdome of God and his righteouſneſſe, & then without any great care of our owne, God will alſo miniſter theſe things vnto vs. And if this be not obſerued, riches which are in their owne nature good, do degenerate and become euill: for as a ſlaue is of good vſe whileſt hee keepeth his owne place, and imployeth himſelfe about his own buſineſſe, but becommeth intolerable, when hee preſumeth to ſeate himſelfe aboue the King, and taketh vpon him to rule the Common-wealth: and as the ſeruant is to be well eſteemed of his Maſter, whileſt in all humilitie he doth his dutie, but becommeth odious, when hee takes vpon him, not onely to rule him and the whole houſe, but as a riuall wooeth his Miſtreſſe, and withdraweth her heart and affection from her husband: ſo riches are good, whileſt they hold the inferiour places of ſlaues and vnderlings, and be at the Owners command, to performe all good duties: but when they preſume to ſeat themſelues in the Royall Throne of God, the heart of man, which hee hath appropriated to his owne vſe, if they take vpon them to rule their Owners, and to make them to become their Drudges: if being in compariſon, of a baſe and contemptible condition, they exalt themſelues in our eſtimation aboue Heauen and heauenly things; and begin to wooe our hearts from God, and our Husband Ieſus Chriſt; then they degenerating from their owne nature and condition are to bee deſpiſed, and with juſt contempt, to be trodden and ſtamped vnder foot.

Secondly, in gathering of riches we muſt vſe moderation, both in regard of our affections, and alſo in reſpect of the quantitie of the riches themſelues. In reſpect of our affection in ſeeking, wee muſt firſt auoid that purpoſed reſolution of worldly men, of becomming rich. For vpon this will follow a deſire of vſing vnlawfull meanes, when as lawfull are wanting; and ſo whileſt wee get wealth, we ſhall loſe our ſoules, and lie open to all Satans ſnares of tentations, when they are couered with the alluring bait of profit. And this the Apoſtle plainly affirmeth: They (ſaith he) that will be rich, fall into tentations and ſnares, and into many fooliſh and noyſome luſts, which drowne men in perdition and deſtruction. For the deſire of money, is the root of all euill, which while ſome luſted after, they erred from the faith, and pierced themſelues thorow with many ſorrowes. There muſt therefore be in our will and deſire, a Chriſtian moderation and indifferencie, whereby we wiſh to attaine vnto riches, if God grant lawfull meanes, and can be content to be without them, if theſe honeſt and juſt meanes be wanting. Secondly, as our deſires muſt be moderate, ſo alſo our haſte in compaſſing them, being content to ſtay our time, and to waite the Lords leiſure, till hee bleſſeth our labours with fruitfull increaſe; for otherwiſe, if as ſoone as Satan hath ſet out a bootie, wee preſently goe a forraging, and run vpon it without feare of any danger, we ſhall ſuddenly fall into his ambuſhments, and by ouer-haſtie purſuit of our prey, make our ſoules a prey to this deſtroying enemie. And of this the Wiſeman fore-warneth vs, that wee may auoid theſe ſtratagems of the Deuill: He that (ſaith hee) maketh haſte to be rich ſhall not be innocent. And a little after: A man with a wicked eye haſteth to riches, and knoweth not that pouertie ſhall come vpon him. And in another place: An heritage haſtily gotten at the beginning, the end therof ſhall not be bleſſed. Of this haſt therfore let vs take heed, and before we ſeiſe vpon riches, let vs conſider wel of the means whereby they are to be compaſſed, and ſeriouſly view them before we ſwallow them, leſt Satan hath hid a hooke vnder this baite; and ſeeing riches are thornes let vs not ſuddenly catch hold of them, leſt they wound our hands, but take hold of them daintily, and with great warineſſe. Thirdly, wee muſt ſeeke them with quiet and contented minds, and reſt ſatisfied with that proportion which God allotteth vnto vs; and not ſeeke after them, with an vnſatiable appetite, which the more it hath, the more it coueteth, like thoſe who are ſicke of the dropſie, who the more they drinke, the more they thirſt; or like the Horſe-leach, the Graue, and Hell, of which Salomon ſpeaketh, which cry, giue, giue, and are neuer ſatisfied. But of this I ſhall ſpeake more afterwards. Laſtly, wee muſt affect the attayning of riches onely by ſuch meanes as are lawfull, and warranted in the Booke of God; that is, we muſt ſeeke them in a lawfull calling, and by honeſt courſes, not at all coueting them, when as we cannot thus attaine vnto them. In the former reſpect it is required, that wee liue in a lawfull calling, and therein that we get our riches, and not by playing, gaming, and ſuch

1.Tim.6.9,10.

Pro.28.20,22.

Pro.20.21.

Pro.27.20, 30.15.

like courſes condemned by the Lawes of God and men. Neither muſt we labour after wealth, by incroaching vpon other mens callings; for it is not lawfull for a Miniſter to inrich himſelfe by following the calling of priuate men, no more then it is lawfull for them, to inrich themſelues by taking vpon them the calling of a Miniſter. But euery man ought to abide in that vocation whereunto he is called of God, as the Apoſtle requireth. And for the other, we ought in this lawfull calling, to vſe onely lawfull meanes to attaine vnto wealth, expecting and waiting for Gods bleſſing vpon them, and not after the faſhion of the World, vſe thoſe which are wicked and vnlawfull, when thoſe which are lawfull faile. As for example, we muſt auoid violence, wrong, oppreſſion, extortion, crueltie, as alſo all manner of fraude, deceit, and craftie courſes, whereby we circumuent & endamage others, to inrich our ſelues. For as the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, Riches are good to him that hath no ſin in his conſcience, and the rich man is bleſſed which is found without blemiſh. Wheras contrariwiſe, thoſe who ſeeke to compaſſe riches by euill courſes, what doe they elſe but flee from God, and ſeeke to haue their deſires ſatisfied by the Deuill? What doe they but by gaining a little earthly pelfe, hazard their owne ſaluation, And what will it profit them to gain the whole World, and to loſe their own ſoules? as our Sauiour Chriſt ſpeaketh. To this purpoſe the Heathen Philoſopher ſpeaketh excellently: A Wiſe man (ſaith hee) may haue great riches, being not wrongfully taken from any, neither defiled with ſtrange bloud, gotten without iniurie, without any diſhoneſt courſes; of which there is as honeſt a paſſage and egreſſe, as they had an entrance, at which none groaneth and repineth but the enuious and malicious: let them be ſifted and examined as much as you will, and they will proue honeſt. In which when as there are many things, which all could deſire to bee their owne, there is nothing which any man can ſay it is his owne: ſuch an one will not reiect the benignitie of prouidence, and will neither glorie nor bluſh in his patrimony gotten by honeſt meanes, &c. And as a Wiſe man will not admit a peny ill gotten to come within his doores; ſo he will not refuſe and caſt out great riches, the gift of prouidence and the fruit of vertue. For why ſhould he enuy them a place? let them come and ſpare not, let them take vp a lodging with him. Hee will neither boaſt of them, nor hide them; for that were a ſigne of a mind ignorant how to vſe them, this of a mind baſe and fearefull, as though he hugged in his boſome a thing of great price. He will not (I ſay) caſt them out of doores. For then what ſhould hee ſay, are you vnprofitable? or doe not I know how to vſe you? but as though he could goe a iourney on a foot, yet he had rather goe in his Coach; ſo if he can lawfully be rich, hee will, and will haue wealth in his cuſtodie, but as a thing which is light and ready to flie away: neither will he ſuffer it to be troubleſome either to any other or himſelfe, but he will beſtow it, either to the good, or to thoſe whom he is in hope to make good.

1.Cor 7.20.

Ecclus. 13.25. & 31 8.

Marke 8.36.

Senec. de beata vita, cap.23.

§. Sect. 3. Of the qua-titie of r- which is to desired, tha- ſo much as is neceſſary.

And thus much concerning the moderation of our affections in ſeeking riches: in the next place we are to conſider of the quantitie of our riches which is to bee deſired, and ſought after: in which regard riches are either neceſſary, ſufficient & plentifull, or abundant and ſuperfluous. The neceſſitie of riches either reſpecteth a mans nature or his ſtate: the neceſſitie of nature is, that a man haue things neceſſary to ſuſtaine and preſerue nature, as food, apparell, lodging and ſuch like, with which a man muſt reſt contented if he haue no more: according to the Apoſtles rule, If we haue food and rayment let vs therewith be content. And theſe neceſſaries euery man is bound to deſire and ſeeke after, both that nothing be lacking vnto him for the preſeruation of his life, & alſo that he be not chargeable vnto others. The neceſſitie of ſtate, place or calling, either reſpecteth himſelfe or others. Vnto the former is required that a man haue not only things fit to ſuſtaine nature, but to mayntaine him according to his place and calling; in which a greater or leſſe proportion is neceſſary, according to the dignitie or meaneneſſe of a mans qualitie or condition. And thus a Noble man hath need of a large allowance to mayntaine him according to his Nobilitie, and a King more, to mayntaine his Royaltie: and thus beſides neceſſaries belonging to nature, Scholars and Students haue need of Bookes, and Artizans of Tooles. In reſpect alſo of others, riches are neceſſary either to maintain thoſe which are committed to a mans charge, or others who are not vnder his gouernment. For the former, the father is bound to mayntaine, not only himſelfe, but alſo his Children, the Maſter his Family, the Magiſtrate his Officers; of which a man ought to haue as great a care to prouide them neceſſaries according to their ſeuerall conditions as himſelfe; and therefore is bound in conſcience to deſire and ſeeke after the meanes, whereby hee may be enabled hereunto. For as the Apoſtle ſaith, If there be any that prouideth not for his own, and namely for them of his houſhold, hee denieth the faith, and is worſe than an Infidell. And this care was in Iacob, where hee ſaith to Laban, When ſhall I trauaile for mine owne houſe alſo? and in the good Huſwife deſcribed in the Prouerbs, who was diligent to prouide neceſſaries not only for her Husband and Children, but alſo for all the reſt of her Family. Yea, this care was in our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe, who had a purſe to keepe the money which was fit for the common

1.Tim.6.8.

1.Theſſ.4.12. 2.Cor.12.13.

1.Tim.5.8.

Gen.30.30.

Pro.31.15.

mon ſtore, both for himſelfe, his Diſciples, and the poore; which as one obſerueth, was not a peny-pouch, but a bagge ſo bigge that it needed a bearer. And this prouiſion of neceſſaries ought not onely to be for the time preſent, but alſo for the time to come: for the lerning of which leſſon the ſluggard is ſent to the Piſmire to learn prouidence, ſeeing ſhe in the ſummer prouideth food for winter; which who taketh out & practiſeth, is called the ſon of wiſdom. Neither ought a man only thus to prouide for his charge, that they may haue comfortable maintenance whileſt he liueth, but alſo that they may haue a cōpetencie for their reliefe after he is dead. And thus a good maſter prouides for his faithful ſeruants, who haue ſpent their chiefe ſtrength in his ſeruice, but eſpecially parents for their children: for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that children are not bound to lay vp for their fathers, but the fathers for the children. And Salomon ſaith, that the good man ſhall giue inheritance to his childrens children. In reſpect alſo of others who are not vnder our charge riches are neceſſary, & that both for publick and priuate vſes; publicke, as when we contribute to all good vſes, which either reſpect the Church or the Common-wealth: to which purpoſes we are to extend our helping hand, not only out of our ſuperfluities, but out of our neceſſities, pinching both backe and belly to performe theſe publike ſeruices: priuate, as when out of that portion which God hath allotted vs, we be ready according to our abilitie to relieue the poor who ſtand in need of our help.

The ſecond degree or meaſure of riches, is to haue not only things neceſſary, but alſo to haue ſome ſufficiencie & reaſonable plentie of them; ſo as a man may haue not onely wherewith to hold life and ſoule together, and to prouide in ſome poore and ſlender manner for his charge and family, but alſo ſuch ſtore, as that together with them that depend vpon him, hee may liue comfortably and cheerfully in his vocation. And not only ſo, but alſo may be inabled thereby, to be liberally helpful and beneficiall vnto others, and to aduance their good, whether it bee priuate or publike. Priuate, as by plentifull relieuing the poore, and doing the workes of mercie with a bountifull hand. Publick, when as wee haue riches which wee imploy for the good of the Church, in mayntayning the Miniſterie, & ſetting forward all meanes of Gods Seruice; and for the good of the Common-wealth, when as we haue wherewith to pay tribute, ſcot and lot, and to performe ſuch publike ſeruices as tend to the common good. And in this degree alſo riches may lawfully bee deſired and ſought: firſt, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt doth account this plentifull eſtate in it ſelfe more happy, than that of want, whereas it is ſaid by Chriſt himſelfe, that it is a bleſſed thing to giue, rather than to receiue: and whereas God promiſeth it as a bleſſing to his people, that they ſhould lend vnto many, but not borrow of any. Secondly, becauſe wee are taught by the example of Agur, to pray for this ſufficiencie and conuenient plentie. And laſtly, becauſe God requireth of vs that we be ready to performe thoſe good duties both publike and priuate vnto others: as namely, that we muſt not only drinke of the water of our owne Ciſterne our ſelues, but alſo muſt let our fountaines flow forth, and our riuers of waters to run into the ſtreets; and not only labour to ſuſtaine our ſelues and Family, but alſo that we may giue vnto him that needeth. Vnto which wee might adde all thoſe Commandements enjoyning, and exhortations incouraging vs to giue vnto the poore, and to do the works of mercie to thoſe who need our helpe; as alſo to giue tribute to the Prince, and mayntenance to thoſe who labour in the worke of the Miniſterie. All which manifeſtly proue the lawfulneſſe of deſiring and ſeeking this ſufficiencie of riches and conuenient plenty, ſo it be with moderation and with obſeruance of the former cautions; for where any duty is commanded, there alſo the meanes whereby wee are inabled to performe it, are injoyned ſo farre forth as wee can compaſſe them by lawfull means. Vnto which we might alſo adde, that the Lord in his infinite bounty & goodneſſe, hath not only created ſuch plentifull ſtore of theſe his creatures, as are ſufficient for neceſſitie, but alſo for honeſt comfort and delight, and hath in many places promiſed this ſtore and plentie to thoſe that feare and ſerue him.

*Prou.*30.8.

*Prou.*5.15,16.

*Epheſ.*4.28.

*Leuit.*26.5.
*Deut.*28.2,3.
4.11.30.9.

§. Sect. 5.
Whether it be lawfull to deſire abundance of riches.

The third degree of riches is abundance and ſuperfluitie, when a man hath more than is fit for his place and calling, or than he can or will imploy to any good vſes: now the queſtion heere is, whether it bee lawfull for a Chriſtian man to deſire and ſeeke after this abundance and ſuperfluitie? For anſwering whereof we are to know, that this deſire and ſeeking of abundance is to be condemned as vnlawfull, not ſimply and abſolutely in it ſelfe; for if wee could deſire and ſeeke abundance of riches, which are in themſelues good, by good and lawfull meanes in a moderate manner, in reſpect of our affection, and vnto good ends, namely, that according to our proportion of riches wee might abundantly glorifie God, and diſperſe that which wee thus gather vnto the poore, and were made thereby more thankfull vnto God, according to the meaſure of his gifts, and more humble becauſe wee are more indebted vnto him, I doe not ſee how this deſire ſhould be vnlawfull; for if wee may lawfully vſe this abundance when God beſtoweth it, it cannot bee that it is ſimply and abſolutely vnlawfull to deſire that which we may lawfully vſe. But yet this deſire of abundance by accident and by reaſon of our corruption, is euill and vnlawfull; becauſe they who deſire abundance doe immoderately deſire it, and oftentimes vſe euill means in ſeeking to compaſſe it. Secondly, becauſe in reſpect of our corruption wee cannot propound purely thoſe ends of doing good, but deſire and ſeeke it for ſelfe-loue, and for our owne vſe. Thirdly, becauſe we deſire more than we can, or will imploy to good vſes; neither is the fault in the quantitie of our riches, but in our inordinate deſires, and vniuſt detention of them from their right ends. For if we had ſuch an euer ſpringing fountaine of wealth that could neuer bee drawne dry, there were no hurt in it, if we would retaine thereof onely ſo much as might ſuffice vs, and ſerue for our owne neceſſary and lawfull vſe, letting all our ſuperfluitie runne abroad the Countrie for the reliefe of others, and for the refreſhing of ſuch poore afflicted ſoules as are dried vp with griefe and pouertie. For ſo although wee ſhould haue alwayes abundance, yet ſhould we neuer haue ſuperfluitie, becauſe we haue no more than wee well vſe. Fourthly, becauſe deſiring and ſeeking abundance, wee doe accordingly take paines in vſing the meanes, whereby wee may attaine vnto our deſires; and conſequently our thoughts and labours being of no large extent, are wholly taken vp in theſe earthly imployments, ſo as in the meane time we neither deſire nor ſeeke as wee ought things of farre greater excellencie, as Gods ſpirituall graces, and the eternall ioyes of his Kingdome. And laſtly, in reſpect of our corruption this abundance of riches and wealth is the foundation and ground of many dangerous tentations; whereby Sathan choketh in us the Seed of Gods Word, weaneth vs from the loue of Heauen and heauenly things, puffeth vs vp with pride, and maketh vs forgetfull of God, and of all duties which we owe vnto him. So that like as our bodies, when they exceſſiuely abound with any humour, though it be neuer ſo good in it ſelfe, are thereby caſt into deſperate diſeaſes, if it be not purged and abated; ſo it fareth with vs in reſpect of our ſtates, for when they abound with ſuperfluitie of theſe good things which are earthly and temporall, and are not abated by imploying them to good vſes, they make our ſoules dangerouſly ſicke in ſinne, and betray them to be ouercome by the tentations of the Deuill. And therefore as the diſcreet Merchant, though his wares bee neuer ſo good, fitteth his burthen to his Ship, not ouer-loading it with more than it can well carry, for feare leſt all ſhould ſinke; and if a ſtorme happen, is ready to lighten his Ship, by caſting out a part of this alſo, that ſo the reſidue with himſelfe may eſcape the danger; ſo wee are to vſe the like wiſedome, and not ouer-burthen our minds and ſoules, with a greater load of theſe earthly things, than they can well beare, but allow only vnto them a fit and competent proportion; and if Satan taking aduantage of our plentie, doe indanger vs with the ſtormes of his tentations, wee are to eaſe our ſelues by giuing part of that, which otherwiſe we might well vſe, to the poore, to preſerue our ſoules from ſuffering ſhipwrack, & ſo ſhall we not only ſaue the reſt for our own vſe, but caſting our wares vpon the face of theſe waters, we ſhal after many dayes find them, with no ſmall aduantage.

2.*Cor.*9.6,7,8.

Eccleſ.11.

And thus haue I ſhewed that howſoeuer abundance is good in it ſelfe, yet in many reſpects the deſire thereof is hurtfull vnto vs. The which may further appeare by theſe reaſons. First, becauſe riches are not abſolutely good, but in reſpect of the end, or vſe, for which they are deſired and poſſeſſed, according to which end they are to be meaſured & proportiond; for thoſe things which are good in reſpect of their end, are to bee meaſured according to this end. As for example, the end of our deſiring riches is, that by their vſe, we may glorifie God, haue ſufficient mayntenance for our ſelues, and be able to relieue others; and conſequently our deſires are only ſo farre lawfull as they are meaſured and fitted to theſe ends; for in all thoſe things whoſe goodneſſe conſiſteth in a due meaſure and proportion, either the increaſe or diminution of this meaſure muſt needes bee euill. And therefore to deſire more riches than we either can or will vſe to Gods glory, for our owne maintenance, or the reliefe of others, muſt needs be euill and vnlawfull, becauſe our deſires exceed the meaſure of thoſe ends, for which only riches are good.

Secondly, this deſire of abundance, not thus to vſe it, but to hold it in our owne poſſeſſion, and to make our ſelues rich, is a notable ſigne of diffidence and diſtruſt in Gods promiſes & prouidence, which maketh men think that they haue neuer ſufficient for their maintenance, and for the preuenting of all caſualties and dangers of loſſe, which may befall them, although they haue already one foot in the graue. Thirdly, abundance immoderately affected and accordingly obtained and poſſeſſed, is a notable meanes to puffe men vp with pride, to make them to forget God, to inſult ouer their brethren, as wee may ſee in many euen in our dayes, who hauing nothing in themſelues worth regard, but being miſerably poore in all vertue, wiſdome, and goodnes, are yet exceeding proud of their riches, and inſult ouer all who are inferiour vnto them in wealth, though they be neuer ſo much ſuperiour in all graces and good parts. And this was the cauſe why the Lord did forbid euen Kings themſelues to gather much Siluer and Gold, leſt their hearts being puffed vp with pride, they ſhould be turned away from God. Now if Kings whoſe Royaltie is ſo great, and whoſe im-imployments ſo manifold, both for maintenance of their eſtate, and for defence of themſelues and their countrie, might not ſeeke exceſſiue riches, and ſuperfluous abundance; how much more vnlawfull is it in ſubjects and inferiour perſons, who haue no ſuch vſe of it?

Deut.

Sect.8. may not for abun- ce,& ther- not de-

Fourthly, that which wee may not pray for, that we may not deſire and ſeeke; but wee may not pray for this abundance, hauing no promiſe of it in the Scriptures, whereupon we may ground our faith. Yea rather wee are taught to pray againſt it, according to the example of wiſe Agur; Giue me not riches, leſt I bee full and denie thee, and ſay, who is the Lord? and our Sauiour Chriſt hath taught vs to pray, not for abundance and ſuperfluitie, but for our daily bread, that is, ſuch neceſſaries and conuenient ſtore, as may comfortably ſuſtaine our liues; and alſo that wee ſhould not bee led into tentation. Now in reſpect of our corruption this abundance is a notable tentation and ſnare of the diuell, whereby hee draweth vs from the loue of God, and faſteneth our hearts vnto the earth, beſides innumerable other euils, which thereby hee worketh in vs; and therfore we who deſire to bee deliuered from tentations, are not wilfully and deſirouſly to runne into them. Laſtly, this deſire and ſeeking of abundance for our owne vſe is iniurious and hurtfull to our brethren and neighbours; for ſeeing theſe earthly things are circumſcribed, and but of a finite nature; therefore it muſt needs follow, that the more that ſome abound with them, the more others want. And nothing can be more vniuſt and vnequall than to depriue others of neceſſaries, to the end that wee may loade our ſelues with ſuperfluities. But much more iniurious are they vnto themſelues, in that they vnmeaſurably ſeeke theſe good talents of God, and hide them in a napkin, neuer imploying them to the aduancement of Gods glorie, nor the good of their brethren; ſeeing they doe hereby but increaſe their reckoning, and (becauſe they can yeeld no better account) their condemnation at the day of Gods appearing. As therefore the flye when ſhe doth but touch and taſte the honey receiueth no hurt, but is thereby fed and nouriſhed; but if ſhee doe ouer greedily runne into it, is intangled and periſheth: ſo if wee moderatly affect a competencie and ſufficiencie of earthly riches, they tend to our good and preſeruation; but if with too much eagernes we wallow in abundance and ſuperfluitie, in ſtead of receiuing any good wee intangle our ſelues, and haſten our deſtruction.

Sect.9.

And thus much for the lawfull vſe of riches, in reſpect of our deſiring and ſeeking of them. Now wee are to proceed to their lawfull vſe in reſpect of their poſſeſſion, vnto which is required, firſt, that hauing receiued theſe bleſſings from God, we doe attribute the praiſe and thankſgiuing vnto him alone, acknowledging whatſoeuer the meanes haue beene, that he is the chiefe and principall cauſe of all thoſe benefits which wee enioy, and that we haue receiued them from him without any our deſerts, of his free grace and vndeſerued goodneſſe. For except the Lord doe build the houſe, they labour in vaine that build it. Yea in vaine it is for vs to riſe early, and to lie downe late, and to eate the bread of ſorrow, for the compaſſing of theſe earthly things; ſeeing notwithſtanding all this paines, if Gods bleſſing bee not added, wee may end our dayes in want and beggerie. Let vs acknowledge him the ſoueraigne Lord of all, for the earth is his, and all that therein is, and hauing nothing to returne for all the benefits which wee hold of him, let vs at leaſt pay the tribute of praiſe and thankſgiuing, and expreſſe our thankfulnes in all holy obedience to his will. And this is that which God requireth of his people; When (ſaith he) thou haſt eaten and filled thy ſelfe, thou ſhalt bleſſe the Lord thy God, for the good land which he hath giuen thee. Whereas contrariwiſe if we forget the authour of our good, and as the Prophet ſpeaketh, ſacrifice to our owne nets, and burne increaſe to our yarne, aſcribing the praiſe of that we haue, to our owne wiſdome, induſtrie and labour, or elſe to any other inferiour meanes and ſecondarie cauſes, we ſhall robbe God of his glorie, and prouoking his wrath againſt vs, ſhall moue him in diſpleaſure, either to ſtrip vs of his benefits, or to leaue them vnto vs for our further iudgement and condemnation. And of this ſinne the Lord forewarneth his people: Beware (ſaith he) leſt thou ſay in thy heart, my power and the ſtrength of mine own hand, hath prepared mee this abundance. But remember the Lord thy God; for it is he that giueth thee power to get ſubſtance, &c.

that we muſt returne the praiſe of them vnto God.

*Pſal.*127.1.2.

*Pſal.*24.1.

*Deut.*8.10.

*Habac.*1.16.

*Hoſ.*2.8.9.

*Deut.*8:17,18.

§.*Sect.*10. That we ſanctifie them vnto our vſe by the word and prayer: and that we doe not ſet our hearts vpon them.

Secondly, being made partakers of theſe bleſſings, let vs labour to ſanctifie them to our vſe by the word and prayer, as the Apoſtle requireth. Of which I haue already ſpoken, intreating generally of the vſe of earthly things; and therefore to auoid prolixtie, I referre the reader to that place. Thirdly, to the lawfull poſſeſſion of riches, is required that wee doe not ſet our hearts and affections vpon them; but reſerue them, chiefly and principally for God and heauenly things; vſing theſe earthly riches as though wee vſed them not; and being contented to retaine them, (as the pilgrime doth his ſtaffe) ſo long as they further vs in our heauenly iourney, but deſpiſing and reiecting them, when they become hindrances and impediments. And this counſell the Pſalmiſt giueth vs; If riches (ſaith hee) in-

1.*Cor.*7.31.

Pſal.62.10.

1.Tim.6.17.

Ille qui non habet, non ambiat; is qui habet, non ſuperbiat. &c.
Aug in Pſal.61

Beda in gloſſ. ſuper Luc.12.

Aug.in Pſal. 131.Tom.8.

increaſe, ſet not your hearts vpon them: that is, doe not dote on them with fondneſſe of loue, affecting them aboue their worth and deſert, and preferring them before Gods heauenly and ſpirituall treaſures; nor put any truſt and confidence in them, as though they were ſufficient for preſeruation and protection, ſeeing they are not onely weake and impotent, but alſo incertaine and momentanie. And if wee onely giue them the keeping with this careleſſe regard, and intertaine them with ſuch cold affections, they cannot hurt vs; for not the poſſeſſion but the immoderate loue of them is condemned. To this purpoſe Auguſtine writing on thoſe words; If riches increaſe, ſet not your hearts on them, ſaith thus, Hee who hath not this riches, let him not couetouſly ſeeke them, he that hath them, let him not be proud of them: for the Pſalmiſt ſaith not, ſee yee haue not riches, but doe ſet your hearts on them. Hee doth not condemne riches, but the heart affixed to them, becauſe it is not willing to beſtow them but hoardeth and hideth them. And another writing vpon the twelfth of Luke, ſaith, that the rich man is not reprehended, becauſe hee tilled his ground, and gathered his fruits into his barnes, but becauſe he did place the confidence of his life vpon them, and diſtributed them not to the poore, that ſo he might haue beene receiued into eternall habitations. On the other ſide, it is poſſible that a man may offend in ſetting his heart vpon riches who neuer had them in his poſſeſſion, euen as he may contemne them that hath them in keeping. To which purpoſe one ſaith: Thou maiſt ſometime finde a rich man humble, who vſeth his riches, but putteth his whole confidence in God: and contrariwiſe, a begger puffed vp with pride, or therefore onely not proud, becauſe he hath nothing to be proud of, but yet ſeeking that which may ſwell him vp. Now God doth not regard the riches, but the deſire and affection, and iudgeth him according to his concupiſcence, whereby he greedily gapeth after temporall things, and not according to his riches which hee cannot compaſſe.

§. Sect. 12.
That we muſt be contented with our eſtate, and be willing to leaue our riches when God taketh them away.

1.Tim.6.8.

And if we doe not thus ſet our hearts and affections vpon our riches, then will diuers others things follow thereupon, which alſo are required to the lawfull poſſeſſion of them. As firſt, that we be contented with our eſtate, as being that portion which God allotteth vnto vs, and not repine againſt Gods prouidence, becauſe wee haue not a larger allowance. For hee that doth not too much affect them, will not too much bewaile their abſence, or bee diſcontent becauſe hee hath not abundance of that which hee doth not much regard; but as the Apoſtle ſaith, hauing food and raiment will therewith reſt contented. So alſo hauing abundance of riches, if wee doe not ſet our hearts vpon them, then will wee be content to leaue them, when as God the chiefe owner calleth againe for them; if we lightly eſteeme of them whileſt we haue them, then will we but ſlightly mourne for them when they leaue vs, neither ſhall they take away any thing from vs but themſelues, leauing contentment, ioy, and comfort which wee haue chiefly in God, behind them. And as we will not reiect them when we haue them, ſeeing they are the gifts of God, ſo when they take them to their wings, and flee away, wee will looke after them with a quiet mind, & a careles countenance. An example whereof we haue in Iob; who, becauſe hee reioyced not when his ſubſtance was great, and when his hand had gotten much; therefore hee did not much grieue when they were taken away, but in his greateſt loſſe praiſeth the Lord. As alſo in Paul, who, becauſe hee vſed this world as though he vſed it not, and eſteemed all the beſt things thereof but as dung & loſſe, in compariſon of Chriſt and his benefits, therfore with eaſe he tooke out that other leſſon; in what ſtate ſoeuer he was, therewith to be content. I can (ſaith he) be abaſed, and I can abound; euerie where in all things I am inſtructed, both to be full and to bee hungrie, and to abound, and to haue want. Which who ſo practiſe their riches are not onely lawfull vnto them, but alſo ſweete and comfortable; ſeeing they ſecurely inioy them without feare of loſing them. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that if worldly riches be wanting, we muſt not ſeeke them by euill meanes; if they be preſent, we muſt reſerue them by our good workes in heauen; neither ſhould they, though they abound, lift vp a manly and Chriſtian minde, nor breake and caſt it downe when they goe away. Finally, if we doe not too much affect them, we will not glorie in them when we haue them, nor bee much aſhamed when wee want them, neither will they, if wee eſteeme them as vncertaine and momentany trifles, make vs to bee high minded, or to put our truſt and confidence in them.

Iob 31.25. & cap.1.21.

1.Cor.7.31. Phil.3.8.

Phil.4.11.12.

Finally, wee lawfully poſſeſſe riches, when as wee keepe a vigilant watch ouer them, that they doe not by our abuſe degenerate from their owne nature, and become Satans baites to allure vs, nor his ſnares to intangle vs; nor his thornes to choake in vs the ſeed of Gods word, and to hinder the growth of Gods graces in vs; nor that cold water, wherewith he quencheth in vs our zeale of godlineſſe, and the good motions of Gods ſpirit. If then wee would haue our riches in the poſſeſſion good and lawfull, wee muſt carefully take heed that they doe not make vs turne backe, nor ſlacken our pace in the way of righteouſneſſe which leadeth to life euerlaſting, and that they be not tentations, which draw vs vnto ſinne and rebellion againſt God, by too much affecting them, truſting in them or being proud of them. But conſidering that they are part of that temporall wages which God freely giueth vs for our ſeruice, let this bountie make vs the more to loue our benefactour, and theſe rewards make vs more dutifull and obedient. And laſtly, we muſt not hold them in our poſſeſſion, as being Lords and abſolute owners of them; but as tenants at will, who haue them at the pleaſure of our great Land-lord, vnto whom wee muſt giue an account of them at the day of iudgement; and ſo ſhall wee not riotouſly miſſpend them vpon our owne luſts and pleaſures, nor imploy them as inſtruments to further vs in the courſe of ſinne: but carefully vſe them as Gods ſtewards for the glorie of our maſter, and for the good of our fellow-ſeruants, for whoſe ſake alſo wee haue receiued them.

Sect.13. the lawfull riches ſpect of

And ſo much concerning the lawfull poſſeſſion of riches. The laſt thing required to their lawfull vſe reſpecteth their adminiſtration and beſtowing; and this is, that they bee beſtowed vpon good, iuſt and charitable vſes, the which either reſpect our ſelues, who poſſeſſe them, or other men to whom they ought to be communicated. The vſe which reſpecteth the owners themſelues is, that they imploy their riches to the good, preſeruation, defence and comfort of themſelues, according to their perſon, eſtate and calling; and alſo of all others, who are committed to their charge and gouernment. And vnto this two things are required, firſt, parſimonie or thriftines, whereby we honeſtly ſpare our goods, and preſerue them from being waſtfully and riotouſly conſumed. Secondly, frugalitie, whereby wee honeſtly ſpend our well gotten goods ſoberly, and moderately vpon our own good and neceſſarie vſes, for our profit and honeſt delight. The former the Wiſeman perſwadeth vs vnto. Be diligent to know the ſtate of thy flocke, and take heed to thy heards, &c. The other in the words following: The lambes are for thy clothing, and the goats are the price of the field; and let the milke of thy goates bee ſufficient for thy food, and for the food of thy family. So he ſaith elſewhere, that there is nothing better than that a man ſhould reioyce in his affaires, becauſe that is his portion: and that it is good and comely to eate and to drinke, and to take pleaſure of all a mans labour, wherein he trauelleth vnder the ſunne, &c. For this is the gift of God. Here therefore two extreames are to bee auoided, the firſt is ſordidous tenacitie, the other is lauiſh profuſion and waſtfulneſſe. The former vice, as it is hurtfull to all others, ſo eſpecially to him that is corrupted with it, ſeeing like a theefe he robbeth himſelfe of the vſe of his owne goods, and as well wanteth that he hath, as that he hath not; but of this I ſhall haue occaſion to ſpeake hereafter. The other is the immoderate waſting of a mans goods; when as hee ſpends theſe bleſſings of God lauiſhly, and aboue his ability, whereby hee bringeth himſelfe to want and miſerie; or elſe luxuriouſly vpon carnall pleaſures, and all manner of voluptuouſneſſe, whereby he is made vnfit for Gods ſeruice, and ready for the perpetrating of any wickedneſſe. Both which are carefully to be auoyded, for as the one hath not that he hath, ſo the other will not haue it long, vnleſſe hee rake from others a new ſupply by vnlawfull meanes. In which reſpect, as the ſordidous perſon is a thiefe becauſe hee robbeth himſelfe; ſo the waſtfull ſpender is a thiefe, becauſe he robbeth other men, and one while is gripingly couetous, that hee may another while bee profuſely waſtfull. The vſes wherein our wealth is lawfully imploied reſpecting others, are either publicke or priuate. Publicke, when as we beſtow it for the good of the Church and Common-wealth. The vſes which concerne the good of the Church, are, that we beſtow our riches for the maintenance of the meanes of Gods publike ſeruice, as vpon thoſe who teach and inſtruct vs in the knowledge of Gods true religion; vpon the places of Gods worſhip, and all other neceſſaries belonging thereunto. And this God requireth, and incourageth vs to the performance thereof by his gracious promiſe. Honour the Lord with thy riches, and with the firſt fruits of thine increaſe: ſo ſhall thy barnes be filled with abundance, and thy preſſes ſhall burſt with new wine. An example whereof wee haue in the Iſraelites, who offered ſo bountifully towards the building of the Tabernacle and Temple, that they needed to bee reſtrained from bringing any more. So alſo our riches are lawfully vſed and imployed, when as they are beſtowed for the publick good of the Common-wealth; as in the maintaining of the royall eſtate of the King, by tributes and cuſtomes, in defending our Countrie in time of warre, in erecting of ſchooles and hoſpitals, and ſuch other publicke ſeruices, whereby the good of the Common-wealth is aduanced and furthered. To which purpoſes wee ſhould ſpare, not onely out of our ſuperfluities, but euen from our backes and bellies, when neede requires; ſeeing the common good is to bee preferred before our owne priuate, and our Countrie before our ſtates and liues, in that from it we haue had the meanes of our maintenance, yea our firſt breath, withall other worldly comforts.

Pro.3.9.10.

Exod.36.5.6.
1.Chron.29.9.

Mat.22.21.

Rom.13.6.7.

§. Sect.14. Riches are wel beſtowed when with them we re-

Laſtly, our goods and riches are lawfully vſed in reſpect of priuate perſons, when as they are beſtowed in relieuing the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt. For to this vſe wee haue leeue the poore.

haue receiued them of God, that we ſhould not miſſpend them in exceſſe, vanitie and riot; but that as Gods ſtewards, we ſhould imploy them to the honour of our maſter, and the good of our fellow-ſeruants. And this was figured vnto vs in the gathering of Manna, of which the Iſraelites hauing gathered ſome more, and ſome leſſe, did afterwards meaſure it with an Omer, and he that had gathered much, had nothing ouer, and hee that had gathered little, had no lacke: As the Apoſtle alſo applyeth it. And this is the cauſe why the Lord would haue the poore amongſt vs, who could (if it had ſo pleaſed him) haue made all rich, that as hereby he might exerciſe them in humilitie and patience, ſo alſo the rich in liberality and mercie, and accordingly might giue vnto either a crowne of glory at the day of iudgement. Of which reward they doe not onely depriue themſelues, who neglect to make this vſe of their riches, but alſo for neglecting the workes of mercie, and robbing their fellow-ſeruants of that portion which God hath allotted vnto them, endanger their bodies and ſoules to the eternal torments of hell fire. For (as one ſaith) Chriſt condemneth the rich men in the twelfth and ſixteeth of Luke, not becauſe they got their riches by wicked meanes, or beſtowed them vpon harlots, or to the perpetrating of murther or other wickedneſſe; but becauſe they gaue themſelues wholly ouer to pride and delicacie, neglecting the reliefe of Chriſts poore members.

*Exod.*16.17. 18.

2.*Cor.*8.14.15. *Pro.*31.20.

Baſil.orat. 14. de diuit. et pauper.

Origen. in Ezech.16.v.45.

Chap. V.

Of pleaſures, lawfull, ciuill, and carnall, which are to be deſired, and which to bee contemned and ſhunned.

§. Sect. 1. Of diuine pleaſures.

IN the laſt place wee are to adde ſomething of pleaſures, and to conſider how farre forth they are to be deſired, as lawfull and commendable, whereby alſo we may more eaſily diſcerne in what reſpects wee are to eſchew and contemne them. To which purpoſe wee are to know, that pleaſures are of three kinds: the firſt diuine and holy; the ſecond naturall and ciuill, the third carnall and wicked. Diuine pleaſure is, when as wee delight in the Lord, and reioyce in the fruition of his gifts and graces in this life, and in our aſſurance of thoſe heauenly ioyes in the life to come. And vnto this pleaſure as being not onely lawfull, but religious, holy, and very commendable, wee are in many places of the Scriptures exhorted. So the Apoſtle willeth him, that reioyceth to reioyce in the Lord. And in another place. Reioyce in the Lord alway, againe, I ſay reioyce. So as wee ought thus to reioyce, and to reioyce againe with a double ioy; yea, and not ſometime alone, but alwayes, and as hee ſaith elſewhere: we muſt reioyce continually, not onely when wee abound in worldly proſperitie, but euen in affliction: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, being iuſtified by faith, and hauing peace with God, we reioyce not onely vnder the hope of the glory of God, but alſo in tribulation. And thus Dauid comforted himſelfe in the Lord, when as the people were ready to ſtone him: and the Apoſtles reioyced, because they were counted worthy to ſuffer rebuke for Chriſt; and Paul and Silas when they were ſore whipped, and put into a cruell priſon.

1.Cor.1.31.

Phil.4.4.

1.Theſ.5.16.

Rom.5.1.2.

1.Sam.30.

Act.5.41.

Act.16.

§. Sect. 2. Diuine pleaſures are to be deſired.

And this is that principall ioy and pleaſure which euery Chriſtian ought chiefly to affect and deſire, as being moſt excellent ſweete and comfortable. Which, howſoeuer carnall men cannot rellish, but thinke it tedious and loathſome; yet, to thoſe that haue euer truly taſted of it, it is much more comfortable and delightfull than all worldly and wicked pleaſures. An example whereof wee haue in our Sauiour Chriſt, who accounted it meate and drinke to doe the will of his heauenly Father: and in his beloued Apoſtle, who profeſſeth, that hee had no greater ioy than this, that thoſe whom hee had begotten vnto God did walke in his truth. And holy Dauid calleth God his ioy, affirming that hee will be glad and reioyce in him and in his ſaluation, and mercie which hee extended to him. So that the ioy and pleaſure of a Chriſtian conuerted vnto God is not taken away, but onely changed, yea bettered in the change; as much as the Creator excelleth the creature; heauen, earth; and his ſpirituall graces and eternall excellencies, the momentanie and baſe trifles of the world. And therefore if our hearts were truly ſanctified, and wee but a little inured to theſe heauenly ioyes and pleaſures, wee would but a little eſteeme the ſinfull pleaſures of the fleſh, which now becauſe wee are carnally minded wee ſo much dote vpon.

Iohn 4.34.

Iohn epiſt.3. verſ.4.

Pſal.9.2.& 35.9.

Aug.in Pſal. 74.concio.

§. Sect. 3. Of naturall and ciuill pleaſures, that they … in their … nature g… but in re… of vs as in… different … ture, as th… are vſed.

The ſecond kinde of pleaſures are thoſe which are naturall and ciuill, when as wee ioy and reioyce in the fruition of Gods temporall and earthly bleſſings and benefits: the which pleaſure is in its owne nature good, but yet not abſolutely and immutably; and in reſpect of the vſe of an indifferent nature, good to the good, who haue a right vſe of it, and euill to thoſe who abuſe it vnto ſinne. Concerning the former; Naturall pleaſures which conſiſt in meates, drinkes, apparell, houſes, muſicke, recreations, and in the fruition of other Gods comfortable bleſſings and benefits, are to thoſe that vſe them well lawfull, good and commendable: Firſt, becauſe they are the gifts of God which hee hath purpoſely prouided for vs in the creation, and beſtoweth them vpon his ſeruants, as incouragements to moue them vnto more cheerefull obedience. For as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, he hath not only made bread to ſtrengthen mans heart, but alſo wine which maketh glad the heart of man, and oyle to make his face ſhine. He hath prouided for his children not only things neceſſarie and profitable, but alſo pleaſant and comfortable, ſeruing for their honeſt delight; as appeareth in the varietie of colours, ſmelles, taſtes, metals, ſtones, fruits, beaſts and birds: the lawfull and delightfull vſe whereof Gods children cannot refuſe without contempt, or at leaſt neglect of the Creators bounty. Againe, the Lord hath mixed theſe pleaſures with all our naturall actions, as eating, drinking, ſleeping, and the reſt, that wee might bee moued to doe thoſe things which are neceſſarie, becauſe they are alſo pleaſant and delightfull. And therefore wee are not to reiect and contemne pleaſures, ſeeing they are the bountifull gifts of God, but to imploy them ſo as that they may tend to the glory of him who gaue them, and to the furthering of our owne ſpirituall good; neither is their vſe, but their abuſe onely to bee taken away. To this purpoſe one ſaith that the matter of our pleaſures which we enioy are the gifts of God, as meates and drinkes, houſing and apparell, &c. and therefore let vs be aſhamed to turne Gods graces and free gifts into weapons of vice; for wee ſhall grieuouſly inflame the wrath of the ſupreame Iudge againſt vs, if with his own liberall gifts we fight againſt his bountie.

Secondly, theſe pleaſures well vſed are warranted and approued in the Scriptures: for ſo the Wiſe man ſaith, that there is a time to weepe, and a time to laugh, a time to mourne, and a time to dance; and that it is good and comely to eate and to drinke, and to take pleaſure in all a mans labours, &c. for this is his portion. Yea we are commanded to communicate with one another in our ioy, and to reioyce with them that reioyce: the which was accordingly practiſed by the Chriſtians in the Primitiue Church, who met together at their loue-feaſts, and did eate their meate together with gladneſſe, and ſingleneſſe of heart; and greatly deſired by the Pſalmiſt, namely, that hee might reioyce in the ioy of Gods people, and glory with his inheritance. And in truth this is not only ſauce for our meat which maketh it ſweet and comfortable, but the ſeaſoning of all other Gods temporall benefits, without which we haue little comfort of them. For what would it auaile vs to bee exalted to the ſeate of honour, or to abound with earthly riches if we ſhould take no delight or pleaſure in them? And this is the Wiſe mans concluſion; I know, ſaith he, that there is nothing good in them, but to reioyce and doe good in his life.

Eccleſ.3.12.

§.Sect.5.
Naturall and ciuill pleaſures ſerue to good ends and purpoſes.

Thirdly, theſe naturall and ciuill pleaſures which wee take in the fruition of Gods temporall bleſſings, doe ſerue to good ends and purpoſes; for they are the matter of Gods praiſes, and ſpeciall motiues to ſtirre vs vp with cheerefull hearts, to laud and magnifie his great and glorious name, when as hee not onely beſtoweth vpon vs things neceſſarie and profitable for the preſeruation of our liues, but alſo in his infinit bountie giueth vs to inioy things pleaſant and delightfull, whereby our liues are made ſweete and comfortable. Againe, this ioy and pleaſure is that precious oyle, wherewith being annointed, the countenance is made louely and pleaſant: for ſo the Wiſe man ſaith, that a ioyfull heart maketh a cheerefull countenance. It is a ſoueraigne balſome for a wounded ſoule, and a precious preſeruatiue to continue our health: for as the Wiſe man ſaith, A ioyfull heart cauſeth good health, but a ſorrowfull mind drieth the bones. Yea it is the life of our life, and a chiefe meanes of prolonging our dayes. In which reſpect the Sonne of Syrach exhorteth vs to deſire and affect it: Giue not ouer (ſaith he) thy minde to heauineſſe, and vex not thy ſelfe in thine owne counſell: the ioy of the heart is the life of man, and a mans gladneſſe is the prolonging of his dayes. Loue thine owne ſoule and comfort thine heart, driue ſorrow farre from thee, for ſorrow hath ſlaine many, and there is no profit therein. To which purpoſe another compareth a mans life which hath no pleaſures or delights, to a long iourney without Innes; in which there is much trauaile, and no comfort or refreſhing. Laſtly, theſe pleaſures fit and inable vs the better to ſerue God, both in the duties of religion, and in the workes of our ſpeciall callings: and that firſt as they are incouragements, which make vs performe theſe duties with alacritie and chearefulnes, not only in reſpect of the preſent fruition of theſe earthly pleaſures, as being the ſweeteſt rewards of our labours which this world affordeth, but as they ſerue to put vs in minde of thoſe eternall and vnconceiueable pleaſures and ioyes, which are reſerued for thoſe that ſerue and feare the Lord in his heauenly kingdome. And therefore hath the Lord giuen vnto vs theſe firſt fruites, and ſmall taſte of his euerlaſting ioyes in theſe temporall delights, to make vs long after thoſe fully-ſatisfying and neuer glutting pleaſures, and to thinke no labour too much for the obtaining of thoſe pure ioyes which are at his right hand for euermore: ſeeing euen theſe earthly pleaſures though momentany, and mixed with many miſeries

Prou.15.13. and 17.22.

Eccleſ.30.21. 22.23.

Democritus apud Stobaeum.

and much bitterneſſe by reaſon of ſinne, doe leaue neuertheleſſe ſuch a pleaſant relliſh behind them. Secondly, they inable vs to thoſe duties of Gods ſeruice, and of our callings, as they doe recreate and refreſh vs after our painfull labours. In which reſpect they are exceeding neceſſarie, ſeeing in regard of our frailtie and weaknes, it were impoſſible to trauaile in our Chriſtian courſe, vnleſſe we were ſtrengthned & cheared with theſe earthly baits. For our bodies would be tyred, and our minds made dull and ſluggiſh, if they ſtood alwayes bent; neither could wee long labour if our hearts were not cheared and our ſpirits refreſhed with this ſweet oyntment of pleaſure and delight.

§. Sect. 6. That vnto vs pleaſures are of an indifferent nature, holding their goodneſſe only when they are well vſed, vnto which is required that our perſons be iuſtified.

And thus haue I ſhewed that theſe naturall and ciuill pleaſures are in themſelues good and lawfull; yet, as I ſaid, they are not good abſoutely, immutablie, or in any high degree of perfection. But in reſpect of vs and of their vſe of an indifferent nature, holding their naturall goodneſſe when they are well vſed; and degenerating into euill, when as they are abuſed, as cauſes, meanes, or inſtruments of ſinne. And therefore in the next place we are to conſider, how theſe gifts of God which are good in themſelues, may alſo bee good vnto vs: vnto which is required, first that our perſons be iuſtified and reconciled vnto God by a true faith in Ieſus Chriſt. For as wee may obſerue in the Apoſtles order, true ioy and reioycing are the effects and fruits of our iuſtification and peace with God: without which as we haue no right or intereſt in theſe pleaſures, ſo are they altogether falſe and full of vanitie, like vnto the delights of a malefactor which hee hath betweene the time of his condemnation and execution, or vnto a faire way which bringeth him to the gallowes. As therefore Iehu ſaid to Ieboram, what peace can there be ſo long as the whoredomes of thy mother Ieſabel remaine? So may I ſay to the wicked man affecting pleaſures; what pleaſures can there be ſo long as thy ſinnes which oblige thee to eternall puniſhments remaine vnpardoned? But after we haue the remiſsion of ſinne, peace with God, and peace of conſcience, and in lieu of thankfulneſſe ſpend our ſtrength in his ſeruice, then is the time of deſiring theſe pleaſures, that we may the better thereby be inabled to theſe duties. Whereby it may appeare, that theſe pleaſures and delights are not onely lawfull to the godly and faithfull, but ſo appropriated and peculiar vnto them, as that they belong to none beſides them: & therfore the Pſalmiſt exhorting men to this ioy, doth direct his ſpeech onely to the faithfull: Bee glad (ſaith he) yee righteous, and reioyce in the Lord, and bee ioyfull all yee that are vpright in heart. And in the next Pſalme: Reioyce in the Lord, O ye righteous, for it becommeth vpright men to be thankefull.

Rom. 5. 1. 3.

.King. 9. 22.

Pſal 32. 11. and 33. 1.

§. Sect. 7. We must not ouerualue them, or immoderatly affect them.

Secondly, our pleaſures muſt bee moderately eſteemed and affected according to their owne nature and worth, and not preferred either in our judgements or deſires, either before our ſpirituall ioy in God, or the eternall ioyes of his kingdome; with which ioyes when they come in compariſon they are to be contemned, and to be loathed and reiected when as they will not ſtand together. So that if wee would haue theſe pleaſures lawfull, wee muſt neither ouerualue them in our iudgements, nor ſet our hearts and affections vpon them, which ought to bee reſerued for thoſe other ioyes of farre greater excellencie, but onely eſteeming and louing them, as the traueller doth the pleaſures of his Inne, and the pilgrime thoſe delights which hee paſſeth by in his way: and as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it, reioycing as though we reioyced not; let vs place our chiefe ioy in the Lord, and principally eſteeme and affect that fulnes of ioy which we ſhal haue in Gods preſence, and thoſe vnſpeakeable pleaſures, which are at his right hand for euermore.

1. Cor. 7. 30.

Pſalm. 16. 11.

§. Sect. 8. Our pleaſures themſelues muſt be moderate, and referred to lawfull ends first to Gods glory.

Thirdly, as we muſt moderate our affections, ſo our pleaſures themſelues muſt bee moderate: for being not abſolutely good, but as they are referred vnto and limitted by their ends: therefore when they exceed theſe iuſt bounds, they degenerate and become euill and vnlawfull. Now the chiefe and principall end of our pleaſures ought to be the glorie of God; when as we therfore vſe them not only that we may with all thankfulneſſe acknowledge his great bountie and goodneſſe towards vs, but alſo may bee the better inabled to ſerue him with all cheerefulneſſe in the duties of religion and Chriſtianitie. And therefore wee muſt take heed if wee would haue our pleaſures lawfull, that they further this end; and that they doe not take vp that time which is allotted vnto the ſeruice of God, nor yet be vſed in ſuch exceſſe and ſo immoderately, as ſhall make vs more vnfit for the performance of theſe holy duties. In which reſpect thoſe offend who prophane the Lords day which hee hath ſet apart for his ſeruice, by ſpending it about their owne pleaſures and recreations: as alſo they who ſo immoderatly vſe thoſe pleaſures of eating, drinking, exerciſe and the reſt, that they are more fit to ſleep, than to ſerue God in any dutie which he requireth.

Eſay 58. 13.

§. Sect. 9. Our pleaſures muſt be referred to the good both of our ſoules and bodies.

The other end of pleaſures is our owne good, when as they tend to the preſeruation of our health, and to the better fitting of vs for all good duties of our callings wherein this rule is to be obſerued, that we doe not ſo much addict our ſelues vnto them, as that by their immoderate vſe wee impaire the health of our ſoules, nor ſo much abſtaine from them, as that by vtter neglecting them, wee ouerthrow the health of our bodies. In which reſpect it is hard to determine of a juſt proportion, ſeeing the quantitie differeth according to the perſons, and the callings alſo wherein they are imployed. For ſome bodies require more pleaſure for the preſeruation of their health, and ſome leſſe: ſome callings are more painful, ſpending the ſpirits and conſuming the ſtrength, and ſome more eaſie and better indured. And therefore Chriſtian diſcretion is here required, that thereby pleaſures may be proportioned and fitted to the perſon and ſtate of him that vſeth them: and ſtill obſeruing theſe ends, wee are to take heed that wee doe not vnder pretence of vſing pleaſures for our health, abuſe them in exceſſe and ſurfet of theſe ſweet delights; ſeeing nothing more doth weaken our ſtrength, impaire our health, nor more ſpeedily bring deſperate diſeaſes and vntimely death, than the immoderate vſe of theſe pleaſures. As alſo wee muſt vſe the like care that we doe not by them make our ſelues more vnfit for the duties of our callings, by making our recreations our trades and occupations, ſpending both our time & ſtrength in them, whereas they ſhould only refreſh and fit vs for our lawfull labours, and neceſſarie buſineſſe.

Laſtly, if wee would haue our pleaſures lawfull vnto vs, let vs carefully watch ouer our ſelues in the vſe of them, that they be not vnto vs Sathans nets of perdition through our corruption, whereby he catcheth and intangleth vs in ſinne: neither is there any more vſuall or yet more dangerous baite wherewith he allureth vs vnto ſinne, than by offering vnto vs theſe pleaſing delicates of pleaſure and delight. And therefore wee muſt not with vnbridled affections ruſh vpon them, but before we giue them entertainment wee muſt againe and againe conſider, firſt, whether they be lawfull, and then how they may be lawfully vſed, carefully referring them to thoſe good ends for which they were ordained, and vſing them with moderation both in reſpect of our affections, and alſo of the things themſelues. But eſpecially we muſt take heed that we doe not fully reſt in theſe temporall and naturall pleaſures, as being our laſt end and chiefe happineſſe, affecting to haue but Paradiſe in this World; for ſo they will become the Deuils birdlime, in which when we haue wallowed, we ſhall not be able to mount aloft in heauenly meditations, and notable impediments to hinder vs from the fruition of thoſe euerlaſting joyes in Gods Kingdome: but we muſt only vſe them as helps and meanes to further and haſten our ſpeed in our ſpirituall race, and as reaſons and motiues to make vs affect that heauenly joy and pleaſure with more ardent loue: concluding with our ſelues, that if theſe earthly delights be ſo ſweet and comfortable, then how many, yea infinite degrees more excellent and admirable joyes ſhall we haue in Heauen, when wee ſhall haue the fruition of God himſelfe, and of all thoſe pleaſures which hee hath ptepared for his Saints, and that without the mixture of any miſery or affliction! And thus much concerning the ſecond kinde of pleaſures which are naturall and ciuill. The third and laſt kind are carnall and worldly pleaſures, as ſurfetting and drunkennes, chambering and wantonneſſe, luſt and vncleanneſſe, vnlawfull ſports and recreations: all which being in themſelues euill and wicked, are not onely to be contemned, but euen hated and abhorred of all Chriſtians.

CHAP. VI.

That we are exceeding prone to abuſe theſe earthly bleſſings, whereby they become the Deuils ſnares to intangle vs in ſinne.

§. Sect. 1. That through our corruption, wee abuſe Gods earthly bleſſings.

WEE haue ſhewed the goodneſſe of theſe earthly things in their owne nature; and alſo how they may be lawfully vſed of vs, ſo as they may be truly good and comfortable: from whence alſo wee may vnderſtand how they degenerate from their owne nature, and become euill; namely, when as they are abuſed by vs, the former cautions and conditions, concerning their getting, keeping, imploying and vſing, being neglected and not obſerued. Now we are to know, that through the corruption of our nature, wee are exceedingly prone to this abuſe; and whereas by theſe bleſſings of God, wee ſhould be made more thankfull, and more obedient, contrariwiſe, wee abuſing Gods gifts are vſually made by them more forgetfull of God, more cold and negligent in performing of all good duties, and more prone to fall into any manner of ſin, as both the Scriptures themſelues, and the experience of all Ages doe plainely manifeſt. All which commeth to paſſe for want of due care in obſeruing the former cautions which are required to their lawfull vſe, and eſpecially becauſe in our judgements wee ouer-value them, and in our hearts too much loue and affect them, preferring them before Gods ſpirituall graces, and heauenly excellencies, yea, louing and eſteeming the creature better than the Creatour; in regard whereof, men are ready to hazard the loſſe of theſe things, which are of infinite more value, by taking any wicked and vnconſcionable courſes, either for the getting or keeping of theſe earthly trifles, which they ſo much admire and affect.

By

§.Sect.2. That theſe earthly things through our abuſe, become the matter of many grieuous tentations. Mal.2.2.

By which meanes it commeth to paſſe, that theſe earthly bleſſings are turned into curſes; and through the malice of the Deuill, and our owne corruption, become the matter and occaſion of many dangerous tentations, as being the ordinary wages which Satan giueth Worldlings for ſeruing him in ſinne, and his common baites and allurements, whereby hee inticeth vs to offend God, wound our owne conſciences, and hazard the eternall ſaluation of our ſoules. For when hee ſeeth, that the ſinne whereto hee tempteth vs, is in it ſelfe vgly and odious vnto vs, either by the light of Nature, or of the Scriptures, whereby our vnderſtandings and judgements are illuminated in the knowledge of good and euill, then doth hee caſt ouer it one of theſe worldly vailes, and couering this deadly hooke of ſinne with one of theſe alluring baites, hee inticeth vs to ſwallow it, to our ruine and deſtruction. The which tentations are therefore the more dangerous, becauſe theſe things being in their owne nature good, are leſſe ſuſpected when they are vpon ſuch euill conditions thruſt vpon vs; and alſo becauſe they are of neceſſary vſe vnto vs, which ſpurre of neceſſitie pricketh vs forward to vſe any meanes lawfull or vnlawfull for the compaſſing of them, and doth ſerue as a pretence to excuſe our greedineſſe; and as a cloake and couer, vnder which by degrees immoderate exceſſe, and neuer ſatisfied voluptuouſneſſe doth creepe vpon vs. For whileſt we pretend, and perhaps intend to ſatisfie only our neceſſities, and to pay, as it were, our debt to Nature, Pride, Couetouſneſſe and Voluptuouſneſſe doe incroach vpon vs, drawing vs on to affect and deſire ſuperfluitie and exceſſe. As when we think to ſatisfie nature by meats and drinks, being allured with pleaſure, we offend through immoderation, and fall into thoſe odious ſinnes of gluttony and drunkenneſſe. When we goe about to prouide apparell to couer our nakedneſſe, and to preſerue vs from the injuries of the weather, pride creepeth in, & moueth vs to ſin either in ſome wanton faſhion, or in the exceſſiue coſtlines of the ſtuffe. When according to our dutie we thinke of vſing the meanes of attaining vnto a competencie of riches, for the mayntenance of our ſelues, and thoſe who are committed to our charge, couetouſneſſe incroacheth vpon vs, and fixing our hearts to this earthly Mammon, maketh vs to deſire ſuperfluities, and readie to vſe any meanes for the compaſſing of them. And thus whileſt wee open the doore of our hearts to giue entertainment vnto our friends, dangerous enemies attending on them, doe thruſt in vpon vs at vnawares, before wee haue any leiſure to thinke of keeping them out, and oppoſing againſt them. Which being entred doe keepe open the doore for the reſt of their company, and ſo ſtrengthen and backe one another with all their forces, that it is hard, yea, altogether impoſſible to diſpoſſeſſe and caſt them out, vnleſſe we be mightily aſſiſted by the Spirit of God. For deſire of honours bringeth in deſire of riches; and riches being entred, doe make way for voluptuouſneſſe. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that deſire of glory inflameth our hearts with the loue of riches; and for glories ſake doe men prouide troupes of ſeruants, ſtately horſes adorned with golden trappings and rich furniture and the like, not to ſatisfie neceſſitie, nor becauſe themſelues take any great delight in it, but that they may ſet out their pompe to the publike view. Howſoeuer, it cānot be denied, but that when any of theſe vices haue taken ſtrong poſſeſſion, there is often oppoſition betweene them, by which garboile wee haue as much trouble and moleſtation, as at firſt wee had danger when they entred into vs.

Crebrò occaſione ſeductionis inuenta dum neceſſitati debita reddimus, voluptatis vitio deſeruimus. Greg. Moral. lib.20. cap.15.

Chryſoſt. in Matth. 21. tom. 102.

§.Sect.3. That Sata[n] [v]ſually [...] theſe earth[ly] things to [...] as baits to [...] lure vs [...] ſinne. Gen.3.

In regard of which their power & potencie in preuailing with vs, Satan doth moſt vſually imploy their ſtrength to make a way and entrance for his tentations, ſetting before vs the booty either of honours, riches and pleaſures, when hee intendeth to draw vs into his ſecret ambuſhments and ſnares of ſinne. And thus he began with our firſt parents, alluring them to breake the Commandement of God in eating of the forbidden fruit; becauſe it was pleaſant to the eye, profitable for the gaining of knowledge, and would aduance them vnto ſuch a glorious eſtate, that they ſhould bee equall with God himſelfe. And with the ſame alluring baites hath he intangled and inſnared all their poſteritie, as the experience of all times hath ſhewed; in ſo much, as when he was to encounter our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe, hee maketh choice of theſe, as of his moſt forcible and preuailing weapons; inticing him to vſe vnlawfull meanes to pleaſe his taſte, and ſatisfie his appetite, to get a name, and obtaine the riches and glory of the World. The which, howſoeuer they could not pierce or wound him; in regard that he was defended with armour of proofe, his perfect puritie, and abſolute righteouſneſſe; yet hee hath much preuailed with them againſt all others, ſo as not any hath eſcaped vnwounded, and without foile out of the conflict, but whileſt they haue laboured to defend themſelues from the force and violence of one, they haue runne vpon the point of another, and haue expoſed themſelues vnto danger, euen whileſt they thought of auoyding and eſcaping it. But as Satan hath alwayes herewith much preuailed, ſo neuer more than in theſe dayes; in which almoſt all men are ſo bewitched with the loue of theſe earthly things, that they are ready to yeeld vnto any tentation, to neglect any dutie to God or man, and to commit any ſin, ſo as they may attaine vnto their worldly ends; and compaſſe theſe earthly vanities which they ſo much dote vpon. Neither hath this poyſon only infected profeſſed Worldlings, who greedily drink it vp with loue & admiration; but euen the Profeſſors of Gods true religion, who haue proclaimed their defiance againſt worldly vanities, are ſo tainted & corrupted with their contagion, that they grow ſtiffe & benummed in performance of Chriſtian duties; & ready to wound their conſciences with ſin, when as theſe pleaſing orators perſwade thē hereunto.

But how dangerous and pernicious theſe triple forces are, when they are vnited and conjoyned, it may eaſily appeare if we conſider of their perillous ſtrength being ſingled the one from the other. For firſt, how manifold and dangerous are the tentations into which honours plunge men, when as they ouerualue, and immoderately affect them; making them to forget all duties which belong vnto God, and to neglect all good offices naturall, ciuill, and religious which they owe vnto men, without all reſpect of acquaintance, friendſhip and kindred, yea, of fidelitie and common honeſtie, ſo they may aſpire to their proud hopes, and compaſſe their ambitious ends; not caring whom they tread vnder foot, ſo they make their falls ſteps, whereby themſelues may riſe. Neither doe theſe tentations onely take hold of worldlings and wicked men, but euen of the deare Seruants of God, as we may ſee in the example of the Diſciples ſtriuing for ſuperioritie, and contending one with another, who ſhould be greateſt, and haue the higheſt place in Gods Kingdome. In a word, ſo great is the force of this tentation; that (as one ſaith) no man can ſufficiently diſcerne the ſtrength of this enemie, but hee who hath proclaimed warre againſt it: for howſoeuer it may ſeeme more eaſie vnto any to want this honour and prayſe when it is denied, yet it is moſt hard, not to be too much delighted with it, when it is offered him.

The like alſo may be ſaid of riches, which through our corruption, are the ground of many dangerous tentations, both in reſpect of their getting, keeping and beſtowing; for, as the Apoſtle ſaith, they that will be rich, fall into tentations and ſnares, and into many fooliſh and noyſome luſts, which drowne men in perdition and deſtruction: for the deſire of money is the root of all euill. And moſt hard it is to abound with them, and not to abuſe them vnto ſin, for want of obſeruing the former cautions which are required to their lawfull vſe; to which purpoſe one ſaith, it is a matter of as great difficulty to abound with riches, and not at any time abuſe them, as to flote vpon the waters and not to be ducked. In reſpect whereof they are likened vnto thorns, which vnleſſe a man hold very warily, he is ſure to be pricked: and to a Serpent, which whoſo holdeth vnskilfully, it will winde about his hand, and bite him. In regard of which danger through our corruption, the Scripture ſpeaking of them doth commonly adde ſome Epithete which may weane our hearts and affections from them, in reſpect of immoderate loue; as, the [a] deceitfulneſſe of riches, [b] riches of this World, the Mammon of iniquitie and ſuch like; and giueth vs many admonitions, that wee ſhould neither ouer-greedily deſire them, nor when wee haue them ſet our hearts vpon them. All which notwithſtanding the moſt men, both Worldlings, and Profeſſors of Religion, are choaked with theſe thornes, and intangled with theſe ſnares, being mooued with theſe baits to do many things againſt their knowledge and conſcience, either for the getting or keeping of them. In which reſpect Auguſtine deſcribeth riches thus: That they are a coſtly danger, to thoſe who poſſeſſe them; an euil maſter, and a treacherous ſeruant; birdlime vnto our ſpirituall wings, Fathers of flatterie, Sons of grief and care; a cauſe of feare to thoſe that haue them, & of grief to thoſe that want them.

[a] *Matth.*13.22

[b] 1.*Tim.*6.17. Luke 16.9.

§. Sect.6.

That tentations, grounded vpon pleaſures, are very dangerous.

Neither are thoſe tentations which are grounded vpon pleaſures leſſe dangerous, they being commonly made through our abuſe, ſweet poyſons which kill with delight, and pleaſant ſongs which lull vs aſleepe in the cradle of ſecuritie to our perdition and deſtruction. For when a man is glutted with them, how exceedingly doth he forget himſelfe and all good duties? and how prone and head-long is hee vnto all vice and wickedneſſe? there being nothing ſo bad which hee doth not thinke well beſeemes him, when his vnderſtanding is diſtraughted with this merry madneſſe, nothing ſo fooliſh and ridiculous at which he bluſheth and is aſhamed. But if wee would take a liuely view of thoſe who abound in worldly pleaſures, & ſee vnto what lewd licentiouſnes they bring all thoſe who are glutted with them; let vs conſider of that notable deſcription of the houſe of pleaſure, which by one no leſſe wittily than truly is thus deciphered: The hall (ſaith he) of pleaſure gloriouſly gliſtered with kingly ſuperfluitie, or ſumptuous furniture, and with curious ingrauen walls, and the flowre did ſwimme with wine; the ground ſmelled ſweetly of odoriferous oyntments couered with the bones of dainty fiſhes, and ſlippery with flowers, now ready to wither. There was a tumult of boone Companions, a clamorous noyſe of Wranglers, the ſlaughter of needleſſe Contenders and Brablers. Muſicall mirth and harmony of thoſe that ſupped together, the noyſe of Dancers; lowd laughter of thoſe which were madly merry, ſhouting and clapping hands of licentious Wantons, all things confuſed and nothing in naturall order. There was to bee ſeene women Dancers ſhorne and polled, youthes with their long lockes curiouſ-

*Eccleſ.*2.2.

Ambroſ. de Cain & Abel, lib.1.cap.4.

ly curled; cruditie of Feaſters, vnſauourie belching of Gluttons, inſatiable thirſt of Drunkards, yeſterdayes ſurfet, to dayes drunkenneſſe, the pots emptied of their drink, and againe filled with the filthy vomiting of the Drinkers, their drunkenneſſe caſting forth a greater ſent, than did their Wines, when they were newly preſſed. Pleaſure her ſelfe ſtanding in the middle of the rout, cried out, ſaying; Drinke yee your fill, euen till you bee drunke; and let euery one of you fall downe, and neuer ariſe. He is chiefe with me, who is moſt deſperately wicked; he is mine, who is not his owne; he is moſt gracious to me, who is moſt wicked and pernicious to himſelfe. The golden Cup of the Whore of Babylon is in mine hand, which maketh drunke the whole earth, with my Wine haue all the Nations ſurfetted. He that is vnwiſe, let him turne vnto me, and him that lacketh wiſdome doe I command, ſaying; Eat ſauourly your hidden bread, and drinke your waters, which are ſweeter becauſe they are ſtolne; let vs eate and drinke, for to morrow we ſhall die. Our life paſſeth and vaniſheth like a cloude. Come let vs enjoy our knowne good, and vſe the creatures quickly as in the time of youth. Let vs glut our ſelues with precious Wines and Oyntments, and let not the power of our dayes vnpleaſantly paſſe away. Let vs crowne our ſelues with Roſes before they wither; let there be no pleaſant Medow which our luxurienſneſſe doth not paſſe ouer, and let vs leaue euery where ſignes of ioy and mirth. For all theſe are left behind vs, and no man ſhall carrie any thing with him, but that which he hath imparted vnto himſelfe in theſe pleaſures of the fleſh. Finally, I am the Miſtreſſe of true Philoſophie, neither is there any to this, which teacheth that to be good, which is ſweet and pleaſant.

Ier.51.

Eſay 22.

Wiſd.2.

§. Sect.7.
In what reſpects theſe earthly things are to be deſired, and in what reſpects to be contemned.

And thus haue I briefly ſhewed how dangerous theſe earthly things are vnto vs, ſeeing they are the grounds & occaſions of Satans tentations wherby he allureth & perſwadeth vs vnto ſin: not (as I haue proued) in their own nature, but as they are abuſed through the Deuils malice and our corruption, whereby it commeth to paſſe that wee neglect thoſe cautions required to their lawfull vſe, of which I haue before ſpoken. So that in a word, if wee would know how theſe things are to be deſired, and in what reſpects they are to be contemned and deſpiſed; wee are to affect them, when in their lawfull vſe they tend to the ſetting forth of Gods glory, the good of his Church, and the furthering and aſſuring of our owne ſaluation. And contrariwiſe we are to contemne them, when as being abuſed by Sathan and our corruption they become tentations, prouocations, and inſtruments of ſinne, and conſequently notable impediments to hinder our ſaluation. To which purpoſes when they ſerue, and offer themſelues vnto vs vpon theſe wicked and vnequall conditions; we are not only to deſpiſe and reject them, but alſo to hate and abhorre them, as being the Deuils Sollicitors, who by perſwading vs vnto ſinne, cozen and deceiue vs, firſt of Gods loue and fauour, and then of the eternall ſaluation of our ſoules.

§. Sect Theſe ea things are chiefly a when we Idols of th

Now as they are thus abuſed when the former conditions are neglected; ſo eſpecially when as wee make Idols of them and impart vnto them diuine worſhip; more eſteeming them in our mindes, and affecting them in our hearts, and more ſpeedily and earneſtly ſeeking them in our practice and all our endeuours, than the fauour of God, his ſpirituall graces, or the eternall joyes of his Kingdome. Which Idolatrie worldly men vſually commit, & in this reſpect theſe earthly things honours, riches, and pleaſures, are ſaid to bee the Worldlings Trinitie, which they ſerue and worſhip in the place of God. And hence alſo it is that the Apoſtle Paul calleth couetous men Idolaters, and couetouſnes Idolatry: and the Apoſtle Iames tearmeth worldlings adulterers and adultereſſes, becauſe they erect theſe Idols in their hearts, and leauing our true Husband Ieſus Chriſt, commit ſpirituall whoredome with theſe earthly vanities. And thus the ambitious Worldling offendeth, who preferreth his owne honour before the glory of God; and more greedily ſeeketh the prayſe of the creature than of the Creatour, and the vaine glory of the World, before the eternall glory of Gods Kingdome. An example whereof we haue in the Iewes, who receiued honour one of another, and did not ſeek the honour which commeth of God alone. And in the Rulers, who would not profeſſe their faith in Chriſt, becauſe they loued the prayſe of men more than the prayſe of God. With which corruption old Elie was ſomewhat tainted, who honoured his ſonnes more than God, and choſe rather to pleaſe them, than to pleaſe his Creatour. And thus doe couetous Worldlings offend, who more eſteeme their Gold than their God, and more affect earthly riches, than the ſpirituall treaſures of Gods graces, and glory in his Kingdome; ſpending more time, and taking more paines to attaine vnto worldly abundance, than for the aſſurance of their owne ſaluation. And ſuch an one was Iudas, who ſold Chriſt himſelfe for money, and made more account of his Idoll than of our Sauiour; and Demas, who when the profeſſion of Religion, and poſſeſſion of his earthly wealth would not be reconciled, forſooke that, and embraced the World. Contrary vnto which examples, was the affection & practice of the Prophet Dauid, who loued Gods Word and Commandements aboue Gold, yea, much fine Gold, and eſteemed them ſweeter than the honey and the honey combe. Finally, in the ſame

Epheſ.5.5.
Col.3.5.
Iam.4.4.

Iohn 5.4

Iohn 12.4

1.Sam.2

2.Tim.4

Pſal.19
119.12

ſame kind voluptuous Worldlings doe commit this groſſe Idolatry, which as the Apoſtle ſaith, are louers of their pleaſures more than louers of God, and as hee affirmeth in another place, make a god of their owne bellies; taking more care and paines to pleaſe their appetite, than to pleaſe their maker, and preferring a daintie diſh or ſome vain ſport, before a good conſcience, and the euerlaſting joyes of Gods Kingdom. Wherein what doe theſe Worldlings elſe but like fooliſh Eſau ſell their birth-right for a meſſe of pottage; like the ſeruile Iſraelites prefer the thraldom of Egypt before the libertie of the ſonnes of God, and the Onyons and fleſh-pots before their aſſured hopes of free plentie in the land that flowed with milke and honey? What do they elſe but like fooliſh children eſteeme ſhining braſſe before pure gold, and their toying trifles wherewith they make themſelues ſport, before their patrimonie and inheritance? The which their folly and vanitie though they cannot now ſee, yet hereafter they ſhal both know it, and with griefe confeſſe it; when as theſe earthly vanities being ready to leaue them, they ſhal alſo be abandoned of better hopes; & being neither able to retaine theſe, which their owne doting fondneſſe onely maketh eſteemable, nor to obtaine the joyes of Gods heauenly Kingdome, which alone are truly excellent, hauing by ſinne, neglect and contempt, often made forfeiture of them for the obtayning of the other, they ſhall end their dayes in griefe and miſery. To this purpoſe one demandeth; What (ſaith he) ſeemeth delightfull vnto thee, of the things appertayning to this preſent life? is it not a table daintily furniſhed, health of body, glory and riches? but if thou compareſt theſe worldly ſweets, with the pleaſure of a good conſcience, they will ſeeme bitter. And if you will learne this, let vs inquire of one ready to depart this life, or decrepit with old age, and putting him in mind of his worldly vanities, with which in time paſt he was delighted, and on the other ſide, of all thoſe good workes, and fruits of pietie, which hee hath euer brought forth in his whole life; and then aske him in which now he doth moſt rejoyce; we ſhall find that he will be confounded with ſhame to thinke of thoſe, and exceedingly rejoyce, when he calleth theſe to his remembrance. So Ezechias being ſicke, doth not comfort himſelfe by calling to minde his former glory, kingly ſoueraigntie, pleaſures and delights, but his ſeruing of God in integritie and vprightnes of heart, &c. for as for thoſe things, wee leaue them behind vs, whereas wee carry theſe with vs into our owne Country; they increaſe our account which wee muſt giue, when we are called to a reckoning, but theſe augment our glory, and, as it were, adde waight to our crowne of happineſſe.

§. Sect.9. That it becommeth Chriſtians to contemne theſe earthly vanities, and to affect heauenly excellencies

Let vs therefore, who haue giuen our names to Chriſt, & haue in the Sacrament of Baptiſme, ſworne our ſelues his ſouldiers, and profeſſed, that wee will withſtand and fight againſt theſe worldly vanities, make good this our oath and promiſe, not adhering with our hearts & affections vnto theſe earthly things, but let vs, as our Sauiour exhorteth vs, firſt ſeek the Kingdom of God & his righteouſneſſe; and as the Apoſtle perſwadeth vs; let vs, being riſen with Chriſt, ſeeke thoſe things which are aboue, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God, ſetting our affections on things which are aboue and not on things which are on the earth. Let our conuerſation be in Heauen, which is our owne Country, and there let vs lay vp our chiefe treaſures, where they are exempted from all danger. Let vs vſe this world and worldly things, as though we vſed them not, neither in our judgements eſteeming, nor in our hearts affecting, nor in our practice ſeeking them before Gods ſpirituall graces, and the eternal joyes of his Kingdome; but let vs loath & contemne them, when they come in this compariſon with them. Let not this earthly burthen of the fleſh keep downe our ſoule and ſpirituall part, from hauing their chiefe reſidence in thoſe heauenly habitations: for (as one ſaith) God gaue vnto vs an earthly bodie, that wee ſhould carry it into Heauen, and not that by it, the ſoule ſhould be drawne and fixed to the earth. It is now earthly, but if we will, we may make it heauenly. Let vs not be like thoſe vncleane fiſhes without fins forbidden in the Law, which continually lie tumbling and wallowing in the mud; but vnto thoſe which hauing finnes doe ſwimme aloft vpon the waters: and as they, though they bee not able to flie towardes Heauen, yet often indeuour themſelues to leape aboue the waters; ſo although we are preſſed downe with theſe bodies of fleſh, yet let vs mount aloft in our ſoules by heauenly meditations, and not ſuffer them continually to lie groueling vpon the earth, without any deſire or indeuour of injoying that freer aire of ſpirituall contemplation. And this (as one ſaith) is the reaſon why the Lord hath giuen vnto vs a ſtraight and vpright bodie; whereas contrariwiſe the beaſts haue a body groueling towards the earth, that he might thereby teach vs to haue no commerce or communitie with the earth, and the fading vanities thereof, but might with our eyes alſo lift vp our hearts toward Heauen, in diuine and ſpirituall meditations. In the time of our infancie, and ſpirituall nonage, wee haue for want of knowledge fooliſhly affected theſe tranſitory trifles; but now being better inſtructed, and hauing better knowledge of them, let vs learne to contemne them. For (as one ſaith) this ſweetneſſe is deceitfull, this labour vnfruitfull, the feare continuall, and

*Matth.*6.33.
*Col.*3.1,2.

*Phil.*3.20.
*Matth.*6.19,20

1.*Cor.*7.31.

Corpus de terra nobis Deus contulit vt ipſum & in cœlum reueheremus, non vt animam per ipſum ad terrã detraheremus, &c. Chryſoſt. Homil. ad pop. 55 Tom.4.

*Leuit.*11.

*Chryſoſt. de prouident. orat.*1.

Auguſt. ad Largum. Epiſt. 89. Tom.2.

our exaltation dangerous. The beginning without wiſedome, and the end with repentance. And this is the condition of all things in this wofull ſtate of mortalitie, which are more greedily, than wiſely, affected and deſired. It well becommeth children to dote vpon trifles, their want of wit ſeruing for their excuſe; but if when they are come to age, and haue knowledge of better things, they are ſtill fond of theſe fooleries, and ride vpon ſtickes, or ſit playing in the duſt, they ſeeme to all abſurd and ridiculous: and ſo although our infancie in knowledge might excuſe vs, and make our former fondneſſe in affecting childiſh vanities ſeeme more tolerable; yet if now hauing attained to riper yeares, and more knowledge, both of their vilitie and baſeneſſe, and of the excellencie of Gods ſpirituall graces, and eternall ioyes, wee will ſtill dote vpon them, and preferre them either in our iudgement, affection, or practiſe before the other, our folly is ſo much greater than theirs, as the things which wee neglect to obtaine theſe trifles, doe excell thoſe things in worth and excellencie, which worldly men doe thinke eſtimable. Whileſt we looke vpon theſe things alone, and vncompared, wee may thinke them of ſome worth, and ſuch as may deſerue our loue in affecting them, and our labour in ſeeking them; but if euer we had taſted of theſe ſpirituall and heauenly dainties, wee would in compariſon of them, loath the other, eſteeming them with the Apoſtle no better than dung and loſſe, in reſpect of Chriſt, and the rich treaſures of his benefits. And as thoſe who hauing walked in the bright Sun-ſhine, can ſee nothing when they come into darke places; ſo if with the Apoſtle, wee had euer ſeene the glorious brightneſſe of the heauenly ioyes, wee ſhould neuer be ſo cleere-ſighted in beholding theſe earthly vanities; but hauing the eyes of our minds dazeled with the former beauty, wee would looke ouer theſe contemptible trifles without reſpect. If wee could ſhare our heart and affections betweene God and the World; haue one foot in Heauen, and the other fixed vpon the earth; lift one eie vp to thoſe heauenly excellencies, and caſt the other downe vpon theſe earthly vanities; finally, if we could haue both the honour of the world, and the glory of Gods Kingdome; theſe temporary riches, & thoſe eternall treaſures; the pleaſures of the fleſh, and the ioyes of Heauen, there were ſome reaſon why wee ſhould eſteeme, affect, and ſeeke both, although with no equality, ſeeing there is ſuch diſproportion betweene the things deſired. But the Lord hath plainly told vs, that wee cannot ſerue him and Mammon too, that wee cannot bee in amitie with the World, but we muſt be at enmity with him; and that thoſe who wil be partakers of thoſe heauenly excellencies, muſt at leaſt in their heart and affection, forſake and renounce theſe earthly vanities, being alwayes readie to leaue all, and follow Chriſt. And therefore if we would be partakers of that eternall bleſſedneſſe, let vs not thinke that wee may purſue both with equall affection; much leſſe preferre theſe tranſitory trifles before thoſe heauenly ioyes, and euerlaſting treaſures; but counting this one thing neceſſary, euen the glorifying of God, in the ſaluation of our ſoules, and the fruition of thoſe pleaſures, which are at his right hand for euermore; let vs not only baſely eſteeme theſe earthly vanities, when they come in compariſon with the other; but alſo hate, reject and contemne them, when they become the Deuils tentations to intice vs vnto ſinne, and conſequently impediments to hinder vs, in ſeeking and obtayning this heauenly happineſſe.

Phil.3.8.

2.Cor.12.

Math.6.24.
Iames 4.4.
1.John 2.15.

Chap. VII.

Of the ſignes whereby we may know whether we be infected with the loue of the World.

TO which purpoſe ſhall the following diſcourſe chiefly tend; namely, to perſwade all Chriſtians to contemne theſe worldly vanities, when as either they are baits to allure vs vnto ſinne, or doe weane our hearts from the loue of God, heauen and heauenly things, by inueigling our affection, and enticing vs to loue and ſet our hearts more vpon them, than vpon thoſe inualuable iewels, and moſt rich treaſures. In which argument that I may proceed with more profit and perſpicuitie; and may more effectually cure this running canker, and contagious plague of worldly loue, which hath moſt perniciouſly ſpread it ſelfe abroad, and infected almoſt all men, not onely prophane Worldlings, but euen thoſe who would be eſteemed ſincere Profeſſours, and ſound Chriſtians; I will follow the Phyſicians methode, & firſt ſet downe the ſymptomes and ſignes of this diſeaſe, and then afterwards the remedies, that ſo we may know whether we be tainted with this contagion, and if we be, then how to cure it. The ſignes whereby we may know whether we be infected with the loue of the World and worldly vanities, preferring them before ſpirituall and heauenly excellencies are diuers. Firſt, thoſe things which we moſt eſteeme & loue, on thoſe we moſt often thinke, and that with vnwearied delight and chiefeſt comfort: for as our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, where as the treaſure is, there will the heart be alſo. And thus doth the exile take his chiefe delight & comfort, in thinking of his owne Country; the louer of his beloued; the ambitious man of his honours and preferments; the couetous man

§. Sect. 1.
The firſt ſi is to think theſe earth vanities wi greateſt ple ſure and vn wearied de light.

Math.6.

of his riches; the voluptuous man of his pleaſures and delights; reuoluing in their minds, either how they may obtaine, retaine, or augment and increaſe them. And contrariwiſe thoſe who moſt eſteeme and affect heauen, and heauenly things, they take their chiefe delight in meditating, of thoſe vnſpeakeable ioyes reſerued for them in their Countrie, or of the meanes whereby they may bee aſſured to attaine vnto them. Let therefore euery man examine himſelfe before the tribunall ſeate of God, and call his owne conſcience to witneſſe, whether he thinke more, and with greater ioy and comfort vpon God, or vpon the world, heauen or earth, thoſe eternall ioyes, or theſe momentanie vanities. For if God and heauenly things, be the chiefe obiect of our meditations, then doe we eſteeme them our chiefe treaſures, ſeeing our hearts, and affections are ſet vpon them. But contrariwiſe, if it be our chiefe comfort and delight, to thinke on the world and worldly vanities, and if our meditations doe continually runne on them without wearineſſe, taking no pleaſure at all to call to mind thoſe ſpirituall treaſures, and heauenly excellencies; or if we chance to thinke of them, this thought be as ſuddenly vaniſhed, as a flaſh of lightning; it is a moſt manifeſt ſigne, that our treaſures are not in heauen, but vpon the earth, that we loue the world better than God, and more eſteeme of theſe tranſitorie trifles, than of that eternall happineſſe in Gods Kingdome.

Secondly, that which a man beſt loueth, of that hee moſt talketh and ſpeaketh, with greateſt comfort, and vnwaried delight; either commending, or admiring it, or finally conferring of the meanes wherby he may compaſſe and inioy it; for as our Sauiour teacheth vs, out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth ſpeaketh. And the tongue is the interpreter of the minde; and conſequently by the tongues language, we may eaſily gueſſe at the hearts meaning. As therefore the doore-keeper ſaid vnto Peter, thou art ſurely of Galilee, for thy ſpeech bewraieth thee: ſo when man taketh his whole delight in worldly and carnall communication, wee may conclude, that he is a citizen of the world, becauſe his ſpeech bewraieth him. For as when the clocke within is diſordered, and the wheeles out of frame, the hammer and bell muſt needs giue a falſe ſound: ſo when our hearts are inwardly diſordered and corrupted with worldlineſſe and prophanenes, our ſpeech outwardly accordeth with them. So the Apoſtle Iohn ſaith, that becauſe they are worldlings, therefore ſpeake they of the world, and the world, heareth them. Thus as the Prophet Eſay telleth vs, the niggard will talke of niggardneſſe; and thus the ambitious man taketh his chiefe delight to ſpeake of his honours and preferments; the couetous man of riches, the voluptuous man of his pleaſures and delights. In a word, whoſoeuer hath his minde chiefly delighted with the worlds muſick, hee hath his tongue alſo tuned to the ſame key; and taketh his ioy and comfort in ſpeaking of nothing, but of the world, and worldly vanities. But on the other ſide, when once our minds are weaned from the world, and when we haue laid vp our chiefe treaſures in heauen; when we eſteeme God our ſoules ſole and chiefe delight, and with the Prophet Dauid account the Lord our glory and reioycing; when our chiefe comfort is in that aſſurance which we haue of our heauenly inheritance, and of the eternall ioyes of Gods Kingdome; then doe wee take our chiefe ioy and comfort, in talking and conferring of ſuch matters as concerne the ſauing knowledge of God; then doe heauenly diſcourſes repleniſh our heart with delight, and then is it our chiefe comfort and contentment, to ſpeake of the excellencie and riches of our bleſſed patrimonie reſerued for vs, or of the meanes how wee may further be aſſured that we ſhall inherit and enioy it. Let therfore our tongues be the touchſtone of our hearts, wherby we may eaſily diſcerne whether they bee of heauenly mettall or of earthly droſſe. And let vs examine our owne conſciences, whether we take our chiefe delight and comfort in ſpeaking of theſe heauenly things, and deſire to frequent their company moſt, who vſually intertaine vs with ſuch diuine diſcourſes; and whether in hearing and talking of them, we be not glutted with ſacietie, but rather affected with cheerefull alacritie, and tickled with inward ioy. And if wee finde that wee can abide this triall wee may be aſſured to our comfort, that the Lord is our chiefe loue and delight, and that our treaſures are not on earth, but in our heauenly countrie the kingdome of God. But if wee finde our ſelues vnacquainted with this language of Canaan, and take no more delight to heare it, than ſome vnknowne ſpeech: If after a word or two ſpoken of theſe ſpirituall and heauenly excellencies, wee are ſtraight glutted with loathing ſatietie, and offer occaſion of ſome other talke; it plainly diſcouereth our inward corruption, and euidently ſheweth, that our hearts and affections are not ſet vpon God, and the riches of his kingdome, but doe chiefly eſteeme, and moſt feruently loue, the things of this life, the world, and worldly vanities.

Pſalm.3.3. and 62,7.

Sermo eſt imago animi; qualis eſt vir, talis oratio.

§. Sect. 3.
In what ſenſe our much thinking and ſpeaking of worldly things are ſignes of

But heere ſome may obiect, that if much thinking and ſpeaking of the things of this world, bee infallible ſignes, that wee loue them more than God, and the ioyes of his kingdome, then who can be aquitted of this corruption, ſeeing the vſuall matter of meditation, and the moſt ordinarie theame whereon all men diſcourſe, are their earthly affaires, and the things of this life? To which I anſwere, that whileſt we remaine heere, wee are more fleſh than ſpirit; and therefore it is no maruell if our diſcourſes be for the moſt part worldly and carnall; but yet wee muſt take heede that wee doe not pleaſe our ſelues in our corruptions, but labour to mortifie and ſubdue them, and to accuſtome and inure our hearts and tongues, to meditate and talke of ſpirituall and heauenly matters, as being of chiefeſt worth and excellencie. And if wee thus doe, then can wee not bee ſaid to loue the world more than God, although wee talke more of it: for not ſimplie to thinke and ſpeake more of theſe things, doth ſhew that we loue and affect them more, but to thinke and ſpeake of them with greateſt delight and chiefeſt comfort. For ſeeing the obiects both of our meditations and ſpeeches, are offered vnto them by the miniſterie of the ſenſes, it is no maruell though we think and ſpeake more of ſenſible things, though we leſſe eſteeme them, than of thoſe heauenly excellencies, which are onely intellectuall, and not ſubiect to the ſenſes although wee moſt value them in our iudgements, and affect them with our loue. Againe, our ordinarie callings and neceſſarie affaires of this life, doe inforce vs ordinarily and commonly to thinke and ſpeake of them, more than of ſpirituall and heauenly things; but hereof it followeth not, that wee loue them more than they, for there is great difference betweene doing a thing often vpon neceſſitie, and doing it with chiefe comfort and delight. The workman thinketh more of his worke and tooles, the husbandman of his husbandrie, the painter of his picture and colours, than of their beloued wiues and moſt deare children; but yet it followeth not, that they affect them with more loue, ſeeing the reaſon heereof is, becauſe theſe things are continually ſubiect to their ſenſes, and the obiect of their labours and imployments; and not becauſe they moſt eſteeme them in their iudgements.

§. Sect. 4.
The third ſigne is when we moſt deſire theſe earthly things, & take moſt care and paines in compaſſing them,

Thirdly, we loue thoſe things moſt, which we moſt deſire to enioy, and beſtow greateſt paines and ſtudy to obtaine our deſire; for according to the meaſure of our loue in affecting, is our zeale in deſiring, and our care and labour in ſeeking that which wee ſo much affect and deſire. And this alſo is ioyned with an earneſt endeuour, to vſe all meanes which may further vs, and to auoid all impediments which might hinder vs in attaining vnto that, which with ſuch great zeale wee deſire and ſeeke. Vnto which we may adde an inuincible patience, in ſuffering and induring all things, for the enioying of that which we eſteeme and loue. For (as one ſaith) euery wicked worldling is ſo much more patient and ſtrong, to indure any euils, by how much the loue of the world doth more abound in him; and euery righteous man is ſo much more conſtant and couragious to endure any miſeries, by how much hee is more inflamed with the loue of God. But the loue of the world hath his beginning from our free choice, his progreſſe from the delight of pleaſure, his ſtrength from the bond of cuſtome: but the loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghoſt. And thus worldly men aboue all things deſire worldly vanities, thinking no care and ſtudy too much, nor paines too great, for the atchieuing of their deſire; tyring their wits, ſpending their ſweate and ſtrength, yea conſuming their bodies, and expoſing themſelues to all dangers, that they may attaine vnto their worldly hopes; in the meane time neuer thinking of the ſaluation of their ſoules, much leſſe endeuouring to vſe thoſe meanes whereby they may be aſſured of it. And thus the ambitious man aboue all things deſireth honours and preferments, and conſumeth his ſtate, relinquiſheth all pleaſures, bendeth his whole ſtudies, ſpareth for no labour, and runneth himſelfe into moſt deſperate perils, that he may attaine vnto them; the couetous man alſo holdeth the ſame courſes, neglecting his credit, and contemning all delights, that he may ſcrape together riches; And the voluptuous man, careth not by luſt, ſurfetting, and drunkenneſſe to make himſelfe more vile and contemptible than a bruit beaſt; neither ſpareth hee for any coſt, but conſumeth his eſtate, that hee may ſpend the time preſent in delight and ſenſualitie. And why is this, but becauſe euery one affect their ſeuerall obiects with their chiefe loue, and therefore thinke nothing too much which either they beſtow or ſuffer for the enioying of them. And contrariwiſe, they who like the wiſe Merchant moſt eſteeme and loue the precious pearle of Gods kingdome, his ſauing truth, and the ioyes of heauen, they will not ſtick to ſell all the world, with the pleaſures, riches, and preferments thereof, that they may compaſſe and procure them. According to this ſigne therfore let vs examine our loue, whether it bee more ſet vpon God or vpon the world; and this may eaſily be determined, if wee conſider whether we doe more earneſtly deſire the fauor of God & the aſſurance of our owne ſaluation, or the fruition of worldly vanities; whether we beſtow greater ſtudy, coſt and labour, in ſeeking after Gods ſpirituall graces & eternall ioyes, and indure all this paines with more patience; or in attaining vnto the pleaſures and profits of this life. Finally, whether wee could bee content either neuer to haue, or ſoone to leaue, whatſoeuer in the earth is deare

August. de p tient. lib. ca
tom. 4.

Matth.

deare vnto vs, if the time of triall ſhould come; rather than wee would not purchaſe the precious pearle, euen Gods loue and our owne ſaluation. And leſt our ſecure conſciences ſhould deceiue vs, with a falſe conceit of this true loue, let vs further examine it according to the ſecond point, namely, whether with more care and diligence we deſire and ſeeke after thoſe meanes, whereby wee may bee aſſured that we ſhall obtaine theſe ſpirituall graces and heauenly happineſſe, which is a liuely faith, with a godly and ſanctified life (for ſanctification aſſureth vs of our iuſtification, vocation, election, and conſequently of our ſaluation) or the meanes whereby wee may attaine vnto our earthly deſires. And then againe, whether we doe with more circumſpection and indeuour auoid thoſe impediments, which might hinder vs from obtaining the heauenly treaſures of Gods kingdome, namely our ſinnes and the tranſgreſſion of Gods commandements, which are that wall of ſeparation betweene God and vs; or thoſe hindrances and lets which croſſe our worldly deſires. And if in theſe reſpects our conſciences iuſtifie vs, then doe we ſurely loue God better than the world; and preferre heauenly hapineſſe, before earthly proſperitie. But on the other ſide, if our conſciences witneſſe againſt vs, that wee more deſire worldly vanities, than eternall glorie; that wee wholly neglect this, and beſtow all our ſtudy, coſt and labour in ſeeking and procuring of the other; that wee can willingly finde in our hearts by committting of ſinne to make a forfeiture of our heauenly inheritance, ſo as wee may obtaine by it ſome earthly profit or delight; and finally, that we more carefully auoid the impediments which croſſe our worldly deſires, than ſinne which like a ſtumbling blocke in the way hindreth our paſſage into our heauenly countrie; then doe wee more eſteeme, and more dearely loue the world and worldly vanities, than the Lord himſelfe, and the eternall ioyes of his kingdome.

ect. 5.
fourth is when moſt in keep-, and moſt in loſing

Laſtly, that which we moſt eſteeme and loue, wee alſo take in it moſt ioy and contentment, and therefore are more carefull ſtill to keepe it whileſt wee haue it, and bewaile the loſſe thereof with greateſt griefe, when as it is taken from vs. The ambitious man moſt reioyceth in the vaineglory of the world, and careth not to loſe his life that he may preſerue his honour accounting it the bittereſt death to liue diſgraced. The couetous man moſt glorieth and reioyceth in his riches, and is content to hazard his ſoule, rather than his wealth. The voluptuous man moſt reioyceth in his pleaſures, and would rather ſell both earthly and heauenly patrimonies, than he would be depriued of his ſenſuall delights. And according to their joy in keeping them, ſuch is their feare of loſing them, and anſwerable to both is their ſorrow and griefe, when as they are taken from them. On the other ſide, they whoſe hearts are inflamed with the fire of Gods loue, doe moſt reioyce in him, and in the aſſurance of his loue and mercie towards them; and making moſt precious account of this iewell, they had rather loſe the whole world than Gods fauour, or the teſtimonies thereof in their own conſciences; and grieue more when hauing fallen into ſinne, they want the ioy of their ſaluation, and doe not apprehend the loue of God, nor ſenſibly diſcerne the beames of his fauour ſhining into their hearts, as they haue done before times, than if they were depriued of all the honours, riches, and pleaſures of the world. Let euery one therefore according to this ſigne examine himſelfe; and if vpon triall we find, that God is our principall ioy, and that we moſt reioyce in his ſaluation; if with the Prophet Dauid wee had rather ſee the light of Gods countenance ſhining vpon vs, than that men ſhould ſhew vs any worldly good; and when it appeareth, haue more joy of heart, than worldly men haue when their wheate and oyle abound; if in this we can with him rather place our bleſſedneſſe, that the Lord is our God, than in the enioying of all the proſperitie of the world; if we haue greater care of retaining the fauour of God, & aſſurance of our own ſaluation, and feare of loſing it, than of theſe worldly vanities; and anſwerably doe vſe the meanes, indeuouring aboue all things to leade a godly and ſanctified life, wherby our aſſurance of them is more and more confirmed; and contrariwiſe to keepe our conſciences vnſpotted of any wilfull, knowne, or preſumptuous ſinnes, whereby it is weakened and impaired: And if beſides our purpoſe hauing fallen into theſe ſinnes, and thereby hazarded our chiefe ioyes, we can with more bitter griefe bewaile it, than any worldly ſhame and danger which we incurre thereby; crying out with Dauid: Make mee O Lord to heare ioy and gladneſſe, that the bones which thou haſt broken may reioyce; reſtore mee to the ioy of thy ſaluation, and ſtabliſh mee with thy free ſpirit: then may wee be aſſured to our comfort, that the Lord is our chiefe loue, and that we eſteeme him aboue the world, and worldly vanities. But if contrariwiſe we little reioyce in God, but take all our comfort and ſolace in earthly things; if wee feare the loſſe of our worldly wealth, pompe, and pleaſure, and care not for the loſſe of Gods loue and fauour; if we neuer endeuour to leade a Chriſtian life, nor take any paines in mortifying our ſinnes and corruptions, that we may attaine vnto the aſſurance of Gods loue and our owne ſaluation; and thinke no care or paines too much

Pſal.4.6.7.

Pſal.144.15.

Pſal.51.8.12.

much to preſerue and ſecure our worldly profits and delights; if we doe not mourne for our ſinnes, becauſe by them wee haue diſpleaſed God, and hazarded the loſſe of his fauour, but only in regard of ſome worldly puniſhment, which doth accompanie them; and can heartily grieue, when wee are depriued of earthly vanities, and haue no ſorrow at all when by ſinne wee haue loſt the aſſurance of Gods loue, and of our heauenly inheritance in his kingdome, we make it manifeſt that our hearts and affections are groueling vpon the earth, and that we loue the world more than God.

§. Sect. 6. In what ſenſe our ioy and griefe about theſe earthly things, are ſignes of our loue of the world.

It cannot indeed bee denied, but that in reſpect of ſenſe and feeling, a man may more reioyce in worldly things, than in God, and heauenly excellencies, and anſwerably may haue more care, feare and griefe about the keeping and loſing of them, than the other; and yet may truly loue and reioyce in God, and grieue for his ſinnes, becauſe he hath diſpleaſed him; for as wee are more fleſh than ſpirit, ſo our carnall affections and paſſions, are more ſtrong and violent about fleſhly and carnall things, than about things diuine and ſpirituall: both becauſe we haue more corruption than grace in vs, and alſo becauſe theſe earthly things which are naturall and ſenſible, both in their inioying and in their loſſe, doe more ſenſibly affect our naturall affections. Whereas our affections towards God and heauenly things are ſpirituall and ſupernaturall; and the things which we thus affect diuine and heauenly; in both which reſpects, they are not ſo ſenſible as the other. And therefore the truth of our loue, reioycing, feare and ſorrow, about heauenly and earthly things, is not to bee meaſured by our ſenſes, their quantitie, and violence of our paſſions, but according to their ſimplicitie and ſincerity. But yet if in our ſenſe, or in the quantitie and degree, our ioy the in world exceeed our ioy in God, and our ſorrow for earthly loſſes bee more ſtrong and violent, than it is for ſinne, and the loſſe of Gods fauour, it cannot bee denied, but that it proceedeth from the ſtrength and violence of our naturall corruptions, and that we haue the like corruption in our loue, which in reſpect of the ardencie and heate affecteth earthly things more than heauenly. And therefore taking notice hereof, that we loue the world more than God, and that wee ſet our affections more vpon earthly vanities, than vpon heauenly excellencies, we muſt not reſt contented with our imperfections and corruptions, and applaud our ſelues, becauſe wee haue in vs the loue of God in ſome meaſure, and (though not in the heate of our affections, yet) in the ſoundneſſe of our iudgements wee more eſteeme him; but we muſt labour earneſtly to perfect our wants, and to mortifie our corruptions, and neuer to be at quiet, but ſtill aſpiring from one degree to another, till at laſt wee attaine vnto that degree of perfection and ſanctification, that wee can loue and reioyce in God, more than in the world, and grieue more for his diſpleaſure, than for any earthly loſſe, and that both in quantitie and degree, and in our owne ſenſe and feeling. For otherwiſe if theſe affections which wee thinke ſanctified, and in truth, doe ſtand at a ſtay, and we be contented with that weake and imperfect meaſure, hauing not ſo much as a deſire or indeauour, that they goe forward and increaſe; it is a manifeſt ſigne that there is neither truth nor ſanctification in them; but that they are falſe and counterfeit; ſeeing all true grace is either in the growth, or at leaſt, deſireth and laboureth in the meanes, whereby it may grow to more perfection.

CHAP. VIII.

That the beſt things in the world are but meere vanities, in comparison of Gods ſpirituall graces, and heauenly excellencies.

§. Sect. 1. That the beſt are too much tainted with the loue of the world.

ANd thus haue I ſet downe the ſigns of worldly loue, whereby this dangerous diſeaſe may bee diſcouered and knowne; according vnto which if wee examine our ſelues, I doubt not, but many who through their ſecuritie thought themſelues ſound, & in good caſe, ſhall find that they are deſperatly ſicke of this diſeaſe euen to the death, vnleſſe they prouide ſpeedily wholeſome medicines for their recouerie. Yea and thoſe who are in the beſt eſtate, if without ſelfe-loue flatterie and partialitie, they trie their eſtate according to theſe rules, they ſhall plainely diſcerne, that howſoeuer Chriſt hath called and culled them out of the world, yet they haue left ſome part of their heart and affections behind them; and that howſoeuer through Gods mercie they are pulled (as it were) by ſtrong hand, out of this ſpirituall Sodome; yet they are ready euery handwhile with Lots wiſe to looke backe, as being loth to leaue their worldly profits and preferments, and to bee weaned from the pleaſures of ſinne, which they haue ſo long ſucked with ſo great delight. They ſhall finde that they are like priſoners newly deliuered, and freed from their bolts, who by their halting and lameneſſe are ſtill put in mind of their old bonds and fetters; that they are like greene and feeble bodies newly recouered of ſome dangerous diſeaſe, that is, weake and void of ſtrength in ſpirituall graces, and eſpecially in the true loue of God, and his ſpirituall and heauenly excellencies, & ready to fall into a relapſe of their old ſickneſſe worldly loue, vnleſſe they be very watchfull & carefull ouer themſelues, and keepe a ſtrict and curious diet, neuer feeding vpon theſe worldly vanities, but with great temperance and moderation. And that ſtill there are ſome relikes of thoſe corrupt humours of worldly loue remaining in them, and remainders of this burning and vnkindly heate, which will extinguiſh, or at leaſt abate that diuine and ſpirituall fire of the loue of God and heauenly things, vnleſſe that heate bee qualified, thoſe corrupt humours purged, and that vitall flame of diuine loue bee continually nouriſhed with wholeſome cordials and reſtoratiues preſcribed in Gods word. Finally, they ſhall plainly perceiue, that they are like that harlot, of whom Hoſea ſpeaketh, who being married vnto Chriſt, after they haue long time liued in ſpirituall whoredome with the world, are hardly drawne from their old filthineſſe, to which they were ſo long inured, but are ready continually to affect their old louers, and to renew their fornications and vncleanneſſe; vnleſſe they were reſtrained by their husband Ieſus Chriſt, and by the power of his ſpirit, word and chaſtiſements (as it were) by ſtrong hand, held backe from running on in theſe lewd and wicked courſes.

And therefore as I haue ſhewed the ſignes of this diſeaſe; ſo now in the next place I will preſcribe the remedies, and ſet downe ſuch wholſome medicines as may ſerue, both for preſeruatiues to keep thē ſound, who are not yet infected with this ſpiritual poiſon; & alſo for purges to free vs from theſe hurtfull humors of worldly loue, if they abound in vs, which being applied by the patient, and made effectuall by Gods bleſſing, may reſtore vs to health, though through thoſe tough and noiſome humours oppreſſing vs, we were brought into a deep conſumption of godlines, & euen vnto the very gates of death. And finally, for cordiall reſtoratiues to recouer vs being weak, vnto our perfect health and confirme & ſtrengthen vs more & more in the true loue of God, his ſpiritual graces & eternall ioyes of his Kingdome. That therefore wee may not immoderately loue the world & worldly things, but may contemne them when they come in compariſon of heauenly excellencies; and that wee may not at all affect them, but may hate and abhor them, as they are the diuels inſtruments and baites to perſwade and allure vs vnto ſinne; let theſe reaſons moue vs: firſt, becauſe there is no cauſe why wee ſhould thus immoderately loue and affect them, nor thus vnlawfully deſire to compaſſe them, in reſpect of the things themſelues which are thus loued and deſired. And ſecondly, becauſe there is no reaſon hereof in regard of vs, who doe affect and couet them. In the things themſelues, there is no cauſe of this immoderate loue; firſt, becauſe though wee neuer ſo much dote vpon and deſire them, yet they do not bring vnto vs any true, ſubſtantiall, or certaine good: and ſecondly, becauſe being thus affected, they become the inſtruments of much euill; and therefore as in the former reſpect they are to bee contemned and deſpiſed, ſo in the latter they are to bee abhorred and rejected. They doe not bring vnto vs any ſound and certaine good: firſt, becauſe they are of no great and deſirable goodneſſe, though wee ſhould long inioy them; and alſo becauſe they are altogether vncertaine, both in the getting and poſſeſſing. They are of no great goodneſſe vnto vs, though wee could for euer inioy them; firſt, becauſe theſe things themſelues are vaine, and of no great worth or excellencie; whereupon alſo it followeth, that they doe not ſatisfie, nor giue vnto vs any true or ſound contentment; and ſecondly, becauſe they are vtterly vnprofitable, and beſides mixt and accompanied with innumerable euils, and manifold miſeries. For if I ſhall proue that there is no cauſe why we ſhould deſire them, either in reſpect of themſelues or vs; that they bring vs no true good, but contrariwiſe much euill; that as they haue no great goodneſſe in them whileſt wee haue them, ſo though they had, yet we haue no aſſurance of them; that they are vaine, and of no excellencie, and yet mingled with a multitude of miſeries; there will bee little reaſon why we ſhould greatly loue them; and much leſſe why we ſhould preferre them before Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly ioyes; or accept of them as Satans wages, whereby hee perſwadeth vs to ſerue him by committing of ſin, whereby we hazard the loſſe of our ſoules, and of our heauenly inheritance, which are infinitely of more worth than the whole world.

§. Sect. 3.

That the beſt things the world can boaſt of, are but meere vanities.

Firſt therefore we are to know, that the world and the beſt things which it can boaſt of, are but meere vanities, and in compariſon of Gods ſpirituall graces, and our heauenly inheritance, of no worth or excellencie; neither is there any thing in the earth great or excellent, but the Chriſtian minde which contemneth and deſpiſeth theſe highly eſteemed vanities. They make a faire ſhew indeed to thoſe, whoſe iudgements are already foreſtalled with the falſe conceits of their corrupt fleſh, and ſeeme to bee of ſome value and greatneſſe to thoſe who looke vpon them through the ſpectacles of affection. But if wee pull off their falſe couers, and ſeriouſly and vnpartially behold them after their diſſembling colours and painted vizards are laid aſide, we ſhall find the world in his chiefe beautie and pompe to bee but a glorious hypocrite, faire in ſhew, and foule in truth; profeſſing and promiſing much, and performing nothing; or a beautifull ſepulcher outwardly adorned with all coſt and brauerie, but within full of ſtench and rottenneſſe; or like vnto our faire buildings in theſe times, which making a ſumptuous ſhew to the paſſers by, ſeeme to inuite poore men to receiue reliefe; but within haue no prouiſion for hoſpitalitie, nor food to refreſh thoſe who ſtand in need. The like vanitie alſo is in all thoſe worldly things, which are ſo affected and admired of thoſe, who haue erected them in their hearts, as their idols whom they ſerue and adore; herein indeed truly reſembling idols and images, which are outwardly adorned with gold and precious ornaments, and make repreſentation of ſome excellent perſonage, whereas if you examine them any further than the very ſuperficies and outſide, you ſhall find them no better than ſtockes or ſtones. So theſe worldly vanities ſeeme to thoſe whoſe weake ſight can pearce no deeper than the outward ſhew, beautifull and glorious; whereas in truth if we could behold them inwardly with the eye of a ſound judgement, wee ſhould eaſily diſcerne them to be contemptibly baſe, and of no value. In this reſpect like thoſe goodly and beautifull pageants which being outwardly adorned and ſet forth with gold and painted colours, moue multitudes of people to run after them, and to behold them with ioyfull admiration and rauiſhing wonder; whereas if you looke into their inſide, you ſhall finde nothing but a few ſticks, ragges, and patches; and in reſpect of their ſubſtance and durableneſ ſo ſlight and weake, that they are only fit for a vaine ſhew, and to ſerue for a daies ſport.

§. Sect. 4.
The vanitie of worldly things proued by teſtimonies.

But this vanitie of the world and worldly things may be more ſpecially ſhewed both by teſtimonies, and alſo euident reaſons: for the former, David affirmeth that man in his beſt eſtate is altogether vanitie; that hee walketh but in a ſhadow and diſquieteth himſelfe in vaine. And elſewhere he compareth this worldly proſperitie to a dreame, which delighteth whileſt a man ſleepeth, but when hee awaketh vaniſheth away, and leaueth nothing behinde it, but ſorrow and diſcontent, because their ioyes and hopes are fruſtrated. So the holy Ghoſt ſaith, that the power and proſperitie of the Churches enemies, ſhall bee like as an hungrie man that dreameth, and behold he eateth, and when he awaketh his ſoule is emptie: and like as a thirſtie man that dreameth, and loe hee is drinking, and when he awaketh, behold, hee is faint, and his ſoule longeth. In which reſpect [illegible] that the Apoſtle ſaith the figure of this world doth paſſe away; intimating vnto vs, that all worldly things are but in ſhew and figure onely, and like a ſhadow or a dreame which vaniſh away, hauing nothing in them ſubſtantiall and in truth. How childiſh therefore is that minde which reſpecteth ſhadowes, and is proud of dreames, fixing it ſelfe vpon that which ſoone after ſhall paſſe away? The Prophet Eſay compareth the worldlings endeuours in hunting after theſe earthly vanities, to the weauing of a ſpiders webbe, which being made with great labour, is altogether vnfit to make a garment to keepe warme or couer nakedneſſe, and good for nothing but to catch flies. And the Apoſtle Paul affirmeth that before his conuerſion vnto God, his vnderſtanding, thoughts and communication which were ſpent about worldly things, were meerely childiſh; the which being come to a ripe age in Chriſt he put away, exerciſing his minde and tongue about things ſpirituall and heauenly. So others compare the deſires and labours of worldly men to childrens ſports, their ſtately buildings to their houſes erected in the ſands, their gathering of riches, to their gathering of ſtones, and other trifles; their honours and preferments, to their kings, lords, and gouernours which they make in play among themſelues; their eſteeming of earthly vanities, to that great account which children make of their contemptible toyes, preferring their copper chaines, brouches, babies, tops and ſcourges, and ſuch like trifles, before both their parents and their patrimonie; and finally their fooliſh mourning and lamenting for the loſſe of their riches and preferments, to the ridiculous crying of ſilly children, when their houſes are caſt downe, or their trifles taken from them. Neither is there any difference betweene them, ſauing that children very eaſily procure thoſe things which they ſo much affect; but worldlings purchaſe their follies at deare rates, and obtaine them with much ſweate and labour; they ſecurely enioy their ſports and delights; but theſe, as they compaſſe their deſires with much paine and difficultie, ſo they poſſeſſe them with much care, feare, and danger. To which purpoſe another crieth out: See O wretched man (ſaith hee) that all which thou affecteſt is but meere vanitie, and all folly and madneſſe, whatſoeuer thou doeſt in the world, except that alone which thou doeſt towards God, for God, and to Gods glory; whatſoeuer thou doeſt without God is all ſinne and vanitie, becauſe there is nothing good which is without the chiefe goodneſſe.

But if we would haue a teſtimonie aboue all exceptions, let vs conſider what Solomon ſpeaketh of theſe worldly things, who had not onely moſt wiſdome and iudgement rightly to value them, but alſo more experience of them than any other ſeeing hee abounded

Pſal. 39.6.
Pſal. 73.20.
Eſa. 29.8.
1. Cor. 7.31.
Chryſo
Gen
mil. 31.
1. Cor. 13.1
Chryſoſt.
ad popul.
Senec. in conſol.
cap. 11.
Quid agis
§. Sect.
The va worldly proued Solomons mony.

abounded more in all worldly proſperity, than any man that euer liued vpon the earth. For as in himſelfe he excelled all mortall men that euer breathed, in wiſdome and vnderſtanding, the which he purpoſely imployed, to improue all theſe worldly things to their vttermoſt value, as himſelfe profeſſeth; ſo in his ſtate hee farre out-ſtript all others in proſperity and abundance. For if you reſpect his honour, the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, that there was neuer any among the Kings like vnto him; for he was a mightie Prince, yea, a great Monarch, who reigned ouer all Kingdomes, from the Riuer vnto the land of the Philiſtines, and vnto the border of Ægypt; and he ruled in all the region on the other ſide of the riuer from Tiphſah euen vnto Azzah; ouer all the Kings on the other ſide the riuer, and they brought him preſents and ſerued him all the dayes of his life. Yea, and not only they, but all the Kings of the earth ſought the preſence of Salomon, to heare his wiſdome that God had put in his heart, & they brought euery euery man his preſent, veſſels of ſiluer, and veſſels of gold, and raiment, armour, and ſweet odours, horſes and mules from yeere to yeere. If ye looke to his riches, hee had all things in abundance, and excelled herein alſo all the Kings of the earth, as the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaketh. He had ſix hundred, threeſcore, and ſix talents of gold yeerely, beſides that which was brought in by his Tole-gatherers and Merchants, and the preſents which the Kings of Arabia brought vnto him: he had a ſtately Throne of Iuory with ſixe ſteps, and twelue Lions at the ends of them couered with gold; hee made two hundred Targets of beaten gold, ſixe hundred ſhekels going to a Target; and three hundred ſhields of beaten gold, three hundred ſhekels going to a ſhield; his drinking veſſels, yea, all the veſſels of his houſe of the wood of Lebanon, were of pure Gold; as for ſiluer in his dayes it was nothing eſteemed, but was as common as ſtones in the ſtreet. For his prouiſion he had for one day thirtie meaſures of fine flower, and threeſcore meaſures of meale, which according to the leaſt account is two hundred thirtie two quarters, and according to the eſtimate of others much more; thirty Oxen, an hundred Sheep, beſide Harts and Bucks, Bugles and fat fowle. Hee had forty thouſand ſtalls of Horſes for his Chariots, and twelue thouſand Horſemen. His pleaſures alſo were anſwerable to his Honours and riches, for looke what delights wit could inuent, or wealth and power prouide, and he denied none of them vnto himſelfe, nor withdrew his heart from any joy, as himſelfe teſtifieth. He had ſeuen hundred Queenes to his Wiues, and three hundred Concubines, he built great workes and ſtately houſes, he planted fruitfull Vineyards and pleaſant Gardens, with goodly Orchards furniſhed with all manner of fruits, he had his Fountaines and delightfull Springs, his Woods and ſhady Groues, his ſweet Muſicke, and in a word, all the delights of the ſonnes of men. Beſides all which priuate good, he publikely ruled with peace and tranquillitie all his Kingdomes, his whole life. Hee was loued, feared, and admired of all his people for his Wiſedome and juſtice; and that alſo which is the joy and comfort of a good King, all his Subjects liued in great proſperity vnder him. For all Iudah and Iſrael dwelt without feare euery man vnder his Vine and vnder his fig-tree, from Dan euen to Beerſheba all the dayes of Salomon. By all which it appeareth, that as neuer man had the like wiſdome, ſo neither the like proſperity and abundance of all worldly bleſſings. But heare after all his pompe and proſperity what teſtimony he giueth to all theſe earthly things, and that vpon his owne experience. Vanitie of vanities, ſaith the Preacher, vanitie of vanities all is vanitie. Yea, hee concludeth afterwards that all is not only vanitie, but alſo vexation of ſpirit, and that there is no profit vnder the Sunne. If a poore man though neuer ſo wiſe, or a Scholer out of his knowledge and diſcourſe had thus proclaimed the Worlds vanity, it might haue beene deemed to haue proceeded from want of experience, becauſe they had neuer trial of them, or from ſome melancholike conceit, moouing them to contemne that which they had no hope to enjoy. And therefore becauſe we ſhould take no exceptions againſt this teſtimony, it hath pleaſed the Lord to teach vs this leſſon by ſuch an one as had not only moſt wiſdom to judge of them, but alſo moſt triall and experience of all theſe things, which the world eſteemeth good, and worth deſiring, both in reſpect of his abundance, and great variety of them, and his long, ſecure and peaceable time, wherein he did injoy them; and that without the mixture of thoſe innumerable troubles, with which other men are vexed and moleſted.

1.Kings 4.24.

Chap.3.28.

Chap.4.25.

Eccleſ.1.2. and 2.11.

§. Sect.6.

That theſe worldly things are of no great excellencie, ſeeing they are but Gods common gifts.

And ſo much for the teſtimonies which ſerue to ſhew the worlds vanitie, vnto which innumerable others might bee added out of writings, both diuine and heatheniſh; but theſe being ſufficient I will come to the reaſons, which alſo proue it. And firſt the vanitie and worthleſnes of the world and worldly things in compariſon of thoſe which are ſpirituall and heauenly, may hereby appeare, in that they are but Gods common gifts which hee giueth in his infinite bountie, as well to his enemies, as vnto his friends; to thoſe who neglect all dutie, and rebell againſt him, as well as to his children and ſeruants, who loue and feare him. Yea, commonly the Lord beſtoweth theſe worldly things in great abundance vpon the wicked, whereas for the moſt part he giueth them to the godly and righteous, whom he chiefly loueth, but with a ſparing hand, and ſo much onely as may ſerue for their neceſſary vſe. And this Dauid obſerued, whereas hee ſaith, that his wicked aduerſaries were incloſed in their own fat, that they had plentie not onely for themſelues, but for their children. Yea ſo great was the proſperitie of wicked men, and ſo ſharpe his owne puniſhments and chaſtiſements, that when he conſidered of it, his feet were almoſt gone, and his ſteps had well neere ſlips, being ready to preferre the eſtate of the vngodly, before the bleſſed condition of the children of God. And thus the Church in the Lamentations complaineth, that her aduerſaries were the chief, and that her enemies proſpered; whereas ſhee was afflicted, and her children led into captiuitie. But of this I haue ſpoken more fully when I generally intreated of proſperitie, and therefore will for the generall, adde no more teſtimonies nor examples.

Pſal.17.10,14.

Pſal.73.2.

Lament.1.5.

§. Sect. 7.
That God beſtoweth honours as well vpon the wicked as vpon the godly.

Onely let vs conſider the truth hereof in thoſe three inſtances of Honours, Riches and Pleaſures. And firſt for Honours wee ſhall find, that God hath more bountifully imparted them vnto the wicked and reprobate, than vnto the godly and faithfull. Thus Eſau flouriſheth in pompe and worldly glory, going attended in great ſtate, with foure hundred men waiting at his heeles; and Iacob creepeth and croucheth vnto him, meanely accompanied with a few poore ſeruants, that tended his ſheepe and cattell. Thus Pharaoh ſitteth in the Regall Throne, raigning and ruling at his pleaſure, and making his corrupt and vnjuſt will to ſtand for law; whereas Moſes and Aaron, the beloued of the Lord, are humble ſuiters vnto him for the peoples libertie, and at his becke to goe and come as he appointed. Thus the high Prieſts, Scribes and Phariſies, ſit in Moſes Chaire, and are eſteemed the great Rabbins and Doctors of the World; whileſt the deare Diſciples of Ieſus Chriſt, are baſely eſteemed as Galileans and poore fiſhermen, conuented before the judgement ſeates, checked, taunted, ſcorned and miſuſed, as though they had beene the very off-ſcourings of the World. Yea thus doe wicked Herod, Pilate, Annas and Caiphas raigne as Kings, and ſit on the judgement ſeate, abſoluing and condemning whom they will: and contrariwiſe, our Sauiour Chriſt, the onely begotten and dearely beloued Sonne of God, is haled before them, accuſed and reproched, ſcorned and derided, buffeted, ſpit vpon, whipped and miſuſed.

§. Sect 8.
Reprobates abound with riches as much as Gods ſeruants.

The like alſo may be ſaid of riches, with which wicked men commonly moſt exceed; whereas Gods ſeruants oftentimes are ſcanted of neceſſaries. So Nabal aboundeth in all ſuperfluitie, and Dauid is an humble ſuiter vnto him for reliefe; the falſe Prophets are nouriſhed at Iezabels Table, and poore Elias is in commons with the Rauens; the Phariſies and Scribes eat the fat of the Land, and abound in wealth, and the Diſciples are forbidden to poſſeſſe gold or ſiluer, yea, to carry a Scrip, wherein to put their needments, or to be Owners of two Coats at once; vnto Iudas is the bagge committed, whereas Peter hath neither ſiluer nor gold, as hee profeſſeth. The Idolatrous Kings and heathen Potentates haue the World at will, ſtrouting themſelues in their ſtately Palaces, and wallowing in their wealth; but Ieſus Chriſt, the Lord of Heauen and Earth, and heire apparant of Gods glorious Kingdome, when he is borne, hath Manger for his Bed, the Stable for his Lodging Chamber, and the Oxen and Horſes for his Chamber-fellowes. Neither was hee better prouided for, when hee came to riper age, for as himſelfe teſtifieth, The Foxes haue holes, & the Birds of the Heauen haue neſts, but the Sonne of man hath not whereon to lay his head; yea, ſo vnfurniſhed was he of wealth at ſome times, that when hee was to pay poll-mony, hee was faine to borrow it of a ſilly fiſh.

Mat.10.9
Acts3.6.

Luke2.7.

Matth.8.20

§. Sect. 9.
The wicked worldling hath a gre ſhare of wo ly pleaſures, then Gods children.

Finally, the pleaſures of the World are alſo Gods common gifts, which he beſtoweth as well on the wicked and reprobate, as vpon his owne children and ſeruants; yea in truth much more plentifully haue the enemies of God and his grace, enjoyed them from the beginning of the World to this day, than thoſe who haue feared and ſerued the Lord. For ſeeing they are to vs, by reaſon of our corruption, like Kniues in the hands of children, and ſweet and licorous meats, whereon they are apt to ſurfet; therefore the Lord ſuffering wicked men, as it were ſlaues and vaſſals, to take their liberty, and to vſe what diet they liſt, as not regarding their ſpirituall health and life, nor caring what becomes of them; hath alwayes had ſpeciall care of his own children, dieting them with ſuch a ſmall pittance, as they may well digeſt, without impairing the health of their ſoules; and mixing theſe delicious drinkes of pleaſures, in the bitter cup of afflictions, whereby he hath ſtill purged away theſe groſſe humours of corruption, when they beganne to abound with them through their daintie fare. And thus he ſuffered thoſe abjects, Iſmael and Eſau, to ſpend their time in hunting and reuellings, pleaſure and delight; whereas the promiſed ſeed, Iſaac and Iacob, to whom the promiſes belonged ſpent their time in painfull labours, and whileſt they kept their ſheepe, indured the ſcorching heate of the Sunne by day, and the pinching cold of the froſts by night. Thus Dauids wicked enemies were ſo pampered with delights, that their eyes ſtood out with fatneſſe, whereas hee was daily puniſhed and chaſtened euery morning.

Pſal.73.

uing. Thus Diues the rich Glutton, clothed himſelfe with purple and fine linnen, and fared deliciouſly euery day, and poore Lazarus, beloued of God, is pinched with hunger, clothed with rags, and tormented with ſores and ſickneſſes. Finally, the whore of Babylon is ſuffered to haue in her hand a golden cup, full of voluptuous pleaſures and delights, and not only to drinke thereof largely her ſelfe; but alſo to make drunke with her abundance the great Princes, and Potentates of the earth: whereas the poore Saints of God haue allotted to their ſhare the cup of afflictions, wherein our Sauiour Chriſt beginning to them, drunke a larger draught, than euer any mortal man. In which reſpect, the Lord dealeth with mankind, as the wiſe Phyſician with his ſicke patients; thoſe ouer whom hee is moſt carefull, in regard both of the loue hee beareth them and the hope hee conceiueth of their recouery, hee ſtraightly dieteth, forbidding them the vſe of thoſe meats and drinkes, which by reaſon of their diſeaſe they loue and deſire; and giueth them many a bitter potion, and troubleſome plaiſter, that he may hereby reſtore them to their health: whereas contrariwiſe thoſe whom he neglecteth, becauſe their diſeaſes are deſperate, and paſt hope of cure, are permitted to vſe what diet they liſt without reſtraint: And thus the Lord giueth to his deare Seruants whom hee intendeth to cure, the bitter potions of afflictions, and reſtraineth them of worldly pleaſures, which are ſo delightfull to their carnall appetites; whereas hee ſuffereth reprobate men, who are deſperately ſicke in ſinne, to glut themſelues with theſe fleſhly delights, and to haue their owne carnall appetite, as the rule and direction of their diet.

Sect.10.

By all which it appeareth, that theſe worldly benefits of Honours, Riches and Pleaſures are common to the wicked, yea, that they haue in them the largeſt ſhare, and greateſt part; whereas contrariwiſe God beſtoweth his ſpirituall Graces, Faith, Loue, Hope, a good Conſcience and the reſt, as alſo the aſſurance of his eternall and heauenly ioyes vpon his owne ſeruants and children, who are moſt neere and deare vnto him. Whereby it is cleare and euident, that theſe are infinitely of more worth and value than the other; for if wee will acknowledge the Lord to bee a wiſe Diſpenſer of his owne gifts, we need not to doubt, but that he giueth his leaſt benefits vnto thoſe whom hee leaſt affecteth, and reſerueth his rich treaſures, and choiceſt iewels, for thoſe whom hee moſt dearely loueth. Neither can it bee imagined, that if hee eſteemed theſe earthly things of any value, hee would giue them to his enemies, and deny them to his friends, ſuffer reprobate and wicked men to abound with them, and giue them ſo ſparingly to his owne ſeruants, yea, to his onely Sonne, in whom hee was well pleaſed. For what wiſe man will inrich his ſlaues, and ſuffer his deare children to liue in want? be liberall to ſtrangers and enemies, imparting vnto them gifts of great value; and deny the vſe of them to his owne Family? whereby it manifeſtly appeareth, that ſeeing the Lord infinite in wiſdome and in loue towardes his ſeruants and children, as alſo in iuſtice towardes his enemies, doth beſtow theſe earthly things more abundantly vpon the wicked, than vpon the godly; therefore hee eſteemeth them but ſmall trifles of little worth or value, which hee beſtoweth as temporall rewards vpon his ſlaues; and as wages for ſome baſe and ſeruile duties by them performed; and that he accounteth his ſpirituall graces, and heauenly ioyes his chiefe treaſures, and gifts of greateſt value, ſeeing he peculiarly reſerueth them for his Elect, and beſtoweth them vpon his owne ſeruants and children, who are moſt deare vnto him. And as Abraham gaue portions to his baſe children, and ſo ſent them away; reſeruing his chiefe riches, and the inheritance for his ſonne Iſaac, the child of promiſe: ſo the Lord beſtoweth a portion of temporall and earthly benefits, vpon theſe baſtards and baſe creatures; but as for his chiefe riches of ſpirituall grace, and his peculiar inheritance of eternall glory, them he reſerueth for his owne children, to whom the couenant of grace, and the promiſes of the Goſpell belong and appertaine.

Quam enim ſint deſpicienda conſiderat, quæ deus omnipotens etiā peruerſis præſtat. Si enim principaliter magna eſſent, nequaquam hæc conditor aduerſarijs ſuis tribueret, Greg. Moral. lib 17. cap.14.

CHAP. IX.

That theſe worldly things haue their goodneſſe onely from opinion, and from competition; from difficultie in obtayning, and from their rareneſſe in inioying.

§. Sect. 1. That worldly things haue their chiefe excellencie from opinion.

SEcondly, the vanity and worthleſneſſe of theſe worldly things appeareth, in that they haue in them no ſound and ſubſtantiall excellencie, but what they haue from their opinion who injoy them: being meane to thoſe, who meanly account them, excellent to thoſe who admire and adore them, and baſe, and of no worth to thoſe who contemne and deſpiſe them. So that their goodneſſe is not in truth, but in conceit; and if you would know of what value they are, you muſt not conſider them in themſelues, but bring them to be meaſured by the deceiuable elne of mans phantaſie, and waigh them in the vaine and vnconſtant ballance of humane opinion. In which you ſhall find no certainty, ſeeing euery one varieth from another, yea, oftentimes from himſelfe, now eſteeming that which erewhile he contemned, and deſpiſing that, which not long ſince he loued and admired. One maketh Honour his Idoll, aſcribing vnto it the chiefe excellency, and in compariſon thereof baſely eſteemeth of riches, and neglecteth pleaſures; another adoreth Gold as his God, and careth neither for his credit nor delight, ſo as his Idoll be propitious vnto him; a third chiefly doteth on voluptuous pleaſures, hauocking his eſtate, and ſetting his good name and reputation to ſale for a dayes delight, or a nights pleaſure; yea, wee may often ſee the ſame man one while raiſing the prizes of theſe earthly Coines, and ſoone after crying them downe againe; in his childhood and youth, hee chiefly eſteemeth pleaſures, in his riper yeares and full ſtrength, his Honour and reputation; and in his old dayes deſpiſing both theſe, hee is wholly tranſported with couetouſneſſe, and biteth at no bait ſo eagerly, as at that which is couered with Gold. Now what worth or excellencie can bee in that, which hath its whole ſubſiſtence in ſo vnſtable a ground, altering and changing, riſing and falling, according to the vaine conceit, and inconſtant opinion of mutable mankind?

§. Sect. 2.
Opinion maketh honours ſo much affected.

But let vs conſider the truth hereof in thoſe ſpeciall inſtances of Honours, Riches and Pleaſures which Worldlings dote vpon with ſuch great loue and admiration. And firſt for the Honours of the World, who ſeeth not, that they are in themſelues but bare ſhadowes and titles, conſiſting in the obſeruance of ſome idle Rites and Ceremonies, as in higher place, capping, crouching, bowing, kneeling, deſcents, armes, pictures, words, and termes, which haue in them no ſubſtantiall good at all, but onely are eſteemed and reputed ſo, in the conceit and opinion of the giuers and receiuers; the which foundation being altogether vnſtable and infirme, that which is built vpon it, muſt needs bee vaine and mutable; Honours changing and varying, as oft as their opinions who do conferre them change and alter. And hereof it is, that the ſelfe ſame thing which is honourable in one man, is diſgracefull in another; that which is now prayſed and extolled, is at another time diſcommended and diſgraced; and thoſe obſeruances and ceremonies, which in one place doe moſt magnifie a mans worth and dignitie, doe in another place and country vilifie and diſgrace him; the opinions of men, changing with the aire, and Honours with opinion.

§. Sect. 3.
That opinion giueth riches their chiefe excellencie.
Aurum & argentum naturæ terra eſt rubra & alba, quam ſolum hominum

The like alſo may be ſaid of riches, which although they be more reall and ſubſtantiall than the other, yet their chiefe goodneſſe and excellency conſiſteth in the opinion of thoſe who deſire and poſſeſſe them; for what true worth and excellency are in pearles and precious ſtones which are valued at ſuch high rates (if at leaſt wee meaſure worth by fruition and vſe) but that which they haue from the vngrounded phantaſie, and vaine conceit of thoſe who deſire them? What great excellencie is there in Gold and Siluer, aboue Copper, Iron and Steele, but that as one ſaith, by the madneſſe of ſome men, they are become precious? Neither hath nature (as ſaith another) made them of more value, but the will and opinion of men. For if wee meaſure things by their vſe and profit, Iron and Steele are much more neceſſary to the well being of man; ſeeing they doe not onely ſerue better for his defence, but alſo are the neceſſary Inſtruments of Husbandry, Arts and Occupations. And yet ſo ſtrongly this ill grounded opinion preuaileth with worldly and couetous men, that they take much more delight in beholding their Siluer in their darke Cheſts and Cloſets, than the comfortable beames of the Sunne in a Winters day, though it be the chief inſtrumēt of their life and being; yea are ready vpon all offers to ſell the fauour of God, that they may obtaine Gold; and the ioyes of Heauen together with their own ſoules, that they may inrich themſelues with this ſhining earth and baſe metall. The like alſo may be ſaid of Chaines, Bracelets, Rings, and ſuch other maſſie ornaments; which were they not made precious and eſtimable by the opinion of thoſe that weare them, would otherwiſe bee thought cumberſome burthens, and troubleſome clogs, which they would not be intreated, and ſcarcely hired to weare about them; yea, were they impoſed vpon them, as a puniſhment, and not willingly put on as ornaments, they would be borne with ſome impatiencie. But now ſo much are they extolled by the vaine opinion and conceit of men, that theſe things are not onely eſteemed good, but in a high degree of excellencie, of which they become proud, as though they were parts of their owne body. In ſo much as they carry their deare prized fetters, and golden Giues, not only with eaſe, but alſo with pleaſure and delight; and weare theſe burthens not onely vpon them, but pierce their eares and make holes and wounds in their owne fleſh, that ſo they may hang theſe clogs about, yea, fix them faſt vnto them. So as it is to be feared leſt together with their opinion, their fondneſſe and dotage increaſing, they will in time with the barbarous Indians weare them alſo in their lips and noſes. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that the wife impoſeth vpon her rich husband, a neceſſitie of coſt and charge, that ſhe may drinke out of rich plate, ſleepe in ſumptuous furniture, lie in a ſiluer bed, load her hands with golden bracelets, and her necke with chaines and iewels. For women are delighted euen with fetters, ſo they be of gold, neither doe they eſteeme them burthens, ſo they be precious; nor thinke them bonds, ſo that their treaſure ſhine in them. Yea, they are delighted with error facit magis reputa pretioſum?

Bernard. de aduent. Do ni, Serm.
Tom.
Chryſoſt. ad
pop. Antioch.
Homil.

Ambroſ.
Nabuth.
Tom. 4.

their wounds, that they may thruſt Gold through their eares, and hang Pearles and Iewels at them: and yet theſe Iewels haue their waight, and ſuch clothing their cold; they ſweat with the burthen of their Iewels, and are chill with cold in their thin Silkes, and yet the opinion of their price helpeth all; and that which nature abhorreth, couetouſneſſe commendeth and extolleth.

Sect. 4.
there is xcellencie ldly ures, but opinion rts vnto

Laſtly, what worth and excellency is in worldly pleaſures, more than opinion imparts vnto them? For doe wee not ſee, that that which to one is magnified as his chiefe delight, is vnto another loathſome and tedious? and contrariwiſe, that which is accounted this mans Hell, is eſteemed anothers Paradiſe? One thinketh hunting and hawking his worldly happineſſe, another accounteth it a tedious toyle; one ſwalloweth drinke as pleaſing Nectar, and the more hee drinketh, the more hee deſireth; another when his thirſt is quenched, receiueth it as a medicine, or loathſome potion; one pampereth his body, another abhorreth Gluttony, as a cumberſome vice; one taketh his chiefe felicitie in Masking and Reuelling, in carding, dicing and dancing; another hateth them as idle and effeminate ſports, and placeth his happineſſe in martiall exercises, which the other fleeth as painfull and dangerous. In a word, euery man hath his ſeuerall delight wherein he taketh his chiefe contentment; and this contentment hee hath not from any worth or excellencie in the thing it ſelfe, for then it would giue vnto all others the ſame delight, but from his owne opinion and conceit. And hence it is that his opinion changing, his pleaſures alſo change; inſomuch as wee may often obſerue that thoſe delights which haue beene heretofore his chiefe felicitie, vpon the alteration of his conceit, become loathſome and vnpleaſant. And as a man diſtempered with a burning ague, thinketh wholeſome drinks bitter and loathſome; and thoſe which are tart and ſowre, pleaſant and well relliſhed; which againe being reſtored to his health, he much diſtaſteth and diſliketh: ſo voluptuous men being diſtempered with the raging heate of their burning paſſions, doe oftentimes affect and deſire ſuch carnall pleaſures, and odious delights, as afterwards they loathe and abhorre, when as the hot fit of their raging paſſions being ouerpaſt, they are ſomewhat recouered to their health, and haue a freer vſe of their judgement and reaſon. And therefore ſeeing all theſe things which the World eſteemeth chiefly good, haue their worth and excellencie not from themſelues, but from our opinion and conceit; let vs no longer adore theſe Idols which are of our owne making; nor ſtill ſuffering our ſelues to be bewitched with our owne phantaſies, let vs any more ſerue and reuerence theſe things which are but of an indifferent nature, and meane qualitie; becauſe wee haue magnified them in our conceits and ſeated them in the higheſt place of our hearts, which in reſpect of their ſmall worth, ſcarce deſerue any roome at all, or to ſtand (ſo much as) behind the doore, vnleſſe it were to be at vertues call, to performe ſuch offices and good duties as ſhe appointeth. But let vs learne at laſt to ſet our hearts and affections vpon ſpirituall and heauenly things, which are in their owne nature truely and ſubſtantially good, and not like the other; therefore excellent, becauſe wee affect and thinke them ſo; but therefore to bee eſteemed and much affected, becauſe in truth they are of great worth and excellency.

§. Sect. 5.
That worldly things are more commended vnto vs by eager competition than by any ſelfe-excellencie.

Thirdly, the vanity of theſe worldly things hereby appeareth, in that they are not commended vnto vs ſo much by their owne worth and excellencie, as by the competition of others who affect and ſeeke them as well as we. For had we no Corriuals in our loue to whet our affection, and ſharpen our appetite, it would ſoone faint and languiſh towards theſe earthly things, there being in themſelues no ſubſtantial good which might ſerue as fuell to nouriſh and preſerue it. But when as we ſee others admire and loue them, wee begin to imagine that there is ſomewhat in them worth our liking and deſiring, grounding this conceit not vpon our owne knowledge and experience, but vpon the judgement and practice of thoſe who haue gone before vs, or that liue with vs; who likewiſe haue been after the ſame manner deceiued and ſeduced, hauing had ſome ſuch precedents which they alſo imitate. And when this conceit hath once poſſeſſed vs, then ſelf-loue blowing the cole which phantaſie hath kindled, our hearts are preſently inflamed, with a deſire of obtayning that which ſo many ſeeke; partly to ſhew that our owne wiſdome, policie and power, if we liſt to imploy them, can goe as faſt a pace as other mens, and can with greater dexteritie and agilitie catch that game after which ſo many hunt; and partly becauſe wee imagine, that there may be ſome worth and excellency in theſe things although we be ignorant of it, which if happily it ſhould ſo fall out in the proofe and experience, wee would rather at all adventures enjoy it than another, leſt afterwards the worth appearing, we ſhould haue cauſe to repent of our ſloth and negligence, in that we haue ſuffered others to out-ſtrip and goe before vs. And thus wee affect theſe vanities not for any good or excellencie wee ſee in them, but rather in ſelfe-loue, pride, enuy, and emulation, becauſe we would preuent others, and obtaine that which they ſo much deſire. Like vnto Boyes, who with all eagerneſſe runne after a ball, not for the loue of it ſelfe, but that they may catch it before another, whereas they would ſcarce looke after it, if they had no competitour to contend with them. And as the vulgar people running in flockes to ſee ſome vaine ſight, do moue others which ſcarcely know wherfore they make ſuch haſte, to goe with them for company, and euen to outſtrip their fellowes with nimble ſpeed: ſo doe they runne with headlong haſt in the purſuite of theſe worldly vanities; not becauſe themſelues know any worth or exccellencie in them; but becauſe they ſee that many haue gone before them, and that many are ſtill going ſpeedily in this courſe, they alſo goe for company, labouring to preuent them with their haſte, and to obtaine that firſt, which being obtained they doe not know as yet whether it bee worth their hauing and enjoying, yea, and that which is worſt of all, after that they ſee their errour, and hauing had triall of theſe things in their owne experience, doe plainly perceiue, that they deſerue not their labour, nor are worthy of their loue; yet they will ſeeme highly to value and affect them ſtill, leſt the weaknes of their judgements, which ſo much valued them before they had them, might bee diſcouered; and make account of them, now they haue them in their poſſeſſion, leſt they might ſeeme to haue ſpent all their labour and ſtrength in vaine, which they haue taken and imployed in the procuring of them. Like vnto a Merchant, who hauing trauelled farre and made an hard aduenture to fetch ſome ſtones, which report made him beleeue were precious and of great eſteeme, after hee hath brought them home doth highly value them ſtill, although the cunning Lapidary haue told him that they are but counterfeit, either that hee may put them off to others at his owne prizes, or at leaſt may not impaire his credit, whenas it ſhould bee knowne that hee hath loſt all his charges, and receiued no fruit by all his labours. Or like vnto thoſe who hauing vainly ſpent much paines in the purſuit of ſome trifle, doe afterwards when they haue found their errour ſtill magnifie and extoll it, not becauſe they thinke it of any worth, but fearing leſt they ſhould bee laughed to ſcorne for their folly and loſt labour, they would by their prayſes incourage others to follow their example, that ſo they may be excuſed by the common errour, and not be ridiculous ſeeing they haue ſo many fellowes.

§. Sect. 6. Honours haue a great part of their eſteeme from competition, and ſo alſo riches, and pleaſures.

But let vs conſider this in the generall inſtances of Honours, Riches, and Pleaſures. And firſt if we examine Honours, wee ſhall finde that they haue a great part of their worth and eſteeme from competition, and the contending heate, and emulating deſires, of thoſe who affect and ſeeke after them. For what excellency is in a long fetcht Pedigree, ſauing that men contend one with another who ſhal more ennoble themſelues by fetching it furtheſt; or in fame and vaine glory, ſauing that they ſtriue who ſhall be moſt famous and beſt eſteemed of? or what priuiledge doth the vpper place bring with it, more than the lower, the right hand than the left, or the wall than the channell ſide, ſauing that men emulating one another, doe ſtriue and contend about them who ſhall haue preheminence? Finally, what worth and excellencie hath high preferment, which commonly is accompanied with moſt trouble & danger, ſauing that men ſtriue who ſhall aſcend higher on this ladder, and in the heate of their contention tread their fellowes vnder feet, that they may riſe before them? wherein what doe they elſe but behaue themſelues like children, who goe together by the eares, whileſt they contend one with another, who ſhall be King in their play? wheras within an houre after, the play being done, they are all againe equall; or imagining a little Hillocke to be a ſtrong Fort, doe aſſault and defend it with as great skill and fury, as though the holding of it were a matter of great importance; whereas after the contention is ceaſed, it remayneth emptie, and is paſſed by with neglect and contempt. And ſo theſe ambitious men hauing propounded theſe trifles as the cauſe of their emulation and contention, and being by reaſon of their pride and ſelfe-loue, impatient of any foile, doe with all earneſtneſſe and eagerneſſe ſtriue about them; not becauſe they thinke the things themſelues for which they contend are worth their paines and labour, but becauſe if they doe not obtaine the victory, they thinke themſelues much diſgraced, in that they are not able to haue their will. The like alſo may be ſaid of riches, the competition and earneſt purſuite whereof by ſo many, addeth no ſmall matter to the common opinion of their worth and eſtimation. For otherwiſe wherefore doe men ſo greedily ſcrape much more than is ſufficient for themſelues, their charge, or any other good vſe wherin they haue any purpoſe of imploying them, if they did not (meaſuring their goodneſſe by their goods) deſire to be better than other men, and therefore couet to excell them in that which they thinke doth make them commendable, & more reſpected? Why do they hoord them vp in great abundance, and like the Dogge in the Maunger neither vſe them themſelues, nor communicate them vnto any other for their vſe and benefit; but that in a kind of enuy and emulation they would exceed all other in wealth; and be accounted great by the large portion which they haue of theſe ſmall vanities? In a word, why doe they ſo highly value that which they intend neuer to vſe; if it were not that they haue got them with great labour and difficultie, and by their wit and induſtry haue out-ſtripped many who were competitours with them in this golden ſuite? Whereas contrariwiſe if their appetite were not ſharpened by this corriualſhip; if in their eagerneſſe and emulation they did not thinke that they had loſt all that, which they ſee others gaine; they would not ſo much eſteeme and ſeeke after needleſſe abundance and ſuperfluitie, but would reſt contented with that which they did know how to vſe. And thus alſo pleaſures are made truly pleaſant and delightfull, and are then chiefly eſteemed to be of ſome value, and worth the hauing, when as many contending for them, ſome one among the reſt, hath the inioying them; which if they did lie out in common, and might eaſily be inioyed without any emulation or competition, no man almoſt would looke after them, or thinke their fruition worth their coſt and labour.

Fourthly, the worthleſſe vanitie of theſe worldly things hereby appeareth; in that they haue not ſo much eſtimation from any excellencie that we find in them, when we haue them, as from the great difficultie, which wee haue found in obtaining and comming by them, our labouring, ſuffering, hazards and dangers, endearing our affection, and increaſing our loue; and making vs apt to proportion our eſtimation, not according to the worth of theſe vaine wares, but to our owne venture and paines which we haue taken in compaſſing of them; becauſe we would not be ſubiect to the cenſure of folly, for not making of a good bargaine. And hereof it is, that theſe things, though they bee but of ſmall worth, yet are they greatly eſteemed, becauſe they are purchaſed and procured with no ſmall labour; for as nothing is more eaſily contemned, than that which is eaſily gotten, according to the common prouerbe: Lightly come, and lightly gone; ſo nothing maketh a thing more deare and precious, how worthleſſe ſoeuer it be in it ſelfe, than when it is bought at theſe deare rates and compaſſed with much paines and great difficultie; It being the nature of man to haue delight of comming to his ends by the way of oppoſition, and to thinke it more glorious to inioy his deſires by a doubtfull victorie, than by a ready yeelding. And much more doth he deſire to breake open a paſſage for his hopes by violence, than to find a free entrance. Yea, and when outward oppoſition ceaſeth; the inward oppoſition which he findeth at home in his owne conſcience in compaſſing of theſe earthly things, doth much raiſe their price & eſtimation. For whē the conſcience agreeth with the deſire, and approuing of it giueth free libertie of ſeeking and inioying, then the thing deſired is commonly but lightly ſet by, and meanely eſteemed: but when it is vnlawfull either in itſelfe, or in reſpect of the meanes of comming by it; then the Law of God forbidding it, and the conſcience condemning it, doe ſet a wonderfull edge vpon the appetite, making it the more to affect it, by how much the more difficultie and hazard there is in attaining vnto it; faring herein like the riuer, which when it hath a free current, runneth quietly in its owne chanell; but finding ſtop & oppoſition it rageth and ſwelleth, and breaking downe his banks, ouerfloweth the whole Countrie.

Rom. 7. 8. Cui peccare licet peccat minus ipſa poteſtas. Semina nequitiæ languidiora facit. Ouid. Eleg. lib. 3.

§. Sect. 8. Difficultie in obtaining them, maketh honours and riches ſo much to be eſteemed

And thus honours are highly valued and eſteemed, becauſe they are not obtained without great labour and danger, as abroad by lying in open fields, by watching in the night, and toiling in the day, by innumeble perils in open fight, and ſecret ambuſhments, wounds, ſkarres, effuſion of blood, and continuall hazard of life; or elſe at home by the painefull and carefull ſeruice of the ſtate, which is often ioyned with as much hazard as labour. By which difficult meanes when they are compaſſed, they are anſwerably eſteemed and valued, not according to their owne worth, but according to theſe deare prizes, at which they were purchaſed. Or if the eſtimation of theſe honours bee not aduanced by theſe outward difficulties, (as in truth this dangerous way of comming vnto honour, was neuer in any age leſſe trauelled) yet at leſt they are valued the more, in regard of the inward oppoſition which men find in their conſciences, by vſing vnlawfull meanes to attaine vnto them, as namely counterfeiting hypocriſie, machiauellian policies, treacherous falſehood, whereby they raiſe themſelues by ſupplanting others, not caring by how wicked ſteps they clime, ſo they may riſe, and place themſelues in the ſeate of honour. The which is the more vſuall path tracted in theſe dayes, men being now become ſo politike, that they will not take ſubſtantiall paines, to bee rewarded with a ſhadow, but fitting their worke according to their wages, they compaſſe vaine honours with ſemblances of good and vaine ſhewes. But yet in the meane time by vſing theſe wicked and vnlawfull meanes to attaine vnto their deſires, they hazard their ſaluation, and for the purchaſing of honours by vnlawfull meanes, they ſet their ſoules to ſale; and therefore it is no maruell if hauing obtained them, they doe highly value them, ſeeing they haue bought them at ſuch deere rates. And thus riches are moſt highly eſteemed, when as they are moſt hardly cōpaſſed; that only being thought worth the hauing, which cannot be had without much paines and perill; and all other things being eſteemed worthleſſe and light, which haue not difficultie and danger put into the skole with them, to make them downe Audax ominia perpeti, gens humana ruit per vetitum nefas. Horat. Ode. 3. lib.

waight. This maketh pearles truly precious, becauſe they are farre fetched from the Eaſterne parts of the world, and not only bought at deare rates, but alſo brought home with great danger. This maketh gold and ſiluer eſteemable, becauſe they are digged out of the Weſterne mines with much ſweate, and not procured but by great labour and trauell, hazard and danger, both by ſea and land. This improueth riches farre aboue their worth, becauſe they are obtained with much labour, care, and watching, by pinching and afflicting the body whileſt they let it goe often empty, that they may more ſpeedily fill their cheſts; and that which is worſt of all, by hazarding the eternall ſaluation of their ſoules, in vſing wicked meanes, as lying, deceiuing, ſwearing, forſwearing, oppreſſion and all manner of crueltie, for the increaſing of their wealth. All which difficulties in getting riches, make men the more to loue and eſteeme them when they haue them: whereof it is, that hee who hath thus dearely purchaſed his wealth, doth alwayes much more affect and value it, than his heire who commeth lightly by it; euen as the mother doth much more account of a childe for which her ſelfe hath laboured, than of another which ſhould bee beſtowed on her of free gift; yea and among her owne children, commonly moſt affecteth that, in the birth whereof ſhe hath had soreſt trauell, and greateſt danger.

§. Sect.9.
Pleaſures are valued according to the pains which is taken in compaſſing them.

The like alſo may bee ſaid of pleaſures, which receiue their value and eſteeme not from any ſelfe-excellencie, but from the difficultie and paines which is taken in comming by them; neither are the ſweeteſt delights ſauourie and wel-relliſhing, vnleſſe firſt they bee ſauced with the ſharpe ſauce of trouble and labour. And therefore as men hauing otherwiſe no great appetite, vſually eate bitter Oliues before they goe to meate to ſharpen it, and get them ſtomacks: ſo they would bee ſoone glutted with delights, if an edge were not ſet on their appetite, by thoſe difficulties and labours which they vndergoe in attaining vnto them. And thus meates and drinkes are much commended when as they are far fetched and deare bought, and (like the water of the well of Bethelem) procured with the hazard of mens liues. Thus ſuch loue is ſweeteſt in inioying, which hath had moſt difficultie in obtaining: thus triumphs and ſhewes are the more valued and affected, becauſe of the great preparations that goe before them. Yea and thus alſo our delights are made much more delightfull by thoſe ſpirituall difficulties, the word of God forbidding, and the conſcience condemning them: for as the Wiſe man ſaith, ſtollen waters are ſweete, and hid bread is pleaſant; or as hee ſaith in another place, the bread which is gotten by deceit is ſweete to a man. Neither is there any thing which more commendeth pleaſure to a naturall and carnall appetite, than when it thus commeth againſt the haire, by force or ſtealth, and is condemned before it is inioyed. Now what can more ſhew the worthleſneſſe of theſe worldly vanities, than that they haue their chiefe eſtimation from thoſe things which are ſhunned and abhorred, and haue almoſt all their ſweetneſſe and delight, from other things bitter and loathſome? And as well-waters hauing no heate in themſelues, are ſaid to receiue ſome little warmth by antiperiſtaſis and the incloſure of ſome greater cold: ſo theſe vanities hauing little goodneſſe, are made to ſeeme good, when as they are compaſſed & incloſed with loathed euils, euen as this miſerable world it ſelfe would ſeeme a paradiſe to one that ſhould newly come out of hell, not in regard of the happineſſe inioyed in the Preſent eſtate, but of the vnhappineſſe and miſerie of his former condition out of which hee is eſcaped. And therefore ſeeing theſe things haue in them no ſelfe-excellencie, but are onely commended vnto vs by troubles, difficulties, and dangers, let vs not in our iudgements eſteeme them, nor ſet our hearts and affections vpon them; but moſt highly value and chiefly affect Gods ſpirituall and heauenly ioyes; which neede no ſuch miſerable orators to commend them, they being in their owne nature of greateſt worth and excellencie; and moſt eſteemable and delightfull, when as being freed from all paines and difficulties, wee ſhall peaceably and continually inioy them, without trouble or moleſtation.

Nitimur in vetitum ſemper cupimuſque negata. Sic interdictis imminet æger aquis. Ouid. lib.3. Eleg.
Prou.9.17.

Prou.20.

Quod lic gratum non lic erit. Ouid 2.Eleg.

§. Sect.
Worldly things ar eſteemed more for th rareneſ th for their g neſſe.
Nulli gr quod datum.

Laſtly, the vanitie of worldly things hereby appeareth, in that they are not ſo much eſteemed and affected for their goodneſſe, as for their rarenes; there being nothing in the world ſo excellent that is much reſpected if it grow common; nothing almoſt ſo meane and triuiall, which proprietie and raritie will not make excellent. For as a tall man is not regarded when the countrie inhabitants are almoſt all of an high ſtature; nor thoſe flowers reſpected, though otherwiſe beautifull, which grow wilde in euery field; ſo neither are any worldly things held in price, when as they are embaſed by vulgar communitie. And this is the cauſe why Diamonds are eſteemed and admired, and the Sunne neglected and little obſerued; becauſe this is ſubiect to the common view, and free to all mens vſe, that peculiar to ſome few onely, and that of the richer ſort. This maketh health to bee but ſlightly regarded, ſauing of thoſe who want it, and wealth to bee magnified and extolled. This maketh countrie commodities to be baſely valued at home, and to be much eſteemed abroad; and whereas the things themſelues are of equall worth and vſe, yet the raritie or commonneſſe wonderfully altereth the price and eſtimation. Thus honours and glorious titles if they ſhould be made common vnto all, they would of all be lightly eſteemed; whereas now being rarely and reſpectiuely conferred, they are magnified as the chiefeſt excellencies. Thus riches haue their worth improued to that high account, becauſe few can attaine vnto them; whereas if euery man abounded in wealth, then, as in the time of Salomon, ſiluer would be no more eſteemed than ſtones, nor gold than ſiluer. So who would eſteeme of coſtly attire, if all went in royall apparell? who would highly value precious ſtones, if euery one had them in poſſeſſion? In a word, no riches would be accounted treaſures, if they were no more commended by their rareneſſe, than by the worth. And the like alſo may bee ſaid of pleaſures, in which none would ioy, if all did inioy them; nor take any delight in them, if they were communicated to all, or to themſelues continually and at all times. But being made daintie in reſpect of ſeldome vſe, and conferred but to ſome as choice priuiledges, this makes thoſe who haue them to eſteeme them, as much for pride becauſe they are preferred before others, as for any delight they haue in their vſe; and thoſe who want them, to long after them, becauſe they alſo would bee aduanced to theſe no common priuiledges. This were eaſie to ſhew in particulars. For who would take pleaſure in great cheare, if all men had full tables, or themſelues at all times? Who would delight in beautie or brauerie, if herein all did match them? or in ſweete muſicke, if they had no other ſound in their eares but this melodious harmonie? In a word, there would no worldly thing bee eſteemed of any worth, if it were not for raritie and proprietie. To this purpoſe one of the Ancients ſaith, that all theſe earthly things, haue all their grace and excellencie, from their rareneſſe and ſtrangenes, neither is there any thing almoſt much eſteemed in its owne countrie, and all abundance in it ſelfe is neglected and deſpiſed. And hence it is that becauſe among certaine barbarians, gold is home-bred and abundant, their priſoners are fettered and inchained with gold; and loading malefactors with riches, they make them ſo much the more wealthie, by how much they are more guiltie and faultie. Whereby it appeareth that theſe things are not truly and abſolutely good vnto vs; for that which is good in this degree, would not be impaired, but multiplied and increaſed by communitie, euen as the ioyes of heauen are infinitely redoubled, in regard that there being innumerable Saints and Angels, which mutually communicate in one anothers ioyes, according to their number their ioyes alſo are redoubled and multiplied. And therefore let vs eſteeme and ſet our hearts and affections vpon this heauenly happineſſe, which the more common it is, the better it is, according to the nature of true goodneſſe; and not vpon theſe earthly vanities, which becauſe they doe not ſatisfie thoſe that haue them, therefore they ſeeke contentment by multiplying and ingroſſing them, thinking to finde that in all, which they cannot finde in any part; and affect proprietie in them, becauſe they ſeeme vnto themſelues to want, that which they ſee others enioy, and to bee robbed of that, which their greedie eye beholdeth in anothers poſſeſſion.

CHAP. X.

Of the vanitie of Worldly glory, popularitie, prioritie, and the fauour of Princes.

§. Sect. 1. That vaine glory is not true honour, but falſe and counterfeit.

WEE haue ſhewed the vanitie of all theſe worldly things, both by teſtimonies, and manifeſt reaſons. Let vs now more particularly examine the vanitie of honours, riches, and pleaſures: where wee ſhall plainely ſee, that as there is generally no worth or excellencie in theſe worldly things; ſo neither in any of theſe ſpeciall parts and branches. And firſt for worldly honour, how baſe and contemptible it is, in compariſon either of that true honor of a Chriſtian, before deſcribed or the eternall glory of Gods kingdome, it will more eaſily appeare, if wee conſider it in the chiefe parts thereof, and take a ſerious view of thoſe things which in the world are accounted honourable. For this worldly honour conſiſteth in fame and vaine glorie, or popularitie and fauour of the common people; or prioritie of place and precedence, or the fauour of Princes, and great perſonages; or finally in high aduancement and preferment, to places and offices of greateſt dignitie and royaltie; or in the concurrence of all, or ſome of theſe together: all which are vaine, and of no worth, or true excellencie, as we ſhall plainly perceiue, if wee doe take but a ſlight view of them ſeuerally. And firſt for fame and vaine-glory, which is nothing elſe but the applauſe of the multitude, whereby they magnifie and extoll a man out of their opinion of his worth and excellencie, if wee examine it, we ſhall find both that it is falſe and counterfeit, and alſo that it is vaine and vnprofitable. For it is not that true honour before deſcribed, conſiſting in a good name and eſtimation of the godly and vertuous, for true worth and deſerts;

deſert; but the clamour of the common people, extolling thoſe, whom in a ſudden opinion they thinke worthy: which is not (like that) referred to Gods glory and the ſpirituall good of the partie; but being arrogated to themſelues as their owne due, it wholly tendeth to puffe them vp with pride, and a fond opinion of ſelfe-excellencie. And therefore ſeeing it is falſe and counterfeit, how glorious ſoeuer it appeares, it is not to be valued, but to be contemned as baſe and forged. For as when we ſee perſons on the ſtage in glorious and royall apparell, and much more richly adorned, than ſuch as are great Princes and potentates in truth, yet wee doe not reuerence or much reſpect them, becauſe wee know that they are but perſonated, and only great by apiſh imitation: ſo how goodly a ſhew ſoeuer this vaine glorie maketh, yet ſeeing it is not the true glory of a Chriſtian, but a falſe and counterfeit ſhadow thereof, it is to be neglected and contemned.

Chryſoſt, Homil. ad pop. 43 tom. 4.

§. Sect. 2.
That worldly glorie is vaine and vnprofitable.

Fama ventus eſt, fumus eſt, vmbra eſt, nihil eſt.

But as this fame and glorie of the world is falſe, ſo alſo vaine and vnprofitable; as it may appeare at the firſt ſight, if we doe but conſider of the name, which by common tradition is giuen vnto it. For although all worldly things are full of vanitie, yet this glory peculiarly hath this title of vaine prefixed vnto it, as challenging it vnto its ſelfe by a certaine kind of proprietie, or ſingular eminencie, as though howſoeuer all things are vaine, yet nothing in compariſon of this vaine glory. For what in truth is this falſe fame and glory of the world, but a ſmoake or vapour, which is toſſed to and fro with the breath of euery ones mouth? What is it but a cloud or ſhadow, which whileſt a man thinketh to catch and hold faſt, it vaniſheth away and commeth to nothing? And what doe worldly men doting vpon this vanitie, and ſeeking to imbrace it, that they may commit ſpirituall whoredome with it, but Ixion-like in ſtead of their goddeſſe catch a cloud, on which they beget the monſtrous Centaures of many miſſhapen and vgly ſinnes? What doe they but like wanton and fooliſh boyes runne after a ſopie bubble, rayſed with the breath of their companions mouthes, becauſe it ſeemeth beautifull through varietie of colours, although it commonly vaniſh in the purſuing, or at leſt breake as ſoone as it is but touched? And yet though this glory bee neuer ſo vaine, and the purſuite thereof moſt childiſh and ridiculous, notwithſtanding the wiſe men of the world fall into this abſurd dotage Chameleon-like gaping after this common aire and feeding themſelues fat onely with the conceit of this vulgar breath. And as they ſeeme to haue their life, or that which is the life of their life, all their ioy and comfort, from the breathing in of this ayre; ſo alſo it is the ſterne which ruleth them in all their courſes, turning them to and fro at the prayſers pleaſure: neither is there any meanes whereby a man may better carrie theſe earthly and brittle pitchers, than by holding them by the eares, and tying them faſt vnto him by this golden ſtring of praiſe and commendations. For if they be extolled and magnified, what deſperate difficulties will they not vndertake? What dangerous enterpriſes will they not attempt? What toilesome labour will they refuſe to take? or what exceſſiue coſt will they not beſtow, that they may continue or encreaſe their fame and vaine glorie? Againe, if there bee no man that ſeeth them, or that ſeeing will commend them, how ſluggiſh and ſlothfull are they in attempting any vertuous actions, where the leſt difficultie or danger doth appeare? Herein not vnfitly to bee compared vnto ſhips, which ſaile merrily forward whileſt they haue a good gale of wind, ſtand ſtill when they are becalmed, and turne backe againe when the guſt bloweth hard againſt them: ſo theſe goe cheerefully forward in vertuous courſes, ſo long as the winde of vaine glory helpeth them forward, ſtand ſtill and doe nothing worth note, when as they are not praiſed and commended; and are vtterly diſcouraged and turned back againe, when they are diſpraiſed for well doing; being readie to embrace any wicked courſe which promiſeth vnto them glorie and reputation. Or like vnto Organe pipes, which are dumbe when they want wind, but being blowed with the bellowes, and well played vpon, yeeld melodious harmonie: ſo theſe men wanting the wind of vaine glorie giue no good ſound, but being blowed and euen filled with the breath of mens praiſes, they are ready to yeeld a muſicall concent of, at leſt, a ſeeming vertue, in their words and actions. Yea ſo immoderately doe worldlings dote vpon this idoll, that when they haue nothing in themſelues of any worth, which they may offer vnto it as a ſacrifice to make it propitious vnto them; and that they may eternize this vaine fame and glory vnto poſterity; they build ſtately houſes, and call them after their owne names; or erect (as Abſolon did his pillar) monuments and ſumptuous tombes and Sepulchres, not ſo much to keepe in their rotten bodies, as to preſerue their fame from rotting and periſhing. But this is a ſigne of baſe nature, ſo ſhamefully to begge glorie, the wages of vertue, from poſteritie, after they are dead, which they neuer earned for any vertuous actions, that they did when they were aliue; to catch at the ſhadow of vertue, and neglect the bodie, which when they haue got they are neuer the richer; for who would not eſteeme that as light as nothing, which is the reward of nothing, and impudently extorted without deſert?

Sect. 3
…t con-
…t of vaine
…e is impug-
…s in the …ptures.

But let vs know that not only theſe baſe ſhifts, but euen this vaine glorie alſo is to bee contemned and reiected of all true Chriſtians. Firſt, becauſe it is forbidden and condemned in the Scriptures, both in reſpect of our deſires and actions: in the former regard, the Apoſtle exhorteth vs, not to be deſirous of vaine glorie, prouoking one another, and enuying one another: and for the other, hee willeth vs, that nothing bee done through contention or vaine glory, but that in meekeneſſe of mind euery man eſteeme other better than himſelfe. And our Sauiour Chriſt maketh it a ſigne of an infidell, when they affect theſe vaine praiſes one from another, and ſeeke not the honour which commeth of God alone. And as this contempt of vaine glory is in the Scriptures enioyned, ſo our Sauiour Chriſt and his holy Apoſtle doe profeſſe the practiſe thereof, for ſo Chriſt ſaith, that hee ſought not his owne praiſe: yea ſo farre was our Sauiour from ambitious affecting and ſeeking this vaine glorie of the world, that hee would not accept of it when it was offered: I receiue not (ſaith hee) the praiſe of men. And this alſo the Apoſtle Paul profeſſeth, that he ſought for no praiſe neither from the Theſſalonians, not from any other, and that he paſſed very little to be iudged of the Corinthians, or of mans iudgement: whoſe example wee alſo are to imitate, if we would be accounted the true diſciples of Ieſus Chriſt.

Secondly, let vs conſider, that as this vaine glory and vulgar praiſe is in it ſelfe vaine, ſo is it great vanitie and folly for any to deſire it; for what is this glory, but, as I ſaid, a ſmoake, a ſhadow, and a brittle bubble, which is both blowed vp, & broken with the breath of the ill-agreeing and vnconſtant multitude? And what can be more vaine & void of excellencie, than that which hath its ſubſiſtence and being in ſo vnſtable a ground, as the vaine breath and mutable opinion of the common people? Who as they will extoll a man for a ſmall cauſe, and not ſeldome for counterfeit ſhewes and apparances onely; ſo oftentimes they will reuerſe their iudgement, and condemne for no cauſe, their affections ſoone tyring themſelues, if they be not continually nouriſhed with new matter of praiſe. And who would value that at any worth which ſtandeth or falleth at euery ones deuotion? And as their praiſes are vaine and of no worth, ſo alſo are they vaine and void of wiſdome who doe much affect them: for as their folly were ridiculous, who would haue blind men judge of colours, and account that moſt excellent which in their doome and opinion is preferred; ſo is it no leſſe abſurd to make the vulgar people of the world iudges of vertue and good parts who being blind and ignorant, iudge not according to truth, but according to their fond opinion; and hauing their approbation and applauſe, to become proud and conceited of it. The which folly of vaine-glorious men is ſo much the greater in that as they are blind, and therefore their iudgement of no value, ſo alſo though it were of any worth, yet it were ſcarce worth the hauing, in regard of their mutabilitie & inconſtancie; being like weather-cocks ready to turne with euery winde, and to alter their opinion with euery flying rumour, this day prayſing, and to morrow diſpraiſing, now extolling thoſe, whom they admire vp to skie, and ſoone after exclaiming againſt them with open mouth, and caſting them downe againe with their obloquies and diſgraces to the loweſt part of hell. Although therefore we be delighted with theſe bright and radiant beames of fame and glory; yet let vs not deſire like the Moone to ſhine with this borrowed light; for then our glory will bee moſt inconſtant; ſometimes in the full, and ſometimes in the waine, now obſcure and darke, a little while after growing and increaſing, and when it is come to the full, preſently againe decreaſing till it come to ſuch obſcurity that it cannot bee diſcerned. Herein alſo like the Moone, in that the nearer wee approach vnto theſe from whom wee borrow our light by familiarity and conuerſation with them, the more the brightneſſe of our fame is obſcured, they being apt to praiſe thoſe moſt, with whom they are leſt acquainted; and contrariwiſe the more remote and oppoſite we are vnto them, the more fully and freely doe they impart vnto vs their praiſes and commendations. Onely herein they differ and are vnlike, in that the Moone hauing loſt her borrowed light, doth recouer it againe within as few dayes, and with as great facility as it was depriued of it; whereas thoſe who haue once loſt their light of glorie and reputation, which they had from the vnconſtant multitude, are ſeldome againe reſtored vnto it, or at leſt after a long time, and with great difficulty: their diſgraces herein reſembling wounds, which are ſoone inflicted, but long in curing; and alſo being healed, a ſcarre and blemiſh ſtill remaineth.

Sic eſt vulgus: ex veritate pauca, ex opinione multa æſtimat. Cic. pro Roſc. Com.

§. Sect. 5.
That true glorie conſiſteth not in vulgar praiſes, but in the approbation of God and the teſtimonie of our owne conſciences.

Let vs therefore like the Sunne deſire to haue our light in our ſelues; our owne conſciences approuing, iuſtifying, and commending our vertues and good parts; and if wee will needes haue honour and prayſe, let vs haue it from within vs; for no man can diſhonour him, who thus maketh himſelfe truely honorable; whereas if wee inwardly diſhonour and diſgrace our ſelues with the obloquie of an euill conſcience, all the praiſes and commendations which we Sed quæris laudem ab alio? tu igitur teipſum honora, & nemo te dehoneſtare poterit. Chryſoſt. in Matth. 27. Homil. 88.

Stultus ſum ſi ciſtellæ labiorum tuorum gloriam meam credidero, et capero mendicare eam abs te cum habere voluero. Bernard ſuper. Cant. ſerm. 13. & epiſt. 42.

Magna eſt eius gloria quæ nullius laudibus creſcit, & nullius vituperatione minuitur, Caſſian. in epiſt.

Sed apud populum, inquies, magna de ipſo æſtimatio eſt: quidnam hoc ſibi vult? non enim certè populus, ſed Deus iudex eſt, &c. Chryſoſt. in Matth 12. homil. 41.

Vt quid enim aut alterius hominis aut de meo ipſius iudicio ſolicitus ſum, cuius nec vituperio reprobus, nec laude probatus inueniar? Si ante hominum tribunal oporteret ſtare, in illorum laudibus gloriarer, &c. Bernard. de verbis Apoſtoli. Qui gloriatur, &c. ſermo.

we can haue outwardly from men, will not all profit or auaile vs. Againe, if wee eſteeme our glorie a chiefe treaſure, why ſhould we commit it to the cuſtodie of other men, and lay it vp in the weake cheſt of their mouthes? why ſhould wee ſtand at their curteſie and deuotion, to haue it when they pleaſe, and to receiue repulſes and diſgraces, when it ſtandeth with their liking? why ſhould wee beg that which our ſelues may freely giue? and be beholding for that, which wee might haue at our owne diſpoſing? why ſhould we not lay vp our treaſure where we may at pleaſure reſume it, when wee haue vſe of it; but ſuffer it to be out of our owne hands in other mens keeping, and intreat that which we might command? or if wee thinke that the iron barred cheſt of a good conſcience, is not ſtrong or ſafe enough to keepe this iewell, but needs wee will put it out, and entruſt it vnto others ſafer cuſtodie; then what ridiculous folly is it, to make choice of the vulgar peoples lips and mouthes, being a weake and open coffer without locke or bolt, which being ſhut to none, any that liſt may ſteale it out? How much better were it for vs to commit this treaſure vnto Gods owne cuſtody, ſo approuing our conſciences vnto him, as that wee may haue his praiſe and approbation, ſeeing it will be moſt ſecure and ſafe in his keeping, becauſe he is moſt powerfull to preſerue it, and moſt faithfull to reſtore it? For then would it bee out of the reach both of ſcorne and enuie, and attaine vnto ſuch a perfect greatnes, that neither the prayſes of worldlings would increaſe it, nor their diſpraiſes diminiſh or abate it? Neither in truth will it ought auaile vs, though worldlings and vulgar people ſhould with neuer ſo much conſtancie extoll and magnifie vs, if wee haue not prayſe and approbation from God, and our owne conſciences; ſeeing theſe alone are our witneſſe and our iudge, they hauing nothing to doe either to iuſtifie or condemne vs. For who would not thinke him extreamely fooliſh, who in running his race or ſtriuing for a maſterie, ſhould chiefely affect the applauſe of the ignorant people ſtanding by; and neglect the skilfull iudges from whom he hopeth to receiue the crowne or garland? Who would not thinke him worſe than mad, who being a courtier, and ſtanding vpon his preferment, ſhould carefully deſire to bee praiſed of the blacke guard, and neglect the approbation of the King himſelfe and his chiefe counſellers? But this and much greater folly doe they commit, who neuer regard the commendations and prayſe of our chiefe iudge and King, and the Saints, his chiefe nobles; in the meane time aſpiring with all their wits and endeauours, to haue the applauſe of vaine worldlings, whoſe good word cannot helpe them, nor their ill word hurt them.

§. Sect.
That it is vnleſ to ſeek glorie.

Laſtly, let vs conſider, that though honor and glory were to be deſired and ſought of vs; yet now there is no time of affecting more of it, than the approbation of God, the good report among the godly, and the teſtimonie of our owne conſciences; but we muſt (as I haue ſhewed) returne all honor vnto God, ſaying with David, not vnto vs, not vnto vs, but vnto thy name giue the glory. For why ſhould we much affect honour in this vale of teares, ſeeing by our ſinnes we daily diſhonour God? Why ſhould wee deſire prayſe and glory in the world for our vertues and good parts; ſeeing they are ſo defectiue and ſo full of wants and imperfections, that they are ſufficiently prayſed, if they bee pardoned; and haue glorie enough, if they be not diſgraced? Wee are heere full of ſores and wounds, and therefore we had more need of ſalues to heale vs, than of glorious ornaments to grace and beautifie vs: we are ſubſtantially emptie of true vertue and ſanctifying graces; and therefore it better becommeth vs to ſeeke after the ſpirituall food of our ſoules, whereby wee may bee filled and ſatisfied, than to gape after the winde of words, which may well puffe vs vp with pride, but cannot ſatiſfie vs. We had neede of wholeſome nouriſhment to keepe vs from ſtaruing, and doe we wantonly affect liquorous dainties? Wee want neceſſarie cloathes to keepe vs warme, and doe wee looke after theſe curious and ſlight ornaments? Wee are here poore pilgrimes in the place of our exile and baniſhment, painfully trauelling towards our heauenly countrie, and dare we dreame of glorie, crownes, and ſwelling titles? yea rather let vs firſt ſeeke the ſubſtance, and then at our leiſure looke after ceremonies; let vs firſt take care for the bodie of vertue, and then the ſhadow of honour will follow of its owne accord; let vs heere according to the Angels ſong aſcribe all glorie vnto God in the high heauens, and reſt contented, whileſt wee continue on earth, with peace and good will, expecting our crowne when wee haue finiſhed our courſe, and waiting for fulneſſe of honour and perfect glorie, when as being freed from all corruption, we ſhall bee perfected alſo in all grace and goodneſſe.

Pſal. 115.

Luke 2. 14.

§. Sect.
That it is great fol affect po ritie, and poſſible to pleaſe the multitude.

And thus much concerning vaine glory and worldly fame. The next branch of honour is popularity, conſiſting in the immoderate deſiring, and ambitious ſeeking of the loue and fauour of the common people, the which is as vaine and worthleſſe as the other: and therefore their folly is no leſſe, who too much affect it, and dote vpon it. We may indeed, according to the Apoſtles counſaile, labour to haue peace with all men, yea

Rom. 12.

yea, we may moderately deſire to pleaſe all, ſo that God bee not diſpleaſed, and to haue their loue and fauour, ſo that wee vſe lawfull meanes only, and doe not ſo eagerly hunt after the fauour of men, as that we are ready to purchaſe it by making ſale of the loue of God: but this is that popularitie which is to be condemned, when as we ouer-value their loue aboue its worth, when wee too much dote vpon it, ſeating it in our hearts aboue the loue of God; or finally, when we ſeeke it firſt and principally, not caring what hypocriticall ſhewes, and falſe ſemblances, what ſubtile policies and wicked courſes wee vſe for the compaſſing of our vaine deſires. In all which reſpects this fooliſh popularitie is to be contemned and rejected. To which end let vs conſider: firſt, that it is a fooliſh thing to number fauours and not weigh them; and to ſtudie rather to pleaſe many, than to pleaſe thoſe which are good. For, as one ſaith, what can be more abſurd than to make high account of their fauours joyned all together, and to contemne them all when they are ſingled and ſeuered? But how much more is it groſſe and impious, to endeuour rather to pleaſe a multitude of wicked Worldlings, than God himſelfe? and by winning their fauours in that which is euill, to heare this teſtimony ſounding in our conſciences, that we are not the ſeruants of Ieſus Chriſt? Secondly, it may ſerue to weane vs from immoderate ſeeking of theſe vulgar fauours, if we doe but conſider that it is a matter of great difficulty, and almoſt impoſſibility to pleaſe the multitude, and not to diſpleaſe thoſe which are wiſe and vertuous; for ſuch difference and contrarietie there is between their judgements, diſpoſitions, and affections, that that which the one eſteemeth, the other contemneth, that which the one liketh, the other loatheth, and that which they approue and magnifie, theſe improue and juſtly condemne. If therefore we cannot pleaſe both, who would not chuſe to pleaſe rather the better, than the greater part? who would much care for their fauour & approbation, whom himſelfe neither fauoureth nor alloweth? or greatly deſire to be liked of thoſe, whom he doth not like, nor vnto whom he would be like; neglecting in the meanetime, the loue and liking of the wiſe and vertuous, whom he inwardly reuerenceth and admireth, becauſe they are ouermatched with multitude? To this purpoſe one ſaith, that it is a ſhame for a Man to affect the pleaſing of thoſe whom hee would not imitate: for either they are not good; and then being euill, it is no great matter to be prayſed of them; or they are good, and then we ought to imitate them: but thoſe that are good, are good through their vertue, and vertue affecteth not that which is in the power of other men; and therefore hee that imitateth the good, doth not ambitiouſly deſire any mans prayſe; and hee that imitateth the euill, is vnworthy of prayſe.

§. *Sect.*8.
That it is impoſſible to pleaſe the multitude & pleaſe God.

But as it is hard to pleaſe the multitude, and to pleaſe alſo thoſe which are wiſe and good: ſo it is a matter of much more difficultie, to haue their fauour and the loue of God; becauſe the vulgar multitude being infected with many corruptions, affect thoſe chiefly who are like themſelues, and who are ready by euill arts to compaſſe their fauour, and to run any wicked courſe which may fit their phantaſie, and pleaſe their humour, for the obtaining of their loue. And therefore one concludeth that hee will neuer indeuour to pleaſe the vulgar people; for thoſe things (ſaith he) that I know and approue they allow not, and thoſe things which they allow, I know not. Who can pleaſe the people whom vertue pleaſeth not? for their fauour is gotten by wicked arts; and they that will pleaſe them, muſt become like vnto them; neither will they approue thee, vnleſſe they acknowledge thee for one of their cōpany. Now it is a matter of much greater moment, what thou ſeemeſt to thy ſelfe, than what thou appeareſt vnto others. Seeing then the multitude is for the moſt part euill, and wee cannot pleaſe euill men but by euill meanes, it followeth hereupon, that they who will be gracious with the vulgar crew, muſt be vngracious in themſelues, and they who will pleaſe the wicked route, muſt diſpleaſe God, yea, and themſelues too, if they haue any grace or goodneſſe in them. And hence it is that our Sauiour Chriſt denounceth a woe againſt ſuch as are pleaſing to all. Woe be vnto you (ſaith hee) when all men ſpeake well of you; becauſe it is impoſſible to haue the liking and approbation of the wicked, vnleſſe wee loſe the fauour of God, by joyning with them in their wicked courſes. An example whereof we haue in Herod, who affecting popularitie, did to gaine the fauour of the people, put to death the Apoſtle Iames, and when hee ſaw that it pleaſed the Iewes hee proceeded further, and apprehended Peter, with a purpoſe to bring him likewiſe to the ſlaughter. As alſo in the corrupt Gouernor Fælix, who though he knew Pauls innocencie, yet to get fauour of the Iewes he left him ſtill in bonds.

Iohn 15.19.

Nunquam volui populo placere: nam quæ ego ſcio non probat populus, quæ probat populus ego neſcio, &c. Senec. Epiſt. 29.

Si multis vita tua placuerit, tibi placere non poterit, Senec.

Luke 6.26.

Acts 12. 2,3,4.

Acts 24.28.

§. *Sect.*9.
That popularitie is the vaile of much wickedneſſe.

And as this too much popularitie is a notable meanes to thruſt men head-long into wicked courſes; ſo oftentimes it is the vaile and ſhadow wherewith men maske and hide all manner of ſinne, and a meanes by the furtherance whereof they incourage themſelues to commit horrible crimes and outragious wickedneſſe; as Murther, Treaſon, Rebellion, Parricide, and what not. An example whereof we haue in Abſolon, who ambitiouſly affecting the Kingdome, though it were with the murther of his moſt deare father,

2.Sam. 15.2,3.

ther, vſeth this popularitie, as the vaile of his wickedneſſe, and as the chiefe meanes of accompliſhing his Deuilliſh purpoſes: And the like is to be obſerued in almoſt all ambitious Traytours, who aſpiring vnto Soueraigntie, doe in the firſt place lay this as the foundation of their proud rebellion, to become gracious with the common people. Finally, as it is the cauſe of much ſinne, ſo commonly it expoſeth thoſe who doe imbrace it, vnto danger and puniſhment; for the loue and fauour of the vulgar people being exceeding mutable and inconſtant, euen like the weather and calmenes of the Sea, doth draw men on to the purſuing of deſperate attempts: and when the leaſt perill appeareth, forſaketh and leaueth them in the middeſt of danger. In which reſpect it is fitly compared to a faire and fauourable wind, which inuiteth paſſengers to put forth into the Sea, and hauing brought them into the mayne, either there leaueth them becalmed, or turning about raiſeth againſt them a dangerous ſtorm. In reſpect of both which ſinnes and dangers, that commonly accrew to thoſe which are popular, euen the Heathen man eſteemed it a part of happineſſe, to be rather ſcorned, than magnified by the multitude. And therfore let not vs, who profeſſing Chriſtianitie ſhould haue more profited in true wiſdome, account it a part of our felicitie to be highly aduanced in their loue and fauour; but contemning this diſhonorable honour, of being gracious with the graceleſſe, and pleaſing to the wicked multitude, let vs labour in the firſt place to pleaſe God, and to bee approoued by our owne conſciences; and in the next place to mayntaine our good name and reputation among the godly and vertuous; not looking to the ſmalneſſe of their number, but to the greatneſſe of their worth, & the excellency of their judgement. In which reſpect we ſhould preferre one of theſe ſharpſighted Eagles, before a whole ſwarme of thoſe buzzing flies.

O funeſtus multis populi dirusq; fauor, qui cum flatu vela ſecundo ratis impleuit, vexitq; procul languidus idem, deſerit alto ſæuoq; mari, Senec. in Octauia.

Fœlix nondum eſt quem turba non deridet. Senec.

Turpe decus placuiſſe malis.

§. Sect. 10. The vanitie of priority of place and precedencie.

And thus much concerning popularitie. The next branch of Honour is priority or precedencie, conſiſting in the hauing or taking of the vpper place, or better hand: a thing in it ſelfe ſo vaine and friuolous, that it is vnfit to bee the ſubiect of any graue and Chriſtian diſcourſe: but yet ſo much eſteemed and ſtood vpon among Worldlings, out of their pride and ſelfe-loue, that they more bend their thoughts, and ſpend their labour, in attaining vnto this vanitie, than about the aſſurance of their owne ſaluation, or thoſe vnſpeakable ioyes of Gods Kingdome, being more ſtudious and carefull of hauing an high place among men, than to haue any place among the Saints in Heauen. Yea, ſo doe they value this prioritie and vpper hand, that they vſually make it the occaſion of mortall quarrels, and deſperate frayes, and chuſe rather to hazard the loſſe of their liues than the loſſe of that place, which their pride makes them thinke is due vnto them. But Chriſtians who muſt deny themſelues, and in all humilitie follow their Maſter Chriſt, muſt learne to contemne this idle vanitie. To which purpoſe let vs conſider, that if wee will follow our Sauiours counſell, we muſt take the loweſt place at Feaſts and Meetings, vntill others taking notice of our worth doe preferre and cauſe vs to ſit higher: if we will be aduiſed by his holy Apoſtle, we muſt indeed contend about Honour, yet not in taking, but in giuing it; we muſt ſtriue to haue the precedence, but in humilitie, outſtripping others, in preferring them before our ſelues; In giuing honour (ſaith hee) goe one before another. And againe, Be not high minded, but make your ſelues equall to them of the lower ſort. Furthermore, let vs conſider, that this difference of places, & hands, is a matter of opinion onely, which bringeth vnto no man any true worth or reall good; yea, rather it maketh them hated for their pride and inſolence, when they preſſe higher than beſeemeth them: and if opinion ſhould vary (as it doth in diuers times and Countries) then the ſuppoſed worth of this vanitie would alter alſo, making the wall worſe than the out-ſide, and the middle better than the vpper end. Let vs remember that the Heathen Monarch could teach vs this leſſon, that not the place the man, but the man doth dignifie the place: and foule ſhame it is for Chriſtians to excell him in pride, whoſe ambition was ſuch that the whole World could not ſatisfie it. Let vs know that this priuiledge of place on earth is common to the wicked and reprobate, ſo that when we haue ſeated our ſelues as high as we can, there are many hundreds in Hell that haue bin higher than we. And therefore let vs not ſtriue for an high place in the world, but rather that we may haue ſome place in Gods Kingdome; and thinke with our ſelues what ſhame and confuſion it will bring, to thoſe who hauing in this life had the higheſt places among men, ſhall in the life to come mauger their pride, be thruſt downe into one of the loweſt places of Hell, and haue the Deuils and wicked Spirits inſulting ouer them.

Rom.12.1

§. Sect Of the of Prin
fauou

The fourth branch of worldly Honour is aduancement and preferment, which either reſpecteth perſons, or places and dignities: the former is, when as men are extraordinarily aduanced into the fauour and eſtimation of Princes & great Potentates of the world, which howſoeuer it is to bee eſteemed in it ſelfe good, when as it is obtained by lawfull and honeſt meanes, yet it degenerateth and becommeth euill vnto thoſe who aſpire vnto it as their chiefe goodneſſe; in their iudgements preferring, in their affections deſiring, and in their practice ſeeking, the fauour of mortall and earthly Princes, before the fauour and loue of the immortall and heauenly King: which is the caſe of all thoſe who vſe wicked and vnlawful courſes, either to gain, or retaine their loue; as lying, diſſembling, hypocriſie, ſycophancie, fauning, flattery, and other ſuch Deuilliſh arts and policies. But howſoeuer Christians are much to account of the loue of their Princes and Rulers, when as hauing it, they may alſo retaine the loue and fauour of God, becauſe they are his Deputies and Lieutenants vpon earth: yet when there is ſuch oppoſition betweene them, that both will not ſtand together, (as it alwayes hapneth when either it cannot be gotten or kept but by ſinfull and wicked meanes) then is this fauour of great Potentates to be lightly eſteemed, yea, to be contemned and rejected, that we may retain the fauour and loue of God; according to the example of the three children, who howſoeuer they were in chiefe fauour and eſtimation with Nebuchadnezer, yet when they could not enjoy it ſtill, vnleſſe they would offend God, by committing Idolatry, in worſhipping the golden Image, they ſet his fauour at naught, and regarded not his diſpleaſure and fierce wrath: as alſo in Iohn the Baptiſt, who though hee were in good account with Herod, yet hazarded the loſſe of his eſteeme, and incurred his indignation, rather than hee would neglect his dutie, in admoniſhing and reproouing him for his ſinne.

Which examples that wee may imitate, and learne to loathe this ſweetneſſe of worldly fauour, when the poyſon of ſinne is mixed with it, let vs conſider that it is not onely vaine and vnprofitable, but alſo dangerous and hurtfull. The vanitie chiefly appeareth in the vnconſtancie and mutabilitie of it, and that both in reſpect of the fauour it ſelfe, and the perſons fauouring. For the former, who knoweth not, that it is vſuall in the Courts of great Princes, to be one day in fauour, & the next in heauy diſpleaſure; now graced with the chiefe Honours of a Kingdome, and ſoone after diſgraced and vtterly neglected? An example whereof we haue in Haman, who being the Kings chiefe Fauourite, ruled all at his owne pleaſure; and the next day following was hanged vpon the gallowes which himſelfe had made for Mordecay. The which alteration often hapneth, for a ſmall cauſe, often vpon an appearance and ſurmize only; and not ſeldome vpon meere phantaſie and will, that they may pleaſe themſelues with varietie of new Fauourites; for as they oftentimes aduance them highly into their loue without any deſert, vpon conceit and opinion only, ſo this varying, their loue alſo varieth, ſometimes turning to a cold neglect, and ſometimes into mortall hatred. In which reſpect Princes Fauourites are fitly compared to Counters vſed for computation and caſting accounts; which being all in themſelues of like value, haue, according as it pleaſeth the accountant to place them, a farre differing eſtimate, ſome ſtanding for thouſands, ſome for hundreds, and ſome for vnites; yea, and thoſe which now haue the place of the greateſt ſumme, doe by and by ſtand for the leaſt and thoſe which were of leaſt eſtimate, are ſoone after taken for the greateſt number. And in the ſame regard Princes fauours are likened vnto a tender eye, which the leaſt moat falling into, cauſeth to water, and ſomtimes is offended with a blaſt of winde: for ſo the ſmalleſt trifle often changeth their affection, & ſometimes meere winde of words, the rumours and tales of Backbiters and Sycophants moue them to diſpleaſure. Of this Dauid had experience, who being greatly in Sauls fauour, ſuddenly procured his hatred, for no other cauſe, but by his owne worth and good deſerts, and the others jealouſie and vnjuſt ſuſpition. And therefore hauing by his owne experience, come to the knowledge of this inconſtancie and mutabilitie; he ſaith that it is better to truſt in the Lord, than to haue confidence in Princes, becauſe where he loueth, hee loueth to the end: his loue and fauour being immutable and vnchangeable. To which purpoſe alſo Ieremy ſaith, that the hope of the hils is but vaine, and the multitude of the mountains, but in the Lord our God is the health of Iſrael. But though it were granted that the fauour of Princes were immutable, yet there is no cauſe why wee ſhould ſet our hearts much vpon it, for as much as themſelues are mortall, and ready to leaue vs when wee moſt beare our ſelues vpon them, and to faile vs when as wee thinke their loue our chiefe ſtrength. And this argument Dauid vſeth to diſſwade vs from truſting in Princes, becauſe their breath departeth, and they returning to their earth, all their thoughts periſh; accounting him bleſſed who puts his whole confidence in the Lord, whoſe loue is vnchangeable and himſelfe eternall, and not in the Kings and Potentates of the earth, whoſe loue is mutable, and themſelues mortall, and conſequently their fauours are a vaine ſtay to reſt vpon, ſeeing they die with them: neither let any man thinke, that their fauours receiued are annexed to the Crown, and will continue by ſucceſſion, ſeeing there is nothing more common, than for the heire to hate them, whom his father or predeceſſor loued and eſteemed; it being the nature of ſoueraigne power not to joy much in others loue, but rather to delight themſelues in creatures of their owne making.

Orontes Apotheg. apud Plutarch. p. 297.B.

Pſal. 118.9.
Iohn 13.1.

Ier. 31.5.

Pſal. 146.3, 4.

§. Sect. 13.
That the fauours of Princes are vnprofitable.

But as this fauour of worldly Princes is vain, ſo alſo is it vnprofitable; neither bringing to thoſe that haue it any great good, nor exempting & freeing them from any great euil.

It doth not make them better or more vertuous; yea, oftentimes much worſe, and more vitious than thoſe that want it, puffing them vp with pride, and cauſing them to bee inſolent in all their carriage and behauiour. It doth not free them from dangers, but rather expoſes them vnto them, nor deliuereth them from any great euils, as from the wrath of God, ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, death and condemnation. And therefore the Pſalmiſt willeth vs not to truſt in Princes, nor in the ſonne of man, becauſe there is no helpe in them. And yet their fauours were more to bee valued and eſteemed, if as they did not greatly helpe vs, ſo they did not much hurt vs: But the truth is, they lay vs open to many perils, and ſubiect vs to many euils. For to ſay nothing of thoſe dangers of ſinne, to which they hazard vs, by making vs to forget God and our ſelues, with all good duties which wee owe to both: they expoſe vs alſo to many worldly perils, as to the hatred of all thoſe who enuie our aduancement, and diſdaine that we rather than they ſhould bee partakers of ſuch extraordinary fauours; and to all their cunning and malicious plots, whereby they ſeeke to vndermine vs, & to worke our ruine. Yea, no ſmall dangers doe we runne into, in reſpect of theſe great Potentates, who doe affect vs; becauſe their loue is vnconſtant, and ſeldome doe they vary and change towards their great Fauourites, but it is with their vtter ruine. In reſpect whereof, familiaritie with them, is as if one played with a tame Lion, whoſe greateſt loue is joyned with imminent danger; ſeeing if hee be but a little angred, he hath alwayes power to pull them in pieces, which though hee doe not euery day put in execution, yet is he daily feared; and though they often ſcape his pawes, yet commonly at laſt they are payed home once for all. Laſtly, as the fauour of great Potentates expoſes their Fauourites into many dangers, ſo doth it alſo commonly plunge them into innumerable euils, and firſt and eſpecially by drawing them on to baſe flattery to pleaſe their humours, and retaine their fauours; being ready alwayes to ſpeake, not what is moſt profitable, but what is moſt plauſible, not what they know is the truth, but what they thinke will be beſt accepted. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that thoſe who come into fauour with great Perſonages, muſt make account to betray the truth, or to loſe all friendſhip. Secondly, as they muſt forgoe the truth, ſo alſo their libertie, and become true vaſſals and ſlaues, readie to further all their deſignes, and that oftentimes with the hazard of their goods and good name, yea, (which is worſt of all) of their ſoules, by being their inſtruments in effecting and bringing to paſſe things vnlawfull and wicked. In which reſpect it is a hard thing to be eſteemed of great Potentates, and not to bee vile and baſe to a mans ſelfe. Laſtly, by ſetting our hearts vpon the fauour of Princes, we expoſe our ſelues to that fearefull curſe, denounced againſt all thoſe who truſting in man, & making fleſh their arme, doe withdraw their hearts from the Lord. And therefore ſeeing ſo little good, and ſo great euill commeth of the fauour of great Potentates, when we ſet our hearts too much vpon it; let vs learne to weane our affections from this worldly dotage, and contemning the fauour of the greateſt Monarch, when it commeth in compariſon with the loue of God; let vs firſt and chiefly labour to be aſſured of the fauour of our heauenly King, as being moſt profitable and immutable, bringing with it no hurt, yea, turning all our euill into good, and inriching vs with earthly peace and ſecuritie in this life, and with eternall glory and happineſſe in the life to come.

Pſal.146.3.

Si in clientelam fœlicis hominis potentiſq; peruenerit: aut veritas aut amicitia perdenda eſt.

Ier.17.5.

Rom.8.28.

CHAP. XI.

Of the vanitie of worldly power and authoritie.

THe other branch of worldly preferment, is aduancement to high places and dignities: as places of Magiſtracie, Nobilitie, Empire and Soueraigntie. The excellencie of Magiſtracie chiefly conſiſteth in their great power and authoritie, which they haue and exerciſe in ruling and gouerning others, who are inferiour and ſubiect vnto them, the which is in it owne nature good: for as Iob ſaith, God is the fountaine of all power and wiſedome: and the Apoſtle telleth vs, that there is no power but of God, and the powers that be are ordained of God, and that Magiſtrates who exerciſe this power are the Miniſters of God, to reward the good and puniſh the euill. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that power it ſelfe is not euill, but hee that abuſeth his power and authoritie; it is not authoritie that is euill, but ambition: finally, thus farre forth the ordination of power is from God, that hee is to be accounted the Miniſter of God who doth vſe his power well; and therefore it is not the fault of the Office, but of the Miniſter, neither can the Ordinance of God diſpleaſe, but the action of him who doth ill adminiſter it. The Emperour giueth honour, and hath his due prayſe; but if any abuſe this honour conferred vpon him, it is not the fault of the Emperour, but of the inferiour Iudge. What ſhall we ſay then? it is good to vſe power, and to deſire honour: good I ſay, if it be lawfully conferred, and not ambitiouſly ſnatched. But yet as I ſaid of the reſt of worldly bleſſings, ſo of this, it is not good abſolutely and immutably, mutably, but of an indifferent nature in reſpect of the vſe, good to thoſe that make good vſe of it, euill to thoſe who abuſe it vnto euill. So one ſaith, that riches, power and ſtrength, are the inſtruments of vertue to thoſe that vſe them well; although they haue no true felicitie in themſelues: and therefore he is no leſſe miſerable who abuſeth them, than he who taking a ſword into his hands to fight againſt his enemies, doth turn the point thereof againſt himſelfe, to his owne ruine. Vnto which abuſe wee are naturally moſt prone, partly whileſt we ſet our hearts and affections more vpon it, than vpon our ſpirituall aduancement to be the ſonnes of God, and heires apparant of his Kingdome, and therefore take more paines in getting, and more care in keeping this earthly preferment, than that ſpirituall and heauenly aduancement, of which we are ready to make forfeiture, by vſing ſinful and wicked meanes for the compaſſing of the other; partly whileſt being puffed vp in pride, we glory in our power and authority, deſpiſing and contemning thoſe who haue not attained to the height of our preferments; and partly by putting too much truſt and confidence in it, as though we were able to ſtand in our own ſtrength, and to outface and diſcountenance any danger by our owne power. But that we may not too much eſteeme, affect, ſeeke, or glory in this authoritie and power, but may learne to deſpiſe whatſoeuer portion thereof wee haue in our ſelues, in compariſon of our ſpirituall priuiledges, and eternall aduancement in Gods Kingdome: let vs conſider that in reſpect of them, they are of no excellency or profit; but contrariwiſe being abuſed, through our corruption, they are vſually the cauſes both of ſinne and puniſhment.

That there is no great excellencie in this power and authoritie, it appeareth in that God beſtoweth it as a common gift both vpon the good and the bad; yea, commonly thoſe vnto whom he vouchſafeth the leaſt, or no meaſure of grace, are moſt aduanced to theſe worldly dignities and preferments; and thoſe which are aboue others inriched with earthly glory, are often paſſed by, when as there is choice to be made of ſuch, as ſhall haue ſpirituall and heauenly aduancement: for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that not many wiſe, not many mighty, not many noble, are called, but God chuſeth the fooliſh things of the world, to confound the wiſe, and the weake things of the world to confound the mightie. And thus we read that the firſt mightie men on earth, were thoſe wicked Giants, who were the iſſue of that vnequall match betweene the ſonnes of God, and daughters of men: and after the floud Nimrod began firſt to bee mighty on the earth; and like vnto theſe ſucceeded many others, both among the Heathen Nations, and alſo Gods choſen people, who, the more mighty they were in power and authoritie, the more weake commonly they were, in all grace and goodneſſe. All which ſerue as examples of the Apoſtles rule and obſeruation, that not many mightie are effectually called; and conſequently that there is no true excellencie in greatneſſe, ſeeing it is ſo often void of goodneſſe, and therefore thoſe who moſt excell in it are neglected by God, when as thoſe which are weake are called and choſen.

§. Sect. 3.
That worldly authoritie and power doth not profit vs for the attaining to grace and vertue.

And as there is no cauſe to glory in greatneſſe, in reſpect of any excellencie there is in it ſelfe: ſo neither in regard of any great profit it bringeth vnto vs; ſeeing this might and authoritie doth not helpe vs to the obtaining of the beſt things, which are to bee deſired, nor to the preuenting or eſcaping of the greateſt euils, which are to be ſhunned. We cannot with all our might and authoritie command one ſanctifying grace, or furniſh our heart with one vertue; yea, commonly this worldly power rather oppoſeth againſt grace, keeping it from entring where it is not, and nipping, curbing, and ſuppreſſing it where any ſeeds thereof are ſowne; whereas they who are weake and contemptible, being manured by Gods Husbandmen, doe like gentle and light grounds bring forth fruitfull increaſe of vertue and goodneſſe; whereas the other, like ſtiffe and ſtrong clay, doe choake and bury whatſoeuer good ſeeds of grace are committed to them. And as this is to be obſerued in ſeuerall perſons, ſo alſo wee may note a great difference in the ſame men in theſe different eſtates: for how many haue we ſeene, who before they haue had preferments, haue beene humble, courteous, religious, and inriched with many graces and good parts, who being aduanced to dignitie and authoritie, are changed with their eſtate, becomming proud and inſolent, diſdainfull and contemptuous, irreligious, and prophane, or at leaſt colde and negligent in all good Duties the power of Gods Word becomming vnpowerfull vnto them, and their zeale being cooled, when this winde of vaine glory hath but a little blowne vpon them? And this difference is obſerued by an Ancient in the ſtate of the Primitiue Church, which being borne and come to ſome age and ſtrength, did grow in the middeſt of perſecutions, and was adorned with the Crowne of Martyrdome: but after it had Chriſtian Princes indued with power to defend and prouide for it, it increaſed with riches, but decreaſed and declined in vertue and all goodneſſe. Neither doth this power and authoritie helpe vs at all in our warfare againſt our ſpirituall enemies; for theſe Principalities and Powers cannot be ouerthrowne with humane might; and theſe fleſhly weapons are farre too weake for this ſpirituall encounter; yea, rather it betrayeth vs vnto danger, ſeeing wee are more apt to truſt vnto it, when wee find our owne might, and it alwayes faileth vs when wee moſt relie vpon it. It doth not intitle vs to true greatneſſe, and the chiefe magnificence of a Chriſtian; which doth not conſiſt in abilitie to doe much, but in a willingneſſe to doe that which is good; neither will doing of great things make a man good, but doing of good things makes him great.

Eccleſia nata & adulta perſecutionibus creuit & martyrijs coronata eſt, &c. Hieronym. de vita Malchi, Epiſt. tom. 1.

Si magna feceris non bonus eris, ſed ſi bona magnus.

§. Sect. 4. That hee who hath moſt authoritie ouer others, hath leaſt in ruling himſelfe.

Finally, this worldly power and potencie, doth not helpe vs to the obtaining that moſt eſteemeable victory of ouercomming a mans ſelfe; neither doth it aſſiſt reaſon in ſubduing and ruling of our affections and paſſions; yea, rather when the vnreſiſtable flood of power, is ioyned with the violent ſtreame of our owne paſſions, it causeth them more to ſwell and rage, bearing downe all where there is but the leaſt appearance of oppoſition; whether it bee the inward ſtop of conſcience, or the outward ſtop of admonition or reſtraint; making their will to ſtand for law, and all that to be lawfull, whatſoeuer liketh them. Neither doe they now meaſure their deſignes and actions, by the rule of equitie and iuſtice, but by their owne power and abilitie, thinking that they may doe, what they can doe; and often deſiring more power, to doe that which they cannot now atchieue, whereas they haue already more than they can well vſe, their paſſion & power ouer-ruling their reaſon, which ſhould be in ſubiection, and obedient vnto it. And whereas the doubling of their authoritie & power, ſhould make them redouble their care to vſe it with ſobrietie and moderation, and their abilitie to do what they liſt, ſhould the more reſtraine their liſt, and will, within the bounds of honeſtie and equitie; now hauing the raines of libertie put into their hands, they run on in wilfull courſes, oppreſſing and bearing downe with violence, whatſoeuer ſtandeth in their way, and but ſeemeth to hinder them; fretting and fuming againſt any that dare preſume to ſay they doe amiſſe, and thundring in their pride & impatiency ſharp reuenge againſt all, who haue but in the leaſt degree diſpleaſed them. So that whereas before, their anger and wrath, like a flaſh of lightning, appeared and vaniſhed without doing any great hurt; now power like a Thunderbolt being ioyned with it, maketh it to become deadly and pernicious. Laſtly, this worldly power and authority doth vs no good in attaining vnto our chiefe good, neither haue wee our heauenly happineſſe by command, but by intreatie, not by authoritie, but by humilitie and ſubmiſſiue ſuite. So that in this regard wee haue greater cauſe of glory in the leaſt dram of ſpirituall grace, than in the greateſt meaſure of worldly authority and might; according to that of the Prophet, Let not the ſtrong man glory in his ſtrength, but let him that glorieth, glorie in this, that hee vnderſtandeth and knoweth the Lord. Yea, though our power and authority were ſuch, that wee could command the Deuils, and ouer-rule the infernall ſpirits, yet wee muſt not, as Chriſt ſaid to his Apoſtles, Reioyce in this, that the ſpirits are ſubiected vnto vs, but rather reioyce in this, that our names are written in Heauen.

Quod non poteſt, vult poſſe qui nimium poteſt, Senec. in Hypolit.

Minimum debet libere cui multum licet.

Amica poteſtati pene ſemper impatientia eſt, Greg. Moral. lib. 20. cap. 29. Vbi cum poteſtate habitat iracundia fulmen eſt.

Ier.9.23,24.

Luke 10.20.

But as this worldly aduancement, power and authority helpeth vs not to the attaining of any chiefe good, ſo neither doth it exempt or free vs from any great euils. It doth not priuiledge vs from dangers: for as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, The King is not ſaued by the multitude of an hoſt, neither is the mightie man deliuered by great ſtrength. Yea, rather it expoſes men to many perils; their greatnes making them but the fairer markes for enuy to ſhoot at, and inflaming many as ambitious as themſelues, to vſe all their art and power for the vndermining of their eſtate, that ſo out of their ruines they may raiſe their owne preferments. It cannot deliuer vs from the iuſt vengeance of God in the day of his viſitation, the Lord hauing a thouſand means to weaken vs in our greateſt ſtrength, and being able to make our owne power and authority the inſtrument of our deſtruction: for if he do but blow vpon vs with the breath of his diſpleaſure, our proud might ſhall ſerue but as an ouer-great ſaile to ouerturne vs, and our owne ſtrength ſhall become the inſtrument of our ruine. It doth not free the mind from cares and griefes, nor our bodies from ſickneſſes and diſeaſes; yea, the more authoritie a man hath, the more is his care and trouble, and though hee be in neuer ſo great place, yet the Ague and Gout, Apoplexies and Palſies, Conſumptions and ſuch other griefes and maladies, will not bee afraid of him, but comming as Officers from a ſuperiour power, will in deſpight of all his glorious greatneſſe, hold him vnder their arreſt, till they haue a diſcharge from our chiefe ſoueraigne. Neither doth the greateſt earthly power, and tranſcendent authoritie free any from death; for as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Man ſhall not continue in honour, hee is like the beaſts that die: and death feareth the Scepter no more than the Goad; he regardeth the ſtately Throne no more than the baſeſt footſtool, & with as vndanted courage he entreth into the Princes Palace, as into the pooreſt Cottage. Finally, after death we ſhall haue no priuiledge by our authoritie and greatneſſe, when as wee ſhall all appeare before the iudgement ſeate of God: for then both Magiſtrates and people, mighty and impotent ſhall be all alike, and receiue their iuſt ſentence according to that which they haue done §. Sect. 5. That world authority freeth vs no from our gre teſt euils.

Pſal.33.16.

Petrar ns meair Epiſt lib.

Pſal.49.

2.Cor.5.

done in their fleſh, whether good or euill, without any reſpect of perſons: for as Elihu ſaith, Hee accepteth not the perſons of Princes, and regardeth not the rich more than the poore, ſeeing they are all the worke of his hands. Yea rather at that time they ſhall find hereby great hurt and inconuenience, ſeeing it will then but increaſe their bils of accounts, of which then they are to giue a reckoning; for this power and authoritie were committed vnto them by God, as his good talents, which they were to vſe for the honour of their Maſter, and for the good of their fellow ſeruants, which being well imployed, might haue gained much glory vnto God, and good vnto his Church, in maintaining and vpholding his worſhip and ſeruice in preſeruing and defending his true religion, in countenancing and rewarding the good and vertuous, and in diſheartning and puniſhing the wicked and vicious. In which accounts if they come ſhort, they ſhall at that day haue little joy of all their former authoritie and greatnes; ſeeing it will but increaſe their debts, and make them to find ſo much the leſſe fauour, by how much they haue abuſed the greater mercie.

And thus haue I ſhewed that authoritie and great power, is vaine and vnprofitable to thoſe, who too much ſet their hearts vpon it. It followeth that I alſo ſhew that it bringeth vnto vs, being thus abuſed, much euill, and that both in reſpect of ſinne and puniſhment. It is the cauſe, being abuſed through our corruption, of many ſinnes, but eſpecially of thoſe two hainous and mother ſinnes, pride and iniuſtice. For being aduanced vnto theſe high places, it is vſuall with them to forget by what power they were thus aduanced; and leauing their dependancie vpon God, they begin to wax proud of themſelues, and thinking it too baſe to ſuſtaine the place of Gods deputies, they aſpire themſelues vnto the ſupreame ſoueraignetie, and rebelliouſly affect diuine honours. So Nabuchadnezer being by his greatnes puffed vp with pride, forgate himſelfe to be a man, and would needs haue his image worſhipped by all his people; and this was vſuall among the Heathen Potentates, who ambitiouſly deſired to be deified, and to haue their ſtatues and images erected, vnto which diuine worſhip was to be imparted. And thus Vzziah, howſoeuer hee was a Prince of the better ſort, yet when hee grew mightie, it is ſaid of him, that his heart was lift vp to his deſtruction. And as it maketh men proud in reſpect of God; ſo in reſpect of men, moſt inſolent, diſdainfull and tyrannicall. It is true indeed, that thoſe who vſe their authoritie well, doe keepe an humble minde in an high eſtate, like the Sunne, which the higher it is, the leſſe it ſeemeth, and doe not ſo much looke at their ſuperioritie of ſtate and order, as at the equalitie of their naturall condition; and conſidering that all by nature are equall, and that it is ſinne which maketh this difference of ſuperioritie and inferioritie betweene them; therefore they aduance their power to beare ſway ouer their vices rather than ouer their perſons, and whileſt they remember that they puniſh ſinne, they doe not forget that it is puniſhed in their brethren. Neither doe they (as one ſaith) ſo much reioyce to rule ouer men, as that they may profit them by their gouernment, knowing that the ancient Patriarks were not ſo much Kings ouer men, as Paſtors ouer ſheepe, and that when God ſaid to Noah and his ſonnes increaſe and multiplie, and fill the earth, adding that their feare and dread ſhould be ouer the beaſts, fowles, and fiſhes, hee doth not ſay alſo that it ſhould be ouer men, becauſe mens terrour ſhould be ouer beaſts and not ouer men. Although indeed holy gouernours deſire to be feared of their ſubjects; but it is when as they ſee that they do not feare God, that at leaſt they may be reſtrained from ſinne by this feare of man, who doe not ſtand in awe of Gods judgements. And therefore they are not proud of this feare, in which they ſeeke not their owne glory, but the juſt carriage and demeanure of their ſubjects: neither doe they deſire to bee feared of ill liuers as they are men, but as they behaue themſelues like beaſts ouercaried with ſenſualitie: and when there is no vice to puniſh, they doe not rejoyce in the excellencie of their power, but in the equalitie of their condition, and are ſo farre from deſiring to bee too much feared, that they refuſe to be too much honoured. But the moſt part through the corruption of our nature, are apt to abuſe their power and authoritie vnto pride and tyrannie, imagining that they exceed all that are ſubject vnto them, as much in vertue, as they doe in titles; in worth and deſert, as they doe in dignitie and power; and meaſuring themſelues not by the rule of Gods word, nor by the teſtimonie of their owne conſciences, but according to the hyperbolicall, or rather lying prayſes and commendations of palpable flatterers; and beleeuing that they are ſuch as theſe falſe glaſſes would ſeeme to make them, they wax proud of their greatnes, eſteeming their inferiours as baſe and contemptible, and thinking that they are good for nothing but for their vſe, and that like cyphers they onely ſerue to make vp the ſumme of their greatneſſe. And therefore they rule them not according to Law and equitie, but according to their will and pleaſure, neuer conſidering what they ought to doe, but what by their power they are able to doe;

Benè potentiam exercet qui ſcit per illam ſuper culpas erigi, & ſcit cum illa cæteris æqualitate componi. Greg. Moral. lib. 26. cap. 19.

Greg. Moral. lib. 21. cap. 11.

nor thinke what is good for their inferiours but for themſelues, as though it were their ſummum bonum and chiefe happineſſe, if by their labours, wealth, lands and liues, they can procure vnto them the leaſt pleaſure or profit, or giue them the leaſt eaſe of any trouble. So that it is a matter of greateſt difficultie to excell in authoritie, and to beate downe pride; to haue great power, and not to thinke it greater than it is; to rule ouer inferiours, and to inſult ouer and contemne them as baſe and abject. And therefore great potentates had neede to haue that ſaying ſounding in their eares: The greater thou art, the more humble thy ſelfe in all things; and ſo ſhalt thou finde fauour before the Lord.

Eccleſiaſticus 3.19.

§. Sect.7.
That worldly authoritie vſually is accompanied with vniuſtice and oppreſſion.
Cui plus licet quàm par eſt, plus vult quàm licet.

The other ſinne into which power and authouritie commonly plungeth men, is vniuſtice, violence and oppreſſion; for they that haue power to do more than is fit, commonly haue alſo will to doe more than is lawfull; becauſe they imagine that their power is moſt magnified, when as it extendeth it ſelfe beyound all bounds and limits of either law or reaſon. And thus the Author of the booke of Wiſdome bringeth in mighty men incouraging one another to commit all outrage and cruelty: Let vs (ſay they) leaue ſome token of our pleaſure in euery place, for that is our portion, and this is our lot. Let vs oppreſſe the poore that is righteous, let vs not ſpare the widow, nor reuerence the white haires of the aged that haue liued many yeeres: let our ſtrength bee the law of vnrighteouſneſſe, for the thing that is feeble is reproued as vnprofitable. In which cruell courſes, when as they are long fleſhed, they follow them, as bruit beaſts their prey, when their bellies are full; not for hunger, but for wantonneſſe, affecting wrongs and oppreſſions, not for any pleaſure or profit they haue in the thing done, but onely for the delight they take in doing it; and chiefly glorying in their power and authoritie, becauſe they are inabled thereby to doe miſchiefe; as though there were no muſicke ſo ſweet to their eares, as the outcries of the wronged, and the groanes of the oppreſſed. Neither is this any rare fault of the mighty, ſeeing (as one complaineth) inferiours in all places are ſubject to the couetouſneſſe and oppreſſion of thoſe who are ſtronger than they, and the weaker a man is, the more fit hee is thought to bee made a prey. For it is amongſt them as among deuouring fiſhes, the leſſe becommeth the food of the greater; and he againe being aſſaulted with a ſtronger than he, becommeth his prey, who before deuoured another, and one belly now holdeth them both, giuing an example to the mightie of reuenged iniurie. Whereby it appeareth that this power and authoritie being vſually ſeuered from iuſtice, becommeth hurtfull and pernicious: for as thoſe ſignes, Caſtor and Pollux, appearing both together vnto ſea-fairing men, comfort them with the hope of faire weather, and a proſperous voyage; but being ſeuered and appearing alone portend a tempeſt: ſo when power and authoritie are ioyned with wiſdome and iuſtice, they bring with them much profit both to priuate men, and to whole ſocieties; but when this power is ſeuered and diuided from the other, it bringeth forth no other fruites than crueltie, rage, oppreſſion, and all manner of hurt and miſchiefe, and that both to thoſe who are vnder it, and to thoſe alſo who thus abuſe it. For as for them, they are not maſters of any thing which they enjoy, all their goods and ſubſtance being daily endangered to their ſpoyle and rapine; the which their iniuries they muſt indure not onely with ſilence and patience, but at leaſt with outward cheerefulneſſe and thankfulneſſe: for if they ſeeme but to take notice that they are wronged, they doe make way for a new miſchiefe, and put them in minde to redouble the iniurie. And therefore the beſt way for theſe inferiours, is willingly to offer that to theſe powerfull tyrants which they ſeeme to affect; for to denie vnto them leſſer things, is to promiſe vnto them greater, and by withholding from them ſome things, to make them maſters of all. Yea oftentimes by croſſing their deſires they doe not onely expoſe their goods to the ſpoile, but their liues alſo to danger, as we may ſee in the example of Naboth, who labouring to hold his vineyard, loſt his life and his vineyard too. Neither is this abuſed power and authoritie leſſe pernicious to thoſe that haue it; for making themſelues hereby odious to all, they twiſt ſnares to catch themſelues, and fall into their owne pit, whileſt either they expoſe themſelues to popular rage, or purſuing the weake doe fall into the power of thoſe who are ſtronger; like the wolfe, who ouergreedily following the lambe, doth himſelfe fall into the Lyons paw. So that it is truly ſaid, that he who therefore doth iniurie becauſe hee is able, will not long bee able becauſe hee hath done it. And wiſely did the Heathen man aduiſe thoſe who deſired to vſe their power long, that they ſhould vſe it ſparingly whileſt they haue it; for they who doe all they can, will not long bee able to doe what they will.

Wiſdome 2.9. 10.11.

Colit hic reges calcet vt omnes, perdatq; aliquos nullumq; leuet, tantum vt noceat cupit eſſe potens. Senec. in Octauia; Ambroſ. Hexamer. lib.5.ca.5.

Plutarch.

But as this abuſed power and authoritie plungeth men into ſinne, ſo it ſubiecteth them to the euill of puniſhment: for depriuing them of the chiefe humane ſtrength and defence, namely the loue and good will of thoſe that are about them, it expoſes them to the enuie and hatred of all, ſo that thoſe who flatter them with their mouth, threaten their ruine in their hearts, and whileſt they creep and crouch vnto them, they watch for deſired opportunitie to tread vpon their neckes, and to ſolace themſelues in their vtter ruine. Yea they are not ſafe from the conſpiracies and attemps of thoſe whom they repute their neereſt friends; and euen thoſe who guard them, are ſo falſehearted towards them, that oftentimes they had need of another guard to defend them from their treacherie. And hereof it is that theſe great Potentates are continually expoſed to innumerable dangers, which threaten a fearefull and ſhamefull downfall, whileſt euery one enuieth their greatneſſe, and none almoſt ſupports it, vnleſſe it bee that they put to their hands to vphold it whileſt it ſtandeth by its owne ſtrength; being readie to pull them away when it a little tottereth, and ſtandeth moſt in need of their helpe. And as they are thus endangered by falſe friends, ſo alſo by open and profeſſed enemies, who hauing through the abuſe of their power beene wronged and iniured, doe daily waite for opportunitie of taking reuenge, and feed themſelues with hope of ſeeing their ruine, when as they may pay them home with their owne meaſure. From which dangers and euils, though they be defended through the greatneſſe of their power, yet are they not priuiledged from the continuall feare of them; neither is it might, and powerfull tyrannie, but innocencie, iuſtice, and well-deſeruing that bringeth ſecure peace. For hauing abuſed their power to oppreſſion & violence, their guiltie conſcience, as it were, an implacable furie, continually haunteth them, making them to expect what they haue deſerued, and to feare, as much as they haue hurt. Whereby it commeth to paſſe, that howſoeuer they are ſometime ſafe, yet they are neuer ſecure, but ſpend their life in continuall agonies & perplexities. Now what is this continuall anticipation of euils through feare and dreadfull expectation, but a daily ſuffring of them, the greateſt part of worldly euils being the feare that goeth before them?

But ſay they could eſcape both feare and danger from men, yet deſerued vengeance from God ſhall ſurely ouertake them, for abuſing that power and authority which they haue receiued from him, to his diſhonour, and the hurt of their brethren, whereas they might by a good vſe thereof haue gained vnto him much glory, and benefited thoſe who were vnder their gouernment. For the Lord when hee commeth in viſitation, will not reſpect the mightie more than the weake and impotent; yea rather taking delight to ouer-maſter and confound their proud greatneſſe, wherewith they haue oppoſed againſt him, he draweth them firſt to puniſhment, and maketh their condemnation more heauie and intolerable, for the mightie ſhall be mightily tormented. Neither is it a matter of more difficultie vnto him, to tread vnder foote theſe ouertopping Cedars, and ſtrong okes of Baſhan, than the weakeſt bramble, or loweſt ſhrub. For as the Apoſtle ſaith, the weaknes of God is ſtronger than men, and hee is able by the weake things of the world to confound the mightie. He leadeth away Princes as a pray, and ouerthroweth the mightie; he powreth contempt vpon Princes, and maketh the ſtrength of the mightie weak, as Iob ſpeaketh. In regard whereof, there is no power of man of any continuance, but that which being guided with wiſedome, and grounded on vertue, is ſupported and vpheld by his omnipotent might: yea contrariwiſe as a building which wants a good foundation, the greater and higher it is, the more neere it is to a dangerous downefall, ſeeing its greatnes and height doth but helpe forward and haſten its owne ruine: ſo theſe high Babels of power, and greatneſſe, which haue not vertue for their ground and foundation, but are onely vnderpropped with the weake ſtaies of violence and tyrannie, are neere vnto confuſion, when the leſt breath of Gods wrath doth blow vpon them.

1.Sam.2.4. Wiſd.6.7,8. Eſa.2.13.

Zach.11.2.

1.Cor.1.25.27.

Iob 12.19.21.

§.*Sect.*10.
That ſpirituall power is much to be preferred before that which is worldly.

Seeing therefore this worldly power and authoritie is through our corruption ſo ſubiect to abuſe, and being abuſed is the cauſe of ſo manifold euils, let vs learne not to eſteeme it ouermuch, or to ſet our hearts vpon it, but rather let vs labour after ſpirituall power and might, and as the Apoſtle exhorteth vs, let vs be ſtrong in the Lord and in the power of his might, and put on the whole armour of God, that wee may be able to ſtand againſt the diuell, and may obtaine a glorious victorie ouer the ſpirituall enemies of our ſaluation: for if wee be aſſiſted with this power we ſhall be able to do all things, as the ſame Apoſtle ſpeaketh. Let vs labour after that power wherby we may be inabled to maſter and ouercome our owne ſinnes and corruptions, and to ſubdue and keepe them vnder, to mortifie and ſlaughter them, when they rebell againſt the ſpirit: for this is the chiefe and greateſt power wherein a Chriſtian man ſhould reioyce, not to be able to offend God by doing euill, which we ſhall haue when we come into our countrie; and the next to that is to reſtraine our ſelues from ſinne, vnto which the corruption of our nature leadeth and inclineth vs. Let vs chiefly deſire to haue that authoritie and might whereby wee may be inabled to rule and gouerne our ſelues, and to moderate and keepe in order our owne paſſions and affections; let vs ſhew our ſtrength in ouercomming our pride couetouſneſſe, ambition, luſt, anger, deſire of reuenge, and the reſt: for as the Wiſe man telleth vs, he that is

Eph.6.10.11.

Phil.4.13.

Magna potentia non poſſe malum.

Pro.16.32.

ſlow to anger, is better than the mightie man; and hee that ruleth his owne minde, is better than he that winneth a Citie. Neither will it ought auaile vs to rule ouer the whole world, and in the meane time to be ſlaues vnto our owne luſts; to haue all nations vnder our ſubjection, and to haue within vs tumultuous paſſions, and diſordered affections, which continually ſtirre vp in vs ciuill and inteſtine vprores and ſeditions, when as they rebell aganiſt the rule of holy reaſon, and reſiſt the good motions of Gods ſpirit. Finally, if wee would haue that ſtrength which is worth eſteeme, let vs like true Iſraelites labour after ſuch power as may preuaile with God; and after the example of our fore-father Iacob, let vs wreſtle with him by our prayers and ſtrong cries, neuer letting him depart from vs, till wee haue obtained a bleſſing, which ſhall bee accompanied here with comfort, ioy, and peace, and with eternall bleſſedneſſe and true happineſſe in the life to come. And thus much concerning the vanitie of worldly power and authoritie.

Hoſ.12.3.4.

CHAP. XII.

Of the vanitie of worldly nobilitie.

§. Sect. 1. What nobility is, & the ſignes thereof.

THE ſecond kind of preferment or aduancement is worldly nobilitie, which wee will firſt diſtinguiſh from that noblitie which being good and lawfull, is to be approued and reſpected; and afterwards ſhew the vanitie of that, which being worldly and wicked, is to bee deſpiſed and contemned. And firſt we are to know that nobilitie generally conſidered, is nothing elſe, but that honorable greatneſſe, fame and reputation, which men haue deriued vnto them from their progenitors, both by reaſon of their famous vertues, and notable deſerts, and alſo their aduancement to places of dignitie and greatneſſe of eſtate, conferred vpon thẽ for their worth by their Prince and countrey: the which together with their fame and great eſteeme, is deriued ſucceſſiuely from them to their poſteritie. The ſignes of which nobilitie are diuers, as a memorable deſcent, and famous genealogie, deriued a farre off from their firſt weldeſeruing and aduanced anceſtor, or firſt founder of their houſe, vnto their next parent; honorable titles, wherewith the race from time to time hath beene enobled, armes and coates granted vnto them, for their worth and ſeruice of ſtate, as a perpetuall remembrance of their wel-deſeruing: vnto which wee may adde thoſe ſtatues, and images, which in ancient times were vſed to continue a glorious memorie of their progenitors.

§. Se

That no

in it ſelf good an full.

Iure reg

The which order of nobilitie is good and warrantable, as may appeare by theſe reaſons. Firſt, becauſe in the firſt wel-ordered common-wealth, the kingdome of Iſrael, euen whileſt the Lord himſelfe did hold in his owne hand the right of royaltie, gouerning them by his owne Law, and ruling ouer them as their chiefe Soueraigne; this ſuperioritie of nobilitie was eſtabliſhed, there being ſet ouer euery tribe their Princes and Peeres, who were both in fame and ſtate chiefe of all the reſt; as alſo in that he did appropriate both the ſoueraigntie ouer the common-wealth, and chiefe ſuperioritie in the Church, vnto certaine tribes and poſterities, who being thus enobled by God, did hold this honour peculiarly to themſelues, vnto the time of Chriſt. Secondly, this difference of order, that there ſhould be ſome noble, and ſome inferiour and common people, hath its ground both from ciuill policie, for the wel-gouerning of the common-wealth, which could not well ſtand, vnleſſe theſe potent Peeres, as it were chiefe pillars, did vphold it; and alſo from nature its ſelfe. For the Lord hauing beſtowed ſome heroicall gifts and graces vpon ſome ſpeciall men, as wiſdome, magnanimitie, fortitude, magnificence, courteſie, liberalitie and the reſt; doth alſo for the good of common-wealthes vſually vouchſafe, that there ſhould be certaine ſeeds of theſe vertues deriued after a ſecret and vnknowne manner, from them ſucceſſiuely vnto their poſteritie, whereby being come to maturitie, they reſemble their anceſtors in theſe ſpeciall graces. And howſoeuer God ſometimes altereth this order and courſe of nature, either to puniſh ſome ſpeciall ſinnes of that familie, or to ſhew his owne abſolute omnipotencie, which cannot be ſubiected to nature, or inferiour cauſes, ſuffering ſome to degenerate from their anceſtors, and to loſe theſe heroicall gifts; as alſo conferreth them vpon ſome other of meane qualitie, whom it is his pleaſure to aduance; yet moſt vſually he holdeth the former courſe; and though one of this noble poſteritie doe degenerate, yet commonly the ſeeds of theſe vertues, which haue lien hid in him, and as it were buried vnder the earthy burthen of his corruption, are deriued from him to his of-ſpring, and being (as it were) againe quickened and reuiued ſhew themſelues. Euen as a father being by ſome accident maimed of an arme or legge, doth neuertheleſſe beget perfect & well formed children, becauſe generation is not tied to one indiuiduum or ſinguler perſon, but to the whole kind and ordinarie courſe of nature. And this proprietie of gifts which are of ſpeciall eminencie, wee may obſerue in other creatures, as in plants, trees, birds and beaſts; that as they are beſtowed vpon ſome of them, Geneſ.49.10.

Num.3.1.

Generoſa i tu ſemin

ſurgunt ſu

Senec. in Troade.

them; ſo they are continued to their whole kind and race, vnleſſe ſome by accident doe degenerate. As for example, thus cions and yong grafts reſemble the tree from which they were cut, admitting no alteration, though they bee grafted into a new ſtocke; and thus horſes take after their race, dogs after their kind, and hawkes and other fowles participate the nature and properties of that ſtraine whereof they are bred. Laſtly, nobilitie ſerueth for good vſe, as it is a meanes both to reſtraine from vice, or at leſt from open and notorious crimes, and to prouoke men to good and vertuous actions; for being hereby as lights ſet vpon an hill, vpon which the eyes of all men are fixed and faſtened, they are reſtrained from many open and groſſe ſinnes, for feare of diſhonoring themſelues and blemiſhing their reputation, and incited to many vertues and ciuill actions, for the maintaining of their credit and eſtimation: which ends, though they be not religiouſly good in themſelues, when as they are onely, or chiefly propounded, yet are they the cauſe and occaſion of good both to the Church and commonwealth. By all which it appeareth, that nobilitie is to be much eſteemed of all, and to bee reuerenced and reſpected of inferiours; and therefore thoſe ſpeeches of Heathen Philoſophers, and alſo of many Chriſtian writers, which tend to the bringing in a paritie amongſt the faithfull, and an abſolute contempt of nobility, are either themſelues to be contemned and reiected, or elſe to bee applied to that falſe and counterfeit nobilitie, which conſiſteth only in outward titles, and in the worth of anceſtors, being in its ſelfe worthleſſe and deſtitute of all vertue and goodneſſe.

Sect. 5.
t true no-itie is much e honoured reſpected.

Which error that wee alſo may not fall into, in ſhewing the vanitie of nobilitie, wee muſt diſtinguiſh it into two kinds: the firſt we may tearme true and compleate nobilitie, when as men doe ioyne with that honour, which they haue from their anceſtors, their owne vertues and good deſerts, eſpecially religion and true godlineſſe; that ſo they may be noble, not only by inheritance, but alſo by their owne purchaſe, and appeare no leſſe good in the ſight of God, than glorious in the eyes of men. And this is that true nobilitie, which whereſoeuer it is found, is to be reuerenced and reſpected with double honour, both for the greatneſſe which they haue from their anceſtors, and for the goodneſſe which is in themſelues; yea and ſo much more for this than for the other, as goodneſſe excelleth greatnes, in the iudgement of all who are ſeaſoned with true wiſdome. Neither is this true nobilitie much reſpected and valued amongſt all good men onely, but it is alſo moſt acceptable vnto God; for howſoeuer the Lord is no reſpecter of perſons, but regardeth vertue in the begger, as well as in the King; yet hee more reſpecteth and rewardeth the vertues and good parts which he findeth in true nobilitie, than in the common ſort; partly becauſe they more glorifie him, and doe more good to his Church, being more exemplarie, and drawing on their inferiours to their imitation; and partly becauſe they haue ſtronger tentations to draw them aſide out of their courſe of goodneſſe: and therefore when they continue in the right way, and after a more dangerous conflict, obtaine a more glorious victorie than priuate men, it is no maruaile if they haue a greater reward, and richer crowne allotted vnto them.

d Deus eſt
r perſo&c. d ad
e vir-

§. Sect. 4.
That worldly nobility is of no worth or excellencie.

The other kind of nobility is worldly and imperfect, when as men are enobled only for the vertues and deſerts of their anceſtors, hauing no worth or good parts in themſelues, wherein they doe in any degree reſemble their predeceſſors; but retaining only their name, titles, armes and honors, doe wholly degenerate from them in their vertues and good qualities. The which nobilitie, howſoeuer it maketh a glorious ſhew in the world, yet is it in truth baſe and contemptible, as being no true nobilitie, but a baſtardly and degenerate offſpring, or but as a dead truncke, which retaineth ſome outward forme or ſhape, but wanteth vertue and goodneſſe which is the ſoule thereof, whereby it ſhould haue its chiefe eſſence and Being, without which it ſoone rotteth and periſheth. And this is that worldly, maimed, and lame nobilitie, which is to bee neglected and contemned: firſt, becauſe it is of no worth or excellencie vnto any, being ſeuered from true vertue and godlineſſe, in that they haue loſt the chiefe and formall difference, whereby they were firſt aduanced aboue the common ſort, namely thoſe heroicall vertues, and good parts, which firſt enobled their anceſtors. Neither is it birth and ſucceſſion alone that can make noble, for as the Heathen man well obſerued, there is no King, who hath not deſcended of ſeruants; no ſeruant, which hath not had a King for his predeceſſor, long time hauing made a mixture of all eſtates, raiſing ſome from the dunghill, to the throne; and depoſing others from great honours, to the loweſt contempt and moſt abiect diſgrace. Againe, if wee reſpect our common matter, we are all made of the ſame earth and clay, and readie when God taketh away from vs the breath of life, to become all alike, and to turne into the ſame principles whereof wee were made. If we looke vnto our pedegree, we haue the ſame Adam, the ſame Noah, for our common anceſtors, neither did the Lord make one man of more precious matter,

Plato.

ter, to be the roote and firſt progenitour of the noble, and another of baſer mould, to bee the firſt beginner of the poore and contemptible; but one and the ſame Adam to be the father of all. Finally, if we reſpect the ſoule, our more excellent part, may we not alſo ſay with the Prophet, Haue wee not all one father? hath not one God made vs? and hath not the ſame Creator breathed into vs the ſame breath of life? In all which reſpects there is no ſuperioritie, but wee are all alike the creatures of God, and brethren one to another. And as there is no difference betweene diuers peeces of the ſame lumpe of clay, although the one bee contained in a golden, the other in a earthen diſh; not betweene two peeces of wood of the ſame tree, becauſe the one is couered with rags, and the other with cloath of gold: ſo there is no difference of excellencie, betweene the noble and ignoble, the King and the meaneſt ſubject, if they be conſidered in this generalitie of nature; though there be no compariſon betweene them in their worldly eſtate. Wherein then doth the excellencie and ſuperioritie of the noble conſiſt, aboue thoſe who are of meane birth? Surely chiefly in this, that the Lord hath giuen vnto them the priuiledge of certaine heroicall vertues, excellent parts, and good deſerts, whereby they are aduanced to honour and places of dignitie. And therefore thoſe Nobles who are deſtitute of theſe vertues and good parts, and defiled and imbaced with all manner of ſinne and vice, haue in them no ſparke of true nobilitie, being depriued and deſtitute of this formall difference; nor yet any right of ſuperiority ouer their brethren from nature, but only haue an hereditarie ſhadow thereof, and that onely by vertue of tyrannicall cuſtome, or at leaſt ciuill and politike order.

Malach. 2. 10.

§. Sect. 5. That there is no cauſe why any ſhould glorie in worldly nobility.

Let no man therefore boaſt himſelfe of his farre fetcht pedegree, vnleſſe hee can proue alſo a ſucceſſion of vertues and good parts. For the further hee deriueth it, the neerer hee commeth to Adam, in whom there is not ſo much cauſe of glorying for his aduancement, as of ſhaming for his ſinne and downefall. And if hee that aſcendeth thus farre, would riſe one degree higher, he ſhould finde his next anceſtor to bee the duſt and clay, in which there would bee more reaſon of humiliation, than of pride in the next deſcent, ſeeing he may iuſtly ſay with Iob to corruption, thou art my father, and to the worme, thou art my mother, and my ſiſter. Let him not bee proud of his large reuenewes left vnto him by his anceſtors, if he be diſinherited of the riches of their heroicall graces; nor yet vaunt himſelfe of their greatneſſe, being quite deſtitute of their goodneſſe; let him not glorie in the ſhadow of honourable titles, being abandoned of the ſubſtance of their inward vertues, and their outward well deſeruing; let not their varietie of armes, and rich coates puffe them vp, ſeeing theſe were gotten by others, and ſhould if they had their deſerts bee loſt by them, it being a matter of great equity, that vice ſhould loſe, that which vertue hath wonne. Finally, let them know that boaſting themſelues in their emptie and worthleſſe nobilitie, they doe herein commend others, and not themſelues; and like beggerly make-ſhifts, become proud of borrowed apparell; ſhewing plainly that there is nothing worth praiſe in themſelues, ſeeing they chiefly ſtand vpon borrowed titles, and vaunt of the vertues and well deſeruings of other men.

Iob 17. 14.

Qui genus / ctat ſuum a / na laudat. Se- / nec. in Her. / furen.

§. Sect. 6. That God re- ſpecteth not worldly nob- lity.

Againe, the worthleſneſſe of this worldly nobilitie hereby appeareth, in that God infinite in all wiſedome, and true iudgement, eſteemeth and reſpecteth it not: for as a gift of ſmall value he imparteth it as well to his enemies as to his friends; and aduanceth to this vaine nobilitie, the idolatrous Pagan, prophane Chriſtian, and wicked worldling, as well, yea more commonly, than his owne children and ſeruants. So when himſelfe was to make choice of men whom hee would aduance to ſit vpon the royall throne, and to rule his people Iſraell, he neglecteth the great nobles of the land, and chuſeth Saul, who was ſeeking his aſſes; and he afterwards being reprobated for his wickedneſſe, for the next ſucceſſion, hee taketh Dauid from following of his ſheepe. And this tenour he alſo obſerueth in chuſing ſuch as he purpoſeth to aduance to bee firſt true members of the kingdome of grace, and afterwards to raigne with him in his kingdome of glorie. For as the Apoſtle witneſſeth, not many mightie, not many noble are called, but he chuſeth the weake things of the world to confound the mightie things, and vile things of the world, and things that are deſpiſed hath God choſen, and things that are not, to bring to nought things that are. Which ſentence much more terrible than the thunder, ſhould ſhake theſe high Cedars, and pearcing the hearts of the proudeſt nobilitie, ſhould make them quake and tremble, for feare leſt themſelues ſhould be in the greater number whom God hath paſſed by; and neuer to be at reſt, till they haue gathered vnto themſelues by their fruits of ſanctification, certaine and particular aſſurance, that they are in the ſmall number of theſe not many whom God hath called. For what will it auaile them to haue ruffled it out in worldly pompe, for a ſhort and momentanie life, and to be eternally reprobated of God, and excluded from the vnſpeakable ioyes of his kingdome; yea alſo to ſuffer for euer with the prince of darkneſ, the intolerable torments of hell fire?

1. Cor. 1.

Thus

ect.7. Christ ted ly No-

Thus alſo our Sauiour Chriſt the onely Sonne of our ſupreme Soueraigne, and heire apparant to the Kingdome of Heauen, neglected and contemned this worldly Nobility, both in himſelfe and others. For howſoeuer hee was deſcended of moſt ancient and Royall Progenitours, and might haue aſſumed a glorious ſtile, and moſt honourable titles; yet he regardeth them not, nor any whit ſtandeth vpon theſe worldly priuiledges, but vſually called himſelfe the Sonne of man. And howſoeuer being both God and man, hee might haue choſen for his next parent, ſome great Princes, equall or ſuperiour in dignitie to any of his Anceſtors, yet he is content to be borne of a ſimple Virgin, the eſpouſed wife of a poore Carpenter. Neither did hee regard this Nobilitie any more in others, for being to chuſe Apoſtles & Diſciples to attend his perſon, and to bee (as it were) the chiefe Courtiers of this heauenly King, he paſſeth by the Nobles of the World, and maketh choice of ſilly fiſher men, and poore Artificers. Finally, as the Lord himſelfe thus meanly accounteth of worldly Nobilitie, ſo alſo hath he taught vs to value and eſteeme it: for howſoeuer he would haue vs in our outward carriage, to obſerue ciuill order, yet hee maketh it a note of an heauenly inhabitant, to contemne a wicked man, how glorious ſoeuer hee be in the World, and to honour thoſe that feare the Lord. Where by the Antitheſis and oppoſition hee plainly ſheweth, that he who feareth not God, is to bee eſteemed a vile perſon, though hee haue neuer ſo many honourable Titles; as the Holy Ghoſt alſo ſtileth Antiochus Epiphanes, howſoeuer the honour of a worldly Monarchie was conferred on him. Whereas contrariwiſe he honoureth the Saints which are vpon the earth, with the title of Excellencie, calling them alſo a choſen generation, and Royall Prieſthood, yea Kings, which raigne together with God, and his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt.

ect.8. worldly it is ntany table.

But as there is no excellency in this worldly Nobility; ſo though there were, yet it deſerueth no great eſteeme, in regard that it is ſo momentany, and alſo mutable: for ſay it ſhould continue with them as long as they liue, yet what were this to be eſteemed, ſeeing life it ſelfe being but a bubble or vapour, is ready euery day to vaniſh away? yea, though their name ſhould out-liue them, and their glorious fame ſhould continue after them, euen to the end of the World, yet what is this in compariſon of eternitie? But alas it is not ſo; for the juſt judgement of God beating downe their pride, doth cauſe the name of wicked Nobility to rot ſooner than their bodies, leauing no remembrance behind them, vnleſſe it be of their ſinne and ſhame: yea, this worldly Nobility is not onely momentany, but alſo mutable, and altogether vncertaine to continue vnto this ſhort period of life, ſeeing for their ill deſeruing they out-liue their Nobility, & their crimes like deadly poyſons tainting their bloud, do vtterly imbaſe their honour and reputation. In regard of which mutabilitie, the ancient Nobility of Rome were accuſtomed to weare Moones vpon their Shooes, that being lift vp with their glory and greatneſſe of State, they might haue this ſwelling aſſwaged, by hauing continually before their eyes this example of mutability. And this changeableneſſe of eſtate they are ſubject vnto by the juſt judgement of God; for it is righteous with him, that theſe falſe lights ſeruing for no other end, but to ſeduce their inferiours, ſhould bee quite put out and extinguiſhed, and that their Nobility ſhould be taken from them, when as it is not ſo much a grace vnto them, as they a ſhame to it.

Plutarch. de quæſt. Rom. quæſt. 76.

§. Sect. 9. That vpſtart Nobility joyned with vertue, is to be preferred before that which is deſtitute of it though it be ancient,

And thus it appeareth that this worldly Nobility is of no great worth or excellency, both in reſpect of the vanity and alſo the momentany continuance thereof; whereby it is cleere and manifeſt, that newly aduanced vertue, or as we call it, vpſtart Nobility, and of the firſt Head, being joyned with worth and deſert, whereby it is raiſed, howſoeuer it hath not the precedence in ciuill meetings, yet without all compariſon, is to be preferred in the judgement and eſtimation of all that are good, before ancient nobility, which in the race of ſucceſſion hath out-laſted vertue, and is contaminated and defiled with vice and wickedneſſe. The which howſoeuer it is ſcarce acknowledged amongſt many that profeſſe Chriſtianity, yet was it plainly diſcerned and confeſſed by the Heathens, who had no other guide than the light of nature. One ſaith, that it is better to purchaſe Nobility by deſert, than to haue it by inheritance. Another ſaith, that hee eſteemeth Nobility chiefly for goodneſſe, and that he would account him to bee ignoble and baſe, who is vnjuſt and deſtitute of vertue, though hee could deriue his pedigree from a better than Iupiter. So Harmodius vpbrayding Iphicrates, a famous Emperour or Commander with baſeneſſe of birth, receiued a fit anſwere: The honour (ſaith hee) of my houſe beginneth with me, and the honour of thine endeth with thee. So the wiſe Socrates anſwered a vicious Nobleman, objecting vnto him meaneneſſe of birth: My parentage (ſaith he) is a diſgrace vnto me, and thou to thy parentage. Finally, another concludeth, that it is much better to bee the parent of a mans owne Nobility, than to corrupt and diſgrace it, hauing receiued it from his Anceſtors. With theſe accordeth that ancient Father, who affirmeth that it is much rather to bee choſen to bee adorned with vertue, though a man be of obſcure parentage, than being deſcended of famous Progenitours, to Pulchrius multò parari quàm creari nobilem, Auſon. in Solon. ſentent.

Eurip. apud Stobæum, Serm. 86.

Plutarch. Apothegm.

Stobæus, ſerm. 90.

Melius eſt nobilitatem peperiſſe quàm acceptam corrupiſſe, Saluſt. in Bello Iugurth.

abound

Præſtat in obſcuritate generis virtute, quam in maiorum claritate vitijs cumulari, Greg. Nazian. in nobilem malè moratum Eccleſia.22.8,9.

abound with vices; euen as the Roſe is better which yeeldeth a fragrant and ſweet ſmel, though it ſpring from a prickling plant, than a thorne or briar, growing in a fruitfull ſoile, which is good for nothing but for the fire. To the ſame purpoſe, the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, that If children liue honeſtly, they ſhall put away the ſhame of their parents, but if they be proud with hautineſſe and fooliſhneſſe, they defile the Nobilitie of their Kindred.

§. Sect. 10. That worldly Nobilitie is vnprofitable.

Stemmata quid faciunt? quid prodeſt Pontice longo Sanguine cenſeri? pictos oſtendere vultus maiorum, &c. Iuven. Satyr. 8.

But as this worldly Nobilitie is vaine and of no worth: ſo alſo is it altogether vnprofitable, being ſeuered from thoſe vertues and good parts which were in thoſe Progenitours, who did firſt ennoble the Family. For as it doth not profit the ſtreame that it floweth from a cleere fountaine, when as it ſelfe is full of filth or mud, by reaſon of the filthineſſe of its owne channell: no more doth it auaile any to haue noble and vertuous Anceſtours, when as themſelues are poyſoned and corrupted with diſhonourable qualities, and diſgracefull vices. Who would not think his folly ridiculous, who being himſelfe lame, ſhould be proud becauſe hee is deſcended from able and actiue parents? or being himſelfe blind, ſhould boaſt of his Progenitours quicke eye-ſight? or being dumbe, ſhould bragge of their eloquence? or finally being a ſtarke foole, ſhould glory and vaunt himſelf in his Anceſtors wiſdome? And ſurely it is no leſſe abſurd for any, to beare themſelues high in the vertue and worth of their Predeceſſours, when there is nothing in them but vice and worthleſneſſe; there being farre greater cauſe why their Progenitours ſhould be aſhamed of ſuch a degenerate off-ſpring, than why they ſhould bee proud of ſuch Anceſtors, whom they doe not at all reſemble in their vertues and good parts. It is true indeed that a young Colt is much eſteemed for his race, and the vntried Whelpe for his kind he commeth of: but if being come to proofe, there bee no courage or mettle in the one, nor any ſwiftneſſe or ſagacitie in the other; notwithſtanding their race and kind, wee eſteeme no better of themſelues, but as Iades and Curs; becauſe it is not the goodnes of their kind which will helpe them in the race, or cauſe them to winne the Game, if they be vtterly void of ſelfe-excellency. And ſo in like manner, howſoeuer greatneſſe of birth may commend young Nobilitie, as giuing ſome hope in courſe of nature, that they will reſemble the worth and vertues of their Progenitors: yet when being come to riper age, they plainly diſcouer that they are vtterly degenerate, full of baſe qualities, ignoble and vicious: they (notwithſtanding the worth of their Anceſtors) are to be eſteemed ſeruile and contemptible. For as parentage doth not abſolutely conferre vertue, ſo neither Nobilitie; and as vertue it ſelfe is not hereditary, ſo neither is Nobility, which (as I haue ſaid) is chiefly grounded vpon vertue and goodneſſe. Wee ſee by experience, that from the ſame oare commeth baſe droſſe and pure Gold; from the ſame roote, a ſharpe prickle and a ſweet Roſe; and from the ſame graine of corne, both ſtraw and chaffe, and alſo pure wheate. And it is often to be ſeene that the ſame vertuous parents haue both good and bad children deſcended of them: ſo faithfull Abraham had an Iſmael, as well as an Iſaac; and Iſaac as well a prophane Eſau, as a vertuous Iacob: good Samuel had a deſperate off-ſpring: and holy Dauid had as well an Abſolon and Adoniah, as a Salomon, and a Nathan. Whereby it appeareth that vertues cannot bee entailed like lands, or though ſuch an entaile were made, yet it proueth no perpetuitie, ſeeing it is eaſily cut off, when as they degenerate from their Anceſtors, and hold a contrary courſe in all manner of vice and wickedneſſe.

Virtutes hereditaria

§. Sect. 1

The vnpro tableneſſe o worldly N litie ſhew diuers exa ples. Luke 3.38.

But let vs conſider the vnprofitableneſſe of worldly Nobility in ſome particular examples. Cain as we know, was the firſt borne of Adam, who had his deſcent from God himſelfe, & was heire apparant to the whole World, but what did it auaile him to haue the moſt excellent man for his Father, and the Soueraigne King of Heauen and Earth, in ſome ſort, for his Grand-father? Or what did his great birth-right profit him, when as defiling his heart with rage and crueltie, and his hands with innocent bloud, hee made himſelfe to become a baſe Vagabond vpon the earth? What did it benefit Cham to bee nobly deſcended of that great and righteous Patriarch Noah, the ſecond mayne root of repaired mankind, when as by his wickedneſſe he became ſubject to the curſe, and being free-borne, did by his vice and ſin make himſelfe an abject ſeruant? What did it profit Iſmael to bee the firſt-borne of faithfull Abraham, or Eſau to be the eldeſt ſonne of religious Iſaac, when as the one becomming a derider of Gods promiſes, was (as it were) excommunicate and caſt out of that Family, to which the Couenant of Grace was made and appropriated; and the other ſhewing himſelfe a prophane contemner of holy and heauenly things, loſt both the birth-right and the bleſſing? It were infinite to ſtand vpon ſuch particulars; and therefore for breuitie ſake, contenting our ſelues with theſe few, let vs alſo conſider the truth hereof in a whole people or country. What Nation in the World was euer comparable in Nobility to the people of the Iewes? who being deſcended from Abraham the Father of the faithfull, had the Lord himſelfe for the firſt and immediate founder of their Commonwealth, yea, for their King and Soueraigne, who judged, ruled and gouerned them, as it were, by his owne mouth in difficult cauſes, holding in his owne hand the Royall Lawes and Prerogatiues, till they vnthankfully deſired another King, and would needs be ruled like other Nations. Againe, that which other people counterfeited, they truly had; namely, the Lord himſelfe for their Lawgiuer, who proclaimed the chiefe ſumme of their Lawes by his owne glorious voice, and at large expounded them by his faithfull ſeruant Moſes; all which were much more excellent than the Lawes of any other Nation. Moreouer, if wee reſpect antiquitie, they were moſt ancient, there being no Hiſtories that make mention of any Common-wealth, which was conſtituted long after the Common-wealth of Iſrael: for whereas all Writings and Records were meerely fabulous among the Heathens before the Warres of Troy; the learned haue found that this War was long after the ſetling of the State of Iſrael, when as they had Iephthe for their Iudge. Finally, there was neuer any Nation, who could ſo plainly and diſtinctly ſhew the antiquitie of their Houſes and Kindred, by reaſon of that exact diuiſion of their Tribes, Families and Inheritances, which was religiouſly obſerued among them. But yet what did all this Nobilitie of the people of Iſrael auaile them, when as degenerating from their Anceſtors, they loſt their vertues, the true life and ſoule of their Nobilitie, and became vicious and polluted with all manner of ſinne? Surely nothing at all; for doe not the Prophets of God notwithſtanding all this (looking vnto what they were, and not reſpecting from whom they were deſcended) call them the ſeed of the wicked, corrupt children, people of Gomorrah? Doe they not tell them, that the curſed Cananites were their Kindred, their Father an Amorite, and their Mother an Hittite? Yea, doth not Iohn the Baptiſt goe further, calling them a generation of Vipers, and charging them no more to challenge Abraham for their Father, ſeeing they nothing reſembled him in his faith and other vertues? And doth not our Sauiour himſelfe diſgrace them with the ſame title? and when they gloried in their Nobilitie, becauſe they were Abrahams ſeed, doth not he tell them, that if they were the children of Abraham, they would doe the workes of Abraham; and plainly affirmeth that they were the children of Deuill, becauſe they did his will, and reſembled him in performing their wicked luſts? So ſmall account haue Chriſt and his Prophets made of this worldly Nobility, being ſeuered from vertue and polluted with vice and wickedneſſe. Neither is it any maruell if that Nobilitie which is deriued from earthly parents, doth nought profit thoſe who doe not imitate their vertue, when as Kindred, and Conſanguinitie with Chriſt Ieſus himſelfe, who was not only man, but alſo the glorious Sonne of God, did not at all auaile thoſe, who were not as neere vnto him in faith, as they were in bloud: for when it was told him that his mother and brethren did waite to ſpeake with him, lightly accounting of earthly Kindred, he farre preferreth before it that kindred which was ſpirituall, affirming that his Diſciples, who heard and obeyed his Fathers will, were his brethren, ſiſters and mother. And how little hee eſteemed of thoſe who were his brethren in the fleſh, and did not adhere vnto him by a liuely faith, it may plainly appeare in the ſeuenth of Iohn, by that diſagreeing Dialogue that was betweene them. So when a woman admiring his doctrine cryed out, that the wombe was bleſſed that bare him, and the paps that gaue him ſucke, he correcteth her ſpeech, ſaying, yea, rather bleſſed are they that heare the Word of God and keepe it. And therefore if this Conſanguinitie with Chriſt Ieſus himſelfe bee vnprofitable, vnleſſe through faith we be of ſpirituall kindred with him, how little will it auaile vs to claime the moſt noble on earth for our Anceſtors and Progenitors, if we be degenerate from them in vertue, grace and goodneſſe?

Mat.12.49,50.

Nulla prærogatiua in ſucceſſione eſt niſi fidei adſtipuletur hæreditas, Ambroſ. in Luc.cap.3.

Iohn 7.3,5.7.

Luke 11,27.

*§.Sect.*12.
That worldly nobility maketh men proud and negligent in the duties of Religion.

And thus haue I ſhewed that this worldly Nobility hath in it neither worth nor profit. But we are further to know, that moſt commonly it is accompanied with much hurt; for firſt it puffeth men vp with a proud conceit of their owne greatneſſe, and maketh them to contemne all others, whom they excell in noble Anceſtors, Titles, Armes and ſuch like Honours, in regard whereof Nobility is called the fuell of pride: the which (as one ſaith) Chriſtian Nobles ſhould bee farre from, becauſe together with the poore and ignoble they call God their Father, which they cannot truly and religiouſly ſay, vnleſſe they alſo acknowledge them to bee their brethren. Yea, it cauſeth them not only to carry and demeane themſelues proudly towards men, but alſo towards God himſelfe, by whom they were aduanced to their greatneſſe, and maketh them quite to forget that they were euer thus beholding vnto him, to caſt his Commandements behinde their backs, and either vtterly to neglect the duties of his worſhip and ſeruice, or at leaſt the publike means thereof, contenting themſelues with their priuate and home-deuotions. For thinking it vnfit for their Nobility and greatneſſe, to adjoyne themſelues with the vulgar people, and that they ſhould imbaſe their honour too much by comming into the publike Congregation, they content themſelues with their Chaplaine, as Micha with his Leuite, and not induring the publike Miniſtery, where ſinne is reproued without reſpect of perſons, and the conſcience ſearched to the bottome; they commit themſelues ouer to his cure, who hauing his preſent meanes and future hopes wholly depending vpon them, dare not ſay any thing that may incurre their diſpleaſure; not yet apply any ſalues to their feſtred ſores, which might cure them to the bottome, becauſe they would too much vexe and trouble their delicate and wanton patients; but only ſuch healing ſalues as draw ouer the ſore a faire skin of carnall ſecurity, but leaue the core behind, and neuer free them from the inward putrefaction. And this (I doubt not to ſay) is one chiefe and ſpeciall cauſe of the irreligion and prophanenes of the Nobility of theſe times, becauſe they neglect the Ordinance of God in the publicke Miniſtery of the Word, which is the ordinary meanes of conuerſion and ſaluation, and either doe not at all performe this outward ſeruice vnto God, or elſe after their owne faſhion, without power or profit, making him firſt of their charge, vnto whoſe charge they commit themſelues; their ſeruant, before they make him their ſhepheard, and to depend vpon them for his bodily nouriſhment and meanes of life, before they will depend vpon him for their ſpirituall nouriſhment and the food of their ſoules, which they will haue cooked after their owne faſhion, and fitted to their daintie palate with their own pleaſing ſauce, or elſe hee is ſure to loſe their fauour, and with it the fruit of all his labours, and all the hopes of his tedious ſeruice, and baſe dependancie.

Nobilitas carnalis eſt fomes ſuperbiæ, Fulgent. de ſtatu viduali Epiſt.a Aug. de Serm. Dom. in monte, lib.2.tom.4

§. Sect. 13. That nobilitie ſeuered from vertue, diſgraceth thoſe that haue it.

Secondly, this worldly Nobility which is ſeuered from vertue, doth but diſgrace thoſe that haue it, and when they by their worth are not an honour vnto it, it becommeth a diſhonour vnto them. For it is vnto them as a light, which not only draweth mens eyes to looke vpon them, but alſo doth conſequently diſcouer their vices and deformities, and ſet them out to the publick view: euery one being apt to obſerue the faults of their ſuperiours, as foule ſtaines in finer clothes and as blacke clouds hiding from their eyes the Sunnes brightneſſe; and to paſſe that cenſure, that it is moſt vncomely for thoſe of ſo good birth, to diſgrace themſelues with ſo euill a life. So that they who are of greateſt eſtate, haue in their actions and carriage the leaſt liberty, becauſe their doings are more curiouſly obſerued, and ſharply cenſured, and much being expected from them, they are much more blamed than other men, when as they come ſhort of expectation. In which reſpect, one compareth theſe Nobles to ſuch Muſicians, as comming in with coſtly clothes and excellent inſtruments, doe moue great expectation in the beholders; but hauing harſh and vntunable voices, and a rude and vnskilfull touch, all their brauery tendeth to their more diſgrace, not only becauſe themſelues are ignorant Bunglers, but alſo do abuſe and deceiue the beholders expectation. Againe, as it doth diſgrace themſelues and ſheweth their faults, ſo alſo hauing diſcouered them, it much aggrauateth them, both as it ſheweth greater vnthankfulneſſe towards God, by abuſing his more rich mercy, wherewith hee hath priuiledged them aboue others, and alſo becauſe their ſinnes, by reaſon of their greatneſſe, being more exemplary, doe draw on their inferiours to their imitation. And conſequently as it doth aggrauate ſinne, ſo it doth increaſe their condemnation, Gods juſtice proportionating the puniſhment according to the meaſure of mens faultineſſe; ſo that where ſinne hath runne ouer, there alſo judgement doth ouer-flow. Now the vices of Nobility are greater, and more inexcuſable than other mens, both in reſpect of the former reaſons, and alſo becauſe they haue degenerated from their Anceſtours, and with their neglect of other meanes, haue not at all profited by domeſticall examples, nor been bettered, although their worthy Progenitours haue left vnto them the memoriall of their vertues, as a paterne for their imitation. But of theſe points I ſhall haue occaſion to ſpeake more hereafter, and therefore will here briefly paſſe them ouer.

Turpe eſt bene natis malè viuere. In maxima fortuna minima eſt licentia, Saluſt. in conſpir. Catelin.

Cicero lib. 4. ad Herennium

Seeing therefore this worldly Nobility is of no excellencie, vnprofitable and momentany, and ſo farre from bringing vnto vs any great good, that it is through mans corruption the cauſe of much hurt, let vs not ouer-ualue it, or too much ſet our hearts vpon it; but learning to deſpiſe and contemne it, as being of ſmall worth, let vs labour to aduance our ſelues to ſpirituall and heauenly Nobility; both becauſe it is moſt excellent and profitable, and alſo not like the other, peculiar to ſome few, but common to all, who ſetting their hearts and affections vpon it, do with all their deſires and indeuours ſeeke and ſue for it.

The excellency of this ſpirituall and heauenly Nobility, appeareth both in their freedome that haue it, and alſo in their aduancement. They are freed from the ſlauiſh tyranny of Satan, and from the baſe ſeruitude of ſinne: ſo that as the Apoſtle ſaith, it ſhall no longer reigne in their mortall bodies. The which is to be eſteemed the chiefeſt part of true Nobility, when as holding nothing from theſe baſe Lords, they owe all their fealtie, allegiance, and ſeruice to the Lord of all, and ſupreame King of heauen and earth. Whereas contrariwiſe, they who are moſt noble in their worldly eſtate, are notwithſtanding all their honours and high titles, of a moſt abject and baſe condition, as long as they remayne, in the ſlauery and bondage of ſinne and Satan; for what more vile ſeruitude can be imagined, than to bee the ſeruant of ſinne, and to remayne Sathans Drudge, ready to doe his will? Againe, this ſpirituall and true Nobility freeth vs from the ouer-ruling power of our corrupt affections, and from the tumultuous tyranny of our violent paſſions, bringing them vnder the rule of the Law of God, and in ſubjection to holy reaſon. The which priuiledge worldly Nobility wanteth; and conſequently bringeth with it ſmall grace or profit. For what auaileth it a man to be outwardly glorious in the World, and inwardly baſe in himſelfe? to haue other men to cap & crouch to him, when as he ſerueth more vitious and baſe Maſters than the worſt that ſerue him? and whileſt others ſtoope vnto him, and doe him honour; he diſgraceth himſelfe by ſtooping and yeelding to his vile affections and violent paſſions? Finally, this true and Chriſtian Nobility, doth cauſe vs to ſtand boldly in the preſence of our great King, in aſſurance of his loue, and to offer vnto him our willing ſeruice, not for ſeruile feare, either of his heauy curſe pronounced in his Law, or of his fearefull puniſhments denounced againſt ſinne, either reſpecting this life or the life to come; but out of a free and generous diſpoſition, becauſe we loue him, who hath loued vs firſt, and thinke nothing too much which wee can doe for his glory, who hath not thought the life of his deareſt Sonne, too deare for vs, but hath freely giuen it for our Redemption and Saluation; whereas worldly Nobility hath no ſuch priuiledge, ſeeing it neither conferreth vnto vs the confidence of ſonnes, nor freeth vs from the ſlauiſh feare of ſeruants. For notwithſtanding all this worldly glory, men may quake with feare, when God ſheweth the leaſt ſigne of his powerfull preſence, and either vtterly neglect the duties of his ſeruice, or performe them ſecurely with careles neglect, or with great terrour and trouble of minde.

The aduancements alſo of ſpirituall Nobility are ten thouſand times more excellent than thoſe which belong to that which is worldly. By this we ſtand in the preſence of Princes, by that in the preſence of the glorious King of Heauen and Earth; by this wee haue oft the fauour of earthly Kings, by that wee haue alwayes the fauour of the King of glory: by this wee haue earthly reuenewes which are but momentany, by that an heauenly inheritance, which is euerlaſting; by this wee are honoured and eſteemed of men, by that of the Saints and Angels, yea of God himſelfe; by this we are chiefe ſeruants to the great Monarches of the World, by that wee become chiefe ſeruants of the great Monarch of Heauen and Earth. Yea, wee become a kin to Chriſt Ieſus himſelf, euen his brothers & ſiſters, as himſelfe witneſſeth; and through him the adopted ſonnes of God, and not onely ſonnes, but alſo heires, not of an earthly inheritance, but of an heauenly Kingdome, immortall and vndefiled. In regard whereof the Scriptures giue vs the titles not onely of Nobility, but alſo of Royalty, and affirme directly that wee are made of God through Chriſt, not onely great Officers of his heauenly Court, but alſo Kings who ſhal reigne with him in all joy and glory. And therefore as much as a ſonne excelleth a ſeruant, Heauen Earth, and God himſelfe mortall Princes; ſo much more wee are in our judgements to eſteeme, and in our endeuours to ſeeke the nobility of a Chriſtian, aboue and before the nobility of a Worldling. Vnto which wee may the rather be incouraged, becauſe whereas this earthly Nobility is conferred but vpon a very few; as either vpon thoſe who are nobly deſcended, or vpon ſuch whoſe great vertues and deſerts, joyned with no leſſe good hap, and extraordinary ſucceſſe in al their courſes and carriages, doe aduance to the ſeat of honour, and dignifie with thoſe high Titles; this Nobility of a Chriſtian may certainly be attained vnto, of as many as doe with their deſires and indeuours ſeeke after it, vſing the meanes which God hath ordained for this purpoſe; namely, the diligent hearing and fruitfull obeying of Gods Word, and a liuely faith in Ieſus Chriſt. And therefore let vs more eſteeme, affect, and ſeeke that which excelleth, both in worth and certainty; and contemning this worldly nobility which is commonly vnprofitable, often hurtfull, ſeldome, or not without great difficultie attained, and but for a moment of time retained and poſſeſſed; let vs aſpire with an holy and happy ambition, vnto that heauenly Royalty, which we may certainly find if we carefully ſeeke it, and hauing obtained it, ſhall haue with it al profit without hurt, joy without moleſtation, and happineſſe without end. And thus much concerning the vanity of worldly Nobility.

1.Pet.2.9.
Apoc.1.6. and 5.10.

Matth.12.50.

Iohn 1.12.

CHAP. XIII.

Of Kingdomes and Monarchies.

§. Sect. 1. That Kingly & ſupreme authority is in it ſelfe good and to be reuerenced and reſpected.

THe laſt and higheſt degree of worldly aduancement and preferment, is Kingdome and Soueraignty, Empire and ſupreame Dominion, whereby men being exalted into the Royall Throne, doe rule and gouerne whole Common-wealths. Of which I ſhall need to ſpeake the leſſe, becauſe much of that which hath beene ſpoken concerning power, authority, and Nobility, may eaſily by the diſcreet Reader be fitted and applyed hereunto. And therefore I will adde onely ſome things which may ſeeme more peculiar to this Royall and Soueraigne aduancement. Where firſt we are to know that the following diſcourſe is not intended to ſhew the vauity, or perſwade the contempt of cruell and barbarous tyranny; which being odious to God and men, needs no reaſon to moue all to haue it in deteſtation and baſe eſteeme; but of lawfull Monarchies and Kingdomes, abuſed either by ouer-valuing their worth, or through the corruption and faultineſſe of gouernment. The contempt whereof as it ought not to be abſolute in any, but onely in reſpect of abuſe (for it is a thing of as great eſteeme as any elſe in the world, when as a good King ruleth well, and not according to his owne luſts and vnlimited pleaſure, but according to the Law of God, the Law of Nations, and the particular Lawes of his owne Kingdome) ſo ought it not to bee in all, but in thoſe onely who are either poſſeſſed, or in poſſibility of this ſupreme ſoueraignety; vnleſſe it bee as wee vnderſtand it comparatiuely in reſpect either of ſpirituall graces, or heauenly ioyes. For as for thoſe who are in ſubiection, they are to honour and eſteeme their Soueraignes in the next place to God himſelfe: ſeeing this rule and authority is Gods Ordinance, and Kings are his Deputies and Lieutenants, & (as it were) the great Stewards of his family, whom hee hath dignified by giuing them his own name and Titles, and hath bound vs by his Word to owe and yeeld vnto them all honour, loue and dutie. So the Apoſtle ſaith, Let euery ſoule be ſubiect to the higher powers; for there is no power but of God, and the powers that be are ordained of God, &c. And as it is to be highly eſteemed of the people, as being an Ordinance of God in it ſelfe good; ſo alſo becauſe it is ſo neceſſary to the well-being of a Common-wealth, that it is impoſſible without it that it ſhould ſtand, much leſſe flouriſh and proſper. For looke what the Shepheard is to the ſheepe, the Pilote to the ſhip, the Captaine to the Souldier, yea, the head and heart to the body; and ſuch is the King to the Common-wealth.

*Pſal.*82.1,6.

Rom.13.1,2.
1 Pet.2.13.

§. Sect. 2.
That royalty and ſupreme authority is the gift and bleſſing of God.

And in the ſame regard this preferment of ſoueraigne and tranſcendent power is to bee duely valued and eſteemed of thoſe, who are by Gods prouidence aduanced to this Royalty; ſeeing it is a great gift and royall prerogatiue, wherewith the Lord hath inriched them aboue all their Brethren, requiring a proportionable thankfulneſſe, which they can neuer yeeld, vnleſſe they know and eſteeme the benefit: yea, it is not only a gift, but a bleſſing, expreſſed in that mayne bleſſing, wherewith God bleſſed Abraham, the great Patriarch and Father of the faithfull; I will make thee (ſaith hee) exceeding fruitfull, and will make Nations of thee, yea, Kings ſhall proceed of thee. Vnto which who ſo are aduanced, they ſeem to be preferred aboue the eſtate and condition of meere men, in reſpect of their place and office, in regard whereof they haue Gods Name and Titles imparted vnto them. And this alſo the Lord ſeemeth to imply by his Prophet, where hauing giuen charge that no man ſhould enter by the Eaſt-gate of the Sanctuary, becauſe the Lord had entred by it: in the next words he ſaith, that it ſhall appertaine to the Prince, both to take therein his repaſt, & to make it the way of his paſſage, to come in and goe out thereby. Neuertheleſſe howſoeuer Kingdomes are the chiefeſt of worldly preferments; yet are they not to take vp the chiefeſt place in our iudgements and affections, ſeeing they are but of meane worth, being compared with Gods ſpirituall graces, or the eternall ioyes of his Kingdom. In reſpect whereof they are to be meanly valued and moderately deſired; that is, neither to be refuſed where God giueth them, nor to be affected when as he denieth them, not giuing vnto vs lawfull meanes of attayning to them. Yea, they are directly to be contemned and reiected, when as they come in competition for our loue with thoſe other excellencies, as being in compariſon of them worthleſſe and vnprofitable, and when they are thus abuſed, hurtfull and pernicious: which who ſo doe, they ſhew greater and more Chriſtian magnanimity in this contempt, than others in affecting, or, hauing obtained them, by raigning in all their royalty. An example whereof we haue in Gedeon, who was more ennobled for denying a Kingdome when it was offered vnto him; than his ſonne Abimilech who with cruell and vnnaturall ambition aſpired vnto it.

Gen.17.6.

But let vs conſider of ſome reaſons which may ſhew the worthleſſe vanity of worldly Kingdomes, in compariſon of Gods ſpirituall graces or heauenly ioyes. The firſt may be taken from the manifold troubles and incumbrances which a Kingdome bringeth with it, euen to thoſe who iuſtly come by it, and wiſely manage it; the which are ſo innumerable, irkſome and burthenſome; that if men were not more ſupported with ambition, than with reaſon, they would be ready for wearineſſe to ſinke vnder the waight, and to vnload themſelues of this intolerable greatneſſe, to finde eaſe in a more priuate life. Of this the Heathen Monarch hauing experience, ſaid vnto one who admired his happineſſe, and meaſured his inward comfort and contentment by his outward rule; If (ſaith hee) thou diddeſt know with how many euils this Diadem were repleniſhed, thou wouldeſt not take it vp, though thou foundeſt it vpon a dunghill. The truth hereof may be more euident, if wee conſider but ſome few particulars: for firſt, what wearying and waſting care is euen a good King ſubiect vnto, whileſt he deſireth and ſtudieth to act well his Kingly part, ſo as he may haue the applauſe of God and his Angels, and that both in reſpect of himſelfe, and alſo that which hee taketh for his ſubjects? And for himſelfe, both in regard of his perſon and priuate actions, and alſo in regard of his place and publike gouernment. For the firſt, his care is extraordinary, that he may become a patterne and precedent vnto his people, whom they may imitate; and to this end hee deſireth to ſhine before them by a good example, making his owne life both the expoſition and example of his lawes, and appearing both without ſubſtance or ſemblance of euill, to be alſo as good as he appeareth. For hee conſidereth that the Princes life and manners, are the ſquare and rule according to which his ſubjects frame themſelues in their whole courſe and conuerſation: and therefore hee ſeeth how much it behooueth him that the ſquare bee ſtraight, leaſt the worke be crooked, and the whole common-wealth brought out of frame. He knoweth that he ruleth ouer reaſonable creatures, and therefore ſtudieth firſt to conforme himſelfe to the rule of reaſon in all his actions, that ſo they may the better ſubject themſelues vnto his gouernment, and may ſuffer him to rule as well in their hearts as in their outward actions. Hee findeth by experience that Princes examples are moſt effectuall exhortations, either to good or euill, and that their liues are more powerfull than their lawes to incline and moue, to the better or worſer part: and therefore hee ſpendeth himſelfe in ſtudying this diuine oratorie, that his life and example may ſpeake good things vnto his people. Hee conſidereth that Kings errors are like the eclypſes of the Sunne, which though they bee ſoone paſt ouer, yet bring damage and hurt to all ſublunary and inferiour bodies: and therefore he is alwayes watchfull and heedfull ouer his wayes, that his brighneſſe bee not blemiſhed by any vice or ſinne, which might ſtop and hinder the influence of his good parts, from being profitable to his ſubjects and inferiours.

The like care hee taketh for the well demeaning of himſelfe in his publike gouernment, hauing alwayes in his minde, that hee ruleth ouer men, that he is to gouerne them by Law and reaſon, not according to his luſts: that hee ſhall not alwayes gouerne, but that the time ſhall come when Prince & ſubjects ſhall be both alike: and finally, that he muſt giue an account of his gouernment before the ſupreame King of heauen & earth, who reſpecteth not the perſon of Princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poore. In regard whereof, his care is great and continuall, not how he may rule according to his will, but according to reaſon and law, making loue and awefull maieſtie, ſeueritie and ſweetnes, mercie and juſtice, to ſtriue which ſhall haue the preheminence, or rather neuer to ſtriue, becauſe he tempereth them with true judgement and wiſdome in a heauenly harmonie. He conſidereth that as he is a King, ſo alſo he is the father of his countrey: for what is a common-wealth but a great familie, ouer which God hath ſet Princes as parents, not only to rule, but alſo to prouide for, preſerue and defend them? and therefore how great his care muſt needes be, to nouriſh and protect ſo great a charge, let priuate fathers judge, who find enough to doe, to order and prouide for their ſmall company. Yea he diſcerneth plainly, that a King in the common-wealth is like the ſoule in the body, which howſoeuer it be not directly and immediately touched and affected, either with the delights it taſteth, or with the griefes & miſeries which it indureth; yet doth it communicate in both, by ſympathie and fellow-feeling: and therefore he doth not lay vpon his ſubiects heauie burthens, becauſe he alſo is pinched with that waight which oppreſſeth them, he enuieth not, but greatly reioyceth in their proſperitie, becauſe hee communicates with them in their contentment; and if for the good of the whole body of the common-wealth, he finde it neceſſary to receiue, rather than take of their goods, that they may inioy the reſt with peace and comfort, he onely croppeth them, or rather pruneth them, that they may grow the better, and doth not ſtocke them vp by the roots. And as the Heathen Prince ſaith, hee doth like a good ſhepheard, only fleece them in ſeaſonable time, and not pull off skin and all; knowing that the chiefe treaſure of a Prince is the riches of his ſubjects, and their coffers his beſt exchequer. Finally, good princes remember that they are Gods deputies, therefore their care is that they may be like him, not hauing their greatnes to exceed their goodnes, but as their power inableth them to doe what they will, ſo their goodneſſe limiteth them to the doing of that which is profitable for their ſubjects; the which their care is ſo much more vigilant, becauſe they know that there will bee an end of their Lieutenantſhip, when as they ſhall be called to an account of their gouernment, and receiue either the reward of their juſtice, or the puniſhment of their corruptions, and ill-deſeruing.

Boni paſtoris eſt tondere pecus. non deglubere. Tiberius apud Suetonium.

§. Sect.5. The care which a King taketh in reſpect of his ſubiects.

Finally, as the good Prince is continually troubled with care about himſelfe, that he may performe his dutie: ſo he taketh no leſſe care, that theſe duties performed may procure the good and wel-fare of his ſubjects: as for example, that by his wiſdome and prouidence, they may haue both neceſſaries and ſufficient plentie, that by his diſcreet gouernment they may bee kept in good order, that by his adminiſtration of juſtice, euery one may poſſeſſe his owne right, and be preſerued from wrongs and iniuries: and finally, that by his circumſpection and power, his ſubjects may be protected from forren forces, and inioy ſecure peace. For being the father of his countrey, he is with a fatherly affection to care for the good of his children, as well as his owne; he is the skilfull pilot in this great ſhip of the common-wealth, who ſitteth at the ſterne, and ordereth all for the preſeruation, not onely of himſelfe, but alſo the whole ſhip, and all the paſſengers who haue committed themſelues to his care and prouidence. And as it is not enough for the rule or ſquare to bee ſtraight it ſelfe, but it muſt alſo ſerue as the inſtrument to make other things conformable to its owne ſtraightneſſe, and to leuell and make euen the whole worke: ſo it is not enough for a good prince that he bee in himſelfe vpright, iuſt, and furniſhed with all vertues which become a priuate man; but his care muſt alſo bee that thoſe that are committed to his charge and gouernment, may communicate with him in all vertue and goodneſſe, becauſe he is a publike perſon, and the head of this great body which muſt gouerne and direct his members, as ſhall bee moſt honorable for himſelfe and profitable for them. Now although this neceſſitie of taking extraordinarie care for his owne perſon, and all the reſt of his ſubjects bee an happie neceſſitie, becauſe it forceth to that which is good; and howſoeuer he may haue comfort in the fruits thereof, yet who knoweth not that in its ſelfe it is vnpleaſant and troubleſome; and ſo bitter and diſtaſtefull that it may well weane any from the loue of greatnes?

§. Sect. 6. The waightie burthen and painefull labour which accompanieth ſoueraignty.

Secondly, though a crowne may ſeeme to make a glorious ſhew, yet it weigheth ſo heauie, and ſitteth ſo vneaſie vpon the head, that thoſe that haue it can take little delight in wearing it, and thoſe that want it, if they loue their owne eaſe, would if they once felt the waight, be well content that they are not aduanced vnto the honour, becauſe alſo they are not preſſed with the waight. For what doth hee elſe who is aduanced to this height of greatneſſe but Atlas-like beare vpon his ſhoulders the waight of the whole common-wealth; and whileſt hee is lifted vp into the ſeate of honour, is preſſed downe againe with his waightie burthen? What doth hee elſe but toile with the greateſt labour of all, euen the labour of the minde, continually ſtudying how he may either preſerue or aduance his owne glory, and his ſubjects good: and what is hee better that ſinketh vnder the burthen of gold, than he who is oppreſſed with the waight of earth? what eaſe hath hee more that toileth in the golden mines, than hee who labourth in the clay pit, or quarrey of ſtones? They are aduanced indeed with the glorious titles of monarches, kings and ſoueraignes; but what are they in truth but the great ſeruants of the common-wealth, who labour and take paines for the generall good? What are they but ſtewards of this great familie, who whileſt they haue the rule and diſpoſing of all, haue alſo the care and burthen of all laid vpon them? and what is their raigne, but as one of them ſpake by experience, a glorious ſeruitude? Wee know that the pilote as hee hath the greateſt rule in the ſhip, ſo he hath the greateſt part in the paines and labour; for his minde is exerciſed whileſt others are at reſt, and watcheth at the ſterne whileſt the paſſengers ſecurely ſleepe. The captaine likewiſe as hee hath moſt honour, ſo hee carieth the greateſt burthen; for whileſt the common ſouldiers take care, and prouide onely for themſelues, hee alſo extends his care, prouidence, and labour for the good and preſeruation of the whole companie. Now if the rule of a ſhip, or of a ſmall troupe bee ſo burthenſome and laborious, what ſhall we thinke of the gouernment of a whole countrie and common-wealth.

Antigon apud Æli
var. hiſt.

§. Sect. 9.
That pri are mo troubled the viole of their affection

Thirdly, theſe great potentates are much more turmoyled with the violence of their affections than priuate men, their greatnes adding ſtrength to their paſſions, and making them furious and vnreſiſtable, or themſelues more impatient if they bee reſiſted; their anger is more eaſily inflamed, becauſe their greatneſſe maketh them impatient of bearing the leaſt iniurie, although it expoſeth them alſo to more than any other. Being incenſed, they burne inwardly with a deſire, and burſt outwardly into the act of more furious reuenge, meaſuring the puniſhment which they take of the partie offending rather according to their owne greatneſſe, than to the fault which is committed; and hauing herein power in their hands to doe what they will, they often doe more than they ſhould. Their hopes are greater both in reſpect of the obiect and things hoped for, and in reſpect of the affection it ſelfe, their great power making them beleeue that they can compaſſe whatſoeuer they deſire; and the more ſtrong their expectation was, the greater is their impatiencie when as it appeares fruſtrate; not ſo much oft times for miſſing the thing, as for not hauing their will; or becauſe it doth appeare that their power is limited and not omnipotent. Their griefes are more in number, and more piercing and ſharpe in their operation than other mens; both becauſe of the manifold cauſes thereof, which muſt needs happen often in the multitude of their affaires; and alſo becauſe the greatneſſe of their ſpirits doth make them much to aggrauate them through their impatiencie, and gauleth their minds the more through

Non tam tatus periculis po ſuis vel perſo diuiſas cumber
In. Chryſ
pop. Ant
homil.

through their much ſtrugling. But of all other paſſions they are moſt troubled and perplexed with feare, it being a thing neceſſarie, that they whom many feare, ſhould alſo themſelues feare many; and that they who intermeddle with manifold buſineſſes of great moment, and that oft times betweene aduerſe parties, muſt needs incurre the hatred of many, and together with hatred perill and danger. Neither doth the multitude of enemies ſo much amaze them, as becauſe they are ſecret and vnknowne, nor their force ſo much as their hidden trecheries. For as the bullet is more dangerous than the ſword; becauſe killing before it is diſcouered, there is no ward for it: ſo theſe vnexpected blowes of traitours, being giuen ſecretly and at vnawares, are much more to be feared than the violence of profeſſed enemies, becauſe they wound and giue no warning. Now theſe ſecret foes are much more common to princes than open enemies; ſeeing their greatnes is no more apt to ſtirre vp enmitie againſt them, than to worke a care in thoſe in whom it is bred to hide and conceale it, becauſe here eſpecially profeſſed hatred taketh away opportunitie of reuenge, and turneth the miſchiefe vpon his head that threatneth it. In regard whereof princes, whileſt they know not whom to feare, are apt to feare all, and vpon ſmall occaſions to haue euen thoſe whom they haue choſen to guard them in iealouſie and ſuſpicion. Wherein (as one ſaith) they are in worſe eſtate than ſeruants; ſeeing theſe feare but one, and they all.

Neither in truth are their feares cauſeleſſe, or greater than their dangers; for their might and glory expoſes them to the enuie of all that are ambitious, who though they haue not their greatneſſe of ſtate, yet are they no leſſe hautie in heart; and therefore are euer readie to vndermine and ſupplant them by their trecherous plots and conſpiracies, when as they conceiue the leaſt hope of aduancing themſelues by their ruine. And as they are much endangered through enuie, ſo no leſſe by the hatred of their inferiours; for if they ſhould find no other fault in them to prouoke their malice; euen their goodnes is ſufficient argument to make them hated of the wicked, and their vpright adminiſtring of iuſtice is enough to make them abhorred of the lewde and licencious. In which regard princes muſt make account either by doing of their dutie to bee hated of men, or by neglecting it to be hated of God; to ſit ſtill and doe nothing worth the doing, or by atchieuing worthy actions fit for their greatneſſe, to indanger themſelues to the trecherous practiſes of the malicious. Beſides theſe dangers; vnto which enuie and malice expoſes them at home, they are more endangered than others in reſpect of open enemies & forraine forces: for it is not to ſupplant priuate men that armies are leuied, but the king is the marke at which they leuell; whoſe life to them is more than the deſtruction of tenne thouſand ſubjects; becauſe it is no leſſe mortall to the common-wealth when the head is cut off, than if the whole body were mangled in peeces. Neither are they more endangered by enemies than by falſe friends, ſeeing experience teacheth that many who haue eſcaped ſafe from all the attempts and forces of their profeſſed foes, haue beene catched in the priuie ſnares, and ſecret treacheries, which thoſe whom they accounted their deareſt friends haue laid and plotted againſt them. For it is impoſſible for theſe great potentates to ſatisfie the deſires of all that depend vpon them, and by preferring ſome before others, they procure the ſecret hatred of the reſt, whom pride and ſelfe-loue maketh beleeue that they aſwell deſerued to bee aduanced; and this maketh them ioyne with their enemies when as they promiſe to ſatisfie their hopes, and to repaire their ruined eſtates. Now theſe dangers are more dangerous and more deepely, and that iuſtly, apprehended of Kings, than of ſubjects, not only for that they haue more to loſe than the ordinarie ſort, but alſo becauſe they extend to the no leſſe hurt of the common-wealth, than of themſelues; which good Princes loue better than of their owne liues: for when the Prince is hurt, the whole countrie bleedeth at his wound; and when this great ſhepheard is ſmitten, then the ſilly ſheepe are ſcattered and indangered to the rapine of the rauenous wolfe.

2.King.19.37.

§. Sect. 9.

Of the vngratitude of the people towards their gouernours.

Fourthly, Princes are no little vexed with the ingratitude of their people; for when they haue taken all their care, and indured all that labour, and hazarded themſelues to all thoſe dangers, whileſt they indeauour to gouerne their ſubiects with iuſtice, and to preſerue them in peace and plenty; all their paines is rewarded with vngratitude, their good deeds with euill words, their doubtfull actions with ſiniſter cenſures and malicious interpretations; the common people being naturally apt to condemne that in ſuperiours, which being aboue their reach, they are not able to vnderſtand, and to miſlike the preſent gouernment, be it neuer ſo vnblameable. Neither is it poſſible for any man to pleaſe all that ruleth many, or to doe that which is acceptable vnto God, and to gaine the applauſe of the vulgar people; ſeeing they are diuided into as many phantaſies as they haue heads, the which are not only diuers, but expreſly contrary to one another; this man louing what that man hateth, and one admiring what another deſpiſeth, and deſiring which another

loatheth

Regium eſt malè audire, cum benefacias. Alexander. apud Plutarch. in Apothegm. Si quis malè rexerit dijs pœnas dabit; ſi benè odio à ciuibus habetur. Chryſippus apud Stob. Serm. 43 loatheth & abhorreth: ſo that it is as poſſible to reconcile truth and falſhood, and light with darkneſſe, as to accord this diſſenting multitude, or to vnite their opinions and affections to the approuing and deſiring of the ſame thing. Now vpon theſe often miſlikes of the paſſages of gouernment, followeth alſo a miſlike of the gouernour, and a wearines of being vnder his rule, ioyned with a deſire of the ſucceſſors aduancement; whom when they haue, they ſerue with the ſame ſauce, being as readie to traduce his gouernment, maligne his perſon, and to cenſure all his actions, as they were his predeceſſors.

§. Sect. 10
The great account that Princes haue to make at the day of iudgement.

And theſe are the euils which accompany kingdomes in this life, euen when the Prince affects and deſires to gouerne well. But that which may more weane mens hearts from the loue of ſoueraignty aboue all theſe euils and inconueniences, reſpects the life to come: namely, that great reckoning and account which Princes are to make at the day of iudgement. For howſoeuer in this life they are priuiledged from giuing a reaſon of their actions vnto men, yet the great King of heauen and earth, from whom they haue receiued their Empire and dominion will audit all their accounts, and haue a reckoning of all thoſe rich talents which he lent vnto them. Then muſt they yeeld an account how they haue ſpent their great riches and reuenewes, how they haue imployed all their ſupreame power and authoritie, for the executing of iuſtice and iudgement, and for the rewarding of the good, and puniſhment of the euill: how they haue ſpent that precious time allotted vnto them for the gouernment of the people, whether they haue improued it to the beſt aduantage for the glory of their Lord and good of their ſubiects, or elſe haue conſumed it in carnall pleaſures, and prophane riotouſneſſe. Then muſt they giue a reckoning of their owne life, whether they haue ſhined as lights before their people, and led them in the wayes of godlines by their good example; or contrariwiſe haue ſcandalized them by their euill liues, and miſlead them into the bypaths of ſinne as precedents of wickednes. Finally, they muſt bee accountable at that day, for not onely all thoſe ſinnes which themſelues haue committed, but alſo for all thoſe committed by their ſubiects, vnto which they haue beene either principals, by their commandement, or acceſſaries through their conniuencie, and neglect of the execution of iuſtice. Now if a mans owne ſinnes ſhall bee a burthen intolerable, then what ſhall become of them who muſt giue an account alſo of the ſinnes of many thouſands, which through their default haue been committed?

Wiſdome 6.3.

§. Sect. 11.

But beſides theſe manifold euils which attend vpon kingdomes, euen when they are well gouerned, there are innumerable others which doe accompany them when they are abuſed: vnto which abuſe man through naturall corruption is moſt prone. For this higheſt worldly proſperity puffing men vp with pride, doth make them forgetfull of God, negligent in all good duties, and to contemne all vertue, as befitting rather priuate men than themſelues, who are ſo powerfull, potent and glorious, that they neede not the helpe of vertue to commend them. Or if at all it bee of any vſe, they thinke that onely a colour or ſhadow of vertue may ſerue the turne, to grace them to the deceiued eyes of the common people, though they haue no ſubſtance thereof, but are vtterly deſtitute of it in deede and truth. And as this greatneſſe of eſtate vſually hindereth men in the courſe of vertue, ſo doth it as commonly caſt them headlong into all manner of ſinne; as contempt of religion, prophanenes, and vtter neglect of all holy duties, pride, inſolencie, cruelty, oppreſſion, vnbrideled reuenge, and the reſt, making euery thing lawfull which liketh, and to ſeeme good in their iudgement, which they haue an appetite vnto in their looſe and vnlimitted affections. But eſpecially through their tranſcendent and ouer-topping power they are prone to the ſinnes of iniuſtice, oppreſſion, wrongs and iniuries, as the Lord deſcribeth their manners and courſe of carriage, when he would diſcourage his people from affecting their gouernment; of which ſinnes few Rulers can with good Samuel and Moſes acquite themſelues, and plead not guiltie, if the Lord ſhould ſummon them to iudgement. Now what are kingdomes to be eſteemed if they be void of iuſtice, and full of wrong, cruelty and oppreſſion? Surely (as one ſaith) where this ſacred iuſtice is not admitted, great kingdomes are but great theeueries; & as the wiſe Philoſopher accounted them, great monarches are but great theeues, if they rule by iniuſtice and cruell tyranny. Finally, of what worth or profit are the royalties of a kingdome, if ruling inferiours, they become ſlaues to their owne vices, and whileſt they command others, are themſelues at the command of their baſe affections and corrupt paſſions? For when this royalty and ſeruitude of vice are ioyned together, it maketh (as one compareth it) ſuch a Prince, like vnto a King taken priſoner of the Barbarians, who ſuffer him ſtill to weare his crowne, and to keepe on his royall apparell, but yet force him therein to performe all baſe offices; as to carrie water; to grind in the mill, and drudge in the skullery; in which caſe his goodly ornaments do but ſerue with more deſpite; to put him in mind of his miſery, and (as it were) the more to vpbraid and caſt

That w kingdo buſed, are cauſes of ſinnes.

Thyeſte.

lib.8.

1.Sam.8.
12.13.

1.Sam.12.

Chryſoſt.
1.Tim.
18.

caſt in his teeth the greatneſſe of his fall, and the baſeneſſe of his ſeruitude. And ſurely this ſimilitude doth moſt liuely ſet foorth the abiect condition of wicked Kings; for there is no ſeruitude ſo vile and baſe as this of ſinne, which may well diſgrace all royalty and soueraigntie, but can neuer be graced by it.

Finally, vnto this euill of ſinne, into which kingdomes through abuſe do miſlead the great potentates of the world, we may adde alſo the euill of puniſhment, which as an inſeparable companion, ſtill waiteth vpon it; for howſoeuer the Monarches of the earth hauing the law in their owne hands, are priuiledged from comming to the bar, & exempted from the iudgement ſeate of earthly men, yet can they not eſcape the iudgement ſeate of God, but of neceſſity they muſt come to their anſwere, and vndergoe deſerued puniſhment when the Lord commeth in viſitation. A notable place to this purpoſe we haue in the ſixth chapter of the booke of Wiſdome, vnto which for breuitie ſake I referre the Reader. So alſo Iob ſaith, that the Lord looſeth the collar of Kings, and leadeth Princes as a prey, and ouerthroweth the mightie; hee powreth contempt vpon Princes, and maketh the ſtrength of the mightie weake. Now the puniſhments which more eſpecially the Lord inflicteth vpon euill Princes are for the time of their raigne terrible feares, and affrighting horrors: and ſecondly he allotteth to their tyrannie but a very ſhort time, and then bringeth vpon them ſudden deſtruction. In the former reſpect tyrants and wicked Kings are moſt miſerable in the middeſt of all their royaltie and maieſtie, being continually haunted with theſe feares, as with helliſh furies, and ſo affrighted through the guilt of their owne conſciences, that they are neuer at reſt, nor haue any peace or true ioy in their hearts, in the middeſt of all their outward mirth and iollity. They feare company alike and ſolitarineſſe; that for feare of aſſault, and this for want of helpe. In the day time they ſeldome looke ſtraight forward for feare of being ſurpriſed at vnawares, but commonly they looke askew with many ſudden turnings, as though they were in a crowd of enemies, and looked who ſhould giue the firſt ſtab. Neither haue they more reſt in the night; for hearing the leſt noiſe waking, they ſuſpect a conſpiracie; and being aſleepe, they are affrighted with terrible dreames, and fearefull viſions. They are ſo much in feare of their enemies that they are neuer quiet till hauing contriued their ruine, they haue alſo brought them to deſtruction. And of their friends ſo iealous and ſuſpitious, that the leaſt occaſion turneth the confidence which they haue of their fidelity into doubting and diſtruſt, which being a little nouriſhed with ſelfe-guiltineſſe, their friendſhip is turned into enmitie, and their loue into mortall hatred. So that a tyrant is neuer in ſafety, no not when hee is compaſſed with his ſtrongeſt guard: for a king cannot there be ſafe, where nothing is in ſafety from the king; or though he ſhould be ſometime ſafe, yet can he neuer be ſecure, for it is of neceſſitie, that he whom many feare, ſhould alſo himſelfe feare many, euery one deſiring his deſtruction whom he ſeruilely feareth; and that his owne danger may bee preuented with the others ruine. And hereof it is that howſoeuer tyrants deſire rather to be feared than loued, yet they are ready againe to feare this feare, leſt what they threaten againſt others bee retorted vpon their owne heads. In regard of which terrors and continuall feares many tyrants and wicked kings could deſire to be vnburthened of their greatneſſe, that they might alſo bee deliuered from theſe dangers and expected euils; but that they hold their kingdome as a ban-dog by the eares, there being neither ſafety in keeping nor forgoing it. For howſoeuer at firſt it was in the tyrants choice whether he would lay claime vnto it or no; yet hauing taken it vpon him, he hath not the like liberty and ſafetie to deſiſt from his gouernment when he will, in regard of the many outrages which hee hath committed, and iniuries which hee hath offered, which would be puniſhed and reuenged, if he were not ſtill armed with ſoueraigne power.

Non tutus ibi rex eſt, vbi a rege nihil tutum eſt. Neceſſe eſt multos timeat quem multi timent Senec. lib.2. de ira cap.11. Metui cupiunt, metuique timent. Senec. in Agamem.73.

§. Sect.13. That God bringeth vpon euill kings haſtie deſtruction.

The ſecond vſuall puniſhment which God inflicteth vpon tyrants and euill kings, is haſty and vnexpected deſtruction; which is ſo common and ordinarie, that a man ſhall hardly find a king that reigneth long which ruleth wickedly: inſomuch that the wiſe man of Greece being demanded what he had ſeldomeſt ſeene; anſwered, a tyrant liuing to old age. The which as it is chiefly brought to paſſe through the iuſt iudgement of God, who when there is none to judge & puniſh, doth himſelfe goe the circuit, and ſit vpon the bench; ſo in reſpect of ſecond cauſes it ſtandeth with reaſon, that he for whom euery one layeth ſnares ſhould at length bee catched of ſome, though he haue eſcaped many. And well were it with tyrants if this were all their puniſhment to haue a ſhamefull death after a ſinfull life: but this is but the beginning of their miſerie; for after this firſt puniſhment of bodily deſtruction, inflicted vpon them (as it were) at the quarter ſeſſions; there is a farre greater reſerued for the time of Gods generall aſſiſes, euen the eternall death and condemnation both of their bodies and ſoules, as a juſt recompence of all their oppreſſions, iniuries, cruelties and outrages which they haue offered againſt their brethren, for whoſe good and preſeruation all their power Thales apud Plutarch. in conuiu. 152. violenta nemo imperia continuit diu, moderata durant. Senec. in Troade. 260.

of gouernment was by God committed to them.

§. Sect.14
Of the ſpirituall kingdome which euery one ſhould labour after.

And thus haue I briefly ſhewed the manifold euils which accompanie kingdomes, whether they bee well vſed or abuſed; all which may ſerue as reaſons to ſhew their worthleſneſſe, and to incite all, that if they will needs be ambicious they would aſpire to kingdomes of greater value and excellencie; namely, that ſoueraignty and regiment which is ſpirituall and heauenly. And firſt that they ſpiritually raigne whileſt they continue on earth, that ſo they may continually raigne in the kingdome of heauen. So the authour of the booke of Wiſedome exhorteth: If your delight (ſaith he) bee in thrones and ſcepters, O kings of the people, honour wiſedome, that yee may raigne for euer. Now this regiment is chiefly exerciſed in our ſelues, when as depoſing ſinne from raigning in our mortall bodies, we doe erect in vs the kingdome of Ieſus Chriſt, ſuffering him to raigne in vs by his word and holy ſpirit. And when by vertue hereof our reaſon being ſanctified and aſſiſted, doth raigne and rule ouer our corrupt affections and vnrulie paſſions, reforming ſome which may be ſeruiceable, and ſubduing, mortifying, and ſlaughtering others which are vnprofitable and vnmendable. Eſpecially when as wee crucifie our carnall concupiſcence, our greedie auarice and proud ambition, and ſet vp in our minds true contentation, which maketh vs truly kings, injoying all, and needing nothing, and neither hoping after that we haue not, nor fearing to forgoe that we haue. Which kingdome euery one may haue, and none can take away.

Wiſ.6.21.

Rex eſt qui metuit nihil. Rex eſt qui cupit nihil hoc regnũ ſibi quiſque dat. Senec. in Thyeſte.

§. Sect.15.
That we are to labour after the kingdome of heauen.

Finally, if we will needs raigne as kings, let vs not affect and ſet our hearts vpon earthly kingdomes, but rather let vs bee content here in this vale of teares to ſuffer with Ieſus Chriſt, that wee may eternally raigne with him. Let vs not aſpire vnto worldly monarchies, where the impoſſibility of obtaining may juſtly free vs from affecting and hoping; for as the world hath but one ſunne, ſo a kingdome admits but of one ſoueraigne; but let vs ſeate our affections in heauen, where we ſhall all raigne as kings, and yet one not any whit leſſen anothers dominions; but the greater the number is, the greater is the royalty and glory of all, the greater alſo is their joy and happineſſe. Finally, let vs not much affect this earthly ſoueraignty, which is accompanied with ſo many cares, troubles, labours, feares and dangers; but rather let vs ſet our hearts vpon that kingdome of peace and glory, where there is no care to diſturbe our quietneſſe, no trouble to hinder our happineſſe, no griefe to diſtaſt our joyes, no feares nor dangers to diſquiet our minds; but ſecure reſt, vnſpeakeable happineſſe, glory without meaſure, and joyes without end; which whoſoeuer ſeeke ſhall ſurely find, and hauing attained to it, ſhall neither be diſturbed in it, nor depriued of it.

2.Tim.2,12.

Apoc.22,5.

Chap. XIIII.

Of the worthleſſe vanitie of worldly riches.

§. Sect.
That worl
riches ar be contem as vaine a worldleſſe.

ANd thus haue I ſhewed the vanity of worldly honours and preferments. Let vs in the next place conſider of wordly riches; which if wee throughly examine wee ſhall finde, that howſoeuer worldlings make ſuch high account of them that they preferre them before the ſaluation of their ſoules: yet they are in truth if wee compare them with Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly ioyes, vaine, worthleſſe, and void of excellencie. For if honours which are eſteemed more excellent, are, as we haue ſhewed, vaine & of no worth; and pleaſures which are more ſweete and comfortable are (being thus compared) of no value or eſteeme, as wee ſhall ſee hereafter; then how great is the vanitie, and how ſmall the excellencie of worldly riches, which are of a more baſe and contemptible nature, being but (as it were) ſeruants vnto the other, which are onely deſired and prouided to ſerue for their vſes and imployments? Neither doth any man (vnleſſe it be ſome ſottiſh miſers, who in getting riches haue loſt their wits) eſteeme of riches for their owne ſake, but as they ſerue for their vſe, either to aduance their honour and reputation by beſtowing them bountifully, where they may haue moſt credit; or for the obtaining and enjoying of their pleaſures and delights. To which purpoſe ſerue ſtately houſes and rich furniture, pleaſant gardens, and fruitfull orchards; daintie faire, and ſoft clothing; which ends if riches aduanced not, they would like contemptible garbage reſt vntouched in the earths bowels without any to admire or ſue for them. Now if theſe ends themſelues which are their chiefe good be void of excellency and full of vanity; then how vaine and worthleſſe are theſe baſe riches, which in an abject ſubjection ſerue but (as it were) to hold the ſtirrup to mount men vp into the ſeate of honour; or for porters to open vnto them the doore of pleaſures? And this was the cauſe why the Apoſtle Paul ſo lightly valued them, that comparing them with Chriſt and his righteouſneſſe, hee eſteemed them no better than dung; which if it bee not vaine and baſe enough to ſhew their vanitie becauſe it is of ſome vſe and profit, conſider that the wiſe Salomon valueth them by that which is yet of leſſe worth, calling them nothing: Wilt thou (ſaith he) caſt thine eyes vpon that which is nothing? and leſt yet this Nothing ſhould haue ſome eſteeme, as doing no hurt, though it doe no good: the Apoſtle further telleth vs in the former place, that hee eſteemed the things of this world as loſſe, which is worſe than nothing, that he might win Chriſt, and be partaker of his righteouſneſſe.

Phil.3.8.

But let vs conſider of the worthleſſe vanity of worldly wealth in ſome particulars: and firſt, what great excellency is there in large Lordſhips, and great lands; ſeeing the whole earth is not ſo big as a peaſe, in compariſon of our heauenly Country; and yet they who hold the greateſt poſſeſſions, haue not ſo much as a little pricke or point in this ſmall Globe of the World: and therefore (as ſometime Socrates ſaid to Alcibiades) haue not ſo much when they glory moſt in it, as may haue the leaſt place, or ſmalleſt reſemblance in the greateſt Map? What worth or excellency is in them, becauſe they hold them in fee-ſimple, and haue them as perpetuities annexed to their ſucceſſours, ſeeing though they ſhould thus continue to the end of the world, it were but a moment of time in reſpect of eternity? And yet the longeſt liuer hath but a ſmall part of this moment, euen to the ſhort period of his owne life: ſo that to him notwithſtanding the glorious Titles of fee-ſimples and perpetuities, his inheritance and poſſeſſions are but momentany, and (as it were) tenements holden at will, out of which hee is ready daily to be turned at the Land-lords pleaſure. And yet theſe ſmall Lands oftentimes bring with them no ſmall incumbrance; ſeeing as an heauy load they oppreſſe mens mindes, ſo as they cannot mount vp aloft in heauenly meditations, nor haue their conuerſation in their owne Country, being clogged with this lumpe of earth: and theſe momentany poſſeſſions, are cauſes vnto many of no momentany miſchief; ſeeing they depriue them of their euerlaſting inheritance, when they ſet their hearts vpon them: eſpecially if (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) they haue vſed oppreſſion to inlarge their Lordſhips, ioyning houſe to houſe, and field to field, incloſing Commons and diſpeopling Townes, that the poore being rooted out, they may place themſelues alone in the middeſt of the earth: by which cruelty inlarging their poſſeſſions which are but momentany, they make themſelues ſubiect to an eternall woe, and moſt fearefull malediction.

Neither is there more excellency or worth in gold and ſiluer, which by the wiſe Salomon are reckoned & ranged among thoſe vanities, which bring no good to the Owners, but vexation of ſpirit; and by the Prophet directed by Gods Spirit, they are called thicke clay, which haue their value and preheminence aboue other earth, becauſe they are a little more ſhining and refined; neither haue they their worth and value from nature, but from mens opinions. For (as one noteth) thoſe things which are naturally excellent, doe ſhew their own excellency without any Mounte-banke to commend them, or to ſet them out to the ſhew, as the Sugar his ſweetneſſe, the Sun his brightneſſe, and the earth his fruitfulneſſe: but theſe wares which are of imaginary worth, need a Monitour to tell vs of their excellency, or otherwiſe wee ſhould not know, much leſſe admire them. For if we doe ſee Copper gilt, we are delighted with the beauty of the mettall, and wee call it Gold; but when thoſe which are more skilfull come and admoniſh vs that wee are deceiued, our errour and admiring wonder leaue vs both together. Moreouer, wee ſee that God in the very placing of theſe mettals, would take away from vs al opinion of their worth and excellency: for whereas the Lord hath placed his creatures according to their dignity (man only excepted, who is in the place of his Exile and Baniſhment) as the holy Angels in the higheſt Heauen, the Sun, Moone and Starres in the Firmament, the Elements as they are more pure, ſo in place one Superiour vnto another: hee hath ſeated theſe ſo much admired mettals, in the intrals of the moſt groſſe element, as though hee would haue vs ſo far from ſetting them vpon our heads, or our hearts vpon them, that hee would haue vs with contempt to tread them vnder our feet. Which alſo ſeemeth to haue beene practiſed by the Primitiue Church, who deliuered not the price of their poſſeſſions into the Apoſtles hands, but caſt them at their feet, to ſhew how meanly they accounted of them. And as hee hath placed them in this inferiour place, as fit to be contemned, ſo alſo in the hidden cauernes of the earth, farre remote from humane ſight, out of which they are not gotten without infinite toile and labour; that he might hereby withdraw our greedy eye from looking after them, and our couetous hearts from deſiring them; or at leaſt though wee ſhould couet them, yet we might be diſcouraged with this intolerable paines in the purſuite of theſe worthleſſe vanitie. Beſides he hath not there ſeated them in their beauty and perfection, fined and purified, but in their Oare, vnſightly and baſe to look vpon, as hauing in it much more droſſe than pure mettal; frō which it is not purged and refined without endleſſe moyle, and labour of the workmen: who beſides all their paines haue their health thereby ſo impaired, and their faces blemiſhed with ſwartneſſe and dead palenes, that they ſeeme to haue taken vpon them the deformities of the mettall, and to haue beene content to make themſelues vgly, that it may receiue beauty and brightneſſe. Notwithſtanding all which vaine man doting vpon Chryſoſt. in 1.Tim.6. Hom.17.

Senec. Epiſt.94

Hieronym. ad Demetriadem.

this worthleſſe pelfe, is not diſcouraged with all theſe labours, but is content to ſpend his life and ſtrength in ſearching and ſeeking, digging and mining, purging and refining of this earthy droſſe, not caring to loſe himſelfe that he may find it. And that which is worſt of all, when by the worke of his own hands hee hath brought it to its full beauty and perfection, he doth not only make it his chiefe ornament, who is much more comely and gracefull in himſelfe, placing it aboue his head, which God had ſeated vnder his feet, but alſo erecteth it as his idoll in his heart, & (as it were) falleth downe before it to adore and worſhip it, whileſt hee loueth, truſteth and hopeth in it more than in God himſelfe, wherby it commeth to paſſe that their ſoules are more deformed who poſſeſſe it, than their bodies who in the Mines digged for it; and more indangered to death eternall, than they to any temporary perils: for howſoeuer their Gold it ſelfe ſhall be vnto them but a momentany good, yet the ruſt thereof ſhall continue to the day of Iudgement, to be a witnes againſt them for their confuſion and condemnation, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. Seeing therefore theſe baſe minerals are in themſelues ſo contemptible, and bring vnto vs ſo little profit, and oftentimes no little hurt: we may well admire, and euen be aſtoniſhed at the cauſe, why men ſhould ſo dote vpon them, louing them ſo dearely, and the joyes of Heauen ſo ſlightly, and taking ſo great care and paines for them, whereas they take little or none for the ſauing of their owne ſoules. So as it may ſeeme that there is in them a kind of witchcraft which thus ſeduceth and abuſeth their admirers, ſeeing there is no reaſon to be giuen, either in nature or religion, why men ſhould contemne thoſe eternall treaſures and heauenly excellencies, and purſue with a beſotted and madding affection, this earthly traſh and baſe vanities. Let vs therefore learne wiſely to ſtop our eares againſt theſe Charmes; and howſoeuer wee are not vtterly and abſolutely to reject Gold and Siluer, as being the creatures of God: which (as hath beene ſhewed) may ſerue for good vſe; yet let vs take heed that we doe not ſet our hearts vpon them, but contemne and deſpiſe them, when they come in compariſon with Gods ſpirituall graces, or our heauenly patrimony. And making account of money, as Trauellers of their prouiſion for their journey, which being moderate ſerueth for their vſe, and to helpe them forward, but being exceſſiue and ſuperfluous, toileth them as an heauy burthen, and hindereth them in their way; let vs content our ſelues with a competencie and ſufficiencie; or being not able to attaine vnto it, let vs ſupply that with our minds, which is wanting vnto our outward eſtate, laying vp our chiefe treaſures in Heauen, where (as our Sauiour ſaith) the ruſt cannot corrupt them, nor Theeues ſpoile vs of them.

James 5.3.

Faſcinatio quædam eſt huiuſmodi res, quòd aurum & argentum à nobis tanti pendatur, & animarum noſtrarum nulla cura, Chryſoſt. in. 1. Theſſ. 5.

Quid homini pecunia ſua niſi quoddam viaticum eſt? multa oneri, moderata vſui, Ambroſ. lib. 7. Epiſt. 44.

§. Sect Of the of rich and co niture.

Neither is there leſſe vanity, or more worth in other kinds of riches: for what true excellency is in rich jewels and precious ſtones, which are by the Creatour contemptibly caſt vpon the earth and ſands with worthles regard; but being ſought and found by men, are ſold at ſuch high rates, as not their owne worth, but the buyers phantaſie ſets vpon them. In regard whereof the ſame jewell or ſtone altereth the price according to the worth of the Owner, and that which is eſteemed in the hand of a poore man at a ſmall value, becommeth precious and of great worth when a richer and more noble Maſter is Owner of it. So that theſe are commended by their rarity more than by their excellency; by opinion rather than ſound reaſon; by the wealth of their Owners, rather than by their own worth, & are in truth meer trifles for wantons to play with, rather than any ſolid or ſubſtantiall good, which brings true profit to thoſe who are poſſeſſed of them. The like alſo may be ſaid of rich furniture, and ſumptuous houſhold ſtuffe, which in compariſon of thoſe more excellent things, are meere vanities and worthleſſe trifles. Neither is there any cauſe why any man ſhould much deſire theſe things if hee want them, or glory in them if hee haue them; for the chiefe ornaments of a houſe are not gorgeous Hangings, rich Beds and ſuch like furniture; but the vertues and graces of the Inhabitants, the wiſedome and diſcreet gouernment of Superiours, the duty and obedience of inferiours, with piety, honeſty, and good order obſerued of all. Euen as contrariwiſe the chief diſgraces and deformities thereof, are not walls couered or coloured with nothing but ſmoke; empty roomes, or poore furniture: but when (as our Sauiour ſpeaketh) it is cleane ſwept of all vertue and goodneſſe, and blemiſhed and diſhoneſted with diſorder, vice and wickedneſſe. Again, the great labour which * theſe things of ſmall worth require, may ſerue to wean the hearts of any from them who are not too full of pride and vaine glory: for as at firſt they are not eaſily gotten; ſo they are kept with no leſſe difficultie, there neuer wanting occaſion of looking to them, folding, vnfolding, bruſhing, cleanſing, altering, remouing; to ſay nothing of the manifold diſcontents and occaſions of anger which they bring to the Owners, if any of them chance to miſcarry, or to be miſuſed. In all which the trouble and griefe oftentimes exceed the comfort and contentment which they bring vnto them. Or if there be ſuch care, prouidence & pains vſed, that none of theſe things happen, but all is preſerued in its full beauty and good order; then it is a manifeſt ſigne that moſt of their time is ſpent about theſe vanities, and the

Vilia & fornica diculip lectulo mora f coloratis improba bitanti ntur, C ſoſt in M Homil.

the whole mind ſo wholly poſſeſſed & taken vp with them, that the ſoule is neglected, and little or no paines taken to decke it with the rich ornaments of Gods ſpirituall and ſanctifying graces. So that when one commeth into a rich mans houſe where there is ſuch coſtly furniture, ſo curiouſly and carefully diſpoſed and ordered, he may probably ſuſpect that he ſeeth all the goodneſſe of that houſe at the firſt view; and that there is nothing better than that which preſenteth it ſelfe in the outward ſhew. Furthermore we are to know that theſe glorious things bring to the Owners no laſting delight, or durable contentment: for howſoeuer whileſt they haue them but in their deſires, or are newly poſſeſſed of them, they take great pleaſure to thinke vpon and behold them; yet when as they haue them continually in their eye, and that they are become common & ordinary, their delight preſently ceaſeth; eſpecially if they chance to ſee more rich and coſtly things of the ſame kind in the poſſeſſion of other men. And no maruell, for if the Sunne it ſelfe becauſe we ſee it daily worketh no extraordinary delight, although the darke night comming betweene his ſetting and riſing, ſetteth ſome edge on our tired affections; how much leſſe are wee to expect that wee can find it in theſe earthly trifles, whoſe chiefe glory being compared to the Sunnes brightneſſe, is but obſcurity and groſſe darkneſſe? Finally, the more wee abound with theſe rich furnitures, the more are wee expoſed to the feare and danger of fire, thieues, yea, ſilly moaths, which howſoeuer they be baſe and contemptible, yet haue they power enough to pull downe this pride, and to conſume the matter and occaſion of this vaineglory. Or if all theſe with prouidence be preuented, yet theſe glorious ſhewes doe ſeldome faile to expoſe vs to enuy, which vſually feedeth vpon theſe outward appearances of worldly happineſſe, and feeding pineth thoſe whom it poſſeſſeth, becauſe they want the meanes to make oſtentation of ſuch pompe and glory. Seeing therefore theſe things are not onely full of vanitie, but alſo of many euils and inconueniences, how much better were this coſt beſtowed vpon the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt than vpon theſe needles ſuperfluities, many whereof are ſo fine and coſtly, that the Owners can neuer almoſt find in their hearts to vſe them, but keepe them locked vp in their cheſts not ſuffering them to ſee the Sunne, vnleſſe ſome ſpeciall occaſion, which happeneth once in a yeere, when as pride meaneth to triumph in all its brauery, cauſeth them to make oſtentation of all their glory? How much more were it for their credit to be with their wealth beneficiall to many than to dwell in an houſe thus pompouſly furniſhed? How much more wiſely ſhould they imploy their wealth for the good of men, than vpon Carpets and hangings? vpon liuing and reaſonable creatures, than vpon dead and ſenſeleſſe wals? How much more profitable were it to haue clothed friends, than adorned Lodgings, the one ſeruing for defence, the other expoſing them to the prey? Laſtly, it may well weane our hearts from being in loue with this riotous exceſſe, if we conſider that it will make our account more hard and difficult at the day of iudgement. For how doe we thinke will this reckoning be accepted of our Lord and Iudge, when as we haue ſpent his Talents vpon needleſſe ſuperfluities, and ſuffered the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt, for whoſe vſe alſo we receiued them, to want neceſſaries? when as wee haue adorned our wals with Arras and Tapeſtry, and ſuffered men created after Gods Image, yea, our Brethren and fellow members of the ſame body, to ſtarue for want of freeſe to couer their nakedneſſe? when our Horſes are decked with Gold, Silke and Veluet, and poore Chriſtians neglected, not affording them rags to couer them, and bread to feed them? How will this goe for currant at this great Audit, that we haue ſuffered in the time of dearth a great many to ſtarue for want of reliefe, whereas wee might haue redeemed their liues from death, by parting with an vnprofitable jewell, or ſome needleſſe furniture which is ſcarce euer vſed? or how can wee then hope to finde mercy with God, when as we haue ſhewed ſo little compaſſion to one another?

Auro parietes, auro laquearia, auro fulgent capita columnarum, & nudus atque eſuriens ante fores noſtras Chriſtus in paupere moritur; Hieron. ad Gaudent.

§. Sect. 5. Of the vanitie of ſumptuous buildings.

And thus it appeareth how vaine and worthleſſe theſe rich jewels, and coſtly furniture are juſtly to bee valued and eſteemed. Let vs in the next place conſider of ſtately houſes and ſumptuous buildings, wherein worldly men ſo much glory and delight; in which after due examination wee ſhall find no more excellency, or leſſe vanity. And firſt, if we will credit the wiſe Salomon (who hauing for a time his affection greatly ſet vpon them, wanted neither wit curiouſly to contriue his ſtately Buildings for moſt conuenient vſe, and greateſt ſtate and glory, nor yet wealth to ſecond his inuentions) he will tell vs on his owne experience, that when in this kind we haue done all wee can, yea, all we will, and in our hearts deſire, wee ſhall, in the end, of all coſt and labour, find nothing but vanitie and vexation of ſpirit. Againe, if there were any excellencie in theſe ſumptuous buildings, it is chiefly the glory and prayſe of the builders and workmen, whoſe art and ſkill is hereby commended, and not of the workmaſter and owner, who had no other part to act in theſe workes, but to diſburſe the money and beare the charge. The houſe therefore doth not grace the inhabitant, but he his habitation, when as he maketh it an holy Temple for religious duties, a manſion for vertue and good order, the Eccleſ. 2.4, 11.

ſeat of good hoſpitality, and a place of refuge and reliefe for the needy and afflicted. Neither will theſe ſtately buildings greatly profit vs, for they doe not bring to the Owners any ſound joy, quiet and contentation, which dwell more often in poore Cottages than in ſtately palaces. They doe not free vs from care and griefe, wherewith ſtately buildings are often peſtred, when as thatched houſes are priuiledged and exempted. They doe not preſerue their Lords from the encounters of ſickneſſes and diſeaſes; yea, rather there lieth an open paſſage to let in Gouts, Palſies, Collickes, Conſumptions, when as they are kept out from entring ſuch ſlender buildings, as will ſcarce beare off a ſtorme, or hold out raine. The thickneſſe of their ſtone or well timbred walles, nor the ſtrength of their nailed gates will ſerue to keepe out death; neither will the height of their buildings make him need a ſkaling ladder, when he commeth to aſſault their liues; for when hee knocketh the doores flie open, and he findeth an eaſie paſſage into their ſecret Chambers. Furthermore, let vs conſider that the moſt ſumptuous buildings haue within a while a time of ruine; and though they are aſſaulted with no outward violence, yet they haue their periods, when as they will fall with their owne waight. Beſides, oftentimes they come through fire, forren forces, and ſuch like caſualties to vntimely ruine; for not only in the ages of men, but alſo in buildings, immature death, and vnexpected deſtruction, rageth with fury vnreſiſtable; which if we know not by our owne reaſon, let at leaſt the example of others teach vs. For behold the ſtately buildings which haue beene of old, what are they now but ruines? And where are their Builders, which in all this coſt affected a name, but rotten and conſumed in the graue, without name or memory? Laſtly, let vs remember that theſe ſtately houſes are ſeldome erected without oppreſſion; for either Naboths Vineyard lieth neere vnto them, which if he loue his life hee muſt ſell them, becauſe it is conuenient to make them a Garden; or the poores houſes ſtand on the beſt ſeat and muſt giue place, or hinder their proſpect, and muſt be pulled downe; or elſe they muſt gratifie them (though for feare more than loue) with their labour, Carts and carriages without wages or reward. By which courſes, when theſe ſumptuous and beautifull Buildings are erected, a grieuous wo and heauy curſe lieth vpon the Owners: Woe vnto him (ſaith the Prophet) that buildeth his houſe by vnrighteouſneſſe, and his chambers without equitie: he vſeth his Neighbour without wages, and giueth him not for his worke, &c. Shalt thou raigne becauſe thou cloſeſt thy ſelfe in Cedar, did not thy father (though hee dwelt in more homely buildings) eat and drinke and proſper, when hee executed judgement and juſtice? when he judged the cauſe of the afflicted and poore, he proſpered, &c. The like woe the Prophet Eſay thundreth out againſt thoſe, who ioyne houſe to houſe laying on them this curſe from God, that their houſes ſhould bee deſolate, and though they were great and fair, yet they ſhould be without any inhabitant; according to that malediction denounced in the Law, thou ſhalt build an houſe and not dwell therein. Which curſe lieth heauy vpon many Builders in theſe dayes, though they neuer thinke vpon their burthen, who make ſtately Houſes and neuer inhabit them, and ſpend all in building, but nothing in hoſpitality; as though the vſe of building were only, like the Pyramides of Egypt, to make a glorious ſhew; and as though they had no other inducement to be at all this charge and labour, than thoſe had that built the Tower of Babel, that is, to threaten Heauen with their Houſes height, and get a name vnto themſelues vpon the earth. Seeing therefore theſe ſumptuous buildings are alwayes vaine and worthleſſe, and often accompanied with ſinne and wickedneſſe; let vs learne (though the World and worldlings ſo highly value them) to contemne and think baſely of them, labouring to be inhabitants of that Diuine and Angelical habitation, which is not made with hands, but eternall in the Heauens. And when beholding theſe ſtately Houſes on earth, wee begin to be beſotted with their momentany beauty and falſe glory; let vs preſently caſt vp our eyes towards Heauen; and if hauing ſeated our minds and meditations vpon that heauenly and diuine beauty, we doe from thence reflect our eyes vpon the chiefe glory of earthly Buildings, they will ſeeme but as childrens houſes, which in play they build vpon the ſands, which euery blaſt of winde defaceth, and euery waue of water waſheth away; and as the houſes of Spiders, which being made with great labour, are with themſelues eaſily bruſhed away with a Wing or Broome. For then wee will eaſily conclude, that if there be ſuch goodly habitations in our pilgrimage and place of puniſhment, then much more glorious Manſions are prepared for vs in our owne Countrey, where the Lord is purpoſed to glorifie and reward vs: if Gods enemies haue ſuch ſtately Palaces on earth, then how much more excellent hath the Lord prouided for his children in Heauen? If the great Monarches of the World haue Manſion Houſes befitting their might and majeſty; then how glorious is the Court of Heauen, and chiefe Manſion Houſe of the King of Kings, which he hath purpoſely fitted and prepared, as is moſt beſeeming his glory and greatneſſe? Surely being ſutable and agreeable vnto his Majeſty, which is infinite, it muſt needs alſo be of vnſpeakable and incomprehenſible excel-

Non ſolum in ætatibus hominum, verum & in ſtructuris ædificiorum immatura mors furit, Chryſoſt. in 1. Tim. 6. Homil. 16.

Inſpice ædificia ſumptuoſaque olim extruxerunt: quid nunc ſunt? ruinæ: vbi ædificatores? in orco, Baſil. Orat. 15. de auaritia.

Ier. 22. 13, 15, 16.

Eſa. 5. 8, 9.

2. Cor. 5. 1.

cellencie. If the World haue ſuch a goodly vaulted roofe, beautified with ſuch glorious Lights, and imbelliſhed with ſuch ſhining Stars; then what ſhall we thinke of our heauenly habitation, whoſe floore is much more glorious than this ſtately roofe? Finally, if the Kings of the earth haue their Marble, Iuory and Ieat, to adorne their Buildings, then may wee well conceiue that which the Apoſtle ſaw, namely, that our heauenly Citie is of much more precious ſtuffe, the wals of Iaſper, garniſhed with all manner of precious ſtones, the gates of Pearle, and the ſtreets of Gold. And therefore if wee affect ſtately Buildings, let vs contemne theſe baſe Cottages on earth, and labour to be Owners of thoſe glorious and heauenly Habitations; which as they are by infinite degrees more goodly, and excellent, ſo are they alſo euerlaſting habitations, which neuer need repaire, nor any whit abate of their firſt glory.

And thus haue I ſhewed the vanitie of ſumptuous buildings. Let vs in the next place conſider if there be any more worth and excellency in many Seruants, & a great retinue; where alſo we ſhall find, that howſoeuer it is accounted a glorious thing in the world, to haue a multitude of attendants, and a great traine attending at their Maſters heeles, yet it is but a meere vanitie, yea, if it be poſſible, more vaine than any of the former. And this alſo appeareth by the teſtimony of the wiſe Salomon, ſpeaking vpon his own experience, who ſeeking herein for ſome worldly happineſſe, miſſed of it; and hauing retained ſuch a multitude of ſeruants, as ſerued not only for his neceſſary vſe, but alſo for pompe and ſtate, for pleaſure and delight; concludeth of this as of the reſt, that he found nothing in it, but meere vanity and vexation of ſpirit. Vnto which teſtimonie we may adde diuers reaſons, which ſhew the worthleſnes of this great attendance: for howſoeuer a man hath hereby from the mouthes of many, the goodly Titles of Lord and Maſter, & the outward reuerence of Cap and Knee; yet what is hee in truth, but a common ſeruant vnto them all, and euen (as it were) the Steward of the Family, who taketh the care and paines to prouide them of all neceſſaries? yea, which is worſe, hereby hee becommeth a ſeruant to his owne auarice and concupiſcence, it being a chiefe cauſe and motiue which induceth him to toile and labour, ſcrape and rake together, to oppreſſe and incroach vpon other mens rights, that he may haue wherewith to maintaine this numerous multitude to attend vpon him. The which errour were ſo much the leſſe, if all theſe men thus entertained, were faithfull wel-willers, and (as one calleth them) humble friends, ready at all aſſayes to ſeeke his good, and to ſtand in his defence with their owne hazard: but contrariwiſe experience teacheth, that among many ſeruants are many enemies, who becauſe they are reſtrained of their wils, or puniſhed for their faults, or not rewarded according to their expectation, though it may be aboue their deſerts, maligne their maſter, and wait for occaſion to ſhew their hatred. Now theſe domeſticall foes are of all others moſt dangerous, becauſe they are no leſſe priuy to all their Maſters infirmities, than ready to diuulge them vnder-hand, where they may moſt diſgrace him; neither can any thing he doth in the Family be hid from thoſe who wiſh him worſt, becauſe as hee hath many eyes to obſerue his hidden counſels and greateſt ſecrets, ſo hath he alſo many tongues to reueale and vtter them. Yea, and that which for feare they but ſecretly whiſpered whileſt they remayned in the Family vnder the gouernment of their Maſter, they are ready with profeſſed malice to proclaime publikely when they haue left his ſeruice, and be vnder the rule of another, vnleſſe they be reſtrained more with feare of their new Maſter, than with loue of the old, leſt he might juſtly ſuſpect that hee alſo ſhall receiue at their hands the like meaſure, when they leaue his ſeruice. Now this miſery is ſo much the more miſerable, not only becauſe it is impoſſible to preuent theſe dangers, which come by theſe ſecret Traytors, who are hidden and vnknowne, but alſo becauſe they are faine vnwittingly to nouriſh theſe Vipers in their boſome, feeding, clothing and rewarding them, when as they do them moſt hurt, and are ready vpon all occaſions to plot againſt them any miſchiefe. Vnto this wee may adde, that where there is a multitude of ſeruants, there are alſo many contentions and domeſticall quarrels, much brawling and wrangling, clamour, and noiſe; which muſt needs be exceeding troubleſome to the Gouernour, when as he muſt be faine to be a ſtickler in theſe frayes, and euery handwhile be diſquieted himſelfe that he may ſet them at quiet, and accord their differences and contentions. Yea, but at leaſt where there are many hands there is an eaſie and quicke diſpatch of houſhold buſineſſe, and all things are done ſeaſonably and in good order, to the contentment of the Maſter; ſurely nothing leſſe. Yea, contrariwiſe, vnleſſe there be an exceeding wiſe and ſtrict gouernment, there as are moſt Seruitours, there is worſt ſeruice, diſorder, negligence and confuſion: either becauſe the ſlothfull are incouraged to continue in their idleneſſe, ſeeing they may eaſily hide it in a crowde, and faſten their negligences and defaults vpon ſome of their fellowes; or becauſe the diligent are diſcouraged in their painfull labours, ſeeing others marre that which they make; and alſo for that particular notice cannot well be taken of their Gouernours, by reaſon of the multitude of their wel-deſeruing, that ſo they may receiue due prayſe and reward. Or finally, becauſe they ſtraine courteſie, and put off the buſineſſe to one another, thinking his fellow may doe it as well as he; whereof it commeth to paſſe, that that is neglected of all, which might be done of many. Moreouer, he who entertaineth a multitude of ſeruants, doth hereby waſte and conſume his eſtate, which might be much better ſpent, not only by continuall feeding ſo many idle bellies, and clothing ſo many backes; but alſo becauſe where multitudes are, there is much lauiſhing, ſpending and rioting, none taking care to ſpare or ſaue any thing, becauſe his faithfulneſſe and frugality would not be obſerued among ſo many; and therefore ſeeing all will be ſpent, he thinketh beſt to doe like his fellowes, and to take his ſhare before all be gone. To ſay nothing of their pilfering and purloyning for their owne vſe; and their waſtfull prodigalitie in beſtowing vpon others their Maſters goods; if at leaſt they can haue them as their inſtruments and Deputies to doe their buſineſſe, whileſt they ſpend their time in pleaſures or idleneſſe. Finally, it is a thing of great difficultie to gouerne well ſuch a multitude in the Family, to keep them in good order, and to make them diligently to performe their duties to God, their Maſter, and to one another: for if euery one findeth it a hard matter to rule a few in ſuch ſort as God requireth; then ſurely it muſt needs bee almoſt impoſſible to rule ſo many. And this commeth to paſſe, partly becauſe the Maſter among ſuch a multitude cannot haue his eye at all times vpon all, to obſerue their diſpoſition, cariage and behauiour; and partly becauſe there is almoſt alwayes amongſt a great number ſome corrupt and vicious, who, like ſcabbed ſheepe in a flock, infect and taint their fellowes with their wicked behauiour and conuerſation. Laſtly, what doe they elſe who entertaine a great multitude, but take vpon them a great charge, of which they muſt giue an account how they haue diſcharged it at the day of judgement? For it is not ſufficient for ſuch to haue liued like good men, if they haue not alſo carried themſelues as good Maſters; nor enough that they haue themſelues ſerued God, vnleſſe alſo they haue beene carefull to make thoſe vnder their gouernment to joyne with them in the like ſeruice. And if ſo bee through their default, either becauſe they haue not encouraged them in good, or diſcouraged and reſtrained them from euil, they haue neglected their duty and liued wickedly; they ſhall be found acceſſary vnto, and guiltie of their ſinnes before God. Which if Maſters would but ſeriouſly thinke vpon, they would not be ſo much exalted and delighted to ſee the gloriouſneſſe of their numerous traine, as amazed and affrighted to conſider of the greatneſſe and difficultie of their reckoning and account.

CHAP. XV.

Of the vanitie of coſtly and braue Apparell.

§.Sect.
That riche coſtly app is lawfull thoſe wh of high pl and calli

THe laſt thing wherein we will conſider the vanitie of riches, is coſtly and braue apparell; which is a thing ſo much eſteemed among Worldlings, that they place in it no ſmall part of their happineſſe, thinking themſelues beſt when they are braueſt, and moſt eſteemed when they haue got on the richeſt ſuite. And this maketh them to ſet their hearts ſo vpon it, that they thinke no time too much, no coſt too great, which is ſpent in adorning of themſelues; yea, they are readie to ſell Religion, Conſcience, and Credit, to purchaſe this exceſſiue brauery; and to commit all manner of wrongs and injuries, oppreſſion, and violence, to maintaine their gay and gorgeous apparell. Which folly, that we alſo may not fall into, let vs learne baſely to eſteeme this, which the World ſo much admireth, and to contemne it as a trifling vanitie; which is not onely void of all worth and excellencie, but alſo through common abuſe, ſubject to much corruption and ſinne. And yet leſt for the abuſe wee ſhould reject the lawfull vſe, and Cynically refuſe that Chriſtian libertie, which God herein hath liberally allowed vnto vs; let vs in the firſt place conſider, that there is a good and lawfull vſe of theſe rich Attires, and coſtly Apparell; namely, when as they are well fitted & ſorted vnto the calling of thoſe that weare them. For as the Lord hath made diuers eſtates and degrees of men; ſo would he haue euery one to Apparell themſelues according to their degree and calling, that ſo theſe diuers orders and conditions of men may the better be diſtinguiſhed the one from the other: Kings with Royall Apparell, Nobles according to their Nobilitie, with that which is rich and coſtly; Gentlemen, as beſitteth their Gentry; and the meaner ſort according to their qualitie and condition. The which difference may lawfully appeare both in the matter, and alſo the forme of their garments. For in the former reſpect, it is lawfull for thoſe who are in high eſtate, to weare Silkes and Veluets, Gold and Siluer, Iewels and precious ſtones; neither were theſe creatures cauſeleſly created, but for the vſe of men; and that not only Heathens, Worldlings and Infidels, but chiefly and principally for Gods owne children and ſeruants, who onely haue juſt title and intereſt vnto them. The like difference there may alſo be in the forme or faſhion of Apparell; for the King and the meane Subject, the Courtier and the Countriman, the Gentleman & Yeoman, the old and the younger ſort, as they are not to haue the ſame matter of their apapparell; but one more coſtly, another more meane and cheape according to their qualitie; ſo is it fit that they ſhould alſo differ & bee diſtinguiſhed in their ſeuerall faſhions, as beſt beſeemeth euery ones degree and calling. And thus in the time of the Law the prieſts had a peculiar kind of apparell allotted vnto them. The Prophets had their rough garments, whereby they were knowne: kings and queenes had their royal ornaments; the man one kind of apparell, and the woman another, which was vnlawfull for them to interchange. Thus Rebeccah had her golden abilements and bracelets; and the Iſraelites their earings and other iewels, & that by the appointment of God himſelfe. And our Sauiour Chriſt the wiſedome of his father, ſeemeth to allow vnto courts and kings houſes, ſoft raiment and gorgeous apparell, as beſeeming thoſe who in the world are aduanced to theſe high places. Yea but the Apoſtles Paul and Peter doe forbid this brauerie and gorgeous garments as vnbeſeeming Chriſtians. I anſwere, that their ſayings are not to bee vnderſtood as generall and abſolute prohibitions; but onely as admonitions, whereby they withdrew them from ſetting their hearts vpon pride, vanity and brauery, as though they were things greatly to bee eſteemed and deſired, to the end they might fix them vpon the ſpirituall ornaments of the ſoule, Gods ſanctifying and ſauing graces, as being much more excellent; which alſo appeareth by the antitheſis there vſed. Againe, this gorgeous apparell might bee interdicted thoſe Chriſtians vnto whom the Apoſtle wrote, as being in thoſe dayes for the moſt part of meane quality and condition, as the Apoſtle elſewere affirmeth; and therefore howſoeuer it were lawfull in it ſelfe, yet it was altogether vnbeſeeming their eſtate. Beſides that, the Church was then vnder grieuous perſecutions, in which reſpect theſe coſtly ornaments were vnfit, as being a time of humiliation; and alſo becauſe of the great wants of the many poore members of Chriſt, which the richer ſort were to relieue, not only out of their ſuperfluities, but euen out of ſuch neceſſaries, as might otherwiſe haue well beſeemed their place and calling.

So that notwithſtanding this objection, it is lawfull to weare rich & coſtly apparell, if it bee fitted to the ſtate and condition of thoſe that weare it. Yea men may offend in the contrarie extreame, when as they vſe ſuch baſe and beggerly attire, and in ſuch a ſordidous and ſlouenly faſhion, as is altogether vnbeſeeming men of their quality, vnleſſe it bee in ſome particular caſes, as in the time of faſting and humiliation, or when the Church is in extremitie and want, and muſt of neceſſity be relieued &c. When notwithſtanding decency and comlineſſe may bee obſerued, though it bee but in a poore habit and meane attire: and therefore the practice not onely of ſordidous miſers is to bee auoided who will not be at the coſt to maintaine themſelues in ſuch apparell, as their place and calling requireth, but alſo of thoſe, who out of their religion, or rather ſuperſtition, goe in beggerly and poore clothing, to make oſtentation of their humility, and contempt of the world. All which looke the ſame way, though vnder another vizard, with thoſe proud cynicall Phyloſophers, who affected the glory of the world by their contempt of brauery, euen as ſome of themſelues who were infected with the ſame diſeaſe judged of others, whom they ſaw tainted with it. So Socrates telleth Antiſthenes that he could ſpie his pride through the holes of his cloake: and another hauing cenſured the Rhodians for their pride in apparell, and afterwards ſeeing the Lacedemonians in baſe and ſordidous clothes, ſaid, behold another kind of pride. So one of the ancients ſaith, that there may be glorying, as well in baſe, as in gorgeous apparell, which is ſo much the more dangerous, becauſe it deceiueth vnder the colour of Gods ſeruice: and therefore another exhorteth vs to auoid the one extreame, as well as the other; becauſe the one ſauoureth of wanton delicacie, the other of vaine glory.

Diogenes apud Ælianum. lib. 9. de varia hiſtor.

Auguſt. de ſer. Domini.

Ornatus & ſordes pari modo fugiendi ſunt, quia alterum delicias, alterum gloriam redolet. Hieron. ad Nepolian.

§. Sect. 3.

Of the great abuſe of apparell, through exceſſiue brauerie.

But I ſhall not neede to ſay much of this argument in theſe dayes, wherein men and women generally are fallen into the contrarie abuſe of exceſſe, forgetting all reſpect of order or degree. For whereas our Sauiour reſtrained gorgeous apparell to Kings courts, now it is growne common in euery houſe, without any reſpect of ſtate and calling: gentlemen going in their attire and habit like nobles, the yeomanry like the gentrie, cottagers like yeomen, citizens like courtiers, ſubjects like Princes, and ſeruants like maſter and miſtreſſe; as though their eyes were ſo dazled with pride, that they miſtooke anothers apparell for their owne. The which abuſe as it hath tainted all, ſo eſpecially the women kind, who decke themſelues with ſo many vaine toies, & load their bodies with ſuch gorgeous attire, as that we may truly ſay with the Heathen man, that they are the leſt part of themſelues. Neither are worldlings alone infected with this contagious plague of brauerie and exceſſe, but the profeſſour of religion and the prophane perſon, the harlot and the honeſt woman, are ſo like one another in their habits and attire, that a man ſeeing them both, can put no difference betweene them, as one of the ancients in his time complained. And therefore ſeeing this running canker hath infected and corrupted the whole bodie of our ſtate, it were to be wiſhed that our ancient Lawes againſt this exceſſe were put in execution. Or becauſe our ſores are growne ſo deſperate, that they cannot be cured wth ordinarie and eaſie medicines; that there were prouided for them ſome ſharpe corraſiue, like the Lacedemonian Law, which ordered vnder a great penaltie, that none but harlots might vſe glorious and rich apparell; that ſo honeſt women might bee brought out of loue with this pride and brauerie.

Auferimur cultu, gemmis auroq; teguntur omnia, pars minima eſt ipſa puella ſui. Ouid. lib. 2. de remed.

Tertul. de cultu fœmin, lib.

Clemens Alexandr. Pædagog. lib. 2. cap. 10.

§. Sect. 4. Of the abuſe of apparell, in in reſpect of coſtlineſſe.

Now theſe abuſes of apparell are either in reſpect of the cauſes, or the vſe thereof. The cauſes are the matter, forme, or end. In regard of the matter men ſhew their vanitie and ſinne, firſt, when in the coſt beſtowed on the ſtuffe, they exceed their calling or abilitie, wearing ſuch things as are aboue their eſtate, or more than their rents, reuenues, or other meanes may well maintaine. In which kind there was neuer greater exceſſe ſince the beginning of the world, than in our times, euery one herein exceeding their ſtate and condition; the tenant will haue as coſtly ſtuffe as his land-lord, the farmer as the gentleman, and ordinary gentleman as great nobles. In ſo much as the abler ſort ſticke not to hang the price of a good farme at their wiues eare, and a great lordſhip about their neckes; and the poorer ſort neglect all good duties, yea pinch their owne bellies, that they may weare the moſt coſtly ſtuffes, and adorne their backes with ſilkes and veluets. So that wee may juſtly take vp that complaint vſed by an ancient of his times, namely, that whereas the thing couered, ſhould much exceed in value the couer or caſe in which it is contained; as the iewell the cabinet, the ſoule the body, the body the garment: now contrariwiſe, when as the body it ſelfe being ſet to ſale, would not yeeld many groats, one ſuite of apparell wherewith it is adorned, is not bought for many pounds. Of which exceſſe of coſt in maintaining pride, wee might well bee aſhamed, if we conſidered that our firſt parents had no better cloathes of their owne making, than ſuch as were made of fig-leaues; and when God prouided for them, their apparell was of no richer ſtuffe, than beaſts skins, which were only fit to couer their nakednes, and to keepe them from the iniuries of the weather. Secondly, in reſpect of the matter, they offend who make choice of ſuch ſtuffes as are ſo ſlight, as will ſerue to no vſe, but to couer their nakedneſſe (for which alſo ſometimes they are vnprofitable) and are almoſt no ſooner made, than worne out, which they purpoſely affect that they may ſhew variety of brauery, and often change into new faſhions. Wherein as they doe much exceed their anceſtors in coſtlines, who clothed themſelues with the deareſt, but yet moſt laſting ſtuffes; ſo doe they take away one chiefe end of ſuperfluous apparel, which was, when themſelues had laid it aſide, to clothe thē with the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt.

Breuiſſimis loculis patrimonium grande profertur, vno lino decies ſeſtertium inſeritur, &c. Tertul. de habit. mulier. lib:

Clemens Alexandr Pædagog li. 2. ca. 10.

Quid de habitu dicam? in quo iam non calor ſed color requiritur magiſq; cultui veſtium quàm virtutum inſiſtitur, &c. Bernard. Ser. ſuper paſſus eſt, &c.

§. Sect. Of the a of apparell reſpect of faſhions.

And as men ſinne in reſpect of the matter of their apparell, againſt their particular callings, by exceeding their ſtate and meanes: ſo alſo they offend againſt their generall calling of Chriſtianitie in reſpect of the forme and faſhion, and that both in the exceſſe and defect. For as Chriſtians ought to looke that the matter of their apparell be not ouer coſtly; ſo alſo they ſhould take ſpeciall care that the faſhion be graue, ſober and modeſt. For ſo the Apoſtle requireth, that women ſhould array themſelues in comly apparell with ſhamefaſtneſſe and modeſtie, not with broydred haire, or gold, or pearles, or coſtly apparell. And the Apoſtle Peter likewiſe chargeth them that their apparell ſhall not be outward, as with broydred haire, and gold put about, &c. Now in this reſpect people offend two wayes: firſt, when as they affect faſhions, which are not graue and modeſt, but light, vaine and wanton; whereby they outwardly diſcouer the laſciuious lightneſſe and vaine immodeſtie of their hearts, and by hanging out this ſigne of incontinencie, doe ſet their honeſty to the ſale. And of this kind are thoſe habits and attires eſpecially, which doe not couer the naked parts, which God and nature would haue hid; as alſo when men effeminately affect faſhions like vnto women, and women manniſhly goe in ſuch apparell, as doth hardly diſtinguiſh them from men. Secondly, they offend through phantaſticall pride, which moueth them as often to change their faſhions, as the Cameleon his colour, a ſinne vnto which our people in this land are exceedingly addicted, and therein notablie ſhew their vanitie and follie. For if conſtancie be an inſeparable fruit of wiſedome; ſo that they who are moſt wiſe, are moſt vnchangeable in their courſes and actions, becauſe at firſt they are able to diſcerne what is beſt, and knowing it adhere vnto it (whereof it is that God who is infinite in wiſedome, is alſo immutable in all his counſels) then muſt alſo by the ſame reaſon mutabilitie, and phantaſtical change, bee a notable effect and ſigne of follie, which being not able to judge of that which is good, often ſhifteth and changeth, that at laſt it might find it out. Againe, vpon this often change there followeth another miſchiefe; for when they haue tired their wits, and runne through all faſhions which themſelues can thinke vpon, they craue aid of forraine inuentions, and follow the faſhions of others countries; ſometimes the French, and ſometimes the Italian, one while the Dutch, and ſoone after the Spaniſh. Now it is vnlawfull not only to breake the Lawes and ſtatutes of our countrie; but alſo

1.Tim.2.9.

1.Pet.3.3.

alſo the manners and cuſtomes; wherein they are not diſſonant from Gods word; becauſe it is a breach of humane ſocietie, when ſo much as in our habit we differ from the reſt. And as wee are not to bee ruled by the Lawes of ſtrangers: ſo neither muſt wee follow their cuſtomes, vnleſſe they be much better and more conuenient than our owne: in which caſe when we haue receiued them, we muſt conſtantly hold vs to them, that ſo they may in time grow cuſtomable among our ſelues. Neither muſt euery one according to his owne phantaſticall humour varie from his countrie faſhion, ſeeing that part is vgly and monſtrous which agreeth not with the whole body; nor muſt hee through vaine inconſtancie affect ſtrange faſhions, for this alſo will induce him in time to imitate their vices and corruptions. In which reſpect God threatneth to puniſh euen princes and kings children (who a man would thinke ſhould in this kind be allowed greateſt libertie) becauſe they were clothed with ſtrange apparell, and would not follow their countrie faſhion. In the defect alſo men offend through ſlouenly vnhandſomneſſe, not caring how their apparell hangs vpon them, nor how beaſtly and naſtie their clothes are, ſo they keepe them from the cold; into which diſorder they fall either through ſlothfull negligence, becauſe they would not be at the labour of dreſſing themſelues, or through affected pride, ſeeking for praiſe at the backe dore, and deſiring to bee talked of, and to ſeeme notable for ſomewhat. But this alſo is vnlawfull; for the ſame Scripture which forbiddeth exceſſe in broidered haire, pearle and gold, doth alſo require that wee ſhould clothe our ſelues in handſome, decent and comely apparell, as becommeth ſhamefaſtneſſe and modeſtie.

Laſtly, men offend in their apparell in reſpect of the ends thereof, the which are two, honeſtie and profit. In regard of the former, apparell is worne by man to couer his nakednes, and to hide his ſhame which after his fall inſued by reaſon of ſinne. The other end is profit, which is two-fold, firſt for neceſſarie vſe; ſecondly for honour and comelineſſe. Apparell is neceſſarie vnto vs; for howſoeuer before the fall there was ſuch a iuſt temperature of the aire, that it was not at all offenſiue to mans naked body, and conſequently in this behalfe there was no neede of garments; yet through ſinne this temper being loſt, and an inequality following of heate and cold, both intolerable vnto man, and hurtfull to his health, apparell became neceſſarie to preſerue him from the outward iniuries of the weather, and to keepe him in equall temperature. Secondly, apparell is profitable for comlineſſe, honour and ornament, not onely as it couereth naturall deformities; but alſo as it now maketh the body ſeemely and gracefull, which in its ſelfe was more comely and beautifull before the fall. And this end the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, where hee ſaith, that vpon thoſe members of the body which wee thinke to be leſſe honourable vpon theſe wee beſtow moſt abundant honour, and our vncomely parts haue more abundant comelineſſe. And in the verſe following, that God hath tempered the body together, and hath giuen the more honour to that part which lacked. And theſe are the ends of apparell; in which many failing doe ſhew much vanitie and ſinne. For how manie are there in theſe dayes who diſhoneſt themſelues by their wanton and light garments, wearing ſuch as will not couer their nakedneſſe, but diſcouer their bare breaſts to open view, whileſt their apparell either couereth them not at all, or in couering doth not hide them? How many are there who in apparelling themſelues haue leaſt reſpect to neceſſary vſe, or to preſerue their bodies from the iniuries of the weather, but affect thin and ſubtile fineneſſe, more than wholeſome warmeneſſe deſiring rather to bee adorned than clothed, and to delight others eyes, than to preſerue their owne health? Finally, how many are there who doe not honour their bodies with graue and decent apparell, but diſgrace themſelues with phantaſticall faſhions, and laſciuious habits; proclaiming by their outward garments, their inward pride and wantonneſſe, as though they would haue all men to take notice of their vanitie and lightneſſe?

1. Cor. 12. 23.

Nec veſtitum appetimus ſed ornatum; queritur ad induendum non quod vtilius, ſed quod ſubtilius inuenitur, non quod repellat frigus, ſed quod ſuperbire compellat. Bernard. Apol. ad. Guliel. abbat.

§. Sect. 7. Of the abuſe of coſtly apparell in reſpect of the common vſe thereof.

And theſe are the abuſes of apparell in reſpect of the cauſes thereof. In regard of the vſe alſo it is abuſed, when as gorgeous and coſtly apparell, which might ſometimes bee lawfully worne in reſpect of the dignitie of the perſon, is daily and ordinarily put on, for greater oſtentation of pride and vaineglorie. For as wee may offend by wearing ſuch rich and coſtly garments as are aboue our ſtate and calling; ſo when theſe might well beare it in due time and vpon fit occaſion, wee offend alſo when we ſhew exceſſe in neglecting theſe circumſtances, and in keeping reuels all the yeere. And this was the ſinne taxed in the rich glutton, not that hee was clothed in purple and fine linnen; but becauſe hee was exceſſiue in reſpect of time, vſing theſe coſtly ornaments euerie day. In which reſpect men and women greatly offend in theſe times, who (not obſeruing the courſe and cuſtome of their anceſtors, which hauing this rich attire befitting their callings vſed it ſparingly, at certaine great feſtiuals onely or ſome few extraordinarie meetings) doe make it their daily habite, and (as we ſay) worke-aday attire, as though the chiefe end of their comming into the world, were to pranke themthemſelues in riotous pride, and ſuperfluous brauerie.

Luke 16.

§. Sect. 8. Reaſons to diſſwade all from abuſes in apparell: firſt becauſe God hath forbidden this exceſſiue brauerie.

And thus haue I ſhewed in what reſpects apparell in which worldlings ſo much delight, is vaine and ſinfull. Now in the next place let vs conſider of ſome arguments which may weane vs from this vanitie, and may moue vs, both in our iudgements lightly to value it, and in our affections to deſpiſe and contemne it. The firſt reaſon is, that God in the Scriptures hath forbidden this glorious and gorgeous apparell, vnleſſe it be to ſome perſons, and at ſome times. So the Apoſtle Paul giueth women in charge that they array themſelues in comely apparell, with ſhamefaſtneſſe and modeſty, not with broidered haire, or gold, or pearles, or coſtly apparell (but as it becommeth women which profeſſe the feare of God) with good workes. Likewiſe the Apoſtle Peter willeth them that their apparell ſhould not be outward, as with broidered haire, and gold put about, or in putting on of ornaments; but that the hid man of the heart ſhould bee vncorrupt, with a meeke and quiet ſpirit, which is before God a thing much ſet by. If therefore wee would ſhew our obedience to our great Lord and maſter, wee muſt not conforme our ſelues to the faſhions of the world, by wearing ſuch coſtly apparrell, and glorious or gariſh habits, as beſeeme not our place and calling. But alas ſuch is the vanitie of the times, that people ſticke not to come into the publicke congregation, whereout of Gods word this pride and exceſſe is condemned, with their broidered, curled and frizled haire; gold, ſilkes, veluets, and exceſſiue brauerie, as though they would openly profeſſe their diſconformity with the Scriptures, and rebellious diſobedience againſt God, in doing that which hee forbiddeth before his face, and euen in that very time when by his word he doth condemne it: as if they ſhould plainely ſay, I will not forſake the faſhion of the world, though it be neuer ſo much or oft forbidden. Which as it is a great offence among our ſelues, ſo doth it ſcandalize pagans, infidels and worldlings much more, and as a ſtumbling block in the way hinders them from the profeſſion of our religion, when as they heare our doctrine, and ſee our practice; obſerue that the Scriptures which wee profeſſe to beleeue, and propound as the rule, according to which wee frame our liues, condemne and forbid this vanity, and we euen when we heare them read, vſe that exceſſiue brauerie, which the heathens themſelues would neuer tolerate.

1.Tim.2.9.10.

1.Pet.3.3.4.

§. Sect. 9. The originall of apparell ſhould preſerue vs from taking pride in it.

Secondly, if we would call to minde the firſt originall of apparell, we ſhould haue little cauſe to affect brauerie, or to wax proud of gay cloathing; for had our firſt parents continued in the ſtate of innocencie, they ſhould haue remained glorious in themſelues, and not haue needed any apparell; but hauing tranſgreſſed Gods commandements they ſaw their nakedneſſe, and being aſhamed of their deformities, they ſought to hide themſelues, and to couer their ſhame by the helpe of garments. In which reſpect what is our apparell but a daily monitour, to call our ſinnes and ſhame to memorie? What is it but a Lazers cloth, caſt ouer our filthy ſores of ſinne, that we may not become lothſome through our deformities to our ſelues and others? and conſequently what doe they which vaunt themſelues in this vanity, but like the thiefe, who being adiudged to weare an haltar in perpetuall remembrance of his foule crimes, doth make him one of ſilke, or gold twiſt, and ſeeing it to make a glittering ſhew, doth wax proud of that which ſhould rather humble him, as being a continuall teſtimonie of his ſinne and ſhame? ſo they wax proud of that which is the enſigne of their ſinne and miſerie, and conuert the habits which were giuen vs to hide our ſinnes, into ſin it ſelfe. Againe, if we conſider the vſe of apparell in the firſt inſtitution, which was not onely (as I haue ſaid) to couer our nakedneſſe and hide our filthineſſe; but alſo to preſerue our bodies from the iniuries of the weather, wee ſhall finde little cauſe which may moue vs to affect or delight our ſelues in this ſuperfluous brauerie. For this enmitie betweene vs and the creatures which makes vs neede theſe armours of defence, puts vs in minde of the cauſe thereof, which was our enmitie with God by reaſon of our ſinne: theſe couers to hide vs, argue to our ſhame, that there is ſomething vnder them which needes couering; and theſe plaſters, though they be of ſilke or veluet, ſhew that vnder them are ſome loathſome ſores, which being ſeene would diſgrace and ſhame vs. In all which reſpects the moſt glorious garments bring with them cauſe of bluſhing rather than of boaſting; for before man ſinned hee was glorious in his naturall beautie; and a garment to him would haue beene but as a cloud to the ſun, which doth not grace it but hide its brightneſſe. Neither would theſe ornaments haue more adorned him than a ſilken caſe a ſweete roſe; but when his beautie was by ſinne blemiſhed, then, like the withered roſe reſerued in a bag of ſilke, hee was driuen to ſeeke for ornaments, and to ſupplie naturall defects with the helpe of art. So that he who is proud of theſe poore ſupplies, is like vnto him who being blind glorieth in ſiluer eyes; or vnto a lame man, who hauing loſt his legge, boaſteth and braggeth of a gilded ſtumpe, which was not giuen him for glory and oſtentation, but as a poore ſupport to hold him vp, and as a ſorie helpe to relieue his miſerie. And this the Lord plainely intimated in thoſe firſt garments which hee gaue our great progenitours; for howſoeuer hee could as eaſily haue prouided apparell of ſilke, or veluet, curiouſly imbroydered with gold and ſiluer, as of any meaner ſtuffes, yet hee clothed them with beaſts skins, which were onely fit for thoſe vſes of hiding their nakedneſſe, and defending them from the weather, and ſerued rather to humble than to puffe them vp with pride, not onely by putting them in minde of their brutiſh condition, but alſo of their frailety and mortality, ſeeing the creatures for their ſakes were already ſubject to death and vanity.

ect.10.

Thirdly, let vs conſider, that howſoeuer it may beſeeme worldlings to iet it out daily in their gorgeous attire, becauſe they haue nothing to glorie in but theſe outward things; and alſo haue their proud habits ſuiting with their proud hearts, and the reſt of their outward cariage and behauiour; yet it much misbeſeemeth Chriſtians herein to faſhion themſelues to the cuſtome of the world; for their chiefe ornaments are not outward and carnall, but inward and ſpirituall, when as they are decked with Gods ſanctifying graces; they are moſt glorious when they are moſt humble, and what hath humility to doe with the enſignes of pride? they are beſt adorned with modeſty and chaſtity, which outwardly ſhew themſelues in ſober and graue attire; and therefore what haue they to doe with phantaſticall faſhions, and the wanton and light habits of laſciuious and filthy harlots? They come neareſt the truth of their profeſſion, when as following the rule of the Scriptures, they put on the habit of holineſſe, and array themſelues in comely apparell, with ſhamefaſtneſſe and modeſty, and are adorned with good workes, as it becommeth thoſe that profeſſe the feare of God: why therefore ſhould their practice giue the lie to their profeſſion, by accuſtoming themſelues to weare gorgeous and gay garments, which harlots vſe as ſnares to ſet out their beauty to the ſale, and to intice vaine perſons to follie and filthineſſe? Why will Chriſtian women ſeeme ſuch as they would bee loth to be; and hauing nothing to ſell, why doe they hang out ſignes to inuite cuſtomers? Finally, ſeeing in our Baptiſme wee haue renounced the world with the vanities and luſts thereof, why ſhould wee in our apparell ſhew our ſelues as vaine as the vaineſt, or hauing caſt theſe luſts out of our hearts, as it were, the chiefe city, why doe we ſuffer them to reſt vpon our backes, as in the ſuburbs, where they are ready euery day to make a reentrie, and to bring with them all vice and vanitie? Againe, let vs remember, that if our Sauiour Chriſt would not haue vs, who profeſſe our ſelues children of our heauenly father, to take any care for food and raiment, but to reſt our ſelues vpon his alſufficient prouidence; how much leſſe would hee haue vs to trouble our braines about curious and coſtly ornaments and vaine faſhions? how farre would hee haue vs from ſpending our time and ſtudy about variety of colours, imbroydery, iewels, dying and curling of haire, painting, periwigs, and ſuch like vanities? Finally, ſeeing wee profeſſe our ſelues pilgrims on earth; why ſhould we goe like, not onely citizens, but courtiers of the world? and ſeeing we ſay that wee are trauelling towards our heauenly countrie; why doe wee loade, not ſo much our bodies, as our minds, with the intolerable waight and heauie care of variety and ſuperfluity of ſuits, made more maſſie and burthenſome with gold, ſiluer, and precious iewels; all which before we come to our iournies end, we muſt leaue behind vs, if at leaſt we doe not make the poore our porters to beare them for vs.

§. Sect. 11.
That this brauerie hath in it no worth or excellencie.

Fourthly, that wee may bee weaned from this vanity of coſtly and gorgeous apparell; let vs conſider that it is of no worth and excellencie: for the moſt rich clothes doe not better the body that weares them; much leſſe the mind that takes care to prouide them; but as it is vnto this the bellowes of pride, ſo vnto the other an vnprofitable burthen; and were it not for opinion and affection which lightens the load, what leſſe waight and cumber is there in a chaine of gold, than in a chaine of iron? what leſſe trouble to haue the fingers loaded with gold rings ſet with pointed diamonds, than to weare vpon them rings of braſſe ſet with flint or ſmall peebles? ſeeing the price doth not lighten the burthen, but onely a deceiued and falſe conceit? Againe, what excellencie or worth is there in the richeſt ſilkes, and fineſt clothes, the matter of the one being the excrement of crawling wormes, the other the fleece of the ſillie ſheepe? both which within a ſhort time weare out to ragges, or with vntimely decay may bee conſumed with moathes and ſilly vermine, and what excellencie is in that, which as wormes breed, ſo wormes deſtroy? And of what worth is that to be valued which man borroweth from beaſtes and creeping things, which are creatures farre inferiour vnto himſelfe? A noble man much ſcorneth to borrow clothes of a meane yeoman; or being by preſent neede conſtrained to be thus beholding, he would rather bee aſhamed than glory in it; although theſe both are creatures of the ſame kind, made by the ſame workeman; and caſt out of the ſame mold, and yet man borroweth ornaments from all the inferiour creatures; from one his fleece, from another his skin, from this his light feathers, from that his teeth

Collum catena conſtringit, &c. nil refert an corpus auro ligetur an ferro. Si ceruix premitur, ſi grauatur inceſſus, nil pretium iuuat. Ambroſ. de virgin. lib. 1.

teeth and ſolid bones, from wormes their intrailes, from cats their excrements, from the ſands its ſtones, from the earth its gold; and when with the crow he hath made himſelfe gay with theſe borrowed feathers, hee glorieth and vaunteth himſelfe in his owne worth, as though they grew all vpon his owne backe; and that nature and not art, had put this difference betweene him and others.

§. Sect. 12. That in this brauerie wee haue no preheminence before thoſe who are of baſe condition.

Quid enim ſibi vult plurimum illud aurum? eis enim qui in ſcena ſunt iſta conueniunt, & meretricibus, quæ omnia ad hoc faciunt vt ſpectentur. Chryſoſt. in Hebræos cap. 12. Homil. 28.

Let not therefore any who profeſſe chriſtianity much affect theſe trifling vanities, or hauing them, glory in theſe baſe toies, vnto which beaſts, birds, and ſilly wormes haue the firſt title and moſt naturall intereſt, whereas man onely commeth by them (as it were) by conqueſt, violence and force of armes. With all which ornaments when men or women haue with great coſt and labour decked themſelues, yet ſhall they find ſmall excellency in them, ſeeing herein they are matched by many, and exceeded by ſome; and that not thoſe onely of the nobleſt rancke, but alſo ſuch as are of meane and baſe condition; as players, dancers, harlots, who adorne themſelues with as glorious apparell as the beſt, that rauiſhing the minds, and dazling the eyes of their beholders, they may allure them to offer to this idoll of beautie and glory, the ſacrifice of fooles; and to become contributors towards their maintenance in theſe lawleſſe courſes. Yea not onely are they herein matched by men, but alſo with their horſes, whom vſually they adorne with gold, veluet, and imbroiderie; and ſo cauſe them to communicate with them in an equall ſhare of this glory and brauerie; and what excellencie is in that, wherein man is not priuiledged aboue the bruitiſh creatures? To this purpoſe one of the ancients ſpeaketh fitly: Wilt thou (ſaith he) that wee examine their courſe which equally clothe their horſes and wiues with golden ornaments? for beſides other things, this priuiledge riches haue, to make men fooles. They communicate the ſame honour to their horſes and their wiues; one kind of ornament belongeth to them both; and by the ſame things, they deſire to make their wiues glorious and famous, wherewith they adorne their coaches, curtaines and couerings. Yea herein men are not onely equall with the beaſts, but alſo inferiour to the ſenſeleſſe creatures; for when they are in all their royaltie and brauerie, they are not to be compared (as our Sauiour Chriſt ſpeaketh) with the lilies and flowers of the field; and who would thinke that any part of mans excellency, who was created after Gods image, wherein theſe inferiour creatures doe ſo farre exceed him?

Vis & eorum rationem excutiamus qui deauratis & equos & vxores amiciunt, &c. Chryſoſt. in philip. 3. ſerm. 10.

Mat. 6. 28. 29.

§. Sect. 13. That this excessiue appar not be wearers.

Fifthly, to this worthleſſe vanity and want of excellencie, let vs adde their inutility and want of profit, for howſoeuer worldly men procure them with great coſt and labour, as if their chiefe happineſſe conſiſted in them; yet they doe them no good, nor make them a whit the better when they are adorned with them. For howſoeuer purple and ſcarlet, ſiluer and gold, ſilkes and veluets haue in them ſome beautie and glory, yet they doe keepe it to themſelues, and doe not communicate it to thoſe that weare it; and therefore ſeeing the glory which commeth by the putting on of the apparell, vaniſheth away when it is put off, without leauing any ſigne behind; it hereby appeareth, that it is the glory of the veſture and not of the owner. So that vicious men haue little cauſe to glorie in this externall and ſtrange beautie, when they haue loſt their owne, the inward vertues of the mind. As therefore no man iudgeth a horſe the better which is ſet out to ſale, becauſe he hath a veluet footcloth, or golden trappings, yea rather ſuſpecting this brauerie, he vncouereth him of them all, and looketh vpon him in his naturall beauty: ſo neither is a man to bee eſteemed better for his glorious ornaments, but laying theſe aſide, we are to value him according to the inward beautie of his minde; for if that which is outwardly ſeene of man, is not man, but the ſoule, vnto which his body is but the caſe or couer; how much leſſe are wee to eſteeme gay apparell any part of mans excellencie and goodneſſe, ſeeing it is but a meere accident, which may eaſily be put on, and with more eaſe laid aſide?

Sirica p & tis fucus d habent, f præben Bernard Sophiam gin.

§. Sect.
That exce brauerie d not make that weare more commendable.
Clemens A lexand. Pæ
lib. 3. cap. 11

But this vnprofitableneſſe will better appeare if wee conſider that this glorious apparell doth not aduance thoſe ends for which it is vſed: for firſt, whereas it is put on as an ornament to commend vs, it is manifeſt that it faileth herein; for (as one ſaith) he who thinks that gold adornes him, muſt acknowledge himſelfe inferiour to that whereby hee is adorned; and being inferiour, hee is no more a maſter of it but a ſeruant: now what is more abſurd than for a man to acknowledge himſelfe inferiour, and leſſe comely and beautifull than this Lydian fragment? Neither in truth doth this gay clothing adorne and commend any in reſpect of their ſtate and perſon, body or mind, if it be exceſſiue in its ſelfe, or immoderate and too too common in reſpect of time; for if a man thus goe aboue his calling, in ſtead of making himſelfe commendable by all his coſt and labour, he is of ſome enuied, of others ſkorned; one he prouoketh to anger, another to laughter, and all to diſpleaſure and diſlike; yea they who bow vnto thoſe thus richly adorned and doe them reuerence, euen in the perfomance of theſe outward complements, doe ſecretly condemne them in their hearts, cenſuring them of pride, vanitie and wantonneſſe; ſeeing if they were not wholly poſſeſſed of theſe vices, they would not with ſo great coſt and labour attire themſelues aboue their calling, nor with ſuch phantaſticall and light faſhions deforme their bodies. Wherein the juſt judgement of God threatned againſt the proud lieth heauily vpon them; for when they thinke by their coſt and brauerie to exalt themſelues in euery ones judgement, and to be commended and approued of all that behold them, the Lord reſiſting them in their pride, pulleth them downe, and maketh them to pleaſe none, whereas they intended hereby to pleaſe all. For God approueth them not, yea, rather hee profeſſeth to oppoſe againſt them; the vertuous and humble like them not, for hating pride in themſelues, they cannot loue it in others; thoſe who are as proud as themſelues are not hereby pleaſed; for they who are their Superiours diſdaine that they ſhould match or come neere them in brauery; their equals emulate and contend with them who ſhall exceed other; their inferiours enuy and maligne them becauſe they cannot bee as fine as they; yea themſelues are not pleaſed with themſelues, becauſe they neuer think that they are braue enough, which is the reaſon that they ſo often alter their attires and change their faſhions, becauſe none can long pleaſe them, and giue contentment. In a word they pleaſe no body with their brauery, but onely the Prince of Pride, whoſe ſubjects and ſeruants they profeſſe themſelues by wearing his badge and liuery. So that if a man would honeſt and commend himſelfe to the judgement of all; it were a much wiſer courſe to fit his apparell according to his place and calling, yea, to carry a lower ſaile than the Ship may well beare, abating ſomewhat of that brauery which his eſtate may well warrant and maintaine; for heere alſo wee ſhall find it moſt true, that he who exalteth himſelfe ſhall be caſt downe, and hee who humbleth himſelfe ſhall bee exalted; euery one being ready to adde vnto his prayſe, who rather ſhunneth than ſeeketh it; and to detract from him, who too much affecteth and eagerly purſueth credit and commendations.

And as this coſtly and gorgeous apparell doth not commend the perſon or ſtate of any; ſo neither doth it make their body or minde more commendable, whether they be beautifull or deformed, indued with rare vertues, or defiled with foule vices. For if they bee beautifull by nature, what need they the help of art, ſeeing nature it ſelfe ſufficeth? eſpecially ſeeing theſe goodly ornaments do not commend them ſo much to the ſight, as they detract from their praiſe in the judgement; euery one being readie to attribute a great ſhare of their beautie and comelineſſe, to their ſetting forth and gayneſſe in apparell, imagining that almoſt any other would bee as praiſe worthy as they, if they were ſo decked and adorned. In which regard a careleſſe neglect of beautie better pleaſeth; and oftentimes not to be adorned is in ſtead of the beſt ornament. Againe, this brauerie as little helpeth thoſe who naturally are deformed, ſeeing it doth not take away their deformities but rather ſheweth them, when as it inuiteth the eies of all to behold them, and ſo cauſeth them to think in their judgements, that ſo great coſt is but ill beſtowed. Neither doth it at all profit the mind of man, whether he be indued with vertue, or blemiſhed with vice; for if the glorious beames of vertue doe ſhine in any, the brightneſſe thereof ſo much excelleth theſe outward ornaments, that they adde no more grace to a man, than a Candle-light when the Sunne ſhineth. Contrariwiſe if the mind be deſtitute of vertue, and deformed with vice; this outward decking will little auaile to furniſh it with the one, or clenſe it from the other. It will not make any more religious, humble, juſt, and temperate; yea, rather as experience ſheweth, it bringeth men to the contrary extreames, it doth not abate pride and vaine glory, yea, rather it increaſeth it; it doth not extinguiſh the heate of luſt, but rather doth inflame it; it dothnot warme our hearts with Charitie, nor repell the force of the Deuils Darts, but cauſeth rather our loue to freeſe, and endangereth vs to Satans blowes; it doth not free vs from injuſtice, raging anger, enuie, malice, intemperance, couetouſneſſe, ambition and ſuch like vices, but rather giueth occaſion and way vnto them. In which reſpect a vicious man adorned with glorious garments, is like a dead Corps ſtucke with flowres; or like a glorious Sepulchre, containing in it a putrified and rotten bodie, which is tainted thereby with vnſauourie ſtench, but can giue no beautie or excellencie to the dead and corrupted carcaſe. So that rich attire neither beautifieth nor bettereth either the body or the minde; and therefore thoſe who being deſtitute of vertue or of naturall beauty doe thinke to adorne and commend themſelues by their goodly Apparell, fall into the errour of the Painters Boy, who being to paint the faire Helen, and wanting art to ſet forth her beautie, daubed Gold on her apparell, making her clothes rich, becauſe hee could not make her face beautifull.

Neglecta decoris cura plus placet, & hoc ipſum quod non ornamus, ornatus eſt, Ambroſ. de virgin. lib. 1

Pulchrum ornatum turpes mores peius cæno collinunt. Lepidi mores turpem ornatum facile factis comprobant, Plaut. in Pœnulo.

Clemens Alex. pædagog. lib. 1 cap. 12.

§. Sect. 16. That coſtly apparel doth not make thoſe that weare it more reſpected.

Secondly, Worldlings vſe theſe rich ornaments becauſe they would be more admired and reſpected; the which end alſo is often fruſtrate, eſpecially when as by often vſe they are made ordinarie; for Gold and Siluer, Silkes and Veluets, being as common as Stuffes, Cloth, and Freeſe, are within a while as little regarded and admired. Yea, though men could match the Sunne in glorie, yet if with the Sunne they ſhould daily appeare in this brauery, it would work in the beholders no wonder or reſpect, howſoeuer at the firſt ſight they were much admired; yea, contrariwiſe becauſe they waſte their ſtates, and ſpend all their liuings in maintaining this brauery, and ſuperfluous exceſſe, which was heretofore beſtowed, vpon charitable vſes and good hoſpitalitie; therefore the meaner and poorer ſort, receiuing no reliefe or comfort from them, deteſt their pride, and enuie their brauerie. Much wiſer therefore was the courſe held by our fore-fathers, who hauing indeed coſtly attire befitting their callings, did not weare it commonly, but by the ſeldome vſe thereof, made it the more to bee admired and reſpected, and howſoeuer making their garments of the beſt and moſt laſting Stuffes, they did not need to change them, but wore the ſame clothes many yeeres together; yet wearing them ſo ſeldome, and with ſuch great diſtance of time comming betweene, and not glutting either themſelues or others with their common vſe, it was all one, as if at euery good time they had changed their ſuite and faſhion. By which wiſe frugality they were enabled to keepe good hoſpitality, and to performe the workes of mercy; whereby as they had comfort to their owne conſciences; ſo did they deſerue the loue & reuerence of their inferiours towards them, when as they taſted of their bounty and goodneſſe. Eſpecially they were not driuen through their exceſſiue expences to inhance rents and increaſe fines, but hauing ſufficient of their owne to maintaine their port, they were able to afford to their poore Tenants their Houſes and Lands at ſuch eaſie rates, as they might comfortably liue vnder their ſhelter. Whereby as their loines did bleſſe them, when they enjoyed theſe benefits from them; ſo in the time of peace they had ſo many ſeruants as Tenants, ready for all imployments; and in time of warre ſo many Souldiers, who in all dangers were ready to liue and die with them. Whereas now their pride hauing ſet rents and fines vpon the extremeſt racke, becauſe nothing ſufficeth to maintaine their exceſſiue brauery, and hauing turned hoſpitality and the workes of mercy into rich jewels, ſumptuous furniture, and gorgeous apparell; their Tenants ſtand vpon equal termes with them, ſeeing their Houſes and lands being brought to the Market Hill, they had onely a bare peny-worth for their peny; and therefore at their need are vnwilling (vnleſſe they be forced by oppreſſion) to doe them any ſeruice, or to ſtand betweene them and any danger. So that whereas heretofore Gentlemen ſo imployed their wealth, that it ſerued notably for their defence in time of perill; now ſpending it vpon Iewels, Apparell, Plate and Furniture, in time of peace it expoſeth them to Enuy, and the danger of Theeues, and in time of warre to the common ſpoyle.

§. Se Of the which pary brauery finne
God.

And thus haue I ſhewed the vnprofitableneſſe of coſtly and gay apparell: which if it be not ſufficient to weane our hearts from it, let vs further conſider that it is not onely empty of profit, but alſo full of euill, both in reſpect of ſinne and puniſhment; for it is euery way ſinfull as being ſinne in it ſelfe, the cauſe and alſo the effect of ſinne. Concerning the firſt, they who exceed in this exceſſiue brauery offend firſt againſt the majeſty of God himſelfe, not onely by tranſgreſſing his Commandement, whereby he hath forbidden it, and by neglecting his worſhip and ſeruice, becauſe their whole time almoſt is taken vp either in caring for, prouiding, or putting on their ornaments; and thereby either want time on Gods Sabbaths to come to his publicke ſeruice, or elſe ruſh into his preſence without all due preparation; but alſo through the groſſe abuſe of his creatures and good bleſſings beſtowed vpon them. For they were not made Stewards of theſe rich Talents, that they ſhould beſtow them in exceſſe and vanitie: but that with the ſurpluſſage of their wealth they ſhould relieue their poore brethren, & performe the works of Charitie and Mercy, which either reſpect the good of the Church or Commonwealth. And therefore fearefull will their account be at the day of Iudgement; when as it will not excuſe their neglecting the poore members of Chriſt, to ſay they could ſpare nothing from theſe vſes, becauſe all was too little to maintaine their brauery and exceſſiue coſt in apparell; nor yet that their riches and reuenues was great, and therefore they might well adorne themſelues in gorgeous attire; ſeeing their wealth was not giuen them, that they ſhould waſte it in ſuperfluities, but that they ſhould beſtow it in relieuing the poores neceſſities, in which reſpect this excuſe of abundance will be no better, than if a man ſhould cauſe his garments to be made farre too large and long for his ſtature, and excuſe himſelfe by this, that he had too much ſtuffe. For as it is abſurd and ridiculous, to make the garment not after the meaſure of the bodie, but the quantitie of the peece out of which it is cut: ſo is it no leſſe abſurd to waſte a mans ſubſtance in ſuch coſtly apparell, as is aboue his calling, and not fitting to his ſtate and condition, becauſe hee hath abundance of wealth lying by him.

§. Se Too mu care in d king the appareth neglect ſoule.

Secondly, herein they ſinne againſt themſelues: firſt, by neglecting their ſoule, which is their moſt excellent part, whileſt their whole care and pains is taken vp in adorning of their bodies; for too much care of the bodie plainly argueth, the too little care of the ſoule; richneſſe in apparell, pouerty in vertue; outward ornaments, inward deformities, and ſpirituall nakedneſſe, and (as one ſaith) ſaith) Whileſt men are cloathed with ſilke and purple, commonly their conſciences are ragged and beggarly; whileſt they gliſter with jewels and chaines, their manners vſually are loathſome and ſordidous. In which reſpect they are not vnfitly compared to Beeres or Coffins; for as they are moſt adorned, when as they haue a dead body in them; ſo theſe bodies are moſt decked with gorgeous attire, when they haue in them a ſoule deſtitute of vertue and dead in ſinne. And in the ſame regard one of the Ancients compareth them to the ſtately Temples of Egypt, which had the outward Courts, Porches, Wals and Roofes, richly adorned with Gold, Siluer, curious caruing and ingrauing, and with all other ſtately and gorgeous ornaments; but if a man ſhould goe on further into the inmoſt parts, to ſee the Idoll which was there worſhipped, in ſtead of ſome goodly Image ſet out according to the reſt of the brauerie and pompe; he ſhould find nothing but the baſe picture, or other reſemblance of ſome Cat, Crocodile or vgly Serpent: for ſo theſe women who load themſelues with Gold, Siluer, Iewels, and coſtly apparell, if this outward glory be remoued, and they more narrowly ſearched what they haue in the inmoſt Temple of their heart, they cannot ſhew vnto vs Gods Image ſhining in his ſpirituall graces, but rather a man ſhall find in them Crocodiles and Serpents, that is, beaſtly luſts, pride, wantonneſſe, immodeſtie, and ſuch like impieties. Againe, thoſe who affect this coſtly apparell hurt themſelues, whileſt by their pride and exceſſiue brauery they lie open to the hatred and enuie, the cenſures and bitter frumps of all that ſee them. For euen thoſe who are ſober, graue and humble, when they ſee thoſe who are inferiour vnto themſelues in place and calling, ſo farre outſtrip them in this outward brauerie, cannot chuſe but diſdaine and ſcorne it; and others who thinke themſelues as good as they, comming ſhort of them for want of meanes, or will, ſo to beſtow their coſt, doe as much enuie and hate them. The which ſheweth the extreame folly of theſe proud perſons; for whereas they might haue loue & due reſpect among their Neighbours good cheape, they rather chuſe to purchaſe hatred, enuy and contempt, at theſe deare rates. Finally, by this outward brauery they diſgrace themſelues, and bewray vnto euery judicious beholder the ſecret corruptions which lie lurking in their hearts. For when the heart is infected and poyſoned with the contagious plague of pride, it tainteth outwardly the whole body with the markes and tokens, which certainly prognoſticate death and deſtruction, without repentance. So if it be corrupted with folly, it diſcouereth it ſelfe in fooliſh and phantaſticall faſhions; if with prodigall vanity, it appeareth in the outward ſuperfluitie; if with luſt, it ſheweth it ſelfe in a wanton habit: and finally, if it be an heart ſoft and effeminate, it will eaſily be diſcerned, by ſoft rayment and wanton delicacie. So that as one ſaith, this vanitie of apparell doth not ſo much adorne the body, as diſcouer the mind; and as the ſonne of Syrach telleth vs, A mans garment, exceſſiue laughter, & gate, plainly declare what perſon he is. And therfore the Lord reprouing Iſrael ſaith, that their pride did teſtifie againſt them to their face, becauſe they did diſcouer it outwardly in their very countenance and gay apparell.

Non hoc ornant corpus ſed mentem detegunt, Quintilian.
Eccluſ. 19.28.
Hoſe 7.10.

Laſtly, by wearing theſe coſtly and gorgeous garments they alſo ſinne againſt their Neighbours: firſt, by way of offence, when as by their example they allure and draw them on to imitate their brauerie; for ſuch is the pride of mans heart, that hee is impatient to be any way inferiour to thoſe whom he eſteemeth but his equals; and therefore when hee ſeeth his Neighbour in coſtly clothing, fearing leſt he ſhould be preferred before him, hee inwardly diſdaineth, enuieth, and vieth with him who ſhall excell in brauerie; whereof it commeth to paſſe, that this vanity of gay apparell, hauing infected any corner, doth in a ſhort time like a running canker ſpread it ſelfe ouer a whole Countrie. Againe, they are ſcandalous to thoſe who are without, as they hinder and diſcourage them by their pride and exceſſe from the imbracing and profeſſing of their Religion, when as in this they can perceiue no difference betweene a profeſſour of Religion, and a profeſſed vain perſon; the children of God, and the children of the Deuill; thoſe who profeſſe mortification, and they who are worldly & profane. Whereas contrariwiſe, if they were according to their profeſſion, humble, modeſt, graue and ſober, in their habit and outward carriage; they might moue them to a liking of their Religion for their vertues ſake, who profeſſe it, and in time draw them on to the profeſſion and practice of it. Finally, if in ſinceritie of heart we profeſſe and practiſe Chriſtianitie, and yet be ouertaken with this vanity, as we doe thereby wrong our ſelues by impairing our good name; ſo by ſeeming that wee are not, wee giue occaſion to wicked worldlings of falling into ſinne, whileſt for this infirmitie they are readie to blaſpheme Gods Truth, which wee profeſſe, and cenſure and condemne vs for hypocrites and wicked perſons, who are as proud, wanton and laſciuious as any other. Which ſuſpitions wee ought to ſhun by auoiding theſe outward appearances of euill; for if my heart bee cleane and vpright in it ſelfe, why ſhould I giue occaſion to haue it ſpotted and blemiſhed in anothers conceit and eſtimation? Why ſhould Wantons and laſciuious perſons haue any hope §. Sect. 19. That they who vſe exceſſe in apparell, offend againſt their brethren by giuing offence.

Titus 2.3.

Tertul. de cultu fœmin. lib.

of finding that in me which I abhorre? Why doth not my habit proclaime the affection of my heart, leſt impudencie ſhould be incouraged to taint it, by infuſing the poyſon of luſt and wantonneſſe by my eares? Why ſhould I not profeſſing charity ſeek rather to edifie than deſtroy my Neighbour; and being a Souldier of Chriſt why ſhould I not put on mine owne armour, badge and liuery, and manfully profeſſe open emnitie againſt the World and worldly vanities?

§. Sect. 20. Their excuſe taken away who pretend inward humilitie though they exceed in outward brauery.

That therefore will not ſerue their turne which Profeſſors of Religion vſually ſay for their excuſe; that whatſoeuer men may think of them when they ſee their brauerie and vanitie, yet they haue cleere conſciences towards God; though their apparell be gariſh and wanton, yet their minds are humble and chaſt; and though they faſhion themſelues according to the World, and doe after the cuſtome of the moſt, yet they are not of the World, nor approue of worldly vanities, but could find in their hearts, if others would accompany them, to lay all theſe proud clothes and wanton faſhions aſide; whereas now they are carried away with the the ſtreame of time, and are ouer-ruled euen againſt their owne minds by the tyrannie of euill cuſtoome. For wee are bound to labour with the Apoſtle to haue a cleere conſcience before God, and before men; wee ought to conforme not only our hearts, but alſo our outward habits vnto the obedience of Gods Law and reuealed will; and ſo to performe the duties of the inner man towards God, as that wee ought alſo to haue ſpeciall care, that our outward carriage be not ſcandalous to our Neighbours. We muſt procure honeſt things, not onely before the Lord, but alſo before all men, as the Apoſtle enjoyneth vs. We who profeſſe Chriſtianitie, are as the light of the world, and as a citie ſet vpon an hill; and therefore our endeauour ſhould bee to ſhine before others in all holineſſe of conuerſation; neither is it enough for vs to haue light in our ſelues, but wee ſhould alſo haue our lights ſo to ſhine before men, that our heauenly Father may be glorified, and our Brethren edified in the holy faith. We muſt not onely bee good, ſober, humble and chaſt for our owne ſakes, but we muſt alſo appeare ſo, for the good of others. And the Chriſtian muſt haue his head and heart ſo full of the ſweet Oyle of Gods ſanctifying graces, that they muſt alſo ouerflow euen to his garments and skirts of his clothing; that by theſe precious Odours, not only himſelfe may bee comforted, but others alſo may be refreſhed by the perfume of his holy example. Neither ought they to vſe vaine faſhions, and exceſſiue coſtlineſſe in their apparell, becauſe it is the common cuſtome of the times; ſeeing wee haue an expreſſe commandement, that we ſhould not follow a multitude in that which is euill,

Acts 24.16.

Rom. 12.17. 2. Cor. 8.21.

Mat. 5.14,16. 1. Pet. 2.12.

Exod. 23.2.

nor conforme our ſelues to the faſhions of the world; but be outwardly changed by the inward renuing of our minds. Wee muſt not ſtay our reformation of apparell till we may carrie it with moſt voices, nor expect a Parliament to take away theſe abuſes; not laying them aſide till we haue the whole Countrie to beare vs company; but the Law of Gods Spirit ruling in our hearts, muſt make vs herein to be a law vnto our ſelues, ſeeking the reformation of that which is amiſſe, though none would accompany vs in well doing. For if ſo be worldlings and vaine perſons bee bold on the behalfe of their Maſter Satan, to bring into common vſe coſtly attire, and ſtrange and wanton faſhions, whereby they poyſon and corrupt all that are neere vnto them by their il example: why ſhould not wee who profeſſe the name of Chriſt, ſhew the like or greater boldneſſe in a better cauſe, obeying our Lord and Maſter, and labouring by our modeſt, graue and ſober apparell, to moue others to imitate vs, and reforme their vanitie, and exceſſiue brauerie, by our good example? Which if in theſe times Chriſtians would begin, there is great hope that their endeuour would haue good ſucceſſe; not onely becauſe many would be drawne for conſcience ſake to follow their practice; but alſo becauſe the moſt being almoſt cloyed with the common vſe of brauery, and all quite tired with the exceſſiue charge which goeth to the maintaining of this coſtly apparell; doe inwardly deſire a reformation, ſo it might be generall, and could be content to weare more modeſt, ſober, and frugall Attire, if the reſt of their Neighbours would beare them company.

Rom. 12.2.

§. Sect.

Their

But here the weaker ſexe doth further obiect, that either they muſt offend others by putting on this rich and vaine apparell, or their Husbands by laying it aſide; who vnleſſe they adorne themſelues, will either bee diſpleaſed with them, or at leaſt take no delight in them; and better it were to offend ſtrangers by exceſſe, than thoſe who are ſo neere and deare vnto them, by not ſetting themſelues forth in ſuch apparell as beſt pleaſeth them. To which I anſwer, that if any haue ſuch Husbands, delighted with folly and vanitie, their Wiues haue in this kind greater libertie than other women, becauſe ſmaller inconueniences are to be vndergone, that greater may be auoided: but let ſuch vnder colour of libertie beware of licentiouſneſſe, and vnder ſhew of pleaſing their Husbands, let them take heed that they doe not diſpleaſe God, wound their owne conſciences, and offend their Brethren, by wearing ſuch coſtly or gariſh apparell, as is either aboue their particular ſtate and calling; or not beſeeming their generall calling of Chriſtianitie. For howſoeuer they ought to pleaſe their Husbands rather than ſtrangers, yet they muſt labour more to pleaſe God than them both, yea, euen ſtrangers too in that which is good, rather than their Husbands in that which is wicked and vnlawfull. But further I admoniſh them to take heed leſt this be a meer pretence and falſe excuſe, and that they doe not by this brauery ſtudie to pleaſe their Husbands, but rather their owne proud humour, yea, euen ſtrangers themſelues, whilſt they affect by this brauery their eſteeme and commendations. For if they angled onely for their Husbands loue, they would caſt this baite of brauery before his eyes alone, more carefully adorning themſelues at home whileſt they are in his preſence, than when they goe abroad into other company: whereas they follow the contrary practice, curiouſly decking themſelues when they are to goe forth into the company of ſtrangers, and putting all off againe when they come and returne vnto their husbands. Finally, let ſuch know that if at all they are conſtrained to ſeeke to pleaſe them by theſe vaine ornaments, it is for the moſt part for want of better things, wherby they ſhould be commended. For if in their behauiour and conuerſation they were religious, wiſe, modeſt, graue and ſober, and towards their Husbands meeke, humble, louing, and reſpectiue, they would by theſe vertues and duties pleaſe them better, if they haue any religion, conſcience, or true wiſdome, than by wearing the gayeſt ornaments; or if they be yet ſtrangers to the grace of God, they may through his bleſſing winne them (as the Apoſtle telleth vs) to the profeſſion and practice of Religion, by this their holy and vertuous conuerſation.

And thus it appeareth that the wearing of coſtly and gay apparell, vnfitting our ſtate and calling, is it ſelfe a ſin. It followeth that I alſo ſhew that it is both the cauſe and effect of other ſins much greater than it ſelfe. And firſt, it is the cauſe of many ſins, which men vſually commit, both againſt themſelues & againſt their neighbors, in both which regards this exceſſiue brauerie is a fruitfull mother of much wickedneſſe. It is the cauſe of luſt and vncleanneſſe both in themſelues that weare it, as it doth effeminate the minde and ſofteneth the heart, making it vaine and wanton, and ſo ready to receiue any impreſſion of luſt; as alſo in others, as it doth incourage them to giue the aſſault to chaſtitie, with hope of obtaining victory, when as theſe enſignes of Wantons being diſplayed, do promiſe a yeelding at the firſt encounter. It is alſo the cauſe of much pride; for as pride firſt breedeth brauery, ſo no ſooner is it borne, but preſently it nouriſheth the mother that bred it, making men in theſe gay habits to thinke better of themſelues than when they are more meanly attired, and to contemne others as baſe, who are not decked in ſuch rich attire. It cauſeth men, and much more women to miſpend their time, whileſt they conſume a great part of their life, either in caſting with themſelues how they may be moſt braue, and what faſhion will beſt become them; or in putting their purpoſes in execution, whileſt they ſpend the greateſt part of the morning in prancking and trimming of their bodies; or finally, in contriuing their plots, and vſing the meanes for the vpholding and maintaining of their exceſſe. Whereby it commeth to paſſeth, that they haue little or no time to adorne their ſoules with Gods ſauing graces, knowledge, faith, charitie and the reſt, but remaine ignorant, impenitent, ſecure, and full of infidelity; neither yet to performe the publicke duties of Gods ſeruice, nor their owne priuate deuotions, (for they dreſſe themſelues by the houre, and pray by minutes) nor finally the duties of their particular callings in their houſes and familes. For whereas the calling of the woman-kind tieth them to keepe the chiefe part of their reſidence at home, imitating the Snaile which carrieth her houſe vpon her backe; contrariwiſe hauing ſpent a great part of the day in dreſſing of themſelues in their rich & coſtly attire, they haue now no power to ſtay at home, but needs they muſt goe abroade to ſhew their brauery, as thinking their coſtly apparell and vain faſhions not worth the wearing, vnleſſe they might be ſeene often, and much admired. And to ſay truth, ſuch are as wel abroad as at home, ſeeing by their habit they haue made themſelues vnfit for any huſwifely dutie; for neither may they come neere thoſe places which require their chiefe reſidence, for ſoiling of their clothes, neither are they able to ſtir themſelues more than Images, for the performing of any buſineſſe. Yea, to that height of pride is the world come, that euery pettie Gentlewoman ſcorneth to be ſeene in any ſuch huſwifely imployments, whereas in ancient times, Princes and Queenes thought it their chiefe glory, as we may ſee in the example of Salomons mother.

Prou. 31.

§. Sect. 23.
That this exceſſe cauſeth many euils both to priuate perſons, and to the Common-wealth.

And as this pride of apparell is a cauſe of much ſinne in reſpect of themſelues that vſe it; ſo alſo in regard of others, whether wee reſpect priuate perſons or the whole Common-wealth. For what greater cauſe I pray you is there of bribing and extortion, fraud and couſonage, oppreſſing of the poore by cruell Land-lords, whileſt vnmeaſurably they increaſe their fines and inhance their rents, yea, of wrongs and injuries, rapine and violence, theft and ſacriledge, than this exceſſe in coſtly apparell, men being reſolued to run any deſperate and wicked courſe, rather than they will want meanes to maintaine this pride. Neither doth this exceſſe in appparell bring leſſe miſchiefe to the Common-mon-wealth than to priuate perſons. For firſt, it ouerthroweth all order of ciuill ſociety, whileſt there is in the outward habit no diſtinction of degrees; but the ſuperiour and inferiour, the Maſter and the Seruant, the Maid and Miſtreſſe, the Nobleman and Gentleman, and the Gentleman and Farmer goe all alike; ſo as by the outward habite they cannot poſſibly bee diſcerned the one from the other. Againe, it is the chiefe cauſe of the decay of good hoſpitality, which is a principal pillar that vpholdeth the Common-wealth, as being the meanes to preſerue loue and neighbourly friendſhip among the richer ſort, and to giue reliefe to the poore, who ſtand in need of helpe. For whereas there was much beſtowed this way by our Anceſtors, whileſt they contented themſelues with meane attire; now they who ſucceed them, although they haue doubled and redoubled their fines and rents, cannot keepe open doores, but are faine to leaue their Countries, and to lurke in corners of great Cities to ſaue charges in houſekeeping, being not able with all their meanes to maintaine halfe their fore-fathers Family, becauſe all which they can rake and ſcrape together, is much too little to maintaine their brauery in apparell. Finally, there is no cauſe equall to this, of impoueriſhing the Common-wealth, of cauſing dearth and ſcarcitie of all things neceſſarie; and conſequently of bringing the whole Communalty to want and miſery. For to maintaine this exceſſe in apparell, Land-lords are faine to racke their rents; and the Tenant being not able with all his labour poorely to maintaine his charge, and pay his rent, is conſtrained to raiſe the prices of all his Country Commodities to a double rate. Artificers and Tradeſmen are likewiſe forced to increaſe the prices of their worke and wares, being not otherwiſe able to maintaine their Families; and none ſmart ſo much as the poorer ſort, who being deſtitute of meanes, haue no entercourſe of dealing with the reſt, nor cannot (like the other) heale their owne wound by biting of their fellow; or being not able hauing done their work to forbeare the ſale, are for the ſuſtaining of their preſent neceſſitie fain to part with their wares at ſuch eaſie rates as the buyers pleaſe to giue them. Finally, nothing doth more impoueriſh the Common-wealth than this exceſſiue brauery, ſeeing our monies and chiefe Commodities, which are of much better vſe, are daily tranſported into other Countries, we hauing in lieu thereof nothing but coſtly Stuffes, Silkes and Veluets, gold and ſiluer laces, and ſuch like toyes and vanities, which within a few moneths wearing come to rags, not worth the taking vp if a man ſhould find them in the ſtreets. In which reſpect this pride of apparell endamageth the Land more than any other waſtfull expences; for howſoeuer much coſt is ſuperfluouſly beſtowed on ſumptuous Buildings, Plate, and exceſſe in diet; yet here the riches of the Common-wealth continue ſtill amongſt vs, and doe but onely change their Maſter, and that commonly a richer for a poorer: whereas this apparell is the cauſe why our chiefe riches and treaſures are vſually tranſported into other Countries, and in the meane time our own commodities are vilified and lightly eſteemed, and the poore people want imployment, or at leaſt a ſufficient reward for their great labour. To ſay nothing of the durable continuance of houſes & plate: whereas theſe gay clothes euery yeere, yea, (in our times) almoſt euery quarter, muſt bee new either in themſelues, or at leaſt in their faſhion, and ſo bring a continuall and heauy charge to all that vſe them. In which regard though Religion and Conſcience ſhould not preuaile with vs, yet (me thinkes) ciuill policie, and loue of our Countrie and common wel-fare, ſhould perſwade vs to loath and lay aſide this pride and brauery.

§. Sect.2
That coſtly vaine app is the fru pride and ſelfe-loue.

And thus it appeareth that this rich and coſtly attire is the cauſe of many euils. Now to the end that wee may plainly ſee, that it hath neere alliance to all kinds of wickedneſſe, wee are further to conſider that it is alſo the effect and fruit of ſinne, namely, of pride and ſelfe-loue, which worke in men a deſire to ſeeme excellent, and in all things to exceed other men; howſoeuer oftentimes they faile of their end, for as much as others being as proud as they, vie and contend with them for this preheminence. Neuertheleſſe though they miſſe the marke, yet doe they continually ayme and ſhoot at it, propounding this as the maine end of all their brauery and exceſſiue coſt, that they may excell & put downe others. And thus ſome adorne themſelues that they may ſeeme more beautifull, ſome that they may bee thought more noble and better deſcended, and ſome that they may be reputed more wealthy, and of better eſtate than the reſt of their Neighbours. And as hereby they labour to aduance themſelus into the higheſt ſeat of mens hearts, and ſeeke to be greatly eſteemed, and much admired of all that looke vpon them; ſo by the ſame meanes they aſpire to haue the precedence before others, the vpper hand & higheſt places in all meetings, not becauſe theſe things haue any worth in themſelues, or merit the leaſt part of their coſt and labour, by any true good which they impart vnto them; but becauſe their pride affecteth them, as ſignes which argue their excellencie, and as meanes to make them more reſpected than other men. So that this gay apparell is (as one truly calleth it) the very enſigne of Pride, and neſt of Luxury; for take away beholders and admirers, prioritie in eſtimation and precedence in place, & there [illegible] glorian &c. Greg.

Homil.
Luc.16.

would need no ſtatute of reſtraint to prohibit this exceſſe.

ect. 25.
e puniſhn which inflicteth n for in ap-ll.

Finally, as this exceſſiue brauerie in apparell is euery way euill in reſpect of ſinne; ſo alſo it is euill in regard of puniſhment: for firſt, thereby the mind is exceedingly moleſted and troubled, not onely in inuenting faſhions, and in ſtudying how the body may be moſt beautified and adorned; but alſo in laying plots and contriuing meanes to maintaine this brauery. For men beſtowing exceſſiue coſt aboue their meanes about this vanity, are forced to runne into debt which is the very bane of a quiet mind, and to borrow moneys vpon vſurie, or to take vp their ſtuffes at worſe rates, which by reaſon of the increaſe of the price, and decreaſe of their ability, they are commonly worſe able to repay at the time appointed, than when they tooke it vpon credit; and therefore they are forced to trie and tire all their friends, to change often their creditours, borrowing of one to pay another, to receiue proud repulſes, euen of thoſe whoſe lending is their liuing; to endure vpon euery default of payment hard words, and bitter menacings; yea oftentimes ſuites, arreſts, impriſonment and many ſuch like miſeries: for as the wiſe man ſaith, thoſe that borrow loſe their liberty, and become thrals and vaſſals to thoſe who lend vnto them. By all which courſes not onely the minde is exceedingly tormented, as being continually vpon the racke of paſſion; reioycing when they haue borrowed, ſorrowing when they are to pay, fretting when they receiue repulſes and diſgraces, and fearing when as through default of payment they haue hazarded their ſtate by morgages and ſtatutes, fines and forfaitures, or their perſons, when as they goe daily in danger to be arreſted and impriſoned; but alſo their ſtate is vtterly ruined: for their ordinarie rents and reuenues not being ſufficient to maintaine this pride and prodigall exceſſe, they are after much ſhufling and tumbling among their creditors, forced to ſell ſome part of their lands to pay their debts; fooliſhly imagining that they may hereafter (it may bee when their charge increaſeth) liue vpon a part, whom the whole before could not ſuffice: of which vaine hope when as they faile, they (being ſtill reſolued to abate nothing of their brauerie) are conſtrained to ſend one part of their reuenew after another, till within a while the whole eſtate is ruined & brought to nothing. When as being pinched with want and miſery, they are glad of cloth and freeſe, who before ſcorned ſilks and veluets, vnleſſe they were cut and mangled, printed, and laced, as beſt fitted their vaine fantaſie; and to become loathſome and vnwelcome gueſts at other mens tables; who, before pride had ſhut them out of their owne houſes, were able to giue liberall intertainement vnto others. To ſay nothing of thoſe who end their dayes in priſon, and lie in holes and dungeons: wanting meate to ſuſtaine their pinching hunger, and homely clouthes to couer their nakedneſſe, the which notwithſtanding is the caſe of many; as the counters and iayles in all places can beare me witnes. And as hereby they diſquiet their minds and ruine their temporall eſtates, ſo do they bring vpon themſelues for their pride, Gods heauie puniſhments, and fearefull malediction; for the Lord by his prophet threatneth, that the high looke of man ſhall bee humbled, and his loftineſſe abaſed, and that the day of his viſitation ſhall fall out moſt heauie to the proud and haughtie, and vpon all that is exalted, that it may be made low. And more particularly he denounceth miſerie, pouerty and deſtruction againſt the daughters of Sion, because being haughtie in their hearts, they exceeded in this wanton and coſtly attire, and threatneth that in the day of his vengeance he will viſit the princes and the kings children, for their vaine faſhions, and ſtrange apparell.

Eſa 2.11.12.

Eſa.3.16.17. &c.

Zeph.1.8.

§. Sect. 26.
That we are much to preferre the ſpirituall ornaments of the ſoule, before corporall.

Seeing therefore this coſtly and gorgeous apparell, is forbidden in the Scriptures, and is the badge and remembrancer of our ſinne and ſhame: ſeeing it misbeſeemeth thoſe who profeſſe Chriſtianitie, to affect or vſe it, much more to dote and ſet their hearts vpon it, becauſe it is in it ſelfe vaine and void of excellencie, and vnto them not only vnprofitable, but euery way euill, both in reſpect of ſinne and puniſhment; let vs labour to weane our hearts and affections from this worthleſſe and wicked vanitie, that we may place and fixe them vpon much more excellent and precious ornaments; ſtriuing and indeauouring to adorne our ſelues with the ſanctifying and ſauing graces of Gods Spirit, which will not only ſerue for garments to hide and couer our ſpirituall nakedneſſe, wherewith being cloathed, we ſhall appeare beautifull and glorious in the ſight of God, and all his holy Saints and Angels; but alſo for armour of proofe, to defend and preſerue vs from all the furious aſſaults of our ſpirituall enemies: and as the Apoſtle exhorteth vs, let vs aboue all things labour to decke our ſelues with humilitie, and with the wedding garment of faith, and a good conſcience; and put on Ieſus Chriſt, that being cloathed with his righteouſneſſe and obedience, wee may bee accepted of God in his beloued; and ſo ſhall we, when wee haue finiſhed our courſe with much joy and peace, haue thoſe long white robes of glorie, and eternall happineſſe beſtowed vpon vs in the day of Gods appearing, and as fit gueſts of the bridall chamber, follow the Lambe whitherſoeuer hee goeth.

Purpurea, aurea, & ſplendide veſtes, his demum conueniunt, quibus nullus vita ſplendor, nullum virtutis decus ſuppetit, Nazianzen. ad Olympiadem.

Pſal.45.13.

Epheſ.6.10.12.

1.Pet.5.5.

Rom.13.14.

Apoc.7.13.14.

Chap. XVI.

Of the vanitie of worldly pleaſures.

§. Sect.1. Worldly pleaſures are of no worth, in compariſon of heauenly ioyes.

AND thus haue I ſhewed the vanity of riches, in the ſpeciall kinds thereof. Now it followeth in the laſt place that wee examine worldly pleaſures, to ſee if we can find any more worth and excellencie in them, than in the other: where vpon the triall wee ſhall find, that howſoeuer they may be preferred before honours and riches, as being the end of them both: for therefore doe men affect honors, becauſe they delight and pleaſe them, and riches becauſe they would enioy them, and rejoyce in their fruition, as alſo becauſe they are much more free from trouble, and full of ſweetneſſe; whereof it is that the wiſe Salomon, who had experience of them all, concludeth, that among worldly things there is nothing better, than that a man ſhould reioyce in his affaires, becauſe that is his portion: and that there is no profit to man, but that he eat and drinke, and delight his ſoule with the profit of his labour: yet neuertheleſſe if we compare them with the ſpirituall joy of a Chriſtian in this life, or the heauenly joyes in the life to come, they are to bee eſteemed vaine and of no value, and to be contemned as being altogether worthleſſe and void of excellencie. For howſoeuer Salomon comparing them with other worldly things, doth giue them the preeminence; yet conſidering them in their owne nature, joyned with our vſe, hee condemneth them as vaine and vnprofitable, in reſpect of any ſound good, or true happineſſe which they bring vnto vs. I ſaid in my heart (ſaith he) goe to now, I will proue thee with ioy, therefore take thou pleaſure in pleaſant things: and behold this alſo is vanitie. I ſaid of laughter, thou art mad: and of ioy, what is that thou doeſt? And afterwards hee ſaith, that he ſought for ioy and contentment, in ſtately buildings, fruitfull vineyards, pleaſant gardens and orchards, ſweete and delightfull muſicke, and in all other worldly pleaſures which his heart could thinke of; but in concluſion found, that there was nothing in them all, but meere vanitie, and which is worſe, vexation of ſpirit.

Eccleſ.3.22. and 2.24.

Eccleſ.2.1,10, 11.

§. Sect.2. That worldly pleaſures are gifts of an inferiour nature, which are beſtowed moſt plentifully vpon the wicked.

But how vaine and void of excellencie theſe worldly pleaſures are, it may hereby appeare, in that if we take them at the beſt, they are but of a meane, inferiour and indifferent nature; whoſe goodneſſe chiefly conſiſteth in their mediocritie and meaſure, rather than in the pleaſures themſelues; which meaſure being exceeded, they become dull and loathſome, as we may ſee in the exceſſe of eating, drinking playing and the reſt. Now how baſe and meane is that good to be eſteemed, whoſe abſtemious vſe is better than full fruition? and whoſe limited meaſure is more commendable, than plentie and abundance? yea how void of excellencie, and neare vnto nought is that to bee accounted, which becommeth euill by increaſing, and when it hath greatneſſe, loſeth goodnes? And hence it is, that the Lord, whoſe moſt wiſe judgement is the true ballance, that diſcerneth ſolid good, from light vanitie, eſteeming theſe worldly pleaſures, as vaine and worthleſſe trifles, careleſſely caſteth them in common among all, and ſuffereth the bad as well as the good, his enemies as well as his friends to communicate in them. Yea ſeeing that the wicked ſet their hearts vpon them, and loue them much better than their Creator; and his owne children, being too carnally licorous, are ready to ſurfet vpon theſe ſweet meates of worldly delights; hauing ſcattered them in common among all, in his juſt judgement to the one, hee leaueth them to their owne libertie, and letteth them gather their fill: and in his rich mercie to the other, he holdeth them backe, when they runne after them with too eager an appetite, and ſuffereth them to feed vpon them but ſparingly, and in ſmall quantitie. And becauſe being tainted with the fall of our firſt parents, as they ſtill retaine ſome goodnes of their creation, ſo there is infuſed into them a malignant qualitie, which filleth thoſe who too much feed vpon them, with the groſſe and dangerous humors of corruption: therefore the Lord the wiſe Phyſition, either reſtraineth his patients, whom hee intendeth to cure, from their vſe, or if yeelding ſo much to their appetite, he ſuffereth them to feed vpon them; hee doth ſo correct and qualifie them with the cordiall preſeruatiues of his grace, that they doe not hurt them; or if the groſſe humors of ſin breed in them by this voluptuous diet, he purgeth them away with the bitter potions of troubles and afflictions. So that the wicked haue a greater portion in theſe worldly delights than Gods deareſt children; yea and much more carnall pleaſure in their fruition, becauſe in the ſecurity of their harts they injoy them, letting the raines looſe to their licentious will, and ſuffering their appetites to take their fill, vntil euen they glut themſelues with theſe delights, & be made drunke with abundance of pleaſure. Wheras the children of God dare only taſte of theſe bewitching cups, or if being allured with the ſweetneſſe, they take a more deepe draught, they feele them bitter in digeſtion, for not only doe they find much trouble in the very fruition of their pleaſures, whileſt they are faine to watch with great care and vigilancie ouer their hearts, that they doe not ſurfet of theſe delights, by exceeding juſt meaſure, leſt in pleaſing themſelues they diſpleaſe God; but finding that they are faultie and ouertaken, they haue their ſweet pleaſures ſowrely ſauced, with preſent ſmiting of the heart; and checkes of conſcience, and afterwards when the delight is vaniſhed, it leaueth behind it bitter ſorrow and repentance. Whereby it appeareth that the children of the world haue in all reſpects a greater ſhare in theſe carnall pleaſures, than the children of God: and therefore our Sauiour Chriſt plainely telleth his Diſciples, that they ſhould weepe and lament, when as wicked worldlings ſhould reioyce, and ſolace themſelues in their delights. The which alſo the experience of all times hath plainly proued: for Dauid was afflicted and perſecuted, when his wicked enemies wallowed in their delights, and through their daintie fare, eaſe and pleaſure, had their eyes ſwollen with fatneſſe; ſo the falſe Prophets fare daintily at Ieſabels table, whileſt poore Elias is fed by the rauens, and glad of any ſcraps: proud Herod delighteth himſelfe with his feaſts and reuels, whileſt holy Iohn Baptiſt lieth in priſon, expecting death; and the rich Glutton goeth gorgeouſly and fareth deliciouſly euery day, whileſt poore Lazarus is couered with ſores in ſtead of clothes; and being famiſhed with hunger cannot haue the crummes of his table, or the leaſt part of his needleſſe ſuperfluities. By all which it appeareth that theſe worldly pleaſures are of little worth, ſeeing the Lord doth ſo plentifully beſtow them vpon thoſe who are moſt vnworthie; and that they haue little goodneſſe in them; becauſe with a ſparing hand hee imparteth them vnto the good, and ſuffereth thoſe who are voide of goodneſſe to bee glutted with them.

But how vaine and worthleſſe theſe worldly pleaſures are, it may further appeare, in that the Lord more freely, and in greater meaſure beſtoweth them vpon the brutiſh creatures, than vpon thoſe who are reaſonable; implying thereby that they are ſo baſe and contemptible, that they are fitter for beaſts than for men. And this may eaſily appeare, if wee conſider that the bruite creatures haue full freedome in the vſe of their delights, hauing no Law to limit them but their owne appetite, and conſequently are priuiledged in their pleaſures from all ſinne, guilt and puniſhment; whereas man is limited by the Law, ſo as he dare not doe what hee liſt, but is pulled backe with feare when his appetite moſt draweth him on, being ſubject to puniſhment when in his delights he exceedeth due meaſure. Or if hee deſperately goe on, hee hath all his mirth marred with the pangs of an accuſing conſcience, and loſeth much of his preſent delight, through feare and expectation of future puniſhment. Againe, they are ſo guided by inſtinct of nature, and haue their appetite ſo fully conformable to its direction, that they take delight in thoſe pleaſures, which are vnto them moſt good and profitable; they ioy in that food which is moſt fit for their nouriſhment, and take pleaſure in no more than will doe them good; they ſatisfie in ſeaſonable time their naturall luſts, and enioy their ſports when it beſt pleaſeth them; they doe not compaſſe their pleaſures by fraud or iniurie offered to thoſe of their own kind, nor enjoy them enuying, or being enuied; their pleaſures are free from ſhame, becauſe they are free from ſinne, and haue not like men their delights damped with lookers on. They haue more ſtrength and health than men to enjoy their pleaſures, and their appetite is no more ſtrong to deſire theſe ſweete delights than their ſtomacke to digeſt them; they haue no crudities in concoction nor ſuperfluitie of ill humours through bad digeſtion; or if they haue, they can eaſily cure themſelues with their knowne phyſicke, and neuer need the apothecaries lothſome drugs. Finally, they ſecurely enjoy their pleaſures without feare of loſing them; and when the object of their delight is taken away, they haue no carking care in ſeeking it, or griefe for loſing it. By all which is appeareth that the brutiſh creatures haue many priuiledges in their pleaſures more than men; and therefore farre be it from vs to ſet our hearts vpon theſe vanities, as though they were of great worth and excellencie, ſeeing the very beaſts herein excell and goe before vs: for (as one ſaith) if this were mans chiefe good to enjoy pleaſures, in vaine was reaſon and wiſedome beſtowed vpon him, ſeeing he might more eaſily and perfectly attaine vnto and enjoy them, if hee had onely the guide of ſenſe and ſenſuall appetite, like the brutiſh creatures.

Cleanthes apud Stobæum Serm. 6.

§. Sect. 4. That worldly pleaſures are of leſſe eſteem becauſe they are apt to be abuſed.

Laſtly, howſoeuer theſe worldly pleaſures be vaine and worthleſſe in themſelues, yet they become more baſe and of leſſe value, by reaſon that we are ready through our corruption to abuſe them vnto ſinne; being apt in the middeſt of our delights to forget God, and neglect his ſeruice, to vſe prophane ieſting, and wanton communication, intemperance, and exceſſe; and finally to remaine in our ſecurity and hardneſſe of heart, putting farre from vs the euill day, and together with it our repentance and conuerſion vnto God. In which regard the wiſe Salomon ſaith, that it is better to goe into the houſe of mourning than into the houſe of feaſting; becauſe this is the end of all men: and the liuing ſhall lay it to his heart: and that anger is better than laughter, becauſe by a ſad looke the heart is made better; and finally, that it is a ſigne of a wiſe heart, when it frequenteth the houſe of mourners, and a badge of folly, when it moueth vs to haunt

Eccleſ. 7. 2. 3. 4.

the houſe of mirth. But of this I ſhall haue occaſion hereafter to ſpeake more largely; as alſo of the vncertaintie, inutility, and hurtfulneſſe of worldly pleaſures, all which proue them moſt vaine and worthleſſe; and therefore it ſhall ſuffice in this place to haue thus briefly touched them.

§. Sect. 5.
That the vanity of worldly pleaſures ſhould make vs to ſeeke ſpirituall and heauenly ioyes.

Seeing therefore theſe carnall delights are ſo vaine and void of excellencie, let vs not like filthy ſwine, take our chiefe joy and contentment to wallow our ſelues in this puddle of worldly pleaſures: neither let vs like the ſerpentine brood creepe groueling vpon our bellies, licking the duſt of theſe earthly and ſenſuall delights; but rather let vs ſeeke while wee continue here, to take our chiefe delight in the Lord, in meditating and ſtudying in his word, in doing his will, in our reconciliation and peace with God, in our ſpirituall joy, grounded vpon our aſſurance and hopefull expectation of our heauenly happineſſe; and finally in all other Gods ſpirituall fauours and graces. For if the heathen man juſtly taxed ſuch of folly as did ſeeke for pleaſure in tauernes, rather than in their owne houſes: and in vnlawfull ſports, rather than in their honeſt labours; how much more are we to be reproued, if we ſeeke for our joy and delight in voluptuous, carnall, and ſinfull pleaſures, which being vaine and momentanie, doe end in bitterneſſe, and eternall woe and miſerie, and not in Gods loue, holy obedience, and all other teſtimonies of his mercy, and pledges of our owne ſaluation? In which (if our hearts were not too too carnall, ſauouring onely earthly things and our negligence exceeding great, in making a holy and comfortable vſe of them) we might take infinite more true delight and comfort in one day, than wee haue done in all worldly pleaſures and vaine ſports in our whole life. An example whereof we haue in the kingly prophet, who had ſo weaned his affections from the world, and inured them to feed on theſe ſpirituall banquets, that feeling their ſweetneſſe he could not in compariſon thereof reliſh at all the chiefe comforts which he found in the world: for ſo he profeſſeth, that he had more joy of heart when the light of Gods countenance ſhined vpon him, than worldly men had, when their wheate and wine did abound; that he deſired Gods Law rather than gold, yea though it were moſt pure in qualitie, and much in quantitie; and that he found more ſweetneſſe in it than in the honie and honie combe; that Gods teſtimonies were his delight and his counſellers; that he had taken Gods teſtimonies as his heritage for euer, becauſe they were the joy of his heart, and that he rejoyced in Gods word, as one that had found a great ſpoile. And therefore when for his ſinne hee had loſt the ſenſe and feeling of this delight and comfort, it was not all the joy and pleaſure of a kingdome that would giue his mind contentment, but as one robbed and depriued of all his pleaſure, he earneſtly deſireth God to reſtore it vnto him: Make mee (ſaith he) to heare ioy and gladnes, that the bones which thou haſt broken may reioyce: reſtore mee to the ioy of thy ſaluation, and ſtabliſh me with thy free Spirit: and elſewhere, he ſaith, that except Gods Law had beene his delight, he ſhould haue periſhed in his affliction. So it is ſaid, that when the people offered willingly towards the building of the Temple, they reioyced with great joy. And thus our Sauiour Chriſt tooke ſuch pleaſure in doing his Fathers will, that it more delighted him, than to eate his meat when he was an hungred; and his beloued Apoſtle profeſſeth, that he taketh no greater joy in any thing, than to ſee the fruits of his Apoſtleſhip, and to heare that his ſonnes, whom he had begotten vnto God, did walke in his truth. Which examples (if we had the like holy hearts & ſanctified affections) wee would follow, weaning our ſelues from delighting in worldly vanities, that we might wholly joy in the Lord, and in theſe ſpirituall pleaſures; which if we would doe, then ſhould we find more comfort in this courſe, than euer the world could afford vnto vs; for the Lord would not giue vs joy with a ſparing hand; but as the Prophet ſpeaketh, wee ſhould bee ſatisfied with the fatneſſe of his houſe, and God would cauſe vs to drinke out of the riuers of his pleaſures: yea then ſhould we be, as he alſo ſaith, eternally bleſſed: for they who delight in the Lord in this life, they ſhall find in his preſence in the life to come, fulneſſe of ioy, and pleaſures at his right hand for euermore.

Zeno apud Stobæum.

Pſal. 4. 7.

Pſal. 19. 10. & 119. 14. 24. 97. 103. 111. 161.

Pſal. 51. 8.

1. Chron. 29. 9.

Iohn. 4. 34.

Ioh. epiſt. 3. 4.

Pſal. 36. 8.
Pſal. 65. 4.

Pſalm. 16. 11.

CHAP. XVII.

That worldly things doe ſatisfie, nor bring contentment to thoſe that haue them.

§. Sect. 1.
That worl
things do bring tha contentm which they promiſe.

HAuing ſhewed the vanitie of the world, and of thoſe worldly things which are moſt admired and affected. It now followeth that according to my order propounded, I alſo proue, that by reaſon of this their vanitie, they doe not ſatisfie, or bring contentment to thoſe who moſt abound with them. For whereas that which is ſubſtantially and truly good, filleth and repleniſheth the place where it is, theſe worldly things which are but vaine ſhadowes and falſe reſemblances of this goodneſſe, being receiued into our hearts, though they much cumber the roome, yet they doe not fill it, but in their greateſt plentie, leaue the greateſt emptineſſe. They promiſe indeed when we purſue them, that they will giue vs contentment when wee enjoy them; and (like the harlot in the Prouerbs) when they allure vs to folly, and to the committing of ſpirituall fornication, by ſetting our hearts on them more than God, that we ſhall take our fill in their loue: and thoſe who are inſnared with theſe inticements, when with all their deſires and painefull endeauours they purſue theſe bewitching vanities, they imagine like the fooliſh builders of Babel, that they ſhall eternize their name, and climbe vp euen into heauen at their owne pleaſure; but vpon triall they find nothing but trouble and confuſion; for theſe goodly caſtles of their hopes which the great Magitian Satan offered vnto them for the wages of their ſinfull ſeruice, as places of ſure refuge in all wants and dangers, vaniſh away when in their greateſt need they flie vnto them for ſuccour and defence: and theſe beautifull ſtrumpets, with whoſe loue hee hath weaned their hearts from God, like ſhadowes vaniſh, when they come to imbrace them, leauing behind them no comfort or contentation. In which reſpect thoſe who dote vpon worldly vanities, and thinke to ſatisfie their minds in their fruition, are like vnto the hungrie man, who dreameth that he eateth, but when he awaketh hee is ſtill emptie; or to the thirſtie man, who dreameth that he drinketh, but ariſing from his ſleepe remaineth ſtill athirſt, as the Prophet ſpeaketh: or as the Wiſe man compareth them, they are like vnto the graue and deſtruction, which are neuer ſatisfied; and to the horſe-leaches, which crie, giue, giue, and are neuer filled. And as thoſe who being vexed with the diſeaſe called the dogs hunger, are alwayes eating, but neuer ſufficed, ſo as it is more eaſie to burſt their ſtomackes, then to ſatisfie their appetite: ſo howſoeuer worldly men are ſtill feeding their hopes and deſires, with theſe earthly vanities, yet their minds remaine as emptie and vnſatisfied, as they were when they firſt taſted of them: whereby the vanitie and worthleſneſſe of theſe worldly things plainly appeareth, ſeeing that is ſaid to bee vaine, which like a ſhadow maketh ſome appearance, but filleth not the place where it is. And as they are vaine, ſo alſo they are worthleſſe and of no value: For as that is not to be eſteemed little, which is enough, becauſe it ſatisfieth: ſo contrariwiſe, that is not to be accounted great, or greatly to be valued, which doth not ſatisfie the inioyer, but leaueth his deſires emptie, and his minde full of nothing but vexation and diſcontentment.

things poſſeſſed doe but inflame the deſire.

Yea ſo farre are theſe worldly things from ſatisfying them that haue them, that they inlarge their deſires, and ſet an edge vpon their appetite, ſeruing rather for ſauces to ſharpen the ſtomacke, than for ſubſtantiall food to allay the hunger, and for baits to allure vs, rather than meate to ſatiſfie vs. For thoſe who moſt deuour them, doe moſt deſire them, like thoſe that are diſeaſed with the dropſie, who being full of water, doe moſt complaine of drought, and crie out of want, when as they are ready to burſt with fulneſſe. And as thoſe who are ſicke of a burning feauer, howſoeuer in the time of their health they were not much troubled with thirſt, being inwardly vexed with the raging burning of their diſeaſe, doe deſire abundance of drinke; and hauing that they longed for, are not ſatisfied, but the more they drinke, the more they thirſt, becauſe it is an vnnaturall heate which cauſeth this vnnaturall appetite: ſo when ſoules are in health, a little doth content them, but when they are diſeaſed with the burning heate of worldly concupiſcence, this vnnaturall appetite is neuer ſatisfied, but the more they haue, the more they deſire, and the neerer they are to abundance and ſuperfluitie, the further they are from contentation. And whereas at firſt they had ſome ſtay of themſelues, and ſome power to moderate their deſires, now hauing giuen the raines to their concupiſcence, it runneth on with headlong violence, and admitteth no reſtraint: like vnto thoſe ſtanding on the top of a ſteepe hill, who howſoeuer they can eaſily rule themſelues whileſt they keepe their place, or if they warily creepe downe by little and ſlow degrees, yet if they begin once to runne, they can make no ſtay, till with great perill they come headlong to the bottome.

§. Sect. 3.
The reaſons why the mind of man cannot be ſatisfied with earthly things.

The reaſons of this vnſatiableneſſe are diuers: firſt and principally it commeth to paſſe through the juſt iudgement of God, who (ſeeing worldlings loue his gifts better than himſelfe that gaue them, and in ſtead of being moued by his bountie to ſerue him with more alacritie, doe commit idolatrie with theſe earthly vanities) doth lay this heauie curſe vpon them, that they ſhall not be able to ſatisfie them or giue contentment, yea rather the more they ſhall feed vpon them, the more their hunger ſhall bee increaſed. And this is that iudgement and malediction which the Lord denounceth againſt the Iſraelites, for neglecting the duties of his ſeruice, that they ſhould eate and not haue enough; the which judgement was accordingly inflicted on them, as the Prophet Haggai telleth them: Yee haue ſowen (ſaith he) much, and bring in little; yee eate, but yee haue not enough; yee drinke, but yee are not filled; yee cloath yee, but you be not warme; and he that earneth wages, putteth the wages into a broken bag. Another reaſon may Hoſea.4.10.

Micha.6.14.

Haggai.1.6.

may be, that our appetite and the deſires of our hearts being ſpirituall, are in compariſon of theſe earthly things almoſt infinit, and of ſuch exceeding large extent, that the whole world cannot fill & ſatisfie them, there being no end or limits ſet vnto them, or at leaſt ſuch as the earth and earthly things cannot afford vnto vs. The which vnſatiableneſſe of the heart by the world (one wittily ſaith) is implied and ſignified by their diuers figures, for the world is round, and the heart three cornered; and a triangle cannot be filled with a circle. It is therefore the Lord alone that can ſatisfie this inſatiable heart of man; for being created of a ſpirituall ſubſtance, and according to Gods image, and that to this end, that it might be a fit temple for his holy ſpirit, there is nothing leſſe than God can fill and ſatisfie it. And therefore that ſoule which ſeeketh full contentment in any thing ſauing God, is like thoſe vncleane ſpirits which ſeeke for reſt but find none: yea it is not only fruſtrate of all fruite of its labour, but findeth that which it ſeeketh not; that is, much diſquietneſſe and vexation of ſpirit. Theſe worldly vanities being vnto them like wind to the body which puffeth vp, but nouriſheth not; tormenteth, but not ſatisfieth. Whereas on the other ſide, hee in whoſe heart God lodgeth and dwelleth by his holy ſpirit, is throughly filled, and fully ſatisfied; and though it ſhould enlarge it deſires beyond the bounds of the higheſt heauen, yet ſhould no part thereof bee emptie and vnrepleniſhed; for as the Pſalmiſt telleth vs, if we delight in the Lord, he will giue vs our hearts deſire; and rather than it ſhould not bee ſatisfied he will giue vs himſelfe, whom who ſo enjoyeth can want nothing. And therefore we ſhould not ſet our hearts vpon theſe worldly things which cannot ſatisfie vs, but vpon the Lord, whoſe fruition bringeth full contentment. And becauſe (as one ſaith) no man poſſeſſeth God, but hee who is firſt poſſeſſed of him, let vs become a poſſeſſion vnto God, that he may become a poſſeſſion vnto vs; and if wee haue him wee ſhall haue enough: for what can ſuffice him whom the infinite Creator cannot ſatisfie? Another reaſon of this vnſatiableneſſe of mans minde with theſe worldly vanities, may bee their difference in nature, in that it is heauenly and ſpirituall, and theſe earthly and corporall, in regard whereof there can bee no proportion betweene them; and therefore as it is impoſſible to repleniſh a corporall emptineſſe with a ſpirituall ſubſtance, as a cheſt with vertues, or the ſtomacke with wiſedome; ſo is it no more poſſible to fill a ſpirituall emptineſſe with a bodily ſubſtance, as the ſoule and minde of man with earthly treaſures, or worldly preferments. And therefore when we feed our hungry ſoules with this vnnaturall food, it doth not ſatisfie our appetite, but rather encreaſeth our hunger. Whereas if wee feed them with ſpirituall food which is of like ſubſtance vnto themſelues, they will thereby bee nouriſhed; and if we hunger after the bread of life, and deſire to repleniſh our emptie ſoules with Chriſts righteouſnes, we are by him pronounced bleſſed, becauſe we ſhall bee throughly ſatisfied. Finally, our appetites are vnſatiable, not through any neceſſity which wee haue of earthly abundance, but through vnlimited and vnnaturall greedineſſe; for in reſpect of vſe, nature is content with a little, as well as with much; but when the ſoule being ſicke of worldly concupiſcence, hath once paſſed the limits of nature, whereby theſe things are meaſured vnto vs, according to neceſſity and profit, the deſires thereof become endleſſe and infinite, and are by acceſſe of theſe vanities rather encreaſed than diminiſhed. For being applyed to the minde to cure it of this vnſatiable greedineſſe, like weake and ouer gentle medicines, they onely ſtirre the humours of our corrupt concupiſcence, whereby we become more dangerouſly ſicke than wee were before, but doe not all purge and free vs from them.

Zanch. in Epheſ.5.

Capacem Dei quicquid Deo minus eſt non implebit. Bernard, declam. in Mat. 19.

Matth.12.

Eccleſ.2.11.

Pſal 37.4.

Nimis auarus eſt cui Deus non ſufficit. Bernard in Cœna Domini ſerm.7.

Sed quoniam nemo Deum poſſidet, niſi qui poſſidetur ab eo, ſimus nos ipſi ſoli Dei poſſeſſio, & efficietur nobis poſſeſſio Deus, &c. Auguſt. de ſalutar. documen. cap.9.

Mat.5.6.

Neceſſe eſt i immenſum cat cupidita quæ natur modum tr
ly t. Illa e habet finem un jam ex libidine ſine termin ſunt. Senec. epiſt.39.

§. Sect.
That it i folly to for conte earthly dance.

Let vs not therefore fooliſhly imagine that our minds can bee ſatisfied and filled with theſe worldly vanities, nor greedily affect and ſeeke after a greater meaſure, when as we are not ſufficed with a leſſe, ſuppoſing that the acceſſe of quantitie may bring contentment; ſeeing the hunger which wee feele in our hearts proceedeth not from the want of earthly abundance; but becauſe it is vnnaturall nouriſhment for the mind of man, ſo that it can no more ſatisfie our ſoules hunger, than it can ſatisfie our bodies to feede vpon the wind. And therefore as his folly were ridiculous, who being an hungred ſhould ſeeke to ſatisfie his appetite by gaping after the wind; and finding that a leſſer gale would not ſuffice, ſhould run to the wind-mill hill to receiue a greater: ſo no leſſe fooliſh are thoſe worldly men, who finding their hearts emptie, and tormented with the hunger of greedy concupiſcence, doe thinke to ſtay their appetite by feeding vpon this wind of worldly vanities; and failing of their expectation in a leſſer quantitie, thinke to attaine vnto their hope, when they haue heaped vp to themſelues a greater; for the defect is not in the matter, but in the nature and qualitie of the nouriſhment, there being no ſimilitude or proportion betweene a ſpirituall ſoule, and corporall ſubſtances. They doe indeede for the preſent ſeeme to ſatisfie and aſſwage the hunger, but afterwards it is enraged with greater greedines: euen as cold drinke doth giue ſome preſent cooling and refreſhing ing to him who is in a fit of a burning Feuer, but ſoone after the heat returning with greater violence bringeth with it more intolerable thirſt. And as the fire at the firſt caſting on of wood or oile, hath for the inſtant the heat thereof ſomewhat abated, but preſently after hauing caught hold of the matter, it waxeth much more hote than it was before: ſo worldly men purſuing theſe earthly vanities, after they haue attained vnto their hopes, haue for the inſtant ſome contentment; but within a while the rage of their concupiſcence reuiueth and increaſeth, tormenting their ſoules with more vnquenchable thirſtineſſe than that which they felt before they taſted them. If therefore we would haue ſuch ſufficiency of theſe worldly things as may bring contentment, wee muſt attaine vnto it by moderating our affections, rather than by multiplying theſe vanities; if wee would haue this aguiſh thirſt ſlaked and abated, it muſt not be by larger drinking of theſe vnſatisfying drinkes, which will but increaſe our appetite; but by purging away the fretting choler of worldly concupiſcence, which is the true cauſe of our vnſatiablenes. And if we would haue this deuouring fire of our greedie deſires quenched, let vs not fooliſhly heape vpon it more of that matter whereby it is nouriſhed; but rather caſt on it the water of careleſſe contempt, whereby this flaming heate will bee ſoone extinguiſhed. For much more eaſily ſhall wee finde contentment, and haue our ſoules ſatisfied, by diminiſhing our deſires, and cutting off our greedie concupiſcence, than by nouriſhing them with outward ſupplies, ſeeing they are not naturall affections, for then they would delight in neceſſaries and not in ſuperfluities, but monſtrous births, aberrations, and corruptions of nature, which were better ſtrangled than nouriſhed, inſatiable diſeaſes and dropſies of the ſoule, which torment with fulneſſe, and are ſooneſt cured by longeſt abſtinence.

But this inſufficiencie in worldly vanities to ſatisfie the minde and giue contentment, will more clearly appeare, if we would make vſe of our owne experience, and ſet them before vs as examples who haue moſt abounded with them. For how many doe we daily ſee aduanced to the higheſt honours, abounding with riches, and wallowing themſelues in all worldly delights, who are as vnſatisfied and farre from contentment, as thoſe who moſt want them? How many ſhall wee obſerue conſuming their dayes in melancholick paſſions, and humorous diſcontent, whom the world hath enriched with his beſt means to make them happy? how many are there who are heauy, ſorrowfull, and euer complayning; who if they were asked cannot tell what they want, as though they were preſſed downe with the waight of their own felicity, and thought themſelues vnhappy, becauſe they haue drunke ſo deeply of the Worlds happineſſe? And this commeth to paſſe becauſe this Sun-ſhine of worldly proſperity doth mollifie & effeminate the mind, making it fooliſhly wanton, and through wantonneſſe wayward and peeuiſh; and through this froward waywardneſſe, hardly pleaſed with all the worlds beſt fauours, and diſcontented when the leaſt occurrent croſſeth their will, or but the leaſt appearance of euill looketh towards them. Herein like vnto fooliſh children, who being brought vp vnder ſeuerer diſcipline, and continually reſtrained of their will, doe patiently endure it, though they are denied neceſſaries, and are much affected and ouer-joyed when they haue a little liberty, or ſome ſmall fauour vouchſafed them from their Gouernours; whereas if they be cockered by their Parents, and haue in all things their wils and vaine humours ſatisfied, they grow in a while ſo wanton, and through wantonneſſe ſo wayward, that nothing will pleaſe them, or keepe them from crying & complayning; but are much more froward in their fulneſſe, & diſcontented in the fruition of all that they can deſire; than the other in their greateſt wants, and when their wils and appetites are moſt croſſed.

§. Sect. 6. That honours bring no contentment to thoſe that haue them.

And thus haue I generally ſhewed the inſufficiencie of worldly vanities, for the bringing of contentment to thoſe that haue them. Let vs now take a more ſpeciall view of it in honours, riches, and bewitching pleaſures. And firſt for honour, how ſhould it ſatisfie and giue contentment, ſeeing it is but a name, title, or conceited ſhadow, which hath its ſubſiſtence in the vngrounded opinions and vaine breath of the vnconſtant multitude, and like a ſmoake is carried about with the winde of mouthes? And therefore thoſe that reſt vpon it for the ſufficing of their ambitious and hungry appetites, haue that ſlender pittance of the falſe Paſtors, through Gods juſt judgement allotted vnto them, in ſtead of meat feeding vpon the aire; and with Ephraim they gape after the wind which puffeth them vp with vain-glorious pride, but affordeth vnto them no ſubſtantiall nouriſhment: and therefore vnto ſuch the ſaying of the Prophet Haggai may fitly be applied, yee haue eaten and are not ſatisfied. In which reſpect this breath of honour is not vnfitly compared to the ſmell and odour of the Kitchin, which doth not nouriſh, or ſo much ſatisfie with the ſent, as it doth ſharpen the appetite by the ſight. By reaſon whereof ambitious men are inſatiable in deſiring honours (becauſe they are vaine and doe not ſatisfie) and being not filled with that which they affect, they can put no end vnto their appetite; ſtill they are climing the Ladder of preferment, and aſpire to ſeate them-

Ier. 22.22.

Hoſea 12.1.

Haggai 1.6.

themſelues in the throne of higheſt honour; but neuer doe they finde contentment in the things they ſo much deſire; for either they catch a fall whileſt their haſt in climing exceedeth their prouidence and herd; or being come to their deſired height, they are not ſo much ſatisfied with this ſuperlatiue and tranſcendent glory, as diſcontented and diſpleaſed, becauſe there is no higher place vnto which their ambition may aſpire. It may be when they firſt gaue way to theſe proud deſires, they propounded vnto themſelues ſome low or meane pitch, which if they could attaine vnto, their deceitfull heart promiſed them to reſt contented; but as the rich Glutton craued but a drop of water to coole his tongue, when as a whole Riuer would not haue quenched his tormenting heate: ſo at firſt they deſire but ſmall preferment, and (as it were) to ſet vp but one foot vpon this Ladder, but finding herein little eaſe, they aſpire higher and higher; till at laſt they haue aſcended ſo high, that they hold it vnſafe to turne themſelues, or ſtand ſtill vpon this tottering Ladder, and thinke there is no ſecuritie till they be come to the top, and haue ſeated themſelues in the Royall Throne. Manifold examples hereof we haue in the Book of God, and in the Hiſtories of all ages. It was not ſufficient for Corah and his companions, to haue chiefe places in the Congregation, ſo long as Moſes and Aaron were aboue them. Abimelech could not indure to gouerne with his Brethren, but he muſt be ſole Monarch, though to accompliſh his deſire, he muſt commit them all to the ſlaughter. It was nothing to Abſalon to bee the Kings Sonne, in poſſibilitie after his fathers deceaſe to weld the Scepter, vnleſſe preſently he may clime vp into the Throne, though hee could no otherwiſe aſcend, vnleſſe he would make his deare fathers dead body his firſt ſtep. Among the Heathens it is ſaid of Cæſar, that he could indure no ſuperiour, and of Pompey, that hee could not abide an equall; and of great Alexander it is recorded, that the world could not ſatisfie his ambition, and therefore his great Soueraignty and Monarchy could not bring vnto him ſo much joy and contentment, as to reſtraine teares, becauſe there were no more worlds to conquer, or as ſome haue it, becauſe hearing there were many, he had not yet conquered one. And of the moſt of the great Emperours we ſee it manifeſt, that earthly glory could not ſatisfie them, vnleſſe they alſo attained vnto diuine honours, and were reputed among the Gods. Neither is it any maruell if theſe men could not get out of this intricate and endleſſe labyrinth of pride, hauing no better guide than blind nature to lead them; ſeeing the Apoſtles, who had heard ſo many holy and powerfull Sermons of Humilitie, preached by our Sauiour Chriſt, and confirmed vnto them by his gracious example, were yet notwithſtanding ſo ambitiouſly affected, that they thought it not preferment enough to haue chiefe places in his glorious Kingdome, but contended which among them ſhould haue priority and chiefe preeminence: whereas the moſt meane aduancement in that heauenly happineſſe, is a much more glorious preferment, than to be a perpetuall Monarch of the whole World. By all which it appeareth, that after wee haue once drunke of this poyſon of ambition, our inward burning heate maketh our thirſt ſo vnquenchable, that wee ſhall ſooner burſt than reſt ſatisfied. And therefore the Prophet fitly compareth this thirſting after worldly honours, to the thirſt of Drunkards; for as their firſt Cups ſerue to quench their thirſt and ſatisfie nature, but thoſe which follow, inwardly inflaming them, doe renue and increaſe their appetite, till at laſt it grow inſatiable: ſo whereas theſe men might haue reſted ſatisfied and contented, when their honours and preferments were moderate, now hauing by addition of more matter inflamed their hearts with the fire of ambition, nothing will ſuffice, but their deſires (as the ſame Prophet ſpeaketh) being inlarged like the gulfe of Hell, and the vnſatiable jawes of death, can no more be ſatisfied than either of them; neither doe they euer thinke whence they aſcended, but onely whither they are purpoſed to clime; nor euer marke how many they haue out-runne in this race of honour, but only obſerue how many are ſtill before them.

So likewiſe there is no ſatietie or content in riches, if once men begin to ſet their hearts vpon them, for though the couetous man hath in euery ones judgement far too much, yet in his owne he hath not enough; though in others conceit he ſeemeth to abound, yet to himſelfe he ſeemeth to want. Well may he fill his cheſts, but not his mind; and ſooner may he by oppreſſion make thouſands poor, than make his owne minde rich with content; for couetouſneſſe may bring riches, but not reſt, and empty others, but not fill it ſelfe, like Pharaohs leane kine which deuoured the fat ones, and yet themſelues were in neuer the better liking. Yea, though it were poſſible for couetous men to emptie the Weſterne parts of Gold and Siluer, and the Eaſt of Pearles, yet all this would not repleniſh their hearts emptineſſe: neither can riches euer bring content to the mind, vnleſſe it bring it firſt to them; but the more mans dropſie heart drinketh of this golden ſtream, the more it is inflamed with vnſatiable thirſt. So Salomon telleth vs that there is no end of couetouſneſſe: for (as he ſaith) he who is infected therewith, coueteth euermore greedily; ſo elſewhere, he that loueth ſiluer ſhall not be ſatisfied with ſiluer, and he that loueth riches ſhall ſhall be without the fruit thereof. An example hereof we haue in Achab, who was not ſatisfied with the riches of a Kingdome, but greedily coueteth Naboths Vineyard, taking no joy in all that hee had, becauſe his poore Neighbour had that which pleaſed him: and in the rich man in the Goſpel, who had filled all his barnes, but not his heart, and therefore he reſolueth to inlarge them, that they might bee ſomewhat proportionable to his minde; a thing fooliſh, becauſe impoſſible; for though they had beene neuer ſo large and full, yet the capacitie of the heart being farre greater, he would ſtill haue found it emptie and vnſatisfied.

It is true indeed, that theſe worldly riches promiſe contentment, and the heart of the couetous man deceiuing him, maketh him beleeue, that when he hath filled ſuch a bag, & raiſed his ſtate to ſuch a proportion, when he is become Maſter of ſuch an houſe, and hath purchaſed ſuch Lands or Lordſhips, it will then reſt ſatisfied and contented; whereas hauing attained vnto his deſires, his greedie appetite groweth faſter vpon him than his wealth; and all that he addeth to his eſtate is but fuell to increaſe the flame and fury of his concupiſcence; for when he hath what he would, he hath not that he now willeth; but the obtaining of one wiſh is the beginning of another; and when he hath heaped all he can together, it putteth not an end to his concupiſcence, but only ſerueth as a degree or ſtep, whereby it may aſcend higher. And this commeth to paſſe partly becauſe riches are vaine, and therefore fill not; partly becauſe they are not the naturall food of the ſoule, and therefore cannot ſatisfie it; and partly in that the deſire and appetite of mans heart, hauing paſſed the naturall bounds of neceſſitie and vſe, becommeth ſo vnſatiable that nothing may ſuffice it: for that which is abundant vnto nature, is too little for luxuriouſneſſe & greedie auarice. And from this vnſatiable deſire of ſtill hauing more couetouſnes with the Grecians hath it name; for it is called [illegible], becauſe it is the nature of couetouſneſſe, to make men when they haue that they deſired, ſtill to deſire more; and when they haue that alſo, yet to remaine ſtill vnſatisfied. And though they haue more than they can tell how to vſe, yet their care and labour in hunting after more is no whit abated; like vnto an hungry ſtomacke whoſe appetite exceeding the faculty of concoction, doth deſire more than it can digeſt. In which reſpect the couetous man is fitly compared to the Sea-Cormorants, which deuoure all they can come by; and yet remaine vnſatisfied; ſauing that their vnſatiableneſſe tendeth to the profit of Mankind, whereas the greedineſſe of couetous Miſers, is to humane ſocietie hurtfull and pernicious; or elſe to the greedie Dogge, who hauing one bit after another caſt vnto him by his Maſter, ſwalloweth them downe, and as though he had none giuen him, ſtill looketh in his Maſters face for more: wherein to ſay truth they are much worſe; for whereas the Dogge caſteth his eyes vpon his benefactour, they neuer looke vp towards the author of their good, but like the vnthankfull Hogge their eyes and hearts are inclined towards the earth, and neuer by thankeſgiuing vnto God acknowledge him the fountaine of theſe benefits: or as themſelues doe compare themſelues, they are like vnto the graue, ſwallowing downe all whole, like thoſe that goe downe into the pit: or as Salomon compareth them, they are like vnto Hell, which is neuer ſatisfied. And to this (as one ſaith) the Gentiles alluded, calling Pluto the Prince of Hell, and the couetous rich man by the ſame name, not only to note that they are ſubjects of that Kingdome, but alſo that the couetous man is an vnſatiable gulph of riches, who the more he ſwalloweth and deuoureth, the more he burneth in concupiſcence. In vain therfore do couetous men toile themſelues, whileſt they ſeeke to ſatisfie their hungrie appetite by multiplying their wealth; for as the Ivie groweth with the Oake; ſo doth couetouſneſſe with riches; and as their wealth increaſeth, ſo likewiſe doe their deſires that haue it. Wherein couetouſneſſe reſembleth a Riuer which hath but a ſmall beginning, and a weake courſe at the head & fountaine from which it firſt ſpringeth; but receiuing by the way many Brooks which fall into its ſtreame, groweth ſtrong and vnreſiſtable; for ſo when a man firſt letteth couetouſneſſe into his heart, it is but weake and eaſily checked, but when wealth and riches come vpon him, the ſtreame of his concupiſcence groweth ſo violent, that neither reaſon, nor religion can withſtand it.

Prou.1.12.

Prou.30.15. Ditem dicunt Gentiles inferorum præſulem, arbitrum mortis. Ditem appellant & diuitem, &c. Ambroſ.lib.de Nabuth.cap.6

§.Sect.9. That couetous men, the more they abound, the more they want.

By which it plainly appeareth, that the more couetous men abound with wealth, the more their pouerty is encreaſed; for ſeeing the minde is the true meaſure of riches, and hee onely is to be accounted rich who hath ſuch ſufficiencie and plentie as doth giue contentment; and ſeeing (as I haue ſhewed) thoſe who ſet their hearts vpon riches, haue by their increaſe their appetite alſo increaſed, and the more they abound in wealth, the leſſe are their minds filled and ſufficed; therefore it muſt needs follow, that as they increaſe in externall riches, ſo alſo their internall pouerty is increaſed. For the more they haue, the more they deſire; the more they deſire, the greater is their want; and the more they want, the poorer they are; and conſequently the more they haue, the more their pouerty is increaſed. What they haue not, that they deſire; what they deſire, of that (at leaſt in owne judgement) they ſtand in need; how great therefore is the want of theſe rich Beggers, which need all the wealth that is in the World, ſauing that ſmall pittance which they hold in their owne poſſeſſion? So that (as one ſaith) this vice of couetouſneſſe hath in it ſuch contrarieties, that it is like vnto a Riddle; ſeeing he that hath moſt, hath alſo the greateſt want; for as they increaſe in wealth, they increaſe in their wiſhes and deſires, and great deſires argue great wants. For example, whileſt a man is poore he wiſheth onely for hundreds, promiſing vnto himſelfe contentment if he could obtaine his deſires; hauing attained hundreds, hee now wiſheth for thouſands, and comming to thouſands he affecteth Millions, and thinketh it now a kind of pouerty to haue his riches and treaſures numerable. So that hee now ſcorneth his old deſires, and contemneth hundreds if they be offered vnto him as a prey; not for that he is ſatisfied and needeth no more, but becauſe with his wealth his wiſhes, and with his wiſhes his wants are increaſed; and therfore he deſpiſeth theſe ſmall cups, becauſe hee thirſteth after great Riuers, and no leſſe than whole ſtreames of riches can ſo much as promiſe him contentment. Now if it be the onely true riches, not to haue much, but to ſtand in need of nothing, & to abound in all things which a man deſireth; then how great is their pouertie, who being vnſatisfied, want ſo much? how farre are they from true riches which are ſo ſtraitned in their mindes, and haue their hearts like a bottomleſſe gulfe full of nothing but want and penury?

Toto mundo eget, cuius non capit mundus cupiditates, Ambroſ. de Naburh. cap. 12. Chryſoſt. in Rom. 8. Ser. 13

Diues eſt non qui multum habet, ſed qui nullo eget. Quid eſt itaque diuitem eſſe, niſi abundare, &c. Ambroſ. ad Simplicianum Epiſt. lib. 3. Epiſt. 10.

§. Sect. 10.
That couetous rich men are more in want than the poore.

In which reſpect the condition of couetous rich men is much more miſerable than theirs who are of the poorer ſort, ſeeing their wants being meaſured according to their deſires, are much greater; for theſe need but little, becauſe they deſire not much; whereas they ſtand in need of abundance, becauſe it is no little will giue them contentment. Now as his eſtate is very miſerable who is tormented with an inſatiable thirſt, though he haue his Cellers full of drinke; and hee much better in his condition, who as he hath little ſtore, ſo alſo hee hath little thirſt; ſo much more miſerable hee whoſe minde is inſatiable through this dropſie of couetouſneſſe, though hee haue abundance; than ſuch an one as hauing little, is notwithſtanding contented with that hee hath. Take for example, Achab and Naboth, the one hauing a Kingdome, the other ſome ſmall poſſeſſions. But yet hee who had abundance and the reuenues of a Kingdome, is not ſatisfied with all hee poſſeſſeth, but greedily coueteth the poore mans Vineyard: on the other ſide Naboth hath but little, yet that little ſo contenteth him, that he deſireth none of the Kings abundance. Now which of theſe was truly rich, hee that ſeemed to want, becauſe his poore Neighbour had a Vineyard which hee thought worth his deſiring; or the other that is ſatisfied with his owne poſſeſſions? whether of the two was poorer, he who wanted no more than he enjoyed, but reſted content with his owne; or hee who greedily coueted that which belonged to another? Surely this man was much more poorer in his affection, than the other in his eſtate and poſſeſſion. Whereby it appeareth that the inſatiable rich man, is much worſe than thoſe that are of poore eſtate; yea, ſurely herein the very beaſts are to be preferred before him; for they when hunger inciteth them hunt after their prey, but when their ſtomacke is ſufficiently filled, their appetite alſo reſteth ſatisfied, deſiring no more till againe hunger prouoketh them. But (as we ſay) the couetous mans eye is far worſe than his belly; for when hee hath enough and too much in his poſſeſſion hee greedily hunteth after more, and is neuer ſatisfied ſo long as hee ſeeth any thing which is to be deſired. To this purpoſe one of the Ancients ſpeaketh fitly. Couetouſneſſe (ſaith he) the more it taketh from others and raketh together, the more poore it is in it owne opinion; it enuieth all men, and is vile to it ſelfe; it is poore, in abundance of riches; and needie in affection, when it is rich in poſſeſſion. It hath no meane in raking, becauſe it hath no meaſure of deſiring. It ſo inflameth the mind, and feedeth its ſoule with its fire, that it ſeemeth onely in this to differ from luſt, that this luſteth after beautifull perſons, and that the heauy earth. It troubleth the Elements ploweth vp the Sea, diggeth the earth, and with variety of wiſhes wearieth the Heauens, being thankfull neither for faire weather nor for foule; it repiningly extenuateth the yeerely profits, and findeth fault with the fruits of the earth.

Ambroſ lib. de Nabuth. cap.

Auaritia quo plura ... conuge ... ſe eſt ... omnibus inuida, ſibi vilis, &c. Ambroſ. de Cain & Abel. lib. cap. 4.

§. Sect. 11.
That it is vaine to ſe... for contentment in ...

Seeing therefore couetouſneſſe is vnſatiable, let vs not ſeeke for ſufficiencie and contentment in earthly abundance, imagining that the more we increaſe in riches, the ſooner we ſhall reſt ſatisfied: for when our deſires exceed meaſure, we cannot attaine vnto contentment by adding to our wealth, but by detracting from our concupiſcence; not by increaſing our riches, and filling our cheſts with ſiluer and gold, but by diminiſhing our greedy appetite, and emptying our hearts of vnſatiable couetouſneſſe. For as well may a man fill a Sieue with water, or a bottomleſſe Purſe with money, as a couetous heart with ſufficiencie of riches. And therefore as his folly were ridiculous, who ſhould endeauour to fill a leaking or bottomleſſe veſſell in a Ditch or Pond, and not being able to doe it, ſhould carry it to a full Riuer, or the maine Sea; becauſe the reaſon why it cannot be filled, is not in the quantity of the water, but in the quality of the veſſell, for if he would ſtop the leakes, he might as eaſily fill it in a ſtanding poole, as in the great Ocean: ſo the folly of couetous worldlings is no leſſe abſurd, who when they cannot ſatisfie their greedy hearts with competent ſtore of riches, couet after more, thinking to giue them contentment when they can wallow in the abundance of their wealth: but all in vaine; for the fault is not in the too little quantity of their riches, but in the vnſatiable greedineſſe of their minds, which can neuer be ſatisfied, And therefore they ſhould not ſeeke contentment by filling their empty hearts in an Ocean of wealth, but rather by ſtopping thoſe leakes which are made by couetouſneſſe, and ſo would ſmall ſtore of wealth better ſatisfie them, than the great reuenues of a rich Kingdome. For he is not contented who hath enough, but hee hath enough who is contented, ſeeing when hee cannot fit his ſtate to his minde, hee fitteth his mind to his eſtate, & ſo is ſatisfied with a little, becauſe he deſireth not much. Now as he is truly rich which hath as much as he wanteth or deſireth; ſo he only is to be eſteemed poor which wanteth that which he hath not; for if not hauing wealth he neither wanteth nor deſireth it, he is rich in his mind, though he be poore in poſſeſſions: neither is he to be eſteemed poor, whoſe mind agreeth with his ſtate, but he who though he haue abundance is not ſatisfied: ſeeing pouerty conſiſteth rather in the penury of the mind, than in the abſence of riches, and not in hauing little, but in not hauing that which is enough.

Quis diues? qui il cupiat: quis auper? auarus.
Auſonius. lle pauper eſt qui eget eo quod non habet: nam qui & quo habens, habere non cupit, diues eſt, Gregor. in Ezech.lib.2.
Homil.18.
Non diuiti
... diues eris:
... ſunt di-
... non diſſide-
... Senec
... pauper
... qui nihil poſ-
... ſed qui
... concupiſ-
... Chryſoſt.
de Lazaro

§.Sect.12.
... rea-
... riches
...
... be... they are
... d.

Another reaſon why the heart is not ſatisfied with theſe worldly things, is, becauſe they who are poſſeſſed of them, cannot find in their hearts to vſe them; and though they haue abundance of earthly treaſures, yet are they ſo charmed with theſe Idols, vpon which they haue ſet their hearts, that they dare not touch them, or any way conuert them to their benefit: reſembling herein the Indian Ants, which (as it is ſaid of them) taking great paines in gathering Gold, doe neuer vſe it, but only hide it, ſo that others can haue no benefit by it: or him who being ſpent with ſicknes, hath his Table furniſhed with all manner of dainties, but wanteth a ſtomacke to feed vpon them: wherein greedie auarice hath one folly peculiar vnto it ſelfe, aboue all other kinds of concupiſcence. For whereas other vicious affections mooue men to long after their objects for fruition, as the Glutton after dainty meats, that hee may feede vpon them: the Drunkard after pleaſant Wines, that hee may drinke them; the ambitious man after preferments, that he may enjoy them; neither doth loue in any other thing make a man abſtaine from the vſe and fruition of the thing loued; only couetouſneſſe maketh a man fall into this folly, letting his money lie by him without vſe of it (vnleſſe it be ſuch a vſe as wherby it ſelfe is increaſed) and abſtaineth to feed on theſe dainty meates, which aboue all other his ſoule loueth, becauſe hee hath an ouer great appetite vnto them; as if a man would not therefore put on his clothes, becauſe hee is cold; or drinke, becauſe he is athirſt: whereof it commeth to paſſe that he hath no more contentment by his wealth, nor vſe of any thing which hee poſſeſſeth for the ſatisfying of his greedy appetite, than a thirſtie man hath of the drinke, which ſtill remayneth vndrawne in the veſſell, for the quenching of his thirſt.

Plutarch. de
... diuit.

§. Sect.13.
That it is not the bare poſſeſſion of riches that maketh rich;
Clem. Alexan. Pædagog.lib.3 cap.6.
Eſay 32.5.

Now howſoeuer ſuch men may haue all manner of abundance, yet it cannot at all ſatisfie them, and therefore though they haue full bags and rich cheſts, yet ſeeing they haue empty ſoules and poore hearts, they are falſly tearmed rich; for as the Prophet ſpeaketh, A Niggard ſhall no more be called liberall, nor the Churle rich; ſeeing true riches conſiſteth not in the poſſeſſion of much, vnles alſo fruition bee joyned with it, which being wanting, their leather bags, and iron-barred Cheſts might bee ſaid to bee rich as well as they, if only cuſtody could intitle to the name of rich. Neither can theſe earthly treaſures, Gold, Siluer, and ſuch like, be truly called riches; for (as one ſaith) wee vnjuſtly call them riches, which doe not take away pouerty: but euery one that doteth on theſe things, is by ſo much increaſed in the pouerty of concupiſcence, by how much theſe treaſures which hee ſo much affecteth are increaſed: and how can they bee truely called riches, whoſe increaſe increaſeth their pouertie that poſſeſſe them? And the more they abound, the more heate of concupiſcence they bring to their louers, and the leſſe ſatietie? Howſoeuer therefore theſe Miſers abound with ſtore of true Gold and Siluer, yet they are but falſe riches; ſeeing they only ſtretch and inlarge the jawes of greedie auarice, but doe not fill or ſatisfie them, and rather inflame than quench the heate of couetouſneſſe. Well therefore was the ſpeech of the Heathen man fitted to the rich Miſer: All (ſaith he) account thee rich, but I affirme that thou art very poore, becauſe not the poſſeſſion, but the vſe juſtly intitleth riches. If thou art partaker of thy wealth, it doth by the vſe become thine own; but if thou reſerue thy riches for thine heires, preſently from that time they are made other mens. To which purpoſe another ſaith, Thou haſt indeed the riches of a rich man, but the minde of a Begger; thou art rich to thine heires, and poore to thy ſelfe.

Iniuſtum eſt eas putare diuitias quæ non auferant egeſtatem, Aug. in Hag. 2.Homil.30. Tom.10.

Incerti, apud Stobæum, de iniuſtitia, Ser.10. Pallade apud Stobæum.

§.Sect.14.
That rich Miſers are of all others pooreſt.

Deſunt multa omnibus, multis omnia.

Yea, in truth theſe rich Miſers are of all others moſt miſerably poore; for whereas all other men want many things, theſe want all; ſeeing they want as well that they haue, as that they haue not: for whatſoeuer others haue they want, becauſe they haue it not in poſſeſſion, and they want alſo that which themſelues poſſeſſe, becauſe they haue it not in vſe. In which reſpect they are worſe than any Begger; for whereas but ſome things are wanting to theſe, all, both which they haue, and haue not, is wanting vnto them. Neither is there in truth any pouertie alike wretched to this wilfull penury of rich Miſers, for they thirſt in the middeſt of the waters, and haue empty bellies, when their garners and ſtore-houſes are full of Corne: they are cold and haue not the heart to prouide them garments, or hauing them to weare them: they are hungry, and yet dare not for feare of impairing their eſtate, feed vpon that food which is good and wholeſome; ſo that they wilfully take vpon them that puniſhment which the poore ſuffer through neceſſitie: for theſe faſt when they want meate, they when they haue it; the poore haue not money to vſe, the Miſer hath it, but will neither vſe it himſelfe, nor ſuffer others. They digge Gold out of the veines of the earth, and hide it therein againe; and if but an egge be ſet before them, they complaine of loſſe, becauſe a Chicken is killed. In which reſpect the Miſer may not vnfitly bee compared to the Minerall out of which theſe rich metals are digged; for that keepeth Gold as well as he; that hauing Gold hideth it in the ſecret veines of the earth, and hath no further vſe of it, and ſo doth he: but herein they differ, that whereas the Mines freely communicate their wealth to thoſe that ſeeke and labour for it, the couetous man ſo hideth and gardeth it, that neither himſelfe nor others can receiue any profit by it.

Auaro deeſt tam quod habet, quam quod non habet, Hieron. in Prolog. Bibliæ.

Deſunt inopiæ multa, auaritiæ omnia, Senec. Epiſt. 108.

Ambroſ. de Nabuth, cap. 4.

§. Sect. 15. The miſerable condition of rich Miſers.

Ideo ſe quiſq; fraudat nolens manducare vt diteſcat, vt alius de laboribus ſuis fluat & luxurietur, Auguſt. Homil. 35. Tom. 10.

Plutarch.

Wherein what doe they elſe ſhew, but that of all men they are moſt miſerable, fooliſh, and void of goodneſſe? For what greater miſery can there be, than to ſit vp in water to the chin, and yet die of thirſt? To haue all good things in poſſeſſion, and nothing in fruition and vſe? To ſell their good wine vnto other men, and themſelues to drink ſowre vineger, lees and dregs? To goe with an empty belly, that they may the ſooner fill their Cheſts; not that themſelues may enjoy that which they haue gathered, but that they may leaue it to their Heires, who will waſtefully ſpend that which they haue wickedly gotten; and conſume vpon ſuperfluities, that which they haue ſpared from neceſſaries, and (as it were) haue borrowed from their owne bellies. Wherein what are they, but like, ſuch miſerable Cookes, who dreſſing all curious dainties for other men, whereon they will riot and ſurfet; and yet themſelues being pinched with hunger, either cannot or dare not ſo much as licke their owne fingers? For though theſe Miſers bee hungry, yet they haue no power to take a good meales meate of their owne allowance; only (as one obſerueth) they haue good ſtomacks at another mans Table, when as greedily they ſtretch out with ouer-much fulneſſe, their ſtraitned and empty bowels, that it may ſerue for a double meale, and eaſe them of ſo much charge; though hereby they are diſtempered with crudities, and the day following, beare the puniſhment of the former dayes miſerable gluttony. Againe, what can bee more miſerable, than for a man to toile and labour for his whole life, and to haue no power to enjoy any fruit of his labours? to beare like an Aſſe a golden burthen all the day, and without any further vſe of it, at night to haue it taken away, reſeruing nothing to himſelfe but a galled conſcience? to haue goods, and no good by them? to keepe that money which they haue gotten by painfull labour, with toiling care locking it vp, as if it were a ſtrangers, and (as if it were theft) not daring to touch it, for the benefit of themſelues, their children, or friends. As though they had no other end of keeping it, but that others might haue no benefit by it: and yet wretches that they are, they call theſe poſſeſſions their goods, and by ſole vertue of this jaylorſhip, they lay claime to the Title of goodneſſe, as though they deſerued to bee called good men, becauſe they haue goods in poſſeſſion, notwithſtanding that they doe not at all vſe them, for the good either of themſelues, or any others: but much more right haue they vnto that Title of Miſers, which is juſtly allotted vnto them, ſeeing of all other men they are the moſt miſerable. And as they doe by their wretched courſes bewray their miſery, ſo alſo their extreame folly: for whereas wiſe men propound vnto themſelues ſome end of their labours, which is better than the pains it ſelfe; they either haue no end at all of all their toyle, or at leaſt ſuch as is ſottiſh and ridiculous; for the end of their gathering riches is to gather them, and therefore gathering for no end but for it ſelfe, they can make no end of gathering. As though the ſole end of their comming into the world were like Harbingers and Puruciours to prouide lodgings and good fare for others, and ſo to depart without taſting of it: or to play the Bailiffes, who haue nothing to doe, but onely to gather the rents of large reuenues, that others may haue them to ſpend and enjoy. And this fooliſh vanity the wiſe man in his time obſerued. There is one alone (ſaith hee) and there is not a ſecond, which hath neither ſonne nor brother, yet is there no end of all his trauell, neither can his eye be ſatisfied with riches. Neither doth he thinke; for whom doe I trauell, and defraud my ſoule of pleaſure? This alſo is vanity, and this is an euill trauell. Or if they haue any ends of their care and labour, they are fooliſh and abſurd; for either out of a diſtruſtfull care of Gods prouidence they truſt to their owne, ſcraping abundance together, leſt in time to come they might be brought to want and miſery; or elſe becauſe

Eccleſ. 4.8.

at their death they would bee accounted rich men who haue left behind them ſuch large poſſeſſions. Now what can bee more fooliſh and ridiculous, than to liue in want for feare of want? to bee preſently poore, vpon a bare doubt of pouerty for the time to come? as though a man ſhould hang himſelfe for feare of death; or goe naked for feare of wanting clothes? The which folly is more abſurd, in that many being inured to theſe miſerly courſes in their meane eſtates, doe hold on and continue in them, when as their wealth is encreaſed to ſuch abundance, that they could not if they ſhould liue to old age, ſee any end of it, though in a large proportion they ſhould ſpend vpon the ſtocke. Neither is their other end leſſe fooliſh of leauing a great eſtate behind them. For what can be more abſurd for a man to liue poore, to die rich; to take nothing himſelfe, that he may leaue all to his heires? and to affect hereby a name, when as being remembred onely for his follie and miſerie, he doth by continuing his fame, continue his infamie and reproch?

Finally, as theſe miſers are wretched and full of folly; ſo are they emptie of all goodneſſe, ſeeing they are neither good to others, nor to themſelues; others haue no good by them, ſeeing they are ready rather to ſcrape from them by oppreſſion and deceit, than to communicate to their neceſſities. For whereas they vſually alledge, that they therfore gather, that they may prouide for their poſterity, or that they may doe good deeds at their death; it is manifeſtly falſe, both becauſe thoſe that haue no children, or neere friends, are as wretchedly couetous as they who haue moſt; and alſo becauſe if they gathered riches to communicate them to the good of others, they would (ſeeing charity beginneth at home) impart them to their owne vſe and benefit: if it were ſimplie their deſire by their wealth to doe good after their death, they would alſo bee ready in ſome meaſure to imploy it to theſe vſes in their time of life: if loue of their poſterity made them ſo greedily to heape vp riches, this loue would moue them to impart ſome ſhare vnto them, when as they might ſtill keepe it in their owne poſſeſſion. But experience teacheth vs, that theſe rich miſers pinch euen their deareſt children of that neceſſarie allowance which belongeth to their backes and bellies; and which is worſt of all, will not affoord vnto them good education, becauſe it requireth coſt: whereby it manifeſtly appeareth that the loue of nothing but of their money, and that for its owne ſake, without reſpect of further vſe, is the true cauſe of all their greedy ſcraping. And to ſay truth, how can he bee good to others who is naught to himſelfe? how can he be anothers friend, who is his owne enemie? But the couetous miſer (as euen the heathen man could diſcerne with the eye of nature) though hee bee good to none, yet he is worſt of all to himſelfe; for hee robbeth his owne ſoule of neceſſaries, that he may leaue behind him ſuperfluities; and like an vnnaturall theefe, hee defraudeth himſelfe of thoſe rich bleſſings which God in his bountie hath imparted vnto him. He fareth hardly, and goeth baſely, and in all reſpects maketh vnto himſelfe a more ſhort allowance, for all his great care and labour, than any maſter (vnleſſe he were as wretched as he) would affoord vnto him. In which reſpect one concludeth that the miſer is not onely a theefe, but alſo a ſelfe-murtherer, ſeeing hee will not allow vnto himſelfe neceſſaries to preſerue life. What (ſaith hee) is a couetous man? a murtherer of himſelfe. What is couetouſneſſe? a liuing poore for feare of pouerty. Wherein the miſer doth only this worke of juſtice in all his cariage, that he doth not caſt away his wealth vpon his vnworthy ſelfe, but reſerueth it ſafe and vntouched, for thoſe who better deſerue to enjoy and ſpend it. Rightly therefore is this miſerableneſſe called a wormewood ſinne, which bringeth its puniſhment in the very committing, ſauing that it is neither ſweete nor wholſome, but a delightfull vexation, a rich beggerie, a ſuperfluous penurie and affected want, which turneth Gods bleſſings into curſings; his gifts into clogs, and maketh all his benefits heauie burthens. And this commeth to paſſe by the juſt judgement of God puniſhing their immoderate loue of theſe earthly things; that though they ſhould haue abundance in poſſeſſion, yet they ſhould haue nothing in fruition, much in keeping and nothing in vſe, becauſe he ſo ſtraiteneth their hearts and reſtraineth their liberty, that like the prince in the booke of the Kings they only behold this great plenty with their eyes, but haue not the power to taſte of it. And this judgement the wiſe man obſerueth. There is an euill (ſaith he) which I ſaw vnder the ſunne, and it is much among men. A man to whom God hath giuen riches, and pleaſures and honour, and and hee wanteth nothing for his ſoule of all that it deſireth; but God giueth him not power to eate thereof, but a ſtrange man ſhall eate it vp: this is a vanitie, and an euill ſickneſſe yea (as hee ſaith in the verſe following) much worſe than vntimely birth.

In nullum auarus bonus eſt, in ſe peſſimus. Senec. epiſt. 108.

Quid eſt auarus? ſui homicida: quid eſt auaritia? paupertatis timor, ſemper in paupertate viuens. Bernard. epiſt. Sylueſt.

Eccleſ. 6. 1, 2.

§. Sect. 17. That worldly pleaſures ſatisfie not, nor giue contentment.

And thus haue I ſhewed that there is no contentment in worldly riches, both becauſe they are vaine and cannot ſatisfie; and alſo becauſe our hearts are vnſatiable, and our auarice ſo ſtrong and tyrannous that we neither can nor will bee ſatisfied by them. Now in the laſt place wee are to examine pleaſures, to ſee whether wee can in them find any ſatietie or contentment: wherevpon triall wee ſhall find, that they are as vaine and inſufficient for his purpoſe as either of the other. For like ſweete drinkes, they ſerue not to abate and quench, but to encreaſe the voluptuous mans thirſt; making him after the enjoying of one pleaſure, to hunger after another; and after he hath enioyed thouſands, to bee as farre from contentment, as when firſt hee began to couet them; becauſe being vaine they vaniſh in the fruition, and ſlip away whileſt they are betweene our hands; like a ſhadow, leauing nothing behind them but an emptie mind and hungrie deſire after new varietie. Yea rather the more wee enioy them, the further wee are from contentation; ſeeing euery delight is vnto vs as a taſt of ſweetnes, which doth not ſatisfie but ſharpen our licorous appetites & howſoeuer like the water in the ſmiths forge, they ſeeme for the preſent to quench and allay our heate, yet ſoone after, the flame of our concupiſcence increaſeth, and burneth much more hotly. So that howſoeuer before wee taſted of theſe bewitching delights, we were maſters of our owne affections, and could moderate our deſires: yet after we haue beene allured to enter into pleaſur's maze, we find not our comming out ſo eaſie as our going in; and when wee haue beene inticed to drinke of theſe golden, but yet intoxicating cups, wee are preſently made drunke with delight; and drunkenneſſe increaſing thirſt, maketh vs in the end to grow inſatiable. And this emptines and inſatiety doth make vs often both to change, and alſo to reiterate the ſame pleaſures; that they which cannot at once ſatisfie, may by our continuall feeding on them, at leſt keepe vs from famiſhing. For example, what doth dainty meates bring with them, but a vaine delight, which preſently vaniſheth, either by renued hunger, which againe deſireth them, or through their ſurcharging the ſtomacke, vpon which follow crude humors and ill digeſtion, which cauſeth vs to loath them? So, how vaine is the pleaſure of the moſt delicate drinks, which delight no longer than they are ſwallowing downe, and doe not fully ſatisfie, but onely for the preſent allay our thirſty appetite? The like may be ſaid of odoriferous ſmels, which delight then onely whileſt they are at the noſe; of pleaſing ſights, which no longer pleaſe than they are in the eye; ; of ſweet muſicke, which vaniſheth and leaueth nothing behind, when the conſort ceaſeth; of merrie company, and pleaſing ſports and paſtimes, whoſe delight laſteth no longer, than their preſent fruition; and in a word, of all other pleaſures that the world affordeth, which filling vs full of nothing, but vaine emptineſſe, doe make vs like the thirſty grounds to open the mouth, gaping after the pleaſing ſhowers of new delights. And of this Salomon himſelfe had experience, who though he ſurfetted of pleaſure, yet he was not filled, and when hee had ſuffered his heart to glut it ſelfe with variety of delights, yet he remained altogether vnſatisfied, onely in the end by much vſe he came to loathing ſatietie, and was vexed in his minde, becauſe he had ſpent ſo much good time in the fruition of theſe baſe vanities.

Eccleſ. 2.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the miſerable effects which accompanie the inſufficiencie of worldly things, as diſcontent in all eſtates, loathing ſatietie, and an endleſſe deſire of changing.

§. Sect. 1
That al are diſcon ted with th eſtate, and firſt thoſe are of hon rable condi tion.

From which inſufficiencie of theſe worldly things proceed diuers effects, which bring much trouble and diſquietnes to the life of man. The firſt is, that becauſe no man is ſatisfied with the things hee poſſeſſeth, therefore none are contented with their owne ſtate and condition, but ſeeing onely their owne wants, and not other mens, and by a fooliſh and ſelfe-deceiuing ſophiſtrie, comparing themſelues with others, not in thoſe things wherin they match or exceed them; but ſetting the beautie of other mens ſtate, againſt the blemiſhes of their owne; their commodities againſt their owne diſcommodities, and matching their fulneſſe, with that wherein they are moſt wanting and defectiue; at laſt they grow to this concluſion, that no man is ſo miſerable as they; the which in truth is not ſo, or therefore only ſo, becauſe they thinke ſo: whereas if in comparing themſelues with others, they would obſerue due proportion, fitting their owne benefits, with the benefits of others, their owne defects with their wants, and their diſcommodities and euills, with thoſe which others ſuſtaine; they would be comforted, either becauſe, all things conſidered, their owne eſtate is better than other mens; or elſe becauſe in their miſeries they haue all the world to beare them company. But this diſcontedneſſe, the vſuall companion of inſatiety, will better appeare, if we deſcend to ſome particulars, and take a briefe view of the ſeuerall ſtates and conditions of men. And firſt for men of honourable quality, becauſe honour it ſelfe is vaine and doth not ſatisfie them, they are neuer contented with their owne eſtate, but finding in themſelues an hungring emptineſſe, and pinching want, and not knowing that it is the diſeaſe of their mind, but rather imagining that it is ſome defect in their outward cōdition, they grow into diſlike of it, and aſpire to ſome higher preferment, thinking that height and happineſſe, aduancement and content will come together. Thus the man of meane qualitie thinketh his baſenes an heauie burthen, and aſpireth vnto the reputation of a gentleman, ſuppoſing that there is much more contentment in gentilitie than in yeomanrie: but when hee hath attained vnto it, not finding in his new eſtate, that for which he looked, he reſteth not here, but goeth on in his endleſſe iorney of ambition, and affecteth nobilitie; and being enobled he is neuer the neerer vnto content, becauſe he doth not looke vnto thoſe whom he hath out-gone, but vnto thoſe who are yet aboue him; and therefore is not ſo much contented becauſe hee excelleth the moſt, as he is tormented to ſee any preferred before him. And this maketh him not to ſtay heere, but now hee affecteth Soueraigntie, imagining it a goodly thing to rule, and that there is great contentment in this ſupreme authoritie, vnto which all ſtoope, it ſelfe ſtooping to none; but before the crowne bee well ſetled to his head, he finds that it doth not giue his headach of ambition any eaſe, but onely tormenteth him with the heauie waight, and therefore being not yet ſatisfied he affects Monarchies; and hauing no higher place vnto which he may clime on earth, he aſpires vnto diuine honours, vſurping both the titles and worſhip which is peculiar vnto God. And thus doe ambitious men tire themſelues in ſeeking content where it is not to bee found, and torment themſelues when they find it not: and hauing placed their happineſſe in honour, they aſpire vnto one preferment after another, thinking when they miſſe of it, that it is onely wanting in that degree vnto which they haue attained, and not in honour it ſelfe.

Sect. 2.
The diſcon-
…which ac-
…panieth
…hes and
…ſures,

The like diſcontent is to be found among thoſe who affect riches; for being altogether vnſatiſfied with their preſent poſſeſſions, they grow into diſlike of their eſtate, thinking others more happy, becauſe they are more rich; and therefore hauing out-ſtripped one richer than themſelues, they labour to ouertake another, and hauing alſo out-runne him, they propound vnto themſelues a third; imagining that there is none in worſe eſtate, whileſt there is any better; none poorer, whileſt there is any richer; and that they haue outgone none, ſo long as they ſee any goe before them; as though other mens abundance were their want, and ſo much were detracted from their eſtate, as they ſee others doe exceed them. And thus alſo thoſe who place all their felicitie in wordly pleaſures, are vtterly diſcontented with their ſtate and condition, when they find that thoſe they haue doe not ſatisfie them, or ſee that others goe beyond them in varietie of delights; taking no pleaſure, but rather fretting and enuying, when they ſee their idoll more propitious to others than themſelues, though they alſo haue in the ſame kind a large meaſure of fauour imparted vnto them. And thus the glutton abounding with good fare, thinketh that he feedeth but groſly, when hee ſeeth more daintie cates at another mans table: thus the drunkard loatheth his beſt wines, when he meeteth with better in another mans cellar: thus hee who delighteth in muſicke contemneth his owne conſort, as though there were nothing in it but iarring diſcord, when he heareth more melodious harmonie. And in a word, thus all ſorts of voluptuous men diſtaſte their ſeuerall delights, when either being glutted with them, they find ſatietie without ſatisfying; or ſee that others haue any priuiledge and preeminence more than they, in reſpect of the qualitie or varietie of their pleaſure.

§. Sect. 3.
That all men in all ages and in all eſtates, are full of diſcontent.

Neither are only theſe worldly things, honours, riches, and pleaſures, accompanied with diſcontent, but all other things in the world bring the ſame diſlike to euery condition and eſtate: and to begin with the beginning of our life; wee ſee that the child is wearie of his childhood, becauſe he feareth the rod, and by ſeuerer diſcipline is reſtrained from his deſired delights; wiſhing that hee were come to ſuch an age as might exempt from theſe feares, and procure his liberty. Being come to youth he runneth himſelfe out of breath, vnder the conduct of his vnbridled paſſions, till at laſt panting for wearines, he deſireth that hee were come to ripe age, when as hee might reſt from theſe vaine courſes, and ſettle himſelfe in ſome profitable calling, vnto which when hee hath attained he is not content, but thinking old age honourable, deſireth that hee might haue a ſhare in that reuerence and reſpect which is due vnto it, in the meane time neuer thinking of the manifold infirmities, griefes and diſcontentments which it bringeth with it. Of which when hee taſteth, they are ſo burthenſome vnto him, that hauing now no other age to change withall, he deſireth to be vnburthened of them euen by death it ſelfe. They like diſcontent is to be obſerued in all other eſtates and conditions: hee that leadeth a ſingle life is wearie of his ſolitarineſſe, and thinketh there is no comfort equall to that ſweet ſocietie of man and wife; being maried, hee waxeth wearie of his yoke, either becauſe hee hath made an ill and vnequall choice, or becauſe hee is impatient of the cares and troubles incident to this eſtate, and now wiſheth againe that hee were at libertie. He that hath no children taketh no pleaſure in his poſſeſſions, becauſe hee wanteth an heire to ſucceede him, and little playfellowes to beare him companie: he that hath children is not contented, either becauſe they are vnruly, or ouer burthenſome, imagining that if he had leſſe companie, hee

Gen. 15. 2.

ſhould haue better ſtore, and liue in greater plentie; and yet if he be taken at his word he is ready to repent, and to thinke that there is no greater loſſe, than when by hauing his companie leſſened, he ſaueth of his former charges. The ſeruant thinketh his life a bondage, and wiſheth meanes of liberty that hee might liue at his owne command; and when he is come to be a maſter, he is diſcontented much more, in gouerning and prouiding for his family. The people diſlike their ſubjection, and grieuouſly complaine of their heauie burthens, tributes, taxes, cuſtomes and impoſts; ſuppoſing that all worldly contentment reſteth in ſoueraignty; the prince is no leſſe wearie of his toile in ruling, of his troubles, dangers, and continuall care, hauing not only himſelfe and priuate familie to looke to, but the whole people and common-wealth which ſhrowdeth it ſelfe vnder the wings of his prouidence. He that leadeth a priuate life, though he liketh of his eaſe, yet he is diſcontented, becauſe hee wanteth reſpect; and is not crouched vnto by ſuters, hauing no authority either to helpe or hurt them: they who are aduanced to publike place commend retiredneſſe, complaining that they are ſo wholly taken vp with other mens buſineſſes, that they are conſtrained to neglect their owne; and whileſt they labour for forraine intelligence, become ignorant of that which is done in their owne familie. The poore labouring-man is not contented with his condition, ſeeing after hee hath toiled all the day, and commeth wearie home, hee there findeth but courſe fare and hard lodging; enuying the rich man his eaſie life, full tables, and downe-bedding. The rich alſo, though ſhame keepeth him from complaining, diſliketh of his eſtate, wiſhing that hee had leſſe wealth ſo he had better health, and more labour ſo he had more ſtrength; and could find in his heart to change fare with the poore man, ſo hee might alſo change ſtomackes; and to lie as hard, if alſo he could ſleepe ſo ſoundly, and take ſuch quiet reſt. The countrie man ſeeing the plentie and brauerie of citizens, groweth in diſlike with his home-ſpun ſuit, and houſhold prouiſion, and wiſheth rather that he lacked his farme, than that by ſtaying him at home, he ſhould bee thus debarred of citie preferments. The citizens thinke themſelues ill ſeated by reaſon of bad aires, and dangerous ſickneſſes that raigne among them, and like better of the countrie mans life, as being more healthy than theirs, and of his eſtate, as being more certaine, and in leſſe danger of ruine and alteration. And finally, in the Citie the artificer is wearie of his great paines and ſmall gettings, and wiſheth that hee could change eſtates with the merchants, who haue more pleaſure and greater abundance. The merchant running many dangerous courſes, by reaſon of boyſterous tempeſts, ſpoyling pirats, and barbarous nations, thinketh them happy that ſit quietly, though but poorely, by their owne fire; and if by any caſualty their ſtate bee impoueriſhed, they wiſh that they had beene brought vp in ſome handy trade, and preferre a mechanicall art aboue a great ſtocke, and skill in merchandiſe, ſeeing that may bee loſt, and ſo this grow vnprofitable; whereas the other neuer faileth, but as a leaſe for life, bringeth in continuall maintenance. In a word, there is no man that is contented with his eſtate, but thinketh euery mans better than his owne, not becauſe it is ſo, but becauſe hee is neerer acquainted with the miſeries of his owne condition, and ſo is better able to declame againſt them, than with thoſe that are incident vnto other men, euen as contrariwiſe they extoll in their iudgements any benefits injoyed by others farre aboue their owne, and are ready to admire with rauiſhing wonder that in anothers poſſeſſion, which they would thinke ſcarce worth the owning, if it were in their owne cuſtodie.

Nobis alien noſtrum plu alijs placet.

§. Sect. 4.
Of the cau why worldlings are ſo full of diſcontent.

Now this commeth to paſſe, partly becauſe wee are much more ſenſible in feeling our owne miſeries, and partly becauſe by experience wee find the inſufficiencie and vanity of thoſe worldly things which our ſelues enjoy, and are apt to thinke others benefits of a better quality. Whereas in truth whatſoeuer is in the world is vaine and ſufficeth not; and euery condition hath good and euill, miſeries and benefits, in ſuch juſt proportion tempered the one with the other, that if a man knew all, he could hardly tell which to chuſe: and in that this man is contented with his eſtate, and another is not: the true cauſe of this difference is not in the outward condition, but in the heart and minde. For all eſtates bring with them cauſes enow of diſcontentment, but one beareth them with wiſedome and patience, and in thus bearing leſſeneth them; whereas another by impatiencie aggrauateth his burthen, which in it ſelfe is not ſo heauie, and by ſtrugling and ſtriuing to ſhake it off, findeth no eaſe, but galleth his mind with griefe and ſorrow. And as we ſee thoſe who are of a ſtrong conſtitution contentedly endure all weathers, whereas he who is weake and vnſound complaineth in winter of cold, & in the ſummer of heate: ſo thoſe whoſe minds are healthy, conſtant, and ſtrong in patience, are prepared for all eſtates and conditions; whereas he who is infirme through impatiencie, and ſubject to the ague fits of paſſion, with equall diſcontent afflicteth himſelfe with the cold winter of aduerſitie, and the hotte ſummer of a proſperous eſtate, and both theſe come to paſſe, not becauſe the one feeleth no waight, but becauſe hee hath ſtrength to beare it; or that the other hath an heauier burthen, but becauſe by reaſon of his weakeneſſe, a light loade is ſufficient to preſſe him downe. As therefore the foot faſhioneth the ſhooe, and not the ſhooe the foote; for a crooked foote, maketh the ſhooe alſo crooked; but contrariwiſe, a ſtraight ſhooe will not make ſtraight a clubbed and crooked foot: ſo the ſtate is faſhioned by the mind, and not the mind by the ſtate; for if it be quiet and contented, then all outward things bring contentment to it; whereas if it bee impatient, wayward and peeuiſh, euery feather ſeemeth an heauie burthen, all kind of occurrents vex and diſpleaſe; and that which would be anothers paradiſe and delight, is vnto them an hell and grieuous torment. And hereof it is that men are diſcontented and complaine, not for the ſame cauſes onely, but alſo for thoſe which are diuers, yea quite contrarie one to another. As for example, one complaineth of his poore and baſe eſtate, which maketh him neglected and contemned of all; another that his honours and authority are too burthenſome, and that he is ſued vnto by too many. One is vexed becauſe he hath too many children; another becauſe hee hath none at all: this man crieth out of his multitude of buſineſſe, and his neighbour is as much troubled, becauſe he is not troubled; and liuing at too much eaſe, wanteth imployment. One is tormented with iealouſie, becauſe hauing a beautifull wife ſhee is loued of all; another with ſatiety and loathing, becauſe ſhe is deformed, & affected by no body. And this commeth to paſſe partly becauſe theſe worldly things are vaine, and cannot ſatisfie thoſe that haue them; and partly by reaſon of the weakeneſſe and infirmity of mens minds, who bring no more contentment to their eſtate, than it bringeth to them; but make all things they enioy, which in themſelues are vaine and ſcarce worth the keeping, to become vnto them troubleſome burthens, which bring cumber in carying, and eaſe when they are ſhaken off. For as the weake and ſickly ſtomacke is made more ſicke, and ſurfetteth with a ſmall quantitie of wholeſome food, turning the beſt meate into noyſome humours, whereas that which is ſtrong and healthy is well refreſhed, with a great meale of the courſeſt fare, and conuerteth it to profitable nouriſhment; ſo a weak & froward mind is ſurcharged euen with the delicates of a proſperous eſtate; wheras an heart which is indued with conſtancie and patience, is contented, and can well digeſt the meaneſt condition, and groweth daily in better liking, whileſt it is fed with the bread of affliction, and water of ſorrow.

That worldly things in ſtead of ſatisfying bring with them loathing ſatiety.

A ſecond effect of the vanitie and inſufficiencie of worldly things is, that in ſtead of ſatisfying they bring with them loathing ſatietie; for howſoeuer whileſt men are in purſuit of theſe vanities, they thinke them of ſuch excellency, that they would account it a great part of their happineſſe, if they might enioy them; yet hauing obtained their deſire, they are ſtraight glutted with their companie, and now looke vpon that with loathing contempt, which, before they had it, they beheld with rauiſhing delight. And this commeth to paſſe, either becauſe they afterwards ſee things more deſireable, and worthy their loue, in the poſſeſſion of other men; or becauſe they haue theſe things in exceſſiue meaſure, which maketh that which is moſt ſweet to become loathſome; or becauſe their appetite which was ſharpned with want, labour in ſeeking, and difficultie in obtaining, is dulled and taken away by their aſſiduitie, and eaſie inioying, without any competitour to ſharpen their loue: or finally, becauſe whileſt they were in the purſuite of theſe vanities, they were deceiued with a falſe conceit of their worth and excellencie; and this opinion is afterwards confuted by their owne experience, which manifeſteth their worthleſſe baſeneſſe, and inſufficiencie to ſatisfie and bring contentment. In which reſpect theſe worldly vanities are fitly compared to the apples of Sodome, which allure the eye & ſharpen the appetite, but if any touch, or ſet his teeth in them, they fill his mouth with duſt, or vaniſh into ſmoak; and thoſe which dote vpon them are like vnto thoſe who hauing ſicke & weak ſtomackes, doe long for many things when they heare them but named, and when they are procured with coſt, and prepared with labour, they begin to loath them, as ſoone as they ſee them, and to waxe ſicke as though they had ſurfetted, before they haue ſcarce taſted of them. Or like vnto fond louers whoſe affection being ſharpened with competition, and difficulty of obtaining, doe make idols of their miſtreſſes, and admire them as though they were free from all fault and blemiſh, and full of diuine excellencies: but afterwards inioying them for their wiues, thinke them ſcarce good enough to be their vnder fellowes, there being now in their conceit many more excellent, and freer from imperfections. And thus the ambitious man groweth out of liking with his obtained honour, which before he had it, was rauiſhed with delight, when he did but thinke of it with ſome weake and and vncertaine hope of inioying it, either becauſe hee ſeeth another (which ſelfe-loue maketh him beleeue is of leſſe deſert) better preferred, or becauſe growing ordinarie and common by poſſeſſion, it becomes ſtale and triuiall; or finally, becauſe being vaine, it doth not ſatisfie and giue contentment, but rather ſharpeneth the appetite, & inflameth the deſire to aſpire to an higher place; and a greater honour being but entertained by deſire, and nouriſhed with the leaſt hope, maketh the leſſer to bee contemned as baſe and worthleſſe. Thus alſo the couetous man loatheth his owne poſſeſſions as good cheape and of ſmall value, and deſireth another mans, as being moſt pretious and worthy eſteeme; and thoſe things which he highly priſed before he had them, being come into his owne keeping are thought ſcarce worth the hauing. Thus he taketh little joy in his goodly houſe and rich furniture, when his eyes haue beene a little glutted with their ſight, though whileſt they were in purchaſing, he thought to find in them a great part of his happineſſe: thus his pleaſant gardens and orchards bring no more delight than the wilde woods, though with great labour and coſt he purpoſely trimmed them, that they might bee vnto him his paradiſe and place of ioy: and thus he pulleth downe his old barnes, when he thinketh of building bigger, and in his large lordſhips thinketh himſelfe ſtraitned, as though he were in a priſon, when he beholdeth others greater territories. Finally, thus the voluptuous man is ſtraight glutted with the fruition of thoſe pleaſures, which before he much deſired, the glutton loathing thoſe meats which erewhile he longed after, and being cloyed with thoſe drinkes, which when he was at another mans table, ſeemed moſt delicious. Thus he who delights in vaine ſhewes, ſports and paſtimes, taketh a monthes paines in preparation, and ſpares for no coſt to make them moſt delightfull; and though both theſe ſet an edge on his appetite, yet he is often wearie of it before it be done, though it bee but of ſome few houres continuance, and not finding that ioy and contentment which hee expected, wiſheth that it were paſt. By which the great vanitie of worldly things, and miſerie of worldly men plainly appeareth; for what can be more vaine than they, whoſe expectation was better than their fruition, and whoſe worth ceaſeth when they are inioyed? what can be more void of excellencie, than that which is only precious when it is abſent, and loſeth all its value when it commeth to vſe, experience ſpoiling it of all that worth which a falſe opinion had inriched it with. And conſequently, what can be more miſerable than a worldly man, who ſpendeth his whole life in the deſire and purſuit of things future, and in loathing things preſent, and who ſetteth his heart vpon ſuch vanities which are more eſteemable in their want, than in their inioying, and being obtained with great care, paines and labour, when they ſhould bee the reward of all, become contemptible trifles, if not troubleſom burthens. In which reſpect it were much better for him to ſpend his whole life in ſeeking, than to obtaine that which he could find in his heart to caſt away againe, but that he would not ſeeme to haue loſt all his labour; much better were he to be ſtill ſuing, than euer to injoy, becauſe in the purſuit he is delighted, and (as it were) fatted with his owne opinion; whereas fruition maketh him more leane and comfortleſſe than he was before, becauſe experience teacheth him that he hath ſpent all his ſweate in hunting after a feather, and tired himſelfe in ſeeking a vanitie, which being obtained bringeth no pleaſure or contentment; and in ſtead of ſatisfying cauſeth loathing ſatietie.

Diues quod ſuum eſt quaſi vile faſtidit; quod alienum eſt, quaſi pretioſiſſimum concupiſcit. Ambroſ. lib. de Nabuth. cap. 2.

Precipitat quiſque vitam ſuā, & futurorum deſiderio laborat præſentium tædio. Senec. de breuit. vitæ. cap. 7.

§.Sect.
From the in-ſufficienci wo ldly th to ſatisfie ceedeth a endleſſe d of change.

Thirdly and laſtly, from this inſufficiencie of worldly things to ſatisfie and bring contentment, proceedeth an endleſſe deſire and affectation of change: for though theſe earthly vanities ſatisfie not, yet they bring with them cloying ſatietie, the which being accompanied with loathſome contempt, enforceth the minde which naturally affecteth happineſſe, and full contentment (though it be ignorant of the meanes wherby it may be attained) to fixe the deſires vpon new objects, to ſee if it can find that in them, which was wanting in the other, wherein finding as little contentment as before, they leaue alſo them and affect new, till hauing runne ouer all which they thinke worth the deſiring, and hauing tried all things which the world calleth excellent (if at leſt they can with all their care and labour attaine vnto them) at length (like thoſe who affect new faſhions and ſtrange attires) when they haue tired their inuention, and know not what more to deſire, they are faine to take vp the old againe which before they loathed, and after their glutted appetite is a little ſharpned with abſence and diſcontinuance, they place vpon it afreſh their ſoone wearied delight, till their renued loathing moueth them vnto a new change. And thus worldly men (like the horſe in the mill) tire themſelues in trauelling this endleſſe circle, ending where they began, and being at the night of death as farre from the iorney end of their deſires, as when they began their dayes trauaile: and not hauing fixed their hearts, and grounded their hopes vpon that neuer failing foundation, God all-ſufficient and the eternall ioyes of his kingdome, they haue nothing ſolid and ſubſtantiall to reſt vpon, but like a feather in the aire they are toſſed to and fro with euery winde, ſeeking reſt but finding none, And hauing long tired themſelues in vaine, after manifold trials and new concluſions, finding no contentment, at laſt they reſolue to place all their delight in often change; and that which they cannot find in the ſubſtance or ſufficiencie of worldly things, they looke for in continuall variety, ſo that now there is nothing pleaſing vnto them which varietie and change refreſheth not: Like vnto thoſe lying in bed, and not ſleeping or taking reſt, who being wearied with waking, doe ſpend the whole night in tumbling and toſſing from one ſide to another, ſeeking for eaſe in their often change, which they cannot finde by quiet lying on either ſide. And as thoſe who are ſicke of a burning Feuer when they cannot ſatisfie their vnſatiable thirſt, doe often change their drinke, one while longing after that which is tart & ſharpe, and another while after that which is coole and ſmall; now affecting that which not long ſince in their health well pleaſed them in their Neighbours Houſe, as though it would now alſo bring the ſame delight; and anon not finding their thirſt quenched by change of drinkes, deſire wine or water: But all in vaine; for hauing tried all, they complaine that they are all ſo bitter, that they do not quench their thirſt: whereas in truth it is the bitternes of their mouth diſtaſted with choler, the cauſe of their diſeaſe, and not the fault of their drinke, and not becauſe it is vnfit to quench their thirſt, but becauſe their burning heate ſtill renuing and augmenting it, maketh it vnquenchable: So wee being diſeaſed with the burning heat of concupiſcence, thirſt after worldly vanities, thinking by them to haue our heat abated; and after wee haue made triall of many, and yet find our thirſt nothing quenched, wee long after endleſſe variety, neuer calling to minde that it proceedeth from our inward diſeaſe, and not from the want of outward things. A notable example whereof we haue in Salomon, who labouring to find contentment in worldly things, & not finding it in any one of them, giueth his heart liberty to run ouer all, making triall of one thing after another, till in the end he was tired with all. Hee ſought for it in mirth, and findeth in ſtead of it madneſſe: in pleaſure, and diſcouereth nothing but vanity: Then he ſhifteth from one thing to another, and looketh for it, in great workes and ſtately buildings; where miſſing of it, hee goeth to ſeeke it in fruitfull Vineyards, in delightfull Gardens and Orchards, in Fountaines, Springs and pleaſant Groues; where not finding it, hee proceedeth in the purſuit, and looketh for it in the multitude of Siluer, Gold, and Princely Treaſures; then in delightfull Muſick, then in many ſeruants and great attendance; vnto which wee may adde that which ſhame made him conceale, his multitude of Wiues aud Concubines: but hauing tried all theſe and many other, with-holding nothing from his eyes which they deſired, nor withdrawing his heart from any joy; he findeth in all this variety, as the reward of all his labour, nothing elſe but vanity and vexation of ſpirit.

§. Sect. 7.
The former point cleered by ſome ſpeciall inſtances.

But this will better appeare, if we doe but a little conſider of the ſpeciall inſtances. For thus the ambitious man affecting Honour, and not being ſatisfied with that which hee hath attained vnto, is preſently glutted with it, labouring after new variety, one while ſeeking vaine glory, another while preferments; now the fauour of his Prince, and ſoone after the applauſe of the common people. Or if he ſettle his affection vpon any one of theſe, hee ſeeketh to refreſh his glutted minde with varietie in the degree, climing one ſtep after another, till hee commeth to the higheſt; where being ſeated, hee is now further off from contentment than at the beginning, becauſe hee cannot change for the better, nor delight his vnſatisfied minde with wonted varietie. Thus alſo the couetous man being vnſatisfied with his riches affecteth change, ſhifting his wearied appetite from one thing to another, till all become tedious and troubleſome. For finding no contentment in his old Mannours he deſireth new Lordſhips, being not pleaſed with one Houſe, hee buildeth another; and not contented with that, hee erecteth a third much more ſtately; and being maſter of many, he findeth contentment in none, which is the cauſe of his oft ſhifting from one to another with great coſt and labour; but all in vaine is his remouing, ſeeing he ſtill carrieth his diſeaſe about him; and therefore is no more eaſed, than hee who being ſicke of an ague, doth often change his bed. And as being weary of his Houſe hee affecteth often change; ſo alſo is he no better pleaſed with his Houſhold ſtuffe, Furniture, Plate and Apparell; and therefore being glutted with often ſight of the ſame thing, herein alſo hee makes variety the laſt refuge of his delight. And the like may be ſaid of their Gold, Siluer and Treaſures; of which though they be neuer weary in themſelues, as being the Idols vpon which they haue fixed their hearts, yet are they diſcontented with their ſhare and portion, and therefore ſtill affect greater quantities, till they haue more than they can tell how to vſe. But aboue all, the voluptuous man finding no contentment in his delights, affecteth variety of pleaſures, being moſt affected with that which hee moſt ſeldome doth enjoy, and glutted with thoſe which are in ordinary vſe. He may not twice together feed on the ſame diſh without loathing ſatiety, and therefore tireth both Sea and Land, himſelfe and all that belong vnto him, in ſeeking out variety of meats. And nature not affording change enough to continue his mutable delight, hee refreſheth his cloyed appetite by the helpe of art, compounding many things together, becauſe being ſingle they cannot pleaſe, & adding as great variety of ſawces as meats, to giue contentment to his curious palate. Foole that hee is Ex voluptuarijs ea quæ rariſſimè contingunt imprimis delectant Epictet. in memorab. dict.

so

Cantibus nouis, non notis delectamur.

to ſpend all this coſt and labour in attaining vnto that delight, which hunger alone without their helpe would much more plentifully bring vnto him. And thus alſo they find no delight in their ſweeteſt Muſicke, if ſtill they ſhould heare the ſame Songs, and not haue continuall change of harmonie; nor in beholding the ſame ſhewes & ſights, though at the firſt neuer ſo pleaſing and delightfull; nor in their games, ſports and paſtimes, but often change from one to another, ſometime affecting Chamber delights, and ſometime more manly ſports in the open fields; and neuer delighting long in any, becauſe all are vaine, but affecting continuall variety, becauſe the beſt of them not ſatisfying, within a while bringeth ſatiety and loathing.

Chap. XIX.

Of the excellencie of true contentment, and the meanes whereby we may attaine vnto it.

§. Sect. 1. That contentment is to be ſought, not in the world, but in Gods ſpirituall graces.

ANd thus haue I ſhewed that worldly things cannot ſatisfie the minde of man, or bring vnto him true contentment; as alſo the euill and troubleſome effects, which proceed from this inſufficiency in them, and inſatiety of the minde. Which as it ſhould make vs to contemne theſe earthly vanities, as being not able to bring any tranquillitie or ſound comfort; ſo ſhould it moue vs to ſeeke for this contentment, without which the life of man is miſerable, not in theſe outward things which afford it not; but inwardly in our owne minds, by purging and purifying them from worldly concupiſcence, and by fixing our hearts and affections vpon Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly ioyes, the one whereof we may haue in poſſeſſion, and the other in hope; without which all worldly things cannot ſatisfie; with which though wee bee abandoned of all earthly vanities, wee may haue tranquillity of mind, and true contentment. For firſt if we haue the Spirit of God, and his ſanctifying graces dwelling in vs, we ſhall be filled and ſatisfied: for as our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe hath promiſed, Whoſoeuer drinketh of this ſpirituall water which he ſhall giue him, ſhall neuer be more athirſt, for it ſhall be in him as a well of water ſpringing vp to euerlaſting life. And he that beleeueth in him, out of his belly ſhall flow riuers of the water of life. And if we would know what this Well and Riuer of the water of life is, which thus filleth and ſatisfieth vs, the Apoſtle telleth vs in the next words, that it is the Spirit of God which hee giueth to all that beleeue in Chriſt. So the Pſalmiſt pronounceth him bleſſed whom God chuſeth, and cauſeth to come vnto him; becauſe he ſhal dwel in his courts, & be ſatisfied with the pleaſures of his houſe, euen of his holy Temple. And the Apoſtle maketh this the end of knowing the loue of Chriſt which paſſeth all knowledge, that wee may be filled with all the fulneſſe of God. For if once we haue the Spirit of God, a liuely faith, ſincere loue, aſſured hope, and the reſt of his ſanctifying graces dwelling in vs, then are we thereby perſwaded of the remiſſion of our ſinnes, our reconciliation with God, our adoption, whereby we become not onely ſonnes, but alſo heires of all his promiſes, then are wee aſſured of his fatherly prouidence ſtill watching ouer vs, which turneth all things by the wiſe and mighty working thereof to our good, eſpecially to the furthering of our eternall ſaluation. And this maketh vs to reſigne our ſelues wholly ouer to be gouerned by his will, as knowing much better than our ſelues what is fit for vs; and to be not onely contented, but alſo to rejoyce, not in the ſtate of proſperity alone, but euen in our affliction and tribulation, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. An example wherof we haue in himſelfe, who had attained vnto ſuch a meaſure of this ſpiritual contentation, that it was able to beare him out, in all outward eſtates and conditions. I haue learned (ſaith he) in whatſoeuer ſtate I am to be content, and I can be abaſed, and I can abound; euery where in all things I am inſtructed, both to be full and to be hungrie, and to abound, and to haue want: I am able to doe all things through the helpe of Chriſt that ſtrengtheneth me. And if wee haue this ſpirituall contentment in our hearts, then the Lord will not let vs want this contentment, which the Apoſtle had in reſpect of outward things: for ſo he ſaith, that if his people would haue hearkened vnto his voice, and walked in his wayes, then would he haue fed them with the fat of wheate, and with hony out of the rocke would he haue ſufficed them. And the Wiſeman telleth vs, that it is the bleſſing of God onely that maketh rich, and alſo giueth with riches comfort and contentation: the bleſſing of the Lord (ſaith hee) maketh rich, and he doth adde no ſorrowes with it. Which bleſſing they alone haue ſure intereſt in who are indued with Gods grace and holy Spirit: for well may thoſe who are ruled with carnal concupiſcence be rich in their outward eſtate, but they can neuer be rich in their mind with inward content; for the wicked (as the Prophet ſaith) are like the raging Sea that cannot reſt, whoſe waters caſt vp mire and dirt; and the voice of God hath plainly ſaid it, that there is no peace vnto them. But as for thoſe in whoſe heart the peace of Gods holy Spirit dwelleth, they haue theſe outward things with content, or content without them; the Lord ſupplying their externall defects with a ſufficient meaſure of patience, comfort and tranquillitie of minde, and

Iohn 4.14.

Iohn 7.38,39.

*Pſal.*65.4.

Epheſ.3.1

Rom.8.28.

Rom.5.3.

Philip.4.11

Pſal.81.13

Prou.10.2

Eſay 57.20

and hauing godlines he alſo maketh vs content with that wee haue, whether it bee much or little, ſomething or nothing.

Sect. 2.
at ſpirituall ntentment ch exceeh al contentment in ldly things.

The which inward contentation of mind, grounding it ſelfe vpon Gods prouidence and promiſes, is in it owne nature moſt excellent, and being compared is much to be preferred before any contentment, which the confluence of all worldly benefits can bring vnto vs; for notwithſtanding all theſe we may (as hath beene ſhewed) be inwardly poore, in the middeſt of all our outward abundance; but this ſpirituall contentment alone maketh rich: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, Godlineſſe is great riches with contentation; and why ſo? becauſe (as before he told vs) it is profitable for all things; hauing the promiſes of this life, and the life to come. So that contentment which is grounded vpon outward things, is momentany and of ſhort continuance, laſting no longer than they laſt; for take away riches, pleaſures, and preferments, which are the cauſes of this contentment, and the contentment it ſelfe muſt needs faile: whereas this inward ſpiritual contentment is alwayes durable and moſt conſtant, ſeeing it wholly reſteth vpon Gods loue, holy will, and gracious prouidence, and therefore cannot faile, or be taken away by any worldly accident, becauſe it is not grounded vpon any worldly thing, and though all outward props ſhould be pulled away, yet would it ſtand vpright, becauſe it reſteth vpon none of them. Finally, worldly content is vaine and imperfect, not fully ſatisfying the heart of man; but that which is ſpirituall is full in its degree, though not without infirmities, and doth ſatisfie vs, not only for a fit, but euen for euer. For as the Prophet ſpeaketh, The Lord ſhall guide vs continually, and ſatisfie our ſoules in drought, and make fat our bones, and wee ſhall be like a watered Garden, and like a ſpring of water whoſe waters faile not. In which reſpect this ſpirituall contentment is much more excellent, than any which can bee found in worldly things; euen as it is much better to haue enough, than to haue much; for he that hath much, if he want this ſpirituall contentment, ſtill coueteth more in his greateſt abundance, and he that coueteth, ſtill wanteth; but he who reſting on God is inwardly content hath enough, becauſe hee deſireth no more, and though his ſtate bee ſmall, yet it putteth an end to his concupiſcence, which all worldly things cannot doe. For though we haue too much, yet if wee be not moderated with content, we thinke wee haue not enough; and though we haue much more than we deſired, yet our concupiſcence increaſing with our commings in, wee are readie to deſire more. Now as that which is enough, how meane a pittance ſoeuer it be, is not to bee eſteemed little, ſo that is not to be eſteemed much, how great ſoeuer, which is not enough.

Tim.6.6.

§. Sect. 3.
That contentment is a medicine for all miſeries.

But the excellencie of this ſpirituall contentment may hereby further appeare, in that whoſoeuer hath it, hath a medicine for all miſeries: for it is that which eaſeth the burthen of all afflictions, and maketh them light and eaſie: it turneth our pouertie into the greateſt riches, ſupplying all outward wants with inward comforts; and euen whileſt wee are Owners of nothing, it maketh vs Lords of all things; whileſt wee ſeeme poore, it cauſeth vs that wee be not poore indeed, but only in appearance, ſeeing therby we haue a ſecret riches that the world doth not take notice of, which giueth vs enough, and inableth vs to helpe others. For ſo the Apoſtle ſaith of himſelfe, and of other of the faithfull, that they were not ſimply poore, but as it were poore, making many rich; as hauing nothing, & yet poſſeſſing all things: and of ſuch the Wiſeman ſpeaketh; There is (ſaith he) that maketh himſelfe rich and hath nothing, and that maketh himſelfe poore, hauing great riches. Now this way of inriching a mans ſelfe in the middeſt of pouerty is by contentation, as hee afterwards expoundeth it: The righteous (ſaith he) eateth to the contentation of his mind, but the belly of the wicked ſhall want. The reaſon hereof is, becauſe a contented mind borroweth whatſoeuer it wanteth, of it ſelfe; for hauing little it deſireth no more, deſiring nothing, it wanteth nothing, and he that wanteth nothing, is of all others moſt rich. Againe, if wee be ſicke, this content is our beſt Phyſician, which both mitigates our paine, and giues vs ſtrength alſo to beare it; without which euery one is intolerably ſicke in the time of health. Finally, if wee bee oppreſſed with cares, this content will free vs from them, by cauſing vs to caſt them vpon the Lord, vpon whom we wholy reſt, being aſſured of his power to helpe vs, and of his will alſo, by his gracious promiſes. So the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Caſt thy burthen vpon the Lord, and he ſhall helpe thee: and the Apoſtle Peter willeth vs to caſt all our care on God, for he careth for vs: Whereas he that wanteth this ſpirituall contentment in God, is continually tormented with carking care in the middeſt of all his abundance; for his wealth, though neuer ſo plentifull, is vnto him as a great ſtanding poole which though it haue ſtore of water in it, is ſubject to drying vp: whereas the contented mans eſtate, though neuer ſo ſmal, is exempted from that feare; ſeeing it is as a liuing ſpring, iſſuing out from God the fountaine of all goodneſſe, which though it bee little in quantitie, yet can neuer be quite dry, becauſe it hath a continuall ſupply whereby it is fed. No maruell therefore if hee who is richeſt, is ſtill turmoyled with carking care, ſeeing reſting vpon his owne prouiſion hee hath good cauſe to feare, leſt by ſome great drought of affliction, he may haue his owne

2.Cor.6,10.

Prou.13.7.

Nihil intereſt vtrum non deſideres, an habeas, Senec. Epiſt.119.

Pſal.55.22.

1.Pet.5.7.

ponds of prouiſion dried vp. Now what doth he but continually want, who is in continuall feare of wanting? In a word, this inward contentment maketh vs rich without riches, whole without health, warme without clothes, and merry in our greateſt cauſes of heauineſſe.

§. Sect. 4.
That contentment is to bee ſought, not in outward things, but in the heart and minde.

On the otherſide, though wee ſhould haue all things, and want this contentment, it were as good as nothing, ſeeing this contrariwiſe turneth peace into trouble, riches into pouerty, liberty into ſeruitude, health into ſickneſſe; yea, were ſufficient to make a Hell of Heauen, if it were admitted into it, there being no happineſſe where it inhabiteth, no want of any miſery to thoſe that haue it. For he is vnhappy, who doth not thinke himſelfe happy; he is not rich, who thinketh himſelfe poore, and therefore deſireth more, although he poſſeſſe abundance, becauſe his vnſatiable mind ſwalloweth vp his wealth; hee is not Honorable, though he were Monarch of the whole World, who thinking himſelfe baſe & contemptible, is diſcontented in his greateſt aduancement. And therfore ſeeing this contentation is ſuch a precious jewel, that with it no eſtate, without it all eſtates are miſerable: let vs labour to attaine vnto it, and not ſeeke contentment in outward things, but in our owne minds, for all the world and worldly things cannot bring it to our hearts, vnles we firſt bring contentment vnto them. For as our clothes cannot giue warmth to our bodies, vnles our bodies firſt giue it vnto them: whereof it is that a dead carcaſe which hath loſt its natural heat, cannot haue it reſtored, though all the clothes in the world were laid vpon it: ſo neither can worldly things heat the Heart with comfort and contentment, vnleſſe this ſpiritual warmth be firſt from the mind conueighed vnto them, and where this vitall heat is quite wanting, it is not the Monarchy of the whole world that wil reuiue it. Let vs not therefore ſeek for contentment abroad, ſeeing wee may haue it ſo neere home, not in earthly things, but in our owne hearts, ſeeing the whole World can neither giue nor yet take it from vs, which when we haue, miſery it ſelfe cannot make vs miſerable. Wee may haue (if we will) ſufficient in our owne ſtore; and why then ſhould wee depend vpon others, and liue by borrowing, whereby wee are brought into a wilfull ſeruitude? our own may ſuffice vs, if our mind ſuffice it ſelfe: and wee may abound in all plenty, if wee be not cauſes of our owne pouerty. For let vs but inrich our minds with content, and we may well ſcorne the Worlds riches; ſeeing the ſmalleſt pittance will be ſufficient; & enough (as we ſay) is as good as a feaſt. We ſee that ſound and healthy bodies, though they feed on the courſeſt fare, are ſtrong, fat and in good liking; whereas thoſe that are diſeaſed, are leane and feeble, though they ſit at full Tables, and feed only vpon the daintieſt food: and therefore no man deſireth ſicknes, that hee may ſtill feed on delicacies, but would rather content himſelfe with the ſimpleſt Commons, ſo he might haue health to beare him company: ſo when our minds are in health, hauing in them that vitall heat of comfort and content in God, we are ſo ſtrong and vigorous, that in the meaneſt condition wee are repleniſhed with joy, and though men ſhould take all wee haue from vs, yet whether they will or no, they muſt leaue our chiefe treaſure, content, behind them. But if wee be ſicke of worldly concupiſcence, nothing will either pleaſe or eaſe vs; and all our delicates will be but lothſome, if they be not ſerued in with contentation. Satan could take away Iobs goods but not his comfort, becauſe his content was not in his outward eſtate, but in his heart, and hauing no commiſſion to ranſacke that, he could not ouercome him in the ſpirituall fight, ſeeing though all his riches were gone, his heart ſupplied wealth enough to maintaine the warre. And though hauing ſtripped him of all, he ſhould haue had leaue to haue brought him out to execution, yet his chiefe comforter content, would haue accompanied him euen vnto death, ſeeing it was grounded vpon his affiance and hope in God, which death it ſelfe could not take from him. So though the Amalekites did ſpoile Dauid at once both of his wiues and wealth, yet his contentment was not taken from him, when all outward things failed, becauſe it was not placed in them but in his heart, and in his God; and therefore when for leſſe loſſes his company were ſo inraged through impatiency, that they were ready to ſtone him (like fooles and mad men ſtriking thoſe who are next vnto them) yet affliction being added to affliction, it is ſaid that Dauid comforted himſelfe in the Lord his God. But contrariwiſe wee ſee Ahab ſo weakened with his diſeaſe of couetouſneſſe, that hee ſurfeiteth with the very ſight of Naboths Vineyard; and wanting inward content, a whole Kingdome could not ſatisfie him, nor raiſe or eaſe his dejected mind, which but an opinion of want had ouerthrowne.

Iob 1.21.
Iob 13.15.
1.Sam.30.6.

§. Sect. 5.
That wee m ſeeke conte ment, not b multiplying worldly va ties, but by moderating our deſires and affectio

Would wee therefore haue ſuch contentment as is vnapproachable in the aſſault of any miſery, and (as it were) out of the gunſhot of any danger? Let vs ſeat it chiefly in Heauen vnder the protection of Gods prouidence, and ſo much of it as remaineth with vs, let vs place it in the caſtle of our hearts, which as long as life laſteth none can ſurprize and ſpoile; and not in outward things which eaſily are ſtolne away and it with them. For example, would we haue ſufficiencie of Honours and worldly glory? why then we muſt not with that great Enemy of the Romane Monarchie, thinke of conquering one Nation after another, that ſo ſatiſfying our ambition, we may in the end find reſt, and ſpend the remainder of our dayes in pleaſure and delights: for Honours are vain, and doe not ſatisfie, and the minde is large, and naturally vnſatiable; and therefore here can be no fulneſſe and content, for ſooner may there want Kingdomes to ouercome, than a heart to couet them, as wee ſee in the example of the Grecian Monarch. But this ſufficiency muſt be looked for in the minde and heart, not by ſatisfying, but by moderating & ouer-ruling them, and not by fitting our eſtate to our deſires; (for they being endleſſe, there would be no end of aſpiring) but our deſires to our eſtate, being content with that degree of Honour which God by lawfull meanes doth call vs vnto; counting it our chiefe Honour to contemne thoſe Honours, which on ill and vnlawfull conditions are offered vnto vs; and that wee are then truly great, when as we can deſpiſe wicked greatneſſe.

For ſeeing the excellency both of Honours themſelues, and of their degree and quantity, conſiſteth chiefly in mens mindes and opinions, and not in any abſolute goodneſſe that is in themſelues; therefore he hath enough of them indeed, who hath enough in his owne opinion; and though hee bee but meanly aduanced, yet if his eſtate giue contentment to his mind, or rather his minde to it, hee ſtandeth not in need of more preferments, becauſe hee hath as much as hee deſireth. Whereas if the concupiſcence bee not ouer-ruled with reaſon and religion, the more Honours we haue, the more ambition alſo; and conſequently the leſſe content. For ſeeing all deſiring and aſpiring commeth from opinion of want, and he that euer wanteth can neuer be ſatisfied; therefore it mattereth not how great our preferments are in themſelues, if we thinke them little vnto vs; ſeeing he who thinketh he hath too little, ſtil affecteth more, and can neuer be content till his owne heart telleth him, that hee hath enough. If therefore we would haue contentment in Honours, we muſt not labour to attaine vnto it by multiplying of preferments, but by moderating our ambion, ſetting before vs the example of the Prophet Dauid, who being by God himſelfe anointed King, did not ambitiouſly aſpire to take poſſeſſion of the Royall Throne, by cutting off Saul, though he were rejected by God, but waited till the Lord himſelfe did make him a way, by giuing vnto him lawful means. And when hee was higheſt in his eſtate hee was not haughty in his heart, but was as humble as a wained child, whileſt he welded the Scepter, and held in his hand ſoueraigne power, whereby hauing his minde farre vnder his condition, though through his ſonnes ambition he loſt his Kingdome, yet not his content, but was willing to accept of any eſtate which the Lord would aſſigne vnto him. Here am I (ſaith he) let him doe to me as ſeemeth good in his eyes. And this was that leſſon which our Sauiour taught his Diſciples, when as they ambitiouſly ſtroue one with another who ſhould be greateſt; not to ſatisfie their ambition by ſupplanting one another, or attaining vnto preferments, but to ſubdue their pride, and moderate their concupiſcence, becomming as meeke and humble as thoſe little children which hee ſet before them.

2.Sam.15.26.

Mat.18.3,4.

§. Sect.6.

If we would haue contentment in riches, wee muſt lay aſide couetouſneſſe.

And thus alſo muſt we looke for ſufficiency of riches, not in our outward eſtate, but in our mind; not by adding to our wealth, but by diminiſhing our concupiſcence: for though the World may thinke it a ſtrange paradoxe, yet it is an vndoubted Trueth, that a man is made truly rich, not by multipſication, but by ſubſtraction; not by increaſing his riches, but by abating his immoderate deſires. For ſeeing the riches of the whole World are finite, and the minde of man in ſome ſort infinite and vnſatiable; therefore there can be no fulneſſe or ſufficiency by fitting riches to our minds, which is impoſſible; but by limiting and circumſcribing our deſires and concupiſcence, making them ſo little, as that they may be ſatisfied, ſeeing the other can neuer be ſo great, as to fill and ſatisfie them in their full largeneſſe. And if wee thus confine our vnlimited deſires with true content, we ſhall attaine vnto greater and better riches, than the whole World can yeeld, for that may giue vs much, but not enough, and where there is not enough there is want, and hee that wanteth is ſtill poore, ſeeing penury and pouerty goe together; but content bringeth ſufficiency to the meaneſt eſtate, and he that hath ſufficiency wanteth nothing, and hee who wanteth nothing is aboue all others truly rich. And thus the Apoſtle preſcribeth a way how a Chriſtian may be rich, and neuer need to ſeeke helpe from the earthly Mammon: Godlineſſe (ſaith he) is great riches, with contentation. So that a man may be rich without riches, when godlineſſe and contentation doe meet together. And to the ſame purpoſe one of the Ancients well defineth riches: Thoſe (ſaith he) are true and neuer waſting riches, to deſire that onely which is neceſſary for vſe, and well to diſpoſe of thoſe things which are thus to be vſed: for as an ill man ſaid well, If we liue according to nature, we ſhall neuer be poore, if according to opinion, wee ſhall neuer bee rich; nature deſiring but a little, and opinion being inſatiable. Hee therefore who is indued with Gods ſpirituall graces, godlineſſe, and contentation, is truly rich, though his outward eſtate, be neuer ſo meane, and of him that may be truly ſaid, which the Spirit ſpeaketh to the Angell of the Church of Smyrna;

1.Tim.6.6.

Chryſoſt. in Gen. 16. Hom. 37.

Si ad naturam viues nunquam eris pauper, ſi ad opinionem nunquam diues. Exiguum natura deſiderat, opinio immenſum, Epicurus apud Senecã Epiſt.16.

Apoc.2.9. Solum illum Deus diuitem nouit, qui ſit diues æternitati, &c. Ambroſ. ad Simplic. Epiſt.lib.3. Epiſt.10.

Non qui parum habet, ſed qui plus cupit pauper eſt, Senec.

na; I know thy pouerty, but thou art rich. For he onely is rich in Gods eſtimate, who is rich vnto eternity, laying vp in ſtore the fruits, not of earthly abundance but of vertue: he which hath ſuch peace and tranquillity of mind, that he deſireth nothing, nor is toſſed with the waues of concupiſcence, neither loathing his old ſtore, nor ſeeking new, by perpetuall deſiring, making himſelfe poore in abundance of wealth. The onely way therfore to attaine ſufficiency of riches, is to haue in all eſtates a contented mind; for thus we may be rich in the middeſt of pouerty, ſeeing he is rich who hath enough, and he hath enough whoſe ſtate agreeth with his mind; neither is hee poore who hath little, but he who not being ſufficed deſireth more. Wheras if we want this contentment, though we haue neuer ſo great ſtore of wealth, yet we remaine poore; neither can it by ſatisfying our minds make vs happy, but onely change our miſery, making vs now want in plenty, who before wanted through penury. And this commeth to paſſe becauſe our minds continuing ſick and diſeaſed with diſcontent, which ariſeth from their inſatiety, doe make riches as troubleſome, and more burthenſome vnto vs than our pouerty. For as he who is ſick of the Dropſie is alike tormented with vnſatiable thirſt, whether hee drinke in ſiluer Plate, or in earthen Pots; and hee who is ſicke of a Feuer is alike ill at eaſe, when he lyeth in a Bed of Iuory, and when he lyeth in a Bed of Wood; becauſe whereſoeuer he doth lie his diſeaſe followeth him: ſo if our minds be ſicke of couetouſneſſe, it mattereth not whether we haue much or little, ſeeing theſe outward things cannot cure the inward diſeaſes of the mind; nor whether we be poore or wealthy, ſeeing our concupiſcence ſtill accompanieth vs.

§.Sect.7. That contentment in pleaſures is had, not by multiplying them, but by reſtraining our appetites.

Finally, if wee would haue ſufficiency of pleaſure, it is not to bee found in outward things, which only ſatiate and neuer ſatisfie, but in the inward contentation of the minde, which wee may eaſily attaine vnto, if wee change our carnall delights into ſpirituall rejoycing in God, in the fruition of his ſpirituall graces, and in our aſſurance of his heauenly joyes. For this wil make our hearts ſo inwardly cheerefull, that wee ſhall take pleaſure in all outward things, not onely ſuch as the world delighteth in, but alſo in thoſe which are tedious and troubleſome vnto them: for this inward pleaſure will turne our labours into recreations, and our ſorrowes into joy, making vs to be merry and rejoyce, not onely in worldly proſperity, but alſo in tribulation, as the Apoſtle teacheth vs, both by his [a] doctrine and [b] example: and this is that joy, which, as our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, is [c] full, and therefore ſatisfieth vs, and permanent, and therefore can neuer be taken from vs. But if beſides this ſpirituall joy, we would bo ſatisfied with worldly pleaſures, wee muſt not looke for this ſufficiency in outward things, but in our minds, not by multiplying our delights, but by reſtraining our appetites. For otherwiſe well may we be glutted, but neuer contented with worldly pleaſures, like the arch-Epicure himſelfe, who confeſſed that loathing coſtly delicates, he contented himſelfe to feed on bread and water, not becauſe he was weary of his dainty cates, ſo much as of the diſcommodities which he felt when he had ſurfeited on them. And thus the diuine Heathen bridled his voluptuous concupiſcence, by accuſtoming it to want that which it moſt deſired, when as being athirſt, he would often draw water out of his Well, and powre it out againe without drinking, vntill hee had ſo maſtered himſelfe, that hee could quench his thirſt with a moderate and wel-ruled appetite: and if wee would thus limit our deſires, and curbe in our vnſatiable voluptuouſneſſe, if we would liue to nature, and not to luſt, and be ruled by reaſon, and not opinion, then would a few pleaſures ſatisfie vs, and being ſatisfied wee ſhould want nothing.

a Rom.5.3. b Acts 16.25. 2.Cor.7.4. c John 15.11.

Epicurus ap Stobæum, Serm.17.

Plato apud Stobæum, Serm.17.

§.Sect.8. The firſt and chiefe mean of content on is wholly reſigne our ſelues to the will of God.

And thus haue I ſhewed that the only meanes of attaining vnto ſufficiency of outward things, is by inward contentment. Now it remayneth that I alſo ſhew how this contentation may be obtained, or elſe the difficulty were but onely changed, and not remoued; as if the Phyſician ſhould tell vs that ſuch a potion would cure vs, but neuer teach vs how to make it, or where to haue it. The firſt and principall meanes of attaining vnto contentation, is wholly to reſigne our ſelues ouer to the good will and pleaſure of God, ſubmitting our wils vnto his will, and ſaying with our Sauiour Chriſt, not my will, but thine be done: the which howſoeuer it be an hard leſſon to fleſh and bloud, yet may we eaſily learne it, if we know, and knowing beleeue; firſt, that the Lord vpon whom we wholly rely is infinite in wiſdome, and therefore knoweth much better what is good and profitable for vs, eſpecially for the eternall ſauing of our ſoules, than we our ſelues. For if the child taketh no care for himſelfe, but reſteth contented with that prouiſion and allowance which his louing Father allotteth to him, becauſe hee knoweth that his fathers diſcretion exceedeth his; and if being ſick, we be content to receiue vpon the Phyſicians word, not only thoſe things which we affect, but euen bitter Pils and vnpleaſing Potions, which we loath and abhorre, becauſe we know, his skill exceeding ours, he is much better able to direct vs for the recouery of our health: then how much rather ſhould wee lay aſide care, and rely vpon the allowance of our heauenly Father? How much rather ſhould wee truſt this ſpirituall

Math.26.3

Phyſition, whoſe skill and faithfulneſſe neuer failed? Wee in our fooliſh appetite deſire worldly honours, but he in his wiſdome denieth them, becauſe hee knoweth they are but windy meats, which would not nouriſh our ſoules, but puffe vs vp with pride. Wee affect worldly riches, but hee withholdeth them, becauſe hee well ſeeth they would be a meanes to make vs poore in grace, and as vnfit to enter into the ſtraite and low gate of Heauen, as the Camell into the needles eye. We dote vpon carnall pleaſures, but he witholdeth them from vs, becauſe hee knoweth that our licorous and greedy appeties would eaſily ſurfet of them, and ſo loſe our ſpiritual health and ſtrength, if not our bodily alſo: & therfore why ſhould we not bee contented to want theſe things, which if they would not bring more hurt thā good, more loſſe than profit, our heauenly Father, and moſt cunning Phyſition would neuer haue denied them vnto vs. And this argument our Sauiour Chriſt vſeth to remoue carking care, and worke contentation, becauſe our heauenly Father knoweth better than our ſelues of what wee ſtand in need. Secondly, let vs conſider, that as he beſt knoweth what is fit for vs, ſo hee is omnipotent, and therefore moſt able to ſupplie it; and as hee can giue riches without contentment, ſo alſo is hee alike able to giue content without riches; for it is he himſelfe rather than his gifts, that doth ſatiate the heauie ſoule, and repleniſheth the ſorrowfull ſoule with ioy, as the Prophet ſpeaketh. And theſe two things knowne and remembred, may make vs reſt with content vpon his abilitie to doe vs good; for if hee knoweth what is beſt for vs, and hath power alſo to giue it, who can doubt of his ſufficiencie? But though hee be God all-ſufficient, and therefore able to prouide for vs, yet how may wee reſt aſſured that he will doe it? Surely this is no leſſe certaine than the other; firſt, becauſe his loue towards vs is infinite, as being our gracious Father in Chriſt, who hath loued vs ſo dearely, that he hath giuen vnto vs & for vs, his onely beloued Sonne, and that to ſuffer for vs death, euen, that bitter and ſhamefull death of the croſſe, that he might worke the worke of our redemption; and thus he loued vs, not when wee were friends and children, but ſtrangers and enemies. From whence wee may conclude with the Apoſtle, that hee who hath giuen vnto vs his Sonne, when wee were in the ſtate of enmity, cannot poſſibly deny any thing which is good for vs to receiue, ſeeing wee are now reconciled and become his friends. Secondly, his will is manifeſted by his manifold and gracious promiſes, whereby hee hath vndertaken to miniſter vnto vs all things that are good, ſo the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that if wee feare the Lord, there is nothing that is good ſhall be wanting vnto vs; and that the Lord our God is our ſunne and ſhield, who giueth grace and glory, and withholdeth no good thing from them that walke vprighly. Our Sauiour likewiſe hath promiſed vs, that if wee firſt ſeeke the kingdome of God and his righteouſneſſe, all outward things alſo ſhall be miniſtred vnto vs. And the Apoſtle telleth vs that wee ought to be content with thoſe things which wee haue, becauſe the Lord hath promiſed that he will not faile vs, neither forſake vs. If he had promiſed his gifts and not himſelfe, there might be cauſe of diſcontent, when they are wanting; as for example, if he had promiſed onely honours, riches, and pleaſures of the world, and ſaid that theſe would neuer faile, wee ſhould haue had little comfort or content in our diſgrace, pouerty and bitter griefes, becauſe all theſe things haue left vs; but when hee promiſeth vs himſelfe, that hee will neuer forſake vs, we can neuer haue iuſt cauſe of diſcontent; becauſe what is wanting in our outward eſtate, he is ready to ſupply by his inward graces, and able to make our little ſufficient, as well as plentie, and euen our nothing as good as all things.

Matth. 6. 33.

Hebr. 13. 5.

§. Sect. 9.
That Chriſtians may ſafely and ſecurely reſt on Gods prouidence.

Seeing then our God in whom we truſt, is ſo infinit in wiſdome and power, ſo infinit alſo in his loue towards vs, and no leſſe gracious in his promiſes, than true in performance, as being truth it ſelfe, who cannot deceiue, and his words, Yea and Amen: what foule ſhame were it for vs who profeſſe Chriſtianitie, and by often inſtruction haue attained to the knowledge of theſe principles; not to rely our ſelues wholly vpon him with full content, ſubmitting our wills vnto his will, and liking of that which beſt pleaſeth him, ſeeing the very heathens, who were ignorant of this truſt, and deſtitute of all their hopes & comforts, could yet reſigne themſelues ouer to be ruled at the pleaſure of their diuine powers. So one of them ſaith, that that ought to pleaſe man, whatſoeuer pleaſeth God; and againe, It is neceſſarie that euery man that is good, ſhould be of great piety towards God, and conſequently that hee ſuffer with a patient minde whatſoeuer happeneth vnto him; knowing that it happeneth by diuine prouidence which gouerneth all things. Neither in truth can there bee a more effectuall argument, to moue vs vnto contentation of mind, and to beare whatſoeuer befalleth vs with patience and comfort, than to conſider, that God, who is in himſelfe infinite in wiſdome and knowledge, and vnto vs moſt gracious and mercifull, doth ſo order and gouerne all things with his prouidence, that not ſo much as a ſparrow can light on the ground, or an haire fall from our head, but as they are guided by it. Whereof it is that Placeat homini quicquid Deo placet. Senec. epiſt. 74.

Virum bonum neceſſe eſt ſummæ pietatis erga deos eſſe, &c. epiſt. 76.

Matth.6.

our Sauiour Chriſt perſuading vs to lay aſide carking care, and to reſt wholly vpon God with contentation of mind, doth chiefly inſiſt vpon this reaſon, as being moſt powerfull and effectuall. For if there be no doubt to be made either of Gods ability, or of his loue; and if we certainely know that by his wiſe, powerfull and moſt gracious prouidence, he appointeth, directeth and gouerneth all things whatſoeuer which happen vnto vs, or any way concerne vs: then muſt wee alſo neceſſarily conclude, that all that befalleth vs is for the beſt; and that the calling, ſtate & condition wherein we liue, though in it ſelfe it may ſeeme euill & full of miſerie, and were in truth ſo as it ſeemeth vnto other men, yet vnto vs it is of all others moſt good and profitable, ſeeing it is appointed and allotted vnto vs by God, whoſe infinite wiſedome, power, truth, and loue would haue diſpoſed otherwiſe of vs, had he not knowne this eſtate moſt fitting for vs; and would not haue denied vnto vs any thing which our hearts deſire, but that hee knoweth that they would doe vs more hurt than good, and hinder, rather than further the eternall ſaluation of our ſoules. So the Pſalmiſt telleth vs, that those who feare the Lord ſhall want nothing; the which hee limiteth and reſtraineth in the next verſe because we are ready to make our concupiſcence, and not reaſon and truth, the meaſure of our wants, telling vs that they ſhall not want any thing which is good; for otherwiſe, if God ſhould beſtow vpon vs thoſe things which he knoweth would be hurtfull vnto vs, though they be good in their owne nature, they would bee euill vnto vs, and through our abuſe, of benefits become curſes. And therefore whatſoeuer our condition or portion is, wee may ſafely conclude, that it is beſt for vs, and ſay with the Prophet Dauid, the lines are fallen vnto me in pleaſant places, yea I haue a goodly heritage; praiſing the Lord for that wee haue, and not murmuring for that we haue not. For if wee know that for the care and loue which God beareth vs, hee hath giuen vnto vs that we haue; let vs know alſo that in the ſame care and loue hee hath meaſured vnto vs our proportion, which ſhould make vs rejoyce in thoſe things which wee haue receiued, and not breake out into impatience, becauſe ſomething wee deſire is withheld from vs. Yea ſeeing the Lord keepeth nothing from vs, but ſuch things as he knoweth would be tentations vnto ſinne, let vs glorie in theſe wants, and giue thankes to God, that wee haue not more gifts than grace to vſe them, nor receiued a burthen aboue our ſtrength.

Pſal.34.9.10.

Pſal.16.6.
Si noſti quod propter curam quam de nobis habet Deus, nobis largitus eſt, illudquoque intelligas quod propter eandem curam menſuram tribuit.
Chryſoſt.in 1.Cor.12.Homil.29.

§.Sect.10.
The reaſons why the Lord

giueth wo things to of his chil and no others.

Yea will ſome ſay, but I ſee others whom God loueth abound in honours, riches and delights, who notwithſtanding ſerue God faithfully, and imploy theſe gifts which they haue receiued, to the glory of him from whom they haue receiued them; and why might not I alſo enjoying them bee bettered & not hurt by them as well as they? I anſwere, that all are not of the like nature and temper, but as wee ſay ſo many men, ſo many minds: by reaſon whereof it commeth to paſſe, that ones food is anothers poyſon, one mans rayſing is anothers ruine, and that which is moſt profitable for this man, is for another moſt pernicious. There is no wiſe phyſition giueth the ſame phyſicke to all patients, or in the ſame proportion; but hee fitteth it in quantitie and quality to euery ones neede, giuing one pils to purge him, another cordials to reſtore him; one muſt be launched, another muſt bee healed; one muſt haue ſauces to quicken his appetite, another muſt faſt & be cured by abſtinence. Neither is there any wiſe houſhoulder that particularly knowing the condition of his family, will prouide for, and feed all with like food, or with equall quantity; for one loueth that which another loatheth, and this man riſeth hungrie with that allowance which would cauſe another to ſurfet with exceſſe. And doeſt thou deny vnto God that liberty of diſpoſing vnto euery one that which beſt befitteth them, when as thou alloweſt it vnto men? Shall the phyſition order his patients as he pleaſeth, who often faileth in skill, and ſometime in faithfulneſſe; and ſhall not the Lord be allowed to purge or reſtore, wound or bind vp, cautherize or heale, as hee knoweth moſt fitting for his ſeuerall patients, ſeeing hee can neither erre in knowledge, nor faile in loue? Shall the houſhoulder haue leaue to diſpoſe of his owne goods in his owne family, who notwithſtanding may be ſhort in diſcretion, or partiall in affection; and muſt the Lord bee ſtinted, ſo as he may not giue according to his pleaſure that allowance to euery one which hee knoweth moſt requiſite, ſeeing his wiſdome is infinite and his loue incomprehenſible, reſpecting the perſon of none, but doing good to all, as their ſtate and condition doth require? We find by experience that one man is bettered by liberty, another by reſtraint. One being of an ingenuous nature, is made better by benefits, another of a more ſeruile diſpoſition becommeth worſe, and is onely mended with threats and puniſhments: vpon the one kindneſſe worketh, vpon the other feare. This man is fit for imployment when hee hath well fed, another is ſo drowſie that hee is good for nothing but to ſleepe. Now who is moſt fit to iudge of thy nature and diſpoſition, and accordingly to allot vnto thee the moſt fitting proportion? Thou, who being blinded with pride and ſelfeloue ouerweeneſt thy gifts, and thinkeſt thou couldeſt well beare a ſaile, which in truth would ouer-turne thee; or God, who hauing made thee of nothing ſearcheth the heart and reines, and plainely ſeeth all thy ſecret thoughts and hidden imaginations, notwithſtanding all thoſe vailes which ſelfe-loue hath caſt ouer them? Thou deſireſt honours, but God knoweth that pride lurking in thy heart, would if thou haddeſt them, make thee inſolent and the more ambitious; thou wouldeſt wallow in worldly delights, but God knoweth that thou wouldeſt dote ſo much vpon them, that thou wouldeſt neglect the joyes of heauen; thou wiſheſt to be rich in goods, but God knoweth they would make thee poore in godlineſſe: thou deſireſt health and ſtrength, but God ſeeth they would make thy ſoule ſicke and weake, cauſing thee to bee the more ſecure, and to put the day of repentance farre from thee. And therefore the Lord giueth thee contempt for honour to make thee humble, and fit by ſtooping to enter into the gates of heauen; he giueth thee miſeries for delights, that being weaned from the world thou maieſt hunger after his eternall joyes: inſtead of riches, he giueth thee pouerty, that thy heart being empty of worldly vanities, may be filled with his graces; and for health he giueth thee ſickneſſe, that thou maieſt daily caſt vp thine accounts, and be alwayes ready when hee calleth for thee to giue a reckoning of thy ſtewardſhip.

Yea but the Lord if he would, might haue made mee honourable and humble, rich and gracious too, he might haue giuen mee abundance of his gifts, and a mind alſo to vſe them well; and ſeeing others haue both, why haue not I as well as they? But who art thou O man who diſputeſt with God! ſhould the pot ſay to the potter, why haſt thou made me thus? Though there were no other reaſon why thou haſt not receiued theſe double gifts of proſperity and grace, but Gods ſole will, it were ſufficient to ſatisfie vs, ſeeing they are his free and vndeſerued gifts, which he may juſtly beſtow where he pleaſeth. For may he not doe with his owne what hee will? or is our eye euill becauſe he is good? Is it not enough for vs to be ſeruants of his family, vnleſſe wee bee ſtewards and chiefe officers? ſhould we not rather bee thankfull for receiuing many benefits, than repine becauſe wee haue not receiued all? doth it not ſuffice vs that wee are made partakers of his chiefe iewels, & are adopted ſonnes and heires of our eternall patrimonie; vnleſſe wee haue alſo ſeruants wages, and a large ſhare in earthly trifles? and can wee not bee content that the Lord hath giuen vs leaue to goe to heauen, if wee may not alſo chuſe our way? But conſider further that thou art not ſcanted of any thing thou deſireſt, becauſe the Lord is niggardly in his gifts; for his bounty was ſuch, that had it not beene our owne fault, wee might haue beene partakers of all: for in our firſt creation hee gaue vs grace and glory, vertue and happineſſe, abundance of his bleſſings, and holy wiſdome and pure affections wherby we were enabled rightly to vſe them. But by our fall in the loines of our firſt parents, we brought our ſelues into the ſtate of corruption, whereby we loſt all right both to ſpirituall graces and worldly bleſſings; and are we not well though for a while wee haue not both, if the better part be reſtored vnto vs? By our ſinne wee haue ſo diſordered Gods bleſſings, and diuided his gifts, that very ſeldome his ſpirituall graces and temporall benefits will reſt together, vnleſſe by the ſupernaturall and admirable worke of his holy ſpirit they bee reconciled: and would wee daily haue God to doe miracles by ioyning the height of proſperity, and the height of grace, and (as it were) heauen and earth in the ſame ſubject? Againe, conſider that in this ſtate of corruption, for the preſeruing of humane ſociety, it is neceſſarie that there ſhould bee ſome of meane quality, as well as honourable, poore as rich, weake as well as ſtrong; and why ſhould any thinke that the condition wherein God hath placed him, is not as fit for him as for another? for wherein hath he deſerued better at Gods hands that hee ſhould preferre him? or what hath hee that hee hath not receiued? or why ſhould any deſire all, when as vpon examination hee ſhall find that hee deſerueth nothing? Furthermore, if it pleaſeth the Lord, the more to manifeſt the glory of his wiſedome and power, to caſt vs firſt downe whom hee meaneth to aduance; to make contemptible, whom hee purpoſeth to make glorious; to afflict with pouerty and miſerie, whom hee intendeth to inrich with eternall happineſſe, and to bring vs to heauen (as it were) by hell gates; why ſhould wee not willingly follow him euen in the fouleſt way that will bring vs to the faire iourneies end of joy and bleſſedneſſe? Finally, let vs remember that the world was not made for our paradiſe, where we ſhould haue all joy without ſorrow, and good without the mixture of any euill; but for our pilgrimage, where for ſinne wee ſhould be afflicted, tried and proued, that ſo through Gods free mercy being found fit, we might bee receiued into our heauenly countrie, and there injoy our happineſſe and felicity, without the diſturbance of any miſerie. Laſtly, let vs conſider, that God in his kingdome hath ſeuerall rewards, though the ſame bleſſedneſſe, and (as it were) crownes of glory, of diuers makings. Hee hath one reward and crowne for the patient poore, and another for the bountifull rich;

one

§. Sect. 13.
The ſecond meanes of contentment is to leade a godly life.
1.Tim 6.6.

one for them who are humbly honourable, and another for them who are couragious in contempt; one for them who doe well, and another for thoſe that ſuffer for well doing; meaſuring his rewards according to the meaſure of his gifts and graces; why therefore ſhould wee not deſire to haue all fitted? Why ſhould wee not bee content with any ſo wee may be ſure of one? why ſhould we not with patience and cheerefulneſſe ſuffer here want, that there wee may haue fulneſſe; miſerie that we may find ioy; pouerty that we may be inriched with theſe treaſures; and ignominie and contempt, that we may receiue this crowne of glory. And this argument of comfort and contentation our Sauiour Chriſt vſeth: for hauing perſwaded his diſciples to relie on Gods prouidence without carking care, and promiſed that if they would ſeeke firſt Gods kingdome and righteouſneſſe, they ſhould haue alſo worldly neceſſaries ſupplied vnto them; becauſe they were like to haue ſome ſmall diſcouragement by their ſhort allowance of theſe deſired benefits, he willeth them not to feare for all this, becauſe it was their fathers pleaſure to giue them a kingdome.

Luk. 12. 32.

§. Sect. 12. The ſecond meanes of contentment is to leade a godly life. 1. Tim. 6. 6.

The next meanes to attaine vnto contentation, is to liue an holy and Chriſtian life, walking in the wayes of Gods Commandements, in ſincerity and vprightneſſe of heart; for firſt godlineſſe muſt enrich vs, before we can bee content with that wee haue: firſt God muſt dwell with vs by his ſpirit, before wee can bee content to forbeare the worlds company. Our hearts muſt be filled with better things, before we can be willing to part with worſe; they muſt be inriched with heauenly treaſures, before wee will leaue immoderate ſeeking of earthly traſh; they muſt be indued with knowledge, faith, affiance, hope, loue and the reſt of Gods ſanctifying graces, before they can lightly eſteeme of honours, riches, and earthly delights: for hauing a naturall appetite and hungring deſires, either they muſt be filled and ſatisfied with that which is good, or elſe they will with vnſatiable longing affect and couet worldly vanities; like the ſtomacke, which vnleſſe it bee ſufficed with wholeſome food, will ſucke in the wind, though being full of it, it is not ſatisfied, but rather tormented. Againe, if we haue any true contentment wee muſt haue it in the Lord, as hath beene ſhewed; but there is no contentment to bee had in God without godlineſſe: for howſoeuer the Lord be infinite in wiſedome, power, goodneſſe, loue, and truth, yet we cannot comfortably apply any of all this to our ſelues, for our vſe and benefit; neither in truth doe they at all appertaine vnto vs, vnleſſe wee performe ſuch conditions, as God requireth, louing, fearing, truſting in, & ſeruing him in ſimplicity, ſincerity, & vprightnes of heart; ſeeing the Lord hath limited the promiſes of all his mercies to ſuch as obſerue them. So the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that nothing ſhall bee wanting which is good to thoſe who ſeeke the Lord and feare him; that if we delight in the Lord hee will giue vs our hearts deſire; that the Lord will bee a ſunne and ſhield, giue grace and glory, and withhold no good thing from them that walke vprightly. So the wiſe man telleth vs it is the good conſcience which makes a continuall feaſt; and that it is the feare of the Lord, which being put into the ſkole with a little, waigheth downe in worth and waight all worldly riches and abundance. Finally, our Sauiour Chriſt telleth vs, that we ſhall haue from God a ſupplie of all earthly neceſſaries; but it is vpon the condition, that we firſt ſeeke his kingdome and righteouſneſſe. Thoſe therefore who performe theſe duties which God requireth, may with comfort and contentation of minde reſt ſecurely vpon his prouidence and promiſes, becauſe they haue aſſured intereſt and title vnto them; and they may ioyfully ſubmit their wills vnto his, taking all he ſendeth in good part, ſeeing his mercies are ſweet, and his chaſtiſements wholeſome, and all whatſoeuer being foreſeene and directed by his wiſedome, ruled by his prouidence, and applied vnto vs in loue, muſt needs turne to our good, and further our ſaluation. Whereas contrariwiſe thoſe who liue in their ſinnes, and haue no deſire to ſerue the Lord, can neuer haue this true contentation, becauſe in the ſtorme of troubles, they want this hauen to flee vnto, and in their wants cannot with comfort & aſſurance flee vnto God for helpe, ſeeing they conceiue of him as of a iuſt Iudge, who will take vengeance on them for their ſinnes, and not as of a mercifull father, who will ſupply all their wants, ſeeing they liue not like his children, but like his enemies.

Pſal. 34.9. and 37.4. 84.11.

Pro. 15.15.

Matt. 6.33.

§. Sect. 1 The third meanes is to thinke of benefits a well as of wants.

Laſtly, if wee would haue contentation in all eſtates, wee muſt as well haue an eye vpon thoſe things which through Gods mercy we enioy, as vpon thoſe things which we want; & thinke as well what we deſerue, as what wee deſire. For if we would conſider that in our greateſt wants we injoy innumerable bleſſings of God, whereas our ſins haue deſerued, that they ſhould all be taken from vs, & his iudgements & puniſhments inflicted, as a fit wages for our ſinfull ſeruice; then would we not be diſcontented for that wee haue not, but contented with that we haue, nor repine for wanting ſome things, but reioyce that the Lord vouchſafeth vs any thing. Againe, if wee would but conſider how many benefits wee inioy which others want, who are much more worworthie; if wee would looke how many come behind vs in rewards, that goe farre before vs in deſert; we would not through diſcontent make our ſelues miſerable, becauſe we cannot bee ſo happy as we deſire; wee would not fret becauſe ſome goe before vs, but reioyce that wee are preferred before ſo many; nor repiningly thinke Gods liberalitie ſcant and ſtrait, becauſe we haue not all, but rather admire and thankfully extoll his infinit bounty, that hee vouchſafeth vnto vs any thing, who haue deſerued nothing. Whereas if our finger be alwayes vpon our ſores, and our eye vpon our wants, neuer thinking what wee haue, but what we deſire; if we alwayes looke vpon thoſe who go before vs, & neuer caſt backe our eye vpon thoſe that follow vs; if we compare our wants with others plentie, and our miſeries with their ioyes; neuer looking at that wherein they alſo are defectiue, nor vpon thoſe euils, wherein they haue their ſhare; then can we neuer want ſorrow and diſcontent, becauſe we are our own tormenters, nor liue at eaſe with comfort and quietneſſe, ſeeing we picke quarrels againſt our owne peace, and whip our ſelues with rods of our owne making.

And thus haue I ſhewed that our contentment is to be found in ſpirituall and not in worldly things: but for as much as we cannot here haue full contentment, becauſe wee are not full of grace, nor be throughly ſatisfied with ſpirituall things, becauſe they are imperfect, and our deſires alſo worldly and carnall; let vs aboue all things labour to attaine vnto heauenly happineſſe, and to bee partakers of thoſe eternall ioyes which will fully ſatisfie without all loathing ſacietie, ſeeing by the infinit wiſdome and power of God they are of ſuch a nature, that their fulneſſe is accompanied with a continuall appetite, ſo as they doe at the ſame time ſatisfie and inflame deſire, prouoke and quench the thirſt, and ſo inlarge the heart perpetually, as that they alſo fill and content it. And whereas the worlds pleaſures like chil-blanes in the feete, doe itch and ake both together, and like the itch make vs loſe that pleaſure by ſmarting, which we tooke in ſcratching; theſe heauenly ioyes bring fulneſſe and perpetuity of content, without the mixture of any trouble: ſo the Pſalmiſt telleth vs, that in Gods preſence is fulneſſe of ioy, and at his right hand there are pleaſures for euermore; that wee ſhall bee ſatiſfied with the fatneſſe of Gods houſe, and that God will giue vs drinke out of the riuers of his pleaſures. For God ſhall be vnto vs all in all, and beholding his face in righteouſnes we ſhall be ſatiſfied with his image, as the Scripture teacheth vs: for what can ſuffice if God ſatiſfie not, ſeeing he is infinite in all goodnes, loue, louelines, beautie, wiſdome and all perfections? And therfore if we be once certaine of theſe ioyes, though it be but by the aſſurance of faith and hope, we ſhall not mourne with diſcontent in the abſence of worldly vanities, ſeeing we ſhall want them no more, if once this diuine brightneſſe hath illuminated our hearts, than wee want the candle light when the Sunne ſhineth. Now if wee would attaine vnto this aſſurance of theſe heauenly ioyes, wee muſt make Chriſt our way, for none climeth thither but by this [a] ladder, and by a liuely faith bee ingrafted into him, that ſo in him being reconciled, iuſtified and adopted, we may being [b] ſons, be alſo heires of euerlaſting happineſſe. As alſo wee muſt ſhew the fruits of our faith in ſanctification of life, ſeeing the Scriptures plainely teach vs, that if wee bee not [c] ſanctified, we are not iuſtified, and if we be not iuſtified, we ſhall neuer bee ſaued, that without [d] holineſſe we ſhall neuer ſee God, that [e] nothing vncleane ſhall enter in thither; and that vnleſſe we be [f] regenerate and borne againe, wee can neuer enter into the kingdome of heauen. And therefore if vve vvould bee Citizens of the kingdome of glory, wee muſt firſt paſſe thorow the ſuburbs of grace; wee muſt doe God ſeruice, if we expect to receiue [g] wages; and [h] ouercome the ſpirituall enemies of our ſaluation, before wee can receiue the crowne of righteouſneſſe, and triumph as conquerers in euerlaſting glorie.

[a] Iohn 1.51.
[b] *Rom.*8.15.17.
[c] *Rom.*8.30.
[d] *Hebr.*12.14.
[e] *Apoc.*21.27.
[f] Iohn 3.3.
[g] *Matth.*20.4.
[h] *Apocal.*3.21.

CHAP. XX.

Of the vnprofitableneſſe of worldly vanities, in compariſon of Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly ioyes.

§. *Sect.*1.
That there is no profit in worldly things to thoſe who ſet their hearts vpon them.

THe next argument which in my generall diuiſion I propounded to perſwade all to a iuſt contempt of worldly things, in compariſon of ſpirituall grace and eternall glorie, is their vnprofitablenes. The which alſo is a neceſſarie conſequent of their vanitie: for becauſe they are vaine and worthleſſe, therefore they cannot greatly profit thoſe that haue them; whereof it is that the Wiſe man, hauing ſhewed that all is vanitie, preſently inferreth, that there is no profit vnder the Sunne. And holy Samuel exhorteth the people to ſerue the Lord with all their hearts, and not to turne after vaine things, which could not profit nor deliuer them, becauſe they were but vanitie. And our Sauiour Chriſt telleth vs, that it will not at all profit a man, though he gaine the whole world, if hee loſe his ſoule, as hee ſurely doth, who more eſteemeth gold than godlineſſe, and ſetteth his heart more vpon theſe earthly vanities, than vpon God him-

*Eccleſ.*2.11.
1.*Sam.*12.21.
*Matth.*16.26.

himſelfe, and the eternall ioyes of his kingdome. So that theſe worldly things are like vnto glittering tinſels, which make a glorious ſhew, yet being vaine and worthleſſe, ſerue to no good vſe, but make thoſe that weare them the prouder only, and not the warmer, as equally letting in the outward wind that cooleth them, and in the invvard wind of vaine glorie, whereby they are ſvvelled and puffed vp. Or like vnto cloathes full of maſſie gold, which adorne vs vnto others, but loade vs in our owne ſenſe; for howſoeuer worldly vanities make a goodly ſhew to thoſe who neuer had them, yet their owners find them vaine and vnprofitable, as being in their greateſt need, rather comberſome burthens, than ſound comforts.

§. Sect. 2. That worldly honors are vnprofitable.

But this will better appeare in the ſpeciall examples of honors, riches, and carnal pleaſures. For what profit is there in vaine-glory, the praiſe of men, and worldly preferments, if wee ambitiouſly affect them, and ſet our hearts too much vpon them, ſeeing they doe not ſo much extoll and magnifie vs before men, as they abaſe and vilifie vs in the ſight of God? And what will it profit vs to bee prayſed of men, when God and our owne conſciences ſhall condemne vs, either becauſe wee haue compaſſed theſe honours by euill meanes, or ſinne in their fruition, by preferring them in our hearts before God and godlineſſe? What will it auaile vs, when running ill in the ſpirituall race wee haue the applauſe of the ſtanders by; if the Iudge himſelfe cenſure vs as vnworthy to receiue the garland? It is not theſe waxen wings of men prayſes, which are ready to wind euery way with the heate of their affections, and melt and vaniſh when the ſcorching Sunne of affliction ariſeth, that will carrie vs to heauen; neither is it their diſprayſes that can hinder vs in our aſcent, if wee bee ſupported with the wings of faith and a good conſcience, much leſſe pull vs downe againe, when we are once ſeated on the throne of glorie. And therefore fooliſh is our courſe, if wee take more paines to ſeeme good in ſhew, than to be ſo in truth; to haue the commendations of men, than the teſtimonie of a good conſcience; and be more carefull to be applauded of thoſe, who muſt ſtand at the ſame barre, than to bee approued of our Iudge, by whom one day we ſhall be iuſtified or condemned.

Nec laudes hominum te leuant in cælum, nec vituperationes inde te deponunt. Ille videat qui coronat, ille ſit teſtis à quo iudice coronaris. Auguſt. in epiſt. Ioan. Tract. 6. Tom. 9.

§. Sect. 3. That there is no profit in worldly riches. Luke 12.15. Matth. 4.4.

Neither is there more profit in worldly riches, ſeeing as our Sauiour Chriſt telleth vs, though a man haue abundance, yet his life ſtandeth not in his riches; becauſe as elſewhere hee ſpeaketh, man liueth not by bread onely, but by euery word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God. And though a man haue neuer ſo great ſtore, yet he hath few priuiledges aboue him, who hath onely neceſſaries, or ſome ſmall competencie: for as the Wiſe man ſaith, When goods increaſe, they are increaſed that eate them, and what commeth to their owners, but the beholding of them with their eyes? In which reſpect men abounding with worldly wealth, haue that benefit by their riches, that ſtewards haue in a great family, by the great ſummes which are committed to their diſpoſing, whereby (at leaſt if they be faithfull) they onely haue their care and paines increaſed whileſt they make prouiſion for ſo many mouthes and bellies; and the greater and more difficult reckoning to make, when their maſters call them to yeeld their accounts. For what are rich men but Gods ſtewards, who haue their abundance committed vnto them, not to ſpend their ſuperfluity in riot and exceſſe, but to maintaine and relieue their fellow ſeruants? And what in this regard doe their great receipts profit them, ſeeing of all, they haue but meate for their bellies, and clothing for their backes, and of the reſt muſt be accountant to our great Lord and Maſter how they haue beſtowed it, when at the great day of his appearing hee ſhall call them to a reckoning.

Eccleſ. 5.10.

Vbi multæ multi etiam cēdunt vſus quidem diuitiarum a-pud alios, nitibus ſolum ſolicitudo. B- nard. de con- uerſ. ad cle- cos S.rm. cap. 15.

Obie

Yea but being ſtewards they may allow to themſelues a double portion; and all things comming through their hands, they haue more liberall maintenance, and a greater ſhare in thoſe rich talents which are committed to their diſpoſing. For example, they haue the priuiledge of full tables and daintie diet, of coſtly apparell, and ſoft beds; whereas the poorer ſort haue ſcant and courſe fare, meane clothes, and hard lodging.

Anſw

To which I anſwere, that theſe benefits are exceeded by the inconueniences which doe accompanie them; and though they were not, yet in the very fruition of theſe things, wherein they glory moſt, they haue little priuiledge aboue them who are ſcanted of them; ſeeing howſoeuer they much exceed them in their ſtore, yet neither in profit nor delight. For the pleaſure of eating and drinking, conſiſteth not ſo much in the daintineſſe of our fare, as in the diſpoſition of thoſe who ſit at the table, ſeeing he who bringeth with him an hungrie appetite and good ſtomacke, feedeth on his courſe fare with more delight, than he who is glutted with often ſurfetting on his moſt coſtly cates, although his ſtomacke bee whetted with great variety of meates, and innumerable ſorts of alluring ſauces. But herein the poore haue priuiledge aboue the rich, becauſe their labour prouoketh their appetite, which is ſatiſfied at their meales without ſurfetting, either becauſe by reaſon of the ſcantneſſe of their prouiſion they cannot, or in reſpect of the courſeneſſe of their fare they will not exceed due meaſure: whereas the rich hauing their ſtomackes cloyed with in-inſobriety and intemperance, into which they haue fallen, whileſt their bewitching dainties, and variety, of diſhes haue allured them, by pleaſing their palate to oppreſſe their ſtomackes, and wanting the meanes of labour and exerciſe to recouer them; they haue ſtill their hunger preuented with their prouiſion, and ſo comming to their meales with cloyed appetites, they rather loath than delight in their daintieſt fare, and not knowing whether it were beſt to eate any thing or nothing of all their delicates, they inwardly fret that hauing ſo good meate, they haue no better ſtomackes; and repent of their laſt meales gluttonie, not becauſe they hate their ſinne], but becauſe they haue loſt their appetite; and now are depriued of all their pleaſure, becauſe they had then too much. Neither haue they any great benefit by their brauery aboue thoſe that goe in plaine habits, ſeeing theſe no leſſe than they attaine vnto the maine ends of apparell, which are to keepe vs warme and to hide our ſhame; whereas they by their ſuperfluity gaine but more care and trouble, and by diſplaying theſe enſignes of pride, expoſe themſelues to the skorne of their ſupeours, and to the enuie of thoſe who are of meaner condition and eſtate. Finally, they haue no great priuiledge aboue the poore in reſpect of their ſoft beds, rich couerings, and coſtly canopies: for whereas the chiefe vſe of a bed is to ſleepe in it, and take our reſt; the rich doe leſt of all attaine vnto it, though their lodging bee neuer ſo eaſie and gorgeous; partly becauſe their fulneſſe and exceſſe are as great hinderances to reſt, as hunger and want; and partly becauſe their heads are troubled about their riches, whileſt they are thinking either of getting more, or of keeping and diſpoſing that they haue; whereas poore men which lie harder, doe ſleepe much more ſoundly, after their ſober meales, and dayes labour. And this the wiſe Salomon obſerued: The ſleepe (ſaith he) of him that trauelleth is ſweet, whether he eate little or much, but the ſatiety of the rich will not ſuffer him to ſleepe. By all which it appeareth that riches doe not greatly profit vs, no not ſo much as in reſpect of worldly benefits. Yea (as one ſaith) it is well with vs if wee doe not receiue hurt by their fellowſhip; it ſufficeth that we be not made worſe by them, ſeeing they cannot make vs better. It is true indeede that they who abound in wealth haue fit opportunity and meanes of doing the workes of mercy and of comforting and doing good vnto many, but this priuiledge they haue aboue the poore, onely in manifeſting the bounty and goodneſſe of their minde vnto men, for both are alike and equally accepted in the ſight of God, the rich man who doth good deeds both with heart and hand, and the poore man, who wanting ability, is onely bountifull in his affection, and willing deſire.

Chriſ pop. An Homil

§. Sect. 4. That riches are moſt vnprofitable to ſordidous Miſers.

Now if this be true of thoſe rich men, who by their vſe of riches haue thoſe vſuall comforts which they afford; then how much more is it verified of ſordidous Miſers, who howſoeuer they abound with all manner of wealth, yet their riches are altogether vnprofitable vnto them? For whileſt they think of gathering and ſcraping more and more, they forget to enjoy that they haue, and ſo of Maſters become only Iaylors and keepers of their wealth, hauing no vſe of it themſelues, not letting others vſe it; whereby it commeth to paſſe, that of all they haue they haue nothing, and yet are tormented with the want of all which they haue not. So that theſe are like him who was poſſeſſed with that vnruly Deuill, or rather Legion of wicked ſpirits, for this Deuill of ſordidous couetouſneſſe, will not ſuffer them to dwell in their Houſes, becauſe they would not loſe the hire; nor to eate meat, or weare their clothes, becauſe they require coſt, and hinder their bags from filling; but cauſeth them in franticke manner to break all bonds of common honeſty, to toile and trauell by ſea and land, to runne a thouſand deſperate courſes, and to wound their heads with cares, and their hearts with griefe, whileſt they are drawne on with hope to encreaſe their wealth, and when with all this care and danger they haue attained to their deſires, they haue no vſe or benefit of all that which with ſo great paine and perill they haue ſcraped together. Like vnto them who being athirſt, ſpend all their time in drawing water, and in filling their Ceſternes, but yet haue no power to drinke, though all their veſſels doe ouerflow. Wherein they commit that miſerable folly which the rich foole in the Goſpell fell into, who though he had abundance of all things, yet neuer thought of enjoying any thing till hee was ready to leaue all, bidding then his ſoule to liue at eaſe, to eate, drinke, and take its pleaſure, when as in the very ſame night it was taken from him. And this folly the ſonne of Syrach obſerued. Some man (ſaith he) is rich by his care and niggardſhip, and this is the portion of his wages. But when he ſaith I haue gotten reſt, and now will eat continually of my goods; he conſidereth not that the time draweth neere that he muſt leaue all theſe things vnto other men, and die himſelfe. Whereby it appeareth that abundance of wealth bringeth no true profit vnto theſe miſers, becauſe they defraud their own ſouls, not ſuffring thẽ to enjoy any thing they poſſeſſe. And as Moſes onely ſaw the land of Canaan, but for his ſinne was not permitted to haue any ſhare or portion in it: ſo they haue for their miſerable couetouſneſſe this puniſhment by God inflicted on them, that they ſhall onely ſee their goods with their eyes, but

Luke 8.27.

Luke 11.20,21.

Eccl. 11.18,19.

but neuer enjoy them for their comfort: and that they ſhall toyle and moyle for their ſucceſſor, oftentimes they not knowing who he ſhall bee, and receiue no manner of benefit by their owne labours, but as Pipes keepe none of the water to themſelues that runneth through them, but conuey all to their Ciſternes; ſo they are not able to retaine any of the goods which they poſſeſſe, for their owne benefit and comfort, but onely ſerue as Ouer-ſeers to conuey them to their heires; who for the reward of all their painfull labour, doe whileſt they liue grudge them their liues, as they grudge themſelues all the comforts of life; and doe not ſo much loue them becauſe they ſhall hereafter receiue much by their care and prouiſion, as loathe and hate them, becauſe already they haue not receiued it; they ſtanding in their way, and keeping from them that which they ſo much couet. And after their death commonly ſpend in riot and exceſſe, that which they haue gotten with miſerable niggardlines, ſeldome remembring their Benefactors, vnleſſe it bee to flout their folly, and inuey againſt their ſordidous auarice; the which they ſo much hate and abhorre, hauing ſeene the wretched fruits of it in their Progenitours, that vſually they runne into the contrary extreame, and become as prodigall as they were niggardly, and ſo within a while haue not that in poſſeſſion, which the other had uot in vſe. So the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, that hee who gathereth and ſcrapeth by defrauding his owne ſoule, he gathereth for others, and they ſhall make good cheere with his goods. By all which it is euident that Miſers may get much wealth, but no gaine or profit; great ſtore of riches, but no goods. For that onely is good vnto vs, whereof we haue not the poſſeſſion alone, but the vſe and fruition alſo, whereas, like their bags, they haue onely the keeping of their money, and haue no good, but great hurt by it, whileſt (like them) they are worne out with care and labour, in getting and keeping it, and haue no comfort by enjoying it. And thus by this their miſerableneſſe, they make Gods gifts to be no benefits, and turne his bleſſings into heauy burthens. So the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, that riches are not good to a Niggard, and what ſhould an enuious man doe with money? For that is only good and to bee eſteemed Gods bleſſing, whereby we receiue good, and haue it in vſe and fruition, as well as in cuſtody and poſſeſſion: for ſo the Pſalmiſt ſaith, When thou eateſt the labours of thine hands, thou ſhalt be bleſſed, and it ſhall be well with thee. And the Preacher teacheth vs, that there is no benefit to man in all he enioyeth, but that he eat and drinke, and delight his ſoule with the profit of his labour, and that we haue this of the hand of God. And againe, I know that there is nothing good in them, but to reioyce and to doe good in his life, and alſo that euerie man eateth & drinketh, & ſeeth the commodity of all his labour; this is the gift of God. Whereby he implyeth, that it is a gift and no gift, or a gift, & no benefit, when God beſtoweth goods, and not grace to vſe them for good purpoſes, both by rejoycing in their fruition, and by imploying part of them to charitable and pious vſes. Yea, rather the poſſeſſion of riches without the vſe hurteth the Owners, and not profiteth them, as being vnto them heauy burthens, and cauſes of the incurable diſeaſe of greedy couetouſneſſe. So the Wiſe man ſaith, There is an euill ſickneſſe that I haue ſeene vnder the Sunne, to wit, riches reſerued to the Owners thereof for their euill; and theſe riches periſh by euill trauaile, and he begetteth a ſonne, and in his hand is nothing, as he came forth of his mothers belly, he ſhall returne naked to goe as he came, and ſhall beare away nothing of his labour, which hee hath cauſed to paſſe by his hand? And this alſo is an euill ſickneſſe, that in all points as he came, ſo ſhall he goe, and what profit hath he, that he hath trauailed for the wind. Alſo all his dayes hee eateth in darkneſſe with much griefe, and in his ſorrow and anger. Behold then what I haue ſeene good, that it is comely to eat and to drinke, and to take pleaſure in all his labour, wherein hee trauaileth vnder the Sunne, the whole number of the dayes of his life which God giueth him; for this is his portion. Alſo to euery man to whom God hath giuen riches and treaſures, and giueth him power to eat thereof, and to take his part, and enjoy his labour, this is the gift of God. As though he ſhould ſay, this, and no other; for as for riches without vſe, they are ſo farre from deſeruing the name of bleſſings and benefits, that they are to be reputed curſes and heauy judgements. So Iob ſaith of the wicked man, that in lieu of his ſinne hee ſhall haue this puniſhment laid vpon him, that though he ſhould heape vp ſiluer as the duſt, and prepare rayment as the clay: He may prepare it, but the iuſt ſhall put it on, and the innocent ſhall diuide the ſiluer. And the Wiſe man teacheth vs, that to a man that is good in Gods ſight, he giueth wiſdome, and knowledge, and ioy, but to the ſinner he giueth paine to gather and to heap, to giue to him that is good before God; this alſo is vanity and vexation of ſpirit. And elſe-where, hee that loueth ſiluer ſhall not bee ſatisfied with ſiluer, and hee that loueth riches ſhall bee without the fruit thereof. Yea, ſo heauily doth this judgement of God ſit vpon them, that afterwards he preferreth an vntimely & abortiue birth, before ſuch a miſerable & wretched life. And the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, that there is nothing worſe than when one enuieth himſelfe, and that this is the reward of his wickedneſſe.

Si auarus es, non habes, ſi prodigus, non habebis.
Eccluſ.14.4.
κτήματα ὐ χρήματα.

Α'νδρὶ μικρολόγῳ ὐ καλὸς ὁ πλοῦτος.
Eccluſ.14.3.

Pſal.128.2.

Eccleſ.2.24. and 3.12,13.

Eccleſ 5.1
14,15.&c.

Iob

Eccleſ.2.

Eccleſ.5
Chap.6.

Eccluſ.14

§. Sect.

And thus it appeareth that riches are vnprofitable to thoſe who ſet their hearts vpon them: the like alſo may bee ſaid of carnall pleaſures, which if they bee ouer highly valued, and too much affected, doe vs no good, but are as vnprofitable as either of the other. And this the wiſe Salomon teacheth vs by his owne experience, for hauing ſought to pleaſe himſelfe with all manner of delights, and denied no joy to his heart which it could deſire, concludeth at laſt that hee could finde no profit in any of them, but vanitie and vexation of ſpirit. If therefore hee who had all the delights which a great Kingdome, a peaceable and proſperous raigne, and abundance of all worldly Bleſſings, were able to yeeld vnto him, could not after hee had tried many concluſions, to giue his heart joy and pleaſure, find any profit in any of them: how vnprofitable are our delights like to prooue, who want theſe plentifull meanes wherein hee abounded, and haue all our comforts croſſed with many miſeries, from which hee was priuiledged? But if wee would further conſider, that that alone is to bee eſteemed truely profitable, which doth profit vs in our place and calling, and aduanceth the maine ends at which wee ayme, wee ſhould plainely perceiue how little profit there is in pleaſure: for wee are called to the ſtate of Chriſtianity, to be the ſeruants and children of God, and the mayne end which wee propound in all our doings and proceedings, is to glorifie God in our owne ſaluation, to finiſh our courſe with joy, and to paſſe the time of our pilgrimage ſo in GODS feare, as that in the end of our liues wee may arriue at our heauenly Countrey,, and inherit thoſe eternall joyes.

But, alas, how little doe worldly pleaſures (eſpecially when they are too much eſteemed and affected) in theſe reſpects profit vs? How ſlenderly doe they aduance theſe ends and further vs in this way? Yea, rather how much doe they endamage vs, and either ſlacken our pace or quite hinder vs in this ſpirituall race? Whileſt being ſo beſotted on theſe earthly delights, wee neuer thinke of our heauenly joyes, or ſpend that precious time in vaine ſports, wherein wee ſhould labour to furniſh our hearts with Gods ſpirituall and ſauing graces, and attaine vnto certaine aſſurance that we haue our part and intereſt in that eternall happineſſe; or finally, whileſt being pampered with theſe worldly pleaſures, wee are made ſo purſie and ſhort winded, that wee can take no paines in running this ſpirituall race, but either ſit downe in the mid-way for want of ſpirituall ſtrength, or being vtterly diſcouraged and out of hope of euer comming to the Goale and obtaining the Garlands, returne backe againe to the World that wee may take our fill of pleaſures, and glut our ſelues with carnall delights.

§. Sect. 6.
That worldly things doe not further the maine ends at which wee aime, as firſt they doe not make vs truly better.

Iob 34.19:

Prov. 18.6.

But concerning the hurt which we take by worldly things abuſed through our corruption, I ſhall haue occaſion to ſpeake more hereafter; heere onely I aim to ſhew that they are vnprofitable: which that we may more cleerely vnderſtand; let vs further conſider, that howſoeuer they may ſomewhat helpe vs in ſome ſmall trifles, and in attaining vnto our ends in ſome baſe and ſlight things; yet they are altogether vnprofitable in furthering our mayne ends at which wee ſhould ayme, as neither deriuing vnto vs any great and deſirable good, nor yet freeing or helping vs in our greateſt difficulties, and moſt heauy and dangerous euils. For firſt, theſe outward things doe not impart vnto vs any eſſentiall goodnes, or by hauing them, make vs better than thoſe that want them; they do not make vs more eſteemable in Gods ſight, for hee accepteth not the perſons of Princes, and regardeth not the rich more thān the poore, for they be all the worke of his hands: neither doth hee meaſure mens goodneſſe by their goods, but by their godlineſſe; for better (ſaith the Wiſe man) is the poore that walketh in his vprightneſſe, than he that peruerteth his wayes, though hee be rich. They doe not make vs better in our ſelues, for ſeeing they are not any way eſſentiall vnto vs, but outward accidents, wee haue nothing added to our perfection, when wee haue them, nor any thing diminiſhed, when wee want them. That which truely maketh vs better, bettereth our being, and addeth ſome perfection to our eſſence; now whereas we haue a double being, one by generation as men, another by regeneration as Chriſtians, the excellency of the former conſiſteth in the perfection of reaſon, and of the latter, in true godlineſſe; and therefore ſeeing theſe outward things neither make vs more reaſonable, nor yet more godly and religious, they doe not at all make vs better, our goodnes conſiſting in thoſe things which they further not. If therefore we excell in the vſe of reaſon, and in the knowledge and practice of true Religion, our goodneſſe is not impaired when all theſe faile vs; but if we be defectiue in them, and be either fooliſh men, or lame and baſtardly Chriſtians, theſe outward ornaments will be but like gay Hangings on rotten and broken wals, which commend vs to the ſight and view of others, but doe not better vs in our ſelues, by ſtopping our breaches, and repairing our ruines. And as thoſe who are ſicke of the dropſie, ſeeme fat and in good liking to thoſe who are farre off; whereas it plainly appeareth to thoſe who looke vpon them neerer hand, that their beauty proceedeth not from the good habitude of their bodies, but from their fulneſſe of humours, which is the true cauſe of their diſeaſe: ſo thoſe who abound with theſe outward things, may ſeeme better and more happy than others, to thoſe that view them at the firſt ſight; but thoſe who better conſider of them, eaſily find that it is but a diſeaſed beauty which commendeth them, and that they are not in truth bettered by all theſe things, but rather the diſeaſes and ſpirituall ſickneſſes of their ſoules increaſed, and made more deſperate and vncurable. Let vs not therefore account our ſelues bettered by theſe outward things, for then our goods and goodneſſe will both at once faile vs, but by thoſe things in which our excellencie conſiſteth, and which being in vs, and peculiar to our ſelues, doe make vs juſtly to be preferred before all other creatures. Wee know that a Player is not better than his fellowes, becauſe he acteth a Kings part, ſeeing all his excellencie is in his outward habit, and nothing in his perſon, and if another acteth his part better, he is preferred farre before him, though hee ſuſtaine the meaneſt and baſeſt perſonage, becauſe his worth is meaſured, not by his gay clothes, but by his excellency in his owne faculty and profeſſion. A Surgeon is not commended becauſe hee goeth in braue apparell, but for his great skill in curing wounds; and the Scholler is not magnified for his faire Houſe, or full Cheſts, but for his excellency in all manner of knowledge and learning: neither is the Pilot praiſed, becauſe hee hath a faire ſhip gilt with Gold and well rigged, but for his skill in nauigation, & care in vſing al his knowledge for the good of the paſſengers. And thus alſo it is in other creatures; for the vine is not praiſed for its faire leaues ſtraight body, & good timber; but for its fruitfulneſſe in bearing good and pleaſant Grapes: neither is the Horſe bettered by his rich Saddle, and golden Trappings, ſeeing his goodneſſe conſiſteth not in theſe things which may at night be taken from him, but in his ſhape, ſtrength, ſoundneſſe, good pace, and ſure trauelling. And ſo the excellency and goodneſſe of a Chriſtian conſiſteth not in theſe outward things, as Honours, Riches, Pleaſures, but in the fruits of godlineſſe, which hee oftentimes beareth better, and in greater abundance when as hee is pruned, and theſe outward ſuperfluities taken away; not in his gay habit & rich Furniture, but in his ſwiftneſſe and ſureneſſe in running the ſpirituall race, which hee commonly beſt performeth when hee is lightened and vnloaded of this worldly brauery. If theſe earthly things would ſerue to enrich our ſoules with Gods ſpirituall graces, if they would purchaſe Chriſt, and procure for vs the rich robes of his righteouſneſſe; if they would further vs, and make vs more couragious and conſtant in the profeſſion of Gods Truth, and in the practice of all Chriſtian duties; then were they indeed much to be eſteemed, as being truly profitable; but the baſe as well as the Honourable, haue their part in the glad tydings of the Goſpell; and the poore as well as the rich; for Chriſt is gotten and applied by faith, and not with wealth, and his graces after which our ſoules thirſt, are bought without money, as the Prophet ſpeaketh; and therefore the Apoſtle Peter in the abundance of ſpiritull graces, wanting theſe outward things, profeſſeth, that he had neither Gold nor Siluer. Neither doe they inable vs to make our Chriſtian profeſſion in the time of danger, or imbolden vs to ſuffer for the teſtimony of the truth, nay, rather wee are moſt cowardly in performing theſe duties, when we moſt abound with theſe earthly vanities; and when Honour and Riches are ſilent for feare of loſſe, pouerty and meanneſſe make a bold profeſſion: Whileſt Nicodemus a great Ruler ſtealeth to Chriſt by night, the poore fiſhermen follow him at noone day. And hereof it is that when the moſt bold profeſſion was to be made, and the greateſt perſecutions to be ſuffered for the name of Chriſt, not onely the immoderate louing and deſiring, but euen the poſſeſſing of theſe wordly things, more than for neceſſarie vſe was forbidden, becauſe Chriſt knew well enough, that their poſſeſſion procured loue vnto them, and their loue wrought a feare of being bereaued of the things beloued, and this feare made them cowardly and backward in doing or ſuffering any great thing for Chriſt and the Goſpell.

Nemo vereatur qui argentum non habet; non quæritur Chriſtus argento ſed fide, Amb. de fide reſurrect.
Ser. 1. Tom. 3.

Eſay 55.1.

Act. 3.6.

Mat.10.9.

And thus it generally appeareth, that theſe worldly things doe not better vs in that which is beſt and moſt deſireable; the which alſo might be eaſily ſhewed in the ſpeciall inſtances of Honours, Riches and carnall pleaſures. For theſe worldly Honours being things outward and accidentall, do no more better the perſons of thoſe that haue them, nor make them more eminent and high, in true worth and ſelfe-excellencie, than it increaſeth a mans ſtature when hee ſheweth himſelfe in the top of a Tree; and therefore as he were ridiculous, who being a Dwarfe, ſhould boaſt of his talneſſe, becauſe he hath gotten an high ſtanding: ſo no leſſe abſurd were he to be eſteemed, who being aduanced vnto eminent place of Honour and Dignitie, ſhould thinke himſelfe bettered by this outward addition, being otherwiſe deſtitute of vertue, worth, and ſelfe-excellency, the eſſentiall parts of true Nobility. For without theſe he is bettered only in place, and not in perſon; and hauing aſpired to that height, not by vertue and deſert, but by the vanity and proud ambition of his heart, his highneſſe of place may rather be aſcribed to his vaine lightneſſe, than to his ſolid goodneſſe, euen as the Chaffe lyeth higher than the Wheate,

§. Sect. 5.
That wee a not bettere by honours, riches, or ca
nall pleaſu

Chryſoſt. in Mat. Homil.

Wheate, becauſe it is lighter, and not becauſe it is better. Neither are wee made better by worldly riches in thoſe repects wherein wee are chiefly good, becauſe theſe are inward and ſpirituall, and thoſe externall and accidentall; in regard whereof one truly ſaith, that thoſe who not hauing in them any good parts or ſelfe excellency, doe meaſure their goodneſſe by their goods, are like vnto a penny Purſe full of money, which hath all its worth from that which it containeth; and therefore is contemned as a thing of no value when it is emptied of the Siluer. And in the ſame reſpect they are not vnfitly compared to the ſheepe with the Golden Fleece, for when the skinne was much ſought after by all the Gallants of Greece, the body in the meane time was contemned, and reſpected of none. Neither in truth doth this outward wealth make vs better, and more eſteemable before either God or good men; if they be ſeuered from the chiefe riches, ſpirituall grace, and true godlineſſe. For Iob telleth vs that God reſpecteth the rich no more than the poore, and that hee regardeth not our riches and our Gold. The Pſalmiſt ſaith, that a ſmall thing to the iuſt man, is better than great riches to the wicked and mighty: and the Wiſe man teacheth vs, that the poore is better who walketh in his vprightneſſe, than hee that peruerteth his wayes, though hee be rich; and preferreth a poore and wiſe childe, before an old and fooliſh King that will no more be admoniſhed. And as God doth not regard any for their wealth; ſo neither doe the godly value any according to their Gold, but according to their goodneſſe: for as one ſaith, it is not meet to deſpiſe the poore man that hath vnderſtanding, neither is it conuenient to magnifie the rich, that is a wicked man. So that riches are ſo farre from being able to make vs glorious in Heauen, that they haue no ſufficiency in them to make vs Honourable on earth; ſo farre from commending vs vnto God, that they doe not aduance our worth and eſteeme in the judgement of godly men. And therefore the Apoſtle Iames taxeth and reproueth thoſe, who reſpected the perſons of rich Worldlings more than poore Christians, or one exceeding in wealth, before another ſurpaſſing him in godlineſſe; ſaying to the one becauſe he hath gold Ring and gay Apparell, ſit thou heere in a good place; and to the other becauſe hee is in meane attire, ſtand thou there, or ſit heere vnder my footſtoole; becauſe hauing no skill in Chriſtian Heraldry they tooke vpon them to diſpoſe of places, ſeating him in a lower place who is of better deſcent, of a more Noble Houſe, better ſtiled, and better mannered, euen a childe of God, and heire of Heauen, becauſe of his plaine habite; and aduancing another of baſe quality, the childe of the Deuill, and ſlaue of ſinne, becauſe hee is cloathed in rich Apparell. And ſurely this errour muſt needes bee foule: for if riches will not giue vs precedence before thoſe who are Honourable in the World; if they will not purchaſe true Nobility, nor place vs in the ſeate of true Honour; or if they doe, yet this Honour is eſteemed baſe, as being tied to their wealth, rather than to their perſons (for if euery one account is baſe to haue all his eſteeme for his ſeruants ſake; it is much more baſe to bee eſteemed onely for his money ſake, which is of leſſe excellency) then how much leſſe can this riches intitle vs to the true Nobility of a Chriſtian, which chiefly conſiſteth in vertues and true Godlineſſe, which are free gifts of Gods rich Grace, and neuer to be bought for any money? Finally, wee are not bettered by worldly pleaſures in thoſe mayne things wherein the goodneſſe of a Chriſtian chiefly conſiſteth, wee are not furthered by them in our courſe of Godlineſſe, nor made more zealous in Gods ſeruice; wee are not by them weaned from, but rather wedded vnto the World, nor helped forward, but rather hindered in attaining vnto our heauenly joyes. Yea, ſo farre are they from bettering vs in the beſt things, and aduancing vs to the fruition of ſpirituall Grace, and eternall Glory, that they doe not better vs in Worldly things: for they do not prolong life but ſhorten it; nor preſerue health but impaire it; nor make vs Honourable, but diſgrace vs; nor enrich our eſtate, but rather impaire and begger it: how vnprofitable and contemptible therefore are theſe vanities, which neither make vs better to God nor to the World; neither more honeſt in our ſelues, nor more honourable in others eſtimation?

Eſay 55.1.

CHAP. XXI.

That worldly things profit not to the attaining of thoſe things which are chiefly good, nor to the auoiding of our greateſt euils.

§. Sect. 1. That worldly things helpe not to inrich our minds with vertue and Gods ſauing graces.

BVt let vs deſcend to ſome particulars, and we ſhall eaſily ſee, that theſe Worldly things neither help vs to the attaining of thoſe things which are vnto vs chiefly good, nor to the auoiding of our greateſt euils. They doe not inrich our minds with true vertue, and Gods ſauing graces, they doe not make vs more humble, mercifull, patient, zealous, nor any other way religious: yea, rather doth not common experience teach vs, that worldly proſperity is a ſtep-mother to vertue, thoſe being moſt deſtitute of it, who moſt abound in worldly things; and they moſt rich in ſpirituall grace, who are moſt wanting in them? Doe wee not continually ſee with our owne eyes, that it is not thoſe who are aduanced to the higheſt Honours, nor thoſe who abound in wealth, and wallow themſelues in Worldly delights, that frequent the ſchoole of Vertue and Godlineſſe, the Church and Houſe of God; or if they doe, are ſo apt to learne ſpirituall inſtruction, and to profit in the knowledge of Gods ſauing Truth; but thoſe who are of meane condition, poore eſtate, and afflicted with Worldly croſſes? So as it may be truly ſaid, that thoſe who goe on foot, yea, thoſe who are old and decrepite, ſicke, lame, and blinde, doe make more diligent ſpeed, and go much faſter to the Church of God, the ſpirituall market-place of our ſoules, wherein they are furniſhed with all Vertues and ſauing Graces; than thoſe who ride on their foot-clothes, and are ſwiftly hurried in their gilded Coaches; or they who haue beſt health, moſt ſtrength, and the greateſt ſhare in all manner of worldly happineſſe. And therefore as ſobriety and abſtinence preſerue our bodily health, and helpe to free vs from thoſe diſeaſes which come of fulneſſe and repletion; ſo the want or ſparing vſe of theſe Worldly things preſerues the health of our ſoules, making them ſtrong and vigorous in grace and vertue; whereas the glutting ſatiety of earthly vanities corrupts the minde, abates our ſpirituall ſtrength, and fils vs full of the corrupt humours of vice and ſinne.

§. Sect. 2. That worldly things doe not make vs more fruitfull in good workes.

And as they doe not helpe to ſowe in vs inwardly the ſeeds of Grace, ſo neither doe they cauſe vs to bring forth outwardly the fruits of Godlineſſe. For howſoeuer the ambitious man hath attained vnto Honours and Preferments, whereby hee is enabled to defend the weake and to ſhelter the poore vnder the ſhadow of his protection: yet either is his mind ſo wholly taken vp with his purpoſes and plots of riſing, that he hath no leaſure to thinke of the poore, or ſcorneth to haue his thoughts fixed on ſuch meane ſubjects; or finding ſome ſtrong oppoſition, dare not bee ſeene in the poore mans cauſe, leſt croſſing his Compeeres in their will, they ſhould croſſe him in his next preferment; or finally, ſo ſpendeth his whole eſtate in bribes, and wearieth all his friends in his own ſuits, for his further aduancement, that hee hath neither will, leaſure, nor meanes to do good vnto any in diſtreſſe, nor to releeue the neceſſities of thoſe that are afflicted. So likewiſe they who ſet their hearts vpon pleaſures, though they abound in ſuperfluitie, yet are they moſt poore in Charity, and in the workes of mercy; for as they exceed in wealth, ſo alſo in riot and exceſſe, and all they can rake together is little enough to miniſter to their voluptuouſneſſe, and to conſume in pleaſures. Yea, ſo wholly are they ſet on their delights, that they had rather ſpend many pounds in Feaſts and Banquetting, in Maskes and Shewes, Sports and Paſtimes, than to giue a few ſhillings towards the reliefe of a poore Chriſtian; & can more willingly finde in their hearts, that many ſhould periſh for want of food, than to abate the leaſt part of their pleaſure, or deny vnto their neuer ſatisfied ſoules any one delight. Finally, if a man ſet his heart vpon the earthly Mammon, though he abound in wealth, yet is hee ſure to bee moſt poore in good workes, though hee flow in the plenty of meanes, whereby he is inabled to do good, and to exerciſe his bounty in the workes of mercy, yet are his fruits and good workes at the loweſt ebbe, becauſe his couetous minde ſtill maketh him beleeue that hee hath neuer enough for his owne ſtore. And by reaſon of this vnſatiable greedineſſe, theſe rich Miſers are euer ready, like Spunges, to ſuck vp any gaine and profit, but when they haue it, will part with none, vnleſſe they be preſſed, and (as it were) cruſhed with violence or importunity. Though Nabal was exceeding rich, and able to feaſt his followers like a King; yet it was neither the deſert, nor humble ſuite of Dauid that could obtaine at his hands the leaſt pittance of his abounding plenty. Though the rich man in the Goſpell tooke care enough, and more than hee needed, to fill his Barnes, yet ſo careleſſe was he in doing good, that when his Barnes were ouer full, he rather reſolued to inlarge them to his great coſt and trouble, than he would part with any of his ſtore in doing the workes of mercy, and releeuing thoſe who ſtood in need: and though Diues went in Purple and fine Linnen, and fared deliciouſly euery day, yet could he not ſpare the very crummes that fell from his Table, to keepe poore Lazarus from periſhing with hunger. So that (as the Sonne of Syrach ſpeaketh) If the couetous man doth any good, he doth it, not knowing thereof, and againſt his will: and rather than hee will part with his wealth to any good vſes, hee will part with his ſoule, and vtterly abandon the meanes of his owne ſaluation; as wee may ſee in the example of the rich young man in the Goſpell, who heard Chriſt with ſome patience till hee told him of parting with his goods towards the reliefe of the poore, but then he goeth away ſorrowfull, becauſe hee could not ſaue his ſoule, and reſerue his Mammon too, and deſireth no further to haue part in Chriſt, or in his heauenly inſtructions. And this commeth to paſſe, becauſe riches do naturally inflame the hearts of couetous men towards them; and loue making them loth to part with the thing loued, cauſes them rather to reſerue their wealth with the hazard of their ſoules, than they will aſcertaine themſelues of the leaſt loſſe, by feeding the hungry, and ſupplying

1.Sam.25.4, 10,11.

Luke 12.

Luke 16.

Ecclus.14.5.

Math.19.

ſupplying the neceſſities of thoſe that want. In regard whereof theſe couetous wretches may be fitly likened to the minerall mountaines, which are full of gold and ſiluer, but barren and vnfruitfull; for ſo barren hee is in good works, that (as one ſaith) he neuer doth well but when he dieth, ſeeing then he hath an end of his vnſatiable couetouſneſſe, and ſetteth at libertie thoſe riches for the good of others, which were long enthralled in a wretched bondage. For whileſt he liueth hee will part with nothing which he poſſeſſeth, but rather than the poore ſhall ſhare with him in any part of his ſuperfluitie, hee will ſpend it on his backe in exceſſiue brauerie, on his horſe in rich furniture, yea vpon his ſenſeleſſe walles, and the very flower whereon he treadeth.

Furthermore, theſe worldly things doe not make thoſe merrie and cherefull, who moſt abound with them, if their hearts and affections bee ſeated on them; he that doteth vpon honours, doth not ſo much joy in twentie gotten preferments, as he doth fret at one miſſed, nor reioyceth in that he is aduanced before many, but is vexed becauſe he ſeeth any preferred before him; neither is he ſo much cheared in his mind, becauſe he hath the reuerence and obeyſance of cap and knee, from almoſt all men, as he is tormented if any one man wilfully denieth him that dutie and obſeruance which hee expecteth, his proud heart making him beleeue that his worth well deſerueth it. So when Haman being ſurfetted with ioy, in regard of the Kings eſpeciall fauour, came forth and ſaw Mordecai neglect him, in the middeſt of his iollitie and gladneſſe, he was filled with indignation, and like a forlorne man, full of diſcontent, he retireth himſelfe home, and telleth his wife and friends of all his riches, glory, and ſpeciall fauours, which he had receiued both from the King and Queene; but concludeth that all the honour which he had from all beſides Mordecai did him no good, becauſe hee alone did not reſpect and reuerence him. So what pleaſure and delight hath he, who abounding in riches, doth ſet his heart vpon them, more than the poore man, who hath but a ſmall competencie, and onely neceſſaries to releeue him? Yea doth not this man ſleepe more ſoundly, feed more ſauourly and with greater delight; looke more cheerefully, and reioyce more heartily than hee who is ouer-burthened with his abundance? For whileſt hee ſecurely enjoyeth that he hath, and contenteth himſelfe if he haue but neceſſaries to ſuſtaine nature, the other is not ſo much delighted with that he hath, as hee is vexed becauſe he hath no more; nor rejoyceth ſo much in that hee is rich, as he grieueth to ſee any richer. And this maketh him to beate his braines, and oppreſſe his mind, and ſpend his ſtrength with worldly cares, and with multitude of buſineſſe, either that hee may get more, or at leſt ſafely keepe that hee already hath. And when in his great ſtate any thing miſcarieth, or he by any caſualtie ſuſtaineth ſome trifling loſſe, he eateth out his heart with griefe, and is more fretted and vexed by loſing that little, than hee is cheared and delighted with all the reſt which he ſtill inioyeth. In a word if a mans heart be ſet vpon couetouſneſſe, he taketh comfort and pleaſure in nothing which doth not bring vnto him ſome profit, nor in theſe things neither, if (as they ſeldome doe) they doe not in gaine anſwere his expectation; hee taketh no pleaſure in beholding the Heauens, becauſe they ſend not downe ſiluer ſhowers; the ſunne in his chiefe glory delighteth him not, becauſe it doth not ſhine with golden beames: yea he hath no comfort and joy in God himſelfe, no further than he expecteth from him gaine and profit. Contrariwiſe, hee ſpendeth his dayes in murmuring and repining, alwayes caring and fearing, and neuer being at reſt: if there bee faire weather, he ſtraight complaineth of drought; if a little foule come, he ſaith all will be drowned and rotted; hee is alike diſcontented with great plenty, and with great dearth; the one becauſe he enuieth his neighbour, the other becauſe hee feareth to want himſelfe. And faine would hee, if he could tell how, haue plentie in his owne fields, and ſcarcity in other mens; ſuperfluitie at home, and dearth abroade, that hee might ſell his corne at the dearer rate. In reſpect of all which cares, feares, and griefes: the couetous mans life though he be neuer ſo rich, is compared to a funerall feaſt, which hath abundance of all things ſauing mirth and comfort. An example whereof we haue in Ahab, who though he poſſeſſed a kingdome, yet becauſe he deſired, and could not haue Naboths vineyard, was ſo farre from reioycing in all that he had, that hee was euen ſicke with griefe, caſting himſelfe on his bed, and refuſing his food, as though hee had loſt all, whereas he onely wanted that which he neuer had. So that it is not a kingdome of wealth that will purchaſe to a couetous man a dram of pleaſure, it being ſo ordered by Gods wiſe and gracious prouidence, that pleaſures ſhould not bee purchaſed with gold and ſiluer (for then rich men would haue ingroſſed them into their owne hands to ſell them againe at dearer rates) but rather he would haue them bought with the coine of labour and neceſſitie, that the poore might haue a larger ſhare in them than they who abound in wealth, and contrariwiſe hath joyned griefe, care and cumberſome trouble with riches and abundance, that no man ſhould immoderately deſire them. So the Auarus pulchritudine cœli non delectatur, quia ſibi non affert aurum, nec magnitudine & motu ſolis, quoniam non immittit in domum ſuam aureos radios. Chryſoſt. in Matth. 26. Homil. 84.

Ariſtonymus apud Stobæum Serm. 8.

1. King. 21. 4.

1.*Tim.*6.10.

Apoſtle ſaith, that the deſire of money is the roote of all euill, which while ſome luſted after, they erred from the faith, and pierced themſelues thorow with many ſorrowes.

§. Sect. 4.
That worldly pleaſures are void of true pleaſure and ſound delight.

Finally, euen the pleaſures of the world are void of all pleaſure and ſound delight; for ſeeing they chiefly conſiſt in thoſe things which delight the fleſh, and ſatisfie the carnall appetite, (they are ſeldome vſed without ſinne, which in thoſe whoſe conſciences are not quite ſeared, hath ſuch a ſting accompanying it, that it marreth all their mirth, leauing after a ſhort and vaniſhing pleaſure (which a little while delighteth the eye, eare, and palat, or at vtmoſt reacheth no further than the throate,) much trouble and anguiſh of minde. For what is worldly pleaſure, but as one calleth it, vnpuniſhed wickedneſſe, which conſiſteth chiefly in reuelling and riot, in fornication and vncleaneſſe, in vaine ſights and ſhewes, in gluttonie and drunkenneſſe; and this is the worlds delight, if impunitie alſo bee ioyned with it? Now ſeeing euery one of vs hath a Law without vs, forbidding and condemning ſinne; and a conſcience within vs accuſing vs as tranſgreſſors, and applying vnto vs thoſe threatnings of heauie iudgements which the Law denounceth againſt ſinners; therefore it is not poſſible for worldly men to take any ſound and ſolid joy and comfort in theſe ſinfull delights; but when they ſeeme moſt iocund and pleaſant, they reioyce (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) onely in the face, and not in the heart. And as the Wiſe man ſaith, their laughter is madnes like to the laughter of phranticke men, which is onely from the teeth outward, and not naturall and kindly; or vnto thoſe who are tickled, which laugh in their torment, as though they were rauiſhed with ioy, when as inwardly they are vexed, and not delighted. And as the mourning and ſorrow of the faithfull is not to bee reputed any extreame and bitter griefe, becauſe it is mixed with ſo much joy and comfort; and therefore the Apoſtle maketh it but a ſeeming ſorrow: where he ſaith, As ſorrowing, and yet alwayes reioycing: ſo contrariwiſe wicked worldlings haue no true joy in their worldly pleaſures, which is proper and peculiar vnto faithfull men, in their honeſt delights, which are warranted by the word, and approued by their owne conſcience, but onely a counterfait ſemblance thereof; ſo that it may as truly bee ſaid of them, as reioycing, and yet alwayes ſorrowing: for they that laugh when they doe euill, they laugh, but they reioyce not; and (as one ſaith) there is no truer miſerie, than this falſe joy. Now if any worldlings boaſt that they ſecurely injoy their delights, without any ſuch pangs and terrours, it is a manifeſt argument, that they haue a ſeared conſcience and hard heart, and are giuen ouer of God to a reprobate minde, and to commit ſinne with greedineſſe, till Gods wrath from heauen be reuealed againſt them? And conſequently they of all other are moſt ſharpely puniſhed, when as they haue no ſenſe of their puniſhment, and are moſt ſeuerely beaten when as they brag that they doe not ſmart.

Seculi lætitia eſt impunita nequitia, &c. Auguſt. in Ioan tract. 12. Tom. 9.

2 *Cor.*5.12.

*Eccleſ.*2.2.

2.*Cor.*6.10.

Nulla verior miſeria quàm falſa lætitia: Bernard. tract. de gratia & lib. arbit.

Rom.1.

Auguſt. en-rat. in Pſal. Tom.8.

Laſtly, whereas it is one of the chiefe comforts in this life to bee in the loue and fauour of God and men, outward proſperity and abundance of theſe earthly things, aſſureth vs of neither of them: for it is not a ſigne that we are choſen of Chriſt, that the world loueth vs, ſeeing it loueth onely his owne, and hateth thoſe who follow Chriſt. It is not a ſigne of our adoption when wee flouriſh in proſperitie, ſeeing the Lord chaſtizeth all thoſe whom he loueth, and they are baſtards and not ſonnes whom he correcteth not; whereas contrariwiſe wicked men doe moſt flouriſh in proſperity, as before I haue ſhewed. It is no good ſigne that wee are in the way to heauen when we haue all wee can wiſh, and find all things about vs pleaſant and comfortable, ſeeing the Scriptures teach vs, that thoſe muſt firſt bee conformable vnto Chriſt in ſufferings, who afterwards muſt bee conformable vnto him in glory, that the way to eternall happineſſe is afflicted and ſtraite, and that by manifold tribulations wee muſt enter into the kingdome of heauen. Againe, this ſtate of proſperity aſſureth vs not of the fauour of men; yea rather it maketh vs vtterly vncertaine who are our friends, and who are not. For they who flouriſh in the world haue many friends in ſhew, and few in truth, ſeeing they are friends to their proſperity, and not to themſelues, they honour their places and not their perſons; it is the idoll of wealth which the route adoreth, and not the aſſe that beareth it; it is the honie of profit which theſe hungrie flies haunt and not the pot that keepeth it; which being cleane waſhed, and the honie put into another veſſell, they ſtriaght leaue that, and as eagerly follow this. It is not the man but mirth which is affected; and ſo long as they banquet, feaſt, and ſport together, they make great loue and friendſhip one to another; but let the bond of pleaſure be once broken, by want, or ſickneſſe, and theſe friends are ſtraightway ſcattered. And yet are men ſo blinded with ſelfe-loue, that being in proſperity, they thinke they haue ſo many friends as they haue flatterers; and howſoeuer their owne hearts tell them, that they themſelues fawne vpon many whom they doe not affect, and bow vnto a number whom they doe not inwardly honour, and keepe company with diuers, not for any great loue to their perſons, but becauſe they are fit inſtruments of their pleaſure and delight,

§. Sect.
That wo things a vs neither the loue of God not

Ioh.15.19.

Apoc.3.19.

Heb.12.6.

Rom.8.17.

Act.14.22.

light; yet ſuch an opinion they haue of their owne worth, that they doe not once imagine that others pay them with their owne coine, but verily thinke that they are in good ſadneſſe, though themſelues ieſt, and that all the honour and reſpect, loue and friendſhip which other men ſhew vnto them, is ſimple and from the heart, though they know that themſelues make as faire a ſhew, and yet doe but counterfait and diſſemble.

Sect.6. worldly do not free our euils: they do deliuer vs dangers.
Sam.12.21.

And thus it appeareth that theſe worldly things doe not profit, in helping vs to attaine vnto thoſe things which are moſt eſteemeable. But beſides they are alike vnprofitable for the freeing of vs from the greateſt euils, and ſuccouring and deliuering vs in our greateſt extremities. So the Prophet Samuel calleth them vaine things which cannot profit vs, nor deliuer vs, becauſe they are but vanitie. For firſt, they doe not free vs from dangers, nor deliuer vs when wee are fallen into them; onely in the time of ſecuritie and peace, they promiſe vs immunitie and freedome from perils, and in the time of danger they allure vs to relie vpon them; but when we come into our greateſt extremities, they proue but reeds and broken ſtaues, which doe not ſupport vs, but rather wound our hearts with griefe, when as we ſee our ſelues forſaken of thoſe things in time of neede, wherein wee placed our chiefe confidence. And as thoſe who hauing fallen into the water, and are in danger of drowning, doe as they are falling, or whileſt they are floating on the water, catch hold on that which is next at hand, neuer conſidering whether it bee ſufficient to ſtay and hold them vp; and ſo their ſupport prouing weake and rotten, faileth and falleth with them: ſo worldly men being ready to fall into the pit of danger, doe ſuddenly catch hold of the weake and brittle ſtaies of earthly things, becauſe they are neere them and ſubject to their ſenſe and ſight: but they faile in their greateſt extremitie, and notwithſtanding any helpe which they will or can afford, they may well bee drowned in a ſea of dangers, and periſh whileſt they hold thoſe too weake ſtaies betweene their hands. And as they doe not at all helpe vs themſelues, ſo doe they diſappoint and vtterly depriue vs of our chiefe hope and helpe which wee ſhould haue in God; partly whileſt truſting vnto them for deliuerance, we either not at all, or but in formall and faint manner haue our recourſe vnto him, and craue his helpe, and partly becauſe they haue made vs ſo to offend and diſpleaſe God, that hee will not helpe vs. For when wee haue in the time of our peace and proſperitie giuen our hearts, which is Gods proper due, vnto theſe earthly idols, and haue loued and truſted in theſe creatures more than in the Creator, neuer leauing them, or leaning towards him, till we haue plainely found their inſufficiencie and our owne error; then though we call vpon God he will not heare vs, though we flie vnto him hee will not helpe vs, but will in the time of our aduerſitie leaue vs vnto thoſe idols for ſuccour and deliuerance, vpon which in the time of our proſperitie wee reſted and relied; and ſuffer vs to fall in our owne ruine, which wee haue brought vpon our ſelues by our vaine confidence. Thus the Wiſe man telleth vs, that he who truſteth in his riches ſhall fall; and Iob coucheth both theſe together, ſhewing that neither will the worldling pray, nor the Lord heare him in the time of trouble. What hope (ſaith he) hath the hypocrite when hee he hath heaped vp riches, if God take away his ſoule? will God heare his crie when trouble commeth vpon him? will hee ſet his delight vpon the Almightie? will he call vpon God at all times? So that (as one ſaith) in reſpect of immunitie from dangers, they may ſleepe more ſecurely who are rich in their conſciences, than they who are rich in theſe earthly vanities; for the all-ſufficient God being the ſtaffe of their ſtay, vpholdeth and ſupporteth them in the day of danger; but theſe who put their truſt in theſe worldly things, may truly ſay with the wicked, We haue made falſhood our refuge, and vnder vanitie are we hid. For the Lord wil bring vpon them the euils which they feared not, and in their greateſt extremitie, he will make the cords of their confidence as weake as a rotten threed, expoſing them to the laughter and ſcorne of all the godly, becauſe they hauing left the Lord, their ſure and ſufficient hold, and reſted vpon theſe broken reeds for helpe, haue caught a downe-fall through their owne folly. So the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that when God ſhall execute judgement in the deſtruction of theſe wicked worldlings, the righteous ſhall ſee it and feare, and ſhall laugh at them, ſaying, behold the man that tooke not God for his ſtrength, but truſted in the multitude of his riches, and ſtrengthned himſelfe in his ſubſtance: but I (ſaith he) ſhall bee like a greene oliue tree in the houſe of God, for I haue truſted in the mercie of God for euer and euer.

Iudges 10.14.

*Prou.*11.28.

Iob 27.9.10.

Diues in conſcientia ſecurior dormit in terra, quam diues in purpura. Auguſt.ſerm.112. Tom.10.

*Eſa.*28.15.

Pſalme 52.7.8.

§.*Sect.*7.
Worldly things do not cure the body of ſickneſſes and diſeaſes.

Furthermore, the abundance of theſe earthly things doth not cure the body of ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, which not being remoued make all the worlds comforts meerely vncomfortable. It is not worldly preferments, nor the praiſes of men, nor the higheſt ſeate, that will cure the gout, apoplexie, conſumption and the reſt; it is not the cap and the knee, which will preſerue them to whom theſe courteſies are done, from ſtooping vnto ſickneſſe. It is not the honorable garter that will cure the gout, or the chaire of eſtate that will helpe the ſtone and collicke, nor the crowne it ſelfe that will eaſe the head ach. Neither are riches more profitable for theſe purpoſes; for though a man haue goodly houſes, rich furniture, great reuenewes, and abundance of gold and ſiluer; yet all will not preuent the leaſt ſickneſſe before it commeth, nor free him of it when is hath ſeazed on him. Yea rather they are cauſes of weakening the ſtrength and impairing the health: for who ſeeth not by continuall experience that the poore doe much excell the rich; country-men, citizens; and ſeruants their maſters in health and ſtrength, being much more able to indure hunger and thirſt, heate and cold, watching and painfull labour; and to continue in theſe laborious imployments without any great wearines, and with much chearefulneſſe, which in an inſtant would quite tire the other? And this commeth to paſſe, firſt, becauſe riches doe make men wanton and effeminate, whileſt they ouer-tenderly looke to their body, not ſuffering it to indure any hardnes, but inuring it to warmth, daintines, and eaſe, which in a while cuſtome maketh ſo neceſſarie, that they cannot want any thing which they haue before vſed without impairing of their health. Secondly, becauſe either in getting, keeping, or diſpoſing their riches, or elſe by all theſe ioyned together, their heads are filled with cares, which will not let them ſleepe, nor take their reſt, without which health cannot long continue. So the Wiſeman ſaith, that the abundance of the rich will not ſuffer them to ſleepe, whereas the labouring man ſleepeth ſoundly, whether it bee much or little that he eateth. And the Sonne of Syrach telleth vs, that waking after riches doth pine away the bodie, and the care thereof driueth away ſleepe: This waking care breaketh the ſleepe, as a great ſickneſſe breaketh it. Thirdly, they impaire the health, as they miniſter food to voluptuouſnes whereon it ſurfetteth. In regard whereof one demandeth what we gaine by our riches, but drunkenneſſe, gluttonie, and abſurd pleaſures of all ſorts, which doe more hurt and torment vs, than moſt cruell maſters their ſlaues and bondmen. Laſtly, they prepare the ſeeds for all ſickneſſes and diſeaſes through their idleneſſe; for making it not onely a matter of eaſe, but of honour and ſtate, to abſtaine from all labour themſelues, and to doe all their buſineſſe by their ſeruants and deputies, they loſe that needfull exerciſe which preſerueth health, and for want of ſtirring, ſuffer hurtfull humours to increaſe and abound in them: neither haue they that ſtomacke and appetite to their meate, which they that labour haue, but come to their full tables, with fuller bellies and cloyed appetites, and ſo either eate nothing, or that which is worſe, againſt their ſtomackes. And whereas they who take paines neede no other ſauce but ſalt and hunger to ſharpen their appetite, becauſe exerciſe helpeth their digeſtion, and reneweth their hunger, which giueth a good relliſh to their courſeſt fare, and maketh it wholeſome nouriſhment for their bodies: contrariwiſe, they who ſpend their time in ſloth and idleneſſe, wanting this helpe for their concoction, come to the table, hauing their ſtomackes full of the laſt meales crudities, which maketh them to loath their greateſt dainties, and ſo either to faſt, or to repleniſh and cram their bellies with renued gluttonie. And as this abundance being vſually abuſed doth impaire health, ſo being ſicke, it commonly doth not helpe vs, but hinder our recouerie: and whereas the poorer ſort are much leſſe prone vnto ſickeneſſe, or being ſicke, commonly need not the Phyſitions helpe, hauing onely ſome kitchin phyſicke, and knowne remedies, which being helped with the ſtrength of of their nature, doe eaſily reſtore them to their health; the richer ſort doe more eaſily, and often fall into diſeaſes, of which through their effeminate weakneſſe, and want of naturall ſtrength they cannot recouer; and therefore are faine to flie to the Phyſition vpon euery ſlight occaſion, from many of which they receiue ſo much the ſlower helpe, by how much the greater ſtore of money they haue to beſtow vpon them; and if they be not men of the better conſcience, all the good their wealth doth, is to betray them vnto further torment, and to make their liues to become a prey. By all which it appeareth that riches doe neither preſerue health, nor cure diſeaſes; yea rather it may bee truely ſaid, that the halls of the rich are the chiefe harborrowes where diſeaſes inhabit. For as wormes ſooneſt breed in ſofteſt woods, and cankers moſt commonly gall and fret the goaleſt trees, which are fulleſt of ſap: ſo ſickneſſes moſt eaſily ſeaſe vpon ſuch bodies as are made moſt ſoft and effeminate with eaſe, wantonneſſe, and luxurious abundance; they hauing all diſeaſes incident to others, common vnto them, and certaine kinds of ſickneſſes proper and peculiar to themſelues, with which a man ſhall ſeldome heare that any poore man is troubled, as gouts, palſies, apoplexies and ſuch like, which are commonly the fruits of too great eaſe and plenty.

Eccleſ.5.9.10.

Eccleſiaſticus 31.1.2.

Chryſoſt. in Philip.3. Serm.10.

Morborum domicilium d uitum aula.

The like alſo may bee ſaid of wordly pleaſures, which being immoderatly loued, and exceſſiuely vſed, may well for the time delight the ſicke, but can neuer cure the ſickneſſe. Yea rather if wee aske the Phyſitions they will tell vs, that as temperance and abſtinence from theſe voluptuous pleaſures

§. Sect. 3.
Pleaſures d not cure di eaſes.

ſures is a ſpeciall meanes both to preſerue and recouer health; ſo the ouermuch vſe of them is the chiefe cauſe of all ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, and a notable hinderance vnto the recouerie of our health, when by any other accident it is impaired. For as one ſaith, hee that inureth a weake and ſickly body to exceſſe of voluptuous pleaſures; is like vnto him who launceth a leaking and rotten ſhip into the maine, for they doe not cure his maladies, but making open paſſages to let in a whole flood of more deſperate diſeaſes, they doe in the end wracke and ſincke him. Hence it is that the Grecians (as one well obſerued) called the intemperate, and they who wanted health by the ſame name, onely with the difference of one letter, to note the great affinity that is betweene ſickneſſe and intemperance. The which as it is true of the immoderate vſe of all kinds of pleaſures, ſo eſpecially of thoſe which conſiſt in eating and drinking: for howſoeuer the ſober and moderate vſe of meats and drinks is a meanes ordained of God to preſerue and recouer health and ſtrength, and to affect vs alſo with honeſt delights, yet when men ſet their hearts vpon theſe pleaſures, and place a kind of happineſſe in abundant and daintie fare, they impaire their health, and bring vpon themſelues innumerable dangerous and deſperate diſeaſes; for filling their ſtomackes with crude and indigeſted humours, and their heads with fumes: they within a while are vexed with megrims, palſies, conſumptions, agues, gouts, and what not? So that dearely doe they buy that ſhort pleaſure which they take in eating and drinking, which at the furtheſt extendeth but to the throate, whileſt their diuers kinds of diſagreeing meates being put into the ſame bellie, doe conflict one with another, and ſo ouerburthen and vexe the diſtended ſtomacke with their inteſtine diſſenſion, that they occaſion theſe voluptuous epicures to complaine of the laſt meales plentie, or of the vnwholeſomneſſe or ill cooking of ſome diſh the next day; whereas they might more iuſtly complaine of their owne gluttony and intemperance, which preſent diſcommoditie is commonly attended vpon with grieuous and tedious diſeaſes, as I haue ſhewed. In regard whereof the Grecians fitly call gluttony the throat, or belly frenſie; for what greater madneſſe can bee imagined, than for a ſhort and brutiſh pleaſure to loſe the comfort of continuall health, and to ſuſtaine the torments of tedious ſickneſſes? Yea in truth theſe gluttonous epicures vnwittingly depriue themſelues of their maine end, which is their pleaſure: for as temperate diet and meane fare is the mother, not onely of health, but alſo of delight; ſo contrariwiſe exceſſe and ſatiety, as it is the cauſe of many diſeaſes, ſo alſo of loathſome diſlike; for where there is fulneſſe there is no appetite; and where appetite wanteth, there can bee no pleaſure in eating and drinking. But theſe voluptuous pleaſures which conſiſt in meats and drinks, as they commonly depriue men of health and delight; ſo alſo of life it ſelfe, whileſt their epicuriſme and gluttony maketh way for diſeaſes, and diſeaſes for death. The which doth not alone ſeldome fall out by ſome rare-happening accident, but ſo frequently and daily, that wiſe obſeruers haue not doubted to affirme, that many more haue died through gluttonie, than by the ſword. So the ſonne of Syrach ſaith, that by ſurfet many haue periſhed, but hee that dieteth himſelfe prolongeth his life. With whom another agreeing ſaith, that gluttonie hath killed many, but ſpare diet none: wine hath hurt innumerable men, but abſtemious ſobriety no man; many haue loſt their liues, or at leaſt haue receiued their deaths wound euen at their banquets, defiling their tables with their owne blood; but not any haue miſcaried with temperate diet. Yea howſoeuer famine is much more feared, yet in truth feaſting is much more dangerous, both becauſe innumerable numbers more periſh by gluttonie than by want, and alſo becauſe it bringeth them to their iourneyes end by a much more foule and tedious way: for whereas famine riddeth men out of their paine in a few dayes, this putrifieth and rotteth them (as it were) inch meale, and by tedious conſumptions, and lingring torments, bringeth them at laſt to terrible, but yet often wiſhed deathes. Neuertheleſſe ſuch is the follie of the moſt that they flee famine becauſe of its fearefull viſage, though few periſh by it, and that by a more eaſie, or at leſt much more ſpeedy death, and hug gluttonie in their boſomes, becauſe a ſhort pleaſure accompanieth it, though it bring innumerable multitudes to much more foule and loathſome deſtruction.

Ecclus.37.30.

Ambroſ. de Cain & Abel. lib. cap. 5.

§. Sect. 9.
Worldly things profit not in the day of Gods viſitation.

And thus you ſee that theſe worldly things little auaile vs when wee lie vpon our ſicke beds. But though they could profit vs, for the curing of ſome ordinarie and naturall diſeaſes, by procuring vs phyſicke and better diet, yet how vnable are they to keepe backe old age, which is the next forerunner of death? For whileſt theſe voluptuous pleaſures, like ſtrangers or enemies deuoure a mans ſtrength, gray heires are heere and there vpon him, and he knoweth it not; as the Prophet ſpeaketh in another matter. But though they could alſo ſtay the courſe of time, and we could by their helpe renew our age like the Eagle: yet what wil they profit vs in the day of Gods wrath, when hee commeth in viſitation to take ven-

Hoſ.7.9.

ven-

Ezech.7.19.
Zeph.1.18.
Pro.11.4.
Eccleſiaſticus 5.1.

vengeance on vs for our ſinnes? Surely then ſhall the rich man caſt his ſiluer into the ſtreets, and his gold ſhall bee farre off; his ſiluer and gold cannot deliuer him in the day of the wrath of the Lord. So the Wiſe man ſaith, that riches auaile not in the day of wrath, but righteouſneſſe deliuereth from death; and therefore the Son of Syrach exhorteth vs, not to truſt in our riches, nor to ſay that we haue enough for our life: for they ſhall not helpe in the time of vengeance and indignation. Finally, howſoeuer theſe worldly vanities do in the time of peace and ſecurity, like the ice beare vs vp, yet when the hot ſunne of Gods wrath ariſeth they ſhall melt away, and leaue vs to ſincke in our greateſt extremities: yea theſe earthly things ſhall in the day of Gods viſitation, bee as fuell to his wrath, and make it burne more hot againſt thoſe who haue abuſed them vnto ſinne. The greater honours that men haue, the greater ſhall bee their ignominie and confuſion of face at this day, if they haue not vſed them for the aduancing of Gods glory, and for the countenancing and maintaining of vertue and religion, as alſo for the diſcountenancing and ſuppreſſing of ſinne and wickedneſſe. The greater wealth they haue, the greater ſhall be their plagues, if when God commeth to viſit, it ſhall be found that they haue not by theſe rich talents honoured their Lord and Maſter, and comforted and relieued their fellow ſeruants, but haue conſumed them on their owne luſts in riot and exceſſe. The more they haue abounded in voluptuous pleaſures, the more ſhall they abound in paines; if in their mirth they haue kept no meane, and haue not onely recreated and refreſhed themſelues, but euen ſurfetted in theſe carnall delights, feeding (like the rich glutton) deliciouſly, and going richly apparelled euery day; and as the Prophet ſpeaketh, drinking wine in bowles, delighting themſelues with their ſweete muſicke, and ſtretching themſelues on their iuorie beds, but in the meane time neuer remembring the afflictions of Ioſeph, nor relieuing poore Lazarus with the crums of their table.

Luk.16.
Amos 6.4.5.6.

§. Sect.10. That worldly things profit not at the houre of death.

But let it bee ſuppoſed that theſe earthly vanities could preſerue vs in ſafety our whole life; ſay they were armour of prouſe to beate backe the gunſhot of all euils whileſt wee remaine in this worldly warfare; yet what will they profit vs when the houre of death approcheth? How vaine and inſufficient ſhall wee then find them, to ſhield vs from this laſt mortall ſtroake, yea to purchaſe a reprieue euen vntill the next morning? For as they were no helpes to our birth and being, ſo they ſhall be no impediments to our death and ending. How truly may wee then ſay to them, after that wee haue our whole life relied on their helpe, as Iob to his friends; Miſerable comforters are you all; ſeeing when we moſt need refreſhing, they will not afford vnto vs any conſolation: not vnfitly in this reſpect compared to the brookes of Arabia, which are moſt drie when the paſſengers ſtand in moſt need of water. For when we are tormented with the pangs of death, and are terrified with the threatnings of the Law, and vexed with the inward accuſations of our owne conſciences, and affrighted with the apprehenſion of Gods deſerued wrath, and aſſaulted with the ſubtile and ſtrong tentations of our ſpirituall enemies; and beſides our owne griefes, ſee our friends weeping and lamenting about vs, as being loath to part, and yet vnable to ſtay vs; when theſe (I ſay) and many other vnauoidable euils haue beſet vs; what will it auaile vs, that we haue led our whole life in flouriſhing proſperity, and abounded in all which our hearts could deſire: ſeeing now they can miniſter vnto vs no helpe, in this our laſt and greateſt extremitie, but leaue and forſake vs when we ſtand in moſt neede of conſolation? What comfort ſhall wee then find, that wee haue ſate in the ſeat of honour, and beene aduanced to the chiefe preferments, and haue for ſmall or no deſerts beene famous and glorious in the eares and eyes of men? Seeing, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, theſe mortall gods muſt die as a man, and theſe Princes ſhall fall like others, and when the glorie of their houſe is moſt increaſed, they ſhall take nothing away when they die, neither ſhall their pompe deſcend after them, but theſe honorable perſonages ſhall bee like to the beaſts that periſh. And though they haue ſhined in glorious brightneſſe, whileſt the lampe of life laſted, yet if their light be not ſtill nouriſhed with the remembrance of their vertues, graces, and good deſeruings, it ſhall then goe out and vaniſh away in ſmoake and ſtincke. What will it profit vs that we haue multiplied our treaſures as the ſands of the ſea, ſeeing theſe golden rayes ſhall then ſet, and bring no comfort vnto vs in the night of death? How true then ſhall we find our Sauiour Chriſt, ſaying, that our life conſiſteth not in our riches and abundance? How eaſily then ſhall we ſubſcribe to the ſaying of the Wiſe man, The treaſures of vnrighteouſneſſe profit nothing; but righteouſneſſe deliuereth from death? Then ſhall wee finde the Prophets ſimilitude fitted vnto vs: As the Partridge gathereth the young which ſhee hath not brought fourth: ſo hee that getteth riches, and not by right, ſhall leaue them in the middeſt of his dayes, and at his end ſhall bee a foole. What will it auaile vs that we haue all our barnes full, when as the ſame night our ſoules ſhall be taken from vs? to leaue rich

Iob.16.2.
Mr.Gr
Iob 6.15.
Pſalm.82.
Pſal.49.16. 17.19.
Luk.12.15.
Prou.
Ierem.17.1
Luk.12.20

rich Cheſts behind vs, & to take with vs ſouls quite empty of all grace and goodneſſe? to bequeath much riches to the World, and to carry no good works with vs to the ſeat of judgment? What good will our wealth doe vnto vs, which in all our liues we haue ſo dearely loued, as though it were this golden Ladder which would mount vs vp into Heauen; ſeeing at this fearefull houre, Peters curſe will accompany it; Thy money periſh with thee; becauſe wee thought our heauenly inheritance could bee bought with this earthly traſh? Finally, what comfort ſhall we then take in our worldly delights, ſeeing like a Cloud they are vaniſhed away, and haue left nothing behind them but griefe and heauineſſe? What pleaſure ſhall wee then take in merry company, when as now none but our mourning friends ſtand about vs? Or in our former feaſting, and delight in eating and drinking, when as our taſte failing vs, wee can find no ſweetneſſe in our beſt dainties? Or what now helpeth it vs to haue often heard melodious Muſicke, to haue ſeene many delightfull ſhewes, and to haue ſpent much of our time in vain ſports and paſtimes, when as being all paſſed away like a dreame in the night, nothing carrieth with vs but paine, feare and anguiſh of minde? In a word, after we haue long tired our ſelues in hunting after theſe worldly vanities, we ſhal then conclude that wee haue ſpent our ſtrength in vaine, and in our hands haue found nothing: for then all theſe things being taken from vs, wee ſhall goe out of the World as naked and bare as we came into it, hauing nothing of all which wee poſſeſſed, but a poore ſheet to couer vs. And as the Milſtone which turneth about all day, grinding Corne for others, and not for it ſelfe, doth at night ſtand in the ſame place where it was in the morning, and after that great plenty of graine hath paſſed by it, is emptied of all, hauing no good by the bargaine, but to weare it ſelfe out for the profit of others: ſo worldly men in attaining vnto earthly vanities toyle themſelues the whole day of this life, & when the night of death approcheth, they are in the ſame caſe that they were in when they began, & hauing now only their labour for their paines, they retaine nothing of all that which hath paſſed through their hands but are conſtrained to leaue them to the World, from whom they firſt had them.

Now conſider further, that by reaſon of this relinquiſhing all which they ſo well loue, they ſhall not only at their departure bring no comfort, but much griefe and bitterneſſe. For ſeeing in the whole courſe of their life, they haue ſet their affections chiefly vpon them, therefore when they are conſtrained to leaue them, they ſuſtaine no leſſe ſorrow, than if their hearts were pulled out of their bodies; and as impatiently beare this ſeperation between themſelues and their Idols, as the enſuing ſeparation betweene their ſoules and their bodies. Thus will the paines of death be doubled to ambitious men (who hauing ſpent their whole liues in making themſelues knowne vnto others, doe die vnknowne to themſelues) when as all their preferments forſake them which they loued, as well as their liues, and much better than their ſoules. Thus the rich man grieueth to part with his riches, more than to part with his life, and is tormented as much that another muſt haue them, as that hee muſt leaue them. And thus the voluptuous man ſorroweth becauſe he muſt now leaue all his pleaſant company, good fare, and delightfull ſports and paſtimes, which all his life he hath loued much better than his owne ſoule.

Illi mori grauis incubat qui notus nimis omnibus ignotus moritur ſibi, Senec. in Thyeſte.

Mori adeſt? magis quam morte mordetur auarus diues quod diuitiæ ſuæ fiunt alienæ, Chryſoſt. Homil. ad Pop. 65 Tom 4.

Now the reaſon of this their double death, and extreame ſorrow: is firſt, becauſe they part with theſe things which their ſoule loueth, hauing no hope of obtaining better things after this life. For whereas (as the Wiſeman ſpeaketh) the righteous hath his chiefe hope euen in his death: contrariwiſe, when a wicked man dieth his hope periſheth, and the hope of the vniuſt ſhall periſh. And what hope (ſaith Iob) hath the Hypocrite, when he hath heaped vp riches, if God take away his ſoule? No maruell therefore if they ſorrowfully part with their falſe Idols, when as they haue no hope of enjoying the true God; and leaue with griefe worldly vanities, when they haue no aſſurance of heauenly joyes. Secondly, this parting with the world and worldly things, ſhall be at that day moſt bitter and grieuous, becauſe when they forſake them, they ſhall leaue that ſinne behind them, which hath beene occaſioned by them, either in their getting, keeping, or diſpoſing them. For being ſtripped of all theſe things, nothing ſhall be left vnto them but the gaules of an euill conſcience, which in ſenſe of ſmart ſhall then cry out vpon them, becauſe they haue aſpired vnto Honours by Machiauellian policies, or haue not vſed their credit and authority, for the aduancing of vertue and ſuppreſſing of ſinne; and haue made themſelues rich with deceit and oppreſſion, or haue not communicated their wealth to the reliefe of the poore, and the furthering of pious and charitable actions; and haue wallowed in carnall pleaſures, vtterly neglecting the meanes of attaining vnto the joyes of Heauen. And thus ſinne ſhall accompany them when all things elſe ſhall leaue them. And as Zophar ſpeaketh, The wicked mans bones are full of the ſinnes of his youth, and they ſhall lie downe with him in the duſt: with all which troubles, how miſerably is the ſoule of the wretched Wordling troubled and tormented, when as hee ſhall vnderſtand that in treaſuring

Prou.14.32.

Prou.11.7. Iob 27.8.

Iob 20.11.

Rom.2.5,6.

ting vp theſe earthly vanities, hee hath alſo treaſured vp vengeance againſt this day of the declaration of Gods wrath; and that through that narrow way which hee muſt paſſe there is roome enough for his ſinnes to goe with him, but no paſſage for theſe things which by his ſinnes he hath compaſſed? For Death like an inexorable Porter ſtanding at the doore, will not ſuffer any of theſe worldly things to goe with him, but being the Worlds, to the World hee muſt leaue them. O how true then will hee finde the ſaying of our Sauiour, What will it profit a man to gain the whole world, and to loſe his owne ſoule? How much would hee giue at this day for a good conſcience, and to haue peace made betweene God and it? How will he condemne his owne folly for conſuming his life and ſtrength in ſeeking theſe worldly vanities which now muſt leaue him, neglecting thoſe heauenly joyes which being once obtained, would neuer haue forſaken him? How much now doth he prefer a dram of grace before an earthly Kindome, and a few good workes, before a world of riches? Finally, willingly now would he, if he might, exchange all his glory, wealth and carnall delights, with the ſcorne, pouerty, and afflictions of the moſt contemned Chriſtian, ſo that alſo hee might ſhare with him in his hopes, and partake with him in thoſe heauenly joyes.

Math.16.26.

§. *Sect.*12.
That worldly things profit not after our ſeparation.

But though theſe earthly vanities could profit vs at our laſt departure, by ſweetning death, and making its ſting leſſe grieuous, yet what good will they doe vs after our ſeparation? Seeing now there is no difference betweene the rich and the poore, the King and the Begger; betweene him who languiſhed in miſery and trouble, and another which hath ſpent his life in pleaſures and paſtimes? For as nature putteth no difference between the one & the other in their birth; ſo neither doth it diſtinguiſh between thē after their death: al haue the like ingreſſe & egreſſe when they enter into, and leaue the World; alike in the wombe, & alike in the Graue. For open the earth, and ſee if thou canſt diſcerne the rich from the poore, or the Noble from the baſe; ſauing that only there is this difference, that more periſheth with the one than with the other; the rich hauing a fairer Tombe and finer Sheete, or more ſweete Odours wherewith he is embalmed; all which are loſſes to the liuing, and not helpes to the dead, ſeeing theſe good things are bereaued of their grace and ſweetneſſe, but doe not inrich the dead Corps with their vertue and excellencie. Yea, if in this life wee haue ſet our hearts vpon theſe vanities, eſteeming and louing them better than God himſelfe, his ſpirituall Graces and heauenly joyes; if vnrepented ſinne haue accompanied them, either in their getting or fruition, then how vnprofitable ſhall wee find them after death, yea, how hurtfull and pernicious to our wretched ſoules? For what will it auaile vs to be extolled where wee are not, and to bee condemned where wee are? to haue with Diues rich friends on earth, which haue the command of whole Riuers, and to bee our ſelues in Hell fire, not being able to obtaine a ſmall drop of water with earneſt intreaty? to haue left many delights behind vs, and to haue nothing but torments with vs? O how many Worlds would a man in this caſe giue for the redemption of his ſoule out of theſe helliſh tortures, which he hath plunged himſelfe into for the obtaining, for a ſmall moment of time (as it were) a little handfull of theſe earthly vanities? How much doth hee now loath thoſe things which before hee ſo much loued, ſeeing by wofull experience hee findeth that they haue depriued him of thoſe true and eternall joyes, and haue beene the occaſions of his fearefull condemnation?

Ambroſ.lib.de Nabuth.cap.1. Tom.4.

§. *Sect.*1
That worl things wil profit vs a the day of judgemen

Finally, though worldly vanities ſhould accompany vs to the graue, yet what will they profit vs at the day of judgement? for then we ſhall be examined, not how we haue flouriſhed in the World, but how faithfully we haue ſerued God. Neither will the Lord our Iudge then conſider how honourable we haue beene amongſt men, but how much we haue honoured him, who hath cauſed vs to be thus honoured; nor what great Offices we haue borne, but how wee haue diſcharged them; nor reſpect vs according to our earthly preferments, but according to the meaſure of that glory which by them wee haue deriued to him, and of that good which we haue done to his Church, and the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt, with that credit and authority wherewith God endowed vs. Then the Lord will not regard how many prayſes we haue had amongſt men, but how praiſe worthy we haue beene in his ſight; not how they haue magnified vs, but how we haue magnified his glorious name; nor how many Caps and Knees we haue had from our inferiours, but how oft and zealouſly we haue humbled our ſoules, and bowed the knees of our hearts in praying vnto him for his mercies wanting; and in prayſing him for his benefits receiued. Then will not our Iudge reſpect vs for our riches which wee had in the World, (for he will not receiue bribes, neither ſhall we then haue any thing to giue) but thoſe at this day ſhall haue his fauour, who haue abounded in the ſpirituall riches of his ſanctifying Graces. He will not regard how rich we haue beene in Lands, but in holineſſe of life, not in our Cheſts, but in our Conſciences; hee will not eſteeme vs for our wealth, but for our good workes; nor yet becauſe wee in this life had abundance, but becauſe wee did liberally beſtow it in the workes of Charity and Mercy, and ſpared for no coſt to further all pious and religious actions; vſing ſing like faithfull Stewards theſe rich talents to the glory of our Maſter, and the good of our fellow ſeruants. Neither ſhall thoſe who heere hunted after worldly gaine be reſpected becauſe they ſeized on their prey, but he that hath followed after righteouſneſſe and mercy, ſhall find life, righteouſneſſe and glorie; as the Wiſe man ſpeaketh. Finally, the pleaſures of this life will then little profit vs, neither will it auaile vs that wee haue had much joy in the World, but joy in the Holy Ghoſt; not that wee haue abounded in worldly delights, but that our ſoules haue delighted themſelues in the Lord, and rejoyced in him, not onely in proſperity, but alſo in affliction and tribulation. Yea, contrariwiſe we ſhall find at this day that theſe worldly things ſhall but increaſe our bils of account, ſeeing wee ſhall be called to a reckoning how wee haue gotten, kept and diſpoſed them; which accounts if we cannot make euen, either by ſhewing how wee haue imployed the talents receiued, or by laying before the eyes of our Iudge our acquittance and generall pardon bought with Chriſts precious bloud, and ſealed vnto vs by his holy Spirit, wee ſhall be caſt into the priſon of outer darkneſſe, there to remaine vntill wee haue paid the vtmoſt farthing. So that at this day thoſe ſhall be our burthens, which were heere our honours; all our riches ſhall then be turned into debts which we muſt ſatisfie by our ſelues or by our Sauiour, ſhewing how wee haue laid them out in the ſeruice of our Maſter, hauing his Word for our warrant, or where wee are ſhort in our reckoning pleading Chriſts payment. And for all our paſſed pleaſures we ſhall, as the Wiſe man telleth vs, be brought vnto judgement. Then ſhall all that Honour which wee haue receiued of men, and haue not returned vnto God, be imputed vnto vs as ſtealth and ſacriledge. Then ſhall our riches which we haue hoorded vp, and not imployed in the ſeruice of our Maſter, & reliefe of our fellow ſeruants, be accounted as ſtolne goods, and the ruſt of our ſiluer and gold ſhal be a witneſſe againſt vs. Then ſhall all our pleaſures but aggrauate our paines; if we haue not by them as by honeſt recreations, beene better fitted for Gods ſeruice, but haue vſed them immoderately, ſpending a great part of our life in ſports and paſtimes. O then what will it auaile vs to haue beene prayſed of men, God and our our owne conſciences not approuing vs; ſeeing wee ſhall not now be defended of men when God ſhall judge, nor deliuered by them, when as he ſhall condemne vs? What will it profit vs to haue beene rich in the World, when as being ſtripped of all, wee ſhall haue nothing left but our ſinnes and ſores which they haue made in our conſciences in getting or vſing them? Finally, what good ſhall our paſſed pleaſures then bring vnto vs, when as hauing abandoned and left vs, nothing remayneth of them but pollution and filthineſſe of ſoule, and the juſt wrath of God, whom wee haue diſpleaſed by pleaſing our ſelues with theſe wicked delights? or in a word, What will it profit vs to haue gained the whole world, and to haue loſt our owne ſoules?

Marke 8.36.

§. Sect. 14.
The concluſion perſwading to ſeeke after Gods ſpirituall graces, and heauenly ioyes; which alone bring true profit.

Seeing therefore theſe worldly things profit vs not, either as meanes to procure our chiefe good, or to free vs from our greateſt euils. Seeing they doe not inwardly inrich vs with vertue and ſauing grace, nor outwardly by good workes; ſeeing they doe not bring vnto vs true delight and comfort, and neither aſſure vs of the loue of God, nor fauour of men. Seeing they doe not free vs from dangers, nor cure our bodily diſeaſes; nor yet preſerue vs in the day of vengeance from Gods deſerued plagues; nor miniſter vnto vs any true comfort or helpe at the houre of death, after death, or at the day of judgement: therefore let vs not any more ouer-ualue theſe vnprofitable trifles, nor ſet our hearts and affections too much vpon them; but rather let vs eſteeme, affect and ſeeke after Gods ſpirituall Graces, and heauenly joyes, as being alone truely profitable, and nothing elſe in the World without them.

Let vs delight our ſelues in hearing and meditating in Gods Word, & vpon our own experience we ſhall conclude with the Prophet Dauid that the Law of Gods mouth is better vnto vs, than thouſands of gold and ſiluer. Let vs labour to inrich our hearts with godlineſſe, which as the Apoſtle ſaith, is the greateſt gaine with contentation: for it is profitable for all things, as hauing the promiſes of this life and of the life to come; the former to ſuſtaine and comfort vs for a time, becauſe God promiſeth vs his helpe; the latter to ſatisfie vs for euer, becauſe hee promiſeth vs himſelfe. And if the profit of theſe ſpirituall graces doe not fully content vs, by reaſon of their imperfections and our owne corruptions, let vs labour to attaine vnto aſſurance of heauenly happines, where we ſhall be perfect both in grace and glory. Let vs affect thoſe eternall Honours which are accompanied with all good, and freed from all euill. Let vs lay vp our treaſures there where neither theeues can ſteale them, nor fire conſume them; let vs labour after thoſe euerlaſting joyes which wil fill vs with pleaſure, and more profit vs than the worlds Monarchy. Which if wee once poſſeſſe, though it be but in aſſurance of faith, we wil eaſily in compariſon thereof, not onely contemne theſe earthly vanities as baſe and vnprofitable, but alſo abhorre them as loſſe and diſaduantage, when they are the Deuils wages, hiring vs by ſinning to hazard this happineſſe, or his alluring baites to weane

Pſal.119.72.

1.Tim.6.6. and 4.8.

Matth.6.19.

our hearts and affections from theſe heauenly excellencies.

Chap. XXII.

Of the manifold miſeries which doe accompany worldly vanities, in the whole courſe of mans life.

§. Sect. 1. That all worldly benefits are embittered with manifold miſeries.

WE haue ſhewed the vanity and vnprofitableneſſe of theſe worldly things, which were ſufficient to weane our hearts from them, though there were no other reaſons: for who would affect theſe worthleſſe vanities, which neither ſatisfie, nor profit thoſe that haue them? But though it ſhould be granted, that they were not thus vaine, but in their owne nature of ſome worth; ſay that in themſelues they were profitable, and therefore to be deſired; yet let vs further know, that they are ſo mingled with miſeries, and ſo diſtaſted with the bitterneſſe of adherent euils, as that there is no reaſon why wee ſhould much eſteeme them, or ſet our hearts vpon them. For let vs put into the one Scole, thoſe things that wee thinke worthy the name of good, which is to be deſired; and into the other, the miſeries, euils, inconueniences, and diſcontentments which alwayes doe accompany them; and wee ſhall finde that there is no proportion, betweene the huge heape of the one, and the little graine of the other; betweene the ocean of miſery, and ſmall drop of true delight and happineſſe. It is true that this notable Hypocrite the World is alwayes ready to deceiue vs, by promiſing vnto vs excellent benefits, and things ſincerely good, without the mixture of any euill; but when it commeth to performance, behold it tempereth a dram of Hony with a pound of Gall; it promiſeth all good, but it payeth vs with euill, or at leſt mixeth it with ſo little good, that it ſerueth but to giue vs a more quicke taſte and true relliſh of thoſe euils which accompany it. It promiſeth life and payeth death; it proffereth joy, but behold it giueth ſorrow; and commonly if we haue but one good meale of delight and comfort, we muſt walke in the ſtrength thereof many dayes, and hauing nothing to feed vpon but trouble and diſcontent, loſe all that former pleaſure many times ouer, with griefes and croſſes, before our comforts be againe renued. And thus doth the World, like a ſtately built Sepulchre, make vnto vs outwardly a goodly ſhew, though there bee nothing within but rottenneſſe and putrefaction; and like a ſubtile Merchant, it offereth vs a good ſample of bad wares, and outwardly preſenteth to our view the beſt end of the Stuffe, whereas the inmoſt and middle parts are courſe and ſlight; and placeth the pureſt and choiceſt commodities in the vpper part of the veſſell, whereas in the middle and the bottome, it is mixt, counterfeit, and purpoſely falſified to deceiue vs. Neither in truth is it more apt to deceiue, than we to be deceiued; for as thoſe who are borne in a Mill are ſo well acquainted with noiſe, that it little diſquieteth them; and as they who are bred and brought vp in a priſon, are not much troubled with their reſtraint, nor offended with their little light, nor grieued to carry their Giues and Bolts; yea, contrariwiſe, when their irons are but a little lightned, they are comforted and refreſhed, as though they were ſet at liberty, and thinke a little bettering of their ſcant and hungry meales, a great Feaſt and dainty Banquet: whereas thoſe who haue beene brought vp in great plentie and full libertie, ſorrow at the others joyes, and are tormented with griefe, in the middeſt of their wretched comforts. So becauſe wee are from the firſt moment of our birth brought vp and inured to this noiſe of miſeries; becauſe wee had our firſt being, and breeding in this wretched priſon of the World, we are ready to loue and rejoyce in our little inlarged impriſonment, as though we had attained vnto perfect liberty, and to account our leaſt miſeries our greateſt happineſſe. Whereas if either with our firſt Parents we had euer taſted of the joyes of Paradiſe, or had but only in Viſion with the bleſſed Apoſtle, the leaſt glimpſe of our heauenly glory, the Worlds greateſt liberty would appeare to bee a thraldome, and his moſt delicious ſweets would bee as bitter as gall, and as loathſome to our taſte as the infuſion of Wormewood, yea, in truth as the Chymicall extraction of Colyquintida.

§. Sect. 2. The miſe of worldly things ſhew by teſtim

But the miſeries of the World and worldly things may be more cleerely ſhewed, by conſidering the teſtimonies of thoſe who haue ſpoken vpon their own experience, and as they haue beene guided by Gods Spirit, which can neither deceiue nor be deceiued; as alſo by inſiſting in ſome ſpeciall inſtances of theſe miſeries, wherewith all men generally are acquainted. The holy Patriarch Iacob ſpeaking as he had found by lamentable experience, telleth Pharaoh, that the dayes of his life had beene few and euill: and this Iob inlargeth to all the ſonnes of men, ſaying, that man who is borne of a woman, is of ſhort continuance and full of trouble: yea, the Wiſe man himſelfe who had taken the deepeſt draught in the golden Cup of the Worlds proſperitie, euen after he had glutted himſelf with voluptuous pleaſures; concludeth that all is not only vanity, but alſo vexation of ſpirit, & that all mans dayes are ſorrowes, & his trauaile grief, ſo that his heart can take no reſt, no not in the night, which time is purpoſely deſtinated to reſt and quietneſſe: and elſewhere he affirmeth, that the miſery of man is great vpon him. With which heauenly

Gen.47.9.
Iob 14.1.
Eccleſ.2.23.
Eccleſ.8.6.

uenly Oracles of diuine Truth, agree the manifold teſtimonies of the wiſer ſort of men. The Sonne of Syrach ſaith, that great trauaile is created for all men, and an heauy yoke for the ſonnes of Adam, from the day that they goe out of their mothers wombe, till the day that they returne to the mother of all things. Namely, their thoughts, and feare of heart, and the imagination of the things they wait for, and the day of death. From him that ſitteth vpon the glorious throne, vnto him that is beneath in the earth and aſhes. From him that is clothed with blew ſilke and weareth a Crowne, euen vnto him that is clothed in ſimple Linnen: wrath and enuy, trouble and vnquietneſſe, feare of death, rigour, ſtrife, &c. With him agreeth another, who was herein more wiſe and learned, becauſe hee ſaw and acknowledged his owne ignorance; O Lord my God (ſaith hee) this life preſent is full of labour and tribulation, as being led with bitter mourning, and loſt with brackiſh teares; yea, ſo great is the affliction of this wretched life, that it deſerueth to be called rather a death, than life; or ſome thing elſe, which is worſe than death; ſeeing ſcarce any man paſſeth a day thereof, without cumberſome croſſes, and cauſe of griefe. Behold (ſaith another) the World in paſſing by troubleth vs, and yet wee loue it; it deceiueth vs, and we account it faithfull; it killeth vs, and yet as life it ſelfe it is affected and deſired; it windeth from vs, and wee embrace it. O defiling World, how wouldeſt thou rauiſh thy Louers with delight, if thou diddeſt flouriſh? but flouriſh thou doeſt not; ſeeing thou haſt no ſincere joy, or ſtable conſtancy, but thy honey and ſweetneſſe hath its bitterneſſe, falſe delights, certaine griefe, vncertaine gladneſſe, hard labour, fearefull reſt, repleniſhed miſeries, and an empty hope of happineſſe. And elſewhere, This preſent life is fraile & miſerable; vncertain, deceiuing, and vnſatiable: we are borne in paine and ſorrow, we are nouriſhed in miſery & difficulty, we liue in labour and die in griefe; and in the end (which is moſt to bee lamented) if wee depart impenitent, wee plunge our ſoules into perpetuall torments.

But this miſery of mans life will better appeare, if we conſider it in the parts thereof, which are chiefly two, ſinne and puniſhment; for the former, we are euen in our firſt conception, ſo wholly defiled with that corruption of nature which hath beene deriued vnto vs from our firſt Parents, that wee are onely aliue to ſinne, but dead to grace and all goodneſſe, vnable ſo much as to moue in the way of righteouſneſſe which leadeth vnto life, although wee runne with head-long haſt in the way of wickedneſſe, which bringeth thoſe who goe in it, to perdition and eternall death. And from this fountaine of originall ſinne, iſſue the poyſonous ſtreames of actuall tranſgreſſions, whereby we break continually, through the whole courſe of our life, all the Commandements of Almighty God, omitting the duties which he hath commanded and committing the ſins which he hath forbidden. In which miſery of ſinne we are wholly plunged before we are called and conuerted vnto God, committing all manner of wickedneſſe with ful ſwinge and conſent of will, delighting our ſelues and rejoycing in our rebellion; by reaſon whereof we are naturally ſtrangers and enemies vnto God, ſubject to his wrath, to the curſe of the Law, and to all thoſe fearefull plagues and puniſhments, which therein are denounced againſt Tranſgreſſours, the ſlaues of ſinne and Satan, and heires of eternall death. Yea, and after wee are conuerted vnto God, the fleſh continually luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the corruptions of nature remayne ſo ſtrong in vs, that wee cannot doe the good wee would, but the euill which wee would not doe, that doe we. And as we are by this Law of our members rebelling againſt the Law of our minde, daily led captiue vnto ſinne; ſo are we thereby in ſuch ſort diſabled, that we cannot, to the day of our death, offer vnto God any one pure and perfect duty, without the filthy ſpots and ſtaines of our corruption. Now what a miſery is this, that we who were created Gods glorious creatures, according to his owne Image, to the end that we ſhould ſerue him in holineſſe of life, ſhould, as though wee had forgotten the end wherefore we came into the World, neglect all duty to our Creatour, and become voluntary ſlaues to ſinne and Satan, ready to doe his will; though wee haue nothing for our wages but eternall death? Yea, euen after we are called and reconciled vnto God, how great is our miſery whileſt wee continue in this life, ſeeing we are daily intangled in the ſnares of ſinne, and haue our beſt actions ſo imperfect and ſtained with our corruptions, that if the Lord ſhould examine them according to his righteous judgment, they would deſerue a curſe rather than a bleſſing, and puniſhment rather than a reward? What a miſery is this, that after we haue with Iacob preuailed with God, we ſhould halt of our corruptions to the day of death; and after we haue broken out of the priſon of Satans bondage, and ſhaken off the chaines of his ſubjection, all our joynts ſhould be ſo ſtiffe and benummed, that wee ſhould to the very end of life, lamely performe all holy duties, and halt like wretched creeples in the wayes of God? Finally, that the more time is added to our dayes, the more we ſhould adde to the heap of our ſins, and prouoke our good God to juſt diſpleaſure, who hath ſo tenderly loued vs, that hee gaue his owne deare Sonne to death for the perfecting of our redemption?

Rom.7.

§. Sect. 4. That the things of this life are commended onely by neceſſity.

And this is the chiefe part of all our miſery, as being that curſed fountain from which all the reſt ſpring and flow; for by reaſon hereof all the creatures in the World are made ſubject to coruption, and being made for bleſſings, they are turned into puniſhments; and though outwardly they ſeeme excellent and deſirable, yet this hidden poyſon of ſinne ſecretly lurking in them, maketh vs to caſt them vp with griefe, when with great pleaſure wee haue ſwallowed them downe. So that euen thoſe things which wee chiefly affect are full of wretchedneſſe, beſides thoſe innumerable miſeries joyned with them, which all taking notice of, doe abhorre and ſhun. And though the things we deſire were freed from outward and accidentall euils; yet themſelues bring with them miſery enough to make them juſtly loathſome to all that judiciouſly taſte and rellish them. For the chiefe goodneſſe of theſe worldly things which we deſire, conſiſteth not in any abſolute excellency that is in themſelues, but onely as they are preſent helpes to free vs for the time from the euils which we feare; and no other worth or eſteeme haue they but as they come commended by ſome vrgent neceſſity: thus wee deſire riches, not ſo much for any excellency wee ſee in them, as becauſe wee feare and ſhun pouerty; thus Honours are eſteemed, becauſe wee feare diſgrace; thus meate hath onely ſo much goodneſſe in it, as men haue hunger that feed vpon it, and drinke hath its worth from thirſt; thus Summer is commended vnto vs by Winter, warmth by our colde, and the coole aire by intemperate heate. In a word, nothing in the World is eſteemed good, but onely ſo farforth as it bringeth letters of commendations from neceſſity, and ſerueth as a preſent means to free vs from euill, and to make vs leſſe miſerable. And if wanting the prayſe which need imparteth vnto it, it offer it ſelfe vnto vs, it is vnwelcome, and we forthwith loath and diſlike it. If meate come before hunger haue made way for it in our deſires, who is not glutted with the ſight of it? If drinke be not commended by thirſt, who regardeth it? If we haue more clothes laid on vs when we are hot enough, we eſteeme it a burthen and not a benefit: If abundance of wealth were offered vnto vs, not hauing before any want of it, and conſequently no deſire, we would not much value it. Finally, ſo much worth and eſteeme theſe worldly things haue, as wee haue firſt want and miſery. So that in truth he who hath moſt need, and is moſt wretched, he hath moſt joy and comfort by theſe earthly vanities when hee hath liberty to enjoy them; he who is moſt hungry hath alſo moſt pleaſure by meate; he that is thirſtieſt, hath moſt delight in drinke; and we muſt firſt want in ſtate, or at leſt in minde, before riches haue any great welcome. Yea, pleaſure it ſelfe hath no ſweet rellish till our appetite be ſharpened by the ſharpe ſawce of miſery and affliction, neither would any man thinke himſelfe more happy for the acceſſe of worldly things, vnleſſe it were for former felt, or future feared vnhappineſſe.

§. Sect. 5. That mans life is a continuall diſeaſe, and worldly things, medicines to eaſe it.

Naſci hic in corpore mortali incipere aegrotare eſt, Aug. in Pſal. 102. Enarrat.

In which reſpect our life is moſt fitly compared to a continuall diſeaſe: for when wee begin to liue, we begin to be ſicke; and theſe worldly things which wee ſo much eſteeme, are but Medicines for our Maladies, and playſters for our ſores, which do not perfectly cure vs, but onely giue vs ſome preſent eaſe. For in truth the diſeaſes are naturall, hereditary, rooted in our firſt principles, and hauing ſetled themſelues in our bones and marrow they are incurable. And therefore as that is eſteemed the beſt Medicine for the Gout which remoueth the fit, and that the beſt ſalue which keepeth the incurable vlcer cleane and ſweet: ſo thoſe are eſteemed beſt among worldly things, that for the preſent ſerue as Medicines to eaſe our naturall miſeries, which it is altogether impoſſible fully to heale and cure. This will better appeare if we conſider of ſome ſpeciall inſtances; for what is hunger but a diſeaſe, which will conſume a man in a few dayes, like that called the Wolfe, which if it be not fed with outward things, feedeth vpon the body till it haue deſtroyed it? And what is meate but the Medicine of this ſickneſſe, which becauſe it cannot perfectly cure it, therefore it is continually applyed to remoue the fit, and to aſſwage the preſent paine? What is thirſt but a ſickneſſe, which would ſoone diſpatch vs, vnleſſe drinke as a Phyſicall potion did for the inſtant ſerue for a remedy? So what is watching but a naturall diſeaſe? and what is ſleepe but the Medicine, that for the time helpeth it? What is couetouſneſſe but the ſoules Feauer? And what riches, but as a Medicine which ſometime eaſeth the fit for the preſent, though afterwards it bee more raging? What ambition, but the hearts Tympany? And what Honours, but an inſtant refreſhing, which for a while allayeth the griefe, though it rather increaſeth than abateth the ſwelling? What is voluptuouſneſſe, but as the Wiſe man calleth it a merry madneſſe, which hath ſome preſent comfort, by pleaſures and delights? What is labour, but a ſickneſſe, which reſt eaſeth? What ſtanding, but an infirmitie, which ſitting mitigateth? And this alſo long vſed becommeth of a Medicine a diſeaſe, which another kind of diſpoſition or poſture of the body doth for the time refreſh? All which though cuſtome make them ſo familiar, that we doe not take any ſerious regard of them, yet if wee could poſſibly be freed from them but one yeere, and liue without hunger, thirſt, cold, heate, labour, concupiſcence, we would account them as troubleſome diſeaſes, if againe they ſhould ſeaſe vpon vs.

Eccleſ.

Sect. 6.
the loathe ſatiety ch man fin-h in world-hings.

And thus man firſt made miſerable by ſin, doth but ſhew his wretchedneſſe whileſt hee frolickes it out in the fruition of thoſe things wherein he chiefly delighteth; and being ſicke of innumerable maladies, hee is perfectly cured of none, but onely is eaſed for the time by often changing his miſeries with one another, hungring and eating, and after eating, againe hungring; interchanging waking with ſleeping, and ſleeping, with waking, like a ſicke man turning from ſide to ſide, to find ſome ſhort repriuall of his paine; or as if one ſhould leape out of the ſcorching heat, into the chilling cold, and often interchange the one for the other, accounting both his refreſhing, whereas in truth they are both his torment. For ſo is man naturally beſotted on theſe earthly trifles, if he be ignorant of true happineſſe, and hath not fixed his heart on God and heauenly things, that he laboureth to haue them in abundance, which he hath no ſooner attained vnto, but hee hath alſo the vſuall companion thereof, glutting ſatietie and loathſome wearines: and no ſooner is he thus cloyed, but preſently hee ſeeketh to refreſh his dulled appetite with varietie and change; one while deſiring motion, and another while reſt, now affecting mirth, and ſoone after ſolemne grauitie; in the night wiſhing for day, and in the day for night, in heate for cold, and in cold for heate; eating and faſting, waking and ſleeping, dreſſing and vndreſſing, ſitting and ſtanding, walking and lying, with ſuch often iteration, as might well cauſe a loathing ſatietie, when as he is alwayes in the ſame motion, like the horſe in the mill, and (as the Wiſe man ſpeaketh) ſeeth no new thing vnder the Sun.

Eccleſiaſtes
1.
Sect. 7.
Of the o-herent euils hich are indent t.

But beſides theſe inherent euils which make theſe worldly vanities ſo much deſired, in themſelues diſtaſtefull, they are conioyned and mingled with innumerable other miſeries which adhere vnto them; the which ſo far exceed in number, quantitie & quality, all the earthly delights & comforts which we enjoy, as the brambles the roſes, or the field weeds the garden flowers. For who ſeeth not, yea who cannot ſpeake vpon his owne feeling experience, that no day paſſeth without a number of miſeries attending on it, whileſt either the euils wee feare do fall vpon vs, or the good things we hoped for faile vs, and deceiue our expectation, or the comforts which we preſently enioy are either indeed loſt, or at leſt wee in ſome danger, and feare of loſing them? In which reſpect the miſeries of this life may fitly bee compared to Iobs meſſengers, of which one had no ſooner made an end of ſpeaking, but another preſently beginneth his tale; or like vnto the billowes of the ſea, which without intermiſſion come tumbling one in the necke of another, giuing vnto vs ſcarce time of breathing, till wee reſt in the hauen of death. It is true that ſome of theſe miſeries doe one ſo much exceed another, that the leſſe is ſwallowed vp of the greater, like the riuers by the ſea, and is not diſcerned, though if it came alone, it would force complaining: and ſo predominant are ſome griefes, that the leſſer appeare no more, than the Stars when the Sunne ſhineth, not that they are taken away but becauſe the greater working a more vehement impreſſion, maketh vs inſenſible of the leſſe. Yea ſo are we for our ſinnes iuſtly ſcanted of things truly good, that to make ſome little equalitie to our owne comfort, wee are faine to fill vp the number by putting into the ranke of good things, thoſe which wee thinke leaſt euill, and things truely deſireable failing vs, to make choice of ſuch as are leaſt worthie to bee refuſed. Herein behauing our ſelues like vnto politike Commanders, who ſeeing the armie of their enemies farre to exceed their owne partie in ſtrength and number, haue, to fill vp places, and to increaſe their multitude, made ſhew of women in ſtead of men, and ſet vp a farre off on ſtakes puppets and ſkarecrowes for fighting ſouldiers, to diſhearten the enemie, and encourage their owne followers. So wee being incountred with innumerable euils, and hauing few things truly good to refreſh and cheare vs againſt their aſſaults, are faine to make choice of ſhadowes in ſtead of ſubſtances, and to make many things good onely by reputation and imaginarie eſteeme, which a ſound and vnpartiall judgement ſcarce thinketh tolerable euils. Now if we further conſider, that as our miſeries doe infinitly in number exceed our comfort; ſo alſo one of them is ſufficient to infuſe ſuch bitternes into a multitude of our moſt deſired delights, that we cannot relliſh their ſweetneſſe; that one ounce of this gall of miſerie, maketh loathſome a whole pound of our ſugred ioyes, and that a ſmall dram of this Colyquintida, is enough to diſtaſte a whole a pot of pottage, making it to ſauour of death; then how little ſweetnes of comfort muſt wee needs haue, when as the part which wee loath and abhorre, ſo innumerable degrees exceedeth that which we like and loue? For who ſeeth not that one tooth akeing doth more vex vs, than the health of all the reſt of the body can delight vs? that wee are more tormented with a ſmall loſſe, than comforted with great poſſeſſions? that when but one friend of many is taken away, wee haue more true griefe by him which is loſt, than ioy and contentment in all the reſt? that wee are more diſquieted with one diſgrace, than delighted with many honours? and that wee are not ſo much pleaſed in the fruition of many things loued and deſired, as wee are diſpleaſed when we are cut ſhort of our hopes, or are troubled and cumbred with ſome euill which we loath and hate? And the reaſon is, becauſe miſeries doe make a much deeper impreſſion in vs than our comforts, partly becauſe they being in this vale of teares, (as it were) in their own place and element, haue more vigour and ſtrength in them, one increaſing the force of another; as diuers ſticks in the ſame fire, and retaine their owne nature without alteration; whereas good things are more weake and feeble in this place of baniſhment, as being not proper to them, and loſe much of their puritie and vertue, through the mixture and tainture of adhering euils: and partly, becauſe by reaſon of our vnthankfulneſſe, we are alwayes readie to extenuate Gods bleſſings, and neuer almoſt thinke of them, but when they are taken from vs; and contrariwiſe, if wee haue the leaſt ſparke of euill, we are apt and willing to blow vpon it with the flame of our impatiencie, vntill wee haue made it a great fire, which inflameth and conſumeth our hearts with griefe and anguiſh.

§. Sect. 8.
Of the miſeries incident to a mans ſtate.

But let vs deſcend to ſome particulars, and for orders ſake diſtinguiſh the miſeries of mans life into ſome kinds; not that it is my purpoſe to ſpeake largely of all, ſeeing they are ſo many and innumerable, that it would require a mans whole life to make but a bare catalogue or relation them; but onely ſo many of them briefly, as may ſerue to weane our hearts from the world which aboundeth with ſuch miſeries; and to fixe them on God his ſpirituall graces and heauenly happineſſe, which bring vs ſincere ioy, without the mixture of any euils. The miſeries then of mans life either reſpect him generally, or his ſeuerall ages and eſtates. The generall miſeries vnto which mans life is ſubiect, are either thoſe which are his owne directly, or elſe his friends, which are his by ſympathie, compaſſion & fellow feeling. Concerning the former, if we doe but take a ſlight view of thoſe miſeries to which our fraile life is ſubiect, wee ſhall find that euen a large world of wretchedneſſe, doth ouerwhelme this little world of man, and that whether wee reſpect his ſtate or perſon. For firſt, vnto how many miſeries is man ſubiect about his ſtate, whileſt he ſeeketh to preſerue and maintaine, or to aduance and better it? with what painefull labours doth hee ſpend his ſtrength in the workes of his calling, that he may prouide ſufficient for himſelfe and his charge, which dependeth vpon him? what cares, what watching, running, riding, buying, ſelling, plowing, ſowing, reaping, and turmoiling to get a poore liuing? And this miſerie Eliphaz pointeth at; Miſerie (ſaith hee) commeth not from the duſt, neither doth affliction ſpring out of the earth; but man is borne vnto trauaile, as the ſparkes flie vpward. With all which labours when as hee hath worne out both bodie and mind, oftentimes for want of Gods bleſſings he hath no ſucceſſe, and hath iuſt cauſe to complaine, that hee hath ſpent his ſtrength in vaine, ſeeing with all his induſtrie and labour hee cannot attaine vnto the things which hee laboureth for; but notwithſtanding all his diligence pineth with want, or hauing found that he ſought for, how is he troubled in the poſſeſſion, how grieued with his loſſes, whileſt God blowing vpon that hee hath, notwithſtanding all his care and labour, it vaniſheth like ſmoake, leauing him in pouertie, who ere whiles was rich, and in contempt and diſgrace, who not long ſince was reſpected and eſteemed of all? Againe, how innumerable are our wants aboue all other creatures in the world, and what care and paines is required to make a ſupplie, and to furniſh vs with neceſſaries and ſufficiencie? what adoe to prouide vs nouriſhment, what catering and cooking, boiling, roaſting, baking, ſaucing? and when it is ſet before vs how ignorant are we of the meaſure of our owne bellies, how hardly doe wee keepe a meane in our diet, feeding ſufficiently without ſurfetting? What care and coſt is required to furniſh vs with apperell, houſing, lodging, bedding, and other furniture? What dieting and watching ouer our appetite that it doe not make vs ouer greedily to feed vpon that which wee too fondly affect, and ſo impaire our health? and being loſt, what phyſicke, medicines, bitter pilles, and loathſome potions, cautherizing, cutting, lancing, and plaſtering are wee faine to vſe that we may recouer it? Whereas the brutiſh creatures either want not theſe things, or eaſily ſupply their neede without care or labour. What lands and poſſeſſions are needfull for mans vſe? what purchaſes, writings, conueiances, ſuits in Law, troubles and contentions, to hold that he hath, and ſecure his right? It were infinite to particulariſe thoſe things which man wanteth, all which are neceſſarie vnto him, either in truth, or in his owne opinion, that his life without them cannot bee comfortable; and looke how much of them is lacking, and ſo much is detracted from his happineſſe, and added to his miſerie.

Iob.5.7.

§. Sect. 9.
Of the miſeries inciden to a mans perſon, and firſt in reſp of his body.

Let vs adde to the miſeries of ſtate, the miſeries of perſons, and that both body and ſoule. The body of man is continually ſubiect to many miſeries; as hunger, thirſt, heat, cold, watching and wearines; and that which is more cumberſome and grieuous than all the reſt, vnto innumerable ſorts of ſickneſſes and diſeaſes. For how many maladies are peculiarly incident to euery time of the yeere; as ſpring, ſummer, au-autumne, and winter, to euery countrie and region, ſex and age? how many diſeaſes which ouerthrow the health of the whole body, as plagues, feuers, agues, conſumptions, palſies and the reſt? Yea how many are incident to euery ſeuerall part, and as it were in whole troopes attend vpon euery particular member of mans body? Surely ſo innumerable are they, that phyſitians to this day cannot diſcouer, much leſſe cure them; and howſoeuer they haue filled many large volumes with them, yet they come farre ſhort of their infinite number, though thoſe which they haue already found, would make a man ſicke but barely to reckon them. Many of which though ſome eſcape, yet few or none are exempted from them all; it being a thing impoſſible, though wee were all an eye, to keepe ſuch narrow watch ouer our health as may bee ſufficient to preſerue it from the violence of ſo many enemies which aſſault vs on all ſides, within vs, without vs, and round about vs. Vnto which wee may adde the tedious trouble and loathſome remedies which we are faine to vſe when our health is impaired, when as we are bound to forbeare the things which wee chiefly deſire, and to vſe thoſe which our nature abhorreth, pining our bodies with abſtinence, which were oppreſſed with fulneſſe, and ſwallowing into our ſtomackes loathſome medicines, which wee haue firſt diſtempered with licorous meates. Whereby it is hard to chuſe whether the phyſicke or diſeaſe, the medicine or the maladie be the worſe: ſeeing our cure it ſelfe is a ſickneſſe, our helpes hurts, and our medicines torments; neither can we be deliuered from our griefes, but by ſuffering more griefe, nor free our ſelues from theſe kinds of puniſhments, vnleſſe we be content to bee further puniſhed.

§. Sect.10.
he mani-ld miſeries man in rect of his

And theſe are ſome of thoſe manifold miſeries which are incident to the body; the which are not more in number, or ſo grieuous and pernicious in their nature and quality, as thoſe which trouble and torment the mind. For ſinne is the ſickneſſe of the ſoule, and therefore looke with how many corruptions it is infected, and with ſo many ſpirituall diſeaſes it is endangered. The vnderſtanding is ſubiect to the blindneſſe of ignorance; ſo as we may ſay with the Prophet, that wee are beaſts by our owne knowledge; ſeeing we neither know God, nor his will, our ſelues, nor our owne ſoules. Our willes are crooked and rebellious, and ſo whirled about with a wilfull frenſie, as neither reaſon nor religion can rule or gouerne them. Our memories are ſubiect to a ſpirituall lethargie, forgetting ſtill what we ſhould remember, and remembring what we ſhould forget. Our conſciences are either ſicke of the dead palſie, hauing no ſenſe or feeling of God, mercies or iudgements; or elſe full of melancholicke feares and terrours, ſores and wounds, ſo as they are ready deſperatly to crie out, when they haue the leaſt touch Our hearts are the harborow of almoſt all diſeaſes, there lodgeth the ſwelling tumor of pride, the wolfe of ambition, the dropſie of couetouſneſſe, the madneſſe of anger, and burning feuer of furious reuenge. In it dwelleth our tumultuous paſſions, which continually rebell againſt reaſon, and denie ſubiection to God and his law; there is the ſeate of carnall loue, which ſetteth the heart on fire with the thing loued, and vexeth it with continuall torment when it cannot enioy it. There dwelleth enuie and hatred, the one tormenting a man with anothers happineſſe, the other turmoiling him in plotting and cõtriuing his neighbours ruine, making himſelfe preſently miſerable, becauſe hee would haue another ſo in time to come. In it is mirth and mourning, joy and ſorrow, the one pulling open the heart, and letting in much vanitie; the other contracting and ſhutting it, that it may keepe out all comfort and contentment, and both like rackets toſſing a man interchangeablie the one to the other, till he be tired, and euen worne out with wearineſſe. There harboreth hope, the great deceiuer of mankind, which maketh him continually to expect better, though he ſtill findeth worſe; and cauſeth him daily to beleeue it, and to refreſh his ſoule with falſe comforts, after it hath ten thouſand times failed him, and innumerably often defrauded his hungrie deſires. And there alſo dwelleth feare, which maketh a man preſently miſerable becauſe he ſeeth a poſſibility of future miſerie, and tormenteth him not onely by aggrauating thoſe euils which are preſent, but alſo by recalling thoſe which are paſt, and by anticipating, and preſent apprehending thoſe which are to come, many whereof are nothing ſo grieuous felt as feared, and many neuer happening at all. And yet theſe falſe feares beget true ſorrowes, and cauſe no leſſe griefe though they neuer happen, than if they were already happened, killing a man with an empty ſound, and (as it were) with paper-ſhot; and making him miſerable in truth, becauſe hee is ſo in his owne conceite. Wherein we are much more wretched than the brutiſh creatures; for they forget euils paſt, and flie from thoſe which are preſent, and hauing eſcaped are ſecure for the time to come, quietly enjoying their preſent delights without any perturbation of future dangers; whereas feare maketh vs to engroſſe all griefes, and as though wee could not be miſerable enough with preſent euils, it recalleth thoſe which are paſt, and layeth hold on thoſe to come. And whereas it were our wiſeſt courſe to flie our ſorrowes till they catch vs, and to delay our miſerie, which wee cannot wholly eſcape, that wee may prolong our comfort as long as may bee; feare maketh vs fooliſhly to runne vpon our owne ruine, and to meete our torments in the mid way, not ſtaying for ſorrowes vntill they come, but wilfully ſending for them with poſting ſpeed, and haling them into our hearts before their time.

§. Sect. 11. Of the miſeries of man, through the contrariety and fight of his owne paſſions.

Moreouer, beſides theſe miſeries which accompanie euerie ſingle paſſion, thoſe are no leſſe grieuous and troubleſome, which befall vs through their oppoſition and fight, not onely againſt reaſon, conſcience and religion (in which conflict we are wounded notwithſtanding our ſtrongeſt and beſt approued armour, ſometime with vaineglory, ſometime with auarice, ſometime with voluptuouſneſſe, often with anger, and deſire of reuenge, and not ſeldome with many other vnrulie and violent affections) but euen wee are no leſſe turmoiled with that ciuill diſſenſion, and inteſtine conflict which is among our paſſions and deſires, the one againſt the other, which are ſo oppoſite, & countrary among themſelues, that no wiſedome of man can reconcile them. Whileſt ambition haleth vs into the ſeate of honour, feare pulleth vs backe, putting vs in minde of the burthen, and danger which doth accompanie it, and whileſt the former hath the vpper hand wee condemne our cowardize, whileſt the other we exclaime againſt the miſchiefes of ambition. So vaineglory perſwadeth vs to procure at the deareſt rates the prayſe of bountie, and to purchaſe the loue of all that are about vs; but couetouſneſſe checketh this motion, and will not heare of parting with riches to buy ſmoake, and yet after auarice hath ſhut the purſe, pride, whether it will or no, doth againe pull it open. So voluptuouſneſſe inticeth vs to follow pleaſures, but deſire of profit oppoſeth againſt it, telling vs how fooliſh it is to ſpend vpon the ſtocke, and how vnſeaſonable thoſe pleaſures are for time of ſtrength, which is allotted to induſtrie and labour; and yet when we haue put our hand vpon the plow, pleaſure clapping vs on the backe, maketh vs looke behind vs, and leauing our profit to follow our delights. Thus wee deſire the eaſe of a ſolitarie life, but loath neglect and contempt, and are in loue with the reſpect that accompanieth action, but hate the care and labour. Thus wee deſire the multiplication of our yeeres, but feare old age and death, as though we would be alwayes trauelling, and neuer be the forwarder in our way, and haue a daily addition, without any increaſe; for what is old age but the multiplication of many yeeres? and what is death but the hauen vnto which wee ſaile, and the iourneyes end vnto which wee are alwayes trauelling? Thus we loue learning & wiſdome, but loath the paines of ſtudy and obſeruation; wee deſire to bee rid of the tedious troubles of life, but preſently vnſay that wee haue ſaid, being incountred with the feare of death. And finally, we are rauiſhed with ioy when wee thinke of the fruition of God, and the kingdome of heauen, but when we heare that wee muſt ſell that we haue, and giue to to poore, forſake all, take vp our croſſe and follow Chriſt, we goe away ſorrowfull. Wee would bee conformable vnto Chriſt in glorie, but not in his ſufferings, and ſit vpon his throne on his right hand and on his left, but wee cannot indure to drinke with him in the cup of affliction: and to conclude, we doe not ſooner with one affection deſire any thing, than wee are ſtraight ready to vnwiſh our wiſhes, by reaſon of ſome inconueniences which croſſe another.

§. Sect.1 Of the miſe- ries of man life in reſpe of his frien

And thus haue I ſhewed the manifold miſeries which are generally incident to mankind, in reſpect of themſelues. From which if any plead immunitie, and that hee hath not yet drunke of this bitter cup, let him know that he is onely repriued and not acquitted; and howſoeuer he is not brought out to execution, yet the ſentence of condemnation being paſſed vpon him, as well as vpon others, hee doth but ſtay the Iudges pleaſure, till hee calleth him forth. Let him conſider that ſayling in this world (as it were) in a ſea of miſeries, he may for a time eſcape the tempeſt, but neuer the feare and danger; and that theſe miſeries which are incident vnto all, may happen vnto any, though they be not yet happened. Let them call to minde, that commonly after a faire ſummer, followeth a foule winter, and a bluſtring ſtorme after a ſun-ſhine calme; that proſperitie and aduerſitie haue their changes, and that no man ſauing the true Chriſtian can bee ſaid to bee happie before his death. But beſides theſe miſeries which reſpect a mans ſelfe, there are innumerable more which reſpect his friends; and to ſay nothing of falſe and pretended loue, whereby men proue moſt pernicious enemies, whileſt they profeſſe the greateſt friendſhip; to ſay nothing of the breaches, fallings out, and hot contentions which ſometime happen betweene thoſe who are coupled in the neereſt bond of amitie; and to paſſe by all thoſe diſcontents which are cauſed through the default of any partie: how many are the miſeries which accompanie true friendſhip, euen when it is moſt wiſely intertained, and religiouſly obſerued? For who can ſee his friend thunder-ſtrucken, and not tremble at the blow? who can behold him plunged into any miſerie, and not in compaſſion, and fellow-feeling communicate with him in his griefes? who ſorroweth not at his friends loſſes; who groaneth not in his ſickneſſe, and bleedeth not at his wounds? Or though any man ſhould be ſo happy as to haue his friends alſo exempted from theſe miſeries, or ſo potent to deliuer them; yet how is he afflicted with his death, grieuing with ſo much more ſorrow, by how much he was more worthy of his loue; and neuer reioycing that hee ſo long had him, but lamenting that he hath now loſt him, and that ſweet comfort which he tooke in his ſociety? All which miſeries though they bee ſomewhat eaſed with the contrary comforts, yet conſidering that the griefes of this life doe ſo farre exceed the joyes, and the croſſes and afflictions, the profits and delights; therefore it muſt needs follow, that he who hath moſt friends, communicates in moſt miſeries, and by compaſſion and fellow-feeling participates in moſt griefes and perturbations.

Cuiuis poteſt a cidere quod cui quam poteſt.

Chap. XXIII.

Of the miſeries which are ſpecially incident vnto all the ages of man.

AND theſe are the miſeries which are generally incident to mankind. Vnto which wee may adde theſe which are ſpecially belonging to all ages and eſtates; for no ſooner haue wee our being, than wee be in miſerie; and long before we breath the aire, we draw in corruption, and are infected with the poiſon of ſinne: before wee can ſinne we are ſinners, as being heires of our firſt parents tranſgreſſion, and defiled with our next parents corruptions; and we offend God, before we know what it is to offend him: for with our parents ſeed is mixed the ſeeds of all manner of ſinne, and as we grow and wax ſtrong, ſo ſinne with vs groweth vntill it come to full maturity. Euen in our firſt conception wee alſo conceiue corruption; and then the foundation of wickedneſſe is laid, vpon which in the whole courſe of our life we build vp the ſtrong holds of ſinne. Then we are Atheiſts, Idolaters, blaſphemers, Sabbath-breakers, adulterers, murtherers, theeues, falſe witneſ-bearers, not by actuall tranſgreſſion, but by an habituall diſpoſition; and as wee are ſaid to be men, becauſe we haue in vs the image of man, and ſeeds of humanitie, though we neuer did any manly action, ſeeing nothing is wanting but growth and maturitie: ſo by as good right we are called ſinners of all kinds, becauſe we haue the nature and very image of ſinne, and the ſeeds of all corruptions liuing in vs, which if wee grow will grow with vs, and come to full ripeneſſe, if we euer attaine vnto perfect age. And thus Dauid confeſſed, that he was borne in iniquitie, yea that his mother conceiued him in ſinne; and Iob demandeth, who can bring a cleane thing out of filthineſſe, or how man can be cleane which is borne of a woman? And the Apoſtle telleth vs, that by one man ſinne entred into the world, and death by ſinne; and ſo death went ouer all men, becauſe all men had ſinned. Now what a miſerie is this to bee ſinners, as ſoone as we be men? to be poiſoned in the very fountaine, and leprous in the very firſt principles of nature; ſeeing our ſickneſſe is the more incurable, becauſe it is hereditarie? to bee dead in ſinne, as ſoone as we are aliue to the world, the ſlaues of Satan, before we are out of the priſon of the wombe, and in the ſtate of damnation, before we are in the ſtate of the liuing? And as we are thus miſerable in our ſpirituall eſtate when we are firſt conceiued: ſo our outward and corporal condition is alſo full of wretchedneſſe; for what are our matter and firſt principles, but a baſe excrement of nature and impure ſeed? what is the habitation of the nobleſt, but the ſtrait and darke priſon of the wombe, inuironed with the filth of nature? and what is his nouriſhment, but the impureſt part of his mothers blood? But though it bee a priſon in reſpect of miſery, yet not in reſpect of ſafety; for the child in the wombe is ſicke of the mothers diſeaſes, ſurfetted with her intemperance, and pined with her want, it is ſubject to euery ruſh, and endangered with euery ſpreine, euery ſmall bruiſe bringing with it a maime, & euery maime, monſtrous miſhape. Finally, it is in danger of ſtifling, before it breathe, of choaking before it feed, and the wombe in which it is borne, is oftentimes the tombe in which it is buried.

Pſalme 51.5. Iob 14.4. and 25.4.

Rom.5.12.

Parentes noſtri fecerunt damnatum, antequam natum. Bernard.

§. Sect.2. Of mans miſeries in his birth.

But ſay that hee eſcapeth the dangers of the wombe; ſay hee periſheth not with the miſeries of theſe nine moneths cloſe impriſonment; yet how great paine and perill induceth hee, when the day commeth of his mothers deliuerance and his libertie? vnto what torments doth he vnwittingly put her, who hath ſo long borne and nouriſhed him, himſelfe bearing a great part in theſe paines and miſeries? how faine are they to part the one from the other, and yet what ſorrow is there at their parting? into what dangers and extreame hazard are both expoſed, the mother in bearing, and the child in ſuffering? how many are there which depart, as ſoone as they are parted, periſhing on the coaſt as ſoone as they are launched out into this ſea of miſeries? And they which could no longer liue together, die becauſe they are ſeuered and put aſunder. No maruell therefore if they are borne weeping and crying, not onely preſaging future miſerie, but as feeling preſent paine; receiuing theſe firſt ſorrowes of their birth as the earneſt of all the reſt, which they are to ſuffer in their enſuing life. For though hee eſcape theſe dangers, and recouer of the hurts which he ſuſtained in his firſt conflict, yet what is the prolonging of his life, but the increaſing of his torments? ſeeing man aboue all other creatures is compaſſed with miſeries; for whereas they are able as ſoone as they come into the world, to ſtand, goe, and helpe themſelues, wanting but few things, all which they find ready for them: man as ſoone as he is borne, being poore, naked, and miſerable, wanteth many things, and hath nothing to make ſupplie; hee ſtandeth in neede of milke to feed him, cloathes to couer him, fire to warme him, nurſes to tend him, being altogether vnable to helpe himſelfe. Hee hath no vſe of vnderſtanding to know his wants, nor ſpeech to diſcouer them, onely he giueth ſome generall notice of them by his bitter crying. Hee cannot goe, ſtand, or creepe, nor with all his wit and ſtrength repell the iniuries of a ſillie flie. And in this impotencie he continueth long, bringing much trouble to others, before hee hath any pleaſure in himſelfe. In reſpect of which preſent and enſuing miſeries, Ieremie wiſheth that his mothers bellie had beene his graue, and her wombe a perpetuall conception, becauſe hee came forth of the wombe to ſee labour and ſorrow, and that his dayes ſhould be conſumed with ſhame.

Ier.20.17.18.

§. Sect. 3. Of the miſeries of infancie, childhood, and youth.

But proceed wee from the birth to the infancie and childhood of man, and here we ſhall find no immunity from miſeries; but rather as they increaſe, ſo theſe increaſe with them, and grow ſtronger with their ſtrength. For no ſooner are poore infants deliuered from the priſon of the wombe, but they are preſently bound hand and foot, and wholly at the diſpoſe of others, as not hauing obtained liberty, but onely changed the priſon and place of their reſtraint. And all the time of this infancie being without knowledge and vnderſtanding, and darkned with more than brutiſh ignorance, is ſpent in naturall actions, eating, drinking, ſleeping, crying and ſuch like, being deſtitute of all worldly delights and comforts, and onely ſenſible in griefes and miſeries. Next vnto infancie ſucceedeth childhood, which as it hath more ſport and pleaſure, ſo alſo more feare and danger; for no ſooner can they goe, but preſuming aboue their ſtrength, they get many fals and bruiſes; and hauing legs to carrie them, and little wit to guide them, they are expoſed to many caſualties, and except they haue the better tendance, are ouertaken with many dangers. And when a few more yeeres are ouerpaſt, after they begin a little to rellish pleaſures, and to take delight in ſports and paſtimes, preſently they are checked in them by their ſuperiours, and ſubjected to the gouernment of ſome maſter, who reſtraineth them of their liked liberty, and forceth them to follow their loathed ſtudies. And now being kept in awe, they begin to diſtaſt the bitterneſſe of limited liberty; and either play with feare, or learne with tedious wearineſſe, hauing their eye on their booke, and their hearts on their paſtimes, and being forced with feare to diſpleaſe themſelues, whileſt vnwillingly they pleaſe their ouerſeers. So that now againe they recall in their wiſhes the impotencie and ignorance of infancie, that they might alſo recouer their ſecure liberty: or finding that impoſſible, they ſet ſpurres to running time, and wiſh the end and death of this ſeruile age, that being ſet at liberty, they may be at their owne diſpoſe without controll. Vnto which when they haue attained, and pulling their necke out of the yoke of ſubjection, haue together with the age the priuiledges and liberty of youth, they are as farre from happineſſe, and full of miſerie as they were before. For now it fareth with them as with the bird which hath beene brought vp in the cage, who ſearcheth euery hole and corner to get a paſſage for her eſcape, and at length finding the doore open flieth out, and reioyceth in her new got liberty; but with little cauſe: for wanting wit and experience to ſhift and prouide for her ſelfe, ſhee is preſently endangered to killing by reaſon of her tameneſſe; or of ſtaruing, becauſe ſhee knoweth not how to get her liuing. Or like a new backed colt, who hauing caſt his rider, doth for a while with frolicke wantonneſſe courſe about the field, but being ſpent and tired, hee wiſheth himſelfe in the ſtable, ſubiect againe to his maſters rule, that hee alſo may be partaker of his prouiſion. So theſe yonger prodigals, hauing ſhaken off the yoke of gouernment, and being wholly at their owne diſpoſe, doe wildly runne many deſperate courſes, expoſe themſelues to innumerable dangers, and hauing neither the skill of getting nor care of keeping, they conſume all in riot and voluptuous pleaſure, till their ſtate is brought to ſo low an ebbe, that they are ready to ſtarue for want of neceſſaries, who before ſurfetted of ſuperfluitie, and to bee in truth fellow-commoners with the hogs in their courſe fare of maſt and draffe, who before were like vnto them in the allegorie, glutting themſelues with pleaſures, and wallowing in carnall and ſenſuall delights. And howſoeuer they haue now got a name of liberty, yet in truth they were neuer in the like thraldome, ſeeing they haue changed the gouernment of one father or maſter, into the tyrannie, or rather anarchie of innumerable paſſions. And reaſon being not yet ſeated in its throne, they are like the people of Iſrael without a King, who did nothing well, becauſe they did euery one what they would. And whereas their other Gouernours ruled with diſcretion, aimed at their good, reſtrained them from running on in licentious courſes, and kept them in ſome good order; theſe new guides, like Lords of miſ-rule, leade them with head-long raſhneſſe into all deſperate attempts, riot, exceſſe, and all kind of diſorder, which ſeemeth but to promiſe the preſent fruition of ſome vaine delight. Now fond loue, and filthy luſt, mad anger, and furious reuenge, proud emulation, and ſcornfull contempt, vngrounded hopes, and cauſeleſſe feares, immodeſt wantonneſſe, and immoderate mirth; ſports and paſtimes no leſſe full of ſin and vanity, than of harme and dangers, and voluptuouſneſſe in all kinds, as ſurfeiting, gluttony, drunkenneſſe, gaming, whoring, rioting and reuelling, ſwaggering and ſwearing, are in their full ſtrength, and chiefe predominance. Which if they yeeld vnto, they finde themſelues toſſed from one to another and neuer at reſt, and (as it were) diſtracted and haled betweene ſo many furies, which day and night haunting them, carry them head-long into innumerable dangers of body, ſoule and ſtate, wherein many ſuffer ſhipwracke, and are deuoured of theſe inticing Syrens; and they who eſcape with life, are ſo ſhaken and ſhattered, ſo full of leakes and rifts, that with much paines and difficulty they arriue at the hauen of ſafetie; where they haue juſt cauſe to ſpend the remaynder of their dayes, in bitter repentance lamenting the errours, and ill-guided courſes of their ſinfull and vnbridled youth. Or if God giue them grace to reſiſt their paſſions in their full ſtrength; how tedious and troubleſome is their taske? With how many foiles and wounds do they obtaine the victory? How often are they ready to yeeld, and to looke backe to Sodome with ſtrong deſires of enjoying her ſinfull pleaſures? Finally, how hard and difficult doe they finde it to reſiſt their naturall corruptions in their full vigour, to ſpend their time in faſting, watching, reading, hearing, and praying, when as corrupt nature with her full ſtrength haleth them to vaine pleaſures and ſinfull delights? it being as our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith all one, as if they ſhould plucke out their eyes cut off their right hand and foot, mortifie their members, deny themſelues, and voluntarily beare the croſſe, vpon which their owne bodies muſt bee crucified.

And theſe, with many more, are the errours, vanities, and euils which accompany youth, wherewith men being tired and wearied doe deſire to attaine vnto ripe and perfect age, that they may ſhake off all theſe infirmities and inconueniences, and ſpend the remaynder of their liues in a ſetled and well gouerned eſtate, vnder the guide of reaſon, and conduct of wiſedome. But when they haue their wiſh, they finde themſelues no more happy, or leſſe miſerable than they were before, hauing onely changed their euils and troubles for thoſe which are greater, leſſe pleaſant, and more burthenſome and intolerable. For ſtill they remayne ſubject, and in bondage to their affections and paſſions, and are not freed from the ſeruitude of them all, but onely haue changed their Maſters. And this alone difference there is, that the paſſions and affections of youth are more hote, raſh, and violent, and conſequently more vnconſtant, ſhort and momentany; whereas thoſe to which this perfect age is ſubject, are ſomewhat more ſtayed and moderate, but withall much more dangerous and pernicious, becauſe they are more conſtant and permanent. And whereas the fooliſh affections of youth are neerer vnto repentance, becauſe men for their groſſeneſſe are apt to bee aſhamed of them, as directly contradicting and oppoſing againſt reaſon and the light of nature; theſe of riper age are more vncurable, becauſe they are mad with reaſon and fill their mouthes with arguments to backe and mayntaine their inordinate deſires as lawfull and warrantable; calling their vices by the names of thoſe vertues, which in ſome ſhadow of ſimilitude they doe a little reſemble. Now they leaue their prodigality and exceſſiue riot, and ſubject themſelues vnto auarice and couetouſneſſe, vnder the name of frugalitie and good husbandry; defending all their vile courſes of oppreſſion, deceit, bribing, vſury and the reſt, vnder the ſhadow of that laudable care, which euery one ſhould take to maintaine his charge. They ſet aſide their wanton pleaſures and vaine ſports, and giue themſelues ouer to be ruled by ambition; with inſatiable deſire affecting one Honour after another, vnder the colour of preſeruing their fame and reputation. They now diſlike their open raſhneſſe, and violent courſes in accompliſhing their wils; and giue themſelues to the practice of cunning plots, to diſſimulation, double-dealing, treachery and deuilliſh ſubtilties, all which they intitle with the name of wiſdome and good policy. Vnto which wee may adde the manifold cares which accompany men of this age, and the toylſome labours which they take in ſetling their ſtate, in prouiding of ſuch things as they call neceſſaries, in purchaſing Lands, building houſes, and procuring ſufficient maintenance for their wife and children whileſt they liue, and after their departure; all which is requited oftentimes with vnfaithfulneſſe in the one, and with vndutifull vngratitude and ſtubborne rebellion in the other, the great difficulties which they finde in gouerning their houſhold, the diſagreeing of children, contentions of ſeruants, and manifold diſorders of their families, which they are faine oftentimes to paſſe ouer, becauſe they cannot tell how to reforme them; with innumerable other euils, which it were too long to ſtand vpon.

§. Sect. 5.
Of the miſeries incident to old age.
Cum ſibi homines optant ſenectutem, quid aliud optant, niſi longam infirmitatem? Auguſt. de Catechiz. rudibus cap. 16

Finally, if we attaine vnto old age, which all deſire, and none like; what ſhall we there find but miſery and affliction? For what is old age but a continuall ſickneſſe, the receptacle of all humane infirmities, and the prelude of death? And howſoeuer men vſually make it the chiefe Harborough of their hopes, and are content to learne in their childhood, and to take paines and care in their youth and riper age, that now hauing plentie, they may liue vpon the ſtocke, take their eaſe and enjoy their pleaſures; contrariwiſe olde age comming, is accompanied with ſo many infirmities, that though they haue much, yet they enjoy little, though they may haue many ſports, yet they haue ſmall mirth and few delights. For to ſay nothing of thoſe who haue gray haires and greene wits, and being olde in yeares are againe children in vnderſtanding; to let them paſſe who loſe the chiefe priuiledges of that age, for want of wiſdome and diſcretion, and are ſtrong and vigorous in nothing which concerneth either body or minde, but only in their vices and corruptions: to let them alone who haue ſpent their time ſo ignorantly and vnprofitably, that they are ready to die, before they know what it is to liue, and to leaue the earth before they haue learned the way to Heauen: how many other infirmities and ſorrowes doe attend it, which are ſufficient (if grace ſupport not) to make it miſerable? For then vſually the ſoule is vexed, and the conſcience troubled with the errours and crimes of ill-guided youth, and with the wrongs, deceits, and oppreſſions committed in riper age. Then the body is tormented with the ruſhes and bruiſes taken in youthfull ſports, and violent exerciſes, enfeebled with the cares, watchings, and labours ſuſtained in that age which is accounted moſt perfect, and puniſhed for the intemperance, voluptuouſneſſe, ſurfeiting and exceſſe of them both, with innumerable ſickneſſes and diſeaſes. Then is the time when Palſies, Gouts, Stone, Strangury, Collicke, and innumerable ſuch like tortures chiefly ſway: then the head ſhaketh, the back ſtoopeth, the joynts tremble, the limbes are weakned, lame and ſtiffe, ready to ſtagger and run becauſe they cannot goe; the ſpirits languiſh, the vitall heate decayeth, hauing halfe ſpent the naturall moyſture, and like the flame conſumed that whereby it was nouriſhed; the eares deafe, or thicke of hearing, the eyes bleared, the ſight dimmed, the feeling benummed, the ſmell and taſte loſt and periſhed, the face wrinckled, the skin riueled, the teeth rotted, the breath corrupted, and in a word, the whole body enfeebled and diſeaſed. Vnto which wee might adde the infirmities of the minde, wherewith vſually in this age it is extraordinarily cumbred, as the dulneſſe of conceit and vnderſtanding, the ſtiffe peruerſeneſſe of the will, the decay of memory, the diſorder of the affections. For being made tender with infirmities they are eaſily angred, and hardly pleaſed; apt to conceiue jealouſies and ſuſpitions, and not ſo ready to receiue ſatisfaction; ouer-heauy and ſorrowfull, repining and complayning, and ſenſeleſly couetous and greedy in heaping vp wealth, when they are ready to leaue it, and haue no time to enjoy it. In a word, whether we conſider the euils naturally incident to this age which reſpect the body or the minde, wee muſt needs conclude that it is full of miſeries.

Chap. XXIV.

Of the manifold miſeries vnto which all eſtates of men are ſubject.

§. Sect.
Of the mi ries incide vnto ſing and wedd

THe like alſo may bee ſaid of all eſtates & conditions of men, which are all ſo full of wretchedneſſe, that euery one hauing experience of their owne euils, wiſh rather to be any other than that they are; wheras if all ſhould bring their miſeries to a common banke, and plainly diſcouer them to open view, offering to exchange eſtates with one another; euen thoſe who moſt complained of their condition, as being more wretched than any other, ſeeing the common miſeries incident to all degrees of men; no leſſe grieuous than thoſe which they ſuſtain, would contentedly take their owne againe, and willingly depart without any deſire of commutation. For there is no eſtate which hath not miſeries enow attending on it, to make them wretched who liue in it, if they be not ſtrengthened with preſent patience, and hope of future happineſſe. There is none in the World ſo happy, who if they compare their honey with their gall, and their comforts with their croſſes, haue not juſt cauſe to complain of their vnhappineſſe. For doth a man leade a ſingle life? Why then as hee hath not the cares, ſo neither the comforts of wedlocke; and as he is priuiledged, hauing none to care for, ſo hee is puniſhed hauing none to care for him: as hee hath few to bring vnto him want, ſo if hee be in need, he hath as few to relieue him; as he hath no children to trouble him, ſo neither to cheere and refreſh him, when hee is otherwiſe troubled: to ſay nothing of his ſolitarineſſe vſually accompanied with ſad melancholy, of the loſſe of halfe his kindred and friends which by marriage are doubled, of the continuance of his life and memory in his poſterity; of the troubleſome conflict which hee continually hath againſt his owne concupiſcence, of the diſcontents which he endureth, whileſt either ſetting his feet vnder another mans Table, he is faine to eat when they are hungred, to goe to bed when they are drowſie, to make their appetite the rule of his diet, and to be ſubject to their orders; or keeping a houſe without an huſwife, & wanting an helper, which is (as it were) the one halfe of himſelfe, he is ſubject to receiue many indignities from his ſeruants, and to haue his eſtate waſted, and hauocke made of all, by thoſe to whom he giueth food and clothing. On the other ſide, doth a man liue in the ſtate of marriage? Then ſurely as he hath ſome comforts, ſo alſo many troubles: for beſides his paines and care in prouiding for, and gouerning of his Family, he hath many croſſes in his chiefeſt comforts; for hath he a good Wife? Hee feareth to loſe her, and is tormented with her loſſe. Hath he a bad one? ſhee is as a continuall dropping to his bed, and as a cotidian Ague to his bones? Hath hee no children? then with the holy Patriarch hee complaineth, that all he hath is nothing, hauing no heires of his body, to enjoy his labours. Hath he but one? commonly he ſpoyleth him with cockering, and by ouer-louing him he maketh him vnworthy loue, and is more troubled with feare of loſing him, than comforted with enjoying him. Hath he many? then commonly ſome vndutifull and rebellious, by whom he is more vexed and grieued, than pleaſed & delighted in all the reſt. Hath he few ſeruants? then alſo ſmall attendance: hath he many to doe his worke? Then alſo many to whom hee muſt pay wages, many mouthes to feede, many buſineſſes to ouerſee, and hauing many to rule, hee hath ſo much the harder taske if he gouerne well.

The like alſo may bee ſaid of other ſtates and conditions: for doth a man leade a priuate life? He is ſubject to contempt, injuries, and oppreſſions of thoſe who are in authority. Is he a publick perſon? He is (as it were) openly vpon the Stage, obnoxious to the cenſures of the baſeſt people, lyable to their ſlanders and euill reports, expoſed to many dangers, turmoyled with much labour and many cares, enuied of his inferiours, and hated of the moſt, if they cannot ſerue their owne turnes by his authority. Is a man of meane quality? His vertues, wiſdome, and good parts, paſſe and periſh vnrewarded, yea, vnobſerued, as the Wiſe man noted. Is he nobly deſcended? He is expoſed to more tentations, more prone to fall into many ſins, and being ouer-taken, the greatneſſe of his birth doth but aggrauate the greatneſſe of his fault. And as he beareth a great port, ſo he is at great charge to mayntaine it, at great care alſo to furniſh himſelfe with meanes: And if he come ſhort, his ſtate ouer-matching his ability, then are his cares multiplied and increaſed according to his imployments and occaſions, wherein he is defectiue; then is he as bare and diſcontent, as hee who carrying a low ſayle poſſeſſeth leaſt, and all his pompe and greatneſſe is nothing elſe but proud penury, and glorious beggery. Is a man in the ſtate of ſubjection? His life and Lands, body and goods, are at his Soueraignes command; and if Conſcience and Religion reſtraine him not, his frowne is as a Sword, and his diſpleaſure bringeth death. Is he ſeated in the Royall Throne? the greatneſſe of his command, doth but adde to the greatneſſe of his care and paines; increaſeth his feares, and expoſes him to greater dangers, not onely of forraine force, but alſo of ſecret Conſpiracies, and hidden Treacherie. Doth a man liue as a Merchant? hee liueth (as one ſaith) neither among the liuing nor the dead, there being in his beſt health but an inch betweene him and death; his perſon and goods are often at the mercy of the vnmercifull Seas, and more mercileſſe Pyrats; and ſtandeth at the deuotion of forraine Potentates, and barbarous people. Is hee a Tradeſman? His honeſty dependeth vpon the credit of other men, failing when it failes; his ſtate is continually endangered with bad debters, who decaying, bring him alſo to ruine, and vſually hee is ſo prodigall in giuing credit to others, that in the end he leaueth not any for himſelfe. Is he a Lawyer? he ſelleth his breath, if not his honeſty and truth; he loſeth his peace in finding his profit, and ſpendeth a great part of his time in wrangling and contending, whileſt hee pretendeth to accord differences, and decide controuerſies. Is he a Husbandman? his life is a continuall toyle, and after all his labour he is ſtill in feare of loſing all by vnſeaſonable weather, one while complayning of raine, and another of drought, now of too much heate, and ſoone after of froſts and cold; one yeare of mildewes and blaſting, and another of wormes, cankers and caterpillers. In a word, there is in this World no mans eſtate ſo happy, but beſides the innumerable miſeries which are incident to all mankind, hee hath many euils proper and peculiar to his particular calling and condition.

§. Sect. 3.
Of ſome ſpeciall worldly, miſeries peculiar to true Chriſtians.

Now if any thinke that Chriſtianity, and the true feare of God will exempt men from this miſery, and aduance them vnto happineſſe; let him know, that howſoeuer this eſtate doth bring with it ſuch inward comforts, as will not ſuffer them by miſery it ſelfe to be made miſerable, yet in reſpect of freedome from the miſeries of this life, they haue but little priuiledge aboue others, and as little preferment in worldly

1.Cor.15.19.

Iohn 15.19.

Iohn 16.33.

happineſſe; ſo as they may truely ſay of their felicitie, as Chriſt of his kingdome, that it is not of this world, but reſerued in the heauens: Yea rather (ſetting aſide our ſpirituall comforts, and future hopes) that they of all men are moſt miſerable, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. For beſides that they haue a large ſhare in thoſe miſeries which are commonly incident to other men; they haue certaine others proper and peculiar to themſelues; for no ſooner hath our Sauiour Chriſt choſen them out of the world, but preſently it profeſſeth againſt them open enmitie, it enuieth their proſperitiy, and plotteth their ruine; it ſcorneth, derideth, backbiteth and ſlandereth them; it wrongeth, oppreſſeth, afflicteth and perſecuteth them, haling them before the iudgement ſeates, accuſing, condemning and killing them for the profeſſion of Gods truth. So that our Sauiour Chriſt might well ſay peculiarly of them aboue others, that in the world they ſhall haue trouble; becauſe none in the world are ſo troubled. Vnto theſe we may adde the griefes which their righteous ſoules doe ſuffer in ſeeing the abominations committed by theſe curſed Sodomites among whom they liue; as when they behold Gods Worſhip neglected, and Idolatry erected, ſome adoring Images, and ſome making an Idoll of the World; the holy Name of God blaſphemed, his Sabbaths prophaned, Authority deſpiſed, Gouernment diſordered, Murthers committed and pardoned, the whole Land defiled with tolerated filthineſſe. When they ſee all preferments attained by bribing and corruption. In the places of Iudgement, Iuſtice peruerted, Truth wreſted, Equity contemned, the Guilty acquitted, the Guiltleſſe condemned, wrong mayntained and right ſuppreſſed; and all things carried with fauour and reſpect of perſons. And among priuate men cruelty and oppreſſion bearing ſway, euery ſhop full of lying and deceit, euery ſtreet full of pride and vanity, and almoſt euery man abhorring ſimplicity and faithfull dealing, and affecting the art of diſſimulation, hypocriſie, treachery, double dealing, complementall friendſhip, and diſguiſed enmity. What a griefe, I ſay, muſt this needs bring to a child of God, to ſee his heauenly Father thus diſhonoured, his Lawes neglected, and trodden vnder foot? Yea, when hee ſhall behold thoſe moſt aduanced and reſpected in the World, who moſt diſhonour God by running on in the courſe of wickedneſſe? When hee ſhall ſee him who hath vſed moſt deceit moſt enriched, and he who is moſt rich moſt eſteemed, the World meaſuring his goodneſſe according to his goods, and not his vertues. When he beholdeth the Oppreſſour, Extortioner, Vſurer, who ſhould ſtand at the Barre, ſitting on the Iudgement Seate; the rich Foole made a Magiſtrate to rule others, who hath not wit enough to gouerne himſelfe; the Poet and Player more eſteemed than the painfull Preacher; the ambitious aduanced, hauing nothing to rayſe them but their pride and impudency, whereby they haue reſolued that they will riſe; the humble, though neuer ſo worthy, neglected and kept vnder; audacious boldneſſe hauing free entrance, when as modeſty is repelled and excluded; the Paraſite and Flatterer much eſteemed, & he who faithfully admoniſheth and ſpeaketh the truth from his heart, hated and diſgraced. But beſides the griefe which the faithfull ſuſtaine in beholding the ſinnes of profeſſed Worldlings, they are much more vexed with the ſcandalous liues and exemplary ſinnes of thoſe who are the Profeſſours of Gods true Religion; when as they who daily heare the word, make conſcience of an Oath, abſtaine from the vnprofitable corruptions of the time and make ſome outward reformation in their Family; are neuertheleſſe as proud and phantaſtical in their apparell, as vnfaithfull to their friend, as falſe in their word and promiſe, as deceitfull in their dealing, as backward in all workes of mercy, and as couetous in all their courſes, as the prophane contemners of all Religion: Seeing theſe ſinnes doe more diſhonour their heauenly Father, as being committed by thoſe who are of his owne Family, and that againſt the light of knowledge, the often admonitions of Gods Spirit, & checks of their owne conſciences: And alſo do more diſgrace them who are profeſſours of the ſame truth; whileſt they beſprinckle them with their filth, and dimme the light of their holy conuerſation with the duskiſh ſmoke of their diſcouered wickedneſſe; cauſing them to be ſuſpected of the ſame crimes, becauſe they are of the ſame profeſſion, and exerciſe themſelues in performing the duties of the ſame Religion. Beſides all which griefs which haue an outward ground; they haue inward cauſes of much miſery, trouble, and bitter ſorrow. For they are continually exerciſed in that dangerous conflict againſt the ſpirituall enemies of their ſaluation; Sathan daily like a roaring Lion ſeeketh to deuoure them, by ſuggeſting into their minds wicked temptations, whereby hee allureth them to loſe their ſoules by ſinne, for the hire of ſome worldly vanities; the World maligneth them, and allureth them vnto euill by offering ſome pleaſing baytes, or diſcourageth them from that which is good by troubles and perſecutions: the fleſh luſteth continually againſt the ſpirit, and maketh them to doe the euill they hate, and to neglect the good which they like and loue. In which ſpiritual warfare they are alwayes troubled, and often foiled, being ouercome with tentation, and led captiue vnto ſinne. And this is the laſt and greateſt miſery wherewith the faithfull are in this life afflicted and moleſted, in that they are through the ſtrength of their enemies, and violence of their owne corruptions, often beſides their purpoſe ouertaken of ſinne, and thereby offend their gracious God, whoſe diſpleaſure they ſhun as the greateſt euill.

CHAP. XXV.

Of the miſeries which accompany worldly things, in reſpect of their getting, keeping and poſſeſſion.

Sect. 1.
the euils ch worldly gs bring h them, and , honours iches.

ANd thus haue I ſhewed ſome of the manifold miſeries which doe accompany the life of man: which if any thinke that they may bee cured with the counterpoyſon of worldly proſperity, and that wee may find in earthly things ſuch comforts, as may beare vs out in all theſe croſſes, making our joyes to exceed our ſorrowes; let ſuch an one know that he is much deceiued, ſeeing they are ſo farre from freeing vs from the former miſeries, that they helpe to increaſe them; and though like Iobs friends; they proffer their ſeruice for the mitigating and appeaſing of our griefes, yet before they depart they adde vnto our ſorrowes, and aggrauate the waight of our affliction. For beſides the euils which they find, they bring many with them, and like liberall Contributers, they adde abundantly to the banke and heape of miſery. For let a man but ſet his heart vpon theſe vanities, and with what care is hee preſently turmoyled? With what hopes and feares is he continually racked? With what enuy, emulation, jealouſie, rage, hatred, and contention is hee forthwith wholly poſſeſſed? ſpending part of his time in mad mirth, when he hath his deſires; and a greater part in ſad melancholy, becauſe hee is croſſed of his hopes; one while ouer-joyed and ſnatched vp into the clouds with rauiſhing admiration, and ſoone after ſuddenly dejected with diſcontent, becauſe he can aſcend no higher in the purſuit of thoſe things which chiefly affect him. Thus he who taketh all his pains in ſowing the ſeeds of Honour, hath neuer a harueſt that anſwereth his greedy expectation, but hauing ſowne the winde of vaine glory, he reapeth the whirle-wind of trouble and vexation, as the Prophet ſpeaketh. For his head is continually turmoyled with cares to riſe higher, and with feares leſt miſſing footing in his climing, he fall from that height vnto which he is already aſpired: euery honour which hee miſſeth is vnto him a grieuous diſgrace: the not vncouering of his inferiours head, is a corraſiue to his heart; and the greateſt honour doth not bring vnto him any joy and comfort, when as hee is but touched with the leaſt contempt. The leaſt frowne of his Prince, as a piercing Sword, inflicteth ſuch a deepe wound into his heart, that all the ſmoothing tongues of his fawning Flatterers cannot make it whole againe with their often licking; only it is the renued beames of the Princes fauour, that can doe away theſe clouds of ſorrow. So what cares and feares, troubles and diſcontents accompany worldly wealth, if it be immoderately loued and affected? In regard whereof one ſaith, that no man can wiſh an heauier curſe vnto a couetous man, than that he liue long, becauſe like the Indians he is continually tormented with the Idoll which hee worſhippeth; and when he aboundeth moſt in wealth, he is not ſo rich in any thing, as in woe and miſery. For what tedious taskes doth his golden God impoſe vpon him? How is hee conſtrained to watch whole nights in giuing attendance? How doth it thruſt him into deſperate dangers; for the compaſſing of that which being obtained, will not giue vnto him power to enjoy? In regard whereof that may be truly ſaid of thē, which is ſpoken of the Angell of the Church of Laodiceans, that they only haue a name and bare opinion of being rich, whereas they are wretched and miſerable, poore and naked.

Quid mali optes auaro, ni vt viuat diu?

Apocal.3.17.

§. Sect.2.
Of the miſeries which accompany pleaſures.

The like alſo may be ſaid of worldly pleaſures; which are not only the companions, but alſo the cauſes of many miſeries: for joy and ſorrow like two Twinnes are borne and bred together; and no ſooner doth the one appeare, but preſently the other attendeth on it. So the Wiſe man ſaith, that euen in laughing the heart is ſorrowfull; and the end of mirth is heauineſſe. Fitly therefore are theſe carnall pleaſures called the Worlds Syrens, which haue the beautifull faces of women, but the hinder parts of Scorpions, they haue hony in the mouth; but a ſting in the tayle; for though they delight at the firſt taſte, yet in the end they proue as bitter as the gall of Serpents; though in the beginning they pleaſe the carnall appetite, yet poyſoning vs with many ſinnes, at laſt they bring horrour of minde, trouble of conſcience, and at the beſt bitter griefe, and painfull, though profitable ſorrow, and repentance. In which reſpect they may fitly be compared to Abners play, which began with pleaſure, but ended with bitterneſſe; to Balthaſers Banquet, which began with mirth and jollitie, but ended with feare and trembling; and to ſweete meats of hard digeſtion, which are pleaſant in the mouth, but lothſome and burthenſome in the ſtomacke. For who ſeeth not that riotous reuelling in worldly delights, is commonly attended on with want and beggery? that vncleane luſts, and filthineſſe of life, are accompanied with inward diſeaſes and outward ſhame? that banquetting and exceſſiue fare, is the Mother and

Prou.14.13.

Nulla ſors longa eſt, dolor ac voluptas inuicem cedunt; breuior voluptas, Senec. in Thyeſte.

2.Sam.2.14,26

Nurſe of the moſt ſickneſſes, and the common cauſe of vntimely death? yea, who ſeeth not that theſe carnall delights are not only accompanied with miſeries, but in themſelues miſerable? for to ſay nothing of their common fellowſhip which they haue with ſinne, which aboue all things in the World maketh a man wretched, we find by continuall experience, that theſe pleaſures like ſweet and luſcious meates, grow preſently lothſome, vnleſſe our appetite be ſharpened by the ſowre ſawce of interchanged miſeries; that vntill we haue enough of them, wee are troubled with our owne concupiſcence, but no ſooner haue we ſatiety, but there followeth tedious lothing; and ſeldome or neuer is there ſuch a juſt equipoyſe and proportion, but that wee are vexed with too much or too little. Finally, we find that extremity of joy is an heauy burthen, of which the heart ſeeketh no leſſe to eaſe it ſelfe, by ſending out whole floods of teares, than when the weight of griefe lyeth heauy on it: yea, that being exceſſiue it bringeth, as a more pleaſant, ſo alſo more ſudden death, than the greateſt extremity of bitter ſorrow; the heart letting out the vitall ſpirits, whileſt it too much inlargeth and openeth it ſelfe, to let in pleaſure and delight.

Gen.45.14. and 57.29.

§. Sect. 3. That worldly things are not gotten without great labour.

But the miſeries which accompany theſe worldly things will better appeare, if wee more ſpecially conſider thoſe which are incident vnto them, in reſpect of their getting, keeping and loſing them: for they are gotten with labour, kept with care and feare, and loſt with griefe and ſorrow; or as it is in other words expreſſed; paines begetteth them, care nurſeth them, and ſorrow accompanieth them to their funerals. For firſt, howſoeuer theſe wordly things are of ſmall worth, yet they are attained vnto with no ſmall labour; neither is there any good thing in the earth to be bought and purchaſed without the Coine of continuall paines, and laborious induſtry: ſo the Wiſe man ſaith, that all things are full of labour, and that God hath giuen to the ſonnes of men to humble them thereby, great trauaile with little profit. Neither is it ſmall paines which men take in purſuing of theſe vanities, but ſo extreame and great, that euen they commonly conſume and tire them: for ſo the Prophet ſaith, Behold, is it not of the Lord of hoſts, that the people ſhall labour in the very fire? the people ſhall euen wearie themſelues for very vanitie? And ſurely who ſeeth not that worldly men doe take much more paines in attayning vnto earthly trifles, than Gods ſeruants take for heauenly treaſures? and that with more eaſe wee might furniſh our ſelues through Gods bleſſing, with all ſpirituall, ſanctifying and ſauing graces; than with a ſmall competency of worldly neceſſaries? and ſecure our ſelues of the fruition of our eternall inheritance, with farre leſſe labour, than is vſually taken in procuring of theſe worldly annuities, which laſt but for the ſhort time of a momentany life, and oftentimes are not with all this paines enjoyed, they flying the more from ſome, the more earneſtly that they are purſued? And yet ſo fooliſh we are that we neglect theſe rich treaſures of ſpirituall grace, and eternall joy, which God (to take away all excuſe) hath offered vnto vs freely and frankly without mony, and with little labour joyned with much comfort; and with all eagerneſſe purſue theſe worldly trifles which cannot bee obtained without much paines and toyleſome trauell; like little boyes who with great delight ſpend their ſweate in catching a Butterflie; but are ſtraight tired though they ſit eaſily at their bookes to get Learning; and neuer take the leaſt thought in ſecuring vnto themſelues the title which they haue to their inheritance.

Gigmuntur labore, nutriuntur curis, & ſepeliuntur dolore.

Eccleſ.1.8. & 3.9,10.

Haba.2.13.

§. Sect. 4. Theworldly men take th chiefe pai for ſuperflu ties.

The which folly is ſo much the greater, in that men doe not take theſe extraordinary paines for obtayning worldly neceſſaries, but for the moſt part needleſſe ſuperfluities, not ſuch as the neceſſity of our temporall life requireth; but ſuch as inſatiable concupiſcence deſireth & affecteth. For thoſe things which are neceſſary to nature, and to the preſeruation of life, as meate and drinke, clothing and lodging; Aire, Fire, Water, and the reſt, are giuen liberally by God to thoſe who take ſome moderate paines in their lawfull callings, & they lie out in common without incloſure, to be obtained with eaſe by thoſe that need them: but ſuperfluities are not ſo eaſily compaſſed, being either hid and not found without great ſearch, or incloſed about with ſo many difficulties, that men cannot approach them without great paines and danger. For example, the Mines of Gold and Siluer are hid in the ſecret cauernes of the earth; precious ſtones, in the Sea and Sands; gorgeous clothes bought at deare rates, and delicious meates with much coſt and paines procured, and with no leſſe cooked and prepared. And yet (as one ſaith) though gold be hidden by the Indian Emits, watched by the Griffins, deeply buried in the earth, and not without reſtleſſe labour, and extreame danger gotten and obtained; yet men willingly take all this paines, and boldly hazard themſelues to all theſe perils: But though grace be freely offered without mony, and Heauen opened to all that deſire, & but ſtriue to enter; yet the moſt neglect the one, as not worth the receiuing, & loſe the other, becauſe they had rather not haue it, than take the leaſt pains in trauelling to it. Yea ſo are men beſotted with the loue of worldly vanities, that they take all theſe paines and endure theſe reſtles labours with pleaſure and delight,

2.Pet.1.3.

Clemen.Al pædagog.li cap.12.

delight, which otherwiſe would be intolerable; and as it is ſaid of Iacob louing Rachel, they thinke many yeeres but a few dayes which are ſpent in compaſſing theſe things which they ſo fondly affect, that if this dotage ſupported them not, would bee irkſomely tedious. They are in ſuch haſt in running after their trifles, that though they tread vpon prickles and briars they feele no hurt; ſo greatly doe they thirſt after theſe worldly vanities, that though they bee made bitter with toileſome labour, yet they greedily ſwallow them with pleaſing delight; and as the oxe accuſtomed to draw in the yoke, doth after he is looſed, againe yeeld his necke vnto it of his owne accord, without compulſion; ſo theſe men being inured to the worlds ſlauerie, though they were ſet at libertie out of this thraldome, would againe voluntarily take vpon them the yoke of ſeruitude, and weare themſelues out with toileſome labour, to attaine the vncertaine poſſeſſion of theſe momentany vanities.

And thus doe ambitious men take infinite paines in attaining vnto worldly glory and preferments; for it is the ſeed of labour which bringeth forth the fruit of honour, and hee who will attaine vnto it muſt bee content to endure toileſome paines, and to runne himſelfe into deſperate perils, hee muſt ſpend the day in reſtleſſe trauels, and the night in carefull watching, plotting thoſe policies which the next day hee will put in practice, for the atchieuing or preſeruing of honour and aduancement; like a common ſeruant hee is wholly taken vp by other mens buſineſſes, his ſleepe is broken by ſuiters, if not by his owne cares; his recreations are interrupted with affaires of State, and whileſt hee becommeth other mens, hee ceaſeth to be his owne; hauing no ſparetime to enioy himſelfe, or to beſtow on his priuate affaires, vnleſſe hee will bee exclaimed vpon by his waiting clients, for their giuing too long attendance. He muſt in time of warre fight in the front, firſt enter the breach, and euen runne vpon the pike, and canons mouth, expoſing his body to maimes and wounds, and his life to the extreameſt perils, if he will haue honour. In the time of peace hee muſt vndergoe no leſſe perils, both of profeſſed enemies, and vndermining foes, the one ſeeking to cruſh him, the other to trip him whileſt hee is riſing; nor yet indure leſſe paines; for hee muſt labour whileſt others reſt, watch whileſt others ſleepe, and with a world of care vphold his ſtate, whileſt others liue at eaſe and take their pleaſure. So what paines and perils doe men vndergoe who will attaine vnto worldly riches? whileſt they riſe early, and goe late to bed, fare hardly, and goe barely, pinching both backe and belly, and withholding neceſſaries from themſelues and theirs, to increaſe the ſtocke. If they ſtay at home they toile themſelues in ploughing, and ſowing, running and riding, with innumerable other labours to attaine vnto wealth. If their calling be ſuch as imployeth them abroad, what miſeries doe they indure? what paines doe they take? what dangers doe they runne into? they muſt leaue their owne country, and runne into voluntarie baniſhment, (as it were) into another world; they muſt forſake houſe and friends, parents and children, yea they muſt be content to part with their wiues, making a temporarie diuorce betweene them whom God hath conjoyned; and (as it were) diuide themſelues, leauing halfe at home, when the other halfe muſt goe abroade to ſeeke for worldly pelfe. They muſt commit themſelues to the merciles waues, cruell pyrats, and barbarous people, and one while be in danger of drowning, and another while of ſpoiling, ſometime of ſtaruing on ſea, and ſoone after of betraying when they are come to land. And thus as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, man walketh in a ſhadow, and diſquieteth himſelfe in vaine; he heapeth vp riches, and cannot tell who ſhall gather them. The like alſo may bee ſaid of pleaſures, which haue more paine and griefe going before them, than joy and contentment comming with them: for what preparations are required to delightful ſhewes, reuels, and paſtimes? and what running and riding, toiling and moiling, catering and cooking, is neceſſary for the prouiſion of vnneceſſarie dainties? In ſo much as the epicure himſelfe who made a god of his bellie, and an idol of his pleaſure, preſcribeth to his diſciples for their chiefe diet, rootes, apples, and ordinarie meates, which might bee procured with greateſt eaſe; becauſe exquiſite banquets, and daintie fare, requiring for their preparation great care and labour, did bring vnto men more paine and trouble in their getting, than pleaſure and delight in their enjoying. In a word, whoſoeuer purchaſe any of theſe worldly vanities, they are faine to buy them at ſo high a rate, that if at the firſt view the price were ſet vpon theſe deceitfull wares, all would paſſe by them, and not once cheapen them.

Pſal.39.6.

Hieron.lib.2. aduerſ.Iouin. Tom.2.

§. Sect.6.

That mens paines in getting worldly things is commonly accompanied with ſinne.

And thus haue I ſhewed what miſeries accompanie theſe worldly things in reſpect of the paines which are taken in their getting. Now if we farther conſider that theſe wearisome labours of the body, are commonly ioyned with the ſin of the ſoule, and that as they bring to the one temporarie troubles, ſo to the other eternall torments, if they bee not preuented by ſerious repentance, we may iuſtly conclude that in this reſpect alſo they are truely miſerable. For what greater miſerie can bee imagined than to toile for that which is not worth our paines, and after all our labour to giue our ſoules to boot, for the procuring of theſe trifling vanities? to ſell our ſoules vnto ſin, and by ſinne vnto death, which the whole world cannot redeeme when they are once loſt? For if it will not profit vs by the loſſe of them to gaine the whole world, as our Sauiour ſpeaketh; then how wretched is their eſtate, who ſuſtaine by ſinning this vnrecouerable loſſe, for the obtaining of ſome ſmall pittance, and ſlender ſhare of the worlds vanities? But who ſeeth not that few of many compaſſe theſe worldly things by honeſt and lawfull meanes; but take indirect and ſinfull courſes for the atchieuing of their ends? Some wronging others by violence, oppreſſion, trecherie, and ſubtiltie, fraud and deceit; and almoſt all wronging themſelues with vnmeaſurable toyle, and carking care, ſpending their ſtrength, and haſtening their death, for the obtaining of theſe earthly trifles. Whereby alſo they grieuouſly ſinne againſt God, not onely by deſtroying his creature, but by diſhonouring the Creator, whileſt wholly reſting vpon their owne care and labour, and vſing their owne meanes, they denie his prouidence, and refuſe to bee ordred in their courſes by his directions preſcribed in his word; as though either he were ignorant and knew not their wants, or careleſſe and did not regard them; or inſufficient, and not able to relieue them; whereas in truth, he ſeeth all, ruleth all, and hath enough in ſtore for all that depend vpon him: ſo that as the Wiſeman ſaith, in the feare of the Lord is an aſſured ſtrength, and his children ſhall haue hope: ſeeing he neither wanteth knowledge, power, nor will to prouide for them. And thus do men draw vnto themſelues iniquitie with the cords of theſe worldly vanities, as the Prophet ſpeaketh, ſwallowing vnder theſe baites the hidden hookes of ſin, and receiuing theſe earthly trifles as the wages of wickedneſſe; whereby they eternally loſe themſelues, for the temporarie gaine of worldly vanities. And yet ſo fooliſh men are, that they conceiue not of this miſerable loſſe; but thinke onely thoſe things deare which are bought with money, and thoſe cheape for which they ſell their ſoules; that loſſe alone which diminiſheth their outward eſtate; and that aduantage, which addeth to their ſtocke, though it robbeth them of themſelues, and their owne ſaluation. And whereas they would refuſe many things which they deſire vpon the baſe price of ſome little mony, they will not ſticke to purchaſe it by ſin, wrong, iniurie, oppreſſion, lying and deceit, though thereby they hazard body and ſoule to hell and eternall death: whereby it appeareth how highly men prize theſe worldly trifles, and how meanely they eſteeme themſelues, ſeeing they are readie to make exchange vpon all occaſions; and to make ſale of their ſoules to buy theſe vanities.

Mat.26,26.

Pro.14,26.

Eſay 5,18.

§. Sect. 7.
Of the wic courſes wh ambitious an couetous m run into, to obtaine honours and riches.

Pro regno ve-lim patriam, penates, coniugem flammis dare imperio pretio quolibet conſtat bene.
Senec. in The-baide.

Thus thoſe who are ambitious doe not onely toile themſelues with exceſſiue paines, but alſo are ready to run on in any wicked courſe, which doth but promiſe to lead them vnto honour and preferment. They care not to breake the Lawes of God and men, they neither regard pietie nor humanitie, ſtranger nor familiar, kindred nor countrie, but are willing to confound all, to ouerthrow all, and to defile their conſciences with blood, murthers, conſpiracies, treaſons and rebellions, rather than they will faile to attaine their proud hopes, thinking a kingdome well bought, which may be had at any price. They are euer plotting machiauellian policies, and thinke they are beſt aduanced, when they riſe to their deſired height by treading vpon others, whom by their fraud & treachery they haue ſupplanted; they make no account of lying, diſſembling, ſwearing, forſwearing, infidelitie and falſhood, if by all, or any of them they can ſerue their owne turnes. Finally, hauing nothing in them worthie praiſe, they are ready to commend themſelues by diſpraiſing others, and hauing nothing ſimply good in them, they would appeare good in compariſon, by making others ſeeme worſe than themſelues. Thus alſo couetous men are readie to commit all manner of wickedneſſe to increaſe their riches, as oppreſſion, extortion, crueltie, iniurie, briberie, vſurie, and all manner of fraud and deceit; yea they will not ſticke with Ahab to murther innocents, that they may make a prey of their goods; with Demas to forſake Chriſt and follow the world; with Iudas to betray their maſter, and with Demetrius to ſtirre vp perſecution againſt the diſciples of our Lord and Sauiour, if they ſpeake againſt that whereby they haue aduantage; yea in truth they are worſe than Iudas, for hee would not ſell Chriſt vnder the price of thirtie ſiluer pieces, whereas they are daily ready to part with, and forfeit that right and intereſt which they haue in him by lying, ſwearing and deceiuing, for the baſe offer of a groat or penie. Yea when they haue ſold their ſoules vnto ſin, for the purchaſe of this worldly pelfe, they are ready (as the Wiſe man ſpeaketh) to tranſgreſſe Gods Law for a piece of bread, and that euen when they abound with wealth, and haue no ſpurre of neceſſitie to pricke them forward; hauing full bellies, with rauenous greedineſſe they hunt after euery prey; and like the fiſh which Peter caught, though they haue money in their mouth, yet are they nibling at euery bait, and ſo as rich theeues, they double their fault in ſtealing when they haue no need. Thus the

Act.19,

Pro.

Wiſe man bringeth in couetous worldlings reſoluing vpon any wickedneſſe for the obtaining of riches: Come, ſay they, we will lay wait for blood, and lie priuily for the innocent without a cauſe, we will ſwallow them vp like a graue, euen whole, as thoſe that goe downe into the pit; we will find all precious riches, and fill our houſes with ſpoile. And leſt wee ſhould thinke that this is the caſe of of ſome few only, he concludeth, that ſuch are the wayes of euery one that is greedy of gaine, and that he will take away the life of the owners thereof. So the Lord complaineth by his Prophet; among my people (ſaith he) are found wicked perſons, that lay wait, as he that ſetteth ſnares, they haue made a pit to catch men: as a cage is full of birds, ſo are their houſes full of deceit, and thereby they are become great and waxen rich, they are waxen fat and ſhining, they doe ouerpaſſe the deeds of the wicked, they execute no iudgment, no not the iudgement of the fatherleſſe, &c. And the Prophet Michah complaineth, that the couetous oppreſſors of his times did hate the good and loue the euill, plucke off the skinnes of the poore people from them, and their fleſh from their bones, that they did eate alſo their fleſh, flay off their skinne, breake their bones, and chop them in pieces as for the pot, and as fleſh within the caldron. And elſewhere, that they did vſe ſcant meaſures, falſe ballances and deceitfull weights, that their actions were full of cruelty, and their mouthes full of deceit and lies: the which their ſin is redoubled vpon their ſinfull ſoules, becauſe by their crueltie and deceit they oppreſſe the poore, making choice to goe ouer the hedge where they find it loweſt, and treading thoſe vnder feet, who are not able to riſe or make reſiſtance. And in regard of theſe and many other ſinnes, which vſually accompany riches in reſpect of their getting, they are called by one wicked riches; and by our Sauiour Chriſt, the mammon of iniquitie: and in this regard alſo they are compared vnto thornes, becauſe as when they are haſtily catched they wound the hand, ſo theſe the conſciences of thoſe who greedily ſeaze vpon them; and vnto ſnares, which being couered with a bait, inthrall vs whileſt they allure vs; for he who greedily deſireth to obtaine riches, taketh no care to auoid ſinne, and being taken like a bird, when with an hungry eye he beholdeth the baite of earthly things, he is vnwittingly ſtrangled with the ſnare of ſinne. Hence alſo it is that couetouſneſſe by the Apoſtle is ſaid to be the roote of all euill; and by another it is called the metropolis, or mother citie of all vice and wickedneſſe, becauſe where it is intertained, thither alſo all manner of ſinne reſorteth, and (as it were) keepeth continuall tearme. In regard of which ſinnes vſually accompanying riches, in reſpect of the vnlawfull meanes which are ordinarily vſed in their getting, one doubteth not to affirme that a rich man is vnrighteous himſelfe, or the heire of one which is vnrighteous: which though it be not alwayes ſo, yet it ſeldome faileth in thoſe who immoderately louing wealth, reſolue with themſelues that they will bee rich; and making haſte to ſatisfie their greedie deſire with all poſſible ſpeed, doe in ſhort time accompliſh that they wiſh. For as ſudden fulneſſe and fatneſſe is an vndoubted ſigne of the ill diſpoſition of the body; ſo when as a man ſuddenly waxeth great, and (as I may ſay) fat in his ſtate, by ordinarie meanes, and by his owne induſtrie and labour, it is an argument more than probable, that his mind is full of the groſſe humours of ſinne. Of the former the Apoſtle ſaith, that they who will bee rich (that is, pitch and reſolue vpon it) fall into many tentations and ſnares, and into many fooliſh and noyſome luſts, which draw men into perdition and deſtruction, becauſe the deſire of money is the roote of all euill. And of the other, the Wiſeman telleth vs, that he who maketh haſte to bee rich, ſhall not bee innocent; and that he who haſteth vnto riches, hath an euill eye: for as the Author of the booke of Wiſdome ſaith, they make their whole conuerſation to bee but as a market where there is gaine; and they reſolue with themſelues and doubt not to ſpeake it, that they ought to bee getting on euery ſide, though it be by euill meanes. Yea this the Heathen man could diſcerne by the light of nature; There is no man (ſaith he) ſuddenly made rich liuing iuſtly; for a iuſt man increaſeth his wealth by little and little, through ſparing frugality; but he that treacherouſly lieth in wait for thoſe goods which others poſſeſſe, doth forthwith ſeaze on all, and all at once becommeth rich. Now what greater miſerie can there be, than to find that trifling gaine which bringeth with it the greateſt loſſe; in getting ſiluer to forfeit the ſoule, and (as one ſaith) whileſt wee gaine ſome gold to loſe our faith, and whileſt wee decke our ſelues outwardly with theſe worldly ornaments, to bee ſpoiled inwardly of all thoſe ſpirituall ornaments of grace and vertue? But this miſerie accompanieth ill gotten goods; for the couetous man by his ſinfull gaining loſeth himſelfe, and whileſt he deceiueth his neighbour of his ſiluer, the diuill coſoneth him of his ſaluation. Which howſoeuer for the preſent worldly men taſt not, being ouer ioyed becauſe they haue ſeiſed on their deſired prey; yet if euer they come to remember themſelues, and to feele the waight of their ſinne lying heauie vpon their conſciences, they will account theſe euill gaines the greateſt loſſe, and will take no more pleaſure in them, than Iudas in the ſight Diues eſt iniquus, aut iniqui heres. Hieron. in Ier. 6.

1. Tim. 6. 9. 10.

Prou. 28. 20. 22.

Eccleſiaſticus 31. 5.

Wiſd. 15. 12.

Menander in Colar. apud Stobæum.

Vt accedat aurum perit fides, vt ſeris veſtiaris, intus exſpoliaris. Auguſt. ſerm. 8. tom. 10.

Auarus antequam lucretur, ſeipſum perdit, & antequam aliquid capiat, capitur. Auguſt.

Damnum appellandum cum mala fama lucrum.

Mat. 27.3.

ſighs of his thirtie peeces of ſiluer, when he ſaw alſo his ſinne in betraying his Maſter, which did but worke in him horrour of conſcience, & moued him in deſpaire to murther himſelfe. Or if God preuent them with his grace, their wealth will comfort them no more than it did Zacheus; and that was neither in reſpect of his getting or keeping it, but as it did inable him to make reſtitution; and in liberall ſort to relieue the poore. Let vs therefore take heed that wee doe not fall into this ſinfull dotage of worldly men, who deſire increaſe of their wealth though it bee by euill meanes, ſeeing riches thus gotten are not onely vaine and momentanie, but alſo hurtfull and pernicious: for as the Wiſe man ſaith, the gathering of treaſures by a deceitfull tongue, is vanitie toſſed to and fro of them that ſeeke death. And the Prophet Ieremie telleth vs, that as the Partrich gathereth the young, which ſhee hath not brought forth; ſo he that getteth riches, and not by right, ſhall leaue them in the midſt of his dayes, and at his end ſhall bee a foole. So alſo they are hurtfull and pernicious, ſeeing whileſt they treaſure vp wealth, they treaſure vp ſinne; and in treaſuring vp ſin, they alſo treaſure vp wrath, and hauing in heaping vp wealth, heaped vp ſin, they alſo prepare for themſelues an intolerable waight of condemnation and deſtruction. And therefore let vs not ſet our hearts vpon this mammon of iniquity, but vpon the rich treaſures of Gods ſpirituall graces, and heauenly ioyes; which as they are infinitely of more worth and value, ſo may we certainly attaine vnto theſe things purely good, by good and holy meanes; ſeeing our Lord and Sauiour of his free grace and mercy, being infinitely rich, for our ſakes became poore, that we through his pouerty, might be made rich, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh.

Pro. 21.6.

Ier. 17.11.

2. Cor. 8.9.

§. Sect. 8.
That worldly pleaſures are ſeldome procured without ſinne.
Delitiæ ſunt ianua peccati.
Ambroſ. in Timoth. 1. cap. 5.

Finally, worldly pleaſures are ſeldome compaſſed but ſin accompanieth them; they being the diuels ordinarie baites which hee caſteth before men, when he indeauoureth to catch them in the ſnares of deſtruction, and (as one calleth them) the very gate of ſinne, which leadeth vs to the committing of all wickedneſſe. More ſpecially men ſin in getting of their pleaſures, whileſt they purſue them with immoderate loue, farre eſteeming them aboue their worth and value; when as they are at exceſſiue coſt in compaſſing them, ſpending thoſe rich talents which God hath lent them, in theſe ſuperfluities, which they ought to imploy in releeuing the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt. When as they take vp the greateſt part of their care and paines, and not onely their owne, but many others alſo which are at their command; who ſpend a great part of their life in preparing ſhewes, ſports and paſtimes, and in trauelling ſea and land to make prouiſion of delicious drinkes, and daintie meates, which may delight their curious palates, cauſing a number to ſweate many dayes for the procuring of that which bringeth but a momentanie delight, laſting no longer than their dainties are in ſwallowing downe; and in paſſing that ſhort iourney betweene the mouth and ſtomacke. Finally, when as they raiſe their delights out of others torments; and maintaine their pleaſures by oppreſſion, cruelty, deceit, wrong and iniurie, making many heauie and ſorrowfull their whole liues, that they may delight themſelues with a few houres mirth. All which vnlawfull pleaſures let euery Chriſtian carefully auoide, and thinking it ſufficient for vs that we haue ſpent the time paſt of our liues after the luſt of the Gentiles, walking in wantonneſſe, luſts drunkenneſſe, in gluttonie, drinkings, and in abominable idolatries: let vs paſſe the remainder of our time in holineſſe and feare, labouring to take all our delight in thoſe ſpirituall pleaſures, which may be lawfully obtained, and being once inioyed, ſhall neuer be taken from vs.

Ciborum uolutas, quibus uentris mensa, & animus quaſi quibuſ-dam compedibus degrauatus in terra qui Hieron. lib. contra Io-uinian.

1. Pet. 4.3.

§. Sect. 9.
Of the miſeries accompanying world things in re-ſpect of th
poſſeſſion.
Chryſoſt. in 1. Corinth.
Homil. 23.
Eccleſ. 1.14.
and 2.11.

And thus haue I ſhewed ſome of thoſe many miſeries which accompanie theſe worldly things in reſpect of their getting and obtaining. Now further let vs conſider of thoſe which are incident vnto men in reſpect of their keeping and poſſeſſion. For as they are gotten with great toile and labour, ſo are they kept with much care and feare, in regard whereof they are no leſſe troubleſome in the inioying than they were in the obtaining; like herein vnto wild and ſauage beaſts, which cannot bee taken without great paines and perill; and being in hold, bring no leſſe labour and danger to reſtraine them from doing miſchiefe. And in this reſpect the Wiſe man paſſeth this ſentence on all worldly things, that they are not onely vanity, but alſo vexation of ſpirit, troubling and moleſting men both in their purſuit and poſſeſſion. So hee ſaith elſewhere, that the houſe of the righteous hath much treaſure, but the reuenewes of the wicked is trouble; where if hee had fitted the antitheſis, he ſhould haue ſaid, that as the one had much treaſure, ſo the other much trouble; but to note the great moleſtation and anxiety of mind, which waiteth on the eſtate of worldly men, he is not contented to ſay, that it is troubleſome, but trouble it ſelfe, or in it ſelfe trouble. The which trouble and reſtleſſe vexation the Prophet Eſay expreſſeth, by comparing wicked worldlings to the raging ſea that cannot reſt, whoſe waters caſt vp mire and dirt. Now the cauſe of this care and feare in the keeping of theſe worldly vanities, is the immoderate loue which their owners beare vnto them; for as we ſecurely poſſeſſe thoſe things which we

Pro. 15.6.

Eſa. 57.20.

little regard: ſo if once wee ſet our heart vpon any thing though neuer ſo vaine, wee are preſently tormented with a iealous care in keeping it, and feare of loſing it. And as little children are neuer at quiet when they are fond of any body in the familie, but crie after them as ſoone as they ſee them, and when they haue their companie, crie as much if they but ſeeme to ſtirre, for feare of loſing them: ſo if wee once waxe fond of theſe worldly vanities, wee poſſeſſe them with ſuch care and feare, leſt they ſhould bee taken from vs, that they bring vs much more diſquietneſſe and griefe, than comfort and contentment in their fruition. Neither can we euer ſecurely enioy any worldly thing, or take delight in it without moleſtation, vnleſſe louing it leſſe than we loue our Creator, and poſſeſſing it with a deſire moderated by his will, we be content to retaine it as long as it pleaſeth him, and can part with it willingly, when it is his pleaſure to take it away. For when we loue the world or any thing in it with vnlimited affection, and affect the creature, more than the Creator, it is iuſt with the Lord, that this exceſſiue loue ſhould be puniſhed with exceſſiue cares and feares, and that by immoderate louing wee ſhould loſe the comfort of our loue. Now if any ſhall ſay that they feele no ſuch torment or moleſtation through theſe cares and feares; let them know that it is not the want of a burthen which procureth their eaſe, but their madneſſe of affections which maketh them ſenſles in feeling the waight: it is not for want of trouble that they are ſo well contented, but becauſe their fooliſh loue cauſeth them to miſtake croſſes for comforts, and turneth torments into delights. Like thoſe who are well pleaſed to haue their backs almoſt broken, whileſt they are loaded with gold; or vnto ſuch as being diſeaſed with the dropſie, take their chiefe pleaſure in drinking, though it be the chiefe cauſe of their paines and torments.

But how many miſeries accompanie theſe worldly vanities it may more plainly appeare, if we inſiſt in the ſpeciall inſtances: for firſt as honours are begotten, borne and bred by perils and labours; ſo are they by the ſame nurſed and preſerued; neither can glorious fame bee long maintained, vnleſſe it be vpheld by watching care, and painefull labour. And as thoſe who climbe vp the high and ſteepe rocke of honour, muſt before they can get vp ſpend much ſweate, and be euen tired with their laborious trauell, ſo being come to the top, they ſhall ſtand (as it were) vpon a narrow ridge, and find but tickle and ſlipperie footing, whereby they ſhall bee in danger of falling, vnleſſe they haue a good braine, and a carefull eye. And this cauſeth thoſe who are aduanced to high places, to be iealous and ſuſpicious of all that ſtand about them, not thinking what they will doe, but what they can doe, nor what preſently they vndertake, but what they may attempt in time to come; making their power of infringing their glorie, to be vnto them a continuall terror, as if already they were aſſaulted. They feare thoſe who are vnder them, leſt they pull them downe, that themſelues may more eaſily aſcend; thoſe that are their equals, and (as it were) on euen ground, leſt they ſhould juſtle them out of the path of honour, and croſſe or ouerthrow them by competition, as being corriuals in the ſame loue, and much more doe they ſtand in feare of thoſe who are aboue them, leſt they ſhould cruſh and tread them vnder foot, hauing the aduantage of the vpper ground. So that the ambitious man hauing with great paines aſcended to the ſteepe top of honours hill, findeth himſelfe not exempted, from the ſtormie tempeſts of troubles and dangers, but rather expoſed to them; and theſe high Cedars are more often blaſted, and ſhattered with thunders and lightnings, than the loweſt ſhrubs. Which perils howſoeuer many eſcape, yet few or none the feare; for as the thunderbolt ſtriking but one or two, doth affright and terrifie all thoſe who ſtand about them; ſo when thoſe who are highly aduanced, haue their greatneſſe ruined and ouerthrowne, by thoſe who are higher than they, or by the furie of popular rage, or becauſe it is no longer able to beare its owne weight, thoſe haue their part in the feare, though not in the danger, who are of the ſame qualitie and eſtate. Moreouer, adde vnto theſe feares and cares the manifold moleſtations, and fretting griefes, which are incident to thoſe who are of honorable condition, whileſt they vindicate their reputation, vpholding and preſeruing thoſe honours which alreadie they haue receiued, or aſpire vnto new preferments, being diſtracted betweene hope and feare of riſing; whileſt they enuie their ſuperiours, emulate their equals, and magnifie themſelues to their inferiours. Euery checke of their Soueraigne woundeth their heart, euery repulſe or diſgrace cruſheth & breaketh it: they are vexed with euery ſalutation which they giue vnto their equals, if they be not reſaluted; they are tormented if their inferiours faile in dutifull reſpect; and if any outſtrip them who was behind in this glorious race, they ſincke downe with ſorrow, and eate their hearts with griefe. They are tormented if they doe not ouer-top all in height and greatneſſe; and though they bee too high already, they haue little ioy in their aduancement, vnleſſe they can riſe to the full pitch of their proud hopes. Often they deſire to doe euill, and yet are fearefull that it ſhould bee diſcouered; and louing thoſe courſes of pride, inſolence and tyrannie, which expoſe them to the enuie and iuſt hatred of all, they are neuertheleſſe fretted and vexed, when they are reputed to be ſuch as indeed they are, and when they find that they haue no more loue and reſpect than they haue deſerued. They would be lords ouer all, raigning and ruling at their owne pleaſure, and yet their pride abaſeth them to a ſeruile condition, ſetting ouer them ſo many maſters as they haue familiars and acquaintance, whom they often, euen vnwillingly obſerue and pleaſe, becauſe they would not haue them diminiſh their fame and glorie, by detracting their praiſe and commendations. In a word, innumerable be the griefes and diſcontents accompanying this eſtate, many whereof are in their owne nature grieuous and very burthenſome, and many in themſelues but light, made heauie and intolerable, by the great ſpirits and ſmall patience of thoſe that beare them. Whereby it appeareth that theſe worldly honours, though they make outwardly a glorious ſhew, yet inwardly they are full of miſeries; and therefore when the world offereth, and beſtoweth them vpon its friends and fauourites, it dealeth with them, as the ſouldiers with Chriſt; for it giueth them glorious robes, but it is to mocke them; it putteth a ſcepter into their hands, but it is of reed, which breaketh in the managing, and moſt faileth when it is moſt reſted on; it beſtoweth vpon them crownes indeed, but they are of thornes, which being often ſmitten to their heads with the cruel ſtroakes of aduerſe accidents, wound in ſtead of comforting, and bring in the place of expected ioy, innumerable moleſtations and bitter griefes. Or though they be of pure gold, yet their worth is ſo much exceeded by their waight, that none will care to weare them, but onely ſuch as cannot ſafely lay them aſide, or thoſe who are ſo wholly carried with the furie of ambition, that they take pleaſure in their paine, and loue that which is their torment which being the caſe of many, gaue iuſt occaſion to one of making this exclamation: O ambition (ſaith he) which art the croſſe and torment of the ambitious, how doſt thou torment all, and yet pleaſe them in their torments, nothing more bitterly vexeth, nothing more grieuouſly diſquieteth, and yet nothing among miſerable mortall men is more magnified and extolled.

Approbatio vulgi quanto clariorem quempiam facit, tanto maioribus curis ſolicitudine, atq; periculis vexat: nec enim reſpirare, qui dominatui populi ſeruit, nec in re aliqua firmiter ſtare poteſt, &c. Chryſoſt. in Matth. 12. hom. 41. tom. 2. 366.

Mat. 17, 28. 29.

O ambitio ambientium crux, quomodo omnibus torquens, omnibus places? Bernard. lib. 3. de Conſiderat. cap. 1.

§. Sect. 12. Of the miſeries which accompanie riches when they are in poſſeſſion.

The like or greater miſeries accompany riches, whileſt they are in cuſtodie and poſſeſſion, both in reſpect of that care and labour of body and mind, in keeping and diſpoſing them; and alſo in regard of the feare of loſing them, and of many miſerable effects which accompany them both. For as they are gotten with intolerable labours of the body, ſo they are poſſeſſed with infinit cares and perturbations of the mind, either whileſt they who haue them are troubled in diſpoſing and imploying them ſo, as may returne vnto them the greateſt increaſe; or in ſharing them with ſome indifferencie to thoſe who are of their family and charge (for when goods encreaſe they alſo are increaſed that eate them, as the Wiſe man ſpeaketh) or finally (if at leaſt they be poſſeſſed with a good conſcience) in watching ouer themſelues, that they be not corrupted with their abundance, and that their plenty of gold doth not make them poorer in godlineſſe. In which reſpect riches are compared to thornes, which being griped wound the fleſh, but be harmeleſſe if they lie in the open hand. So if they, being exceſſiuely loued, be (as it were) griped with immoderate cares, they pricke and wound the heart with many griefes and troubles; but if wee careleſly keepe them, and ſlightly hold them, being ready to part with them vpon all good occaſions, and to ſuffer them to take their flight like an Eagle, when God calleth for them, they will become to their owners not onely harmeleſſe, but alſo profitable. To which purpoſe one demandeth: Who (ſaith he) would beleeue me, if I ſhould interpret thornes to be riches? eſpecially ſeeing they pricke, and theſe delight; and yet in truth they are no better than thornes, becauſe by their pricking cares they rent the mind, and when they intice vs vnto ſinne, they make it bloody with the wounds of wickedneſſe. And as they are continually vexed with theſe cares in keeping them; ſo alſo with feare of loſing them; for as before they had them, they purſued them with burning deſire, ſo being poſſeſſed of them, they keepe them with quaking feare. No ſooner haue they gotten riches, but preſently they loſe their ſecuritie, and now they are in feare of that wealth which before they wiſhed, ſicke of injoying their owne deſires; and fall into trauell, as ſoone as they haue their longing: for as Eliphas ſpeaketh, A ſound of feare is alwayes in their eares, leſt in their peace and proſperitie, the deſtroyer ſhould come vpon them. If the couetous rich man ſeeth one ſtronger than himſelfe, he feareth violence and robberie; if one wiſer, fraud and deceit; if one richer and mightier, then he is afraid of being ſpoiled by oppreſſion; if one poorer and weaker, by theft and ſtealth; abroad he feareth theeues and robbers, at home hee ſuſpecteth his owne ſeruants; in time of warre he is afraid of common ſpoilers, in time of peace, of enuious and ſpitefull ſlanderers, which are ready to make him faultie becauſe he is rich, and an enemie to the common wealth, becauſe he hath too much for his owne particular. Finally, the couetous rich man is afraid of all Origen. in Rom.

Eccleſ. 5. 10.

Prou. 23. 5.

Homil.

things, ſauing Gods diſpleaſure; and of loſing all, except it be his owne ſoule, and the ioyes of Heauen: and ſuch is his folly, that whileſt he feareth to loſe his Gold, Riches, Lands & Poſſeſſions, he is in no fear of loſing himſelfe, as though (excepting his owne perſon) he had nothing in his cuſtody vnworthy the keeping. Hence it is that he keepeth ſuch a narrow watch ouer his wealth, and hauing incloſed and ſhut it vp vnder the ſure cuſtodie of many bolts, Iron bard Cheſts, and ſtrong lockes, which neither picking nor breaking can indanger, he addeth alſo to his aid ſo many ſeruants, as his couetous minde will ſuffer him to mayntaine, that they may the better keepe the watch, and bring ſecuritie; but all in vaine, for within a while he groweth jealous of his Guard, and ſuſpicious of his Aſſiſtants; and the more able they are to keepe out outward violence, the more ſtronger he thinketh them to breake open his Cheſts, and to ſpoyle him of his Treaſures. And therefore thinking no knowne ſtrength ſufficient to keepe his Gold and Siluer from force or fraud, he hideth it in the groũd, being ready to ſuſpect his eyes & heart, as priuy to his ſecrecy, leſt imparting it to his tongue, it ſhould reueale it at vnawares either waking or ſleeping. And as one of the Ancients noteth, ſuch is the madneſſe of theſe greedy Muck-wormes, that after they haue with ſweating paines, ſearched for their Treaſures in the bowels of the earth, they are ready with ſhiuering feare to hide and couer them in the earth againe; like the Adders young, which being newly come out of their Dams belly, glide and returne into it for ſafety, when as they are frighted with any danger. Yea, and as though notwithſtanding all this, it were not ſafe enough, they are ready (as one ſaith) to lie ouer the place in which their Gold is hid, and to bury their hearts together with their Treaſures, that it may be the better watched. In a word, as they neuer thinke their mony free from danger, ſo are they neuer free from feare, they neuer ſecurely eat or ſleepe, but as the holy Martyr ſaid, they ſigh at their Banquets, although they drinke in the richeſt plate; and after their Feaſts, when they haue laid downe their bodies made leane with cares, and euen hid them in their beds of downe, they watch and can take no reſt in their ſoft Lodgings; and when but a Mouſe ſtirreth, they are ready to buſtle vp, ſuſpecting a Theefe; not vnderſtanding, wretches that they are, that all their wealth doth but bring vnto them glorious puniſhments, that they are fettered with their Gold, and poſſeſſed of their riches, whileſt they thinke they poſſeſſe them. The which folly of ouer carefull keeping their wealth, as it is in all fooliſh and abſurd, ſo it is moſt ridiculous, and yet moſt common in olde men; which though they haue already one foote in the Graue, yet doe they in this kind ſhew their fooliſh feare more than any other; burying their Treaſures in the earth, not long before themſelues are buried, as though howſoeuer they neuer had any good of them in this life, yet they were in ſome hope to haue it in the life to come. The which dotage befalleth men through the juſt judgement of God; for when as they neglect the loue of their Creatour, who is loued without any labour, hee giueth them ouer to dote vpon the creature which they loue with laborious paines, and enjoy with many griefes; being ready at the command of their concupiſcence to endure all labours and dangers for the obtayning of it; and to what purpoſe? Surely that they may fill their Cheſts with Treaſures, and empty their mindes of peace and ſecuritie; gaine Gold, and loſe their ſleepe. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that couetouſneſſe deſireth Gold, ſorrowfull labour findeth it out, and carking care keepeth it: It is the matter of labours, perillous to the poſſeſſours, a weakener of vertue, an ill Maſter, and treacherous Seruant; no man thinketh that he hath it ſafe, vnleſſe hee alwayes hide it, becauſe it ſhineth to the owners deſtruction; in darkneſſe it is ſought, and it is kept in darkneſſe. And the reaſon of all theſe miſeries is, becauſe men make Idols of their wealth, and loue it out of meaſure; neither can that be ſecurely poſſeſſed which is exceſſiuely ouer-ualued; whereas if louing God aboue all, they could in all eſtates be content with that which pleaſeth him: if in the time of proſperity and plenty, they woud learne the vanity of abundance, and make pouerty familiar vnto them, not onely by meditation, but by accuſtoming and inuring themſelues to indure ſome want, they would enjoy their riches with much more ſecurity, and entertaine pouerty if it happen to ſeize vpon them, with much more patience and Contentation.

Auguſt. Serm. 26. In Acts 3. Tom,10.

§. Sect. 12. That riches depriue their bodies of reſt, & their minds of peace which too much loue them.

And thus haue I ſhewed the care and feare which accompany riches in their poſſeſſion. Now let vs conſider of ſome miſerable effects which iſſue from them both; as firſt through this care and feare they depriue their bodies of reſt, and their minds of peace and quietneſſe. For as the Wiſeman ſpeaketh, the abundance of the rich will not ſuffer him to ſleepe. Whom the ſonne of Syrach imitating, ſaith, that waking after riches pineth away the body, and the care thereof driueth away ſleepe; this waking care breaketh the ſleepe, as a great ſickneſſe breaketh it. For their concupiſcence keepeth them waking, whileſt it forceth them to tire their thoughts in plotting how they may keepe their owne ſtore, or get other mens, and ſo turne their ſufficiency into abundance, no leſſe vexing their ſoules with enuy when they ſee other mens

Eccluſ. 5.11.

Eccluſ. 31.1,2. Aurea rumpunt tecta quietem vigileſq; trahit purpura noctes O ſi pateant pectora ditum quantos intus ſublimis agit fortuna metus. Senec. in Herc. Oetæo.

Idiota inter Orthodoxogr. lib.1,cap.32.

Hab.2,6.

Eſay 59.5.

mens ſtate haſtily increaſe, than with ſorrow becauſe their owne ſtandeth at a ſtay, or goeth backward. One while ſorrowing becauſe the earth not yeelding fruitfull increaſe nor ſufficient plenty, they haue not enough; another while no leſſe grieuing at the great abundance of all commodities, becauſe the Market falling, they cannot ſell their owne at their owne rates, bewayling all that as loſſe wherein they come ſhort of their greedy expectation. In which reſpect one truly ſaith, that when the loue of riches is exceſſiue and vnſatiable, they much more torment the ſoule with greedy deſire, than they doe refreſh it with any comfortable vſe; and whileſt a man too much leaneth towardes them in loue, they failing him, hee ſlideth and falleth into griefe and ſorrow. He who findeth them loſeth his reſt, for when he waketh he thinketh of increaſe, and when hee ſleepeth he dreameth of Theeues; hee is afflicted in the day, fearefull in the night, and alwayes in want and beggery, continually robbing himſelfe of reſt, for feare leſt at any time hee ſhould bee robbed of his riches. So alſo they load themſelues with vnſupportable burthens; and as the Prophet ſpeaketh, with thicke clay; and as Birds of heauy bodies cannot flie though they haue wings, being preſſed downe with their owne waight; ſo though worldly Miſers haue ſoules and minds which might carry them into Heauen in ſpirituall meditations; yet the burthen of their wealth, and their worldly concupiſcence, will not ſuffer them to riſe, but preſſeth them downe groueling vnto the earth. Which burthen (as one ſaith) is now more vnſeaſonable, in that it being the time of warfare, and our enemies ſtill in field, it is altogether vnmeet before the battell be ended to load our ſelues with ſpoyles, which will make vs vnfit to continue the fight; but after we haue obtained the victory, then may we ſecurely enjoy our Treaſures. Moreouer, with their cares, feares, and reſtleſſe watching, they weaken their ſtrength, and bring vpon themſelues ſickneſſe, and vntimely death, and all for the obtayning of ſuch trifling vanities as are not worth the labour in ſeeking and trouble in keeping them. In which reſpect their earneſt endeuours, are fitly by the Prophet compared to the weauing of the Spiders web, in making whereof ſhee conſumeth her owne intrailes, and being finiſhed, it is good for nothing but to catch Flies: ſo couetous men weare out themſelues with cares and labours, for the obtayning of Gold and Siluer, and when they haue them, breake their reſt, and oftentimes their hearts in keeping them, hauing for all their paines, cares, and feares no returne of true profit; nor any more good by all their trauels, than their Bags and Cheſts wherein they keepe their mony, which are but worne out, and ſometime broken open for the Siluers ſake which they keepe in cuſtodie. Finally, by their cares and feares they make themſelues of Maſters and Owners, Keepers and Iaylours of their riches, or rather in truth fellow priſoners; for not the limbes but the heart is bound with theſe Golden Chaines, and whileſt they locke vp their Gold in their Iron-bard Cheſts, their minds alſo are impriſoned with it.

§ Sect. 1

How wee to the po on of riche freed from former miſeries.

1.Pet.5.7.

Iob 20.15.

Luke 16.9.

And thus haue I ſhewed that thoſe who keepe their riches with immoderate loue, do together with them harbour many miſeries. The which ſhould ſerue as an effectuall perſwaſion to weane our hearts from the exceſſiue loue of theſe miſerable vanities, and to make vs affect with our heartieſt deſires the rich Treaſures of Gods ſpirituall graces, and heauenly joyes, which bring comforts without cares; becauſe all our cares are caſt vpon God, who careth for vs, and true happineſſe without the mixture of any miſery; To make vs loath theſe vaine and worldly riches, which (as Zophar ſpeaketh) filling vs with abundance, fill vs alſo with paine; and to be more in loue with thoſe heauenly Treaſures, which wee ſhall ſecurely enjoy without any perturbation of our reſt. Or if our affections cannot be withdrawne from this earthly Mammon, let vs as our Sauiour Chriſt exhorteth vs, labour to make friends of it, which we may doe if we vſe it friendly, and loue it truly, as it ought to be loued, and we to loue. Now riches are truly loued when we vſe them in their kind, and according to their owne nature, helping them forward to the attaining of their chiefe and beſt end, for which they were created; euen as we are ſaid to loue Bookes beſt, when wee euen weare them out with ſtudying; and meate beſt, when with a good ſtomacke wee feed vpon it; and our Neighbours beſt, when we moue them to glorifie God in their ſaluation; becauſe theſe are the mayne ends for which they were made. But the chiefe end of riches is that wee may glorifie God in their vſe; as when we imploy part of them to the neceſſary and ſufficient mayntenance of our ſelues, and thoſe who are committed to our charge; and that which remayneth, to the releeuing, feeding and clothing of the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt, which is the mayne end of our plenty and ſuperfluity, from which end alſo they haue their name, being called goods, becauſe they inable vs to doe good, and are the inſtruments of well doing. And therefore they who hinder them of theſe ends, and will not vſe them according to their owne nature, which is to doe good, by being communicated to thoſe who ſtand in need, but keepe them faſt locked vp (as it were) in cloſe priſon, not ſuffering their Gold and Siluer to be at liberty, which were created and ordained to be (as wee alſo call them) them) currant monie paſſing from man to man, as need requireth, they can neither be ſaid to loue their riches, nor yet themſelues; becauſe altering their vſe and nature, they make them to degenerate, and ceaſing to be good & profitable, they cauſe them through their abuſe to be hurtfull and pernicious. In which reſpect they are compared to band-dogs, which are moſt fierce when they are tied vp, but gentle when they are ſet at liberty; and to Riuers, which if they be ſuffered to haue their naturall courſe in their owne current, they runne quietly and doe much good to the whole Country, but if any will ſtop their courſe, as deſiring to ingroſſe them to his owne vſe, they rage and ſwell, breake downe their bankes, and drowne all that are about them: or vnto ſpringing fountaines, which if they may purifie and cleanſe themſelues by ſending out their pirling ſtreames, they continue cleare and ſweet, but if their iſſue be dammed vp, and they made a ſtanding poole, their water putrifieth and corrupteth: ſo if wee ſuffer riches to haue their naturall courſe, like ſtreames iſſuing from vs, by communication and Chriſtian liberalitie, and to fill the empty places which are in their way, they will retaine their naturall puritie and perfection, being vſed in their kind; but if we impriſon and hoard them vp, they will corrupt and become vnprofitable, yea, in truth noyſome, hurtfull and pernicious. Thus Cloathes laid vp become Moth-eaten, Corne reſerued ouer-long, becommeth muſty and vnſauoury; meate kept paſt due time putrifieth and ſtinketh, and Coine it ſelfe being hoarded vp and not vſed, loſeth its beauty and brightneſſe, and is fretted with ruſt and canker. And that which is worſt of all, theſe Moth-eaten Garments, corrupted riches, and cankered Gold and Siluer, ſhall be a witneſſe againſt thoſe who thus abuſe them, eate their fleſh as fire, and for their falſe and wrongfull impriſonment, ſhall caſt them into the priſon of vtter darkneſſe, as our Sauiour Chriſt and his holy Apoſtle haue plainly taught vs.

If therefore wee truly loue riches, or our ſelues, let vs not by hording them vp increaſe our owne cares and feares, and hinder them of their right vſe and end; but let vs ſo diſpoſe of them, as they may be moſt ſafe, and wee moſt ſecure, they preſerued in their naturall perfection, and we benefited by their fruition. Now this we ſhall doe if wee enjoy part of them to our owne comfort, and communicate the ouerplus to the good of others, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and relieuing thoſe who any way ſtand in need. For wee loſe theſe earthly riches in keeping them, and keepe them in beſtowing them; if we giue them we ſhall euer enjoy them; if wee reſerue them wee ſhall ſurely loſe them, ſeeing wee cannot long continue with them; for either they ſhall be taken from vs, or we for them, carrying nothing with vs out of the World, but returning naked as we came into it. So that if wee would haue theſe periſhing things permanent vnto vs, wee muſt giue them that we may alwayes haue them; and leaue them for a time, that we may enjoy them for euer. For as the Wiſe man ſaith, if wee caſt our bread vpon the face of the waters, after many dayes we ſhall find it; if wee giue vnto the poore, wee lend vnto the Lord, and hee will recompence and repay vs that which we haue giuen. So our Sauiour telleth vs, that if wee giue to the poore wee ſhall haue heauenly Treaſures. And the Apoſtle teacheth vs, that thoſe who be rich in good workes, and ready to diſtribute and communicate, doe lay vp in ſtore for themſelues a good foundation againſt the time to come, and obtaine eternall life. If therefore wee ſo loue our riches, as that wee would eternally poſſeſſe them, let vs not hoard them vp in the earth, where we are ſure to leaue them, carrying nothing with vs but the canker of our Coine, which ſhall beare witneſſe againſt vs at the day of judgement; but let vs ſend them before vs vnto Heauen, deliuering them to the poore who are Gods Factors and Receiuers; and ſo hauing conueyed and made ouer our goods (as it were) by bils of exchange, wee ſhall find the Lord a ſure and all-ſufficient pay-maſter, who will giue vs more than double vſance, and yet pay vs at the firſt ſight. If wee would haue our Corne continue ſweet and good for a great ſpace, let vs know that there are for this purpoſe no Garners comparable to poore mens ſtomackes, which will preſerue our Graine for our vſe vnto life eternall: if wee would haue our Clothes preſerued from Mothes, and to laſt long, the backes of the naked are our ſafeſt Wardrobes: if we would keepe our Gold aud Siluer from ruſting and cankering, let vs commit it to the cuſtodie of the poore, and they will not only keepe it bright, but become our Porters to carry it before vs vnto Heauen; whereas whatſoeuer they beare not for vs wee ſhall ſurely leaue behind vs. In a word, if wee would be rich truly and eternally, let vs as our Sauiour Chriſt counſelleth vs, not lay vp our treaſures vpon the earth, where the Moth and Canker corrupt, and where Theeues digge through and ſteale, but let vs lay vp our treaſures in Heauen, whereas they ſhall be ſecurely ſafe from all theſe dangers. And as elſewhere he exhorteth vs, let vs ſell that we haue, and giue almes, and ſo make vs bagges which waxe not old, lay vp a treaſure in Heauen which can neuer faile, where no Theefe commeth, nor Moth corrupteth. And if wee looke to finde rich treaſures when wee come to our heauenly Country, wee muſt not giue it pinchingly and with a ſparing hand, but

Eccleſ.11.1.

Prou.19.17.

Matth.19.21.

1.Tim.6.19.

Matth.6.19,20

Luke 12.33.

ſend

ſend it before vs in great plentie; if wee will there be rich in glory, we muſt be heere rich in good workes, imitating our bountifull God, who giueth vs abundantly all things to enjoy, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; if we will find there a fruitfull harueſt of joy and happineſſe, our ſeed time muſt not be niggardly and ſparing, for as the ſame Apoſtle ſaith, he which ſoweth ſparingly ſhall reape ſparingly; and he that ſoweth liberally, ſhall reape alſo liberally. The which liberalitie is not to be meaſured according to the greatneſſe of the thing giuen, ſimply conſidered; but as it is compared to his eſtate that giueth it, and proceedeth from a free and bountifull heart, in which reſpect the poore Widowes mite, and the cup of cold water giuen by him that hath no better thing to beſtow, ſhall haue as rich a reward, as hee that giueth much out of his abundance. But as our almes are fully in proportion to match our eſtates, ſo they are not to exceed them; for the Apoſtle giueth vs this rule, that we muſt lay vp for theſe charitable vſes, according as God proſpereth vs; and not whileſt we relieue others, bring our ſelues and thoſe who depend vpon vs to want and beggery. And as wee are to moderate our almes with Chriſtian wiſdome and diſcretion, leſt we lauiſhly powre out, in ſtead of liberall giuing; and by our preſent profuſeneſſe in waſting the ſtocke, diſable our ſelues for the time to come; ſo wee are much more carefully to take heed, that we doe not with-hold from the poore that which our ſtate will well beare, nor giue leſſe than our abilitie will preſently afford, for feare of wanting our ſelues in time to come; ſeeing this were but to bewray our diffidence and diſtruſt in Gods bountifull prouidence, yea, and after that he hath giuen vs a pawne and pledge of his liberall loue in prouiding for vs ſufficient ſtore: from whence wee might conclude, that as God hath already furniſhed vs with neceſſary and conuenient plenty, ſo (as the Apoſtle ſaith) hee is ſtill able to make all grace to abound towards vs, that wee alwayes hauing all ſufficiencie in all things, may abound in euery good worke. To ſay nothing of their extreame folly, who vpon a cauſeleſſe ſuſpition, and diffident feare, neglect theſe workes of mercy, ſeeing hereby they certainly depriue themſelues of the eternall joyes of Heauen, vpon an vncertaine feare of wanting hereafter theſe temporary trifles; and without all doubt caſt themſelues into the torments of Hell: for as true, as truth it ſelfe hath ſpoken it, thoſe who haue not fed the hungry, giuen drinke to the thirſtie, clothed the naked, and lodged the harbourleſſe, ſhall at the day of judgement heare that fearefull ſentence paſſing on them; Depart from mee you curſed into euerlaſting fire prepared for the Deuill and his Angels; for I was an hungred, and yee gaue mee no meate, &c. Euen as contrariwiſe thoſe who haue performed theſe deeds of Charitie, ſhall with infinite comfort heare their Iudge and Sauiour pronounce that joyfull ſentence; Come yee bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdome prepared for you, from the foundations of the world, &c.

1.*Tim.*6.17,18

2.*Cor.*9.6.

Non eſt multum quod facis, cum facis quod multi.

1.*Cor.*16.2.

2.*Cor.*9.8

*Mat.*25,

§.*Sect.*3

An exh

on to Alm deeds.

And therefore if we will eſcape this curſe, and be partakers of this bleſſing, let vs not with carnall Worldlings take all our delight in poſſeſſing abundance; and (as it were) in burying our ſelues vnder an huge heape of this worldly droſſe, hiding theſe lent talents, and not imploying them to the glory of our Maſter, and good of our fellow ſeruants; but let vs liberally communicate of our ſtore to thoſe that ſtand in need. Which that wee may doe with more cheerefulneſſe, let vs further conſider that herein we ſhal approue our ſelues to be children of our heauenly Father, ſeeing wee reſemble him in his bountie and liberalitie, giuing abundantly according to our ability to the reliefe of all that want our helpe; and that wee take hereby the beſt courſe to rid our ſelues of carking care, and vnquiet feares of loſing theſe things which wee ſo much loue, ſeeing wee haue laid them vp in Heauen, where they ſhall ſafely be kept for vs (as it were) out of the gunſhot of any danger. Let vs call to mind that it is a more happy thing to giue than to receiue, and that thoſe who are moſt liberall in beſtowing almes, doe hereby obtaine farre greater benefits than they vpon whom they are beſtowed; for they giue tranſitory trifles, but ſhall be recompenſed with eternall treaſures, as it is written, he hath ſparſed abroad, and hath giuen to the poore, his beneuolence remayneth for euer: his horne ſhall be exalted with glory. They beſtow ſingle benefits, but they ſhall haue them returned an hundred fold, and haue euerlaſting life to boot. And therefore if wee truly loue our money, and be wiſely couetous, let vs fall into the practice of this Chriſtian vſury, which will not onely bring vs in for gaine ten in the hundred, but an hundred for ten, yea, an hundred for one; ſo as wee may well ſay with the ſonne of Syrach, that if wee beſtow our treaſures after the commandement of the moſt high, it ſhall bring vs more profit than our gold. Neither is there any cauſe why wee ſhould ſuſpect our payment, ſeeing hee who hath promiſed it, is true and al-ſufficient, and neuer failed of his word. If therefore men be willing to commit their ſeed to the ground in hope of a fruitfull Harueſt, though there bee many accidents often happening which fruſtrate their expectation; if they can bee content in hope of a little gaine to truſt out their wares and goods to ſuch as they thinke ſufficient, though they are often miſtaken and deceiued of all; how intolerable is their diffidence, who dare not giue credit vnto the

*Act.*20.35.

*Pſal.*112.9.

2.*Cor.*9.9.

*Mat.*19.29.

Eccluſ.

Lord, promiſing them to repay that which they lend him with ſuch infinite increaſe, but rather let their ſeed waxe muſtie in their Garners, than they will imploy it in this ſpirituall husbandry, and repoſe more confidence in vnable and deceitfull men, than in the moſt true and al-ſufficient God?

Sect. 16.
he miſewhich ac-pany ldly pleas in their ion.

And thus haue I ſhewed the cares, feares, and manifold miſeries which accompany riches in their poſſeſſion, as alſo ſome meanes whereby wee may be vnburthened of them. It followeth that I adde briefly a word or two of worldly pleaſures, which as they are gotten with labour and paine, ſo they are kept with much trouble and feare. For what care doe they bring to thoſe who ſet their hearts on them to continue them ſo, that they may neither be wanting to their appetite, nor their appetite to them? How curiouſly doe they diet themſelues one day, that the day following they may be more able, and (as it were) better breathed, to run on in their voluptuous courſes? How diſcontented are they when hauing pleaſures they can take no pleaſure in them, becauſe they are cloyed, and haue already ſurfeited of their delights? How are they vexed if they doe not anſwere their expectation, nor pleaſe their wanton palate, when as oftentimes there is no want in their pleaſures, but becauſe they being glutted with ſatiety cannot relliſh them? How are they turmoyled whileſt they feele an inward conflict betweene voluptuouſneſſe, and deſire of Honour, and ſtand in feare leſt by enjoying their pleaſures, they loſe their credit and reputation, when either they are in themſelues vnlawfull, or in their vſe immoderate? What inward pangs feele they, when their conſciences tell them that their voluptuous courſes will not agree with Religion, and the feare of God, no nor yet with ciuility and common honeſty? and what remorſe, and ſtings of repentance doe they endure, when the ſweetneſſe of their pleaſures are ouer-paſt; though they are ſo bewitched with theſe pleaſing ſorceries, that with the Drunkard in the Prouerbs, after they haue found themſelues ſicke, and ſurfeited of their delights, and euen beaten with the ſcourges of many miſeries, they continue in their voluptuous courſes, and with no leſſe fondneſſe than before dote vpon their pleaſures? Finally, whereas the temperate man who hath learned to abound and to want, doth ſecurely enjoy his delights, as not greatly valuing them, becauſe he can as well bee without them as with them; contrariwiſe hee that is voluptuous, hauing ſet his heart vpon theſe bewitching vanities, and made an Idoll of his pleaſure, is in continuall feare of loſing that which he ſo much loueth; and when hee aboundeth with thoſe things which his heart deſireth, his rejoycing is not ſo great in their fruition, as his feares, jealouſies, and ſuſpitions, leſt in time to come he ſhould be depriued of them. And howſoeuer theſe carnal pleaſures are but baſe vanities and childiſh toyes; yet men ſetting their hearts vpon them, they become great, not in themſelues, but in opinion, which is the chiefe meaſure of worldly excellencie. Which opinion as it maketh them to enjoy them with loue; ſo it cauſeth them to keepe them with feare; like little children, which with no leſſe care watch ouer their worthles trifles, than if they were the moſt precious jewels, and richeſt treaſures.

§. Sect. 17.
The miſeries which accompany worldly things when they are loſt.

But hauing ſufficiently ſhewed the miſeries which are incident vnto theſe worldly things, whileſt they are in cuſtodie and poſſeſſion; let vs now in the laſt place conſider, that as they are gotten with labour, and kept with care, ſo they are loſt with ſorrow and bitter griefe. For men hauing aduanced them infinitely aboue their worth, both in their judgement and affection, and made them their Idols, vpon whom they haue wholly ſet their hearts; when they are depriued of them they bewayle their loſſe no leſſe, yea, in truth much more bitterly, and with farre greater paſſion, than if they had loſt all part and intereſt in God himſelfe, his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, and all thoſe glorious joyes in his heauenly Kingdome. And hauing repoſed in them all their joy and comfort, their hope and confidence, when with Laban they are robbed of their Idols, they lament their loſſe with more true griefe, and ſuſtaine this burthen with much more impatiencie, than if they were at once ſpoyled of their wife, children, and all their frends; becauſe they are together with them robbed alſo of their hearts, which are faſt nailed, and inſeparably affixed to them. Neither in this caſe is the worth of the thing loſt to be conſidered, but the affection & eſtimation of him that loſeth it; for thoſe things which are poſſeſſed with immoderate loue, are loſt with immoderate griefe, although in themſelues they are vaine and worthleſſe: euen as we ſee little children lamenting with no leſſe true ſorrow the taking away of their childiſh and contemptible trifles, than if they were depriued of their inheritance. So in like manner, worldly men ouer-ualuing earthly vanities aboue their worth, are more tormented with griefe when they are forced to forgoe them, than for loſing the glorious inheritance of the Saints, and the eternall joyes of Heauen. Yea their ſorrow is ſo intolerable oftentimes, that to eaſe their griefe, they murther themſelues; as thinking leſſe torment, in death, yea, in Hell it ſelfe, than in liuing to ſuſtaine ſo great a loſſe. For the greater they conceited their happines in the fruition of their vaine deſires, the more miſerable they thinke themſelues when they are depriued of it; and now they heartily

Gen. 31.

wiſh that they had neuer enjoyed theſe pleaſures, becauſe at the laſt they are ſpoyled of them. Though in truth with great folly, for they hauing had formerly the fruition of their deſires, might, were it not for their owne peeuiſhneſſe, ſtill delight themſelues with the remembrance of it, and when they are moſt deſtitute and forſaken of the things they loued, they are (ſetting paſſion and opinion aſide) in no worſe caſe, than before they had them. Yea, ſometime men are thus afflicted with bitter ſorrow, when as they are depriued but of ſome ſmall part of theſe worldly things, though they haue ſtill the greateſt ſhare left behind; neither can their great remaynder ſo much delight them, as their little loſſe grieueth them, as though their joy and comfort were bound joyntly to all, and ſeuerally to euery part of theſe vanities, ſo that if any part be wanting, a forfeiture muſt preſently be made of the whole ſumme. Wherein they may fitly be compared to little children, who though they haue twentie trifles wherewith they play, yet if but one of them be taken away without their conſent, doe preſently fall a crying, and in a moody diſcontent caſt away all the reſt, taking no delight in many, vnleſſe they may ſtill haue all. Yea, oftentimes it commeth to paſſe, that though they make but meane account of a thing whileſt they haue it, yet they value it when they muſt forgoe it, beginning then onely to loue it, when they loſe it, and highly to eſteeme it, when they can keepe it no longer. And as their damage indeareth their affection, ſo anſwerably it increaſeth their ſorrow; and the arguments which they gather to amplifie the greatneſſe of their loſſe, are ſo many quarrels againſt their owne quietneſſe, and ſo many motiues to augment and aggrauate their impatiencie and griefe. In all which reſpects worldly men haue much more ſorrow for the loſſe of theſe earthly vanities, than euer they had comfort in enjoying them, and after their falſe and counterfeit joyes, ſuſtaine true and piercing griefe. And that which is worſt of all, this worldly ſorrow hath no comfort attending on it, but as the Apoſtle telleth vs, it bringeth death, and that not only of bodie, but of ſoule alſo, vnleſſe they haue grace to bewaile this griefe, and be heartily ſorie, that they haue ſo ſorrowed.

Stultus quod perdidit, tantum amat.

2.Cor.7.10.

§.Sect.18.
Of the miſeries which are incident to men for the loſſe of honours, riches and pleaſures.

And as theſe things are of vndoubted truth in all other worldly things: ſo eſpecially in Honours, Riches and Pleaſures; for how vncomfortably doth the ambitious man grieue, and with what impatiencie doth he ſuſtaine his loſſe, if hee bee depriued of his Honours and Preferments? How much more bitterly and heartily doth he bewaile it, than the death of his firſt-born or neereſt friends? Yea, how much rather had hee die himſelfe, than to liue diſgraced, though it be but in the opinion only of his owne conſorts? And though hee haue many Preferments, and much glory in the World, what comfort doth he take in all the reſt, if he be depriued but of one, yea, if hee come ſhort of his hopes where hee thought to obtaine; loſing that which he neuer had, but only in conceit? So the couetous man bewaileth his loſt riches, as if he had loſt himſelfe; and that not out of paſſion only, but out of an ill grounded judgement, which maketh him ſo to eſteeme them, as though all his good and happineſſe conſiſted in hauing them, and all ill and miſerie in their want. And hence it is that in their vſuall phraſe of ſpeech they ſay when wealth is conferred on them, that they are made, and when it is taken away that they are vndone, or (as it were) vnmade againe; judging, that in hauing, or not hauing riches, their making or marring chiefly conſiſteth. Yea, ſo faſt hold doth their immoderate loue of this earthly Mammon take of them, that they can more eaſily part with their ſoules than part with it, as wee may ſee in the example of the rich man in the Goſpell, who when hee could learne of our Sauiour no other meanes to be ſaued, than by parting with all and following him, he went away ſorrowfull for the loſſe of his ſoule, but yet reſolued to keepe his wealth. And ſuch as their loue is whileſt they haue it, ſo ſuch is their griefe when they are forced to leaue it, and that not only when they loſe all, but alſo ſome ſmall part or portion of it; in regard whereof, hee who hath the greateſt riches, hath alſo moſt plentifull matter of ſorrow and griefe; becauſe in ſuch abundance, and ſo many particulars which are all caſuall, ſome things muſt of neceſſity euery hand-while miſcarry, the loſſe whereof ſo much and often troubleth him, that it were much better for him, that he had neuer had them, than to ſuſtaine ſuch griefe in loſing them. Neither can the greatneſſe of their eſtates leſſen their ſorrow when any loſſe befalleth them: for as one ſaid wittily; An hairie man doth with no leſſe paine ſuffer his haire to be pulled off, than hee who is almoſt bald; and a wound bringeth as much griefe to a Giant, as to a Dwarfe; and ſo in like manner it is all one, whether a couetous man hath much or little, becauſe his heart adhearing, and being (as it were) faſt glued to his wealth, the paine is all alike when it is pulled from him. And this maketh men ſo impatient to thinke of parting with their riches, that they are readie with the Heathen, when they make their will, to make themſelues their owne heires, and to bequeath vnto themſelues their owne poſſeſſions. The like alſo may be ſaid of voluptuous pleaſures, which howſoeuer they bee but childiſh toyes, and of ſmall worth; yet thoſe who ſet their hearts vpon them, are vexed with

Ec. Ser. 5.

Math.19.2

Bion apud Se-necam, de tranquil. ani-mi, cap. 8.

Hermocrates apud Sto-bæum de iniuſt. Serm.

with no ſmall ſorrow, when they are depriued of them; and howſoeuer they had neuer any good by them in their fruition, either in reſpect of ſoule or body; yet being inured to them, they bewaile the loſſe of their company with bitter griefe: and whereas men remember their croſſes, dangers, and troubles, with great comfort and contentment, when they are once paſt; contrariwiſe the greater their paſſed pleaſures haue beene, the more bitter ſorrow they bring to their hearts when they thinke vpon them.

Sect.19.

And thus haue I ſhewed not onely that worldly things are mixt with, but alſo in themſelues full of miſeries. The conſideration whereof, as it ſhould weane our hearts from the immoderate loue of theſe vanities, which howſoeuer at the firſt they ſeeme ſweete and pleaſant, yet their after-taſte is full of bitterneſſe; and though they bee cruſted ouer with a thinne rinde of ſugred delights, yet that being preſently melted away, as ſoone as it is relliſhed, the whole body and ſubſtance that remaineth, is no better, or more pleaſing to our taſte than gall or wormewood: ſo on the other ſide it ſhould moue vs highly to eſteeme, and chiefely to affect, and ſeeke Gods ſpirituall graces in this life, and heauenly glorie in the life to come, ſeeing the former in themſelues are free from miſeries, and leaue no after-tang behind them; but howſoeuer at the firſt taſte they ſeeme a little bitter to fleſh and blood, yet the more wee feed vpon them, the more ſweete they will bee vnto vs, vntill at laſt hauing made them the ordinarie diet of our ſoules, they will taſte more ſweetely and delicately, than the hony or the hony combe, as the Prophet Dauid ſpake by good experience; and ſo they will not only delight vs in themſelues, but relliſh our mouths when they are diſtaſted with the bitterneſſe of worldly miſeries. And for the other they are not onely in themſelues ſweet and pleaſant, but alſo free from the mixture of all worldly euils, not tainted with the leaſt trouble, nor diſtaſted with the ſmalleſt griefe; for then all teares ſhall be wiped from our eyes, and all matter of mourning ceaſing, wee ſhall be repleniſhed with fulneſſe of ioy, and be euen rauiſhed with thoſe happy pleaſures which are at Gods right hand for euermore. Which if wee would truely ſeeke, wee ſhould ſurely find, and attaine vnto them with farre leſſe labour, than we ſpend in compaſſing worldly vanities; and hauing obtained them, wee ſhall ſecurely poſſeſſe them without trouble, care or feare; and neuer haue cauſe to bewaile their loſſe, becauſe they are eternall, and ſhall neuer be taken from vs.

Chap. XXVI.

That though with all our endeauours we ſeeke for worldly things, wee are not ſure to obtaine them.

§.Sect.1. That worldlings often faile in their deſires, and loſe all their labour.

HAuing ſhewed the manifold miſeries which accompany worldly things: it followeth that according to my generall order propounded, I come to the next maine argument, which may diſſwade any from the immoderate loue of the world and worldly vanities; which is their great vncertaintie in reſpect of thoſe who deſire, and ſet their hearts vpon them. For though it were imagined, that the things of the world which then hunt after with ſuch hungrie appetites, were in themſelues truely good, and of great worth and excellencie; profitable to thoſe that haue them, ſo long as they keepe them in their poſſeſſion; and exempted from all the former miſeries; yet were there great reaſon why wee ſhould contemne and deſpiſe them, in compariſon of Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly ioyes; and why wee ſhould giue theſe the preeminence farre aboue them in our iudgements, and in our affection and practice with much more feruencie and earneſtneſſe loue and ſeeke them; ſeeing theſe are certaine and permanent, and the other moſt vncertaine and fickle, and that both in reſpect of getting and keeping them. For though wee ſhould vſe all indeauour, and ſpend all our ſtrength in ſeeking and ſearching for theſe worldly things, wee are not ſure with all our labour to obtaine them: And though wee ſhould get them into our poſſeſſion, yet haue wee no aſſurance to retaine and keepe them. Concerning the former, we find by continuall experience that the ſweat of worldlings is not alwayes fruitfull, but after that they haue beaten their braines, wearied their bodies, and conſumed their ſtrength with working, watching, and continuall carking and caring; yet are they oftentimes at the end of their liues, as farre from the end of all their labours, as when they firſt began. We ſee many daily like greedy kites, ſnatching and ſtriking continually at the prey, and yet miſſe of it after all their earneſt indeauours, howſoeuer many times they pierce themſelues vpon the pikes of tentations and ſinne, which Satan like a cunning fowler hath hidden vnder theſe worldly baites for their deſtruction. And howſoeuer theſe worldly prodigals being poore, beggerly, and emptie of heauenly riches and ſpirituall grace, doe deſire to fill their bellies, and appeaſe their raging hunger, by feeding vpon the draffe and maſt of worldly vanities, yet no man giuing them, they loſe their longing.

Wiſd.9.14.

Luk.15.16.

Neither is this any great wonder: for all in the world is nothing neere ſufficient to affoord plentie of theſe things ſo much deſired, to all that ſeeke them; and therefore the ſame thing hauing many competitors, it muſt of neceſſity fall out as it doth in hunting, that one ſtarteth the game, and another catcheth it; and as the prouerbe is, a man cannot thriue for throng of his neighbours. Yea in truth, themſelues doe croſſe themſelues, their deſires being contrarie one to another, as affecting things which will not ſtand together; for at once they would take their pleaſures, and heape vp riches, and be glorious in the world for their bountie and liberality, and ſo griping more than they can hold, oftentimes they retaine but little, and ſometime loſe all. And as when diuers contrarie winds meete, they cauſe a whirlewind, whereby all is ſcattered and diſperſed: ſo they entertaining deſires, the one croſſing and conflicting with another, they ſcatter thoſe things which they deſire to gather. Thus the voluptuous man would inioy his pleaſures, and his riches too; but as the Wiſe man ſaith, hee that loueth paſtime ſhall be a poore man, and he that loueth wine and oyle, ſhall not bee rich: and loſing his wealth hee commonly alſo loſeth his delights, hauing nothing left to maintaine his pleaſures. But the chiefe reaſon of all is, becauſe they making idols of their owne wit, prouidence, induſtrie, and labour; truſting in them more than in God, and ſacrificing vnto them the chiefe praiſe of all their welfare; the Lord iealous of his owne glory, croſſeth them in their courſes, and bringeth all their counſels and indeauours to nought. And this reaſon the Prophet Haggai yeeldeth why the Iſraelits laboured in vaine, and failed of all their hopes, becauſe the Lord would not ſuffer them to proſper in their enterpriſes. Yee haue ſowne much (ſaith he) and bring in little; yee looke after many things, and yet attaine vnto few; for that which yee did bring home, I did blow vpon it, &c. The which God doth ſometime in iuſtice, not ſuffring wicked men who haue forſaken him to enjoy either the things of this life, or the life to come: And ſometimes in mercy he cauſeth theſe huskes and draffe of worldly vanities, to be withheld from his prodigall children, that very penurie and hunger may enforce them to returne to their heauenly father, and wanting this ſwines meate of earthly traſh, they may deſire and long after that ſufficient food wherewith hee feedeth his owne family, euen his ſpirituall graces, and eternall ioyes.

Pro.21.17.

Pro.11.28.

Hag.1.6.9.

Luk.15.17.18.

§. Sect. 2
That the world and the prince thereof abuſe their fauourites with promiſes.

It is true indeed that the world like a bad paimaſter promiſeth moſt, when it performeth leaſt; and the prince of the world making a muſter of many worldly vanities, ſaith vnto men as he ſaid to our Sauiour, all theſe will I giue thee, if thou wilt fall downe and worſhip mee: but when the worke being finiſhed, the wages is expected; at the day of paiment, either they haue a come againe, or a flat deniall; either they are beaten and puniſhed as not hauing well performed their worke; or when there is no ſuch exceptions to bee taken, they muſt bee content to take their wages with great abatements, or receiue for currant ſiluer, counterfait ſlippes and copper money. For ſometimes the world and the prince thereof vſe their ſeruants as they vſe the ſilly Indians, cruelly whipping them, when with great ſuperſtition they haue performed vnto them their blind deuotions; or as the Egyptians vſed the Iſraelites, vnmercifully beating them at night, when they had tired themſelues with their dayes labour. And though when they ſet them a worke they promiſe them good things, yet when it is finiſhed they pay them with euill. For example, they promiſe long life, and continuall health, when as oftentimes there follow grieuous diſeaſes, and immature death; they promiſe reſt, and behold diſquietneſſe; they promiſe them honours, and pay them with diſgraces; they promiſe riches and abundance, and reward them with penurie and want; they vndertake that they ſhall leade their life in all joyes and pleaſing delights, when as they find nothing but griefe, trouble, and vexation of ſpirit. In a word, when they hire them into their ſeruice, they promiſe that if they will bee at their command, there ſhall no wages part them, that they ſhall leade their life in a golden age, and haue in all things contentment, and their deſires fully ſatisfied; when as notwithſtanding all theſe faire promiſes they ſpend all their dayes in ſorrow and diſcontent. Sometimes they delude & abuſe them, giuing ſhadowes in ſtead of ſubſtances; and (as it is ſaid of ſome witches) they giue them ſiluer in ſhew, but leaues in deed. Or as cunning ioglers, hauing offered them ſomething which they thinke worth the hauing, when deliuerie is to be made, they nimbly conuey it away, and chop into their laps ſome baſe trifle. Dealing herein with their ſeruants; as Laban with Iacob, who hauing vndertaken ſeauen yeeres painfull ſeruice for his beloued Rachel, receiued loathed Leah, for the reward of his labour; for after all that ſlauiſh ſeruice which they performe for them, euen to the hazarding of body and ſoule to eternall deſtruction, they haue for their wages either contemptible trifles, or burthenſome gifts. In which reſpects as Satan and the world are to bee accounted deceitfull paimaſters; ſo their wages are iuſtly called falſe and deceitfull vanities, which make ſome ſhew of good when they are offered, but

O munde immunde, ta ta promittis pauca reddis, imo ſit falla es, & decipi ſim, vt quam tu diuitijs ex collis, in ſin mundus dimit &c. Idiota in Orthodox de contem.
confic. cor & anima.
cap.1.

but are nothing worth when they are receiued. So the Pſalmiſt ſaith: I haue hated them which giue themſelues to deceitfull vanities, for I truſt in the Lord.

31.6.

Sect.3. though be often ceiued, yet more Satan
the world, God
ſelfe.

And yet though Satan and the world doe commonly abuſe men with theſe falſe rewards, and draw them on with deceitfull hopes to doe them ſeruice; and though they haue often found their fraud by their owne experience, and haue euen daily been deluded by their faire promiſes, and diſappointed of their expected rewards; yet are they more ready to beleeue them ſtill vpon their often falſified word, than the Lord himſelfe who neuer failed of his promiſes, and is almightie to performe, though he hath committed his couenant and promiſes to writing, confirmed them by his ſeales, and further ratified them by his neuer deceiuing oath; and are more ready to doe ſeruice to theſe deceitfull maſters, vpon a vaine hope of theſe vncertaine rewards, than vnto the King of Heauen and earth, who offereth to aſſure them of the eternall ioyes of Heauen, though hee bee as farre from deceiuing, as from being deceiued. Yea in truth ſo doe wee naturally dote vpon theſe earthly vanities, becauſe they are ſubiect to our ſenſes, and put vs in ſome hope of preſent poſſeſſion, that wee need not Satans ſorceries, nor the worlds witchcrafts to deceiue vs, ſeeing we are ready without their helpe to abuſe our ſelues with vaine hopes, and to bee ſtill in loue with the world and worldly vanities, not for that we had, or preſently haue, but for that wee expect in time to come. And thus are we content to ſpend our liues in hoping well, and feeling euill, ſtill expecting better, though wee find it daily worſe, vntill death comming, depriueth vs of our worldly hopes, together with our liues. And that which ſeemeth vnto me (if it were not ſo common) like vnto a miracle, men ſtill entertaine theſe deceiuing hopes, not onely againſt reaſon and ſenſe, but euen againſt the common experience which they haue had in others, both which haue gone before them, and now liue with them; yea which they haue had in themſelues from time to time; ſtill hoping for better, till they ceaſe to be. And though hauing paſt a great part of their life they haue found no cauſe why they ſhould deſire to liue; yea haue injoyed ſo ſmall comfort and beene turmoiled with ſo many miſeries, that if it were put to their choice they would not care to liue, if they might liue no better; yet in hope of amending their eſtate, and of attaining vnto ſome new happineſſe, which they haue not yet injoyed; they are in loue with life and the world ſtill; though commonly they neuer obtaine the things hoped for; or if they do, yet they haue their new hopes ſo attended on with new miſeries, that when they come they bring little comfort. For vpon the acceſſe of new benefits which they haue long deſired, either they loſe the old, which were more in number and better in worth; or elſe are ouertaken with ſome vnthought-of euils, which diſwelcome their new-come gueſts, and turne all their ſweet into gall and bitterneſſe. And as thoſe who trauell, though they haue found the wayes which they haue already paſſed, foule and vncomfortable, and thoſe in which they preſently are, no more faire and pleaſant, yet caſting their eyes a good diſtance before them, and ſeeing the fields greene and plaine in ſhew, conceiue hope of amendment, and imagine that they ſhall end their iourney with more delight; but all in vaine: for when they come vnto it, they find the ground wet and rotten; and many ſlowes and lakes which before they approached them, they could not diſcouer: ſo wee trauailing in our pilgrimage, and hauing in our trauell experience of the miſeries which we haue found in our childhood and youth; ſeeing before vs riper and elder age ſeemingly pleaſant, in reſpect of that plentie and authoritie which doth accompanie them, together with the comforts of wife and children, and ſuch other benefits; doe preſently conceiue a deceiuing hope of ſome future happineſſe, when wee ſhall enjoy thoſe things which ſo long before wee did expect: but often we are altogether fruſtrate of our deſires, or if wee attaine vnto them, we find the faire field in ſhew to be nothing in proofe but bogs and mariſh grounds; and that the life which wee ſo much liked, is ſo full of cares and feares, troubles and diſcontents, infirmities and aches, ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, that wee are ready vpon triall to couclude, that wee haue but exchanged the frying-pan for the fire, and that as in a quagmire, whileſt wee haue gotten one foot out of the dirt, the other is faſter and deeper in. Now what reaſon there is why men ſhould after this manifold experienoe both in themſelues and others ſtill deceiue themſelues with vaine hopes, I can render no other, but that they for their owne parts are willing to bee thus deceiued, aud dare not expect that which in truth they are to find, leſt their life ſhould be altogether vncomfortable and miſerable before the time, when as they haue not ſo much as hope to aſſiſt them, and make their burthens tolerable. And therefore rather than they will haue no hope to beare them company in their miſeries, they are ready to admit of ſuch as are deceiueable and ill grounded; that theſe falſe hopes may bring vnto them ſome true comforts, and ſmall refreſhings though they continue onely for the preſent. And God for his part is contented to let them continue in this blindneſſe or wilfull winking; and to haue theſe falſe and deceiuing hopes alwayes attending on them; that wicked men abuſing themſelues with their owne ſophiſtrie, may go on in their courſes to their perdition; and whileſt they hope to attaine vnto theſe worldly things which they ſo dotingly loue, neuer labour to attaine vnto better hopes, nor to aſſure themſelues of euerlaſting happineſſe. And partly that they might not hurt humane ſocietie, nor in deſpaire lay violent hands vpon themſelues, when as they ſhould be forſaken of all hope to receiue contentment, either in things appertaining to this life or the life to come. Yea and whereas Gods deareſt ſeruants being partly fleſh and partly ſpirit, as they haue the ſpirituall part cheered and comforted in the time of their pilgrimage, with the aſſured hopes of future happineſſe, ſo the fleſhly part admitteth of no refreſhing or contentment, but that which is receiued from things preſent; therefore God thought it fit to ſuffer them alſo to entertaine ſome worldly hopes, leſt the fleſh being vtterly fruſtrate of its chiefe deſires, might with exceſſiue murmuring, repining and diſcontent, bee too heauie a clog to the ſpirituall man, and too much diſcomfort him in his way to heauen, being to trauell as in a deſolate wilderneſſe, and hauing no hope of conuenient lodging, and comfortable entertainment as hee is going on his iourney. Whereas hauing for the preſent but an ill welcome to the world, and many an hungrie meale and hard lodging, yet ſtill being in hope of better, it leſſe ſtruggleth & reſiſteth, but ſuffereth him to goe on, if not with more patience and agreement, yet with leſſe impatiencie and oppoſition.

§. Sect. 4.

That worldlings do often by their too earneſt labouring loſe the fruit of their labours.

And thus you ſee that though we ſhould ſet our minds vpon theſe worldly things, and purſue them with all our endeauours and deſires, yet wee are not ſure to attaine vnto them. But I may adde further, that thoſe who earneſtly labour after theſe vanities, do not onely many times faile of their hopes, but doe therefore faile moſt commonly becauſe of their too great earneſtnes, their too much deſire hindering their obtaining the thing deſired, and their ouermuch haſte in running after the things they dote vpon, making them to haue but the worſe ſpeed, whileſt either they fall for want of taking heed, or runne paſt the goale at vnawares, whileſt with vnprouident eagerneſſe they thinke to preuent all others. Wherein wee may ſee the Wiſe mans obſeruation verified, I returned (ſaith he) and I ſaw vnder the Sunne, that the race is not to the ſwift, nor the battaile to the ſtrong, &c. For thoſe who graſpe moſt greedily theſe wateriſh vanities, doe hold leaſt of them in their hands; and they who ſerue the world with all paines, and laborious induſtrie, are oftentimes by this vnthankfull maſter puniſhed for their ouermuch diligence, and loſe their reward, becauſe they haue beene too earneſt in their buſines, and ouer laboured themſelues in doing their worke, hauing now onely their labour for their paines, and in ſtead of their wiſhed wages, nothing elſe but griefe and miſerie. Others there are whom the world ſeemeth to vſe with more fauour in the beginning, not onely giuing them intertainment with a ſmiling countenance, but alſo putting earneſt into their hands, and after ſome ſeruice done vnto it, paying them liberally (as it were) their firſt quarters wages: but after they (being incouraged with this liberall pay) doe with more diligence performe their buſines, in hope of greater reward, for their greater labour, it quite fruſtrateth them of their hopes, and not onely denieth to giue them more, but alſo taketh from them that they haue. For how many are there, who by their moderate labours hauing gotten many things, doe in more eager ſeeking after more, loſe that which they already haue? How many doe wee ſee daily before our eyes, who loſe their certainties, whileſt they labour for vncertainties, and not thinking that they haue enough, when they haue too much, doe in ouer-reaching catch a ſpreine, & whileſt they greedily ſeeke after ſuperfluities, doe loſe not their ſufficiencie alone, but euen neceſſaries? And this commeth to paſſe, not onely becauſe the world is vnfaithfull and vnthankfull to thoſe that ſerue it, but alſo becauſe it is impotent and inſufficient: for howſoeuer it is ready (like Satan the prince thereof) to vndertake great matters, and to make large promiſes, that it may moue men to leaue the Lord, and leane vnto it, yet the truth is, that though it were willing, yet it is altogether vnable to performe; for the earth is the Lords, and all that therein is, and hee giueth to the ſonnes of men, as it ſeemeth beſt to his infinite wiſdome. So that though the world brag neuer ſo much of its poſſeſſions, and great abilities; and proudly arrogating vnto it ſelfe Gods royall priuiledges, doth what it can to rob him of his right, yet the truth is, that it hath not the worth of a penie at abſolute command, becauſe euen the leaſt matters are gouerned and diſpoſed by diuine prouidence; neither is it the painefull indeauors of greedy worldlings, that can compaſſe the things which they ſo much deſire; ſeeing they wholly proceed from the bleſſing of God; for as the Pſalmiſt hath taught vs, Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vaine that build it; and except the Lord keepeth the Citie, the keeper watcheth in vaine. And therefore the world oftentimes (like a needy and bare maſter, who notwith-

Voluntas nimia effectum necat,

Vehementius tentata ſegnius ſuccedunt. Eccleſ. 9.11.

Certa amitti mus, dum in certa petim

Pſal. 24.1.

Pſalm. 127.

withſtanding his pouertie, ſtandeth much vpon his credit and reputation) dodgeth and paltreth with his ſeruants, when in truth it hath nothing to pay, and deceitfully picketh quarrels with them, after long ſeruice ſending them away emptie handed, becauſe by reaſon of its pouertie, it is not able to giue them their wages. Where, by the way, wee may note the miſerable ſeruitude of a wretched worldling; for God will not reward him becauſe hee hath renounced his ſeruice, and the world cannot, hauing nothing to diſpoſe of; onely it coſoneth him with baſe ſhifts, and with alluring promiſes inticeth him to ſpend his ſtrength in vaine, hauing after all his painefull ſeruice nothing to beſtow vpon him.

Sect.5.
he vncery of ob-g world-

But the vncertainety of obtaining of worldly things will better appeare, if wee briefly conſider ſome ſpeciall inſtances; for how many ambitious men haue we read of, and in our owne experience obſerued, who haue moſt hungerly hunted after honours and preferments; and for reward of all their labours, haue receiued nothing but contempt and diſgrace? How many haue earneſtly ſtriuen to enter the gate of honour, whereof ſome haue beene troden vnder foot in the preſſe, others thruſt backe by ſome more ſtrong than themſelues, others haue ſtucke faſt in the gate by reaſon of the crowd, & few haue entred, beſides ſuch as haue climbed ouer other mens ſhoulders, making themſelues high by the downefals of other men, and erecting Trophees to their owne prayſe, vpon the ruines of other mens fame? Will you haue examples? The old world would needs build a tower reaching to heauen, that they might get them a name; but it was rightly called Babel, bringing in the end nothing but confuſion to them, and their proud building. Abſolon whileſt he deſired to bee exalted into the throne, was hanged in a tree; Adoniah aſpired to the crowne, but becauſe God had not appointed it to bee ſet on his head, he loſt both it and his life too: yea our firſt parents themſelues whileſt they deſired a ſtate aboue the condition of men, and equall with God himſelfe, they loſt their preſent excellency and made themſelues vaſſals and ſlaues to the wicked ſpirits. Others make ſome little progreſſe in their wiſhed way to honour and preferment, but yet neuer come to the goale, nor abtaine the garland, being either croſſed in their courſe, or fainting for wearines, or tripped vp by thoſe that come next after them, who as ſuddenly fall, as riſe, and no ſooner make ſome glorious ſhew, but preſently they are againe obſcured; like vnto falling ſtarres, which in the ſame inſtant appeare and vaniſh. And that either becauſe they ambitiouſly haſten, and vnſeaſonablie aſpire to theſe honours before their time, deſiring to reape the fruit of glory and preferment, before they haue ſowne the ſeeds of vertue and true deſert; whereby they expoſe themſelues to the danger of many oppoſitions, euery one being ready to hate their pride and to enuie their preferment, and to vſe all meanes to ſtop their courſe in this ouer great haſt: in which they fitly reſemble haſtie fruits, which blooming before the ordinarie time, doe ſeldome come to maturitie and ripeneſſe, becauſe either they are nipped with the froſts, or blowne off with the tempeſts. Or elſe becauſe they aſpire to greater preferments than is befitting their gifts, whereby they ſuddenly burſt, becauſe they ſwell themſelues bigger than their skins will hold; and wanting true worth and good parts to ſupport their greatneſſe, they ſuddenly fall and come to ruine: like vnto thoſe who will climbe higher than the bowes will hold them; or vnto ſuch as being weake and feeble, doe take vpon them heauie burthens. Others deſire honour and glory in the world, but yet neuer attaine vnto it whileſt they liue, becauſe preſence is an enemie to fame; and therefore many whom the world ſcarce tooke notice of whileſt it had them, are magnified and extolled when it hath loſt them. In which reſpect honour is fitly called the ſhadow of vertue; for as the ſhadow ſometime goeth before a man, ſometime ſide by ſide, ſometime followeth after him, and ſometime doth not appeare at all, as when the ſunne is ſet, or obſcured with the clouds: ſo ſometime a man is honourable and not vertuous, his glory and fame running before true deſert; ſometime it accompanieth vertue, and euen whileſt a man liueth he hath deſerued prayſe; ſometime he neuer heareth in the whole courſe of his life, that he hath done any thing worthy fame, and yet after his death hee hath the prayſe of all; and ſometime the beſt deſerts doe neuer in this world come to light, but either being done in obſcurity, or obſcured through others enuie, or the meanneſſe of the agent; they for euer lie hid, till at the day of iudgement the God of light doth open and diſcouer them. Now (as one ſaith) what is fame after death, but a good gale of wind after ſhipwracke? Or what good doth it a man to haue ſpent his whole time in painefull labour, & in well deſeruing; when the vnthankfull world in his life hath paid him with enuy & detraction, though it magnifieth him after his death, ſeeing hee hath not the ſenſe, much leſſe the comfort of his commendations.

Præſentia inimica famæ.

Fama poſt mortem aura poſt naufragium.

Sect.6.
That too earneſt ſeeking honors maketh men to loſe them.

But howſoeuer the world conferreth honour vpon few, and that moſt commonly when it is too late, yet it promiſeth it ſeaſonablie vnto all; and maketh them beleeue, that if they will but ſet their hearts vpon it, and ambitiouſly affect it, they ſhall ſurely attaine vnto it: whereas in truth they who moſt ſwell with pride, and aſpire vnto honours with all their indeauours, doe moſt commonly miſſe of it, and ſeeking for glory find diſgrace; the world vſing their ambition as the meanes of their deiection and abaſement, which it promiſed ſhould be the meanes of their aduancement. | Wherein as the world ſheweth its trecherie and deceit towards thoſe that faune vpon it; ſo alſo impotency and inſufficiencie, in that it is vtterly vnable to aduance men to that glory and dignity which it promiſeth. For howſoeuer poſſiblie the world would bee willing and forward enough to giue prioritie to his forward children, and to aduance thoſe into the ſeate of honour, which make moſt ſuit, and take the greateſt paines to riſe; yet it cannot helpe and raiſe them as they would, becauſe God croſſeth them in their courſes, and will not ſuffer them to aſpire vnto their proud hopes, but becauſe they will riſe of themſelues without his helpe, and attaine vnto the height of honour by their owne meanes, therefore he meeteth them in the mid way, caſting them downe againe, when they thinke themſelues neereſt to aduancement, and glorifying his owne power and iuſtice, in their ruine and vtter diſgrace. And this is that which is often threatned againſt the proud ambitious in the Scriptures. So the Prophet Eſay ſaith: The high looke of man ſhall be humbled, and the loftineſſe of men ſhall bee abaſed, and the Lord onely ſhall bee exalted in that day. For the day of the Lord of hoſts is vpon all the haughtie, and vpon all that is exalted, and it ſhall be made low. And our Saujour Chriſt threatneth, that whoſoeuer will exalt himſelfe, ſhall bee brought low, and whoſoeuer will humble himſelfe ſhall be exalted. And the Apoſtle telleth vs, that God reſiſteth the proud, and giueth grace to the humble. So the Virgin Mary ſpeaking out of her owne experience, ſaith, that God hath put downe the mightie from their ſeats, and hath exalted them of low degree. Whereof we haue manifold examples in the booke of God, as of Corah and his companions; [a]Athaliah, Haman, Herode, Nebuchadnezer and many others. So that greedy ambition and hungrie hunting after honour, is not the meanes of attaining to it, but rather the high way to diſgrace and ſhame: for as the Wiſe man ſaith, the pride of a man ſhal bring him low, but the humble in ſpirit ſhall enioy glory.

Eſa.2.11.12.

Mat.23.12.
1.Pet.5.5.

Luk.1.52.

Pro.29.23.

§. Sect. 7.
The right way to ſeeke and find true honour.

If therefore we would ſeeke true honour and be ſure to find it, let vs not (no leſſe fooliſhly than ambitiouſly) begge it of the world, who hath it not to giue, but deſire to haue it of the Lord, who alone hath it at his diſpoſing. Neither let vs ſeeke it of our ſelues, and by our owne ambitious courſes; for the Wiſe man teacheth vs, that to ſearch our owne glory, is not glory: and euen our Sauiour (who might challenge this priuiledge better than any man,) affirmeth, that if he honoured himſelfe, his honour was nothing worth. And that it was his father that that honoured him: But let vs ſeeke it of God to whom all honour belongeth, and from whom alſo it proceedeth. For hee it is, as Hannah ſpeaketh, that bringeth low and exalteth; he raiſeth vp the poore out of the duſt, and lifteth vp the begger from the dunghill, to ſet them among princes, and to make them inherit the ſeate of glory, his is greatneſſe and power, glory, victorie, and prayſe; his is the kingdome, and riches, and honour come from him, as Dauid acknowledgeth.. So elſewhere he affirmeth, that preferment, commeth neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, nor from the South; but God is the Iudge, who maketh low, and maketh high. Yea euen Cyrus though an heathen confeſſeth, that the Lord God of heauen had giuen him all the kingdomes of the earth. And contrariwiſe Balaac affirmeth, that hee was ſurely purpoſed to haue promoted Balaam vnto honour, but that he could not, becauſe the Lord had put him backe, and kept him from it. And therefore ſeeing it is the Lord alone which both helpeth and hindreth, exalteth and abaſeth; of him alone let vs ſeeke it, from him let vs expect it, and not from the world or worldly men, who though they would, yet cannot beſtow it. And if wee would ſeeke it from God with hope of obtaining, let vs returne all glory from our ſelues vnto him, ſeeing thoſe who honour him hee will honour. Let vs if we would haue honour from men, be truly honorable in our ſelues, being fully repleniſhed with the ſubſtance of vertue, pietie and good deſerts, and ſo honor like a ſhadow, euen though we be vnwilling, will attend vpon vs. And howſoeuer we be acquainted with our own good parts, and be full fraught with the rich treaſures of vertue and goodneſſe, let vs not exalt our ſelues, nor wax proud of our gifts, remembring that whatſoeuer wee haue, it is not our owne, but receiued from God, and therefore the richer we are, the greater are our debts, the greater alſo our reckoning and account, but let vs humble our ſelues vnder the mightie hand of God, that he may exalt vs in due time: for the [a] Lord will make the meeke glorious; and if [b] wee caſt downe our ſelues before him, he will lift vs vp. An example whereof wee haue in our Sauiour Chriſt, who becauſe he [c] humbled himſelfe, therefore God did highly exalt him, and gaue him a name aboue euery name, that at the name of Ieſus euery knee ſhould bow, &c. So that if we would haue honour to follow, we muſt

Pro.25.27.

Iohn 8.54.

1.Sam.2.

1.Chron.29.
11.12.

Pſal.75.6.

Ezra.1.2.

Numb.24.11.

1.Sam.2.30.

Gloria vm virtutis eſt, eti am inuitos co-mitatur. Sene
epiſt.79.

1.Pet.5.6.

a Pſal.149.4.

b Iames 4.

c Philip.2.8.

muſt let d Humilitie goe before; if wee would be glorious in the ſight of others, we muſt with e David bee vile in our owne eſteeme, and low in our owne eyes; and if we would be highly aduanced in the Kingdome of Heauen, wee muſt become humble like f little children, as our Sauiour hath taught vs. Yea, in truth this is the way of becomming Honourable, not only in the ſight of God, but alſo in the ſight of men; for as they are ſloweſt in prayſing thoſe, who moſt affect it, and are ready to detract from thoſe who are high in their owne conceit: ſo they magnifie them moſt, who hauing greateſt vertues, haue alſo the greateſt humilitie; and they hold them in greateſt admiration, and moſt willingly attribute vnto them the frankeſt prayſes, who hauing well deſerued, content themſelues with the approbation of God, and teſtimonie of their owne conſciences, and doe not ambitiouſly affect Glory and Commendations. As for example, it is not ambitious Cæſar, proud Pompey nor Alexander, greater in his own conceit, than in his conqueſts, that the World now magnifieth, becauſe it plainly perceiueth that they aimed at this marke in all their actions, and made glorie the mayne end of all their enterprizes; but it is the contemned Prophets, poore Fiſhermen, and deſpiſed Carpenters Sonne (as they diſdainfully termed the moſt glorious and eternall Sonne of God) whom it now prayſeth and admireth; as plainly diſcerning that in all their good and vertuous actions, they ſought not their owne glory, but the glorie of God, and the eternall good of Mankind. By all which it appeareth that the way of attaining true honour, is not greedily to deſire it, but worthily to deſerue it, neither doth it alwayes happen vnto them who moſt deſiring it, doe alſo beſt deſerue it; but rather vnto them who beſt deſeruing it, doe moſt auoid it. In which reſpect Honour may fitly be compared to the Meteor which is called ignis fatuus, or the going fire, which flieth the follower, and followeth the flier; or vnto a mans ſhadow, which can no otherwiſe be catched than by falling downe vpon it.

Sect. 8.

And thus haue I ſhewed the great vncertaintie of obtaining worldly Honours, although they be ſought with all earneſtneſſe. The like alſo may be ſaid of riches; for howſoeuer many worldly men doe wholly ſet their hearts vpon them, and purſue them with all their deſires and endeauours, riſing early, and going late to bed, toiling and moiling, deceiuing and circumuenting, wronging and oppreſſing one another, yea, defrauding and pinching their backes and bellies, that they may compaſſe great eſtates, and gather riches in abundance; yet how few of theſe many doe attaine vnto them? Yea, how many are there who making this Mammon of iniquitie the Idoll wherein they chiefly truſt, doe make vnto it many a weary pilgrimage, vndertaking painfull journeyes, ſuſtaining much penury and miſerie, and hazarding themſelues to innumerable dangers both by Sea and Land, and all to haue their Idoll fauourable and propitious; and yet are turned away with a frowning countenance, and loſe all their labour, ending their dayes in want and pouerty? And whereas almoſt all men ſpend their whole time and trauell in finding out theſe rich Mines, and ſaile to theſe Golden Indies, for the multiplying of their Treaſures, yet how few find that they ſeeke? How many in their Voyage running themſelues on the rocks of aduerſe accidents, doe make ſhipwracke of their whole eſtates? And how many hauing gotten that they ſought, are robbed of all when they are returning, and thinke of nothing but of ſetling their eſtates, and of ſpending the reſt of their time in peace and quietneſſe? So that it is not all a mans care and labour that can aſſure him of theſe vncertaine riches, as the Apoſtle calleth them; ſeeing many want them who haue ſacrificed all their ſtrength and endeuours vnto them; and ſome obtaine them with eaſe and moderate labour, all their great expences which ſeeme ſo much loſſe turning to their aduantage, and like ſeed, which though in outward ſhew it ſeemeth to be caſt away, to rot and periſh, yet it returneth a fruitfull Harueſt of plentie and increaſe. And this the Wiſe man obſerued: There is (ſaith he) that ſcattereth and is more increaſed, but hee that ſpareth more than is right ſhall ſurely come to pouertie. The liberall perſon ſhall haue plentie, and hee that watereth ſhall haue raine. Yea, the greater care and paine that a man taketh, and the more eagerly hee haſteth to be rich, the further oftentimes he is from his deſire, and the neerer to want and miſerie. So the Wiſe man alſo ſaith, that with a wicked eye a man haſteth vnto riches, and knoweth not that pouerty ſhall come vpon him. And who obſerueth not that many hauing gotten into their poſſeſſion ſufficient ſtore, if they could bee content with that which is enough, and yet not being ſatisfied, doe whileſt they labour after more, loſe that they haue, and like the Dogge in the fable in greedy ſnatching after a ſhadow, forgoe the ſubſtance? In which reſpect the World oftentimes abuſeth and cooſeneth men, like thoſe who keep great lotteries; for whileſt it incourageth them by propounding hope of great and exceſſiue gaine, to hazard thoſe ſmall matters which already they poſſeſſe, it deceiueth them of all, there being an hundred blankes for one good prize, and therefore an hundred to one that hee who ventreth, faileth of his deſire, and that if he purſue his great, but yet fooliſh

1.Tim.6.9.

Prou.11.24,25.

Prou.28.22.

liſh and ill grounded hopes, hee will in the end bring his ſomething to nothing, and in coueting that he hath not, loſe that which he alreadie hath. And yet ſo are mens eyes dazled, and their concupiſcence ſet on fire with the glorious ſhew of ſome few rich booties, that though not one of a thouſand can poſſibly haue them, yet euery one is poſſeſſed with a vaine hope, that he ſhall be the man who ſhall draw the rich Lot, and carrie away the coſtly prizes from all the reſt.

§. Sect. 9. Of the vncertainty of obtaining worldly pleaſures.

And thus alſo though men, like worldly Epicures ſet their mindes wholly vpon voluptuous pleaſures, and more heartily affect, and earneſtly ſeeke theſe carnall delights, than thoſe neuer fading pleaſures, and eternall joyes in Gods Kingdome, yet doe they often faile of their deſires, and howſoeuer like ſweet ſinging Birds, they allure and inuite them with their melodious harmonie to come vnto them, yet no ſooner doe they approach to ſeize vpon them, but preſently they hide themſelues, or flie away; leauing their admirers and ſeekers in the Thickets and Buſhes, where they oftentimes prick themſelues in their purſuite, and find nothing but Thornes and Briars which rent and ſcratch them, in ſtead of thoſe ſweet delights which inticed them vnto them. For how many are there who aboue all things deſire to ſolace themſelues with theſe worldly pleaſures, and yet are forced, whether they will or no, to ſpend the greateſt part of their life in griefe and miſerie? How many ſeeke to delight themſelues with ſports and paſtimes, games and recreations, who being croſſed in them, when as they doe not ſucceed according to their deſire, doe find torment, in ſtead of pleaſure, and change all their mirth into fretting and fuming, curſing and ſwearing, as though becauſe they can take no joy in the pleaſures of men, they would trie whether they could find it in the delights of the Deuill, and (as I may ſay) in the exerciſes of Hell? How many are there who ſeeking to pleaſe their daintie palate, with delicate drinkes, and curious cooked meates, take a ſurfet and drinke their bane greedily like a ſweet poyſon, falling into dangerous diſeaſes, which often bring with them vntimely death? How many ſeeking their chiefe delights in the pleaſures of the fleſh, do thereby waſte their ſtrength, conſume their bodies, and receiuing contagious infection, caſt themſelues into many deſperate and intolerable diſeaſes, no leſſe ſhamefull than full of torment?

§. Sect. 10. That wee may be aſſured to obtaine ſpirituall graces & heauenly ioyes, if we truly ſeeke them.

And therefore ſeeing wee may ſpend all our liues and labours in ſeeking theſe worldly things, and yet neuer find them, nor attaine vnto our earthly ends, after wee haue with our whole indeauours ſought to compaſſe them, which notwithſtanding (as before I haue ſhewed) are ſo vaine, worthleſſe, and vnprofitable, that though they might be gotten with eaſe, yet they were ſcarce worthy our labour; let vs not ſet our hearts vpon theſe vncertaine vanities, which if we ſhould obtaine, neuer come vnaccompanied with certaine miſeries: but rather affect and deſire Gods ſanctifying and ſauing Graces, and the eternall joyes of Gods Kingdome, which if we truly ſeeke, wee ſhall ſurely find, and bee at no hazard at all of loſing our labour. And this argument of not ſpending our paines in vaine, the Apoſtle vſeth to encourage the Corinthians in the conſtant profeſſion and practice of Chriſtianitie. Therefore my beloued brethren (ſaith he) be ye ſtedfaſt, vnmoueable, abundant alway in the worke of the Lord; for as much as ye know, that your labor is not in vain in the Lord. For though the World be ſo ſcanted in theſe earthly things, and ſo full of inhabitants, that if it had the diſpoſing of them all (as in truth it hath not) yet hath not ſufficient to giue content to the tenth ſuter; yet it is not ſo with the Lord, and with our ſpirituall riches of grace and ſaluation; for he hath of theſe ſuch infinite ſtore, that hee can giue vnto euery one abundance without impairing of his ſtocke, or making one more empty, by anothers fulneſſe. And beſides he hath freely bound himſelfe by his gracious promiſes, confirmed with his Oath and Seales, that if we [a] hunger after his ſpirituall Graces, he will ſurely ſatisfie vs; if we [b] ſeeke them, we ſhall vndoubtedly find them; and if feeling our wants wee doe but begge them at his hands, in the [c] Name of Ieſus Chriſt, he will without faile giue them vnto vs. Neither is there leſſe certainty of the other, to thoſe who ſeeke for that eternall happineſſe; for firſt, that there is that euerlaſting joy, and heauenly glory prepared for Gods Saints and Seruants, it may be proued by diuers arguments; for it is written in the hearts of men by the finger of God, and reuealed by the light of nature, that after this life there are joyes prepared for the good and vertuous, and puniſhments for the wicked and vicious, which euen while wee continue in the World, refreſheth the one with comfort in all their miſeries, and affrighteth the other with terrours and feares, in all their pleaſures and proſperity. Againe, the immortalitie of the ſoule being acknowledged by both Diuine and Heathen Writers, it followeth hereupon that there is alſo an euerlaſting life, wherein it immortally liueth, either in joy or miſery. Furthermore there is a naturall deſire imprinted in mans heart and minde, to enjoy his happineſſe and chiefe good, which neuer any man attained vnto in this life, and therefore moſt certainly it is reſerued for thoſe who ſeeke it in the life to come. Or elſe this naturall deſire ſhould bee in vaine, as neuer attaining vnto its end. Finally, if wee know that there is a God, then muſt wee alſo acknowledge that hee is iuſt, as being the chiefe Iudge of Heauen and Earth; and conſequently that hee adminiſtreth righteous iudgement, rewarding the godly and vertuous, and puniſhing the wicked and euill doers; but this he doth not doe in this life, ſeeing for the moſt part, here the wicked flouriſh, and the righteous are afflicted; and therefore theſe rewards and puniſhments are chiefly reſerued for the life to come. And this argument the Apoſtle vſeth: If (ſaith he) in this life onely wee haue hope in Chriſt, we are of all men moſt miſerable: from whence wee may aſſume, that it will not ſtand with Gods Iuſtice, that thoſe who faithfully ſerue him, ſhould bee more miſerable, than they who oppoſe and rebell againſt him; and therefore of neceſſitie it followeth, that after this life they who feare and ſerue the Lord haue better hopes, and more rich rewards reſerued for them. Vnto theſe reaſons wee may adde thoſe teſtimonies of Truth it ſelfe, which can neuer deceiue or faile. The Prophet Daniel ſaith, that thoſe who ſleepe in the duſt ſhall awake, ſome to euerlaſting life, and ſome to ſhame and perpetuall contempt. Our Sauiour Chriſt affirmeth alſo, that the wicked ſhall goe into euerlaſting paine, and the righteous into life eternall: and in another place hee promiſeth that hee will giue vnto his ſheepe euerlaſting life. So the Apoſtle Paul telleth vs, that after our earthly houſe of this Tabernacle is deſtroyed, wee haue a building giuen vs of God, an houſe not made with hands, but eternall in the Heauens. And that we haue heere no continuing Citie, but we ſeeke one to come. And the Apoſtle Iohn ſaith, that this is Gods promiſe which he hath promiſed vs, euen eternall life. Yea, this wee alſo confeſſe in the Articles of our Faith that God hath prepared for all that in this life obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes, life euerlaſting; and therefore they are worſe than Pagans and Infidels, who continually with their mouthes confeſſing this truth, doe not in their hearts beleeue it; and worſe than fooles and mad men, who doe not aboue all things in the World with all their endeuours ſeeke to obtaine it.

II.

And as it is certaine that there is life eternall: ſo haue wee no leſſe certaintie that wee alſo ſhall obtaine it, if we ſet our hearts vpon it, and before all things ſeeke it: for firſt God hath in many places promiſed it to all the faithfull who feare and ſerue him. So the Prophet Daniel ſaith, that many who ſleepe in the duſt ſhall awake to euerlaſting life. And our Sauiour promiſeth, that he will giue vnto all his ſheepe life eternall: and that whoſoeuer are ready for his ſake to leaue any thing in the World which they dearely loue, ſhall haue euerlaſting life. And the Apoſtle aſſureth vs, that godlineſſe ſhall haue the promiſes, not onely of this life, but alſo of the to come. All which promiſes being apprehended by a true and liuely faith, doe certainly aſſure vs that wee ſhall be inheritours of this eternall happineſſe: for he is faithfull that hath promiſed, and his promiſes in Chriſt are yea and Amen; and though Heauen and earth may paſſe away, yet not one iot or tittle of his Word ſhall fall to the ground vnperformed: for He is Truth it ſelfe and cannot lie, and immutable and vnchangeable, ſo that what hee hath decreed, ſhall ſurely come to paſſe. And therefore in the aſſurance of faith, reſting it ſelfe vpon theſe vnfallible promiſes, we may euen in this life be certainly perſwaded that wee ſhall be heires of life eternall; yea, ſo infallible is this aſſurance, that our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith, that hee who beleeueth hath already euerlaſting life; and his beloued Apoſtle affirmeth, that we know that we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe wee loue the brethren. And this aſſurance of faith the Apoſtle Paul had, vndoubtedly concluding, that a crowne of righteouſnes was laid vp for him, which the righteous Iudge would giue, not onely to him, but alſo to all them that loue his appearing. Yea, we haue not only Gods promiſes to aſſure vs of theſe eternall joyes, but alſo a reall pledge and pawne of them, euen his holy Spirit, which is the earneſt of our inheritance, and hath ſealed vnto vs the truth of the Goſpell after we haue beleeued, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. By which holy ſpirit working in our hearts ſanctifying and ſauing graces, wee haue euen in this life, life eternall begun in vs; as when thereby our minds be enlightened with the true knowledge of God, and our Sauiour Chriſt, whom it is eternall life to know, as himſelfe ſpeaketh; when it worketh in vs faith, by the aſſurance whereof we are entred into the poſſeſſion of life eternall; when being iuſtified thereby we haue peace with God, being aſſured of his loue, and our reconciliation; and by reaſon hereof haue peace of conſcience, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt: and when in loue and thankfulneſſe towards God, who hath ſo dearely loued vs, wee loue him againe, performing cheerefull and willing obedience vnto his Commandements, and taking our chiefe delight in doing thoſe things which are pleaſing vnto him; for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that the Kingdome of God is not meate and drink, but righteouſneſſe, peace, and ioy in the Holy Ghoſt. So that whoſoeuer they are that find theſe graces of God dwelling in them, they may certainly be aſſured, that the Kingdome of God, and eternall life is begun in them: whereof it is that the Apoſtle ſaith, that hee doth not liue now, but Chriſt liueth in him; and that whileſt he liued in the fleſh, he liued by the faith in the Sonne of God. And whoſoeuer haue this life eternall begunne in them, they may certainly be aſſured, that it ſhall

2.Cor.1.18,20.

Apoc.1.5.
Mal.3.6.

Iohn 3.36.
Iohn 5.24.
1.Iohn 3.14.

2.Tim.4.8.

Epheſ.1.13,14.

Iohn 17.3.

Rom.5.1,3.

Rom.14.17.

Gal.2.20.

Rom.1.30.

Justa verò vita cum volumus adest, quia eam ipsam plenè velle, justitia est, &c. August. Epist.45. ad Armentarium. Tom 2.

*Matth.*11.30. *Psal.*119.14, 32,130.

be perfited and accompliſhed vnto them, and that they hauing begun it in the life of grace, ſhall finiſh it in that euerlaſting life of glory: whereas contrariwiſe, thoſe ſhall neuer liue in that glorious happineſſe eternally, who haue not in this World made an entrance into it, by liuing this life of Faith and Grace. Now vnto this certainty let vs adde alſo the facility of obtaining; for howſoeuer theſe heauenly treaſures are infinitely of more value than this earthly traſh, yet wee may not only attaine vnto more certaine aſſurance of them, but alſo compaſſe them with much more eaſe; for though wee haue neuer ſo great a loue and deſire of obtaining theſe worldly vanities, it helpeth vs not much to their fruition; yea (as I haue ſhewed) oftentimes too much deſire after earthly things, fruſtrateth our hope, and hindereth vs from attaining vnto the things deſired; But (as one ſaith) a iuſt life, which is the way that leadeth to life eternall, is alwayes preſent when wee will; becauſe it is juſtice it ſelfe, if wee effectually deſire it, neither is there any thing more required to the perfecting of righteouſneſſe, than to haue a perfect will to embrace it; and therefore what great labour is in that, where to will is alſo to obtaine? For whereas it may be objected that our Sauiour ſaith, that the way to life eternall is ſtrait, and the gate that entreth into it narrow; this difficultie is to be vnderſtood in reſpect of fleſh and bloud, which indeed is too groſſe for this narrow paſſage; but if wee lay aſide the old man, with the groſſe corruptions thereof, and become ſpirituall and holy in our minds, affections and actions, wee ſhall haue roome enough to enter. Again, this difficultie and ſtraitnes is only at the firſt ſight when we behold this way afar off, without any deſire to goe into it; whereas if we come neerer hand, with a full reſolution to enter into this narrow paſſage, wee ſhall finde it open, eaſie and large enough; euen as when being in a broad way, and looking farre before vs vpon a narrow lane, we thinke it quite cloſed vp, and are ready (if experience helped vs not more than ſight) to turne backe, as being hopeleſſe in finding any paſſage; but when we ſtill goe forward and come neere vnto the place, wee finde an eaſie entrance for foure or fiue together, which wee ſuppoſed was not large enough for one: ſo although the way to Heauen ſeemeth ſtrait to thoſe who looke vpon it with carnall eyes, yet this is not ſo much in the narrowneſſe of the paſſage it ſelfe, as in the errour of our ſight; for they who approach vnto it find an open paſſage, and being once entred, doe trauell forward with great delight. And therefore ſeeing this way is certaine, aſſuredly bringing vs to our journies end of eternall happineſſe, and eaſie alſo to thoſe who trauell in it, let vs leaue our earneſt purſuite of worldly vanities, which if they were not to be forſaken, becauſe they are contemptible, yet becauſe after great paines and care taken, wee can haue no aſſured hope of obtaining them; and wholly ſet our hearts and affections vpon theſe heauenly excellencies, purſuing them with hearty deſire, and earneſt endeauour; ſeeing they are not only in themſelues of infinite more worth and value, but alſo may be enjoyed with much more certaintie and facilitie.

Chap. XXVII.

That the World and worldly things are momentany and corruptible.

§.Sect.1.
That the world is cor-ruptible, a shall end.

HAuing ſhewed that theſe worldly things are not much to be eſteemed or deſired, yea, to be contemned and deſpiſed, in compariſon of Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly joyes, in regard that they are moſt vncertaine in obtaining, though we ſhould ſet our hearts vpon them, and purſue them with all our endeuours, and theſe moſt certaine and aſſured, to all that loue and ſeek them: Now let vs further conſider, that if by our great care and labour wee doe obtaine them, the poſſeſſion is no leſſe vncertaine than the ſuit. And that both in reſpect of the things themſelues, and alſo in reſpect of vs, who are poſſeſſed of them. For firſt, all worldly things are moſt vncertaine when they are poſſeſſed, becauſe they are momentany and mutable: momentany in regard of themſelues, as being in their owne nature corruptible, and ſubject to diſſolution; and mutable in regard of vs; as being changeable, and ſubject to alteration. In reſpect alſo of vs they are vncertaine, becauſe wee are mortall, and our liues momentany; and therefore though they ſhould not be taken from vs, yet wee cannot long continue together, becauſe wee ſhall in ſhort time be taken from them. Concerning the momentany continuance of theſe worldly things, it may euidently appeare, if wee conſider that the whole World it ſelfe generally, and ſpecially all that is contained in it, are but of ſhort continuance, and ſubject to corruption; for ſuch as are all the parts of the Word, ſuch alſo is the whole, but experience teacheth, that all the parts of the World are ſubject to corruption and diſſolution, and conſequently this whole vniuerſe cannot be incorruptible and eternall; but ſhall in the appointed time bee diſſolued and come to ruine. And this the Scriptures alſo plainly teach vs, that as the World had a beginning; ſo alſo it muſt haue an ending. To this purpoſe the Apoſtle Iohn ſaith, that the World paſſeth

1.Pet.3.1

1.Iohn 2.1

paſſeth away and the luſts thereof; but hee that fulfilleth the will of God abideth euer. And the Apoſtle Peter plainly affirmeth, that the Heauens and Earth are reſerued vnto fire againſt the day of iudgement, and of the destruction of vngodly men: and that the day of the Lord will come as a Thiefe in the night, in the which the Heauens ſhall paſſe away with a noyſe, and the Elements ſhall melt with heat, and the Earth with the works that are therein, ſhall be burnt vp. Now as we are certaine that the World is corruptible, and ſhall haue an end; ſo are we vncertaine how ſoone this end ſhall bee, but for ought wee know, it may be this yeare, as well as the next, and ſure wee are that it cannot be farre off; ſeeing we liue in the latter times, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; yea, in the latter end of the laſt houre: for the Apoſtle Iohn making the whole age of the World in reſpect of Eternitie, to be but of a few houres continuance, ſaith, that all were ſpent ſauing the laſt, in which he liued; and therefore if the whole time from Chriſts Incarnation, to his ſecond comming to judgement, were but one houre, it is not probable that we are farre from the houres end, ſeeing ſo great a part is already paſt.

Now who would fix his heart and ground his hopes vpon ſuch a rotten foundation, as cannot poſſibly long ſtand, and may for ought we know preſently fall? Who would build his houſe in ſuch a Citie as he certainly knew would within a while bee conſumed with fire, being vncertaine in what part of this ſhort time, it would come to this expected ruine? What Wiſe man will build his houſe vpon the ſinking ſands, where it is either ready to ſinke with them, or to be beaten downe at the next high floud, and not rather vpon the firme Rocke, where it ſhall remaine vnmoueable? But the Scriptures teach vs that the World is but a bog or ſandy ground, ſubject euery day to fleeting and fading, and to be carried away with a floud of fire; and why then ſhould wee labour with ſuch paines to build abiding places vpon a foundation ſo deceitfull and vnſure; and not rather bend all our ſtudies to be admitted into thoſe manſion houſes, and eternall habitations, which Chriſt hath prepared for vs in the Heauens? If a ſkilfull Carpenter, in whoſe knowledge and truth we repoſe much confidence, ſhould certainly aſſure vs, that all the principals of our houſe were ſo olde and rotten, that they would within a yeere at the furtheſt faile, and the whole building come to ruine, who would not flit out of ſuch an houſe, in which he cannot one night ſleepe ſecurely, and vſe all meanes to place himſelfe in a ſurer habitation? Who would not thinke him a foole that would ſo fondly loue this ruinous building, as that by ſtaying ſtill in it, he would be contented to indanger himſelfe, to be ouer-whelmed and buried in its ruines? But the Lord our God the skilfull Builder of this great frame of Heauen and Earth, whoſe cunning cannot be deceiued, nor truth deceiue; hath plainly told vs that this great building ſhall within ſhort time fall; and therefore who would heere ſeate his hopes? Who would not change his dwelling, eſpecially ſeeing wee are proffered the fee-ſimple of that goodly Building not made with hands, but eternall in the Heauens? yea wee are aſſured of the Worlds approaching ruine, not only by the Word of God, but euen alſo by our owne experience; for wee our ſelues doe ſee its rottenneſſe, wee daily behold how the ſtrength thereof decayeth, and that all the creatures doe waxe more feeble, being much abated in their naturall powers and vertues, and ſhewing by their weakneſſe and ſickneſſe that they approach neere their end. The Heauens haue not that vertue in their influences as in ancient times; the heate of the Sunne is much abated, and his vitall operation in ſublunary and terreſtriall bodies greatly weakned, and though (as the Learned haue obſerued) this life-giuing fire be lower and neerer vnto vs, yet his vertue being decayed, we haue leſſe comfort and feeling of his heate. The earth alſo which is the mother and nurſe of all inferiour creatures, being come to to old age, and weary and ſpent with much bearing, hath not her ancient vertue and vigour in bringing forth her fruits for the vſe and nouriſhment of man; by reaſon whereof he is much leſſened in growth, enfeebled in ſtrength, and obnoxious to many more infirmities and diſeaſes than were his Anceſtours. All which ſhew that the World is in its old and decrepit age, and not farre from death. For as in the little World of Man, ſo alſo in this greater World and large Vniuerſe, there is a time of youth, and full ſtrength, and a time of old age, and decrepit weakneſſe; a time of life, and a time of death. And as man in his youth is luſty and ſtrong, hauing his bones full of marrow, and his ſinewes of ſtrength; his skinne full of fleſh, his whole body full of naturall heate and moyſture, and quickned with vitall ſpirits: but when age commeth, his ſtrength is abated, his backe crooked, his ſpirits ſpent, and all parts ſo full of infirmities and weakneſſe, that they are not able to performe their naturall functions and actions, till at laſt the limbes being altogether vnable to ſupport the ſtaggering body, it ſtumbleth and falleth at the threſhold of death: ſo the World had its time of youth wherein it flouriſhed in beauty, health, and ſtrength, and was able to propagate a poſterity like it ſelfe, and to nouriſh and make it fat with all delights; but now it is come to old age, wherein all the powers thereof are ſo weakned and enfeebled, that it cannot be

2.Cor.5.1.

Quantum illi laudandi atque prædicandi, qui dignati non ſunt, etiam cum mundo florente florere; tantum increpandi & accuſandi ſuat, quos perire cum pereunte delectat, Aug. ad Armentarium, Epiſt.45.

but the death thereof neere approcheth. And therefore let vs not ſet our hearts vpon that which is ready to vaniſh; let vs not now fooliſhly dote vpon the World in its withered old age, wherein it hath loſt all its beautie, and is ſo full of wrinkles, infirmities, diſeaſes, and manifold miſeries, that ſetting our dotage aſide, it hath not ſo much as a ſhew of comelineſſe to allure vs, nor any baite of beauty to entice vs. For looke how much thoſe great Worthies of ancient times, the Patriarches and Prophets are to bee commended for contemning it, in its greateſt brauery, refuſing when it chiefly flouriſhed to flouriſh with it; ſo much are wee to be blamed and condemned, for eſteeming and louing it, when all excellency being vaniſhed, and it now being full of blemiſhes and miſeries, hath nothing in it, worthy ſo much as carnall loue.

§. *Sect.*3. That all worldly things are momentany & corruptible.

And as the World is momentany and corruptible; ſo much more are al the things therin contained, eſpecially if we conſider them in our vſe and fruition; for whereas all things in the World are paſt, preſent, or to come; that which is paſt is periſhed, and as though it were not; that which is to come, is vncertaine, hauing not yet its being; and therefore wee can truly be ſaid onely to enjoy the preſent, which is momentany and ready to vaniſh. In reſpect of which momentany continuance of worldly things, they may fitly be compared to fiery Meteors, which make for the inſtant a glorious ſhew, but are inflamed and extinguiſhed in the ſame moment; to the vncertaine windes, which ſuddenly blow, and ſuddenly ceaſe; to deceitfull dreames, which bring a ſeeming ſhort pleaſure, but vaniſh when one awaketh; and to the Houſes, Caſtles, and Characters which Children in their play do make in the ſands, which either are ouerthrowne and defaced with euery blaſt of winde, or waſhed away with the next tide. The authour of the booke of wiſedome likeneth the riches, pompe and glory of the World, to the paſſing away of a ſhadow, or poſt, and to the paſſage of a ſhip which glideth ouer the waues, and being gone by, leaueth no trace or path behinde it in the flouds, or to a Bird that flieth in the aire, and no man ſeeth any token of her paſſage, or finally to an arrow ſhot at a marke, and parting the aire, which immediately commeth together againe, ſo that no man can know where it went thorow. Another demanding what humane things are; anſwereth, that they are as duſt and aſhes before the face of the winde, a ſmoke and a ſhadow, flowers and falling leaues, a dreame, and tale told, a winde and ſoft aire ſuddenly vaniſhing, flying wings, and running water, or ſome other thing yet more momentany and vncertaine. And in truth who ſeeth not that theſe worldly things doe flow and reflow like the Sea, there following preſently after a full tide of proſperitie, a low ebbe of aduerſitie; after a bright day of joy, a darke night of ſorrow; after faire weather, and a pleaſing calme of comfort, a bluſtering ſtorme, and turbulent tempeſt of croſſes and afflictions; after a bright full of mirth and delight, the darke waine of ſorrow and diſcontentment; in regard whereof there is no more conſtancie to be found in the World or worldly things, than in the Moone, the Sea, or Aprill weather. And therefore hee is no leſſe fooliſh who imagineth that he can hold ſtedfaſtly this ſlippery Eele, than hee who would incloſe the Winde, or keepe the Sea in continuall calmeneſſe. For when this ſwelling of proſperitie is fulleſt, it is neereſt to breaking; and when we thinke our worldly eſtate ſecureſt, our downfall ſuddenly approcheth. And yet there were ſome indifferencie if theſe worldly things were as ſoone gotten as loſt, and that our eſtate were as quickly repaired as it is ruined; but contrariwiſe experience teacheth vs, that the aſcent to the obtaining our worldly deſires is by little and little, and the deſcent head-long; that we are long in gathering that which in a moment is ſcattered; and loſe that in an houre, which with great care and inceſſant labour, we haue hardly attained vnto in our whole liues.

Nazianz. de pauperum amore.

Wiſd.5.8,9,10,11,12.

Chryſoſt. in Hebræos 6. Homil.9.

It is true indeed that howſoeuer theſe worldly things bee in themſelues alike momentanie and vncertaine, yet with ſome they make a longer, and with others a ſhorter ſtay, as it pleaſeth our great Lord and maſter to diſpoſe of them. For ſome are long in obtaining them, and in a moment are ſpoiled of them, and haue no time to enjoy the fruit of their tedious labours, theſe worldly things whoſe company they ſo long deſired, ſaluting them and bidding them far-well in the ſame day. The which the Wiſe man ſignifieth, when as hee ſaith, that the deceitfull man roſteth not that hee tooke in hunting. In which caſe worldlings haue no good by theſe things whereupon they haue ſet their hearts, hauing onely a taſt of them to increaſe their longing, and long laſting griefe, for their loſt delights. Sometime they make a longer ſtay, and giue ſome little comfort by their fruition: But though they preſently periſh not, yet are they alwayes as periſhing; and though they haue ſome ſhort reprieue, yet the ſentence of mortality, and momentany mutability being paſſed, they can giue vnto vs no aſſurance of their abode. In reſpect of which vncertainety the wiſe man willeth vs, not to boaſt our ſelues ſo much as of to morrow; becauſe wee doe not know what a day may bring forth. To which purpoſe another ſaith, that euery man who entruſteth thoſe things which hee gathereth to the earths cuſtodie, is vtterly ignorant to whom hee gathereth them, whether to the conſuming moath, or to the vndermining theefe, or ſpoyling enemy, or deuouring fire. In regard whereof howſoeuer wee may for ſome time be poſſeſſed of theſe earthly things, yet we cannot haue the fruition of them with any quietneſſe of mind, or peaceable comfort; for as one ſaith, the ſoule enioyeth nothing with liberty, vnleſſe it enioy it with ſecurity, and no man can be ſecure in the fruition of thoſe things which hee eſteemeth good; if hee may loſe them whether he will or no.

Seeing therefore theſe worldly things are momentanie and vncertaine, from hence wee gather that they are not truely good, nor of any great worth or excellencie; for that which is truely good, as it cannot bee receiued vnwillingly, ſo neither can it bee vnwillingly loſt, but remaineth with the owners to their perpetuall comfort; whereas theſe worldly vanities are but of momentany continuance, and may euery day, whether we will or no, bee taken from vs, leauing behind them a proportionable ſorrow, according to the quantity of their ſuppoſed goodneſſe; ſo that though a mans joy were neuer ſo great in their fruition, it ſhall at their laſt fare-well bee matched, if not ouermatched with bitter griefe. In reſpect whereof when this day of parting commeth, a man would willingly deſire, that his comforts and delights in thoſe things which hee formerly affected had beene leſſe, that now alſo he might haue leſſe ſorrow. Wherby it appeareth that there can bee no great happineſſe in any thing which is but of momentany continuance, and that nothing is much to bee deſired which is mortall and muſt end: becauſe when the time is once paſt, though it haue beene neuer ſo long, it will appeare to thoſe who looke backe vpon it, but as a moment; and the greater ioy it hath brought in the fruition, the greater griefe will it alſo bring, becauſe at laſt they are depriued of it. Againe, ſeeing theſe worldly vanities are momentany and vncertaine, from hence it neceſſarily followeth that the hope, confidence, and comforts of worldly men, which are built vpon this weake and rotten foundation muſt alſo bee vncertaine and deceitfull. So Bildah ſaith, that the hypocrites hope ſhall periſh, his confidence alſo ſhall be cut off, and his truſt ſhall be as the houſe of a ſpider; he ſhall leane vpon his houſe, but it ſhall not ſtand; he ſhall hold him faſt by it, yet ſhall it not endure. And the Author of the booke of Wiſdome affirmeth, that the hope of the vngodly is like the duſt that is blowen away with the wind, and like a thinne foame, that is ſcattered abroad with the ſtorme, and as the ſmoke which is diſperſed with the wind, and as the remembrance of him paſſeth, that tarieth but for a day. And in regard of momentany vncertaintie of earthly vanities, the Prophet Eſay compareth the indeauours of worldly men, in ſeeking to obtaine and poſſeſſe theſe mutable and vnconſtant things, to the weauing of the ſpiders web; for as to this idle worke there is required great induſtry and labour, and being made, it is of no continuance, becauſe euery blaſt of wind is ready to breake it, and euery beeſome to bruſh it downe: ſo theſe worldly vanities are compaſſed with great paines, and when with carefull toile we haue obtained them, euery blaſt of aduerſe caſualty, euery bruſh of outward violence is ready to blow them away, and breake them downe. And in the ſame reſpect the world by others, is fitly compared to the Moone, who in her chiefe brightneſſe hath her ſhining mingled with ſpots and is alwayes mutable: ſo the world, though it make a glittering ſhew, is ſpotted in his greateſt glory, with miſeries, and aduerſities, and this ſhining brightneſſe in the ſpace of a few dayes is turned to blacke and vncomfortable darkneſſe. And therefore how glorious ſoeuer it ſeemeth, the wiſe Chriſtian will not ſet it on his head, nor at his heart, but with the woman in the Reuelation, will tread this vnconſtant Moone vnder his feet, and contemne theſe momentany vanities, which though wee could ſtay with them, are continually in readineſſe to flie from vs. Eſpecially he who truly conſidereth this momentany vncertainty of theſe earthly trifles, will carefully take heede that he doe not with the leaſt ſin compaſſe the greateſt good, and thereby hazard his eternall ioyes, and indanger himſelfe to perpetuall puniſhment; for what folly is it for any, to buy theſe momentany and vnconſtant vanities at the high price of euerlaſting torments, and for a ſhort and falſe ioy, to hazard body and ſoule to neuer ending puniſhments? And when with theſe worldly baits he is allured vnto ſin, he will be ready to ſay with that godly Father: The eternall God hath promiſed me eternall ioyes; and if I beleeue him, I alſo of a mortall man, ſhall bee made eternall: why then O impure world, why then doeſt thou mutter in mine eares thy bewitching charmes? why doſt thou ſeeke to ſeduce me out of the right way? thou wouldeſt for loue of thee withhold mee from eternity, and yet thy ſelfe art ready to periſh. O what wouldeſt thou doe if thy ioyes were permanent? if thou wert truly ſweet, whom wouldeſt thou not deceiue; when as being bitter, thou counterfeiteſt pleaſing nouriſhment? And yet though the world were ſincerely ſweete, without the mixture of any gall of miſerie, there were little reaſon, why wee ſhould match it in our loue with our gracious God, ſeeing it were all but a drop in compariſon of this infinit

Eſay 59. 5.

Apocal. 12. 1.

Cur ea quæ ad vſum diuturna eſſe non poſſunt, ad ſupplicium diuturna depoſces? Ambr. in Luc. 4. tom. 5.

Æterna promiſit æternus. Si credidero, ex mortali fiam æternus, &c. Auguſt. Tom. 10. Serm. 29. in Luc. 18.

ocean of ſweetneſſe; if this creature ſhould endure for euer, yet how much more ſhould we loue the Creator, from whom it hath receiued all its goodneſſe, as a little ſparke from a great fire? how much more then ſhould wee now neglect it in compariſon of that infinit goodneſſe, ſeeing its ſweetes are bitterneſſe? and if in reſpect of him, wee might well contemne it though it were permanent, let vs now much more contemne it, becauſe it is tranſitorie. And ſeeing as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, hee that ſoweth to his fleſh, ſhall of his fleſh reape corruption, let vs ſow to the ſpirit, that of the ſpirit wee may reape life euerlaſting.

Galath.6.8.

§.Sect.6. That worldly honors are momentanie and vncertaine.

But let vs conſider the vanity of worldly things in the ſpeciall inſtances. And firſt, what can bee more vncertaine and momentanie than honours and preferments, which though they ſtand againſt the violence of outward accidents, yet oftentimes fall with their owne waight? For how many are there, who hauing with great paines climed vp ſtep by ſtep the ladder of honour, are in a moment caſt downe by a ſuperiour power into the loweſt degree of diſgrace and contempt? How many hauing with much ſweat and labour aſcended almoſt to the higheſt top of the ſteepe craggie rocke of honour and glorie, doe miſſe their footing, and ſo tumble downe into the loweſt bottome of a deſpiſed condition? Looke vpon the example of our firſt parents, who not content with the glorious condition of the moſt excellent creatures, but climing higher, and aſpiring to the glorie of their Creator, got a fall as low as hell it ſelfe, and made themſelues equall to the damned ſpirits, had not God in mercie raiſed them vp. Looke vpon the example of Haman, who in the middeſt of all his glorie was vtterly diſgraced, and adiudged to die a ſhamefull death. So Nebuchadnezer whileſt hee would be more than a man, and worſhipped as a god, was ſuddenly depoſed from his regall throne, and became equall with the brutiſh creatures. In reſpect of which momentany vncertaintie of worldly honour; it hath (as one obſerueth) its name of vaine glorie giuen vnto it, and is called vaine, becauſe it vaniſheth, and hath nothing firme and ſtable in it, but is onely a deception of the ſight, flying away before it fully appeareth. In which regard it may be compared vnto a flaſh of lightning, which for the inſtant filleth the whole aire with glorious brightneſſe, but preſently is turned into groſſe and more than vſuall darkneſſe; or to a bubble, which commonly is no ſooner made than broken; becauſe it is ſuddenly blowne vp (as it were) with the breath of the vulgar people, and with the ſame as ſuddenly broken. Others compare it to the duſt or chaffe carried aloft by the violence of the wind, which of it ſelfe falleth downe to the ground, when its accidentall helpe ceaſeth; to the ſmoake, which the higher it is aduanced the more eaſily it is diſperſed, and the ſooner vaniſheth; to a cloud, which by the ſame Sunne, and in the ſame day, is drawne vp, and diſſolued or conſumed; to the dew, which falleth ouernight, and the next morning vaniſheth; and to a bladder, which the more it is blowne, the more it ſwelleth, and the neerer it is to burſting. But moſt fitly is the momentany continuance of an honourable condition, by the Prophet Eſay expreſſed, when hee compareth the glorie of man to the flower of the field, which one day flouriſheth more gloriouſly than Salomon in all his royaltie, and the next withereth and fadeth away: one day it is worne in the boſome of Princes; and the day following careleſſely neglected, and caſt vpon a dunghill. Neither doth this worldly honour take as great leaſure in departing, as it doth in approaching, but (as one ſaith) it commeth haltingly and ſlowly, (as it were) on lame legs; but all at once it flieth away, and poſteth from vs with winged haſte. Nor doth greatneſſe of aduancement in this caſe giue any priuiledge, or yeeld any ſupport, yea rather the higher men are extolled and lifted vp, the greater and more vnrecouerable is their downefall; euen as he who falleth off a low ſtoole, receiueth no great hurt, and eaſily riſeth againe, and recouereth himſelfe, whereas hee who falleth from an high ſteeple, or the top of a loftie tree, is mortally bruiſed, if not diſmembred and ſhattered in pieces. And thus (as one obſerueth) Adam had the more grieuous downefall, becauſe hee fell in Paradiſe, from a moſt high and glorious condition: for to be ouerthrowne from an high place is an head-long downefall, whereas it is but a ſlip or foile to fall on plaine ground. The reaſon hereof is, becauſe the more highly men are aduanced, the greater commonly is their pride; and the more full they are of the wind of vaine-glory, the neerer they are to burſting; becauſe the Lord oppoſing againſt the proud man aboue all other ſinners, by reaſon of all others he moſt oppoſeth againſt him, doth caſt him ſuddenly downe, and bringeth him to nought, when he is moſt ſecure, and ſtandeth ſtrongeſt, and out of danger of falling in his owne conceit. So Zophar ſpeaking of the wicked man, ſaith, that though his excellencie ſhould mount vp to the Heauen, and his head reach vnto the clouds; yet ſhall hee periſh for euer like his dung; and they which haue ſeene him ſhall ſay, where is hee? hee ſhall flie away as a dreame, and they ſhall not find him, and ſhall paſſe away as a viſion of the night. And the Wiſe man affirmeth that all which are proud in heart are ab-

Gloria vana dicitur quia euanida eſt, & nihil habet ſtabile neq; firmum. Chryſoſt.in Gen.6.hom.22

Auguſt. To 10.Serm.

Gregor.Mo
lib.26.cap.

Honor mundanus claudus pedetentim cedit, ſed ſemel Ambroſ.in Pſalm.4.

Grauius Ada in Paradiſo cidit, quia ſ ceciſſe ra. De cadere tione nis tur Ambroſ.
Pſalm.43.
Tom.4.

Iob 20.6.7.8.

Prou.16.5.

abomination vnto the Lord, and though they ioyne hand in hand, yet they ſhall not be vnpuniſhed: and conſequently, that pride goeth before deſtruction, and an high mind before the fall. Yea ſo doth the Lord abhorre the proud, that hee contenteth not himſelfe to haue brought them to ruine, but ſubuerteth and deſtroyeth their houſe and family, as elſewhere he ſpeaketh. And therefore ſeeing worldly honours are momentanie & vncertaine, begetting in vs pride, & pride deſtruction, let vs not fooliſhly affect, and ſet our hearts vpon them, ſeeing men are but thus aduanced that they may catch the more grieuous downefall, the world vſing them herein like a cunning wraſtler, who lifteth them vp higheſt, to whom it meaneth to giue the moſt dangerous ouerthrow; but rather let vs eſteeme and ſeeke the true honour of vertue and godlineſſe: for (as one ſaith) the glory of the world doth not deſcend with the ſinner; but the glory of goodneſſe will aſcend with the vertuous. And if wee will bee wiſely ambitious, let vs deſpiſe theſe earthly honours, and aſpire to that excellent dignitie and aduancement, of being the ſonnes of the glorious king of heauen and earth, brethren to the ſonne of God, and heires apparant to the crowne of glory; which honour all ſhall certainely obtaine, which doe loue and ſeeke it, and being obtained, ſhall eternally enjoy it.

But as earthly honours are momentanie and tranſitorie, ſo there is no more conſtancie or perpetuitie in worldly riches; for when with great labour they are obtained, there is no certainty in their poſſeſſion, ſeeing within a ſhort time they ſhall be taken away from vs, or wee from them; either they ſhall haue their end, or we our end, they ſhall leaue vs, or wee them. And in the meane while they are ſubject to innumerable caſualties; for the moth may eate them, the ruſt may conſume them, theeues may ſteale them, fire may burne them; yea oftentimes of themſelues they melt away like butter in the ſunne; or are taken away by outward force and violence. For the world vſeth men like ſpunges; ſometime it filleth them full, and ſoone after ſqueeſeth all out againe: one day it maketh them to ſurfet of ſatiety, and within a few dayes after pineth them with want. In regard of which vnconſtancie and corruptibility of riches, they are called by the Apoſtle vncertaine riches, in which we may repoſe no truſt and confidence. And by the Wiſe man, the riches of vanity, becauſe they are continually ready to vaniſh, & to come to nothing. Neither are they in truth ſubſtance, as they are called, or true and ſubſtantiall riches; but rather ſhadowes, and dreames, which ſeeme ſomething whileſt we ſleepe in ſinne, but vaniſh away as things of no worth, when we are awakened by Gods ſpirit. To which purpoſe one ſaith: Call not theſe riches which are not ſo in truth, ſeeing they are full of pouerty, and obnoxious to innumerable caſualties. For what kind of riches are theſe, for whoſe ſake thou ſtandeſt in feare of the thiefe, yea of thine owne ſeruants, leſt they kill, robbe thee, and runne away? If they were true riches they would bring vnto thee ſecurity, and when thou once haddeſt them, thou couldeſt neuer loſe them. As long as they are in the earth, they are not true riches. And therefore when the world calleth them riches, our Sauiour Chriſt addeth, of iniquity. Call them then by what names you will ſtile them as you pleaſe, with the glorious titles of inheritances, fee ſimples, and perpetuities, yet in truth they are but vncertaine vanities, and momentanie moueables, which are ſtill flitting from vs, or wee from them. So the Wiſe man telleth vs, that riches remaine not alway, nor the crowne from generation to generation. Yea oftentimes they ſuddenly depart, and forſake vs without giuing warning, or taking leaue; in which reſpect they are not onely current, as we call our coine, haſting away as faſt as their legs will beare them, but volant alſo, as the Wiſe man maketh them, where hee giueth them the wings of an Eagle to expreſſe their haſt in flying from vs: Wilt thou (ſaith he) caſt thine eyes vpon that which is nothing? for riches taketh her to her wings as an Eagle, and flieth into Heauen. So our Sauiour Chriſt ſheweth this corruptibility of riches, where he exhorteth vs, not to lay vp treaſures for our ſelues vpon the earth, where the moth and canker doe corrupt, and where theeues digge thorow and ſteale. And the Apoſtle expreſſeth it, where hee attributeth vnto gold, the epithete of periſhing, and calleth it and ſiluer things corruptible. Neither in truth is there any kind of riches which are not ſubject to this corruptibility, or exempted from continuall danger of periſhing. For if wee are rich in treaſures, the theeues may ſteale them; if in ſhips and merchandiſe, the ſea may ſwallow them, or pirats ſpoile them; if in apparell and goodly furniture, the mothes may conſume and eate them; if in corne fields, the blaſting and mildewes may deſtroy them; if in cattell and ſheepe, they are in danger of the rot and murraine; if in gold and ſiluer, the ruſt and canker may fret them, or they may bee taken away by violence or deceit; if in buildings, the fire may conſume them; if in lands and poſſeſſions, the title may bee called into queſtion, and indangered by euery vnconſcionable lawyer, or contentious perſon. Nor can our care and diligence preuent theſe dangers, or ſecure vnto vs the things wee enjoy; yea rather (as the Wiſe man telleth vs) riches doe often periſh euen

by August. Serm. 35. tom. 10.

Prou. 27. 24.

Pro. 23. 5.

Mat. 6. 19.

1. Pet. 1. 7. 18.

Eccleſ. 5. 13.

by our trauell: and the more wee labour to hold them, the ſooner they forſake vs; like water in the hand, which is loſt with griping. And the reaſon hereof is, becauſe wee are not abſolute owners of them, but our great Lord and Maſter which hath chiefe right vnto them, doth diſpoſe of them according to his owne pleaſure, giuing, and taking away, enriching, and making poore, whom, and when he will. So that though wee haue neuer ſo great an heape of this ſhining duſt of gold and ſiluer, yet if hee but blow vpon it, it will preſently flie away, as himſelfe ſpeaketh by his prophet. In which reſpect the Wiſeman ſaith, that the treaſures of wickedneſſe profit nothing, becauſe God caſteth away the ſubſtance of the wicked. An example whereof wee haue in the whore of Babylon, who being rich in fine linnen, purple, and skarlet, gold, precious ſtones, and pearles, is ſaid to haue all her riches in one houre brought to deſolation. In regard of which vnconſtancie, and momentanie continuance of wealth and worldly treaſures, they are fitly compared to fugitiue ſeruants, who will not ſtay long in any place, but runne from maſter to maſter. Whereof it is that worldlings hauing no aſſurance of them, and yet doting in their loue, doe keepe them vnder the ſafeſt cuſtodie of bolts and barres, locke and key, and watch ouer them continually with vigilant and carking care, for feare they ſhould make an eſcape, and ſo depriue them of their ſeruice.

Hag. 1.9.

*Pro.*10.2.3.

*Apoc.*18.16.17.

Chryſoſt. de pœniten. Homil.7. tom.5.

§.Sect.8. That riches are daily in danger of loſing; and that the greater loſſe brings the greater griefe.

And yet ſuch is the folly of worldly men, that though they are taught by continual experience of others loſſes, that their riches are alſo momentanie, yet doe they dreame that their own will be permanent and perpetual, and that they ſhall long enjoy their wealth themſelues, & after leaue it to their children for many generations. Which vaine hopes whenas they faile, and their riches contrary to their expectation are taken from them; they torment themſelues with bitter griefe, and the greater their riches haue beene, the greater is their ſorrow for their loſſe, vexing themſelues the more, by how much the more they haue abounded. And thus the griefe of a loſt kingdome, pierceth the heart with farre greater ſorrow, than he who hath loſt but a ſmall lordſhip. Thus the merchant more bewaileth the wracke of his rich ſhip, than the poore fiſherman his little boate; and the rich man being robbed of all his treaſures, taketh his loſſe much more heauily, than a poore man who is ſpoiled of ſome worthleſſe trifles, though they be his whole ſubſtance. In which reſpect riches are right runawayes, which are kept with great care, and alwayes doe their maſters more hurt at their parting, than they haue done them good in their whole ſeruice. And therefore ſeeing theſe earthly riches are alwayes momentanie, and oftentimes harmefull, let it be farre from any Chriſtian from fixing his heart vpon theſe vnconſtant and fickle vanities, which like the waues of the Sea riſing and falling, will toſſe it vp and downe in the reſtleſſe motion of hope, care and feare. Farre be it from vs who profeſſe godlineſſe, either to compaſſe or keepe theſe vncertaine and flitting trifles, by vnlawfull meanes, and for their ſake by ſinne to hazard the eternall joyes of heauen, and to caſt our ſelues headlong into hell: ſeeing the things wee gaine are tranſitorie, and the things wee loſe permanent and perpetuall; the pleaſures which wee take in our earthly treaſures vnconſtant, and momentanie, and the torments which attend vpon their ſinfull fruition endleſſe and euerlaſting; in which reſpect the Apoſtle Iames thus ſpeaketh to couetous miſers; Goe to now yee rich men, weepe and howle, for your miſeries which ſhall come vpon you. Your riches are corrupt, and your garments motheaten. Your gold and ſiluer is cankred, and the ruſt of them ſhall bee a witneſſe againſt you, and ſhall eate your fleſh as it were fire. Yee haue heaped vp treaſure for the laſt dayes; euen the treaſure of wrath againſt the day of wrath, and of the declaration of the iuſt iudgement of God, as the Apoſtle Paul expoundeth it. And therefore let vs not ſet our hearts vpon theſe momentanie and flitting vanities, but rather vpon thoſe ſubſtantiall treaſures, Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly ioyes; which as they are infinitely of more worth; ſo are they eternall and euerlaſting, and ſhall neuer be taken from vs, or we from them. For when wee haue enioyed them ten thouſand times the age of a man, there ſhall not the leaſt moment of our time be ſpent, but at the end of ſo many yeeres, our ioyes ſhall bee ſo farre from ending, as they were in their firſt beginning. When therefore the world calleth and allureth vs, to ſeat our affections vpon theſe moueable and momentanie vanities, let vs ſtop our eares againſt his bewitching inticements, and hearken vnto the call of ſauing wiſdome and true godlineſſe, promiſing vs long-laſting treaſures, and an heauenly inheritance which ſhall neuer haue end. Riches (ſaith ſhe) and honour are with mee, euen durable riches and righteouſneſſe: my fruit is better than gold, euen than fine gold, and my reuenewes better than fine ſiluer; I cauſe to walke in the way of righteouſneſſe, and in the middeſt of the pathes of iudgement, that I may cauſe them that loue mee to inherit ſubſtance, and I will fill their treaſures.

Cum dulcia ſint caduca, pœna perpetu eſt Ambroſ. in Luc.

*Iac.*5.1.2.

*Rom.*2.5.

*Pro.*8.1

§.Sect.9. The beſt w to preſer riches fro loſing.

Or if our hearts be ſo fixed on our earthly riches, that wee will not heare of leauing them, let vs learne at leaſt to loue them wiſely, and ſo as wee may euer injoy our loue;

the which wee cannot doe by keeping them in earth, where they are ſubiect to corruptibilitie, as our Sauiour teacheth vs; but by laying them vp in Heauen, where neither the moth nor canker corrupteth, & where theeues neither digge thorow, nor ſteale. Let vs vſe them as comfortable helpes in our iorney to our owne countrie, and as meanes to aſſure vnto vs the fruition of our heauenly ioyes; and as our Sauiour exhorteth vs, Let vs make vs friends with the riches of iniquitie, that when we ſhall want, we may be receiued into euerlaſting habitations. And if wee would for euer poſſeſſe neuer decaying riches, let vs, as our Sauiour counſelleth vs, ſell that we haue, and giue almes, make vs bags which wax not old, a treaſure that can neuer faile in heauen, where no theefe commeth, nor moth corrupteth. For keepe them long we cannot, ſeeing they are vnconſtant and ſtill flying, and wee mortall and daily dying; but the beſt way for euer to enjoy them, is to ſend them before vs by the Lords factors, the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt, into our heauenly countrie, where they ſhall for euer bee reſerued for vs. For howſoeuer our goods are momentanie, our good deeds ſhall bee euerlaſting, though our riches bee corruptible, yet our Chriſtian liberalitie, mercie, and righteouſneſſe ſhall remaine for euer; according to that, he hath diſtributed and giuen to the poore, his righteouſneſſe remaineth for euer, his horne ſhall be exalted with glory. And therefore the ſureſt way to keepe our treaſures for euer, is to beſtow them vpon the poore, and vpon charitable and Chriſtian vſes, for whileſt we thus lay them out, we eternally keepe them, and in thus parting with them, we for euer reſerue them: whereas if wee locke them vp we loſe them, if wee keepe them in our owne cuſtodie, though it be vnder locke and key, bolt and barre, wee ſhall ſurely bee ſpoiled of them, if not by theeues, yet at leaſt by death. If wee giue not a peny to the poore, wee ſhall not find a peny of all our rich treaſures which wee had in earth, in the world to come: and they who with the rich glutton will not giue the crummes of their tables, to the reliefe of thoſe who are in penurie and miſerie, crying out for hunger, and begging their almes; ſhall with him crie out in hell torments, for a drop of cold water to coole their tongues, and ſhall not receiue it. Let vs learne of husbandmen to caſt away our corne that wee may keepe it, and ſow liberally, that we may reape a plentifull harueſt: yea let vs learne of rich miſers in the generall, to chuſe the ſureſt and ſafeſt place for the keeping of our treaſure, though not in the particular, to make their choice of the earth, where there is no treaſurie vnto which wee may ſecurely commit it; but let vs lay it vp in heauen, and deſire to haue it reſerued in Gods owne cuſtody, where it ſhall not onely remaine ſafe for our vſe, but be increaſed vnto vs a thouſand fold, and of momentanie moueables become an euerlaſting and moſt glorious inheritance. And this counſell an ancient Father giueth vs; If (ſaith he) worldly riches be wanting, let vs not by euill works ſeeke them on earth; if they doe abound, let vs by good workes reſerue them in heauen. For (as he ſaith in another place) if we couetouſly hoord them vp, and will not part with them to good and charitable vſes, wee may be ſaid indeed to loue our riches, but it is fondly and fooliſhly, killing and deſtroying them with ouermuch kindneſſe, whileſt wee hugge them too hard in our boſomes; but not truly and wiſely, for by euill keeping, we make them to periſh in our hands, and by fond louing them wee eternally loſe them: whereas if we loued them aright, wee would ſend them before vs into heauen, whither wee ſhall ſhortly follow after, and they remaine with vs, and we with them for euermore.

th.6.19.20

e 16.9.

12.33.

am.39.
ap.9.

ap.16.23.24.

Diuitiæ ſeculares ſi deſunt non per mala opera quærantur in mundo; ſi autem adſint, per bona opera ſeruentur in cœlo. Auguſt. ad Bonifac. epiſt. 205 Tom. 2.

Auarus non eſt verus amator theſauri ſui, malè tenendo perdit, multùm diligendo amittit. Auguſt. Serm. 245. Tom. 10.

§. Sect. 10. That worldly pleaſures are ſhort and momentany.

Finally, as worldly honours and riches, ſo alſo worldly pleaſures and delights are ſhort and momentanie; like vnto delightfull dreames, which pleaſe for the preſent, but vaniſh away when one awaketh: for when men with great paines and labour haue procured for themſelues theſe worldly pleaſures, they are ready to forſake them, as ſoone as they ſalute them, and to end in their fruition, dying (as it were) in the very birth. Thus doe the pleaſures of eating and drinking preſently vaniſh, as ſoone as the meate and drinke is ſwallowed into the ſtomacke; thus ſports and paſtimes are inioyed and ended in the ſame moment; thus ſweet muſicke delighteth onely whileſt it is in hearing, the pleaſure and ſound at once leauing vs; and finally, thus goodly maskes and ſhewes, giue onely delight whileſt they are looked vpon, and like apparitions no ſooner appeare, than vaniſh. In a word, though we ſhould enioy all worldly delights euen our whole life, ſome few dayes excepted, all that are paſſed would not miniſter any comfort, to cheare and vphold vs in this ſhort time of their abſence; and ſo is all the joy of pleaſures tied to their preſence, that though we ſhould enjoy them the age of Methuſelah, one houres aduerſitie would make them all to be forgotten, vnleſſe they be called to mind, as arguments to aggrauate our preſent vnhappineſſe, becauſe now when wee neede moſt comfort, wee are forſaken of all our former delights. And this momentanie continuance of pleaſures, is by Zophar plainly expreſſed, where he obſerueth, that of old, and euer ſince God placed man vpon the earth, the reioycing of the wicked hath beene ſhort, and that the ioy of hypocrites hath laſted but for a moment. And the Wiſe man

Eccleſiaſticus 11.27.

Iob 20.4.5.

man familiarly explaineth it, by comparing theſe worldly delights to the noiſe of thornes vnder the pot, which howſoeuer for the inſtant they make a great crackling, and a glorious blaze, yet euery one knoweth, that as they are ſuddenly kindled, ſo alſo they are as ſuddenly extinguiſhed. For howſoeuer they delight for the inſtant, yet they periſh in the very taſting, and paſſe away as ſoone as they are come, leauing behind them nothing but griefe and ſorrow, either becauſe they were at all enjoyed, or are ſo ſoone departed. So another doth moſt liuely expreſſe the ſhort tarriance of theſe worldly pleaſures, by comparing them to letters written in the waters, which in the ſame moment are made and defaced, no print or impreſſion of them being left behind: for as in that, the paine is no leſſe, than if a man did write in laſting in parchment, but the continuance of the letters written no longer than they are in making: ſo there goeth as great paine to the obtaining of theſe worldly delights, as of thoſe which are heauenly and eternall, and yet the fruition laſteth no longer than the very act and operation, and being once paſt, no print or impreſſion of them remaineth after them. And therefore ſeeing theſe worldly pleaſures are ſo momentanie, and of ſhort continuance; let vs not ſet our hearts vpon them, but rather affect and ſeeke for thoſe which are ſpirituall and heauenly; for if we delight our ſelues in the Lord, & in the fruition of his mercies, vouchſafed vnto vs in his Sonne Chriſt, our Sauiour himſelfe hath aſſured vs, that this ioy ſhall euer laſt, and no man ſhall be able to take it from vs; and the Pſalmiſt telleth vs that thoſe heauenly pleaſures which are at Gods right hand, endure for euermore. Eſpecially let vs take heed that we do not compaſſe vnlawfull pleaſures, or by vnlawfull meanes, or immoderately loue thoſe which in themſelues are lawfull; for what folly and madnes were it, to hazard by ſin the loſſe of much more excellent pleaſures which are eternall, for the fruition of theſe which are no leſſe vaine than momentanie? yea to indanger our ſoules to euerlaſting torments, for the preſent enioying of theſe fading delights?

Eccleſ.7.8.

Gregor. Nyſſen. in Eccleſ. Hom. 5.

Iohn 16.22.

Pſalme 16.11.

Pſalme 92.6.7.

Chap. XXVIIII.

Of the mutability and vnconſtancie of all worldly things.

§. Sect. 1.
That al things in heauen and earth are ſubiect to change & alteration.

I Haue ſhewed that all things in the World are momentany and corruptible: Now wee are alſo briefly to ſhew, that as they are momentany in themſelues, ſo they are mutable and vnconſtant in reſpect of vs. For though they be but of ſhort continuance, yet if they were friends for life, and would not forſake vs till either they periſhed, or wee died, they might bee thought more worthy our loue, if not for their vtilitie and profit, yet at leaſt for their fidelitie and conſtancie; whereas now they are not ſo momentany as they are mutable, being ready to leaue and forſake vs euery day of their ſhort continuance, like fickle flatterers, of whoſe fauour and loue there can be no certainty or aſſurance. And no maruell that theſe earthly things vpon which men dote are ſo ſubiect to change, ſeeing all things in the World are obnoxious to mutabilitie: the Heauens themſelues are not free from alterations; the Sun and Moone haue their Elypſes; the times varie and change one with another; the day with night, and night with day; Winter with Summer, and Summer with Winter, and neuer ſtand at a ſtay; the Elements haue continually their tranſmutations one with another, and by maintayning continuall warre among themſelues, procure a peacefull harmonie, and well agreeing temperature in ſublunary and inferiour bodies, vntill one of them hath vanquiſhed and ouercome all the reſt, with whoſe victorie their peace and harmonie endeth. Thus alſo Monarchies and States, cities and townes haue their changes & alterations, the ſame Nation one while imperiouſly commanding, and another while ſeruilely obeying; and the ſame City at one time flouriſhing in ſtately buildings, profitable merchandiſe, and abundant riches; and at another time diſpeopled, decayed, burned, and buried in its owne ruines. Thus you ſhall ſee the Aſſyrian and Babyloniſh monarchy for a time ouertopping all, and then ſtouping to the monarchy of the Medes and Perſians; and this for a while welding the ſcepter ouer all the neighbour countries, and ſoone after caſting it downe at the feet of the Grecian monarchie; and this alſo after it hath had its turne and commanded in its courſe, conquered and ouerthrowne, and the Romane monarchie raiſed out of its ruines. And finally, though this were ſtronger and more durable than all the reſt, yet it had its period as well as its beginning, and though it had none ſtronger to ouercome it at once, yet it was at length ouerthrowne by its owne power, periſhed piece-meale, and came to ruine, not becauſe it wanted ſtrong props to vphold it, but becauſe it ſelfe was ouer burthenſome. Thus alſo wee ſhall ſee a change in Cities and townes: as for example, in famous Babylon, Niniue, Tyre, Carthage, Athens, Sparta, Corinth, Epheſus, yea in Ieruſalem it ſelfe the glory of the world.

§. Sect. 2.
That we c municate w

And therefore if theſe great alterations are to be obſerued in things more durable, there is no maruell if they be more frequently ſeen

tures in mutabi-beſides changes which our eſtates ubiect.

in humane eſtates and conditions, which are innumerable times more fickle and vnconſtant in themſelues, and are alſo ſubject to partake with all the reſt in their changes and alterations. For when the Sunne and Moone are Eclypſed, we ſuffer in their defects; when they goe their journey from the Eaſt to the Weſt, we alſo trauell with them towards the ſetting of our life; onely this difference there is, that they goe and returne againe; but after our Set there is no riſing, vntill by the power of our Iudge wee riſe to judgement: So time though winged cannot haſte ſo faſt away, but we either by a voluntary or forced motion, equall its ſpeed, and beare it company till we reſt at death. The Elements are ſubject to continuall change, and we are partakers with them in their alterations: and when in the conflict which they hold in our bodies the naturall fire hath deuoured, and (as it were) conquered the airy water, it ſelfe alſo, hauing no other food but its enemies prouiſion, is ouercome in conquering, and we with them both do fall in the battell, and die of their wounds. And finally, there can be no change in States, Monarchies and Cities, where we inhabit, but we likewiſe haue a ſhare in their alterations, laughing in their mirth, and weeping in their mourning. No maruell therefore if the eſtate of man bee changeable, ſeeing he hath a great part in the alteration of all other creatures, and beſides hath in himſelf innumerable internal cauſes of variable mutation. In regard whereof one ſaith, that none of vs are the ſame in our age that we were in our youth; no man is the ſame to day that he was yeſterday; but our bodies are carried in a continuall motion, like vnto Riuers, and all we looke vpon doth run away with time, nothing remayning the ſame to morrow as wee now ſee it; yea euen I (ſaith he) whileſt I ſpeak of changing, am my ſelfe changed. Neither are our bodies more mutable than our Eſtates, which through the whole courſe of our liues are daily ſubject to alterations, and nothing continueth firme and permanent in them, but as the Traueller is ſometimes on the high Hils, and ſometime in the low Vallies, and ſometime walking on euen ground: ſo we in our pilgrimage are one while aloft in the Mountaines of proſperitie, and ſoone after in the low dales of aduerſitie, and ſometimes in a mean and euen condition between both. or like vnto thoſe that are ſailing on the Sea, who are one while lifted (as it were) to the Clouds, and in an inſtant buried in the deepe; one while becalmed ſo as they cannot goe forward, and by and by hurried with a boyſterous tempeſt; now in danger of ruſhing one againſt another, and ſoone after of daſhing againſt a Rocke; ſometimes ſuffering ſhipwracke, and alwayes fearing it; neither are they euer ſecure, and at reſt, till they be arriued in the Hauen: for ſo in this life we are ſometime aduanced, and ſomtime abaſed, one while ſluggiſh with too much proſperity, ſo as we cannot moue in any good and Chriſtian courſes; and another while toſſed and turmoyled with the bluſtring ſtormes of aduerſity, whereby though wee make a more ſpeedy progreſſe, yet not without many troubles, and much danger. In regard whereof the ſaying of the Sonne of Syrach is verified, that no man is to bee iudged happy before his death, becauſe a pleaſant beginning, hath often a ſorrowfull progreſſe, and a worſe ending; yea, ſometime hee who hath acted his part well in the reſt of his life, ſpoyleth all in the laſt Scene, concluding an happy life in reſpect of worldly proſperity, with a ſhamefull and miſerable death.

*Ecclus.*11.28.

Neither in truth is it any maruell that our worldly eſtates ſhould be ſo variable and vnconſtant, ſeeing the ground whereupon they ſtand is ſo mooriſh and deceitfull; for euen the World it ſelfe is fickle and falſe; and therfore as it is impoſſible to ſtand firmely on a dancing Quagmire, or ſteadily and immoueably in a tottering Ship, when it is toſſed with ſurging waues in a tempeſtuous ſtorme: ſo is it alike impoſſible to ground an vnchangeable eſtate on this mutable World, or not to be moued with this worldly earthquake. Yea, euen thoſe things in the world which chiefly intitle proſperity are moſt variable and ſubject to change, and like vnto the duſt raiſed by the winde, they are toſſed to and fro, and from one to another, as it pleaſeth Gods prouidence to diſpoſe of them; or vnto ſhadowes and apparitions, which vaniſh away and ſlip betweene the hands, when a man thinketh to take ſureſt hold. So that this Idoll of worldly proſperity when it doth moſt glorioully ſhine muſt needs be continually in danger of falling and breaking, ſeeing both the matter thereof is (as it were) of brittle glaſſe, and the baſe or foundation whereon it ſtandeth rotten and vnconſtant.

Omnia mundana fluxa ſunt, & tempore peritura; & velut in calculorum ludo alijs ad alios iactantur tranſeuntq́, Greg.Nazian. de pauperum amore.

And yet ſuch is the folly of worldly men, yea, ſometimes alſo of Gods deareſt ſeruants, that when they haue this Eele in their hand they thinke they can hold it faſt, and are ready to ſay in their proſperitie that they ſhall neuer bee mooued. And as Eue thought that her ſonne Cain would haue bin a ſure poſſeſſion, though he proued a runnagate; ſo they imagine that theſe births of their carefull braines, and fruits of their labours, will bee conſtant and permanent; whereas the euent ſheweth, that (like beggers Brats) they will not ſtay long in any place; and that like run-away ſeruants almoſt euery moneth they change their maſter.

*Pſal.*30.6.

*Gen.*4.1.

In which reſpect the conſtancie of humane affaires is fitly compared to the mouing of the Cart-wheele; the loweſt part being within a while vppermoſt, and ſoone after as low as it was before. So that they who Plutarch.Conſol.ad Apol.

Mundani tantò magis in profundum merguntur, quanto magis videntur eſſe fœlices: fallax enim fœlicitas ipſa eſt maior infœlicitas, Auguſt. in Pſal. 129.

who thinke to find ſure footing on this vnſtable ground, are like vnto thoſe who hauing no commandement or promiſe, will preſume by ſole vertue of a miraculous faith to walke vpon the waters; who (as one ſaith) are ſo much the deeper plunged into the gulph of miſery, by how much the more ſecurely they preſumed of their permanent proſperitie, there being no greater miſery than a falſe happineſſe. For there is no conſtancie or ſtedfaſtneſſe in theſe worldly things, but they are continually ready to remoue themſelues from one to another, at the leaſt beck of the great Creator, & to alter the eſtates of worldly men by their comming and departure, as Hannah in her Song notably obſerueth: The Lord (ſaith ſhe) is a God of knowledge, and by him enterprizes are eſtabliſhed: the bow and the mightie men are broken, and the weake haue girded themſelues with ſtrength. They that were full are hired out for bread, and the hungry are no more hired, the barren hath borne ſeuen, and ſhe that had many children is feeble: the Lord killeth and maketh aliue, bringeth down to the graue, and raiſeth vp, &c.

1.Sam.2.3,4,5.

§. Sect. 3.
Of the mutabilitie and vnconſtancie of honours and preferments.

But let vs briefly conſider the mutability of worldly things in the ſpeciall inſtances. And firſt, what can be more vnconſtant and variable than Honours and preferments? ſeeing thoſe who are thus aduanced, doe continually walke in ſlippery places, where they are ſtill ready to catch a fall; and borrowing their glory in a great part from the vnconſtant opinion of the fickle multitude, which like the Weathercocke turneth with euery wind, their fame and reputation muſt needs be exceeding variable, reſting it ſelfe vpon ſuch an vnſtable ground. In which regard worldly men are fitly compared to ſhel-fiſh, which depending vpon the Moone, are ſubject to all her changes, increaſing as ſhee increaſeth, and decreaſing, as ſhe inclineth towards the waine; for ſo their Honour ſtanding at the deuotion of the vnconſtant multitude, altereth and changeth, riſeth and falleth, according to the full or waine of their variable conceits. The World promiſeth indeed perpetuitie of Honours to thoſe who will ſet their hearts vpon them, and preferre them before the glory of God, and the ſaluation of their owne ſoules, but hee dealeth ſometime vnfaithfully with his Fauourites, treacherouſly betraying them vnder ſhew of loue, and lifting them vp, whom he meaneth to ouerthrow with the greateſt downefall. Wherein the World and the Prince thereof, vſe ambitious men as the Crowes the ſhel-fiſh, carrying them aloft vnto the higheſt places, that from thence caſting them down, they may bruiſe them with the fall, and ſo more eaſily prey vpon them. But as they deale thus with their owne friends, ſometime becauſe they will not, and ſometime becauſe they cannot preferre them; ſo much more falſly and vnconſtantly with thoſe who neglect and contemne their deceitfull Honours, being ready to magnifie and diſgrace them with the ſame breath, when as they cannot allure them to bite at their bewitching baits. An example whereof wee haue in Paul and Barnabas, whom the vulgar people (admiring their miracle) would needes deifie; which honour when they had refuſed, and perſwaded them to returne all the glory vnto God, they preſently vpon a groundleſſe information, laid violent hands vpon them and ſtoned them, now thinking that they deſerued capitall puniſhments, whom ere-while they eſteemed worthy diuine Honour. Thus others ſhewed the like vnconſtancy, whileſt one while they condemned Paul, as a malefactour, and preſently after were ready to adore him as their Idoll. But moſt notably doth the mutabilitie, and fickle vnconſtancy of the variable multitude appeare in their carriage towards our Sauiour Chriſt; whom one day they ſought after to make him a King; and ſoone after rejecting him, preferred before him an Heathen, yea, a hated Monarch: one while they flocked about him, to giue him all louing and reſpectiue entertainment, ſtrewing greene boughes in his way, and (becauſe they thought them not good enough) ſpreading alſo their garments, euen vnder his Aſſes feet; and another while mocking and reuiling him, buffeting and ſpitting vpon him, whipping and crucifying him, and in ſtead of beſtowing their garments vpon him, they take from him his owne: this day they meet him with joy, and ſalute him, ſaying, Hoſanna the Sonne of Dauid, bleſſed bee hee that commeth in the Name of the Lord, Hoſanna in the higheſt; but within a few dayes after they cry out with an vniuerſall conſent, Away with him, away with him: crucifie him, crucifie him. Which as it notably ſheweth the mutabilitie of Honours, and the vnconſtancy of the common people, ſo alſo the malice of Satan, who would (as one ſaith) haue his Proceſſion goe immediately before his Paſſion, theſe Honours before thoſe diſgraces, and this high exaltation before his loweſt downfall, that by this ſudden alteration he might be the leſſe prouided, and his Paſſion made more bitter and intolerable: although the Lord who diſpoſed of all had another end, namely, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled which teſtified of his Son, to the further conuincing of the Iewes, and the juſt condemnation of all, who would not beleeue: and therefore if our Sauiour Chriſt who was worthy of all honour, found this ſudden and vndeſerued alteration, what conſtancy can they hope for, who come infinite degrees ſhort of his excellencies?

Act.14.11, 19.

Act.14.

*But in truth howſoeuer this vnconſtancy of Honours may be attributed to the mutability and treachery of the World, and the Prince thereof, in regard that they promiſe it to their followers, and faile in performance; and as they are made the inſtruments of God, both in the conferring and taking away of Honours; wherein they take occaſion to ſhew their fawning in the one, and their malice in the other; yet the ſupreame and chiefe cauſe of theſe alterations in honours and preferments, is the wiſe prouidence of Almighty God, who would haue theſe worldly honours variable and vnconſtant, chiefly for his owne childrens ſake, both for their triall and chaſtiſement, and becauſe hee would not haue them to ſet their hearts too much vpon them, and ſo neglect that eternall glory of his heauenly Kingdome; and ſecondarily for the iuſt puniſhment of the wicked, from whom hee taketh away theſe honours after hee hath aduanced them, becauſe they abuſe them to pride and tyrannie. And thus Adonibezek of a great Conquerer of Kings, became worſe than a ſlaue, and equall to a Dogge, eating the offals vnder the Table; wherein the Lord meaſured iuſtly vnto him, according to that meaſure by which hee had meeted vnto others. Thus Haman was one day the chiefe Fauourite in Court, and the next day hanged on his owne Gallowes; becauſe he had abuſed his greatnes to the ruine of Gods Church: and thus Gods owne Church and people after they had receiued many teſtimonies of his loue, and were by him exalted aboue all other Nations; for abuſing of theſe ſpeciall fauours, were dejected and brought vnto a baſe condition: for ſo the Prophet complaineth; Ieruſalem hath grieuouſly ſinned, therefore ſhee is in deriſion; all that honoured her, deſpiſe her, becauſe they haue ſeene her filthineſſe. No maruell therefore if the World be vnconſtant in conferring theſe Honours, ſeeing in truth it hath no power to continue them, more than that which it receiueth from God, who as he is the chiefe Authour of theſe Honours, ſo hee giueth and taketh them away at his owne pleaſure. Thus Hannah confeſſeth, that the Lord bringeth low and exalteth; hee raiſeth vp the poore out of the duſt, and lifteth vp the begger from the dunghill, to ſet them among Princes, and to make them inherit the ſeate of glory. So the Pſalmiſt maketh this the chiefe cauſe of the ruine of the wicked, when they were in the top of all their proſperity, becauſe the Lord had ſet them in ſlipperie places, and caſt them downe into deſolation. But whether we conſider the chiefe or inſtrumentall cauſes of this vnconſtancie, ſure wee are that honours are moſt mutable and flitting, vncertaine to winter where they haue Summered, or to lodge where they haue reſted all day. And this mutable inconſtancie the Wiſe man obſerued; I haue (ſaith he) ſeene ſeruants on horſes, and Princes as ſeruants walking on the ground. To which purpoſe alſo the Sonne of Syrach noteth, that many mightie men haue beene brought to diſhonour, and the honourable haue beene deliuered into other mens hands. The which mutabilitie commonly happeneth when men are moſt ſecure, and are puffed vp in pride, in regard that they aſſure themſelues of the conſtant continuance of their honours and preferments; their proudeſt hopes yeelding nothing vnto them but ſhame and diſgrace. For ſo the Wiſe man ſaith, that pride goeth before deſtruction; and an high minde before the fall: and againe, when pride commeth, then commeth ſhame, but with the lowly is wiſdome. And therefore ſeeing theſe worldly honours are ſo mutable and vnconſtant, ſo hardly gotten and eaſily loſt, let vs not too much eſteeme them, nor immoderately loue and ſeeke them, but rather let vs ſet our hearts vpon ſauing wiſdom and true godlineſſe; for as the Wiſe man ſaith, Exalt her, and ſhe ſhall exalt thee, ſhe ſhall bring thee to honour, if thou imbrace her; ſhe ſhall giue a comely ornament to thy head, yea, ſhe ſhall giue thee a crowne of glorie. And this honour ſhall be moſt conſtant and permanent, laſting as long as life, yea, after death, for the memoriall of the iuſt ſhall be bleſſed; but the name of the wicked ſhall rot. Yea, this honour of grace ſhall be but a ſtep to aduance vs to the honour of heauenly glory, the which ſhall continue not for a few yeeres onely, but for euer and euer, as being eternall and euerlaſting; for ſo the Apoſtle telleth vs, that the God of grace hath called vs to his eternall glory, by Ieſus Chriſt.

*Ecclus.*11.6.

*Prou.*16.18. and 18.12. and 11.2.

*Prou.*4.8,9.

*Prou.*10.7.

1.*Pet.*5.10.

§. Sect. 5.

Of the mutability and vnconſtancie of riches.

The like mutabilitie and vnconſtancie is in riches. For though our riches corrupt not, nor we die, yet there is no certaintie in their poſſeſſion, they are ſo flitting and mutable. For who ſeeth not that they do often change their maſters; he who ere-while wanted, abounding, and he who not long ſince abounded, being now brought to want and penurie? Looke but to Houſes, Lands and Coine, and conſider how often they haue new Owners, this day being in the poſſeſſion of one, and to morrow of another, and not many many moneths after, both being ſtripped of them, they are deuolued vnto a third. In which reſpect Zophar compareth riches to the waters of Riuers, which make no long ſtay in any place, and paſſe from Land to Land, and field to field, till at laſt they are ſwallowed vp of the Sea. The increaſe (ſaith he) of his houſe ſhall goe away, and it ſhall flow away in the day of Gods wrath. For ſo riches runne from one to another, till in the end they loſe their name, being corrupted, and (as it were) ſwallowed in the gulfe of deſtruction. In the ſame regard one of the Ancients likeneth them to allurіng Harlots,

Iob 20.28.

Origen. in Mat.6.18. Homil.4.

which make loue to many, keepe faith with none. And to the ſame purpoſe another ſaith; that there is nothing more falſ & trecherous than riches; & that like a fugitiue & vngrateful ſeruant, they haue no honeſty or fidelity; for though thou bind them with innumerable bonds, they will goe away, and draw their chaine after them. And for this cauſe oftentimes, they are kept and faſt locked vp vnder the cuſtodie of ſtrong bolts, and faſt barred doores, hauing beſides many ſeruants as Iajlours attending on them; but they oftentimes intice their keepers, and flee away together with them. So that there is nothing more vnconſtant than theſe earthly moueables, which are euery day ſubject to change and alteration: in which reſpect one wittily ſaith, that Money moſt fitly is ſtamped round, to ſignifie by the very figure that it is truly current, not ſtanding ſtill, but rolling and remouing from one to another. The which inconſtancie and mutabilitie of riches, as it proceedeth inſtrumentally from the World, who is vnconſtant in its fauours, aduancing thoſe to wealth whom ſoone after it is ready to impouerish; ſo chiefly and principally from the Lord, who in his gracious prouidence made earthly riches mutable, becauſe wee ſhould not fix our hearts vpon ſuch changeable vanities, but vpon thoſe heauenly treaſures which are immutable, and not ſubject to any alteration; and that ſeeing euery day they are ready to leaue vs whether we will or no, wee might be the rather willing to part with them to ſuch good & charitable vſes, as may glorifie God, and further aſcertaine vs of our eternall treaſures. Whereas if hee had made them immutable and permanent, whome would they not haue bewitched with their loue? For if now men hauing no ſecuritie or aſſurance, to keepe them in their poſſeſſion but one onely day, do notwithſtanding dote ſo much in their loue, that by right & wrong they lay violent hands vpon them, & wring them vnjuſtly out of others cuſtodie, hazarding euen their ſoules to increaſe their wealth; what would they haue done if they had beene conſtant and faithful friends, that doe all this, they being treacherous and deceitfull flatterers? What Widow would they not haue robbed? What Orphane would they not haue ſpoyled? What weake and poore man would they not haue oppreſſed, to get theſe perpetuities into their poſſeſſion? To conclude, ſeeing theſe riches of the World are ſo mutable and vnconſtant, let vs not ſet our hearts vpon them; and (as one ſaith) let vs not runne a madding after theſe falſe fugitiues; for there is nothing more deceitfull, nothing more perfidious. To day they are on our part, but to morrow againſt vs; arming enuious eyes againſt our ſafety; and ſtrengthening malicious hands to vndermine our peace; ſo that they who haue them, are beſet on euery ſide with familiar and chamber foes, and inuironed with domeſticall enemies: but rather let vs fix our minds on thoſe firme treaſures reſerued for vs in Gods Kingdome, which are permanent and perpetuall euen to eternitie.

Chryſoſt. ad pop. Antioch. Hom. 2. tom. 4.

Quid tam incertum quam res volubilis? nec immeritò ipſa pecunia rotunda ſignatur, quia non ſtat, Auguſt. in Pſal. 83.

Chryſoſt. ad pop. Antioch, Hom, 2. tom. 4.

Finally, there is no more conſtancie or leſſe mutability in worldly pleaſures; for though there be alwayes worldly men and worldly delights, yet are they neuer aſcertained the one to the other; but as men change their pleaſures, ſo pleaſures change men, and euery hand-while leauing the old, they are ready to betake them to new Maſters. Some waite not ſo much vpon men themſelues, as vpon their age: as for example, ſome attend vpon infancy, and leaue them in their youth; ſome delight them in their youth, and forſake them when they come to full maturitie, and ſome accompany them in their full ſtrength, and will by no meanes ſtay the approach of old age. Others are tied to ſeuerall times of the yeere, as to Spring, Autumne, Summer, Winter, and bring great delight when they are vſed in their ſeaſon; but failing herein they change their nature, and become irkſome and tedious. And as for thoſe pleaſures which are vſuall and daily, delighting all perſons, and at all times, we ſee vnto what common mutation they are ſubject, laſting no longer but for the preſent, and then degenerating into tedious moleſtations and cumberſome burthens. Thus meates and drinkes delight for the inſtant, but after ſurcharging the ſtomacke, they recompence an houres pleaſure, with a whole dayes paine. And thus pleaſures of the fleſh are but of momentany continuance, and ſuddenly impaire the ſtrength, and bring the bodie to many infirmities, and much weakneſſe. Beſides which loſſe of ſpeciall delights, how many doe wee daily ſee, who abounding in all manner of ſenſuall pleaſures, are ſoone after abandoned of them all, and ſpend the remainder of their dayes in miſery and mourning? And though they remayne in their judgement and affection Epicures ſtill, making their belly their God, and the World their Paradiſe, yet find their Idoll whom they ſerue, ſo auerſe towards them, that of neceſſitie, whether they will or no, they are robbed of all pleaſures, and paſſe their time in griefe, and ſharpe affliction? And thus it appeareth that all theſe worldly things which men ſo fondly affect, are mutable and vnconſtant. The conſideration whereof ſhould moue vs lightly to eſteeme, yea, careleſly to contemne theſe changeable and fickle vanities, in compariſon of Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly joyes. For what is this mutability, but a certaine kinde of mortality, ſeeing though they die not in themſelues, yet they die vnto vs? Yea, in truth what is the continuance of theſe world-

§. Sect. 6.
That world pleaſures vnconſtan and ſubie change.

Mutabilitas quaedam mort litas: dum aliquid de p ſpiritu in ſ rum mor quaſi praet moritur, de cognit.
ra vitæ
Tom.5.

ſy things, but a kind of vnobſerued corruptibility? For whilſt any thing paſſeth from the preſent to the time to come, that which is paſt dieth and periſheth, God onely is immutable, becauſe nothing paſt taketh from him, nothing to come addeth to him, but whatſoeuer was, is, or ſhall be, is with him all preſent. And therefore deſpiſing theſe vnconſtant and periſhing trifles, let the Lord be our glory, treaſure, and delight, in whom there is no change or ſhadow of change; and let vs ſet our hearts and affections vpon his ſpirituall and ſauing graces; for theſe gifts of God (as the Apoſtle telleth vs) are without repentance; neuer wholly or finally failing thoſe to whom they are once giuen. For being placed on this ſure Rocke of Grace, wee may ſecurely contemne the daſhing waues of boyſterous malice, which in the Sea of this World, are by turbulent men raiſed againſt vs, ſeeing they ſhall be all broken into the ſome of their owne ſhame, and wee in the meane time remayne vndamnified; for theſe immutable graces, giuen vnto vs by the immutable God, will make our peace and ſecurity alſo immutable. And let vs chiefly affect and ſeeke thoſe Honours, Riches and Pleaſures reſerued for vs in Gods Kingdome, which cannot be altered by any accident, nor impaired by any enemy, but ſhall eternally remayne to our infinite joy and comfort, firme and permanent.

CHAP. XXIX.

Of the momentany continuance and frailty of mans life.

HAuing ſhewed that the things of the World are in themſelues momentanie, and in reſpect of vs mutable: wee are in the next place to ſpeake of our mortalitie, which may ſerue as another mayne argument to make vs contemne theſe worldly vanities; for though they were eternall, yet we are momentanie; though they were conſtant and permanent, yet our liues are fraile and flitting; though they had not their end, yet wee ſhall haue our end; and though they would for euer continue with vs, yet ſhall wee but a while continue with them, becauſe our liues are but ſhort, and with their ſhortneſſe, ſo fraile and vncertaine, that this momentany time, is only ſure of ending, and in nothing elſe certaine, but in its owne vncertaintie. For we are continually ſailing towards the hauen of death, and wee neuer want the winde of winged time to ſet vs forward; ſometime in the way we periſh by the leakes of our own intemperance, ſometimes we ſplit our ſelues vpon the Rockes of dangers, or vpon the ſands of careleſſe ſecurity; ſometime wee are caſt ouer-boord by Pirats and Enemies, and ſometime carrying all our lofty & proud ſayles, wee are ouer-ſet and ſunke with the boyſterous blaſts of aduerſe accidents; and though wee ſcape all theſe dangers wee ſhall not be long in comming to our hauen of reſt; ſeeing we are neuer becalmed nor ſtand ſtill, but night and day goe forward with a proſperous wind. It is true that the World, yea our owne deceitfull hearts, doe promiſe vnto vs long life, yea, dreame of a kind of eternity which hath neuer end; for there is ſcarce any ſo olde who thinketh not to liue a day longer, and when that is ſpent, another day after that, and ſo continueth day after day in the ſame minde, and by conſequence frameth to his hopes an imaginary perpetuitie; eternitie being nothing elſe but a conſtant continuance of time without any ending. And that men haue this inward conceit, it may eaſily appeare by their outward practice: for if they were throughly perſwaded that their liues were momentany and vncertaine, what ſhew of reaſon had they by deferring their repentance, to hazard their eternall ſaluation? Why ſhould they ſet their hearts vpon the things of this life, and preferre them before euerlaſting happineſſe? Why doe they who thinke it folly to beſtow great coſt in building vpon a leaſe of one and twenty yeeres, grow exceſſiue in theſe charges, and erect ſtately Houſes, hauing no poſteritie vnto whom they may leaue them? Why do they not prepare themſelues to meet the Lord, and take ſome paines to ſet ſtraight their accounts; if they thought that euen this day they might die, and be called to a reckoning? But the true cauſe of all theſe errours and negligence is this, because they dreame of long life, and put the euill day farre from them.

The breuitie of mans life prooued by plaine teſtimonies of Scripture.

Now as this opinion and vaine hope of long life is an vſuall cauſe of impenitencie, and of the committing and liuing in al manner of ſinne, ſo eſpecially of the loue of the World, and worldly vanities: for becauſe men thinke to continue long with them, they accordingly eſteeme and ſet their hearts vpon them; whereas if they beleeued and remembred that not only the things which they ſo affect are momentany and mutable, but alſo that they themſelues are mortall, and of ſmal continuance vpon the earth, and that euen this ſhort time is moſt vncertain; they would neuer preferre theſe tranſitory trifles before their eternall patrimonie. And therefore ſeeing it is a forcible argument to moue all men to the contempt of the world and worldly vanities, becauſe our liues are ſo momentany and fraile (for though they were neuer ſo conſtant and permanent, yet wee cannot long enjoy them, ſeeing we are mortall, and of ſhort abode on earth) let vs a little further conſider of this point; and ſhew the momentany ſhortneſſe of mans life both by teſtimonies of Scripture; and alſo by experience and reaſon. The Holy Ghoſt in the Scriptures doth amply and plainly ſet forth, the breuity and vncertainty of mans life, and that by ſimple affirmation, and alſo by compariſons. For the former the teſtimonie of Iob is plain, who affirmeth, that Man who is borne of a woman hath but a ſhort time to liue, and is ful of trouble. So the Patriarch Iacob, ſpeaking of his owne life, which much ſurmounted the vſuall age of men in theſe dayes, ſaith, that his dayes were few and euill: and it is ordinary in the Scriptures, to reckon mens liues by dayes, and not by yeeres, to note their breuity: yea, comparing them with eternitie, they make them not ſo much as a minute; for ſo the Apoſtle Peter ſaith, that with the Lord, a thouſand yeeres are but as one day. And thus the Apoſtle Iohn calleth all that time, from the firſt comming of Chriſt in the fleſh, vnto his ſecond comming to iudgement, the laſt houre, whereby hee would intimate vnto vs, that the worlds continuance being compared with eternity, is but of a few houres ſtanding, and that all the reſt being ſpent, we are now come to the laſt: and therefore if all this time being thus compared, is in reſpect of eternitie but a ſhort houre, then ſurely a mans life according to the ſame proportion is ſcarce a minute.

Iob 14.1.
Gen. 47.9.
Pſal. 90.10.
2.Pet. 3.8.
Pſal 90 4.
ἐσχάτη ὥρα ἐστί
1.Iohn 2.18.

§. Sect. 3.
The breuity of mans life illuſtrated by ſimilitudes.

The ſimilitudes alſo which are vſed to expreſſe the breuity of mans life, are very ſignificant, and fit for our purpoſe, for it is compared to a [a] pilgrimage, which is not long in trauelling; to a [b] warfare, which is ſhort and full of trouble; to the dayes of an [c] hireling, which as they are commonly but few, ſo by reaſon of their paines and labour, irkeſome and tedious: to the [d] wind, which ſeldome ſtands long in one place, and euery day is in ſome likelihood of changing, that which now bloweth paſſing away without returning; to the flower of the field, which one day flouriſheth and the next day withereth: to the [e] graſſe, which in the morning groweth in its full ſtrength, and is cut downe before night. All which ſimilitudes imply, that mans life is but (as it were) of one dayes continuance; like vnto thoſe creatures neere Pontus, whereof Plutarch maketh mention, whoſe life and the day begin and end together; for at morning they are bred, at noone they come to their full growth, and at euening die with olde age; for what is our childhood, but a morning, our youth and ripe age the mid day, and our olde age the ſun-ſet and night of life. The which proportion holy Iob ſeemed to ayme at, where hee ſaith, that wee are but of [f] yeſterday, and ſcarcely full out of two dayes ſtanding. But becauſe wee are ready to flatter our ſelues with a vaine hope of long life, and to imagine that euery day is many yeeres, the Holy Ghoſt compareth our liues to many other things which are leſſe than of a dayes continuance; as vnto [g] a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and afterwards vaniſheth away: to a [] dreame, which vaniſheth as ſoone as a man awaketh: to a [h] Poſt, which paſſeth by in all haſte, and maketh no ſtay till he come to his iourneyes end; to the moſt ſwift [] Ships, and to the [*] Eagle, which flying to ſeize vpon the prey, doubleth her ordinary ſpeed: to a [i] cloud which is ſuddenly blowne away with the winde, or elſe diſſolued or dried vp with the Sun: to the [k] ſmoke, which whileſt it aſcendeth vaniſheth; to the ſwift paſſage of a [l] Weauers ſhuttle, which in a moment paſſeth from hand to hand; to a [m] ſpan in length, which is meaſured in an inſtant. And as though theſe reall things were not ſufficient to expreſſe the ſhortneſſe and vanity of mans life; it is compared alſo to a [n] ſhadow, which hath neither ſubſtance nor continuance; and to the ſwiftneſſe of a [o] thought, which farre exceedeth in ſpeed all other motions: yea, as if any thing were too ſubſtantiall to expreſſe ſufficiently the momentany ſhortneſſe of it, it is compared to vanitie, which is nothing; for ſo David ſaith, that [p] man is like to vanity, his dayes are like a ſhadow which vaniſheth: and it is not only ſaid by way of ſimilitude, that mans life is like to vanity, but that it is vanitie it ſelfe; for ſo Iob ſaith, that he [q] had as an inheritance the moneths of vanitie; yea not only mans life, but alſo himſelfe in regard of his vnconſtancy and mortality is called vanity, and that when hee is in his beſt condition; for ſo the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that [r] euery man in his beſt eſtate is (not only in part, and in ſome reſpects, but) altogether vanitie: and as though this nothing were yet too much, hee contenteth not himſelfe to ſay, that the children of men are vanitie, but that if vanitie and they were laid vpon the balance, vanitie it ſelfe would ouer-poyſe them: [s] The children of men (ſaith hee) are vanity, the chiefe men are lies, to lay them vpon a balance, they are altogether lighter than vanitie. The which vanitie, euen an Heathen man being deſirous to expreſſe, thought it not enough to call the life of man, a ſhadow or a dreame, but ioyneth both together, and calleth it a dreame of a ſhadow. Now if a thouſand yeeres in compariſon of eternitie, be as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, but as yeſterday, and as a watch in the night; and as a few drops of raine to the Sea, and a grain of grauell, in compariſon of the ſand, as the Sonne of Syrach likeneth them; then how ſhort and momentany is the life of man being thus compared, which is ſo vaine, and of ſuch ſhort continuance?

a Gen. 47.9.
1.Chron. 29.15.
b Iob 7.1.
c Verſe 7.
d Iob 14.2.
Pſal. 103.15,16
e Pſal. 90.5.
Eſay 40.6.
Plutarch. Conſol. ad Apollon.
f Iob 8.9.

But if we would adde to this momentanie ſhortneſſe of mans life, the frailty and vncertainty of it, whereby we haue no aſſurance to enioy it ſo much as a minute of this ſhort time, the vanity thereof would more euidently appeare. And of this wee need no other proofe but our owne experience, which daily teacheth vs, that as men haue but a ſhort paſſage from the birth, to the vtmoſt confines of an aged life; ſo they ſeldome goe thorow to their iourneyes end, but are cut off in all parts of this ſhort way, with vnexpected accidents. In which reſpect the life of man may fitly be compared to a candle, which whileſt it ſhineth, conſumeth; and as the candle is ſometime waſted with the wind, ſometime quite blowne out, before it bee halfe burned, and ſometime burneth to the end: ſo mans life is waſted with griefes and miſeries, ſometime extinguiſhed by immature or violent death; and though it laſt as long as the naturall heate hath moiſture to feed vpon, yet that being conſumed, like a candle it goeth out of it ſelfe for want of nouriſhment. For how many haue wee knowne in our owne experience who haue beene intombed in their mothers belly, before they did euer ſee the light of the ſunne, and ſo withered in the bud? How many doe wee daily ſee, who ſeeme to enter into the world (as the heathen man vpon the ſtage) that they may goe out againe; as though they came onely to take their leaue, and ſo to bee gone? How many wither when they are in their flouriſhing prime of their infancie and childhood, and (as it were) rot before they bee ripe? How many are taken away in their perfect maturity, death getting the victorie of them in their full ſtrength? and how few are they that attaine vnto old age, which notwithſtanding all doe hope for, though againſt all reaſon in regard of themſelues, and experience in reſpect of others? For would men conſider the manifold ambuſhments, which death daily laieth to indanger our liues; would they but remember how many by-paths leade to this common way, they could not but confeſſe the ſhortneſſe of mans life, and their vncertaintie to continue this ſhort time. For I pray you how many, yea how innumerable bee the cauſes which produce this one effect, ſome whereof are internall, and ſome externall? For ſuppoſe that we were exempted from all outward dangers, which notſtanding doe in whole troups beſiege mans life, yet we continually carrie death in our owne boſomes. For looke how many kinds of diſeaſes there are whereunto mans life is ſubiect, and ſo many ſecret enemies doe wee harbour in our ſelues, which fight againſt our liues, and giue death an eaſie entrance. Wee are not too cold, or too hot, without danger; hunger and exceſſe are alike pernicious, ſeruing both as harbingers to prouide death a lodging in our hearts; yea euery ſmall crumbe going a wrie, maketh a breach whereby death may enter and ſurpriſe vs. So that wee cannot ſaue our liues by fighting, becauſe wee nouriſh ſo many in vs which are daily ready to betray vs; nor eſcape by flight, vnleſſe wee could flee from our ſelues, ſeeing whether we will or no, we continually carrie the enemies of our liues about, vs yea within vs.

§. Sect. 5.
Of the innumerable dangers vnto which mans life is daily ſubiect.

But let it bee ſuppoſed that there were peace at home; let vs imagine that there were within vs no ſecret foe to ſupplant vs, yet how many open and outward enemies are there, which are hourely ready to aſſault our liues; if the great Commander doe but giue ſigne of battell? For to ſay nothing of common calamities, which hang ouer whole common-wealths, as famine, ſword, and peſtilence, which are Gods publicke heralds to denounce againſt vs warre and deſtruction, how many priuie wayes are there wherby death commeth vnto vs, yea we vnto death? For which way can wee turne vs, what action or enterpriſe can wee take in hand, but that there is ſome danger, that death will encounter vs? If wee take ſhip, we are but a few inches diſtant from death, the immoueable rockes, and the mutable winds, the ouerflowing waues, and ſwallowing ſands, the tempeſtuous ſtormes, and ſpoiling pyrats haue our liues at their mercy and command. If we ſtay on the land, wee are daily obnoxious to no fewer perils; if we take horſe, our liues are in danger euery time he ſtumbleth; if wee goe in the ſtreets, looke how many carts and coaches wee meete, yea how many tiles be on the eaues of houſes which wee paſſe vnder, and to ſo many dangers are we ſubiect. If wee walke in the countrie, wee are in hazard to bee incountered with brutiſh creatures, and with theeues and robbers more cruell than they. If we retire our ſelues into our well fenced gardens, wee are not there ſecure, for among the ſweeteſt flowers oftentimes lieth hid the moſt hideous ſnake. If we reſt in our houſes in the night, we are in perill of cutthrotes and robbers; or though wee were ſafe from theeues, yet we are in danger of all-deuouring fire. If we walke abrode in the day, euery one that hateth vs hath our liues at his command; and as one ſaith, whoſoeuer contemneth his owne life, is maſter of ours. In a word, be we on ſea or land, in Citie or Countrie, at home or abrode, waking or ſleeping; death ſtill like a ſergeant waiteth vpon vs, till he bee commanded by the Lord chiefe Iuſtice of heauen and earth, to arreſt, impriſon, and bring vs to iudgement. Now if any will obiect, that there are many which eſcape the forenamed dangers, and going through them all vnhurt and vntouched, doe ſafely come to old age and naturall death: I anſwere, that many more doe fall into them;

Quiſquis ſuam contempſit vitam tuæ dominus eſt. Senec.

and why may not wee thinke to bee in the greater number? many eſcape them, but all are ſubject vnto them; and that which is incident to all, may happen vnto any: finally, many eſcape ſome of theſe perils, but yet fall into others, and though to day they are free from them all, yet to morrow they may be obnoxious to many. By all which it appeareth, that our liues are not only in themſelues momentany, but alſo in reſpect of outward accidents, and inward infirmities, vncertaine, and full of frailty; in regard whereof the Apoſtle calleth our bodies earthly houſes, which wanting ſolid matter, and ſtrong principals to ſupport them, are eaſily ouerthrowne, or of themſelues, in ſhort time moulder away; and in the ſame place hee calleth them tabernacles, which ſtand not long any where, but are ſtill flitting and remouing. And another maketh them much more fraile and brittle than glaſſes, which though they bee ſubject to many caſualties, yet may they outlaſt the longeſt liuer. What (ſaith he) is more brittle than a glaſſe? and yet it may bee ſo reſerued, that it may continue for many ages; for though it bee indangered to a fall or knocke, yet not to a feauer, or old age, whereas we are more fraile, as being ſubject to the fals and knocks of outward caſualties, and though we were free from them, yet time and age weakeneth and waſteth vs; though we could ſhun outward blowes, yet we cannot auoid our end; though we ſhould be free from outward dangers, yet wee can neuer eſcape inward diſeaſes. And howſoeuer ſome may laſt longer, and ſome a ſhorter while, yet all in their appointed time come to their end. Wherein men are fitly compared to the leaues of trees, of which ſome are blaſted in the bud, euen in the ſpring, ſome are blowne off with the wind in the middeſt of ſummer, and thoſe that continue ſo long on the tree, doe when autumne and winter commeth, fall of themſelues. To this purpoſe one demandeth: Shall we not all (ſaith hee) in a little while be the ſame duſt? doe wee not by the addition of a few more dayes gaine this alone, that wee partly ſee, partly ſuffer, and partly act the more euils? and ſo wee at length alſo ſhall pay to nature the common and certaine tribute; by our death following ſome, and going before others; now bewailing our friends departed, and ſoone after our ſelues departing leaue them to bewaile vs; and receiue the kind gift of teares in as bountifull maner from them, as we haue in our liues beſtowed it vpon thoſe who haue gone before vs, &c. For wee are all but a vaniſhing dreame, an apparition that leaueth no ſigne behind it; duſt, a vapour, the morning dew, and a flower of the field, which quickly groweth, and more quickly withereth.

2. Cor. 5. 1.

August. Serm. 1. Tom, 5.

Homer, apud Plutarch. ad Apollon.
Eccleſiaſticus 14: 18.

Gregor. Naziant, in laudem Cæſarij.

§. Sect. 6.
That euery man more cleerely ſ
other men mortality th his owne.

But howſoeuer vaine man be ſo mortall, fraile and momentanie (as I haue ſhewed) yet is he ſo blinded with ſelfe-loue, and bewitched with deluding hopes, that though hee acknowledge all this in the general, yet hee ſeldome applieth it to his owne particular; though he can ſay we are all mortal, yet hee dreameth of his omne immortality; and howſoeuer hee can in his politicke bargaines reckon three of his neighbours liues, at no longer time than one and twentie yeeres, yet doth hee flatter his too credulous heart with this fooliſh conceit, that his ſingle ſelfe ſhall continue to old age, and fill vp the reckoning of three or foureſcore yeeres; and that hee continueth long in the ſame condition, though hee ſeeth others haſting away, and euen now arriued at the gates of death. As when two boates meet, they which are in the one imagine that themſelues moue not; and the other that paſſeth by them goeth ſwiftly; whereas in truth they both make alike ſpeed; ſo men are ready to thinke that though others run towards death with poſting haſte, yet they in the meane time ſtand at a ſtay, and remaine immoueable: than the which nothing can bee more abſurd, ſeeing wee are all caſt in the ſame mould, and are of the ſame nature and condition, in ſo much as there cannot be a more liuely and perfect looking glaſſe wherein wee may ſee our owne frailtie and mortality, than other men which are of the ſame quality. So that if wee bee not made blind, deafe, and quite ſenſeleſſe, we cannot daily want examples, and (as it were) ſchoole-maſters which may teach vs this leſſon; for who can walke in the Church or places of burial, and not thinke that he alſo muſt bee buried? who can ſee anothers funerals, who is of the ſame nature and condition, and not conclude his owne mortalitie? who can heare the knels and paſſing peales for his neighbours, who were ſome of them yonger, and much ſtronger, and not thinke them heraulds ſent of God, to ſummon him by death to make his appearance?

§. Sect. 7.
The birth death, o liues are i continual conſum Nemo id vnit ſemel nec in ſuret.

But though it were ſuppoſed, that wee could now liue the age of Methuſelah; and were exempted from all outward accidents, and inward infirmities, which might ſhorten our dayes; yet all this were nothing in compariſon of eternitie; in regard whereof that cannot truly bee ſaid to be long, which one day ſhall haue an end; neither doe wee ſlowly attaine vnto that end, from whence wee ſhall neuer returne, when we are once come vnto it: for how can that bee truly long, which is continually in ſpending, and the more dayes are added vnto it, the more it is ſhortened? what firmeneſſe is in that, which in holding ſlippeth out of our hands, and is loſt in keeping? But ſuch is mans life, from which ſo much is detracted, as is added vnto it, and the longer it hath laſted, the more it is waſted, and the neerer it approcheth to its end. Now what can bee called long, which by its continuing and being, waſteth and ceaſeth to be? or how can our dayes be many, which grow fewer and fewer by daily multiplication? how can our liues bee ſlow in paſſing, when that time which ſeemeth to ſtay them, driueth them forward to their iorneyes end? In which reſpect mans life is fitly compared to a weauers web; for as the wouen web continually encreaſeth by the addition of threeds, ſo our age by the addition of dayes; but as the more is added to the cloth, the leſſe is vpon the beame, and the more the one increaſeth, the neerer the other approcheth to its end, and cutting off; ſo the more is added to our age, the more is detracted from our life, and the more time paſt is increaſed, the more time to come is ſhortned and diminiſhed. Thus the time of infancie periſheth, when childhood approcheth; and childhood dieth when youth beginneth; and youth paſſeth, when ripe age commeth; and all is loſt & vaniſheth, when old age and death ſeazeth vpon vs. Whereby it appeareth, that our continuance in the world cannot truly bee called a life, ſeeing it is but a continuall paſſage, wherein wee like pilgrimes trauell vnto death; ſo that whileſt wee liue, we daily die, and neuer ceaſe dying till we ceaſe to liue; our life being nothing elſe but a paſſage from life, and a neerer approching vnto death. For from the day of our birth, to the day of our death, our liues are in a continuall conſumption, and no ſooner doe we begin to liue, but we alſo begin to die; for daily ſome part of our liues are taken away, ſeeing all which is paſt, is periſhed, and whileſt our bodies grow and increaſe, our liues decreaſe and are diminiſhed. They therefore are much deceiued, who account the laſt day onely, the day of their death, ſeeing wee die (as it were) piecemeale, and the longer wee liue, the more death ſeazeth on vs, all the time which is already paſt, being loſt and conſumed. And ſo likewiſe they abuſe themſelues, who feeling no decay of health or ſtrength, doe imagine day after day that they are equally diſtant from death, becauſe the alteration which is in their liues, comming by degrees and by little and little, is not ſo eaſily diſcerned. For as their folly were ridiculous, who not ſenſibly perceiuing the going forward of the ſhadow in the diall, or hand of the clocke, would therefore bee perſwaded that it ſtandeth ſtill; for though they ſee not the motion, yet euery houre they may plainly diſcerne, that it hath moued: ſo alike fooliſh are they, who not ſenſibly perceiuing, how far they haue trauelled towards death, doe conclude with themſelues that they ſtand at a ſtay; ſeeing the more dayes are added to their liues, the neerer they approch to their death, though their paſſage cannot palpably be diſcerned. For as thoſe who ſaile in a ſhip, whether they ſleepe or wake, ſit or ſtand, goe forward with ſome deſire to arriue at the hauen, or backe as farre as the ſhip will ſuffer them with a contrary motion, as deſirous to returne, yet they are ſtill going on, and caried whether they will or no, with the motion of the ſhip whither the skilfull pilot ſitting at the ſterne doth giude and conduct them: ſo we being placed in the world, as in a ſea of mortality, are ſtill ſailing towards the hauen of death, and whether we ſleepe or wake, ſtand ſtill or walke, willingly goe forward, or deſire to continue in the ſame place, both when we are in ſicknes, and when we enjoy perfect health and ſtrength, in the lengthening of the ſeaſons of the yeere, as well as when they ſhorten, wee are daily going on as our great maſter doth appoint and guide vs, and whether wee will or no, we muſt ſtill goe forward; and though our motion may bee ſometime inſenſible, yet in truth wee alwayes make alike haſte, and neuer reſt till we arriue at the hauen of death.

Baſil. Orat. 24. de Morti

§. Sect. 8. The breuitie of mans life ſhewed by a ſpeciall conſideration of the parts thereof.

Now if we would further conſider (as the truth is) that our liues are nothing in compariſon of theirs who were before the floud, and that they are now limited to the ſhort ſtint of three or foure ſcore yeeres, wee may more ſenſibly conclude, that they are leſſe than a moment, in compariſon of eternitie: eſpecially if wee would account of ſo much time onely of this ſhort age, as deſerueth to be entitled with the name of life: for almoſt halfe a mans life is ſpent in ſleepe, which is nothing elſe, but (as it is called) the elder brother of death; and therefore cannot fitly be added in this our diuiſion, to the tearme of life. Now if out of this halfe that remaineth, wee would ſubduct ſo much time as is ſpent in ignorant and vnprofitable childhood, wherein wee neither glorified God, nor did any good to Church or Common-wealth; ſo much as is conſumed in ſickneſſe of body, and diſcontent of mind; ſo much as is ſpent in doing nothing, or in doing that which is ill; ſo much as is croſſed, and made miſerable, by the ſenſe or feare of ſome outward afflictions, or ſome inward griefe; and then looke onely on that part of time remaining which is ſpent in ioy, peace, contentment & a good conſcience, the which in truth only deſerueth to be tearmed a life, all the other being but branches and degrees to death, wee ſhould eaſily perceiue that our liues might bee meaſured with the ſhort ell of a few dayes. But if we will not enter into this conſideration of the ſhortnes of our liues, whileſt it is paſſing, nor learne this leſſon of our mortalitie, and momentany continuance, neither by reaſon nor experience; yet ſhall wee hereafter (when perhaps it will be too late to make any good vſe of our knowledge) eaſily both ſee, and ſeeing acknowledge it; for howſoeuer time to come may ſeeme long in approching, and when it is come, ſomewhat long in ſpending; yet if wee looke backe vpon it when it is once paſſed, it vaniſheth in the view, and appeareth as nothing. Neither in this regard is there any great difference, betweene that age or time which is long, and that which is ſhort, if we looke vpon them when they are both paſſed; for as we can take no faſter hold on a great ſhadow, than on a leſſe, both alike in a moment vaniſhing out of our ſight; ſo the lougeſt life, when it is once ſpent, is all one with the ſhorteſt: neither doth it profit or content vs any more, or afford vnto vs better hold for our further continuance, than if we had liued onely to the time of childhood. Now the reaſon why man, Gods moſt excellent creature on earth, and created after his owne image, ſhould bee ſubject to this mortality, and of ſo momentanie and ſhort continuance, is not originally in the Lord that made him, who being infinit in all eternity, could haue giuen to his creature an euerlaſting being; but in man himſelfe, who hauing the free choice of death and immortality, choſe the worſer part, and preferred the path of death, before the way of life. For the Lord hauing threatned man, that in the day which he tranſgreſſed his Commandement, he ſhould die the death; he notwithſtanding ſinned, and ſo ſinning died. And (as one ſaith) becauſe ſinfull man would not ſtay in the place of true happineſſe where hee was created, God would not ſuffer him to remaine long in the place of his ſuppoſed happineſſe, where he was fallen: and becauſe he willingly loſt his countrey, which he ſhould haue loued, he is vnwillingly drawne out of this place of his pilgrimage, which (though vndeſeruedly) he loueth too much.

Quod tam diu vixerat, quid profuiſſet ei, ſi Adam hodiè mortuus eſſet? Quid diu eſt, vbi finis eſt? Auguſt. ſerm. 42. Tom. 10.

Gen. 2. 17. and 3. 19.

Quia peccator homo illic ſtare noluit vbi conditus fuit, hic verò vbi cecidit diu eſſe prohibetur, &c. Greg. Morla. lib. 12. cap. 4.

§. Sect. 9.

That by reaſon of the ſhortnes of our liues, all things are momentany and vncertaine vnto vs.

And thus haue I ſhewed that theſe worldly things are not mnch to be deſired; becauſe though they were permanent, and would for euer ſtay with vs, yet we are mortall and momentany, and therefore cannot ſtay long with them: for though men ſeeke to eternize their houſes, and labour to multiplie their pleaſures, ſo as the matter of them may continue for many ages; and though they turne all their coine into laſting gold, and furniſh their houſes with moſt durable ſtuffe, and haue all their lands in free-hold, fee-ſimple, and as inheritances for euer; yet all theſe are but names and titles, wherewith they delude themſelues, and the Worlds witchcrafts whereby he intangleth his fooliſh followers, with ſottiſh loue of theſe earthly vanities: for though we may prouide laſting lands, yet not enduring liues; though our poſſeſſions would remaine for euer, yet our ſelues are but of momentanie and ſhort continuance, euery day ready to be taken from them; and though the world would make vs beleeue, and our owne deceiuing hearts are apt to perſwade vs, that our poſſeſſions are fee-ſimples, and our lands and houſes inheritances for euer, yet the truth is wee are but tenants at will, holding all wee enjoy at our great Landlords pleaſure. And when we haue gotten the beſt aſſurance that we can, yet we are more ſure, that we ſhall hold nothing longer than only for tearme of life; for as we brought none of theſe things with vs when wee were borne, ſo wee ſhall take nothing with vs at our buriall, but as wee found them all in the world, ſo when we depart, to the world we muſt leaue them. And this holy Iob confeſſeth; Naked (ſaith hee) came I out of my Mothers wombe, and naked ſhall I returne againe: to which the Apoſtle alluding ſaith, that we brought nothing into the world, and it is certaine that we can carrie nothing out: and the Preacher ſpeaking indefinitely of all men, ſaith, that as man came forth of his Mothers belly, hee ſhall returne naked to goe as he came, and ſhall beare away nothing of his labour, which hee hath cauſed to paſſe by his hand. And howſoeuer there is great difference in mens eſtates whileſt they continue here, ſome liuing in proſperity, and ſome in aduerſitie; ſome in plenty, and ſome in want; yet (as the authour of the booke of Wiſedome affirmeth,) all men haue one entrance vnto life, and alike going out. And this wee may cleerely perceiue in the looking glaſſe of common experience: for how many houſes and lordſhips doe wee ſee, that haue (themſelues remaining) turned their owners out of doores, and changed them for others, not onely of the ſame kindred and poſteritie, but for ſtrangers to the former family? How many haue wee (with the Pſalmiſt) obſerued who haue beene ſtrong in their proſperity, ſpreading themſelues like a greene bay tree, who are now gone, and though we ſhould ſeeke them, yet wee cannot find them? How many haue wee ſeene honoured, and in high places, who are now laid low in the graue, and troden vnder their feet, who not long ſince bowed vnto them, yeelding them at the firſt ſight the reuerence of cap and knee? How many, who haue before time abounded in gold and ſiluer, houſes and lands, who are now ſtripped of all? and whereas formerly they ioyned houſe to houſe, and land to land, as though they could not indure a neighbour, but would (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) dwell alone in the middeſt of the earth; yet are they now contented with leſſe than ſeuen foot of ground; and to haue a multitude dwel-

Iob 1. 21.

1. Tim. 6. 7.

Eccleſ. 5. 14.

Wiſd. 7. 6.

Pſal. 37. 35. 36.

Eſa. 5. 8.

dwelling with them in a little plot. How many haue wee ſeene paſſing their time in pleaſures and delights, eating and drinking delicate and coſtly meates and drinkes, in curious and more coſtly veſſels and plate, ſpending their dayes in hunting and hawking, laughing, and ſporting, dancing, and reuelling, who are now by death ſtripped of all their ioyes, and in all likelihood haue changed them for torments and miſeries, weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, eternall woe and the ſorrowes of hell? How many haue pampred their bodies, that now are the meate of filthie wormes; and glorioſly adorned their backes in rich apparell, that are now couered with rottenneſſe and corruption, and that haue filled the ſtreets with their ſweete ſmelling perfumes, that now would fill them with a greater ſtench? And finally, who exceeded all their neighbours in all manner of worldly proſperity, who being now dead together, are all ſo alike, that no difference at all can bee made betweene them. Looke (ſaith one) into the graues of theſe worldlings, and ſee if you can diſcerne any print of their paſſed pride, or any ſigne remaining of their riches and luxuriouſneſſe. Enquire now where is their glorious apparell, their eaſterne odours, their delightfull maskes and ſhewes, their great retinue, and many ſuters; their coſtly banquets, loud laughter, game-ſome mirth, and immoderate and vnbrideled delights? whither are they now all gone, and what is become of them? where is all their worldly proſperity, and where are they themſelues? What end is there now of both? Come neere and ſearch their ſepulchres, and behold there is nothing but duſt, and the filthy reliques of the wormes feaſt: for this is the end of all humane bodies, as well of thoſe who haue lead their liues in pleaſure and delights, as of thoſe who haue paſſed their dayes in painfull labour. In which reſpect the world is fitly compared to a ſtage, and the life of man to a play, laſting a little longer than the ordinarie time. For as in them one acteth the part of a king, another of a begger; one of a wiſe counſellor, and another of a naturall foole; and great difference there is betweene them whileſt the comedie continueth; but when the play is ended, they are ſtripped of all their apparel, and hauing acted their parts, & come off the ſtage, they are all fellowes, and of equall quality and condition: for euen hee who is greateſt in the world, hath but a ſhort part to act, and when it is done, hee muſt lay aſide all his glory, and become equall to him who is of baſeſt degree. And therefore ſeeing theſe glorious worldlings haue not much greater or longer happineſſe, than hee who acteth his part vpon the ſtage; let none bee proud of ſuch momentany felicity; let no man too much loue riches, or hate pouerty, becauſe men are but perſonated in theſe worldly habites, and when the enterlude is ended, they will be all alike.

§. Sect. 10.
That the things we poſſeſſe are not our owne but the worlds heire-loomes.

Neither are theſe worldly things we poſſeſſe our owne, but the worlds heire-loomes, which when we are gone, muſt remaine vnto poſterity; for if they were truly our owne, then might we when wee goe, carrie them with vs; but now the world whoſe indeed they are, when we depart (whether we will or no) will haue them all left behind, and keepeth them ſtill in ſtore to deceiue with them the following poſterity, as before they haue deceiued their abuſed progenitors. In reſpect whereof the Prophet Habakkuc ſaith, that the faithful ſeeing the folly of wicked worldlings, ſhall take vp a parable, and a taunting prouerbe againſt them; ſaying, woe bee to him that increaſeth that which is not his, (how long?) and to him that in abundance heapeth vp to himſelfe thicke clay. For death like a Porter ſtandeth in the gate, when men are to paſſe out of the world, and cauſeth them whether they will or no to leaue all behind them; ſauing their ſinnes which they haue committed in compaſſing theſe vanities. For well were it with wicked worldlings, if they could as well leaue their ſinne behind them as their ſinfull poſſeſſions; but this is their miſerie, that when their gold forſaketh them, their guilt accompanieth them, and when they are plucked vnwillingly from the things of the earth, whereupon they haue ſet their hearts, (which goeth as neere them as if their body were pulled from their ſoule, or their heart out of their body) their ſinnes and the gaules of an euill conſcience, which they haue gotten in compaſſing them, by wicked and vnlawfull meanes, doe attend as inſeparablie vpon their ſoules, as their ſhadowes vpon their bodyes, and will neuer leaue them, till they haue brought them to the fearefull tribunall of Gods iudgment, and haue there by accuſing them, cauſed the Iudge of Heauen and Earth, to pronounce againſt them the ſentence of eternall condemnation.

Habac. 2.6.

§. Sect. 11.
The ſhortneſſe of their liues who are aduanced vnto honours.

And thus haue I ſhewed that all men are of momentanie and ſhort continuance. Now let vs more ſpecially conſider of the breuitie and ſhortneſſe of their liues who abound in all worldly proſperity; for ſo farre are theſe worldly things from prolonging our liues, and from eſtabliſhing them againſt their their naturall frailty, that they rather cut them off and ſhorten them, as being the meanes when they are abuſed by ſinne, to bring vpon vs Gods heauie iudgements, and to haſten our death, when wee too much ſet our hearts vpon them. And hence it is that in the Scriptures, there is not onely mention made generally of the frailty and momentany continuance of mans life, but more eſpecially of theirs, who abound in all worldly proſperity. So it is ſaid of thoſe who are in honourable place and calling, that their aduancements ſhall not preſerue them from the encounters of death; yea rather it is more ready to ſhoot at them before others, as being the faireſt marke, and greateſt conqueſt. So Eliphaz vſeth an interrogation, the more to aſſure and conuince vs of this truth, Doth not (ſaith he) their dignitie goe away with them? doe they not die, and that without wiſdome? And the Pſalmiſt telleth vs, that man ſhall not continue in honour (or as the word ſignifieth, ſhall not ſtay in his eſtate all night) hee is like the beaſts that die. This their way vttereth their fooliſhneſſe, &c. And though in reſpect of their honourable calling, hee aduanceth them to the glorious title of Gods, yet hee will not attribute immortality vnto them, but telleth them, that though they were Gods they ſhould die like men, and though they were children of the moſt high, yet they ſhould fall like other men: and elſe where he exhorteth vs, not to truſt in princes, becauſe their breath departeth, and they returne to their earth. So the ſonne of Syrach telleth vs, that which we alſo learne by common experience, that hee who is to day a king, to morrow is dead. And therefore ſeeing all our policie, power, and endeauours, cannot continue vs in this honourable condition (for though honours ſhould remaine for euer, yet wee are mortall and of ſhort continuance; ſo that when with all our labour and care wee haue aduanced our ſelues, and by our proud ambition, haue mounted aloft vnto the higheſt pitch of worldly glory, wee haue in this ſtate no manner of ſtay, but when death commeth, and clippeth our ſoaring wings, we preſently fall into the loweſt condition, and become inferiour to the meaneſt liuing creature; for a liuing dogge is better than a dead lyon, as the Wiſe man ſpeaketh) therefore, I ſay, let vs not ſet our hearts on that, with which wee cannot ſtay, nor yet when wee muſt leaue it, haue the power to bequeath it to our poſterity: for as Iob ſpeaketh, when as hee who is aduanced in the world paſſeth away, hee knoweth not if his ſonnes ſhall bee honourable, neither ſhall hee vnderſtand concerning them, whether they ſhall be of low degree: But let vs ſet our hearts and affections vpon thoſe heauenly honors, and eternall glory, which as they will neuer leaue vs, ſo ſhall we neuer be taken fró them.

Iob 4.21.

*Pſal.*44.12.13.

Pſal 82,6.7. and 146.2,3.

Eccleſiaſticus 10.11.

Eccleſ. 9:4.

Iob 14.21.

§. Sect. 12.

That the rich mans life is ſhort and vncertaine.

*Luk.*12.19,21.

And this alſo is the condition of them who abound in all worldly wealth; for howſoeuer rich men truſting in their idoll the earthly mammon, promiſe vnto themſelues long life, and ſay with the foole in the Goſpell, ſoule thou haſt much goods laid vp for many yeeres, liue at eaſe, eate, drinke, and take thy pleaſure, yet in the ſame night God is ready to take away their ſoules, and to place their ſubſtance in other mens poſſeſſions: Howſoeuer they imagine, that their houſes and habitations ſhall continue for euer, euen from generation to generation, and therefore call their lands by their owne names; yet they ſhall not continue in their eſtate, but ſhall bee like the beaſts that periſh, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh. So Ieremie ſaith, that hee who getteth riches and not by right, ſhall leaue them in the middeſt of his dayes, and at his end ſhall be a foole. And in this reſpect the Apoſtle Iames compareth rich men, to the flower of the field, which vaniſheth away; for as when the Sunne riſeth with heate, then the graſſe withereth, and the flower falleth away, and the beautie of the faſhion of it periſheth: euen ſo ſhall the rich man fade away in all his wayes. And this Baruch obſerued in the experience of his times; Where (ſaith hee) are the princes of the heathen, that hoarded vp ſiluer and gold wherein men truſt, and made none end of their gathering? They are come to nought, and gone downe to hell, and other men are come vp in their ſteads. Whereby it appeareth that worldly wealth is no true riches, for then it would make vs eternally happy; nor wee true owners of the things wee poſſeſſe; for if they were ours, wee might take them with vs, whereas now we leaue them behind vs, to become for a time other mens, as before they were ours; and that which is truely our owne we take away with vs; that is, either our vertues and graces, to be crowned and rewarded; or our faults and ſinnes, to be condemned and puniſhed. Neither will they though they abide with vs, preſerue vs from death, that wee alſo may ſtay with them; for death will not bee bribed, and the God of life and death will take no price for the redemption of our liues; for wee haue nothing to giue but that which is his owne; and though all wee poſſeſſe were ours, yet it were not a price ſo ſufficient as would be accepted. And therefore let vs not with worldly men truſt in our goods, nor boaſt our ſelues in the multitude of our riches; for a man can by no ſuch meanes redeeme his brother, he cannot giue his ranſome to God, that he may liue ſtill for euer, and not ſee the graue. So precious is the redemption of their ſoules, and their continuance for euer; for wiſe men die as well as fooles, and leaue their riches for others; as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh. Let vs not greedily gape after abundance, ſeeing a little will ſerue vs for our momentanie liues; for why ſhould wee ouerburthen our ſelues in carying ſuch great prouiſion, for ſo ſhort a iourney? and our liues being ſhort, why ſhould wee looke after long hopes? Why ſhould we be ſo eager in gathering, when as wee cannot ſtay by it when it is gathered?

And

Pſal. 49.11.
*Ier.*17.11.

*Iam.*1.10,

Baruch 3.1 17.19.

*Pſal.*49.6.

Longa nobis deſideria pat via breu in cuſtum ta portamus cam iuxta and peregrin Greg. lib.
breuitatem

And ſtore vp abundance in a ſtrange Country, where we haue no aſſurance of abiding ſo much as a day? If (as the Heathen man well obſerued) wee were aſſured to liue the long age of an Hart or Rauen, our greedineſſe in gathering were the more to be pardoned; but ſeeing wee are mortall men, who ſpeedily haſten to old and decrepit age, it is folly and madneſſe to dote vpon abundance, ſeeing we ſhall conſume our hearts with intolerable ſorrowes, in ſcraping that together, which others when we are gone wil riotouſly ſpend. How much better were it to part with our riches freely for the loue of Chriſt, than to be forced whether we will or no, to leaue them by death? how much better were it, ſeeing we cannot ſtay with them long on earth, to ſend them by the hands of the poore before vs to Heauen, where wee ſhall remayne for euer? For if we keepe them ſtill in our owne cuſtodie, wee ſhall haue no further comfort in them when the day of death approacheth; for as Iob ſaith, What hope hath the Hypocrite when hee hath heaped vp riches, if God take away his ſoule? Finally, if ſeruing God wee want theſe earthly riches and abundance, let vs not bee diſcontented in our ſelues, nor enuie wicked men who flouriſh with them, ſeeing the time is but ſhort, both of our want, and their plenty; for death is hard at hand, and ſeizing on vs both, will ſtrip them of all their ſtore, and further vs to the poſſeſſion of our eternall treaſures. Be not thou afraid (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) when one is made rich, and when the glorie of his houſe is increaſed; for hee ſhall take nothing away when he dieth, neither ſhall his pompe deſcend after him. The like incouragement another giueth to the godly man oppreſſed with pouertie. Doeſt thou ſee them (ſaith he) ſtrouting in the ſtreets, and drawing after them their long and rich traines, whereby they raiſe vp a cloud of duſt in the Aire? Let not theſe things moue thee, for all theſe they ſhal lay aſide at the hour of death, when as thy vertues and holines ſhal ſtill accōpany thee: they are not their own clothes which they weare: for when death commeth they muſt put them off, and leaue them behind them; neither ſhall their glorie deſcend with them. To the ſame purpoſe another exhorteth, Let vs not (ſaith he) afflict our ſelues when wee behold the vnexpected proſperitie of worldly men; ſeeing when we ſee rich men painted on a Table in all their brauery, & poor men in their rags; we neither admire the one as happy, nor pitie the other as being miſerable; & yet theſe dead pictures are oftentimes of longer continuance than liuing men repreſented by them. For a painted table may laſt aboue an hundred yeeres, when as rich men who pleaſe themſelues in their abundance, are often taken frō al in a few moneths.

Yea, but this is their comfort, that whileſt they liue they ſhall enjoy their wealth, and when they die they ſhall leaue it to their heires. It is true indeed that though rich men cannot promiſe vnto themſelues long life, yet they may be aſſured that they ſhall haue heires, but if they meane by heires their own children and poſteritie, they ground their hopes and comforts vpon a falſe and deceiueable ground; for howſoeuer men may prouide heritages, yet it is God who appointeth heires: and though they may rake and ſcrape together riches with a purpoſe to bequeath them to their friends, when themſelues can keepe them no longer; yet oftentimes God with his ouerruling hand ſo diſpoſes of them, that they neuer enjoy them. For ſome outliue their heires, and hauing loſt their poſteritie and kindred, are forced whether they will or no, to leaue vnto ſtrangers the fruits of their labours. Others haue heires vnto whom they leaue their goods, but they are not ſure that they ſhall enjoy them; for the Children doe not alwayes roſt that which their Fathers caught in hunting; but as many enjoy thoſe goods which were neuer bequeathed them, ſo many vnto whom they were bequeathed neuer doe enjoy them, it being onely in their power to giue their riches, and bequeath Legacies to whom they will, but not to maintaine their gift when they are gone, nor to vphold that right vnto which they haue intitled them. And this the Pſalmiſt plainly affirmeth: Doubtleſſe (ſaith he) man walketh in a ſhadow, and diſquieteth himſelfe in vaine; he heapeth vp riches, and cannot tell who ſhall gather them. To the ſame purpoſe Iob ſaith, that though the children of wicked men be in great number, the ſword ſhall deſtroy them, and his poſteritie ſhall not be ſatisfied with bread. His remnant ſhall be buried in death, and his widowes ſhall not weepe. Though he ſhould heape vp ſiluer as the duſt, and prepare raiment as the clay, he may prepare it, but the iuſt ſhall put it on, and the innocent ſhall diuide the ſiluer. Yea not onely ſtrangers doe often become heires, but ſometimes alſo enemies, and thoſe whom a man in his life moſt hateth, after his death make a prey of his riches, and ſcornfully inſult in his ſpoyle. In which reſpect one ſaith, that the couetous mans labour is certaine, but the fruit of his labours vncertaine. For hee taketh paines and conſumeth himſelfe with cares in gathering riches, and after his death his inheritance and poſſeſſions come into the hands of his enemies, who haue circūuented him with innumerable treacheries, and taking onely with him his ſins, hee leaueth his ſubſtance to other men. Now what can be more miſerable, than to tire and ſpend a mans ſelfe with pains, that his enemies may reape all the profit? And to with-hold euen neceſſaries from ones own vſe for the increaſing of that wealth which his enemies will ſpend

That the hope of worldlings is vaine & vncertaine, who thinke to leaue all to their heires and children.

Pſal.39.6.

Iob 27.14,15, 16, & 20,16.

Chryſoſt. ad pop. Antioch. Hom. 2. Tom. 4.

ſpend it in ſuperfluitie and exceſſe? In which reſpect one juſtly much preferreth the riches of faith and a good conſcience, before the wealth of the World. Faith (ſaith he) laboureth for God, and couetouſneſſe for the tempter; that gathereth ſuch things as profit a mans ſelfe, this heapeth vp thoſe which profit others. And what more vaine, than to labour for other men, and not know who ſhall be his heire? For who can tell whether his owne Sonne, or Nephew ſhall ſuruiue him? Seeing the Heire oftentimes goeth before the Teſtator to the buriall; or out-liuing him, riotouſly deuoureth the inheritance, or luxuriouſly ſcattereth it; or being fooliſh cannot defend it; or loſeth it by confiſcation, yea, oftentimes their enemie is their Heire, and the Succeſſour inſulteth ouer the deceaſed, perſecuting thoſe whom he loued, and ſelling for ſlaues thoſe whom he tenderly loued. But though he knew who ſhould inherit his labours, and bee ſure to haue an Heire of his owne chuſing, yet how can hee tell what he will proue? Whether a Wiſeman or a Foole; a frugall Sauer, or a waſtfull Spender; one who will thankfully remember his Predeceſſour and Benefactour, or one that will forget him, vnleſſe it be to cenſure his infirmities? Finally, whether ſuch an one as will ſhed gratefull teares at his Funerals, or ſmile vnder his cloſe Hood? And this the Wiſe man noted as a great vanitie, which made euen his life bitter vnto him. I hated (ſaith he) my life, and alſo my labour wherein I had trauelled vnder the Sun, which I ſhall leaue to the man that ſhall be after me. And who knoweth whether he ſhall be wiſe or fooliſh? Yet ſhall he haue rule ouer all my labour, wherein I haue trauelled, and wherein I haue ſhewed my ſelfe wiſe vnder the Sunne, this is alſo vanitie, &c. But if theſe momentany riches, which are thus bequeathed to poſterity, haue beene defiled with ſinne, either becauſe they haue beene vnlawfully gotten, as by greedie couetouſneſſe, fraud, deceit, cruelty and oppreſſion; they will not proue greatly beneficiall, either to Heire or Predeceſſour: for as he leaueth vnto his child his wealth, ſo alſo euile, becauſe he is the offſpring of ſuch a Father, and (as it were) a young one of the old Serpent, which though he haue done no hurt hitherto by reaſon that he is young, yet it is feared he will doe, when he commeth to age, not onely becauſe hee is likely to reſemble his Fathers nature, but alſo hath beene poyſoned with his precepts of couetouſneſſe in his very youth. For as one obſerueth, when rich Miſers ſee that they can keepe their goods no longer than for tearme of life, they confirme and ſtrengthen their Heires, by reading vnto them Lectures of auarice, making them to become impregnable Caſtles, wherein their riches may be reſerued after their departure. Yea, oftentimes with their wealth they leaue vnto them Gods heauy anger for their injuſtice, and wicked getting, or keeping their riches, which burneth againſt ſinners vnto the third and fourth generation, and often conſumeth their Houſe and whole Poſteritie; and with their ſin they leaue their ſhame and puniſhment; as the Prophet ſpeaketh: Woe vnto him (ſaith hee) that is giuen to the getting of vnlawfull gaine for his houſe, that hee may place his neſt on high, and be deliuered from the power of euill. Thou haſt conſulted ſhame to thy houſe, by deſtroying many people, and haſt ſinned againſt thine owne ſoule. In which reſpect the couetous man, as he is not much beneficiall to his Heire, ſo leſſe vnto himſelfe; for what will it profit him after his momentany fruition of the Mammon of iniquitie, when being caſt into Hell fire, and there tormented with intolerable torments, hee ſhall remember, that hee hath left abundance of wealth to his poſteritie? Seeing neither hee nor they, can with all this riches releaſe him from his paine, nor procure ſo much as a drop of cold water to allay a little his burning heate. For if when wee haue all theſe goods in our owne poſſeſſion, they will not eaſe or comfort vs in the extremitie of the Toothake only, what conſolation or refreſhing can bee expected from them, being in the keeping of others, when body and ſoule ſhall ſuffer for euer the wrath of God, and the grieuous tortures of the damned ſpirits?

Ambroſ. in Pſal. 118. enarrat. Tom. 4.

Fletus heredis ſub perſona riſus eſt.

Eccleſ. 2. 17, 18, 19.

Plutarch. de cupidit. diuitiarum.

Habac. 2. 9.

Finally, though voluptuous men abound in all delights, yet ſhall they not long enjoy them; for though they were conſtant, yet themſelues are fugitiue, though their pleaſures are many, yet their yeeres being few, they cannot long rejoyce in them. So Iob ſpeaking of voluptuous wicked men, ſaith, that they take the Tabret and Harpe, and rejoyce in the ſound of the Organs; they ſpend their dayes in wealth, and ſuddenly they goe downe to the graue. Neither can pleaſures, though they neuer ſo much delight vs, make our joyes immortall, or any whit prolong our liues; yea, contrariwiſe (as I haue ſhewed) being immoderately vſed, they are the ordinary meanes to ſhorten life, and to bring vntimely and immature death. But howſoeuer theſe pleaſures of the World are moſt momentany, both in reſpect of themſelues, and alſo in reſpect of vs, yet their puniſhment when they are abuſed is not of ſo ſhort continuance; for when voluptuous men ſhall leaue their delights, oftentimes in the middeſt of their dayes, that fearefull woe denounced by Sauiour Chriſt ſhal accompany them for euer: Woe be vnto you (ſaith he) that now laugh, for yee ſhall waile and weepe. So the Apoſtle Peter ſaith, that thoſe who are led with ſenſualitie, are made to be deſtroyed; and ſhall receiue the wages of vnrighteouſneſſe, as they which count it pleaſure

§. Sect.
That the
of volup men are and full of frailtie.

Iob 21. 1

Luke 6. 2

2. Pet. 2.

to liue deliciouſly for a ſeaſon. And therefore ſeeing theſe worldly pleaſures are ſo ſhort & momentany, both in reſpect of themſelues and vs, and ſeeing alſo their fruition is temporary, and their puniſhment eternall; let vs not ſet our hearts vpon them, but rather on thoſe heauenly joyes, which ſhall be eternall to vs, and we to them; and hauing with Moſes reſpect vnto the recompence of reward, let vs chaſe rather to ſuffer aduerſity with the children of God, than to enioy the pleaſures of ſinne which ſhall laſt but for a ſeaſon. For who would ſettle his loue on theſe flitting vanities? Who would place his affections on worldly pleaſures, chambring and wantonneſſe, ſurfeiting and drunkenneſſe, delightfull ſports and daintie fare, ſweete ſmels and coſtly rayment, wherby this lumpe of fleſh is pleaſed and pampered; if he conſider, that within a while his bodie ſhall bee the meate of Wormes, his ſweet perfumes turned into lothſome ſtinke, his rich attire into a poore winding ſheet, his tender fleſh, and faire skin, into rottenneſſe and putrefaction; and not rather on thoſe heauenly and vnſpeakable joyes, in which wee ſhall euer joy, they continuing with vs, and wee with them for euermore?

And thus haue I ſhewed, not only that the World, and the things thereof are momentany and vncertaine, but that wee alſo are mortall, and our liues of ſhort continuance: by reaſon whereof nothing can bee vnto vs firme and durable, becauſe our ſelues, whileſt we continue in theſe earthly Tabernacles are ſtill flitting, and altogether vncertaine of our abode; for nothing is ſtedfaſt to him who is vnſtedfaſt, nothing eternall, to him who is fraile and mortall. And therefore ſeeing we haue no ſure hold of the things of this life, let vs not ſet our hearts vpon them; for though we be called their Maſters and Owners, yet wee haue in them but a momentany intereſt, and though they be with vs, yet they are not ours; ſeeing we are daily readie to leaue them. Let vs build in earth Tabernacles, and not Manſion houſes, ſeeing wee are ſtill remouing, and cannot long ſtay. We are Pilgrimes here, and therefore we ſhould not ſet our affections on the earth, and earthly things, where we ſhall reſt (as it were) but one night, and then be gone; but on the joyes reſerued for vs in our owne Country, where we ſhall remaine for euer. We are now Souldiers in the Campe, and therefore there is neither time nor place heere to build vs Houſes, to purchaſe Lands, to ſow, plant, or play the Merchants, with a purpoſe of continuing here ſtill; only Tents are fitteſt for vs, till hauing gotten the victory, wee ſhall with triumph be receiued into our heauenly City: if wee place our treaſures heere, we may die in the battell and ſo loſe all, and therefore let vs make that our treaſurie, where we ſhall liue for euer. And as the Apoſtle exhorteth vs, If wee bee riſen with Chriſt, let vs ſeeke thoſe things which are aboue, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God; and ſet our affections on things which are aboue, and not on things which we haue on the earth; for wee are dead (in the World) and our life is hid with Chriſt in God. And for as much as our life is momentany, let vs labour to improue it to the beſt purpoſes; and eſpecially before we die, let vs take care that our ſins may die before vs. If wee were ſure that wee ſhould liue but one yeere, no man would deferre his repentance, but forſaking his former wicked wayes, would betake himſelfe to the ſeruice of God with all zeale and deuotion; what folly therefore and madneſſe is it, to deferre our repentance and amendment, ſeeing we haue no aſſurance of liuing a moneth, no not a ſhort minute or the leaſt moment? Why ſhould wee be ſo frugall of the time which is certaine, and ſo prodigall of that which is vncertaine? If wee were certainly aſſured of continuing a yeere longer only, yet wee might with much more ſafety deferre our repentance to the latter end; but now that our liues are ſo momentany and vncertaine, that we are not aſſured of liuing one day longer, what frenzie ſhould ſo poſſeſſe vs, which ſhould cauſe vs to make any delay of our amendment, vpon which the eternall ſaluation of our ſoules dependeth? Let vs therefore whileſt this ſhort and vncertaine time laſteth, forſake and mortifie our ſinnes and corruptions, that when death taketh vs away, they may not accompany vs to judgement. Let vs ſet our hearts vpon Gods ſpirituall graces, and in compariſon of them contemne the World, and worldly vanities; for theſe will either leaue vs or we them; but they will neuer forſake vs, no not in death; but departing from the World, we ſhall carrie with vs theſe rich treaſures, and hauing theſe precious jewels in our hands, wee ſhall with joy and comfort meete the Bridegroome, and preſent our ſelues in Gods preſence, offering vnto him his owne gifts and graces, to bee rewarded and crowned with glory and euerlaſting happineſſe. Finally, ſeeing our life is but a ſhadow, let vs haſten to the Sunne of righteouſneſſe, that hee with his vitall heate may preſerue vs from the cold of this ſhade: let vs ſet our hearts vpon him with all loue and affection, and ſo ſhall wee be ſure for euer to enjoy our loue, and in him to find eternall happines and endleſſe glory, ſeeing hee being life it ſelfe dieth not, and with his quickening Spirit will make vs immortall, and to liue eternally with him who is eternall. Whereas contrariwiſe, if with the fiue fooliſh Virgins, we haue not the pure Oile of Gods ſanctifying graces ſhining in our Lamps, we ſhall be ſhut out of the bridall Chamber, and when we would moſt be Coloſſ.3.1,2.

Morieris? Hoc vnum citra diem mortis præſta morian-tur ante te vitia; Senec.

Eccleſ.3.14.

Vmbra eſt vita hæc: feſtina ad ſolem iuſtitiæ, vt te defendat ab vmbra huius frigore; & calorem tibi profundat æſtiuum, Ambroſ. in Pſal.118.Ser.5.

knowne, wee ſhall heare that fearefull ſentence, Depart from me I know yee not: if we deferre our repentance, and doe not vſe the meanes appointed by God whereby wee may be aſſured of our ſaluation. If wee doe not hunger and thirſt after Chriſt and his righteouſneſſe; and ſetting our loue and affections vpon our heauenly Countrie, ſeeke and endeauour with all our powers, to bee enfranchiſed, and made free Burgeſſes of the new Ieruſalem; theſe gracious offers will once be pulled backe, and the acceptable time and day of ſaluation will within a while be paſſed, neuer again to be recalled. Whileſt the vnfaithfull Steward waſteth his Maſters goods about his owne pleaſures, ruffling it out in his Silkes and Veluets, and reuelling in all delightfull ſports & pleaſing paſtimes; eating and drinking, maſquing and dancing, commanding and ouer-ruling all his fellow ſeruants, euery one enuieth his happineſſe, and wiſh in their hearts that they were like him; but when the day of reckoning commeth, that hee muſt leaue his place, and giue an account of his Stewardſhip to a juſt and powerfull Maſter, then all his former pompe and pleaſure vaniſheth like a dreame, and the meaneſt of his fellow ſeruants, which is aſſured of his owne integritie, and his Maſters loue, would not now change with him eſtates, becauſe his glory is paſt, and his reckoning to come: And ſo howſoeuer Gods poore Seruants may for a while enuie the proſperitie of wicked Worldlings, when they ſee their brauery, abundance and great authoritie and command; yet when the day of their death being come, they are turned out of all, and readie to be haled to the barre of Gods judgement, to giue an account of his miſ-ſpent talents, and to anſwere for their cruel tyrannizing ouer their fellow ſeruants; then they ſee how much a good conſcience is better than earthly treaſures, and the aſſurance of Gods loue and their ſaluation, to be preferred before the vaniſhing glory of the World; and now they would not change condition with them, whom not long ſince they enuied, though they might haue the Monarchie of the whole earth to boot. For alas, what will their paſſed pleaſures, honours and riches, now profit them, when being ſtript of all, they muſt giue their account at the Tribunall ſeat of Gods judgement, for their often abuſing theſe rich gifts? yea, what miſery will it now bee, that they haue beene ſo happy, when as they ſhall be forſaken of all, and change their eſtate, hauing no hope nor comfort of bettering themſelues in the alteration? yea, what trembling and feare ſhall then poſſeſſe them, when they leaue that eſtate which they know, and muſt change for one which they know not? And when being abandoned of all their delights, they ſhall haue only their ſinnes attending on them; not now diſguiſed and gilded ouer as heretofore, but in their owne vgly ſhape, and horrible deformitie as lothſome as the Deuill, and as black as Hell? O what would they not now giue to haue their quietus eſt, and Gods Debt-booke cancelled? At what price would they refuſe a good conſcience, if it were offered them to ſale? how would they now with readines ſtrip themſelues out of al, to procure the rich Robe of Chriſt Ieſus his righteouſneſſe, that therein they might with comfort appeare before their Iudge? Or if they die of a ſpirituall lethargie, and be rocked aſleepe of the Deuill in the cradle of ſecuritie, and ſo carried quietly into Hell, ſo as they haue no leaſure to thinke of theſe things, or time to entertaine theſe fearefull Meditations; yet how much more helliſh horrour haue they when they are awakened out of their deepe ſleepe, with thoſe intolerable tortures? O how doe they then befoole themſelues, for hauing preferred Temporalties before Eternities, and made ſale of their ſoules, for earthly vanities? What paines would they now refuſe, to free themſelues out of this damned condition, if they might liue againe? How many Worlds would they now giue, for one houre of that acceptable time, which they haue formerly miſ-ſpent in whole yeeres with careleſſe neglect; that they might therein repent of their ſinnes, and ſo eſcape that purſuing wrath of God, and thoſe helliſh and eternall torments? But all too late, for now the time is paſt, the ſentence pronounced, the gate of Heauen ſhut, and condemnation, and the fearefull execution thereof begun, which ſhall neuer find terme or time to end. O let vs therefore now whileſt wee haue ſpace, preuent theſe after-reckonings; and becauſe our liues are momentany and vncertaine, let vs not deferre the day of repentance, vpon which dependeth our ſaluation, but ſo ſpend this vncertaine time, that we may be certaine to eſcape theſe euerlaſting puniſhments, and to inherit thoſe heauenly joyes, which being once begun ſhall neuer end, but bring all glorie without miſerie, and felicitie with eternitie.

Chap. XXX.

Of the great hurt which worldly things bring to their Owners, when they ſet their hearts vpon them, and firſt by weaning their hearts from God, and making them Idolaters.

§. Sect. I
That worl
things are hurtfull to thoſe who moderatly loue them.

HAuing ſhewed in the former part of this Booke, that though wee much eſteeme, ſet our hearts vpon, and ſeeke theſe worldly things, yet wee cannot by all our loue and labour, bee aſſured that they will bring vnto vs any good: It now followeth, that according to my order propounded, I alſo proue that they bring vnto vs much euill; not in themſelues, and in their owne nature; for ſo (as I haue ſhewed) they are good, and the bleſſings of God: but through our corruption, whereby wee are moſt prone to abuſe them vnto euill. Neither vnto all men (for vnto Gods children, who haue a right vſe of them, they are both good, and alſo inſtruments and furtherances of well doing) but vnto carnall Worldlings, who ouervalue, & ſet their hearts vpon them, ſeeking them with greater labour and loue, than either Gods ſpirituall graces, or heauenly ioyes: whereby they turne theſe bleſſings of God into curſes, and his gracious benefits, into cumberſome burthens, and pernicious euils; as being vnto them the cauſes and occaſions of much ſinne and wickedneſſe. For as God by his infinite goodneſſe, doth bring good out of euill; ſo contrariwiſe Satan, and our corrupt nature, being oppoſite vnto him, are readie through their ſinfull abuſe, to bring euill out of good, and to make thoſe things which in their own nature are helpes and furtherances to all holy duties, and to the aduancing of Gods glory and our ſaluation; to become prouocations vnto ſinne, and the meanes of Gods diſhonour, and our deſtruction. That therefore I may not be miſtaken in the following diſcourſe, I would pre-admoniſh the Reader once for all, that whereas I ſhew the manifold miſchiefes which accompany the fruition of theſe worldly things, it is not my meaning to derogate any whit from theſe bleſſings of God, or to aſcribe theſe euils vnto them, in their owne nature; or finally to proue that they are abſolutely vnlawfull in their vſe and poſſeſſion vnto all men indefinitely; but only to ſhew that they degenerate from their owne nature, and become the occaſions of all the enſuing euils to carnall Worldlings alone, when as they eſteeme, loue, and ſeeke them, more than the rich treaſures of ſpirituall graces, and eternall glory. And of theſe I may truely ſay with the Prophet, that they doe not only truſt in vanitie, ſetting their hearts and affections vpon things which are of no worth, but alſo that in thus doing, they conceiue miſchiefe, and bring forth iniquitie. In the former reſpect he compareth the painfull indeuours of carnall Worldlings to the weauing of the Spiders web, which is a worke of great pains, and ſmall profit; for as hee ſaith, their webs ſhall be no garment, neither ſhall they couer themſelues with their labours; and in the latter, to the hatching of the Cockatrices egs; which is no leſſe painfull, than full of danger: for as the brooding Hen ſitteth cloſe vpon theſe Serpents egges, and depriueth her ſelfe willingly not only of libertie, but alſo of food, that ſhe may bring forth her yong; and after all this labour doth hatch a pernicious brood, who begin their miſchiefe with the deſtruction of her, which hath taken all this paines in bringing them forth: ſo Worldlings are very laborious in hatching their deſires, and in bringing forth the brood of worldly vanities, depriuing themſelues of their liked libertie, yea, euen of neceſſaries for backe and belly; and when all is done (not by reaſon of any poyſon in the things themſelues, but only that which they communicate vnto them, whileſt they houer ouer them with their greedie deſires) they become vnto them deadly ſtinging Serpents, as being occaſions and motiues vnto ſin, which will wound them to death, and bring them to eternall deſtruction of body and ſoule. For as meate it ſelfe being moderately vſed becommeth wholſome nouriſhment, whereby the body is refreſhed, and the life preſerued; but if it be eaten with a greedy appetite, and in exceſſiue meaſure, it oppreſſeth the ſtomacke, and becommeth the Mother and Nurſe of all diſeaſes: ſo if wee ſeeke theſe things with moderate loue, and in temperate meaſure, they will refreſh and comfort our hearts and ſoules, ſo as they will be more cheerefull and ſtrong in performing the duties and workes of godlineſſe; whereas if with a greedy deſire wee hunger after them, and not contenting our ſelues with ſufficiencie, labour after ſuperfluitie, our ſoules wil be ſurcharged with a ſpirituall ſurfet, and the diſeaſes of ſin which bring with them eternal death, will abound in vs to our deſtruction.

§. Sect. 2.
That worldly honours bring much hurt to thoſe who dote vpon them.

Thus howſoeuer Honours and earthly Preferments are (as before I haue ſhewed) good and lawfull, profitable and to be eſteemed with due reſpect, yet if they be exceſſiuely ouer-ualued aboue their worth, and preferred in our judgement and affection before ſpirituall graces and heauenly glory; they preſently become not onely vain and vnprofitable to them that thus haue them, but alſo hurtfull and pernicious. Becauſe ouer-prizing them in their judgement, and ouer fondly doting on them in their affection, and in both preferring them before thoſe ſpirituall and heauenly excellencies; they will be accordingly ready at all times, to hazard the loſſe, yea, to make a voluntarie forfeiture of thoſe things, which in truth are infinitely better, ſo they may either gaine or retaine theſe worldly trifles, which in their deluded judgment, and corrupted affection, they imagine to be of greater worth. For who ſeeth not that ambitious men immoderately louing, and exceſſiuely prizing Honours, and the glory of the World, are ready to run headlong into all manner of ſinne, and by ſinning, to hazard the loſſe of grace and glory, all opinion of vertue, and hope of happines, either for the compaſſing or maintayning of their reputation and preferment? For thus they are ready to raiſe themſelues by others ruines; to honour themſelues by diſhonouring God; to aſpire vnto preferments, by Machiauellian policies; to play the Hypocrites in making a ſemblance and ſhew of thoſe vertues and good parts which were neuer in them, and a thouſand ſuch like wicked courſes, whereby when they haue attained vnto their deſired Honours, they are now readie to repeate their leſſon againe, and againe, and to renue, yea, adde vnto their former wickedneſſe, as oft as occaſion is offered, to maintaine their reputation, and preſerue their honour from impeachment. In regard whereof one exhorteth vs to flee vaine glory and ambition, as being a ſweet robber of ſpirituall riches, a pleaſant enemy of our ſoules, the moth of vertue, a flattering ſpoyler of all our goods, a couerer and colourer of deceitfull poyſon, vnder the ſhew and taſt of the ſweeteſt honey, reaching out to the minds of men, theſe impoyſoning cups of ſinne, whereof if they drinke they eternally periſh. To which purpoſe another ſaith, that vain glory flieth lightly about as being vain, and of no waight, and lightly and eaſily pierceth into mens hearts; & yet it inflicteth no light wound, but ſuddenly killeth, and deſtroyeth at vnawares.

Baſil.Conſtit.
Monaſt.cap.11

Vanagloria leuiter volat, leuiter penetrat, ſed non leue infligit vulnus: Citò interficit. Bernard. in Pſal. qui habitat. Serm.6.

§.Sect. 3.
That riches hurt thoſe who immoderately deſire them, by drawing them into all ſinne.

Thus alſo riches are hurtfull and pernicious to thoſe who ouer-value their true worth in their judgements, and ſetting their hearts vpon them, doe with all greedineſſe deſire & ſeeke them, more than Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly glory; ſeeing vnto ſuch they are not onely the Cauſes and Occaſions, but alſo the inſtruments and meanes of all ſinne and wickednes. For they who ſet their hearts vpon this earthly Mammon, are ready (to obtaine their loue) with Iudas and Demas to ſell all their part in Chriſt and his ſaluation, to make ſhipwracke of a good conſcience, and of all ſpirituall graces, to forgoe their right in our heauenly inheritance in Gods Kingdome, and to expoſe their bodies and ſoules to temporall and eternall puniſhments, by vſing all ſinfull and wicked meanes to get, keepe, or increaſe their wealth. In reſpect whereof the Prophet Dauid maketh couetouſnes, and obedience vnto Gods Law flat oppoſites, which will by no meanes be reconciled and ſtand together: Incline my heart (ſaith he) vnto thy teſtimonies, and not to couetouſneſſe. And the Apoſtle Paul doubteth not to affirme, that the immoderate deſire of money is the root of all euill; becauſe if men haue it not, they are readie to vſe all vnlawfull meanes to get it; if they haue it, they vſe the like wicked meanes to keepe it. So that (as one ſaith) it is a matter of great difficultie to haue riches dwelling with vs, and not to be corrupted with their acquaintance and neighbourhood. The which as it is true of al wealth immoderatly loued, ſo eſpecially when in reſpect of quantity it is grown to abundance and ſuperfluitie; for as the Ship when it is ouer-loaded cannot bee kept from ſinking in the leaſt tempeſt, by all the care and cunning of the skilfull Pilot, vnleſſe it be vnburthened of ſome part of its lading: ſo when our minds are ſurcharged with theſe worldly ſuperfluities, it is almoſt impoſſible with all our care and vigilance to keepe our ſoules from ſinking into the gulph of ſinne, vnleſſe we vnburthen our ſelues of this abundance, by beſtowing our ſuperfluities on charitable vſes, and in the relieuing of our poore Brethren. In regard whereof one truly ſaith, that he who addeth to the wealth of a couetous man, giueth Wine to him who is ſicke of a burning Feuer, Honey to a cholericke man, banqueting diſhes to a ſicke and ſurfeited ſtomacke; which though they may pleaſe the taſte, yet they increaſe the diſeaſe, and hurt in ſtead of helping. For they who abound in riches doe commonly keepe them like the vnprofitable ſeruants Talent, doing no good with them to themſelues or others; or elſe imploy them in ſuch ſinfull ſeruices, that they were better to haue lien hid ſtill, than to become the inſtruments of wickedneſſe, and furtherances vnto ſinne. As for example, when they are abuſed to ſurfeiting and drunkenneſſe, and ſpent vpon Harlots and Paraſites, in gaming and reuelling, in exceſſiue brauery, or in furthering reuenge, oppreſſion and crueltie: for then they become the Harbingers of Hell, and like Pioners, ſmooth and lay open the way which leadeth to deſtruction. In reſpect of which ſinfull abuſes, the Wiſeman ſaith, that he had obſerued, riches reſerued to the Owners thereof for their euill: and the ſonne of Syrach affirmeth, that many are deſtroyed by reaſon of gold, and haue found their deſtruction before them. And in regard of this harmefulneſſe of abuſed riches, they are by one compared vnto thornes, as our Sauiour Chriſt alſo himſelfe likeneth them: for as Thornes are barren of fruits, ſo they of good workes; as they pricke the hands that touch thē, ſo theſe the hearts that are ſet vpon them; as they are eaſily caught with the fire, and are hated of the Husbandman, ſo theſe being hated of God, are eaſily conſumed with the fire of his diſpleaſure; and finally, as in them harmefull Beaſts, Vipers, and Scorpions doe hide themſelues, that they may doe a miſchiefe at vnawares; ſo in theſe lurke many ſinnes and corruptions which daily wound and ſting the ſoule to death eternall. So elſewhere he asketh what happineſſe there is in the poſſeſſion of riches? Vnleſſe (ſaith hee) we account them happy which keepe wilde and ſauage beaſts, who dare not come neere, nor cannot touch them without feare and trembling: for ſo couetous men keeping riches, receiue from them, as from cruell Beaſts,

*Pſal.*119.36.

1.*Tim.*6.10.
Multum eſt non corrumpi diuitiarum contubernio, Senec. Epiſt.20.

Plutarch.

*Eccleſ.*5.1

*Eccluſ.*31.

Chryſoſt.in Ioan.Hom.

Chryſoſt.in 1.Cor.Hom.

Beaſts, many hundred wounds in their ſoules and conſciences; although in a diuers maner: for wild beaſts doe hurt when they are brought abroade; but theſe when they are kept within, kill their keeper, and become harmleſſe when they are ſet at liberty. Vpon which manifold harmes happening through the abuſe of riches, another groundeth an affectuall diſſuaſion from louing or ſeeking them ouermuch. How long (ſaith hee) will you ſpend your liues in getting gold, which is nothing elſe but a ſnare of ſoules, the hooke of death, and baite of ſinne? How long will yee greedily gape after riches, the vſuall cauſes of warre and diſcord? for for their ſakes kinsfolkes neuer thinke what nature requireth; brethren behold one another with froward and crabbed countenances; and thirſt after one anothers blood; for their ſake the Woods harbour theeues, and Cities ſycophants and ſlanderers: who but they are the parents and patrons of lying, and the inuenters and framers of falſe accuſations? what other author is there of periurie and trecherie? and yet they were giuen vs of God, for helpes to preſerue life, and not as cauſes, occaſions, and meanes to help vs forward in the courſe of wickedneſſe.

Finally, thoſe who eſteeme voluptuous pleaſures aboue their worth, and ſet their hearts vpon theſe vanities, ſhall in the end find them, not onely vnprofitable, but alſo hurtfull and pernicious, as being the cauſes both of ſinne and puniſhment. For hee who ſetteth his mind vpon theſe worldly delights, is ready to runne any wicked courſe for the getting or continuing of them; and to hazard the loſſe of the joyes of Heauen, for the obtaining or keeping of his pleaſures on earth. Neither are theſe pleaſures vnto them cauſes onely of ſinne, but are alſo themſelues turned into ſinne, when as they vſe them in exceſſe, or without moderation; for ſeeing their goodneſſe wholly conſiſteth in their iuſt meaſure, therefore when this meaſure is exceeded they loſe all their goodnes, and become euill and wicked; to ſay nothing of them which are ſinfull, not onely in reſpect of their quantitie and exceſſe, but alſo in their owne nature and qualitie. And as they vſually are the cauſes and occaſions of ſinne, ſo alſo of puniſhment; for ſeeing voluptuous men abuſe Gods grace vnto wantonneſſe, therefore in his juſt iudgement, hee turneth their feaſts into mourning, and their ſongs into lamentation, as the Prophet ſpeaketh; & as the Wiſeman affirmeth, euen in laughing, their heart is ſorrowfull, & the end of their mirth is heauines. Neither in truth doe they onely cauſe after-puniſhments in the world to come; but alſo bring with them grieuous puniſhments euen in this life, as being exceedingly pernicious both to body and ſoule. For who ſeeth not that theſe immoderate pleaſures, being loued and imbraced; as ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe, chambring and wantonneſſe, Venery and filthineſſe, doe both deforme the body, and bring it to a monſtrous ſhape, making the eyes red, the cheeks puft vp, or vntimely wrinkled, the teeth rotten, the breath ſtinking, and the belly ſwollen; and alſo doe weaken the ſtrength and impaire the health; looſening the ſinewes, making the joynts and limbs lame, and filling euery ſeuerall part with grieuous diſeaſes? In which reſpect they are fitly compared to ſweet poiſons, which are pleaſant in the ſwallowing downe, but ſoone after they no leſſe torment, than they did before delight, either bringing immature death, or grieuous inward diſeaſes, & outward ſores: for ſo howſoeuer theſe pleaſures doe delight whileſt they are in taſting, yet ſometime they kill outright, and ſometimes bring tedious ſickneſſes, which torment to death, with grieuous tortures. And yet theſe euils are ſmall which they bring vpon the body, in compariſon of thoſe which they bring vpon the ſoule; for where they are entertained, they ſpoile the ſoule of all vertues and graces (neither will, as one ſaith, vertue long continue in the kingdome of pleaſure) and fill it full of all wickedneſſe; for as an ancient affirmeth, luxurious ſnes hath no end, nor obſerueth diſcipline, but is the ſeminary and fountaine of all vices. Neither doe I contradict the Apoſtle, who ſaith that couetouſneſſe is the root of all euill, becauſe luxuriouſneſſe is the mother of couetouſneſſe; for when a man with riot hath exhauſted his owne eſtate, hee greedily deſireth to ſeaze vpon other mens: to which purpoſe elſewhere hee ſaith, that gluttonie beginneth firſt with neceſſitie, and exceeding meaſure becommeth pleaſure, and proceeding from that which is lawfull, to that which is vnlawfull, it bringeth forth fooliſh mirth, filthy ſcurrilitie, much babling, heauines of the ſenſes, and dulneſſe of vnderſtanding, &c. and ſo whileſt it delighteth the eyes, and tickleth the eares, it inflicteth deepe wounds into the very ſoule. In reſpect of which manifold euils which they bring, both vnto body and ſoule, they are fitly compared to the locuſts in the Reuelation, which haue the beautifull faces of men, the haire of women, and on their heads crownes of gold; but withall they haue the teeth of Lyons ready to deuoure, and teare all in pieces; or like vnto Serpents, which whileſt with their beautifull colours they delight the eye, they are ready with their ſtings to conuey mortall poyſon to the heart. The conſideration whereof ſhould moue vs with all carefulnes to take heed of theſe bewitching cups; for though theſe pleaſant drinkes

In voluptatis regno virtus non poteſt conſiſtere. Cicer, de Seneſt.

Ambroſ.lib. de Helia. & ieiun. cap. 19.

Ambroſ. in Pſal.Dauid. præfat.

Oculos delectat, aures demulcet, ſed mentem inquinat. Ambroſ. de Cain. & Abel.lib. cap.5.

Apocal.9.7.8.

bee ſweet in taſte, yet ſhall wee find them deadly poyſons in operation; though they delight for the preſent, they will torment vs hereafter: yea, and that which is worſt of all, the pleaſure and puniſhment ſhall not bee of alike continuance; for that is but momentany, but this eternall; and as one ſaith, pleaſure killeth and vaniſheth, woundeth and preſently flieth, maketh men wretched, and departeth, bringeth them into miſerie, and ſo leaueth them.

Delectatio occidit, & præterijt; vulnerauit, & tranſiuit; miſerum fecit, & abijt; infælicem reddidit, & reliquit. Auguſt. ſerm. 7. tom. 10. Sperne voluptates; nocet empta dolore voluptas. Horat. lib. 1, epiſt. epiſt. 12

Let vs therefore take heed, that we doe not put this Serpent into our boſome; that wee bee not inticed with the hony, to drinke the poyſon; that wee bee not allured by the pleaſing notes of theſe ſweet ſinging Syrens, to plunge body and ſoule into eternall deſtruction. And finally, that we do not purchaſe theſe ſhort delights, with the loſſe of our eternall ioyes, or the ouer high price of tedious repentance, or euerlaſting ſorrow. It is now the time of our pilgrimage, and therefore vnfit to bee ſpent in pleaſures; wee are now in our warfare, and therefore wee muſt not be carpet Knights, pampring our ſelues with carnall delights, whereby wee arme our enemies, and make our ſelues ſluggiſh and vnfit to fight; for if earthly Kings thinke the campe vnfit for reuels, and liue in time of warfare frugally and painfully, making themſelues an example vnto others, to draw them on to the practice of their ſtrait diſcipline, and all for the getting or keeping of a worldly Monarchie; why ſhould wee, who are in the Chriſtian warfare, and continually aſſaulted with moſt puiſſant enemies, the diuel, the world, and our owne fleſh, thinke this a fit time to ſpend in ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe, reuelling and riot, exceſſe and wantonneſſe, ſeeing we fight not for a corruptible crowne, or earthly kingdome, but for one which is heauenly and eternall?

Hieroym. ad Lætam, tom. 1.

Now if we would flie theſe carnall pleaſures, wee muſt take heed that wee doe neuer embrace them, for if they catch hold of vs, they will hardly leaue vs; wee muſt if it be poſſible be vtterly ignorant of them, and not ſo much as know them, that we may not couet them; for howſoeuer it may bee thought a point of more Chriſtian valour to contemne pleaſures, when they allure vs with all their baits; yet it is more ſecure continencie, and a more ſafe victorie, if we doe not ſo much as take notice of them.

Auguſt. ad Paulinum, Epiſt. 34. Tom. 2.

If wee will not haue them defile vs, let them not touch vs; if wee will not ſuffer them to allure vs, let vs not admit of their acquaintance, nor hearken to their charmes. Finally, if wee would eaſily part with them, let vs not by cuſtome incorporate and turne them into our nature; for as an ancient ſaith, It is one thing not to incorporate thoſe things which are wanting, and another thing to pull them aſunder after they are incorporated; for thoſe, like meates, are eaſily refuſed; but theſe, like members, are not cut off without exquiſit torments, and intolerable paine.

§. Sect.
That wo things draw our hearts f
God.

And thus haue I generally ſhewed, that theſe worldly things are very hurtfull and pernicious to thoſe who ouervalue them in their judgements, and dote vpon them in their affections, preferring them before Gods ſpirituall graces, and heauenly ioyes. Now for the better vnderſtanding of this point, let vs a little more inſiſt vpon it, ſetting downe more ſpecially the manifold euils which theſe worldly things thus immoderatly loued produce and bring forth; all which may ſerue as ſo many effectuall reaſons to diſſwade vs from this exceſſiue loue of the world and worldly things, ſeeing it is the mother of ſuch a monſtrous brood. And for orders ſake I will referre all theſe euils, either vnto thoſe ſinnes which hereby wee commit directly againſt God, or thoſe euils and miſchiefes which through this immoderate loue are cauſed, both to our neighbours, and our ſelues. Firſt therefore theſe worldly things ouer-priſed, and exceſſiuely loued, doe make vs to neglect all dutie towards God, and to diſhonour him diuers wayes with many grieuous ſins. For whereas wee ſhould cleaue vnto the Lord with all our hearts, louing, truſting, and hoping in him, wholly and ſolely, as being our chiefe goodneſſe, our omnipotent Creatour, our al-ſufficient preſeruer, and moſt gracious Father in Ieſus Chriſt; this exceſſiue eſtimation and loue of the world and worldly things, doth weane our hearts and affections from God, and fixeth them vpon theſe vanities: for as our Sauiour hath taught vs, that which wee eſteeme our chiefe treaſure, on that our hearts will bee fixed and ſeated.

Matth. 6. 21.

It is true that carnall worldlings would faine reconcile theſe two together, the loue of the world, and the loue of God, diuiding their hearts betweene them, howſoeuer it bee in very vnequall portions, ſeeing for euery dram of loue which they afford vnto God, they moſt willingly yeeld to the world a pound. But hereby they diſcouer themſelues to bee but meere hypocrites, which make ſhew of that which is not in them in truth; and thoſe double minded and double hearted men, of which the Scriptures ſpeake, who hauing, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, an heart and a heart, one for God, and another for the World, one for the ſeruice of their Creatour, and another for the Tempter, are odious and abominable vnto God.

Iames 4. 8.
Hoſea 10. 2.
Pſalme 12. 2.

For as it is monſtrous in the ſight of men, to behold one looking with one eye vp to Heauen, and with the other eye downe vpon the earth: ſo is it no leſſe monſtrous in Gods ſight, to ſee the heart diuided, one part ſeruing him, and another the world and the Prince thereof. But let ſuch know that the loue of God, and the loue of the world are not onely diuers, but flat contraries the one to the other, which cannot possibly in any great degree, continue together in the same subiect; but as the loue of God increaseth, the loue of the world abateth; and as the loue of the world getteth strength, the loue of God is weakened and diminished. And as the same piece of wax will not receiue at once, two prints of diuers seales; but the putting in of the one, is the blotting out of the other; or if through a slight impression, the latter doe not quite doe out the first, yet there is no distinct picture, but a confused mingle mangle without forme or fashion: so the print of Gods loue, and of the loue of the world, will not at once remaine in the same heart, but the impression of the one blotteth out the other: or if there be an equall mixture of them both, it is an odious hotch-potch in Gods sight. To this purpose our Sauiour saith, that wee cannot serue two masters, being so contrary in disposition, wee cannot serue God and Mammon. So the Apostle Iohn telleth vs, that if we loue the world, the loue of the Father cannot abide in vs. Yea the Apostle Iames goeth further, and plainely saith, that the loue of the world is enmitie with God, and that when wee once are the worlds friends, we presently become Gods enemies. And another treading in their holy steppes affirmeth, that hee who is ouercome with the loue of the World, cannot by any meanes take delight in God; and by how much a man burneth in the heate of his desire after temporall things, with so much more damnable numbnesse he freeseth towards those which are spirituall and eternall. Yea let them further know, that though they could bee content to offer vnto God the halfe sacrifice of a diuided heart, he will not accept of it; for of all other parts the Lord is most iealous of the heart, and therefore is impatient to haue any sharing, or to admit any corriuals in his loue; but either hee will haue all, or leaue all to the world and the diuell. So that if we thinke God may be pleased with a diuision, and will quietly take his share and goe away, wee deceiue our selues; for seeing hee hath created all, and redeemed all, and preserueth all, hee will haue all or nothing; and therefore to denie vnto him a part, is to denie the whole; and to afford him onely some, is to grant and giue him nothing. For well doth the Lord know, that if we be once luke-warme, wee will soone after bee key-cold; if the riuer of our loue be diuided into many streames, it will within a while bee dried vp; and if the force of our affection be disunited, it will easily bee ouercome. Besides, it is the nature of loue to transforme the louer into the person beloued, and so to knit them together in a most neere bond, that he is no more his single selfe, but as it were a conioyned person, ruled by the same soule. No marueill therefore if (the loue of the world hauing transformed them into it, and made them worldlings) the Lord cannot indure to haue such a co-partner, or to haue his holy image conioyned with this misshapen monster, or to dwell in a corner of that house, whose fairest roomes are taken vp by Satan and the world. To this purpose one saith, that holy delight in the Lord doth shunne that heart which is prepossessed with worldly desires; neither can there bee any mixture of true substances with vaine shadowes, of things eternall with those which are transitorie, of spirituall things with corporall, and heauenly with earthly, that we may at once sauour those things which are aboue, and those which are beneath. So that if wee would tast how good the Lord is, we must first distast these earthly vanities; if wee would be delighted with his sweetnesse, we must first learne to loath the worlds bitternesse; for it is impossible that both should rellish well at once, or that our hearts and affections should adhere both to God and the world, who are so farre distant and different, yea opposite and contrary the one to the other.

Bernard. de Ascensione Domini. Serm. 6.

§. Sect. 6.

That honours, riches and pleasures withdraw our affections from God.

And as this is true of the world in generall, so also of the things of the world; for whosoeuer setteth his heart vpon any of them, they presently estrange it from God, so as it cannot cleaue vnto him and them too. Thus worldly honours being immoderately loued, doe take away all loue of God; and those who serue this idoll of vaine glory, they cannot bee the seruants of Christ, as the Apostle speaketh. For so much do they thinke of gracing themselues, that they neuer thinke of glorifying God; and so much doe they set their minds vpon their owne credit and aduancement, that they haue no heart to honour the Lord, further than it will stand with their owne preferment and reputation: yea so they may attaine vnto their owne vaine-glorious ends, they are ready to set the glory of God to sale, and to dishonour him, that they may honour themselues. So the earthly mammon if it bee affected with immoderate loue, will quickly weane our hearts from God; and if our treasures bee in the earth, it is not possible that our hearts should bee in heauen. For as our Sauiour saith, there as the treasure is, there will the heart be also; and if wee serue riches, which is the god of the world, we cannot serue the Lord, the God of Heauen and Earth. If wee set our hearts vpon money wee shall soone neglect our Maker, and bee ready to sell all our interest in Heauen, by committing knowne sinnes, if wee may but a little aduance our worldly profit.

Gal. 1. 10.

Mat. 6. 21. 24.

profit. Finally, if wee fix our affections vpon worldly riches, wee will bee at their beck, ſo that when they command one thing, and God another, wee will bee ready to caſt Gods commandement behind our backs, and to yeeld our obedience to our golden idoll; and that we beſt loue which we moſt obey: if wee put our affiance in riches, wee cannot truſt in God; and therefore the Apoſtle before hee would haue vs to reſt vpon God with ſweet content, and to relie our ſelues vpon his gracious promiſes, doth firſt will vs to lay aſide auarice, which maketh vs to truſt in the creature. Let (ſaith he) your conuerſation be without couetouſneſſe, and bee content with that which you haue, for hee hath ſaid, I will not faile thee, neither forſake thee. And therefore if wee would loue our God, wee muſt not immoderatly loue our gold; if wee would truſt in Gods prouidence, wee muſt not truſt in our owne prouiſion; and if we would ſet our hearts vpon our Lord and Maſter, we muſt make riches our ſeruants, and not ſuffer them to haue any rule ouer vs. Now being put to our choice, that our hearts may cleaue to the better part, let vs conſider the great difference that is betweene the excellencie of God and riches; this being but earthly traſh, and He the chiefe goodneſſe, infinite in all perfection; this impotent, and he omnipotent; this tranſitory, and he eternall. And if (as one ſaith) the Sunne, which is not the Creator, but a creature, doe ſo farre exceed gold in beautie and glory; how much more he, who made the Sunne, giuing vnto it (as it were) but the leaſt ſparke of his glorious brightneſſe, and that not from his eſſence, but by ſole vertue of his Word? Finally, if wee too much eſteeme and fixe our affections vpon the pleaſures of the world, we cannot take our delight in the Lord, if we be louers of pleaſures, wee cannot bee louers of God; for whereas they who loue him are carefull to pleaſe him by keeping his commandements; theſe chiefly intending to pleaſe their carnal appetites, will not ſticke to diſpleaſe God, to pleaſe themſelues, and by ſinne to prouoke his wrath, ſo they may procure vnto themſelues ſome carnall delight. And thus the voluptuous wanton ſo wholly ſetteth his heart vpon his harlot, that hee ſeldome or neuer thinketh on God, and ſticketh not to diſpleaſe him in any thing, wherein he may giue her contentment. And thus the glutton and drunkard onely mind their bellies, and ſet their hearts vpon pleaſing meates, and dainty drinkes; and ſo by withdrawing them from the Lord, the authour and giuer of all theſe bleſſings, they make in his place a God of their owne bellies, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. And becauſe where their idoll is, there alſo muſt bee their hearts; therefore it is ſaid, that the glutton (like the fiſh which the Philoſpher calleth the ſea-aſſe) carrieth his heart in his belly, and not in his breaſt like other creatures.

Heb.13.5.

Pulchrior eſt iſte ſol quàm pecunia tua; & tamen iſte ſol non eſt Deus tuus. Et ſi pulchrior eſt lux iſta quàm pecunia, quantum eſt pulchrior qui fecit hanc lucem? Auguſt. de diſciplina Chriſt. lib. cap.1.

φιλήδονοι non poſſunt eſſe φιλόθεοι. 2.Tim.3.4.

Phil.3.19.

Clemens Alexand. pædag. lib.2. cap.1.

Seeing therefore the world and worldly things being eſteemed aboue deſert, and loued out of meaſure, doe ſteale our hearts from the Lord, ſeparating them here from his grace, and hereafter from his glory, let this ſerue as an effectuall reaſon to moderate our affections: and ſeeing, if the loue of the world doe remaine in our hearts, the loue of God will not enter into them; let the better haue preeminence of place, diſlodging the loue of the world, that the loue of God may dwell with vs; for if wee draw our hearts drie of this worldly loue, Gods loue will ſpring vp in the place, and repleniſh vs with ſweet delights. We are veſſels naturally full of the liquor of carnall loue, and emptie of that which is diuine and ſpirituall, & therefore wee muſt powre out that we haue, that we may receiue that we haue not: naturally wee are carried downe the ſtreame with the loue of worldly things, and there is no ſtay, vnleſſe wee will catch hold of the true tree of life, and cling vnto him with a liuely faith, that ſo wee may not bee caried downe with this violent, or rather naturall motion. Which that we may doe, let vs conſider, that whatſoeuer goodneſſe, beautie, or excellency there is in the creatures, in ſome ſmall meaſure, and for ſome ſhort time, they are infinitely and eternally in the Creatour; and therefore though our hearts were inflamed with a whole world of loue, yet in compariſon of him, they could not deſerue the leaſt ſparke of our affection. Againe, let vs remember, that if wee ſet our hearts on theſe worldly things, we exceedingly abuſe theſe gifts of God, and himſelfe alſo who is the authour of them; for he gaue them vnto vs, not that our hearts ſhould cleaue vnto them, and our loue bee ſeated on them, but that as by his gifts and meſſengers hee might wooe our loue vnto himſelfe, who is ſuch a bountifull ſuter; not that wee ſhould reſt in them as in our paradiſe, but that they ſhould be comfortable companions of our iourney, and that receiuing them by faith, the hand of the ſoule, as well as with the hands of our bodies, they might bee vnto vs pledges of his loue, earneſt pennies of our heauenly inheritance, and as forcible arguments taken from the leſſer to the greater, whereby wee might be moued with all earneſtneſſe to deſire his glorious preſence, and the ioyes of his kingdome; thus concluding with our ſelues, that if there bee any thing on earth worthy our loue, how infinitely more excellent and amiable is God, the authour of all their goodnes, & thoſe ioyes which he hath prepared for vs in our owne Country? Or §.Sect.

Preſer

againſt the former

Auguſtin. in

1.Ioh.Tr

if we cannot, being tied with our ſenſes vnto things preſent, ſeate our affections wholly in Heauen, nor altogether fixe our hearts and minds vpon God, the author of all our good, becauſe they are pulled downe from this hie pitch of heauenly meditations, with the weight of our worldly neceſſities; yet at the leaſt let vs imitate the Eagle, which taketh all her delight in ſoaring aboue the clouds, and in looking vpon the Sunne, and ſeldome ſtoopeth, but when hunger compelleth her to ſeeke after her prey: ſo let our conuerſation be wholly in Heauen, and let vs take our chiefe delight in contemplating the beautie and excellencie of the Sunne of righteouſneſſe, and King of glorie, neuer ſuffring our hearts and minds to reſt longer vpon earth, than the neceſſities of nature doe conſtraine vs. And ſeeing wee cannot leaue the world altogether, yet (as one perſwadeth vs) let vs ſo take hold of it, that it doe not take hold of vs, and ſo poſſeſſe the things of the world, that wee bee not poſſeſſed of them; let vs haue them vnder the rule, and at the command of our minds, that they doe not impriſon them on earth in the ſlauiſh bands of carnall loue. Let vs haue earthly things in our vſe, but heauenly in our deſires; let them ſerue as helps in our iournie, but let vs reſerue thoſe eternall ioyes, as our chiefe hopes for our iournies end; let vs looke vpon worldly benefits, onely on the one ſide, as paſſing by them; but let the eyes of our ſoules be firmely, and with all intention fixed before vs on our heauenly happineſſe, vnto which wee are trauelling. Finally, if the earth for a time muſt needs haue our bodies, yet let God haue our hearts and minds; and though we bee conſtrained to vſe the things of the world, yet let vs take heed (as the Apoſtle exhorteth) that wee doe not abuſe them vnto ſinne, by ſetting our affections more vpon them, than vpon God himſelfe, and the riches of his Kingdome.

The ſecond maine ſinne directly againſt the maieſtie of God, which theſe worldly things ouervalued, and immoderately loued, doe cauſe vs to fall into, is that capitall ſinne of idolatrie, wherby men as much as in them lieth, pull God out of his royall throne, and treaſonably ſet vp in his place another Lord and King, to whom they acknowledge their fealty and allegeance. For when worldlings exceſſiuely dote vpon the world and worldly vanities, they erect them for their idols in the ſhrines of their hearts, and giue vnto them diuine worſhip. And in this regard, the Apoſtle Iames calleth worldlings adulterers, and adultereſſes, becauſe they commit this ſprituall whoredome with the things of the world, adoring, louing and truſting in them, more than in God himſelfe. The which ſinne is committed by worldlings, either properly and groſſely, when as they worſhip idols of gold and ſiluer; an example whereof wee haue in the Iſraelites, of whom it is ſaid, that as they abounded in theſe rich gifts of gold and ſiluer, ſo they multiplied their images: or as they bee hired with this wages of iniquitie, to commit idolatrie with theſe abominable idols made with hands, chuſing rather to fall downe before them, and adore them with diuine worſhip, than they will bee depriued of their worldly profit and aduantage. An example whereof we haue in Demetrius, who worſhipped the idoll Diana, and ragingly perſecuted the Apoſtle Paul, not ſo much for loue to the image, or hatred to the Apoſtles perſon or doctrine, as becauſe his idolatrie was aduantageable to him, and brought in with it earthly gaine and profit. Or elſe worldlings commit this idolatrie more improperly and couertly, when they diſplace God out of the temple of their hearts, and in ſtead of him ſet vp their idols of the world and worldly vanities, by ſetting their affections wholly vpon them; in which reſpect this may bee fitly called, the idolatry of the heart and affection, as the former was the idolatrie of the mind and iudgement. And this idolatrie is committed by worldly men, when as they loue theſe earthly vanities more than God himſelfe, taking more care and paines both in getting and keeping them, and being more afraid of forgoing them, and more grieued for loſing them, than for the enioying or loſing of Gods fauour in this life, and his glorious and ioyfull preſence in the life to come. So alſo when they put their truſt and confidence in theſe worldly things, for the furniſhing of them with all things which they deſire, and for the freeing and deliuering them from all dangers, for howſoeuer theſe are rotten props to reſt vpon, and weake helpes in time of need, yet ſo willing are men by nature, in the pride and ſenſualitie of their hearts, to leaue their dependancie vpon God, and to depend vpon themſelues, and viſible meanes; that when they haue in plentie and abundance theſe earthly things in their poſſeſſion, they are readie to relinquiſh God, and to truſt in their owne prouidence and prouiſion, to bleſſe themſelues in the fruition of their ſtore, and thereby to thinke themſelues ſafe and ſecure from any dangers. The which idolatrous confidence, as it doth raigne, and wholy beare ſway in carnall worldlings, who ſo onely reſt in worldly things, that they are moſt confident when they haue them, and moſt deſperate when they want them; ſo it ſometimes tainteth Gods deareſt ſeruants; as we may ſee in the example of the Prophet Dauid, who being in proſperitie, ſo farre preſumed vpon the Hoſ.10.1.

Acts 19.25.

Pſalm.30.6.

ſtrength of his ſtate, that he concluded with himſelfe, he ſhould neuer be mooued. The which vaine confidence God ſeuerely puniſheth, by breaking the ſtaffe of their affiance when they moſt reſt vpon it, and making their hopes to faile. According to the ſaying of Bildad; The hypocrites hope ſhall periſh, his confidence alſo ſhall be cut off, and his truſt ſhall be as the houſe of a ſpider. So holy Iob ſaith, that the eies of the wicked ſhall faile, and their refuge ſhall periſh, and their hope ſhall be ſorrow of mind.

Iob.8.14.
Chap.11.20.

§. Sect 9.
That ambitious couetous, and voluptuous men are idolaters.

*Pſalm.*10.4.
1.*Tim.*6.5.
*Pſalm.*10.3.
a *Epheſ.*5.5.
b *Col.*3.5.
Non pulegij odore Critan auarus, ſed numiſmate dichalco ſeipſum reficit, cum ſtomachus angitur. Lucilius apud Stobæum.
*Pſalm.*49.
*Prou.*18.11.
*Pſalm.*62.
1.*Tim.*6.17.
*Iob.*31.24.
Eccleſiaſt. 31.8,9.
*Prou.*11.2
*Ier.*48.8.
*Pſalm.*52.

But this idolatrie which worldlings commit, by ſetting their hearts too much vpon worldly things, may better appeare if wee conſider the ſpeciall inſtances. For who ſeeth not that the ambitious man loueth his honours and preferments better than his God? for he is readie ſo he may get them, to loſe his loue, and preferreth the fauour of men before the fauour of God; not caring how often he ſinneth againſt both his knowledge and conſcience, ſo he may hide his ſinnes out of the ſight of men, and by them compaſſe his ambitious deſignes. So alſo being aduanced to authoritie and power, in the pride of his heart he neglecteth God, and truſteth in his owne might and greatneſſe; for ſupply of all that is good, and deliuerance from all which is euill. According to that of the Pſalmiſt: The wicked is ſo proud, that hee ſeeketh not for God. So when men ſet their hearts vpon carnall pleaſures, they fall into this grieuous ſinne of idolatrie, louing their pleaſures more than God, and not caring to diſpleaſe him, ſo they may pleaſe themſelues. But aboue all other things, riches immoderatly loued plunge men into this ſinne, making them to commit ſpirituall whoredome with this earthly mammon, and vtterly neglecting the Lord who hath inriched them, and that ſeruice which they owe vnto him, they are ready to make their getting of riches their religion, gold their god, and gaine their godlineſſe, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. And this the Pſalmiſt plainely affirmeth, that when the couetous man hath gotten ſtore of riches, hee bleſſeth himſefe in his abundance, and contemneth the Lord. In which reſpect, the couetous perſon is called an [a] idolater, and [b] couetouſneſſe idolatrie. Yea of all other idolatrie, it is the moſt contemptible and baſe: for whereas other men adore the Sunne, Moone, and liuing creatures, or elſe ſome glorious image, of ſome excellent man; they adore a dumbe and ſenſeleſſe creature, which is their owne ſlaue, to be diſpoſed of at their command. And this idolatrie couetous men commit, when they ſet their hearts vpon riches, more than vpon God, or the riches of his kingdome; as when they loue them better than him, taking more pleaſure in their wealth whileſt they haue it, than in the Lord who hath inriched them, and more ſorrow when it is taken away, than for the loſſe of Gods loue and fauour. Or when they repoſe more confidence in it, either for the procuring of the good they want, or for deliuering them from the euill they feare, than in God omnipotent and al-ſufficient: a ſinne which is moſt commonly committed by carnall worldlings, as the Pſalmiſt alſo obſerued; They truſt in their goods (ſaith he) and boaſt themſelues in the multitude of their riches. So the Wiſe man ſaith, that the rich mans riches are his ſtrong Citie; and as an high wall in his imagination. Vnto which vaine confidence wee are ſo prone naturally, that the Pſalmiſt thought a caueat neceſſarie, that if riches did increaſe, wee ſhould take heed that wee doe not truſt in them; and the Apoſtle thought it needfull, that rich men ſhould haue this waightie charge laid vpon them, that they ſhould not truſt in vncertaine riches: Becauſe vnleſſe an extraordinarie meaſure of grace preſerue them from falling into this ſinne, it is impoſſible for men to abound in wealth, and not to put confidence in it. Whereof it is, that Iob in his great affliction comforteth himſelfe, in the aſſurance of his integritie and faithfulneſſe, by calling this to mind, that he had not made gold his hope, nor ſaid to the wedge of gold, thou art my confidence. And the ſonne of Syrach maketh it a note of a man ſo bleſſed and admirable, that hee is hardly to be found, but when he is found, much to be commended. Bleſſed (ſaith hee) is the rich, who is found without blemiſh, and hath not gone after gold, nor hoped in money and treaſures. Who is he, and we will commend him? for wonderfull things hath he done among his people. Who hath bin tried thereby, and found perfect? The conſideration whereof ſhould make rich men carefull, that by their abundance, they be not drawne to the committing of this idolatrie. To which purpoſe, let them remember that the Lord being diſhonoured hereby, is alwayes ready to fruſtrate their hopes, and to cauſe their confidence to faile: ſo the Wiſe man ſaith, that he who truſteth in his riches ſhall fall. Neither ſhall they ſteale this Fall vnſeene, but they ſhall bee caſt downe with ſhame and diſhonour in the ſight of the faithfull, and they who formerly enuied their proſperity, ſhall now laugh to ſcorne their deſerued miſerie. For ſo the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that the righteous beholding the deſtruction of the wicked, ſhall laugh at him, ſaying: Behold the man that tooke not God for his ſtrength, but truſted to the multitude of his riches, &c.

Chap.

Chap. XXXI.

Worldly things make men forgetfull of God, vnthankefull, proud, contemptuous, ſlothfull, and negligent in the duties of Gods Seruice.

Sect. 1.

THirdly, the World and worldly things, being exceſſiuely eſteemed, and ouer-fondly loued, doe worke in vs a careleſſe forgetfulneſſe of God; for howſoeuer Gods gifts ſhould put vs in minde of the giuer, and his manifold mercies vouchſafed vs in the fruition of theſe earthly benefits, ſhould ſerue as continuall remembrancers, to put vs in mind of him, who hath beene ſo gracious vnto vs: yet through our great corruption, the more of theſe temporall bleſſings wee receiue from God, the leſſe we thinke we need him, and the ſeldomer wee remember him: like the prodigall child, who all the while he was in proſperitie, and had money to ſpend in ſuperfluities, neuer remembred his bountifull Father, from whom he had receiued this rich portion; but when all was ſpent, and hee brought to want and penurie, then he commeth againe freſh vnto his memory, and hath a deſire to returne vnto him. An example whereof wee haue in the Iſraelites in the time of the Iudges, who when they had the World at will, forgot the Lord, and ſerued Idols; but when for their ſinnes, they were deliuered into the hand of their enemies, they againe remember, and returne vnto him. So afterward the Lord by his Prophet complaineth of them, as in their paſtures, ſo were they filled; and their heart was exalted: therefore they haue forgotten me. And hence it is, that the Lord foreſeeing that theſe would be the fruits of their proſperitie and abundance, is ſo carefull in giuing them warning of it, that they might not thus be ouertaken. When (ſaith he) the Lord thy God hath brought thee into the Land which hee ſware vnto thy Fathers, Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob, to giue it to thee, with great and goodly Cities which thou buildeſt not; and houſes with all manner of goods, which thou filledſt not, and welles digged which thou diggedſt not, Vineyards and Oliues which thou plantedſt not; and when thou haſt eaten and art full, beware leſt thou forget the Lord, &c. So elſewhere; when thou haſt eaten, and filled thy ſelfe, thou ſhalt bleſſe the Lord thy God for the good land, which he hath giuen thee. Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, not keeping his Commandements, &c. And thus worldly honours make men to forget the Lord, who hath aduanced them, and to ſay with Pharaoh, Who is the Lord that I ſhould heare him? And with Nebuchadnezzar, Who is that God that can deliuer you out of mine hands? Neither is it any [illegible] that they thus forget God in their ruffe and jollity, ſeeing their pride ſo ouerſhadoweth their memories, that they are ready to forget themſelues, aſpiring vnto Diuine Honours as though they were Gods, and neuer remembring, though their memories bee rubbed with ſo many frailties & infirmities, that they are but mortall men. Thus alſo abundance and ſuperfluity of riches doth make men ordinarily to forget God, as the Wiſe Hagur intimateth in that Prayer: Giue me not riches leſt I be full and denie thee, and ſay, who is the Lord? For ſo vnthankfull we are, that the maſt makes vs to forget the tree, & the pleaſant ſtreames the fountaine from which they come; neither are we longer mindfull of God, than whileſt our neceſſities conſtraining vs, wee implore his helpe. But aboue all other things in the World, carnall pleaſures are apt to worke in thoſe forgetfulneſſe of God, who doe enjoy them; for whoſoeuer drinke a deepe draught of theſe ſweet waters of carnall delights (as it were of the lethe of obliuion) their heads are ſo intoxicated with theſe bewitching cups, their ſenſes ſo benummed, and all the faculties of their ſoule, ſo ſtupified and deaded, that they neuer call the Lord to their remembrance, but like beaſts wallow in their delights, and haue their hearts and minds oppreſſed, yea, buried in their carnall pleaſures.

Prou. 30. 8.

§. Sect. 2. That worldly things abounding, make men vnthankfull towards God.

The fourth ſin againſt God, which theſe worldly things immoderately loued, doe commonly plunge worldly men into, is vnthankfulneſſe towards God for all his gifts and bleſſings; the which is a fruit of the former: for when men are forgetfull of their benefactour, they muſt needs be alſo vngratefull for his benefits; and that in the worſt kind; for ſo farre are they from returning thanks, that they neuer ſo much as thinke of him to whom they are ſo greatly beholding. Beſides (as I haue ſhewed) the more that wordly men abound with theſe earthly things, the more their concupiſcence is increaſed, & the more eager they are in ſeeking after more. The which is a notable hindrance vnto their thankfulneſſe; for they who haue their minds wholly ſet vpon that which they haue not, do not remember what they haue, much leſſe doe they thinke of returning thankes to their great benefactour; yea, they are ready rather to murmure for that they want, than to bee thankfull for that which they haue already receiued. Whereas contrariwiſe if wee ſhould but remember the bleſſings which we doe from God daily enjoy; there is no man in the World ſo poore in his gifts, who might not find rich matter of prayſe and thankſgiuing; eſpecially if hee would caſt his eye, not on thoſe who are preferred before him, but on thoſe to whom he is ſuperiour; not on the things which hee wants and others enjoy, but on thoſe which he Non patitur auiditas quemquam eſſe gratum. Nunquam enim improbae ſpei quod datur ſatis eſt. Senec. Benefic. lib. 2. ca. 27.

he enjoyeth, and they want. But ſo vnthankfull our corrupt nature is, that wee haue alwayes our finger vpon our ſore, and our wants and grieuances in our memories, yea, and commonly the fewer they are, the greater is our repining, complaining that we haue nothing, if we haue not all; and the more rich wee are in Gods bleſſings, the poorer commonly we are in thankfulneſſe. And whereas in reaſon wee ſhould (reſembling golden veſſels) reflect from gratefull hearts, the beames of Gods ſhining benefits, with vnfained thankfulneſſe, and multiply our prayſes and thankſgiuing, the more God multiplyeth his gifts vpon vs: contrariwiſe wee are moſt gratefull when we receiue his benefits with a ſparing hand, and better eſteeme them, when wee enjoy them but ſome few dayes in the yeere, than if we had continuall vſe of them throughout our whole liues. And as our eyes doe worſe ſee thoſe objects which are cloſeſt to them, and thoſe better which in a conuenient diſtance are remoued from them; ſo wee are moſt blinde in ſeeing and acknowledging thoſe benefits which wee hold cloſe in our poſſeſſion, but better ſighted when they are a little remoued from vs. By reaſon of which our groſſe ingratitude, the Lord is faint to pull from vs ſome of his gifts, that wee may be thankfull vnto him for the reſt; to withdraw them for a time, that wee may learne better to eſteeme them for euer afterwards; and to depriue vs altogether of ſome of his benefits, that wee who neuer thought of them, whileſt we had them, may giue them deſerued prayſe at parting; and that wee who were not thankfull for that which we eſteemed not whileſt wee had it, may by the want learne the value, and duly eſteeming it, may now be thankfull, if it be reſtored againe; or if not ſo, yet at leaſt becauſe once wee had it. And thus Rehoboam was more thankfull becauſe hee had two Tribes left vnto him, than when hee raigned ouer all the twelue. And Manaſſes returneth prayſe to God for his reſtoring, who neuer thought of Gods mercy before he was reſtrained. Yea, who may not obſerue in his owne experience, that the more men abound in all worldly proſperitie, the more vngratefull they are vnto God for his bleſſings; and that where hee ſoweth the moſt ſeed of his rich benefits, there hee commonly reapeth leaſt fruits of thankfulneſſe? Who ſeeth not that they who are in honourable callings, take leaſt care to honour God? And whereas they being aduanced aboue others, ſhould as much excell them in thankfulneſſe, as they doe in place: and in a liuely acknowledgment of his mercies towards them, ſhould confeſſe his goodneſſe before the ſonnes of men, and being ſet in theſe high places, ſhould like Lights, ſhine to the glory of God in their liues and conuerſations; they commonly are more vnthankfull than thoſe, who are in the meaneſt condition, and become examples and precedents of all ſinne, and in ſtead of acknowledging the mercy of God in their honour and preferment, are ready to rob him of his glory, and to attribute all, either to their Progenitours, the fauour of their Prince, or their owne wiſedome and well deſeruing. So who are more vngratefull vnto God, than thoſe who moſt abound in riches? For ſo farre are they for the moſt part from deſiring to ſhew their thankefulneſſe in diſpoſing of their riches to the glory of God that gaue them, in aduancing the meanes of his ſeruice, and in the workes of Charitie, that they ſeldome ſo much as in their hearts acknowledge him for the authour of all their welfare, but kiſſe their owne hands, ſacrifice to their nets, and burne incenſe vnto their yarne; becauſe by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous: attributing vnto their owne wits and indeuours the prayſe of all which they poſſeſſe, as though by them alone they had outſtripped others, and made themſelues owners of this plenty. Finally, who are leſſe thankfull vnto God, than they who enjoy moſt pleaſures, and euen wallow themſelues in worldly delights? For ſo wholly are they taken vp with their ſports and paſtimes, that they haue no time to conſider how gracious the Lord is, nor how in his mercies he doth abound towards them; & ſo are their minds, hearts, and affections fettered with their ſenſualitie, and belimed and clogged with theſe carnall pleaſures, that they are not able to lift them vp to Heauen in any holy meditation, or to returne true thankfulneſſe vnto God, as being the fountaine of all their good. By all which it appeares, that theſe worldly benefits doe rather hinder, than further vs in thankfulneſſe towards our benefactour, and conſequently remaining vngratefull debtors, who are not willing ſo much as to returne thankes for payment, wee deriue vnto our ſelues, the juſt diſpleaſure of our Lord and Maſter, and bring vpon vs a fearefull reckoning againſt the day of his appearance, of which wee might be diſcharged, if we would but thankfully owne the benefits which we haue receiued. In regard whereof one ſaith, that from theſe earthly good things when they grow great, there doe ariſe great euils, when as being preferred before others in the vſe of our Maſters talents, wee doe vſe his gifts, as not giuen, returning no glory to our benefactour. For ſo thoſe who ſeemed greateſt in reſpect of Gifts receiued, for not returning thankes, are reputed leaſt in Gods eſtimate, &c. Yea, in truth, by ſo much a man is worſe, by how much hee is better, if hee aſcribe vnto himſelfe that wherein hee excelleth, and ſo rob God of his deſerued prayſe:

euen

2.Chron.11.4. & 12.1,6.

2.Chron.33.12, 13.

Habak.1.16.

Bernard. Serm.4.

euen as he is the greateſt malefactour, and worthy of moſt puniſhment, who hath moſt goods in his poſſeſſion, if he hath compaſſed them by theft, and by defrauding others of that which in right belonged to them.

The fift ſinne againſt God accompanying proſperitie and worldly abundance, is pride, whereby men are ready to aduance themſelues euen againſt God, and to grace themſelues by his diſhonour: for whereas the more wee are inriched with Gods bleſſings, the more humble we ſhould be vnto him, as ſtanding indebted to his bounty in ſuch great ſummes (for what haue we that we haue not receiued? And what haue wee receiued, of which wee ſhall not one day giue an account?) yet ſo fooliſh we are, that the more we are indebted, the more we inſult in pride, and that not only towards thoſe, with whom we ſtand vpon equall tearmes; but euen towards God himſelfe who is our Creditour, and may euery houre call vs to a reckoning, and condemne vs for default of payment. Thus the Pſalmiſt obſerueth, that pride and plentie did commonly goe together. They are (ſaith he) incloſed in their owne fat, and they haue ſpoken proudly with their mouth. And elſewhere he ſaith, that becauſe wicked Worldlings were not in trouble like other men, but flouriſhed in all plenty and proſperitie, therefore they put on pride as a chaine about their neckes, eſteeming it no diſgrace vnto them, but a chiefe ornament: and not content to carry themſelues aloft in this high pitch amongſt men, they are ready (as hee ſaith) to talke preſumptuouſly againſt God, and to ſet their mouthes againſt heauen. The which practice wee alſo may obſerue in our times, among the ruffling gallants of the world, who hauing bin alwaies nurſed in the lap of proſperity, & had al things which their hearts could wiſh, are ready in lieu of thankfulneſſe towards God, to deſpite him (as it were) to his face, and to pull him out of his throne by their oathes, blaſphemies, and bitter execrations. Whereby it appeareth that pride bordereth vpon proſperitie, and that theſe worldly vanities, though they doe not truly nouriſh vs, and make vs grow in ſubſtantiall goodnes, yet they puffe vs vp, and make vs ſwell with the wind of vaine glorie; & the greater our earthly abundance is, the the greater commonly is our tumour, and conſequently the greater is our torment; this ſpirituall ſwelling being to the ſoule, like the ſwelling of wind to the bodie, which (as I haue ſhewed) tortureth, but doth not ſatisfie. Yea ſo forcible is this proſperitie, and abundance of earthly bleſſings in drawing men to this ſin of pride, that it preuaileth not only with Heathens, Infidels, and worldlings; but euen with Gods faithfull ſeruants and deare children. Of both which we haue many examples; as of Pharaoh, who in the pride of his heart oppoſed againſt the knowne will of God; and in Nabuchadnezer, who beholding all his pompe, glory and riches, attributeth the praiſe of all vnto himſelfe, and robbeth God of the glory due vnto him, vanting himſelfe in the pride of his heart, and arrogantly bragging; Is not this great Babel, that I haue built for the houſe of the Kingdome, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my Maieſtie? So it is ſaid of Vzziah that finding the Kingdome in a perplexed eſtate, he did vprightly in the ſight of the Lord, and ſought vnto him; for which when the Lord had made him to proſper, and to waxe ſtrong, his heart was lift vp to his deſtruction, and hee tranſgreſſed againſt the Lord his God. Yea, good Ezechias was thus ouer-taken, waxing proud of his great proſperitie, and vanting himſelfe in his rich treaſures: and holy Dauid himſelfe, who had profeſſed that his heart was not haughtie, nor his eyes loftie, but that hee was become humble like a little childe, was after this puffed vp with his great proſperitie, and in the pride of his heart numbreth the people. By all which it plainly appeareth, that worldly plenty is the Nurſe of Pride; for as fat commeth of the ſuperfluitie of nouriſhment, whereby the body is made bigger, but not better, either in health, ſtrength, or nimbleneſſe; yea, rather it is the Nurſe of many diſeaſes, and maketh the body purſie, vnweldie, and vnfit for action: ſo this ſwelling of pride riſeth from the ſuperfluous abundance of wordly benefits, and maketh a man greater in his owne conceit, but not in true worth; for the ſoule is not thereby ſounder in grace, or ſtronger and more actiue in the duties of pietie; yea contrariwiſe, this ſwelling of pride maketh way for all ſpirituall diſeaſes, and cauſeth him who is infected with it, to be more ſluggiſh and ſlothfull, vnweldie and impotent in all actions and duties of pietie and Chriſtianitie.

Dan.4.27.

2.Chron.26.16

Pſal.131.1,2.

2.Sam.24.

§.Sect.4.
That honours, riches & pleaſures puffe men vp with pride.

Thus the greateſt honors bring with them the greateſt pride; and though a man climbe neuer ſo faſt vpon the ladder of preferment, yet his proud heart will ſtill be one ſtep at leaſt aboue his eſtate; yea oftentimes theſe earthly aduancements make the pride of men to mount ſo high, that they doe not only in their ambitious conceits and deſires aſcend vnto the clouds, and touch the heauens; but euen preſume to approch vnto the throne of God, and to rob him of his glorie, that they may ſet the crowne vpon their owne heads. Thus Clitus magnified by the people for a proſperous expedition by ſea, wherein he had the victory ouer a few ſhips, magnified himſelfe much more in his owne conceit, & was content to be called the god of the ſea. So Demetrius being aduanced to a kingdome, would needs equall himſelfe with God, and Plutarch. de fort. Alexandr. lib. poſteri.

be called Iupiter; neither muſt now Ambaſſadours come vnto him as vnto other Kings, to conferre of ſtate buſineſſe; but as vnto a God they muſt ſend to enquire of him, and take all his anſweres for Oracles. So Alexander, Nebuchadnezzar, and diuers of the Romane Emperours, arrogated vnto themſelues diuine Honours, and would needs haue their Statues worſhipped; being ſo blinded with ambition, and ſurfeited with pride, that they forgot their mortalitie; and became Corriuals with God himſelfe in his honour and glory. The like may bee ſaid of abundance of worldly riches, which are the bellowes of vaine glory, and the common cauſes of pride againſt God, who is the Author and fountaine of our wealth and welfare: whereof it is that the Lord ſo carefully admoniſheth the Iſraelites, that when they ſhould through his bountifull bleſſing abound in riches, they ſhould take heed that their hearts were not lifted vp with pride; and that the Apoſtle would haue rich men ſo ſtraitly charged that they ſhould not bee high minded. And this is the cauſe why pride is vſually called the worme of riches, which breeding in them, eateth out all their goodneſſe, and maketh them euill vnto vs, which are good in their owne nature; and hurtfull and pernicious, which in themſelues are profitable and beneficiall. So the Sonne of Syrach ſaith, that riches lift vp the mind; and Salomon telleth vs, that the rich man is ſtill wiſe in his owne conceit, though a poore man of vnderſtanding can try him and diſcerne his folly. To which purpoſe one ſaith, That there is nothing ſo much to be feared in riches as pride, and that wee are not to feare riches themſelues, but pride which is the diſeaſe of riches: for that mind is of great vertue and magnanimitie, which in the abundance of riches is not infected with this diſeaſe, and being in an high eſtate, is not alſo high-minded. Hee is a rich man truely great, who doth not therefore thinke himſelfe great, becauſe hee is rich, whereas hee who taketh all his worth from his wealth, may be truly ſaid to be full of pride, but empty of goodneſſe and deſert; a boaſter outwardly in his words and lookes, but inwardly a begger in his minde and heart; ſwelled and puffed vp with vaine glory; but not full and ſolide in vertue and true worth. And yet this empty pride ſwelleth and puffeth vp, as much as any other; and is full of inſolencie, though in reſpect of the ground and cauſe thereof, it bee in truth moſt baſe and contemptible. For as the pride ariſing from the bodie is more baſe, than the pride which is grounded on the gifts of the ſoule, ſo the pride of riches which are no part of the perſon, is more baſe than the pride of bodily gifts; becauſe being ſeated and grounded on thoſe things without a man, which are farre inferiour to the gifts either of minde or body, they who are proud of them plainely ſhew, that they haue nothing within, and in their owne perſons, worth reſpect; or elſe they would neuer be proud of thoſe things which are without, ſeeing a man alwayes groundeth his pride on thoſe things, wherein he thinketh he moſt excelleth. The which if men would duly conſider, they might well leaue this contemptible pride, if not becauſe it is a ſinne, yet at leaſt for ſhame, ſeeing it doth diſcouer their vanity and worthleſneſſe. For who would not bluſh to ſeeme proud of outward accidents, which may bee wonne and loſt, and (as one ſaith) bought and ſold on the Market Hill? Which, when we haue them, adde nothing to the perfection of our perſons, and being taken away, nothing is detracted from our eſſence, (yea, in truth) from our worth: neither is the minde made greater, or more magnanimous by deſiring or hauing, but by light valuing and contemning them as worthleſſe trifles, in compariſon of things deſireable and truly excellent. And yet nothing more commonly puffeth men vp with moſt inſolent pride, than riches and abundance; and though like empty bladders they haue nothing but skin, they are made full with theſe vanities; and ſwell in conceit, though they are as empty of any ſubſtantiall goodneſſe, as they were before. An example whereof wee haue in the Merchants of Tyre, who becauſe by their trading they had increaſed their riches, their hearts were lifted vp, and thinking themſelues more than men, they arrogated to themſelues the titles of God. But we ſhall not need to goe ſo farre to fetch examples, ſeeing wee haue many ſuch in our owne dayes, who meaſuring their worth according to their wealth, moſt proudly conceit of their own excellency, and inſult ouer all others as worſer, who are poorer; though they be vtterly diſfurniſhed of all gifts and good parts both in body and minde, and as farre ſhort of them in wiſdome and worth, whom they contemne, as they are before them in earthly abundance. Although in truth there is no ſhew of cauſe, ſeeing there is no compariſon betweene the gifts of minde and body, and the gifts of an outward eſtate. And beſides, if there be any excellency at all in theſe earthly riches, it is not in keeping and poſſeſſing them, but in their beſtowing and vſe: neither is he in the Church and among Chriſtians to be accounted rich, who hath much in keeping; but he who findeth much to beſtow on charitable vſes, and hath plenty for the poore: for it is not ſo much money, as the mind that maketh rich. Finally, thus worldly pleaſures cauſe pride, as they are the vſuall meanes to make vs forget God, and to forget our ſelues, cauſing vs like pampred Horſes to ſcorne our Maſter; eſpecially if our delights be of ſuch a na-

*Deut.*8.12,13,14.

1.*Tim.*6.17.

Ecclus 40.26.
*Prou.*28.11.

Auguſt. Serm. 112.Tom.10.

nature; as that therein we may ſhew our excellency, and commend to thoſe who are about vs the gifts of body or minde, which ſelfe-loue maketh vs beleeue, to bee eſteemable.

In all which reſpects theſe worldly things thus abuſed, may bee truly ſaid, not only, not to doe vs any good, but contrariwiſe much hurt, ſeeing they are the meanes to caſt vs into this hainous ſinne of pride, which aboue all others God deteſteth, as the Scriptures teſtifie. And as he doth hate the ſinne, ſo hee purpoſely oppoſeth, and ſetteth himſelfe againſt thoſe who are defiled with it, and becauſe the proud man oppoſeth againſt God, robbing him of his glory which is moſt deare vnto him; therefore the Lord alſo oppoſeth againſt him, and croſſeth him in all his courſes. So the Apoſtle Peter ſaith, that God reſiſteth the proud, but giueth grace to the humble. The which oppoſition and reſiſting of God who is Omnipotent, muſt needs bring them to ruine and deſtruction, ſeeing their policies cannot ouer-reach his infinite wiſedome, nor all their ſtrength defend them from being ouerthrowne by his mightie power; eſpecially ſeeing his will to bring them to confuſion, is ioyned with his abilitie, the Lord neuer more willingly ſhooting his arrowes of wrath and vengeance, than againſt the proud perſon. So the bleſſed Virgin in her Song ſaith, that God ſcattereth the proud in the imagination of their hearts, and doth put downe the mightie from their ſeats, exalting them of low degree. And our Sauiour teacheth vs, that he who exalteth himſelfe ſhall be brought low, and hee that humbleth himſelfe, ſhall be exalted. As therefore men lift vp higheſt thoſe earthen pitchers which they purpoſe to breake with greateſt violence, into moſt pieces; ſo the Lord intending to batter and bruiſe theſe fraile perſons puffed vp with pride, doth lift them vp on high, that he may giue them the ſorer fall. And howſoeuer the Lord who is chiefe Iudge of Heauen and Earth, is the puniſher of all vice and ſinne, yet becauſe he executeth this vengeance more certainly, and ſeuerely vpon proud perſons, therefore the Prophet Dauid maketh it one of Gods attributes and titles, whereby he will be knowne to be a puniſher of them; O thou who deſtroyeſt the proud, and wicked, which erre from thy Commandements, take away from me ſhame and contempt, becauſe I keepe thy teſtimonies. And as hee beareth an extraordinary hatred vnto this ſinne aboue others, ſo hee inflicteth on it extraordinary puniſhments, branding it as an hainous and capitall offence, by impoſing on it his greateſt plagues. For whereas proud men in their ambitious deſires would be equal with God, the Lord pulleth them downe in his fierce wrath, and maketh them leſſe than men. For he ſtriketh them commonly with frenzie and madneſſe, and thereby depriuing them of the vſe of reaſon, the eſſentiall forme of man, wherein chiefly his manhood conſiſteth, and whereby he is diſtinguiſhed from the brutiſh creatures, hee maketh them equall with beaſts, and ſo expoſeth them, how great ſoeuer they were in former times, to the contempt, deriſion, and iniuries of the baſeſt and meaneſt, who before held them in ſuch great reſpect, that they could not looke vpon them, or ſtand in their preſence, but with much feare and reuerence. A plain example whereof we haue in Nebuchadnezzer, who for his pride was driuen from his Palace and Regall Throne, into the wilde Woods, and made of a great Monarch and Ruler of men, a companion with Beaſts, and farre worſe than his baſeſt ſeruant. And the like we may obſerue in many in our owne times, who offending in this ſinne, are ouerthrowne with this puniſhment. For howſoeuer all exceſſiue pride is not thus puniſhed (for then there would not bee enow in their right wits to tend and rule thoſe who are mad) yet a man ſhall ſeldome ſee this puniſhment following, where exceſſiue pride hath not gone before. So that one may boldly affirme, that if pride onely be not plagued with this fearefull iudgement of frenzie and madneſſe, yet it is more often thus puniſhed than all other ſinnes beſides. The which fierce and ſudden vengeance of God, which he taketh on proud perſons, the Prophet Malachie expreſſeth, by comparing Gods wrath burning againſt them, to a burning Furnace, and proud men to ſtubble. The day of the Lord (ſaith he) commeth, that ſhall burne as an Ouen; and all the proud ſhall be ſtubble; and the day that commeth ſhall burne them vp, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, and ſhall leaue them neither root nor branch. And therefore ſeeing theſe worldly things are the common cauſes of pride, and pride bringeth with it ſuch confuſion and deſtruction, let this ſerue as an argument to make vs contemne theſe harmefull vanities, not immeaſurably deſiring them when we want them; nor exceſſiuely eſteeming and immoderately louing them when wee haue them; and ſo if we want theſe things which we neglect, our minds will not be much deiected; or if wee haue them, they will not bee much exalted and lifted vp; neither can a man be proud of the poſſeſſion of that which he doth not ouer-value in his iudgement, and vnmeaſurably loue in his affection.

Dan.4.27, 28,30.

Mal.4.1.

§. Sect. 6. That worldly things bring with them contempt of God.

The ſixth ſinne againſt God, which theſe worldly things too much eſteemed, and immoderately loued plunge vs into, is either neglect or vtter contempt of God himſelfe, his ſpirituall graces, and heauenly ioyes; for our affections being finite are limited and reſtrained to their obiects, ſo that being conuerſant and exerciſed about ſome, they in the meane time neglect others. And therefore if they cannot with their full vigour and heate affect many things being diuers; how much leſſe can they at once loue God and the World, ſpirituall graces and earthly vanities, eternall ioyes, and theſe tranſitory trifles, ſeeing they are oppoſite and contrary the one to the other? And this our Sauiour Chriſt teacheth vs, where as he ſaith, that no man can ſerue two Maſters; for either hee muſt hate the one and loue the other, or elſe he ſhall leane to the one, and deſpiſe the other; yee cannot ſerue God and riches. So that there is no halting betweene the Lord, & this worldly Baal, for the ſeruice of one, is the contempt of the other, and the louing of the one, is the hating of the other. It is true indeed in reaſon that the more wee abound with theſe earthly benefits, the more wee ſhould loue, reuerence, and with all diligence and alacritie ſerue the Lord, they being his bountifull gifts and bleſſings whereby hee deſerueth at our hands loue and ſeruice; howbeit ſuch is the corruption of our hearts, that no ſooner are wee inriched with theſe worldly benefits, but we preſently loue the gifts better than the giuer; and laying herein aſide all reaſon, we become like beaſts, feeding vpon our prouender, and neglecting our feeder; and the more we are pampered and made fat, the more ready we are to kicke againſt him. An example whereof wee haue in the people of Iſrael, of whom the Lord complaineth, that whereas in reſpect of the manifold benefits which he had multiplied vpon them, they ſhould haue ſerued him in vprightneſſe of heart; they contrariwiſe by his gifts were made more rebellious: But hee (ſaith the Lord) that ſhould haue beene vpright, when he waxed fat, ſpurned with his heele. Thou art fat, thou art groſſe, thou art laden with fatneſſe. Therefore he forſooke God that made him, and regarded not the ſtrong God of his ſaluation. The like complaint the Lord maketh by the Prophet Eſay; Heare O Heauens, and hearken O Earth, for the Lord hath ſaid, I haue nouriſhed and brought vp children, but they haue rebelled againſt me. Yea, he maketh the herein more brutiſh than the beaſts, Becauſe the Oxe knoweth his Owner, and the Aſſe his Maſters Crib; but (ſaith he) Iſrael hath not known, my people hath not vnderſtood.

Luke16.13.

Deut.32.15.

Eſay 1.2,3.

§.Sect.7.

That worldly things bring contempt of ſpirituall grace and heauenly glory.

And as they who ſet their heates vpon theſe worldly things doe contemne the Lord himſelfe; ſo alſo his ſpirituall graces and heauenly ioyes: for ſo wholly are their hearts taken vp with the loue of theſe vanities, that they haue ſeldome or neuer leiſure to thinke of thoſe diuine excellencies; but like the Serpents brood, they take all their delight in lying groueling, and in creeping on the earth, hauing neuer ſo much as a thought of raiſing themſelues towards Heauen in any diuine and ſpirituall meditation. Or though they ſhould thinke of grace and glory with ſome deſire to compaſſe them, or would lift themſelues vp in any ſpirituall contemplation, yet as Birds with great bodies, though they haue wings cannot flie aloft, but when they attempt it, are pulled downe with their owne waight, and onely flutter vpon the earth: ſo though they haue ſpirituall ſoules, vnderſtandings, and iudgements as well as others, yet are their hearts ſo oppreſſed with the waight of worldly cares, and the loue of earthly things, that no ſooner doe they offer to raiſe them in heauenly meditations, but preſently they are preſſed downe againe, and (as it were) flutter and tire themſelues with worldly buſineſſe. But in truth ſeldome haue they ſo much as any ſuch deſire, ſeeing the World like a thicke cloud, being neere vnto them, doth ouer-ſhadow and hide that bright ſhining Sunne of heauenly glory out of their ſight, ſo as they cannot ſee it, and not ſeeing it, neuer deſire it, there being no deſire and loue of that which is not knowne. And as a little Pearle ſticking faſt vnto the eye doth blinde the ſight, and is ſufficient to hide from vs the whole Earth and Heauen, which are incomparably of greater quantie; ſo the World & worldly things like a Pearle ſticking cloſe to the eye of the ſoule, do make it ſo ſpiritually blinde, that it cannot diſcerne the Lord, infinite in all goodneſſe, nor the ioyes of Heauen, though without all compariſon, they are of greater excellencie. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that if wee deſire earthly things, we are wholly taken vp with the care of them; and ſo farre are we beaten back from heauenly contemplation, by how much wee are ouer-poyſed with the cares of earthly affaires. But ſay notwithſtanding this blindnes, they might haue ſome glimpſe of the ſhining brightneſſe of ſpirituall grace and heauenly glory, or wanting this, ſhould haue it by others deſcribed vnto them, ſo that ſome knowledge of theſe diuine excellencies, might by the paſſage of the eare, be deriued to their vnderſtandings; yet being wholly poſſeſſed with the loue of worldly things, they would little regard ſuch diſcourſes, and accounting theſe earthly vanities their chiefe treaſures, their hearts are ſo faſt fixed vpon thẽ, that no perſwaſion wil moue them to leaue them, or once to looke after thoſe ſpirituall and diuine excellencies. For as hee who loueth truly his God, doth not much loue his Gold, becauſe hee eſteemeth him his chiefe treaſure; and as he who highly eſteemeth heauenly happineſſe, doth preſently contemne theſe earthly vanities; ſo contrariwiſe they who dote on the Idoll of the World, doe not reſpect the Lord of Heauen; and they who ouer-value earthly traſh, doe contemne, and ſet light by thoſe heauenly and eternall treaſures. And this our Sauiour plainly teacheth vs in the Parable ble of the gueſts inuited to the mariage ſupper; for they who were beſt diſpoſed framed excuſes, one that hee had bought a farme, and muſt needs goe out and ſee it; another that hee had bought fiue yoke of oxen, and muſt goe to proue them, and another that he had maried a wife, and therefore could not come; all which though they pretended faire excuſes, as though their deſire had beene to come, if their buſineſſes had not beene ſo vrgent, yet the true cauſe was, as our Sauiour telleth vs, becauſe doting vpon their earthly affaires, they were ſo wholly taken vp of them, that they made light of theſe heauenly offers, and went their waies. And thoſe who were worſe affected, and carried with greater violence in their loue towards worldly vanities, tooke it ſo ill, that the meſſengers of the great king ſhould preſume to diſſwade them from the loue of their chiefe jewels and moſt eſteemed treaſures, that they laid violent hands vpon them, ſharply intreated them, and cruelly murthered them. Thus thoſe who ſet their hearts vpon worldly honours, neuer thinke of eternall glory, but ſpend all their thoughts and labour in plotting the meanes whereby they may aſpire to earthly preferments; and if any ſhall perſwade them to leaue theſe courſes, and contemning the vaine-glory of the world ſeeke after heauenly honour which ſhall bee eternall, and to glorifie God by their holy liues, and humble cariage, that hee may glorifie them in his heauenly kingdome; they will plainely ſhew their neglect and contempt of theſe euerlaſting honours, by deſpiſing, if not deriding theſe Chriſtian admonitions and perſuaſions. So he who too much eſteemeth, and immoderately loueth earthly riches, doth neglect and contemne the Lord, and the vnualuable riches of his ſpirituall graces and heauenly treaſures; being ready with Iudas to ſell his Sauiour for a little money, and with Demas to forſake all communion with the Saints, to imbrace the world. So the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that the couetous man bleſſeth himſelfe in his riches, and contemneth the Lord. And as hee contemneth God, ſo alſo his ſpirituall gifts and heauenly glory; for as the heathen man could teach vs, where riches are highly valued, there all good things, as faith, honeſty, modeſty, ſhamefaſtneſſe, are contemptiblie cheape, and baſely eſteemed; and conſequently they are ſought, when as theſe are neglected, and the rather becauſe they are more eaſily compaſſed, and theſe with greater difficulty. For whereas vnto vertue there is but one way, and that hard to bee found, and painefull in trauelling; men find many wayes to get money, vſing all meanes both good and euill, that they may hereby obtaine their deſire. So another ſaith, that they who ſet their affections vpon earthly treaſures, and haue their hearts tied to the World with this golden chaine, they can neuer ſo much as thinke of the riches of Gods kingdome, their minds are ſo taken vp with thinking on their money, vſurie, gaine, bargaining, and ſuch other buſineſſes. And if any man ſhall perſwade them to alter their couetous courſes, and to lay vp their treaſures, not in Earth, but in Heauen, becauſe wee cannot haue a treaſurie in both places, nor ſerue God if wee ſerue Mammon, they are ready to laugh them to ſcorne, as the Phariſies did our Sauiour Chriſt; and euen to perſecute them to the death, if they too earneſtly inſiſt in this argument. The like alſo might bee ſaid of worldly pleaſures, which being ouerualued, and too much affected, make men in compariſon of them, to neglect the ioy in the holy Ghoſt, yea the ioyes of Heauen, and thoſe ſurpaſſing pleaſures which are at Gods right hand for euermore. And as the Hog feeding vpon the maſt and ſwill which hee naturally loueth, and wallowing himſelfe in the filthy mire, will not exchange his groſſe feed, for the daintieſt meates, nor his lothſome lodging for a bed of downe: ſo they being wedded to theſe ſenſuall and carnall delights, which are baſe and bruitiſh, are ready in compariſon of them to ſet light by, and contemne the ſpirituall ioyes of a Chriſtian, and the eternall ioyes of Heauen, as though they were not worth the ſeeking and deſiring. And therefore ſeeing the loue of God and theſe heauenly excellencies, and the loue of the World, and worldly vanities will not ſtand together, but hee who in his heart and affection imbraceth the one, doth preſently neglect and contemne the other, let this alſo ſerue as an effectuall reaſon to weane our hearts from theſe earthly trifles, ſeeing if we giue them entertainment, and vouchſafe them too high a ſeat in the Temple of our hearts, they will inſtantly thruſt out the loue of the Lord, and his inualuable benefits; and by our neglect and contempt make vs to loſe theſe incomparable treaſures, for this earthly traſh, and worthleſſe trifles.

Chryſoſt. in Mat. 6. Homil. 21.

Luk. 16. 14.

§. Sect. 8.

That worldly things immoderately loued make men ſlothfull in the duties of Gods ſeruice.

Laſtly, the world and worldly vanities, being too highly eſteemed and exceſſiuely loued, doe make vs ſlacke and ſlothfull in the duties of Gods ſeruice, and in vſing the meanes which hee hath ordained to attaine vnto the preſent poſſeſſion of his ſpirituall graces, and the aſſurance of his heauenly ioyes. And this ſinne is a neceſſarie fruit and effect of the former; for when we neglect the Lord, and contemne his ſpirituall and heauenly benefits, then are wee alſo careleſſe and negligent in vſing the meanes wherby we may obtaine thoſe things which we ſo little eſteeme and deſire. And as thoſe who haue drunke poyſons doe preſently wax ſtiffe and benummed, and ſoone after are ſeazed vpon by death, whereby they are made impotent and vtterly vnable to performe any humane action: ſo they who haue drunke of that benumming poyſon of cold contempt, deſpiſing God and his rich graces, ſpirituall, and eternall, are made firſt ſluggiſh, and ſoone after impotent and dead to all good duties. Neither is this rare and vnuſuall to ſee thoſe vpon whom the world fawneth, and who abound with earthly proſperity, to bee thus ſlacke and negligent in the ſeruice of God, and in vſing the meanes of their owne ſaluation; but ſo common and almoſt vniuerſall, that ſeldome ſhall one find a man in great proſperity, who alſo is indued with great piety; ſeldome ſhall one ſee any burning in zeale, and deuout and earneſt in religious duties, who hath the world at will, with plentie and abundance of all earthly bleſſings. It is true indeed, that in reaſon theſe temporarie benefits, ſhould as the Lords wages, incourage vs to doe his worke, and hauing a taſt of his bountie, of which we ſhall drinke our fill in the life to come, wee ſhould with more alacritie and cheerefulneſſe performe diligent ſeruice to ſo liberall a maſter: But contrariwiſe through our corruption and vnthankfulneſſe it commeth to paſſe, that wee are rather hindered than furthered in all good duties by wordly abundance; and like gluttons and drunkards hauing ſtore and plentie of theſe good bleſſings, wee feeding on them with a greedie appetite doe ſurfet, and drinking of theſe full cups with vnſatiable thirſt, are made drunken with exceſſe; and ſo thereby our heads are intoxicated, our minds beſotted, and our bodies enfeebled and diſabled, ſo as wee become ſlothfull and impotent to performe any good dutie of the ſeruice of God; whereas by their moderate vſe, we might haue beene made more ſtrong and cheerefull for theſe holy actions, and religious exerciſes. And thus this worldly proſperity and earthly abundance draweth men from performing vnto God, the duties of his worſhip and ſeruice, and from vſing the meanes of their owne ſaluation; either as it vtterly hindreth them from performing theſe Chriſtian duties, which is the caſe of prophane worldlings, who doting vpon theſe earthly vanities, are ſo wholly taken vp in buſineſſe and imployments about either the getting, keeping, or diſpoſing them, that they can find no leiſure at all, either to vſe in their owne families the exerciſes of prayer, reading, meditation; or to come vnto the congregation, to heare the word, receiue the ſacraments, or to call publickly vpon the holy name of God: or elſe if they formally performe theſe duties, it hindreth them, as it doth diſtract their minds in prayer, and hearing the word, and carrie away their hearts, ſo as they doe not attend at all to thoſe holy exerciſes which they haue in hand; or elſe careleſſely, lumpiſhly, wearily, and without all life and feeling; which is the caſe of temporizers, and formall worldlings, who, for ſome carnall reſpects make an outward profeſſion of religion. And not onely they, but euen Gods deareſt children are thus ouertaken, through the immoderate loue of theſe vanities; ſo as they ſometimes neglect theſe holy duties of Gods ſeruice, and meanes of their owne ſaluation; and ſometimes performe them with much diſtraction, dulneſſe, and wearineſſe, as appeareth in the example of Martha, who being cumbred with worldly buſineſſe, neglected to hearken vnto our Sauiour Chriſt. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that worldly pleaſures and abundance, doe make vs to neglect all good duties of piety towards God; and contrariwiſe, afflictions doe make vs holy, and moſt deuout in the exerciſes of religion. Which if any would clearely ſee, let him enter into the houſe of thoſe who marrie, and into the houſe of mourners, into the priſons and theaters, banquetting houſes, and hoſpitals of the ſicke, and obſerue the great difference betweene their ſeuerall carriages; what vanitie, lightneſſe, irreligion, prophaneneſſe, ſwearing and ribaldrie, he ſhall ſee, and heare in the one; and what prayer, deuotion, contempt of the world, holy conferences, and other religious exerciſes, he ſhall behold in the other. But as this confluence and abundance of worldly benefits doe commonly make vs vnfit to doe ſeruice vnto God, and to performe religious and Chriſtian duties; ſo eſpecially and aboue all, they hinder Chriſtian apologie, and profeſſion of Gods truth, in the time of danger and perſecution, and diſcourage men from ſuffering martyrdome for the teſtimonie of Ieſus Chriſt, and for his glorious Goſpell. For louing theſe worldly vanities, as well as they loue their liues, when the day of triall commeth, they haue a double conflict, as much fearing the loſſe of their highly valued trifles, as the vgly image of a torturing death. And this was one reaſon why our Sauiour Chriſt for the preaching and planting of the Goſpell, made not choice of honourable perſons, or of thoſe who abounded in wealth, and wallowed in worldly pleaſures, becauſe ſuch, in regard of their fearefulneſſe, to loſe their earthly loue and delight, were altogether vnfit to expoſe themſelues to dangers, and to beare the brunt of perſecution; but of poore and contemptible fiſhermen; whom alſo he inhibited the poſſeſſion of much gold, ſiluer, apparell, and the riches of the world, becauſe they ſhould bee

Et rara fumant fœlicibus ara.

Luk

Chryſ ad pop Tom.

Mat. 10

bee no clogs or hinderances vnto them in their confeſſion of him, and his truth, and in ſuffering for his names ſake. And ſo accordingly wee ſee, that theſe men, who had little to loſe beſides their owne liues, were bold and couragious, euen to the death; whereas others, who notwithſtanding loued Chriſt, and beleeued his truth, injoying the proſperitie of the World, were thereby made cowardly and fearefull to indanger their great eſtates, by making an open profeſſion of their faith in Ieſus Chriſt. An example whereof wee haue in Nicodemus, a Ruler of the Iewes; who beleeuing in Chriſt, durſt not publickly be knowne of it; and therefore ſecretly ſtealeth vnto him by night. And ſo it is ſaid, that many of the chiefe Rulers beleeued in him, but becauſe of the Phariſes, they durſt not confeſſe him, leſt they ſhould bee caſt out of the Synagogue.

But how cold and ſlothfull, the world immoderately loued, doth make vs in the ſeruice of God, and in the performance of Chriſtian duties, it may further appeare in the ſpeciall inſtances of honours, riches and carnall pleaſures. For thoſe who are in honourable place, and much ſtand vpon, and eſteeme their dignitie and aduancement, are thereby made exceedingly prophane and negligent, or cold and ſuperficiall in religious exerciſes. For how many are there, who thinking it a great diſparagement to their honourable condition, if they ſhould come into the common aſſemblies, and ioyne with the vulgar people in the ſeruice of God, doe vtterly neglect the publicke miniſterie of the word, prayer, and ſuch religious exerciſes, which are to be performed in the congregation, contenting themſelues with their home deuotions, and with the miniſterie of their owne chaplaines; who for the moſt part dare not touch their ſeared conſciences, for feare of awaking the ſleeping Lyon, nor come neere the quicke for feare of loſing their fauour, and withall their owne preferment. Wherein they haue but a poore priuiledge, being like vnto the ſicke patient, whoſe body abounding with groſſe humours, hath no potion fit to purge them adminiſtred by his ſkilfull Phyſitian, for feare of diſtaſting his pallate, but is ſuffered to eate and drinke what beſt pleaſeth him, though it hindreth his recouerie, and increaſeth this diſeaſes. Or like vnto thoſe who are full of deep wounds, & feſtred ſores, whom the ſurgeon dare not touch for feare of putting them to paine, nor apply fit ſalues for the effecting of the cure, for feare of incurring their diſpleaſures, but either letteth them alone to rot & periſh for want of help, or applieth healing and gentle plaiſters, which may skinne the ſores, but leaue the core and corruption feſtring in the bottome. But ſuch ſhould remember, that when the Lord ordained congregations, and places of common aſſemblies, hee appointed not a Temple for the common people, & a Chamber or Chapell for the Nobilitie; but noble and baſe, yea King and ſubject, were commanded to meete together, becauſe by a mutuall conſent, and holy example, they might incourage one another, and performe the ſeruice of God with more alacritie. For howſoeuer there are diuers degrees amongſt men in ciuill gouernement, yet in reſpect of God, and in the duties of his worſhip, they are all alike the ſeruants of God, brethren and ſonnes of the ſame Father, fellow members of the ſame body, and of the ſame communion of Saints, of which, Chriſt Ieſus is the head and King. From which common order, though Princes may in theſe dayes be exempted, in regard that we are not ſtrictly tied to the Temple but may in all places offer vp pure hands vnto God; and becauſe of their great families ſufficient in themſelues to make a ſufficient congregation; and eſpecially becauſe the ſinfulneſſe of the times is ſuch, and mens minds ſo poyſoned with treacherie, and blood-thirſtie crueltie, that Kings and Princes cannot with ſafetie to their perſons and ſtates, come into common aſſemblies; in which reſpects, neceſſitie and charitie may well diſpence with circumſtances and ceremonies: yet I can ſee no reaſon, why Nobilitie ſhould pleade this priuiledge of exemption, or for ſtate ſeuer themſelues from the publicke congregation, and aſſemblies of God Saints, eſpecially, ſeeing it is vnto themſelues ſo hurtfull and pernicious. Againe, theſe worldly honours immoderately loued and eſteemed, doe puffe men vp with pride, the which hindreth them from profiting by the miniſtery of the word, though they ſhould heare it; and that both as it mooueth them to skorne the ſimplicitie of the Goſpell, and the fooliſhneſſe of preaching (as the Apoſtle ſpeaking in their language calleth it) and to contemne the miniſterie of the word, though neuer ſo powerfull, if it be not ſauced with worldly wiſdome, humane eloquence, and pleaſing conceits of wit, to refreſh and ſtirre vp their cloied appetites; and alſo as it cauſeth them proudly to pull backe their necks from the yoke of ſubjection, and holy obedience; refuſing to bee ruled by the ſcepter of Gods word, and putting backe all admonitions and reproofes, as though it would not ſtand with their honours to humble themſelues before God, or to ſtoope vnto his rebukes. An example whereof wee haue in Diotrephes, who would not receiue the Apoſtle Iohn, nor his doctrine, becauſe being puffed vp with pride, hee loued his owne preheminence. In regard whereof it is truely ſaid, that the ſmoke of honour and vaine-glory, doth ſmother and choake

1.Cor.1.21.

Ioh.Epiſt.3. verſe 9.

Ardua res eſt opibus non tradere mores: & cum Crœſos viceris, eſſe Numam. Martial. Epigram. lib. 11.

Matth. 13. 22.

Hoſea 7. 7.

choake the flame of pietie; both as it blindeth mens eyes, ſo as they cannot find the way to the publike aſſemblies; and as it hindreth them from performing the duties of Gods ſeruice with fruit and profit. The like alſo may be ſaid of riches, which commonly hinder thoſe who ſet their hearts vpon them, from performing either priuate or publicke ſeruice vnto God; wholly taking men vp in buſineſſes and imployments, ſo as they haue no leiſure to exerciſe themſelues in theſe religious duties: or as they diſtract and interrupt them, when they preſent themſelues before God to heare his word, or to call vpon his name; in which reſpect, our Sauiour compareth them to thornes, which choake the ſeed of the word, and make it fruitleſſe. And thus alſo pleaſures immoderatly loued, worke the ſame effects, cauſing men to ſpend that time in carnall delights, which is allotted to Gods worſhip and ſeruice; and euen on the Lords Sabbaths to forſake the communion of Saints, and the publike exerciſes of religion, that they may follow their recreations, ſports and paſtimes: or if they get leaue of theſe tyrannous maſters to ioyne with the faithfull, after a formall manner to ſerue God, yet it is onely with their bodies; for as for their minds they run a whoring after their delights, either thinking of thoſe which they lately enjoyed; or elſe of ſome new pleaſures which they purpoſe to enjoy in the time to come. And therefore ſeeing theſe worldly vanities hinder vs from the performance of Gods ſeruice, if they bee immoderatly loued and eſteemed; let this ſerue as another effectuall reaſon to diſſwade vs from ſetting our hearts vpon them, ſeeing they diſable vs for thoſe maine and chiefe duties, for which we came into the world, and making vs vnfit to glorifie God in his faithfull ſeruice, which was the chiefe end of our creation, they cauſe vs to ſpend our liues in vaine, in the fruitleſſe ſeruice of Satan and the world; and ſo making vs to neglect our ſeruice and dutie to our great Lord and Maſter, they alſo depriue vs of that wages which of his free grace hee hath promiſed as the reward of our labours, euen our heauenly inheritance, and the eternall crowne of glorie and ſaluation.

Chap. XXXII.

That worldly things immoderatly loued, are the cauſes of many euils in reſpect of our neighbours: as of iniuſtice, wrongs, pride, and inſolencie.

§. Sect. 1. That worldly things immoderately loued are the cauſe of all kind iniuſtice.

ANd thus haue I ſhewed that theſe worldly things, being ouerualued in our iudgements, and too much loued in our affections, are the cauſes of many ſinnes committed directly againſt God himſelfe: Now we are come to ſpeake of thoſe euils and miſchiefes which they cauſe, both to our neighbours, and our ſelues. And firſt for our neighbours, theſe worldly things are the chiefe cauſes and occaſions of all iniuſtice, wrongs, and iniuries which are offered betweene man and man; and (as it were) the diuels wages which hee giueth to worldly men to vndermine one anothers ſafetie, and to ſupplant their neighbours, that they may raiſe their ſtate by their fellowes fall, and build their owne greatneſſe out of others ruines. Theſe are the cauſes why Iudges and Magiſtrates peruert righteous iudgement, acquitting the guiltie, and condemning the innocent, calling good euill, and euill good; right wrong, and wrong right; namely, that they may hereby attaine their worldly ends, and aduance their proſperitie, and earthly eſtates. Theſe are the hire of all corruption, oppreſſion, and crueltie, which are exerciſed of ſuperiours towards their inferiours, rulers towards their ſubjects, and Landlords towards their tenants, that they may maintaine their greatneſſe, and increaſe their wealth, or carnall pleaſures. In a word, there is almoſt no vniuſtice committed, if it doe not proceed from malice, and deſire of reuenge; which is not cauſed and occaſioned by theſe worldly things immoderately loued: men not caring what they doe, nor what meanes they vſe, whether they bee good or euill, right or wrong, ſo they may maintaine the proſperitie of their eſtate, and encreaſe their worldly happineſſe. Neither is any man priuiledged in this kind from being thus wronged and oppreſſed by theſe vniuſt courſes; for if the wages of theſe worldly vanities bee offered for their hire, the true louers of them are ready to lay aſide all reſpect of perſons, and deſperately to breake all bonds of nature, countrie, kindred, friendſhip and common humanitie, dealing vniuſtly with all men, when by their vniuſtice they may gaine this wages of iniquitie. Thus for the attaining of worldly honours, Magiſtrates are ready to peruert iuſtice, to gaine the fauour of ſuperiour Powers; and to oppreſſe maligned innocencie, to get the applauſe of the common people. Neither is it their preſent greatneſſe that can ſatisfie them, and make them to hold on in a iuſt courſe; for the higher an ambitious man is, the more eager he is of riſing ſtill till hee come to the higheſt, and the more ready to vſe all vnlawfull meanes, to raiſe himſelfe to the height of his proud hopes. And as an image or building the higher it is, the more ſubject it is to falling, if it doe not ſtand vpright; ſo the higher a man is aduanced in place and dignitie, the more prone hee is to fall into any ſinne or euill, if his heart ſtand not vpright before God, when as by his wicked meanes he may aduance or ſtrengthen his eſtate and reputation: and the more haughtie a mans heart is, and the more ambitious and deſirous of glorie, the more eaſily is he moued to doe vniuſtly, as the Heathen Orator well obſerued. And the like vniuſtice is vſed by more priuate perſons, whileſt with immoderate deſire they ſeeke for aduancement, being ready to lie and diſſemble, ſweare and forſweare, backbite and ſlander, accuſe and betray all thoſe who ſtand in their way, and doe but ſeeme to hinder them in attaining vnto their deſired preferments, meaſuring all friendſhip and enmitie, not according to nature, familiaritie or deſert, but as they are helpes or hinderances in ſetting forward, or putting backe their proud deſires. Thus alſo voluptuous pleaſures immoderately loued and deſired, moue men to vſe all iniuſtice to their neighbours, making them to defile the mariage bed, to racke their inferiours, and out of their want and miſerie, to ſucke the ſweetneſſe of pleaſure and delight; to take away their neceſſaries, and to pinch their backes and bellies, that they may exceed in ſuperfluous dainties, and proud brauerie; and with Ahab to ſpoile thoſe poore Nabothes that dwell neere them, of their inheritances, to make them parkes of pleaſure and gardens of delight. But aboue all, worldly riches when men ſet their hearts vpon them, are the moſt ordinarie & powerful meanes & inducements, to aduance iniuſtice, & ſuppreſſe all law and right; for when men couet them with vnſatiable deſire, they become the meaſure of all their actions, accounting that iuſt which they find profitable, and nothing diſhoneſt that bringeth in gaine. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that whileſt men are greedy in increaſing wealth in multiplying their treaſures, and in getting the whole land into their poſſeſſion, deſiring to excell all others in riches and abundance; they lay aſide all iuſtice, and loſe common humanitie. For how can he be juſt which ſtudieth to take from another, that which hee deſireth to injoy himſelfe? This is the cauſe of all publike iniuſtice committed by Magiſtrates in ſuppreſſing right and maintaining wrong, defending the guiltie and ſupplanting the innocent: for when loue of money hath once ſeazed vpon their hearts, they become like a paire of ballance, not weighing the equitie of the cauſe in an vpright iudgement, but whether bribe is heauier, that they may in giuing ſentence incline to that ſide. So it is ſaid of the Sonnes of Samuel, that they walked not in their Fathers wayes, but turned after lucre, and tooke rewards, and peruerted iudgement. And thus corrupt Falix hoped to receiue a bribe from the Apoſtle Paul, but failing of his expectation, he left him ſtill in priſon, though hee knew the Iewes malice, and his innocencie. This is the cauſe of the Simonie of vnconſcionable Miniſters and Patrons, of the extortion amongſt officers, of the preuarication of Lawyers, of the oppreſſion of Land-lords, of vſurie fraud, lying and ſwearing, coſening and circumuenting, which are commonly vſed betweene man and man. And were it not for this greedineſſe of gaine, the Iudge would for the moſt part doe iuſtice, and execute righteous indgement; Officers would bee content with common fees; Lawyers would neither betray their clients cauſe, nor tire them with delayes; Patrons would giue their liuings freely, and make choice of the worthieſt perſons, and ſuch as beſt deſerue to bee preferred: then would vſurie be baniſhed, fraud and deceit be abhorred, ſimplicitie and truth be entertained and embraced. In a word, then ſhould wee haue another golden age, wherein all men would loue iuſtice, mercie, bountie, vpright dealing, and all other commendable vertues and good parts; whereas now through the immoderate loue of money, they are vtterly neglected of the greateſt number; and fraud, cruelty, oppreſſion, and all manner of iniuſtice is committed, and commonly practiſed, when they will bring in any gaine. And thus the Prophet ioyneth theſe together: from the leaſt of them (ſaith he) to the greateſt of them, euery one is giuen vnto couetouſneſſe; and from the Prophet euen to the Prieſt, they all deale falſely. The which vniuſtice and oppreſſion they doe not exerciſe againſt ſome few, or ſtrangers and enemies onely; but againſt all without exception, there being no bond ſo neere which couetouſneſſe will not breake and violate; no eſtate ſo pitifull and worthy of compaſſion, which they will not oppreſſe for their owne aduantage. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that the couetouſneſſe of rich men is vnſatiable; they are alwayes raking and neuer full, they neither feare God, nor reuerence men; they ſpare not their owne Father, nor acknowledge their Mother, nor regard their Brother, nor keepe their fidelity to their friend. They oppreſſe the widow, and ſpoile the fatherleſſe, they make free-men their bond-ſlaues; and for their profit giue falſe teſtimonie, &c. Now what madneſſe is this, to loſe life and deſire death, to get gold and loſe Heauen? But as they are vniuſt to all, ſo commonly moſt of all to the poore, both in taking away from them, that which is their owne, and alreadie in their keeping; and by withholding that which of right appertaineth to them. For as one ſaith, is he onely to be eſteemed a robber, and common ſpoiler, who taketh by violence other mens goods? and not hee alſo,

Act.24.27.

Nullum eſt officium tam ſanctum atq; ſolenne, quod non auaritia comminuere atque violare ſoleat. Cicer. Orat. pro Quintio.

Ier.6.13.

Auguſt. de verbo Domini.

Baſil. Serm.1. in Diuites auaros.

alſo, who appropriateth to himſelfe thoſe things, which he hath receiued to this end, that he ſhould diſpence and diſtribute them for the good of others? Is not the Almner to be accounted a theefe, who hauing receiued from his Soueraigne ſtore of money for the reliefe of the poore, doth put it into his owne purſe, and appropriate it to his owne priuate vſe? ſhall hee bee accounted a ſpoiler, who taketh away the poores garment; and ſhall hee bee acquitted, who doth not clothe the naked, if he haue abilitie? Thy ſpare bread is not thine owne, but belongeth to the hungrie; thou haſt no true right to thy ſuperfluous apparell, but they appertaine to to the cold and naked; thy moulded ſhooes belong to thoſe who goe barefoot; and thy hid and cankring ſiluer, to thoſe who want money to buy neceſſaries: and in a word, thou offereſt iniuries, and doeſt iniuſtice, ſo often to the poore, as thou doeſt neglect him, when thou art able to helpe him. And this our Sauiour Chriſt ſheweth in the ſentence of condemnation, which ſhall be pronounced againſt the wicked at the day of iudgement, whereby they are adiudged to Hell torments, not for ſpoiling the poore of that which they had, but becauſe they did not ſupplie their neceſſities, by giuing vnto them that which they wanted. And the Apoſtle Iames telleth rich men, that they had cauſe to howle and crie, not onely becauſe they had ſpoiled the poore of their money, but becauſe their owne corrupted riches, moath-eaten garments, and cankered gold and ſiluer, would be a witneſſe againſt them, eate their fleſh as fire, and bring vpon them many miſeries, ſeeing they ſhould not haue kept by them theſe ſuperfluities, but haue laid them out for the reliefe of the poore.

Matth.25.42.

Iames 5.1.2.3.

§. *Sect.*2.

That worldly things thruſt men on to the committing of outragious wrongs.

And thus haue I ſhewed that theſe worldly things being immoderately loued, are the cauſes of all iniuſtice, which comprehendeth vnder it all manner of ſinnes and offences, which are committed by one man againſt another: For not onely doth the exceſſiue loue of theſe earthly vanities make men to commit ſome kinds of legall iniuſtice, couered & coloured with ſome ſhew of right, or ſome ſlight and tolerable wrongs which greatly hurt not; but if men once ſet their hearts vpon them, they are the common cauſes of the moſt groſſe and grieuous iniuries, raging crueltie, open violence, treaſon and bloodſhed, whereby they conſume and deſtroy one another. In which reſpect the world is compared to a Sea, and worldly men to fiſh, which deuour one another, the greater feeding vpon the leſſe, and himſelfe againe becomming the prey of another which is greater than hee. For that which a man doth to one, hee ſuffereth of another; wickedneſſe rebounding vpon the authour, and the oppreſſor being oppreſſed by that example which himſelfe hath giuen. But this will better appeare in the ſpeciall inſtances: and firſt for honours; there is nothing more than they, being immoderately loued, which will thruſt men into all outragious, and pernicious courſes for the obtaining of them. For when the ambitious man wanteth true worth and lawfull means to aduance himſelfe into the ſeate of honour, he is ready to make ſteps, whereby he may aſcend, of any miſchiefe or villanie; betraying thoſe that truſt him, treading on their necks who helped him to riſe, falſly accuſing, ſupplanting, yea poyſoning, and ſecretly murthering thoſe who ſtand in his way, and hinder his preferments. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that nothing doth make men more madly and outragiouſly iniurious, than when by their proud ambition they are moued to deſire immoderately vaine glory and earthly aduancement; and contrariwiſe nothing doth make them more honeſt, reſolute, and like the adamant impenetrable by any vice, than when they doe neglect and deſpiſe it. Neither doth the ambitious man in this his outragious purſuit, ſuffer any thing to ſtay him; but runneth ouer friends and enemies, kindred and ſtrangers, acknowledging neither Father nor Mother, Wiſe nor the Childe of his bowels, but treadeth all vnder foot without difference, if they ſtand in his way, and hinder his proud march. Thus Ioab ſtabbed Abner, and Amaſa when he profeſſed greateſt friendſhip, that they might not bee preferred to his place of captaine general. Thus Kaine killed Abel becauſe he was preferred before him. Thus Abimelech murthered all his brethren that hee might reigne alone. This was the cauſe of Corahs conſpiracie againſt Moſes; of Abſolons rebellion againſt his owne Father; of Athaliahs murthering all the Kings ſeede; that hauing ſupplanted them, they might aduance themſelues into the royall throne, and weld the Scepter of the kingdome. So likewiſe theſe worldly riches are the cauſes and occaſions of all manner of miſchiefe and outragious iniurie to thoſe that ſet their hearts vpon them; in regard whereof the Wiſe man ſaith, that as the labours of the righteous tend to life, ſo the reuenues of the wicked to ſinne. Seeing there is no outrage or wickedneſſe which they are not ready to commit for the increaſing of their wealth. Thus by their hoording, they bring vpon the whole countrie a common dearth, and cauſe an vniuerſall pouerty, for the filling of their priuate purſe. Thus for their priuate gaine they are ready to offer all groſſe iniuries, and that without colour of reaſon, vpon meere will by tyranny and violence; as we may ſee in the example of Hophni and Phinehas the Sons of Eli, Quod quiſque facit patitur; authorem ſcelus repetit, ſuoque premitur exemplo nocens. Senec. in Herc. furen.

Chryſoſt. in Mat. 12. Homil. 41.

Iudg. 9. 4, 5.

2. Kings 11.1.

Prou. 10.16.

Eſa. 3.14.

Iam. 2.6.

1. Sam. 2.13, 14.16.

Eli, who tooke by force what they liſted from the people, when they came to offer ſacrifice. As alſo to exerciſe groſſe deceit and extreame crueltie towardes inferiours, that they may increaſe their worldly wealth; as appeareth in the example of the Iſraelites, who vſed vnequall and wicked ballances, & the bagge of deceitfull waights, and in all their cariages were full of cruelty. Finally, this immoderate loue of ſiluer maketh men trecherouſly to betray euen thoſe vnto whom they are moſt beholding, with Iudas ſetting them out to ſale for a little money: yea, it is the cauſe of cruell murther and bloudſhed, couetous Miſers being ready to bring men to the ſhambles, and like cruell Butchers to cut them into gobbets, and ſell them peece-meale for a little gaine. So the Prophet Ezechiel complaineth that there were among the people ſuch, as did take gifts to ſhed bloud. And the Prophet Micah ſaith, that they did pluck off the peoples skins, and their fleſh from their bones, and that they did eat their fleſh, breake their bones, chop them in pieces as for the pot, and as fleſh in the Cauldron. And hence it is that in the Scriptures couetouſneſſe & bloudſhed are joyned together: I haue ſmitten mine hands vpon thy couetouſneſſe which thou haſt vſed, and vpon the bloud which hath beene in the middeſt of thee. And in another place: Thy eyes and thine heart are but onely for thy couetouſneſſe, and for to ſhed innocent bloud, and for oppreſſion, and for deſtruction. The like alſo might be ſaid of carnall pleaſures, which if they be immoderately loued, cauſe men to commit any injuries or outrage, and that euen to the taking away of the precious life of their Neighbours. For ſo the Apoſtle Iames ſaith: Yee haue liued in pleaſure on the earth and in wantonneſſe: yee haue nouriſhed your hearts as in a day of ſlaughter; yee haue condemned and killed the juſt, and he hath not reſiſted you. An example whereof we haue in Dauid, whoſe carnall pleaſure in the end brought him to the committing of cruell murther; as alſo in Ahab, who to get ground for a pleaſant Garden, procured the death of innocent Naboth.

And theſe are ſome of thoſe manifold wrongs and grieuous injuries, which men through the immoderate loue of theſe worldly vanities do vſually offer vnto their neighbours; which although many about them may eſcape, yet all haue juſt cauſe to feare, ſeeing in offering a wrong to one, they threaten it againſt all; eſpecially, if their power be anſwerable to their will, they being ſo mighty in themſelues, or ſo backed with their potent friends, that no man dare make reſiſtance, or once call their actions into queſtion. But if they be wanting in this power and ability, ſo as they cannot doe what they would; yet are their wils neuer wanting to doe what wrongs they can; and when they are able to doe no more, they ceaſe not to enuy and maligne thoſe who exceed them in worldly proſperity, hauing in their poſſeſſion thoſe things which they deſire, and inwardly they repine at them, becauſe they haue that which themſelues want, whom ſelfe-loue maketh them beleeue to bee much more worthy. And thus thoſe who dote vpon worldly Honours enuy and hate all thoſe who are preferred before them, deſiring nothing more, than that they may out-grow them in aduancements, or if not ſo, yet that the other may fall and ſo become equall vnto them. So alſo they who ſet their hearts vpon riches are filled with enuy and hatred, when they ſee others thriue faſter, and to abound in greater plenty. And though they haue no other quarrell againſt their Neighbour, yet this is cauſe enough of a deepe conceiued grudge, if they exceed them in wealth; which enuy and repining they cannot commonly take away by all the humanity they can ſhew towards them, neither is there any thing but their loſſes, want, and miſery that can giue them contentment, and worke a reconciliation. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that the couetous man, hateth all men both poore and rich. The poore, fearing leſt they will beg of him; the rich becauſe they haue that which he would poſſeſſe. For he thinketh that all men enjoy thoſe things which of right appertaine vnto him; and therefore as though he were hurt of euery man, hee is angry with all. The like alſo might be ſaid of worldly pleaſures, which are the common cauſes of this enuy and hatred; to thoſe that ſet their hearts vpon them. They being ready to grudge and diſdain if any exceed them in dainty fare, and full tables, or in more ſtately Shewes, Maſques, and Reuels, or in varietie of delightfull ſports and paſtimes.

Chryſoſt. in Math. 26. Homil. 81.

§. Sect. 4. That worldly things make men proud and inſolent towards their neighbours.

Laſtly, this earthly proſperity and abundance of worldly bleſſings being ouer-valued and immoderately loued, doe puffe men vp with pride, and make them carry themſelues inſolently and diſdainfully towardes their Neighbours; vying with their Superiours as though they were their equals, neglecting their equals, as though they were their inferiours, and proudly inſulting ouer their inferiours as abjects, and baſe vnderlings. And as wateriſh humours abounding in the body doe cauſe a Dropſie, which ſwelleth it much aboue the ordinary meaſure, & filleth it ſo full, that it is neere vnto burſting: ſo theſe worldly and wateriſh vanities doe make mens hearts and minds ſubject to this dropſie of pride, whereby they are ſo ſwelled and puffed vp, that they are much greater in their owne conceit, than they were before, and thinke all their gifts and good parts though neuer ſo meane and ſuperficiall, of ſuch worth and excellency, that no man may be compared with them. So that a man ſhall diſcerne a maruellous alteration in the ſame perſon, in reſpect of his different eſtate and condition; for whereas when he was but of meane qualitie, or touched with ſome affliction, hee was humble, affable, and full of courteſie; when the croſſe is remooued, and he aduanced flouriſhing in proſperity, and euen wallowing in his abundance; preſently his carriage and behauiour is quite changed; & now he ſwelleth with pride, ouer-looketh all that meete him, ſcarce vouchſafeth a ſide glance, or a complementall ſalutation vnto thoſe, with whom formerly he was moſt familiar; and will ſcarce know his beſt Benefactours, leſt his proud heart ſhould be diſquieted, whileſt hee is forced to remember that hee was beholding; or thoſe of his acquaintance, who were formerly much better than hee, leſt his pride ſhould receiue any checke, whileſt he is put in minde, that hee was an vnderling. Which as he would haue all men to paſſe by, without taking notice of it; ſo would hee faine (if it were poſſible) forget it himſelfe, and haue his memory in this as vnfaithfull and ſlippery, as his honeſty and friendſhip, that ſo his pride might goe with full ſailes, and without any occaſion of bluſhing, carry it ſelfe inſolently and diſdainfully in all his courſes. It is true, that all men are proud by nature, vntill grace doe ſubdue it, and bring humilitie; but yet there are many, who make no ſhew of it in a mean eſtate, wanting meanes and opportunitie, which might (as it were) ſet fire to the powder of their corruption. And as the Serpent may be ſafely handled when hee is ſtiffe and benummed with cold, though all his poyſon be ſtill in him; but beginneth to hiſſe when he feeleth the leaſt warmth, and is ready to ſting thoſe, when hee is throughly heated who for pitie tooke him vp and put him into their boſomes: ſo this poyſon of pride lurketh ſecretly and lieth hid in mens hearts, when it is pinched, and (as it were) benummed with aduerſitie; but no ſooner hath it had the feeling of the warmth of proſperity, but it beginneth to hiſſe in proud boaſting, & to ſting and empoyſon with many inſolencies, thoſe who were the firſt meanes of their welfare & aduancement. And howſoeuer in their low eſtate they might eaſily haue beene ruled and led, and like ſhips without ſailes and tackle, were readie to yeeld themſelues ouer to the ſtreame and tide of other mens deſires, and ouer-ruling perſwaſions; yet now hauing attained vnto proſperitie and worldly abundance (as it were) vnto their full ſailes; they are onely carried with the winde of their owne pride, going againſt the tide of reaſon, and croſſing the current of all other mens deſires; no man now being more inſolent churliſh and vntractable, than theſe who lately were ſo plyable and curteous, after they are once corrupted with worldly felicitie. An example whereof wee haue in Hagar, who carried her ſelfe as became a ſeruant, whileſt ſhee was in this baſe condition; but being made her Maſters Concubine, and hauing borne a childe vnto him, ſhee preſently begins to deſpiſe her Miſtreſſe, who was the onely cauſe of her aduancement. Neither do they now miſlike this pride, and deſire to be freed from it, as being an infirmitie or blemiſh, which ill beſeemes them, but as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, their pride is a chaine vnto them, and they voluntarily put it on as a chiefe ornament. And as theſe worldly things bring them to this height of pride and inſolency when they abound with them; ſo when as they haue raiſed them to their higheſt pitch, if they then faile, and are taken away, they preſently fall downe againe, like a ruinous houſe, when the props that beare it vp are pulled from it, and become more abjectly baſe, and ſeruilely pleaſing than euer before, now ſcraping vp the old fragments of their before ſcorned acquaintance, ſoothing and flattering thoſe, euen in their contradictory ſpeeches, ouer whom not long ſince they proudly inſulted. So that theſe worldly vanities are the borrowed feathers and wings of pride, whereby men ſoare aloft in the high pitch of their owne conceits; which when they are pulled, or clipt by ſome aduerſe accident, they come tumbling downe againe, like a Bird, which in his high flight is ſmiten with a ſhot.

Nihil tam ſuperbum, intractabile ac moroſum eſt, quam homo quem ſulicitatis opinio corruperit, Plutarch comment. in princ. requir. doct. Tom.3.

Gen.16,4.

Pſal.73.6.

And thus are mens hearts lifted vp in pride with worldly Honours and preferments, inſulting ouer their inferiours, and inſolently diſdayning all thoſe, whom they haue out-ſtripped, and in this race of Honour haue left behind them. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that as ſoone as the ambitious man is aduanced to Honour, hee is puffed vp with pride, and letteth the raines looſe to arrogancy and inſolence. Neither doth hee care to profit, but glorieth that he is preferred, preſuming that he is ſo much better than others, as he is higher. Hee ſcorneth his old friends, and will not take knowledge of his ancient acquaintance, leſt he might ſeeme to haue beene their equall. Hee conſorteth himſelfe with ſtrangers, and contemnes thoſe who were his familiars before his aduancement; hee turneth aſide his countenance, ſtretcheth out his necke, ſheweth his haughtie heart, ſpeaketh bigge, and meditateth of high matters; hee is impatient of ſubjection, and aſpireth to Soueraigntie; to which when hee hath attained, hee is burthenſome, arrogant, ſterne, and inſolent to thoſe who are in ſubjection to him. An example whereof we haue in Rehoboam, who before he could haue the Crowne ſet vpon his head, inſolently tyrannized ouer his people. And in Haman, who being highly aduanced in the Kings fauour, was ſo puffed vp with pride, that he expected obeyſance and duty

§.Sect.
That riches & ſo men pro Inſolen, Innocen
v dis.

2.Chro
10,11.

duty from all men, and could not indure that Mordecai alone ſhould neglect him in this height of glory. And hence it is, that the Lord feeling, like a skilfull Phyſician, the lofty beating pulſes of great Potentates, and finding them inclinable to fall into the frenzie of pride, appointeth Kings and Princes, for the tempering and abating of their proud ſpirits, to haue his Law continually before them, that when the greatneſſe of their place did lift them vp, they might be humbled by knowing, and continuall remembring, that burthen of dutie which did lie vpon them. When (ſaith hee) The King ſhall ſit vpon the throne of his Kingdome, then ſhall hee write him this Law repeated in a Booke, by the Prieſts of the Leuits, and it ſhall be with him, and hee ſhall reade therein all the dayes of his life, that hee may learne to feare the Lord his God, and to keepe all the words of this Law, and theſe Ordinances for to doe them; that his heart be not lifted vp aboue his brethren. So alſo there is nothing more than riches and abundance which puffeth men vp with pride, making them inſolent and intolerable to all that are about them: and whereas before they were adorned, or after they are ſtripped of theſe rich furnitures, euery one might rule and ride them; yet when they ruffle it out in their rich brauery, their hearts are ſo high and haughtie, that none but Kings and great Monarchs can haue them at command. And being filled full with theſe Golden ſpirits, they are ready to aduance themſelues aboue their betters, thinking that their worth exceedeth as much as their wealth; and to offer wrongs and inſolencies to all that are poorer, preſuming that they can keepe them vnder with the waight of their Gold, and hinder them from righting themſelues, when they haue theſe pleaſing Oratours to pleade againſt them. So the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that they truſt in their goods, and boaſt themſelues in the multitude of their riches. And the wiſe man ſhewing the humility of the poore, and the haughty pride of the wealthier ſort, ſaith, that the poore ſpeaketh with prayers, but the rich anſwereth roughly. Whereof it alſo is, that the Apoſtle ſeeing the neere affinitie and acquaintance betweene pride and riches, the one being the Mother and Nurſe of the other, would haue an eſpeciall charge giuen to rich men, that they ſhould not bee high-minded, becauſe, of all others, they are moſt prone to fall into this ſinne. The like alſo might bee ſaid of worldly pleaſures, which being enjoyed with immoderate loue, and in exceſſiue meaſure, doe make men wanton, proud and inſolent; like vnto pampred Horſes, which being fatted with prouender will ſtand on no ground, nor indure to be ruled with any rider; whoſe pride and brauery laſteth no longer than they are well fed: for ſo theſe voluptuous Wantons being pampered with carnall delights, grow proud of their pleaſures, neither knowing themſelues nor others: but when they are ſcanted of their full Tables, and are depriued of that wherein they moſt delight, they preſently ſtrike ſayle, and the creſt of their pride is taken downe, hauing its birth and death, riſing and ruine, with thoſe carnall pleaſures whervpon they haue ſet their hearts. And theſe, with many other, are the euils & miſchiefes, which theſe worldly things too much eſteemed and immoderately loued, cauſe men to fall into in regard of their Neighbours. The which ſhould ſerue as effectuall reaſons to weane our hearts from the loue of theſe vanities, and to moderate our affections towards them, ſeeing otherwiſe, they will become not onely diſhonourable to God, but alſo hurtfull and pernicious vnto our neighbours, whom wee ought to loue as our ſelues, and tender their good, as much as wee doe our owne.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Of the ciuill euils which worldly things immoderately loued, bring to their Owners.

§. Sect. I. That abundance of worldly things effeminate & ſoften the heart & mind.

HAuing ſhewed how ſinfull the loue of the World, and worldly things is in reſpect of God, and how many miſchiefes it cauſeth towards our Neighbours; it now followeth, that I alſo ſhew, that as it is hurtfull and pernicious vnto others, ſo moſt of all to themſelues, who are poſſeſſed of it, as being the cauſe of innumerable euils & miſchiefes, and thoſe both temporary and eternall. The temporary euils which theſe worldly things immoderately loued, bring to thoſe who dote vpon them, are either ciuill, and meerely humane; or elſe ſuch as are ſpirituall, reſpecting the ſoule, and the inner man. The euils of the former ſort are diuers: for firſt, the proſperity of the World, and abundance of earthly bleſſings, doe ſoften and effeminate the heart and mind, making men impatient in bearing the leaſt croſſe, and impotent in performing any thing, wherein is any difficultie and labour: for proſperitie and plenty cauſe wantonneſſe, and wantonneſſe waywardneſſe, if they be but touched with the leaſt cauſe of griefe: and hauing beene long inured to tread onely in the ſoft path of worldly happineſſe, their feete are made ſo tender, that the leaſt hardneſſe of aduerſe accidents putteth them to paine, and the leaſt paine maketh them to cry out, being made intolerable not in it ſelfe, but through their impatiencie in ſuffering it. Thus theſe worldly Honours weaken and ſoften the minde, making it impatient, in bearing the leaſt iniurie, or ſhew of wrong, yea, though it bee but the ſuſpicion of a ſmall neglect. Or if by ſuperiour powers by whom they were aduanced, and by whoſe grace they ſtand, they be but a little frowned vpon, they preſently fearing a downfall, or doubting that they ſhall riſe no higher, haue their hearts broken, or at leaſt fretted and conſumed with griefe; whereas others, who either neuer had theſe Honours or neuer much eſteemed them, hauing the comfort of a good conſcience within them, feare no frownes, and beare with patience vndeſerued diſgraces, and the loſſe of thoſe Honours, which they neuer highly valued. So alſo riches immoderately loued, ſoften the heart, and weaken the reſolution of thoſe that haue them, making them cowardly in attempting any thing which is good, if the leaſt ſhew of danger be in it, either to their perſon or eſtate; equally fearing the loſſe of their liues, and the hazard of their wealth, leſt either by the one, they ſhould be taken from their Idoll, or by the other, it ſhould be taken from them. The latter whereof is more grieuous vnto them than the former, becauſe by the prolonging of their life, after the loſſe of their riches, their ſorrow is continued, whereas the griefe which they ſuſtaine, for being taken from their wealth, is taken away by death, which maketh them ſenſleſſe in feeling their loſſe. By which feare and cowardize poſſeſſing their hearts, they are made altogether vnwilling to ſtand in any cauſe for Gods glory, the defence of iuſtice and truth, or for the common good of the Church or Commonwealth, if any ſuperiour powers doe oppoſe againſt them: yea, they are ready inſtruments, euen of thoſe miſchiefes, which their conſciences doe condemne and abhor, rather than they wil by incurring their diſpleaſure, hazard themſelues to bee fleeced of any of their wealth. Againe, they are hereby made ſo impotent, and impatient of bearing any loſſe, that many, who haue bin ſuddenly, and (as it were) vnſeaſonably (before they could prepare their minds, & gather their ſpirits) depriued of ſome ſmal ſhare of their abundance, & pruned of their ſuperfluities haue murthred themſelues, & like the vine, haue bled to death of theſe ſleight wounds, hauing no patience ſo much as to think of out-liuing their loſſe. For after that the loue of riches hath once ſoftned their hearts, they are made weake, cowardly, and vnable to indure any thing; and ſhew themſelues onely patient & ſtrong in induring the baſe ſeruitude of their riches, and in vndergoing all thoſe ſeruile and painfull offices, wherein they will imploy them. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that Chriſtian fortitude fleeth couetouſneſſe, as being a blot or blemiſh vnto vertue, which doth effeminate and weaken it; neither is there any thing ſo contrary vnto true fortitude and magnanimitie, as to be ouercome with gaine. Finally, voluptuous pleaſures being immoderately loued and affected, doe as much, if not more than any thing, eneruate vertue, and weaken the heart and minde; making them, though they be naturally couragious, ſoft and effeminate, when men too much are addicted to them. For when leauing labour and manly exerciſes, they betake them to carnall delights, inuring themſelues to daintie fare, and ſoft lodging, and ſpending their whole time in chambring and wantonneſſe, dancing and reuelling, ſports and paſtimes, theſe Circes cups bewitch and poyſon them, and cauſing them to lay aſide all manlineſſe, doe at beſt change them into weake women, or which is worſe, transforme them into filthy Swine, abhorring all paines and labour, and taking all their delight to wallow themſelues in the filthy puddle of carnall pleaſures. And theſe curſed Dalilaes, lulling them aſleepe in their laps with their ſweete and enchanting Songs, doe take away from them all their ſtrength, and ſo enfeebling them, make them to be eaſily ouercome of any vice or ſin, and ready to yeeld vnto any tentation of Sathan or the World. So one ſaith, that in pleaſures, the heart is made more ſoft and flexible; but in affliction and time of mourning, it contracteth it ſelfe, and gathereth all its forces together; and ſo returning to its ſelfe, it affecteth moderation, and being freed from the burthen and tyrannie of paſſions, it is made ſtronger and more nobly lofty. And hence it is, that politicke Conquerours, hauing with great danger and difficulty vanquiſhed and ouercome ſome warlike Nations, haue to keepe them ſtill vnder, deſpoyled them of their armes, and in ſtead of warlike exerciſes, drawne them to banquetting, gaming, and reuelling, that ſo their courage might be abated, and their hearts ſoftned and effeminated with theſe pleaſures and delights. And therefore if we make any account of Chriſtian fortitude and magnanimity, which chiefly defendeth vs againſt our enemies; if wee would not haue our manly courage changed into womaniſh weakneſſe, let vs not immoderately loue worldly proſperity, nor vnmeaſurably affect either Honours, Riches, or carnall pleaſures, which take away both our patience in ſuffering, and our ſtrength in performing, and ſo make vs vnable for any Chriſtian, yea, man-like employment.

Ambroſ. offic. lib. 2. cap. 39.

Chryſoſt. in Math. 12. Homil. 41.

Cyrus apud Iuſtin. lib.

§. Sect.

That the tion of w vanities men to in need of ny things.

A ſecond euill or miſchiefe which worldly proſperity, and abundance of earthly things bring vnto thoſe who enjoy them with immoderate loue, is, that by their plenty they bring vpon them a neceſſity, and make them to ſtand in need of many things (whereas nature is content with a few) the want of the leaſt whereof cauſeth vnto them ſorrow and diſcontent. For by the vſuall accuſtoming of themſelues to ſuperfluities, they alter the courſe of their natures, and make them to become neceſſary; and whereas thoſe who neuer vſed them, neuer need them, nature in it ſelfe being as well content without as with them; contrariwiſe thoſe who haue inured themſelues vnto them, hauing turned cuſtome into a ſecond nature, cannot want them without a mayme. In which reſpect worldly men abounding with theſe earthly things, are in a farre worſe condition than thoſe who neuer had them; for as he who by continuall vſe of Phyſicke, hath brought his body to ſuch a diſpoſition, that he can enjoy no health, vnleſſe he continually bee taking medicines, nor digeſt a meale without the helpe of hot waters, is in a farre worſe eſtate, though hee had the beſt Phyſicians to tend him, and a whole Apothecaries ſhop at his command, than a poore labouring man who needeth neither cordial, pill nor potion, but without theſe helps, eateth his meate with a good appetite, and well digeſting it, hath it turned into good nouriſhment, though he haue neither Phyſician to counſel, nor drugge to purge him, becauſe his nature and conſtitution is ſo ſtrong, that hee needeth them not: ſo is our eſtate farre better when wee haue few wants, than wanting much to haue many ſupplies (euen as it is better to bee in health without medicines, than to be weake and ſickly abounding with them) not only becauſe they bring trouble by their continuall vſe, but alſo being outward things, they are both prouided and kept with care and labour, and though they now abound, yet within a while they may be wanting vnto vs; whereas when we haue few wants, we alſo need few ſupplies, which commonly are hard at hand and eaſily compaſſed. There is no man but would thinke his eſtate much better, who being neceſſarily to goe a journey ſhould need but ſmall prouiſion by reaſon of his ſtrength and health; as bread and water, light clothing, and hard lodging; than another who though hee be but weake, yet is forced to carry a whole burthen of neceſſaries, both for Dyet, Phyſicke and Apparell: but we are all to trauell in our earthly pilgrimage towards our heauenly Country; and therefore how much better is their condition, who need feweſt neceſſaries, which are as eaſily prouided, as lightly carried; than theirs who hauing abundance of theſe earthly things, cannot goe without them, nor yet carrie them with them without toyle and labour; ſeeing their ſtore may faile, or by force bee taken from them, & ſo leaue them to pine in want and miſery?

But this will the better appeare, if we conſider the ſpeciall inſtances: for who ſeeth not that worldly Honours doe bring with them many neceſſities, and cauſe them who haue them to want innumerable things of which others haue no need? They cannot with their Honour goe alone in publike places, but muſt haue a retinue of ſeruants attending on them; they cannot viſit a friend without Horſes and Coaches, and (as one ſaith) they are ſo much carried with others legges, that they forget to vſe their owne, or at leaſt whatſoeuer need they haue, are not able to endure long trauell. They cannot remooue without Carts for their carriages, and Sumpter Horſes for their Apparell: finally, they cannot ſit downe to meate, but their ſtate requireth furniſhed Tables; whereas nature would bee better ſatisfied with one diſh. So likewiſe riches and abundance bring to their Owners many wants; from which the poorer ſort are priuiledged; for according to their ſtore and prouiſion, accuſtoming themſelues to the vſe of many things (whereas at firſt they were meere ſuperfluities) they are now by cuſtome become neceſſaries: for example, they haue diuers ſuites for the ſeuerall ſeaſons, and wearing that which fitteth the time of the yeere, they accuſtome their bodies to a juſt proportion or temperature betweene heate and cold; ſo alſo they carefully obſerue the weather, keeping themſelues warme within doores when the cold North winde bloweth, and onely walking abroad when the ayre is pleaſant, and of a fit temper for their bodies. Finally, they liue at eaſe, ſhunning labour and any painfull exerciſe which might cauſe wearineſſe, and doe all their buſineſſes by the miniſtery of their ſeruants. To all which when they haue by long cuſtome inured themſelues, they cannot endure any alteration: if they bee a little warmer than ordinary, they are impatient of heat, and complaine as if they were broyled; if the colde winde doe but blow vpon them, they are ready to ſhake as if they were ſtarued. If vpon ſome extraordinary occaſion they are forced to take any paines, they are preſently ſicke with wearineſſe, and ſoone after lame and vnable to ſtirre. Neither doe they take vpon them theſe things for the more ſtate, or counterfeit them for wantonneſſe, or are only ſubject to theſe infirmities through the impatiencie of their minds: but their niceneſſe, ſupplyed and nouriſhed with their abundance, maketh this tendernes and weakneſſe ſo habituall to their bodies, that they can in truth endure no hardneſſe; nor want any thing vnto which they are accuſtomed without imminent danger. If vnſeaſonably they leaue off any of their ordinary apparell, or ſtand but a little in the cold ayre, they hazard their health by taking cold; if the weather be but a little too hot, they are ready to faint; if they take a little extraordinary paines it is grieuous vnto them, and the abſence of their ſeruants whoſe miniſtery they vſe, is as troubleſome vnto them, as if they wanted their hands or feet. Whereas honours, riches and pleaſures.

An illos beatos putas qui ſeruitiorum ſequentium ſtipantur cateruis? ſed qui aliena pedes requirunt, ſuis vti neſciunt Ambroſ. Hexamer. lib. 6. ca. 8.

the poore labouring man is not hurt either with the cold of Winter, or heat of Summer, but dareth the nipping winds and ſcorching Sunne with his vncouered head, bare face and open breaſt, being beſt at eaſe, and euen ſinging or whiſtling to expreſſe his inward joy, when hee is buſieſt at his labours: which when they are ended, he cheerfully and with a good ſtomacke feedeth on his courſe fare, and after ſleepeth quietly in his hard bed. And therefore ſeeing riches haue ſo many infirmities attending on them, and ſubject thoſe that haue them to ſo many wants, from all which the poore eſtate is priuiledged and exempted; there is no reaſon why we ſhould dote ſo vpon them with immoderate loue, and flie the other with ſuch feare and hatred; ſeeing in this reſpect the meane condition hath juſt pre-eminence: for though it bee good to haue much, yet it is better to want nothing; ſeeing herein wee come neereſt to the eſtate of the bleſſed Saints and Angels, not in poſſeſſing worldly abundance, but in little needing ſuch ſupplies. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that howſoeuer a rich man may ſeeme great and happy, becauſe hee hath Horſes, coſtly prouiſion, Seruants and Attendance; and though he may ſeeme to haue great power, becauſe hee hath many at command, appointing to euery one their ſeuerall buſineſſe; yet in truth theſe words of command, ſhew rather infirmitie and inſufficiencie, than abilitie and power; ſeeing that which they cannot doe themſelues, they are conſtrained to doe by the miniſtery of others: and their great ſtore and prouiſion doth but argue the greatneſſe of their want, and conſequently of their miſery; wee being then alone truely bleſſed when hauing all our ſufficiencie in God, wee ſtand in need of nothing. The like alſo may bee ſaid of voluptuous pleaſures, which whoſoeuer haue in abundance, and ſet their hearts on them with immoderate loue, they are ſo farre from being perfected by them, that they adde much to their imperfection. For though at firſt they were but meere ſuperfluities, yet being by cuſtome inured to them, they become ſo neceſſary, that they cannot want them without great griefe and diſcontent. Thus ordinary drinkes ſeeme to their taſte loathſome medicines; common fare, a tedious faſt; want of ſports and paſtimes, a diſcomfortable impriſonment; and ordinary ſocietie, an irkeſome ſolitarineſſe; neither doe they ſeeme to themſelues any longer to liue, than they enjoy their vſuall delights, ſitting downe at full Tables furniſhed with all dainties, enjoying the ſocietie of their pleaſant companions, and ſpending the day in gaming and reuelling, in ſeeing ſhewes and playes, and in following their ſports and carnall delights: wherein, as one ſaith, they are of all others moſt miſerable, becauſe they are come to that paſſe, that thoſe things which were ſuperfluous, are now become neceſſary, whereby they are made Slaues to their delights, not freely enjoying, but baſely ſeruing them; and that which is worſt of of ils, they loue their ſlaueries; for then our vnhappineſſe is compleate and perfect, when as filthy and diſhoneſt things, doe not only a little delight, but fully pleaſe vs, and there is no hope of amendment when vices become manners. In which reſpect (as hee ſaith elſe-where) it is the greateſt pleaſure, not to ſtand in need of theſe pleaſures, and to be (like the Apoſtle) free men, who can vſe them, and not bee brought in ſubjection vnto them; enjoying them with a careleſſe contempt, and loſing them without griefe: or vſing pleaſures, as the Angels vſe meate which they can eate for company, and as eaſily obſerue perpetuall abſtinence; their feeding being an action of power, and not of neceſſitie. Finally, ſeeing the abundance of theſe earthly things bringeth want, and the greateſt plentie is the cauſe of the greateſt penurie and neceſſitie, like meates which doe not ſatisfie, but increaſe the hunger; let vs learne to contemne them, or at leaſt careleſſely vſe them: and let vs ſet our hearts on Gods ſpirituall graces and heauenly joyes, by whoſe ſtore wee are enriched, and whoſe plentie brings ſufficiencie. For they that drinke of theſe waters of life, ſhall neuer be more a thirſt, but they ſhall be in him a well of water, ſpringing vp vnto euerlaſting life, as our Sauiour Chriſt teacheth vs.

Infœlix, verba iſta, iunge, flerne; quæ cum ſuperbia dicunt diuites, ſunt infirmitatis, non facultatis, Auguſt. Serm. in feſt. Paſchæ, Tom. 10.

Sen. Epiſt. 39.

Summ... ...ta eſt ... ...egere ... ...tibus, Sen... Epiſt. ...

Iohn 4. 14.

The third euill or miſchiefe, which theſe worldly things immoderately loued, doe bring vpon vs, is, that they depriue vs of our liberty, and inthrall vs in a miſerable ſeruitude, and cruell bondage. For after they haue vanquiſhed vs with that power and ſtrength which our owne opinions haue armed them with, they preſently enchaine our hearts and affections with the links and fetters of their loue, and ſo lead vs away into a miſerable captiuity; not ſuffering vs any longer to ſerue the Lord, whoſe ſeruice alone is perfect liberty; nor yet to bee ruled by holy reaſon, and aduiſed and counſelled by a ſound and vnpartiall iudgement; but putting out the eyes of our vnderſtanding, they make vs to grind in their mill, ſpending all our ſtrength in their ſeruice, and taking vs wholly vp in their imployments, either about the getting, keeping, or increaſing them. And wheras the Lord offereth vnto vs, that if we will aknowledge him for our only Lord and Maſter, we ſhall haue a faire and eaſie ſeruice, and haue inward peace, and the quiet and comfort of a contented minde, and feed vpon the delicious and wholeſome §. Sect. ... That world... things bri... men into a grieuous ſer... uitude.

food

foode of his word and ſacraments; hauing for the preſent the vailes of his ſpirituall graces, and temporall neceſſaries, for our better encouragement in our eaſie labours, and his aſſured promiſe to giue vs when our ſeruice is performed, and our terme finiſhed, the wages of eternall life and euerlaſting glory; yet like the wretched Iſraelites wee are ſo intangled with the loue of our bondage, that wee are ready to preferre our painefull ſeruitude, before Chriſtian liberty; theſe conſuming and cruell labours, before that ſpirituall eaſe and peacefull tranquillity; the ſeruice of the ſpirituall Pharaoh, before the ſeruice of our good and gracious God, and the fleſh-pots, onions, and garlike of this worldly Egypt, without any further hope of future benefit, before the ſpirituall Manna of Gods ſanctifying graces, and our euerlaſting inheritance in the holy land. And that thoſe who are worldly minded bee in this ſtate and condition, and hauing ſhaken off the ſeruice of God are become true vaſſals of the world, it may appeare by that liuery and cogniſance whereby the Apoſtle hath diſcerned them; namely their ſubjection and obedience vnto their maſter, Know yee not (ſaith he) that to whomſoeuer yee giue your ſelues as ſeruants to obey, his ſeruants yee are, to whom yee obey? And the Apoſtle Peter ſaith, that howſoeuer wicked worldlings promiſe vnto themſelues liberty, yet they are the ſeruants of corruption; for of whomſoeuer a man is ouercome, euen to the ſame hee is in bondage. Now if this badge of obedience bee an infallible ſigne of ſeruice and ſubjection, then moſt certainely they who immoderately loue theſe earthly things, are not the ſeruants of God, but the Bondſlaues of the World. For what the Lord commandeth, they vtterly neglect, but what the World inioyneth, promiſing the wages of theſe vnprofitable vanities, that they moſt willingly obſerue and performe. As for example, the Lord requireth that they ſhould not minde earthly things, that they ſhould performe the duties of his ſeruice, deale juſtly and vprightly with their neighbours, and bee liberall and bountifull in the workes of mercy, releeuing the poore, and contributing of their goods to all religious and holy vſes: and contrariwiſe the world commandeth that they ſhould fixe their hearts and affections not on things aboue, but on things beneath, that they ſhould for their worldly aduantage neglect Gods ſeruice and ſpend his Sabboths about their owne affaires, and for the obtaining of theſe earthly vanities, vſe fraud and deceit, diſſembling and double dealing, oppreſſion and cruelty: and that hauing by theſe meanes gotten much into their poſſeſſion, they ſhould labour daily to adde to their ſtore, and not to diminiſh any part thereof by performing the workes of mercy, charity, and piety, vnleſſe they bee preſſed from them by authority; and except it be now and then to giue out of their thouſands, a penny-Almes to ſtill the cry of their conſcience, or to incourage them to goe on with more quiet of mind in their fraude, vſury, oppreſſion and other vnlawfull courſes, which their owne hearts doe not iuſtifie, becauſe by giuing theſe trifles, they thinke that they haue made God ſome part of amends, and that thereby they haue as well bribed his juſtice, that it will not condemne them, as they haue corrupted their owne conſciences, that they doe no more accuſe them. All which commandements, of the World, they willingly obey, neglecting & contemning the commandements of God, whereby they make it plaine that they haue vtterly caſt off his ſeruice, and are become the deuoted vaſſals, and bondſlaues of the World.

§.Sect.5. That worldlings are ſlaues in diuers reſpects.

And here by the World wee vnderſtand both worldly men, and worldly things, vnto the ſeruice of both which this immoderate loue makes men ſubject; for they forgoe their liberty and become the ſeruants of all thoſe, who may helpe them to the obtaining, preſeruing, or increaſing of theſe earthly things, which they ſo fondly loue, or haue power in their hands to take them away, being ready at their command to doe what they know may pleaſe them, and to eſchue thoſe things, by the doing whereof they may incurre their diſpleaſure. And becauſe theſe are many and their minds and deſires variable, yea often contrarie the one to the other; therefore that they may pleaſe them all, they are faine to transforme themſelues into a thouſand ſhapes, and in their words, and actions, according to the diuerſity of their occaſions, to vſe tenne thouſand contradictions, humouring euery one in their owne vaine, and like paraſites ſtudying to pleaſe all others rather than themſelues; that ſo they may at leaſt giue them contentment ſeuerally, vnto whom they meane to bee beholding, ſeeing it is impoſſible to pleaſe all together. Which though they can doe with ſome facility (hauing brought their minds to a ſeruile ſubjection, for the more eaſie obtaining of their deſires) when they haue to deale with them ſingle and alone; yet how are they moiled and troubled with cares and feares of loſing the fauour of ſome or all? How are their inuentions ſet vpon the racke, when they labour to pleaſe many diuerſly minded in the ſame company? and with what ſhame are they poſſeſſed (if they bee not growne vtterly impudent) when by conferring and comparing their words and actions, their contradictions, diſſembling, and double dealing are diſcouered? So likewiſe they be-

Qui multis indiget, multorum ſeruus eſt, etſi ea poſſidere videatur. Chryſoſt. in Ioh.17. hom. 16.

come the ſeruants and ſlaues of the things themſelues which they ſeeme to haue at their command; for (as one ſaith) hee who through his greedy concupiſcence wanteth many things, is the ſeruant alſo of many, although hee ſeemeth to haue them in his poſſeſſion. And that both becauſe by reaſon of their loue towards them, they are ready to be at their command, that they may ſtill enjoy them; and by reaſon of that truſt and confidence which they repoſe in them, whereby they depend vpon them for ſufficiency and defence, as much or more than the baſeſt ſeruant, vpon his powerfull Maſter. Yea hereby they become ſlaues to their owne vile affections and neglecting both what Gods word, or their owne reaſon requireth, they ſuffer themſelues to be wholly tranſported by their owne concupiſcence, for the ſatisfying of their carnall deſires; and as their paſſions and affections are ruled by theſe earthly objects, ſo are they wholly ruled by their paſſions; not affecting things becauſe are they good, but eſteeming them good, becauſe they affect them. The which gouernment of paſſion and carnall concupiſcence, as it is moſt tyrannicall, ſo it argues the moſt baſe and abject ſeruitude of worldly men, who are ſubject vnto it; ſeeing they are in a farre worſe condition than they who are oppreſſed with the moſt cruell tyranny. For that onely ruleth but the outward actions, this alſo the inward thoughts; that but at ſometimes, this continually; that with ſome hope of freedome, they hauing ſome deſire to be deliuered when opportunity ſerueth; but this deſperate and hopeleſſe, ſeeing not onely their bodies, but their wils alſo are embondaged, ſo as they haue not ſo much as a deſire to be ſet at liberty. Finally, as hereby they become ſlaues to their owne concupiſcence, ſo it being carnall and corrupt, maketh them alſo the ſeruants of ſinne; not daring to doe any thing which God commandeth, when it will hinder them from obtaining their earthly deſires; and running headlong in any wicked courſe which promiſeth to ſatisfie their carnall concupiſcence. Now what can bee more miſerable than the ſeruice of ſin, which freeth vs from righteouſneſſe, as the Apoſtle teacheth vs, & maketh men alſo to become the ſlaues of Satan; whileſt for the obtaining of theſe worldly vanities, they are ready by ſinning to doe Satans will, and to pleaſe him, by diſpleaſing God?

Nullus liber eſt, qui ſibi ipſi non imperat. Pythagoras apud Stobæum, li.1. Ser.6.

An non ſeruus cui dominatur peccatum, & maximè? niſi tu forte indignius iudices hominem tibi quàm vitium dominari. Bernard. *Rom.*6.20. 2.*Tim.*2.26.

§.Sect. 6. That worldly things make their owners ſlaues to themſelues.

But though theſe worldly things ſhould ſubject men to the ſlauery of nothing elſe; yet the ſeruice which they who ſet their hearts vpon them, are conſtrained to doe vnto themſelues, were ſufficient to make them miſerable: for what can bee more wretched than to leaue the ſeruice of the almighty Creatour, and to become ſlaues to theſe baſe and meane creatures? To neglect our allegiance to the glorious King of Heauen and Earth, that wee may ſerue our ſeruants, and yeeld ſubjection to them, ouer whom wee are appointed to rule? Eſpecially if wee further conſider, that Gods ſeruice which we forſake is eaſie and profitable: for as Chriſt hath taught vs, his yoke is eaſie, and his burthen light; which notwithſtanding whoſoeuer take vpon them, ſhall find eternall reſt to their ſoules. Whereas contrariwiſe the ſeruice which is performed to theſe worldly vanities, is tedious, tyrannicall, and full of trouble, bringing in the end to thoſe that ſerue them, hell and deſtruction, as their wages and reward. For ſo the authour of the booke of Wiſedome bringeth in the wicked complaining, in their horrour of conſcience, and torments of hell: Wee haue wearied our ſelues in the wayes of wickedneſſe and deſtruction, and wee haue gone through dangerous wayes; but we haue not knowen the way of the Lord. What hath pride profited vs? or what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs? So that the more worldly men doe abound with theſe earthly things, the more inſulting Maſters and proud tyrants they haue to rule ouer them, and conſequently the more grieuous is their ſeruitude. Neither is this tyranny mitigated by obeiſance and ſubmiſſe dutie; for ſo ſeruile is the nature of theſe tyrannicall Lords, that the more hartie and diligent ſeruice is done vnto them, the more they inſult, and tyrannize ouer their ſeruants; herein more ſauage and barbarous than the wild beaſts, which grow more milde to thoſe who are ſeruiceable vnto them, and are ſaid to ſpare thoſe who vſe moſt ſubmiſſion. Vnto which wee may adde that this ſeruice is not performed with the body alone, but alſo with the minde, whereby it commeth to paſſe, that worldlings are neuer at reſt, neither day nor night; for that time which ſhould be allotted for ſleepe, is ſpent in meditating of thoſe buſineſſes which when they ariſe, they are to performe to theſe cruel Maſters. And that which maketh vp the height of the worldlings miſerie, there is no hope of their freedome, becauſe they loue their ſeruitude; and are ſo much delighted with the glorious brightneſſe of their golden chaines, that they will not bee ſet at liberty, becauſe they will not part with their Giues and fetters, they with their ſhining luſtre ſo dazling their eyes, and euen ſtupifying all their ſenſes, that they neither ſee nor feele their bondage and ſeruitude.

*Wiſ.*5.7.8.

§.*Sect.*7. That hono immoder l..ued, brin men into uerie and thraldome.

Thus honours immoderately loued, make men ſubject to a noble thraldome, and vnder the maske of glory and greatneſſe, bring with them diſguiſed bondage; for in ruling they muſt ſerue; and before they can haue the glory of the World they muſt abaſe themſelues to be in ſubjection to many commanders. Wherein the ſtate of an ambitious man is farre more wretched than the eſtate of the pooreſt ſeruant; for wheras theſe haue diſcharged their duety, and are at reſt, when they haue by their ſeruice pleaſed one Maſter; they contrariwiſe turmoile themſelues by ſeruing many, becomming their vnderlings, ouer whom they ſeeme to rule. For looke of how many the ambitious man deſireth to bee prayſed and honoured, vnto ſo many he ſtandeth in awe and ſubjection. Hee dare not doe thoſe things which beſt pleaſe himſelfe, but thoſe which hee knoweth moſt plauſible to his admirers; and the more they are in number, the greater is his taske, for hee ſerueth a beaſt which hath many heads, and euery head hath his differing opinions. The which maketh the proud man to ſtoup in his greateſt brauery, to diſtract his thoughts, and beat his braines, in ſtudying how to pleaſe a diſagreeing multitude. Hee is alwayes in feare of loſing his fauourites, as though hee ſhould fall out of the clouds to receiue a mortall blow vpon the earth, vnleſſe they did ſupport him with the wings of fame and hold him vp with the breath of their mouthes. He is alwayes moſt vigilant, that hee neither ſay nor doe any thing which may diſpleaſe; he counterfeyteth humility, and faineth honeſty; hee maketh ſhew of affable courteſie, and diſſembleth benignity; to all hee meets hee vncouers his head, and boweth his body; hee riſeth vp and embraceth, applaudeth and flattereth; he daily viſiteth his fauourites, and obſerueth vnto them all outward complements, he is in iealouſie, not onely of verball cenſures, but of mentall diſlikes; hee obſerueth the very lookes and countenance of all, and is as much afraide of a fained rumour, and falſe fiction, as of a juſt accuſation, and deſerued reproofe. And as hee liueth in this ſlauery in reſpect of worldly men, whoſe prayſes hee hunteth after; ſo alſo is hee ſeruant to his honours and preferments, whileſt he ſpendeth his ſpirits, tireth his thoughts, and euen conſumeth all his ſtrength, either about the getting, keeping or increaſing them. Yea they are ſlaues alſo to their owne luſts, and whileſt they rule & command others, they themſelues are ruled & commaunded by their own ambitions; and that not with a gentle gouernment, or eaſie ſubjection, but with more tyranny and cruelty than can bee expected from a barbarous enemy. For after the Turkiſh faſhion, this tyran ambition, hath their goods at continuall commaund, ſpoiling them of all their riches to make golden ſteps, whereby they may aſcend into the ſeate of honour; yea and when all their wealth is conſumed, they are ready with the Egyptians to ſell themſelues into a miſerable ſeruitude that they may feede their famiſhed ſoules with the ſmoake of vaine-glory, which will neuer ſatisfie them. For it forceth them to trauell by Sea and Land, to weare out themſelues with labours, to expoſe their bodies to wounds and ſcars, and their liues to innumerable miſeries, and moſt deſperate dangers. In which regard one ſaith, that the ſeruant of vaine-glory is ſeruant to euery one; and in his ſeruice more ſeruile than the baſeſt bondſlaue; for no tyrannous Maſter laieth ſuch heauy burdens, and grieuous commaunds vpon his ſlaues, as it doth vpon his captiues, and the more obedient they are, the more this ambition increaſeth its tyranny. Neither doth it tyrannize ouer their bodies and goods alone, but ouer their ſoules alſo; for it turmoileth them with many vnruly paſſions, racking them betweene hope and feare, and euen burning their hearts with boiling anger, and furious deſire of cruell reuenge. It diſquieteth them with continuall cares, whileſt they tire all their thoughts in plotting the meanes of aſpiring, or preſeruing their glory and greatneſſe; and (which is worſt of all) it defileth them with all manner of ſinne, whileſt they are ready to put in practiſe any villanny to aduance themſelues higher, as before I haue ſhewed. And conſequently, whileſt they aſpire to bee aboue all other men, they become the ſeruants of ſinne, and ſlaues of Satan; and willingly doe that, to which our Sauiour was tempted, and reſiſted, that is, fall downe and worſhip the diuell, when he promiſeth vnto them the glorie of the World; and ſo firſt bring themſelues into the moſt damnable ſeruitude, that afterwards they may bee extolled and aduanced.

Chryſoſt. ad pop. homi. 43. Tom. 4.

Neque gloriæ ſeruus minus peccat quàm fornicator, imò longè plura & grauiora committit. Chryſ. in Iohn 3. homil. 27.

§. Sect. 8.

That riches bring their owners into a miſerable bondage.

So alſo riches when they are too much eſteemed, and exceſſiuely loued, bring their owners into a miſerable bondage, making them to ſerue the earthly Mammon, and their owne couetous luſts; the which ruling in them ſubject them to the baſe ſeruice of all men, from whom they expect gaine and aduantage; yea of ſinne and Satan, being ready to commit any wickedneſſe, for the increaſing of their wealth. But this is not the ſtate of all men that haue riches, but of thoſe who too much eſteeme and loue them; not ſo much of the rich, as of the couetous, who dote vpon them; not of thoſe who being wiſe, know how to vſe them, keeping them in ſeruitude, and hauing them at commaund, but of thoſe fooles, who not knowing their right vſe, ſuffer them to tyrannize and beare rule. For if we can poſſeſſe riches with careleſſe contempt, and moderate loue, if wee haue them at commaund, and when wee pleaſe can part with them liberally and chearefully for the reliefe of the poore, and for all pious and charitable vſes, if wee can poſſeſſe poſſeſſe them and humility too, being neuer the more proude and inſolent, becauſe of our abundance, then are wee not by them brought into this ſlauery, but continue freemen, and Gods faithfull ſeruants; neither doth our hauing, but our immoderate louing of riches, hinder vs from ſeruing God; for our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith not, that it is impoſſible to haue riches and ſerue God, but to doe ſeruice vnto them both as our Lords and Maſters. As therefore it is ſaid of Fire and Water, that they are good ſeruants, but bad maſters; ſo may it bee truely ſaid of riches, which whileſt they are kept in ſubjection, and vnder commaund, are profitable ſeruants, but become tyrannous maſters when they are ſuffered to rule and beare ſway. So that whoſoeuer poſſeſſeth riches, muſt eyther eſteeme them, in reſpect of ſoueraignty, or become baſe himſelfe; either hee muſt commaund and rule them as a Lord and Maſter; or they will rule him as a ſeruant or ſlaue. For ſo our Sauiour Chriſt ſaith plainely, that the couetous worldling ſerueth his riches; and euen reaſon and common experience teacheth vs, that they who ouervalue their wealth and ſet their hearts vpon it, howſoeuer they are owners, yet they are not maſters of their riches, yea in truth that they are no better than drudges and ſeruants vnto them, carrying themſelues towards them in all reſpects, in a moſt ſeruile and ſlauiſh manner. For they haue not their riches at their commaund, nor haue power to doe with them that which their judgement beſt approueth, as to beſtow them vpon themſelues for their owne comfort, and to diſtribute them for the reliefe of the poore; but they are commaunded by them, and enioyned ſtill to ſcrape more, when already they haue too much. As ſeruants they miniſter vnto their money, and doe ſeruice vnto their wealth, keeping and tending it, watching ouer it, and in all dangers with the hazard of their liues defending it. To which purpoſe one ſaith, Thou art a jaylor, and not a maſter of thy riches, whoſoeuer thou art that hideſt them in the earth, thou art a ſeruant of them, and not a diſpoſer and judge: for he is a ſeruant of riches, who as a ſeruant waiteth vpon them; but hee who hath ſhaken off this yoke of ſeruitude, doth diſpoſe of and diſtribute them as becommeth a Maſter. So likewiſe as a ſeruant, though he haue the care and paines in tending them, yet he hath not the power or courage to touch them, or to diſpoſe of them to thoſe vſes which his judgement beſt approueth, for feare of diſpleaſing theſe tyrannous Maſters, the earthly Mammon, and his carnall concupiſcence. For (as one obſerueth) let a man aske of the moſt wretchedſt miſer, what hee thinketh of thoſe, who haue not onely the ioyfull fruition of their riches themſelues, but alſo giue of them liberally to the releefe of the poore, and hee will ſay that he doth well and wiſely in ſo diſpoſing of them. Aske him further, why then he doth not doe that himſelfe, which hee approueth in another, and hee will ſay hee cannot. Of which his inability, though he can giue many reaſons, yet the true cauſe is, becauſe his golden idoll, and his owne auarice will not ſuffer him. So that he is not a freeman, nor maſter of thoſe things which hee doth poſſeſſe because they are not at his diſpoſing; hee is not Lord of his money, but a ſeruant, and a jaylor rather than an owner. Yea hauing made gold his god, by louing, truſting, and hoping in it, hee abſtaineth from touching it, and from imploying it to common vſe, as though hee feared to commit ſacriledge againſt his Idoll; and can as eaſily bee perſwaded to breake his bones as his bags, and to teare off a peece of his fleſh, or maime a member, as to communicate any part of his whole ſummes to charitable vſes. Yea as though hee had receiued ſome ſpeciall charge from his Soueraigne, the neglect whereof ſhould bee puniſhed with death (euen when himſelfe ſtands in need of neceſſaries, wanting either clothes for his backe, or food for his belly) he dare not touch his full bagges; and as if they were not his owne, but the goods of ſtrangers committed to his cuſtody, hee dare not diminiſh them, leſt he ſhould be condemned of theft. In which reſpect the couetous miſer is truly ſaid to be poſſeſſed of riches rather than to poſſeſſe them, hauing them as a priſoner hath his keeper, which ſeemeth to waite and attend vpon him as his ſeruant; when as in truth he is his jaylor, who will not ſuffer him to goe any where, but whither hee pleaſeth. Or as a man is ſaid to haue an Ague, wheras it rather hath him: or as he is ſaid to haue a chaine who is bound with it, which enthralleth and captiueth him, and whileſt he hath it in his keeping, is alſo kept of it, ſo as he can neither moue nor ſtirre, but onely ſo farre as it giueth him liberty.

Diuitiæ apud ſapientem virum in ſeruitute ſunt, apud ſtultum in imperio. Senec. de vita beata. cap. 28.

Matt. 6. 24.

Pecunia ſi vti ſcias, ancilla eſt, ſi neſcias, domina. Senec. Si pecuniam habueris, neceſſe eſt, aut teipſum, aut pecuniam tuam habeas vilem. Senec.

Ambro. lib. de Nabuth c. 14.

Bernar.

Cant. Ser

Senec. Ep

119.

6. Sect.

That the rude of lings to riches is grieuous.

By all which it appeareth, that he who ſetteth his heart vpon his riches, is by them of an owner, made onely a keeper, and of a Maſter, a ſeruant. Neither is this any light ſubjection, or eaſie ſeruitude, but aboue all other ſlauery moſt greeuous and intolerable. For this earthly Mammon, and that greedy diuell of vnſatiable auarice, like cruell tyrants weare and conſume the ſtrength of their deuoted vaſſals, with carking cares, reſtleſſe feares, and toileſome labours; they make them to trauell ouer Sea and Land, to worke night and day, in the cold of Winter, and in the heat of Summer, to expoſe themſelues to innumerable dangers, and to runne with extreame hazard of their liues moſt deſperate courſes, and all to get or increaſe their riches. In all which indeuours, if they happen any whit to faile, and ſuſtaine any loſſe, notwithſtanding all their labour, their cruell Maſters ſet all theſe loſſes on their ſcores, making them to to pay for all that is miſcarried, with the pennance of bitter teares, and hearty griefe. And where as the hardeſt Maſters ſuffer their ſeruants to refreſh themſelues with reſting in the night, that they may be more fit for the next dayes labour; theſe much more cruell than they, doe ſo continually haunt them with cares and feares, that though they go to bed, they can take no reſt: for as the Wiſe man ſaith, The abundance of the rich will not ſuffer him to ſleepe. And as they hinder them of their ſleepe, ſo alſo they ſkant and miſerably pinch both their backes and bellies, and after their intolerable labours, keepe them from inioying the fruit of their labours, and ſuffer them not to eate till they be ſatisfied, nor to weare ſo many clothes as will keepe them warme. And howſoeuer they haue abundance in their keeping, yet will they let them haue ſcarce any thing in vſe; and poſſeſſing much, they haue nothing in fruition. Wherein they may fitly bee compared to ſuch Wards, who hauing a title to great poſſeſſions, die in their wardſhip, and neuer come to the vſe of their lands: or to the Patriarches ſacks, which hauing in them both corne and money, had no further vſe of either, but to bee worne out in keeping them. In which reſpect, the miſer and ſlaue of wealth is ſaid, not to be rich, but, as it were rich, becauſe in his abundance his Idoll and auarice keepe him poore. So the Wiſe man ſaith; that there is that maketh himſelfe rich, and hath nothing; and that maketh himſelfe poore, hauing great riches: becauſe, though he haue much in poſſeſſion, yet he hath nothing in vſe: and therefore (as one obſerueth) well might the couetous man who had bought the farme ſay, that hee went to ſee it, becauſe as the Wiſe man ſaith, they haue no further vſe of their wealth but to looke vpon it. Now what difference is there betweene wanting it, and thus hauing it, ſeeing they haue their riches no otherwiſe than the Phorcides had their eye, which (in a poeticall fiction, moralized by theſe miſers) are ſaid to haue kept it locked vp in a box, where as they in the meane time going abroad, were ready to fall into the pits and ditches for want of ſight, till at laſt by force it was taken from them. Finally, where as good Maſters ſpare their ſeruants in their old age, letting them take ſome reſt after painfull labours, and after faithfull ſeruice performed, make them free men, and ſet them at liberty: contrariwiſe, theſe cruell tyrants neuer fauour their bondſlaues, but the more faithfull ſeruice they haue done them, the more heauy burthens they impoſe vpon them. Neither will they euer ſuffer them to come out of their apprentiſhip, and to reſt from their drudgery; but euen when they are old and decrepit, and (as it were) haue one foote already in the graue, they ſtill turmoile them with feares and carking cares, and make them to trudge on euerie baſe errand which promiſeth gain, when they cannot go without a ſtaffe. And that which is worſt of all, they daily ſpend and tire them, not onely in painefull but alſo in ſinfull ſeruices, making them moſt vnconſcionably to lie, diſſemble, ſweare, and forſweare, deceiue with fraud, and oppreſſe with crueltie all with whom they deale; and that when they are ready to leaue the world, indangering themſelues in moſt deſperate manner to eternall deſtruction, and that for no further profit in reſpect of their owne vſe, but that they may haue a name to haue left much to their heires and executors. And therefore ſeeing this worldly wealth immoderately loued, doth bring its owners into this cruell ſeruitude, let this ſerue to weane our hearts from this exceſſiue loue. For (as one ſaith) wee are moſt Maſters of our riches, when wee leaſt couet them; and where as couetous men by greedy hungring after them, doe ſhew themſelues baſe beggers, and drudging ſeruants; the faithfull by contemning them, approue themſelues to be their Maſters and true owners; the one beggeth in keeping them, the other keepeth in contemning them. Neither let any man excuſe his greedy auarice in pinching his backe and belly for the loue of his golden idoll, by pretending his charge of Children; for God neuer taught any to rob himſelfe, to enrich his Children, nor to depriue himſelfe of neceſſaries, that hee may leaue vnto them ſuperfluities, wherewith they may play the prodigals in riotous ſpending them, as their predeceſſors haue played the wretched miſers, in greedy gathering them. For the Lord giueth his gifts to bee enioyed by thoſe vpon whom hee beſtoweth them; and would haue that alone laid vp for poſterity, which may bee honeſtly and Chriſtianly ſpared from naturall, ciuill, and religious vſes taking vpon himſelfe the care of prouiding for poſterity, when their predeceſſors cannot by lawfull meanes lay vp for them ſufficient plenty. Againe, let them remember, that God hath not giuen them children to bee cauſes or excuſes of their couetouſnes, and therefore when they thus abuſe them, as occaſions to increaſe their auarice, they may iuſtly feare, that God in his diſpleaſure will take them away, that ſo depriuing them of theſe figge-leaues of vaine excuſes, their couetouſneſſe may lie open and naked, when as it ſtill continueth as raging and violent Auarus terrena eſurit vt mendicus, fidelis contemnit vt dominus: ille poſsidendo mendicat, iſte contemnendo ſeruat. Bernard. ſuper Cantica, Serm. 21.

as it was before. For that children are not the ttue cauſes of their greedy ſcraping, it may appeare in that many who haue them, are liberall; and many who want them, moſt wretchedly miſerable; ſome being neuer wearie of gathering, who haue but few or none, and ſome laying vp but little, who haue a great many; whereby it appeareth, that it is not care of their Children which maketh them thus greedy in ſcraping but the inſatiable diſeaſe of their minde which tormenteth them with hunger, if they bee not continually feeding it with new ſupplies.

Chryſ. Homil. 68. ad pop. Tom.5.

§. Sect. 10. That voluptuous pleaſures make men to become ſlaues and ſeruants.

Finally, voluptuous pleaſures, when men ſet their hearts vpon them, make them of free of men to become vaſſals and ſeruants, ſpending all their thoughts, ſtrength, and time, either in procuring, or inioying them, if at leaſt they may be ſaid to inioy that, which in moſt tyrannous manner doth inthrall and ouer-rule them. For they are content to loſe their liberty to haue their delight. They ſet all aſide, which may either concerne their credit or profit, that they may ſerue their luſts, and cannot ſo well be ſaid to buy pleaſures to pleaſe their carnall appetites, as wholly to ſell themſelues ouer vnto pleaſures, not caring to bee their ſlaues, ſo they may inioy their company. And thus the glutton is a ſeruant to his owne belly, and the drunkard to his filthy appetite, ſpending all their time in furniſhing and feeding at full Tables, and in procuring and drinking delicate wines, and moſt pleaſing drinkes. The which Maſters they ſerue with ſuch ſeruile obedience, that the Apoſtle doubteth not to call them belly-gods, ſeeing they not onely haue all their ſeruice both of body and mind, but alſo performed with all deuotion. And thus alſo the whoremaſter becommeth a ſlaue, not onely to his filthy luſt, which maketh him to neglect all duty to God, his neighbour, and himſelfe, and not caring for health, perſon, nor eſtate, to runne at the command of his concupiſcence into all deſperate dangers; but alſo becommeth a moſt ſlauiſh ſeruant to his harlot, being wholly at her command running when ſhe appointeth, comming when ſhee calleth, going away when ſhee biddeth, giuing when ſhe asketh, and fearing when ſhee threatneth. Neither is this ſeruitude to worldly pleaſures and our owne voluptuouſneſſe light, or the euils few which they cauſe vnto vs: for no enemie can bee ſo tyrannous, or bring vpon any ſo many and grieuous miſchiefes, as theſe carnall pleaſures, when once they haue got men into their thraldome and ſubjection. For they doe not onely hold the body in moſt cruell bondage, making it to ſpend its ſelfe, conſume its ſtrength, and expoſing it to innumerable ſickneſſes, and diſeaſes, but alſo tyrannize ouer the ſoule, infatuaing the vnderſtanding, and ſo captiuating the will, heart, and affections, that they are in loue with their ſeruitude, and doe not ſo much as deſire to be ſet at liberty, but being made ſluggiſh and ſlothfull with this ſpirituall lethargie, they forget the ioyes of Heauen, and that true happineſſe of reaſonable creatures, and take all their delight and contentment in wallowing themſelues like filthy ſwine, in the ſtinking puddle of carnall pleaſures. The which maketh the eſtate of worldly epicures deſperate and remedileſſe becauſe they are in loue with their diſeaſes, and hate the medicines whereby they might bee cured. And as it is ſaid of Vlyſſes retinue, that hauing drunke thoſe impoyſoned cuppes which Circes had prepared for them, and being by them transformed into Beaſts, they were ſo in loue with their brutiſh condition, that they would not againe bee transformed into men: ſo theſe worldly epicures, (in whom this is truely moralized) being by this notorious witch of carnall pleaſures infatuated in their vnderſtandings, and turned into Beaſts, are ſo delighted with this brutiſh eſtate, that they cannot bee perſwaded to to leaue their brutiſhneſſe, and to liue as becommeth reaſonable men, & much leſſe as it beſeemeth the calling of Chriſtians. And as it is ſaid of the Torpedo fiſh, that it is of ſuch a poyſonous and venemous nature, that if it but touch the line of him that angleth, the poyſon is thereby deriued to the rod, and from thence to the hand, whereby he is preſently ſo ſtupified and benummed that hee loſeth his ſtrength, and the vſe of his limmes: ſo when theſe poyſonous pleaſures doe but get the leaſt acquaintance, and (as it were) but touch voluptuous minds, they are not onely made brutiſh, but euen ſo benummed and ſenſles, that they haue no power to moue in any good action. The which remedileſſe bondage of worldly epicures, one expreſſeth after this manner: Doeſt thou (ſaith hee) thinke thoſe freemen, or cleare from diſeaſes, whom pleaſures haue barbarouſly bound and enthralled? why, though they haue not a chaine to tie them, yet their owne luxuriouſneſſe holdeth them faſt in bonds with vnauoidable tenacity; and being fallen into the ſnares of beaſtly pleaſures, (as the bird catched by the ſubtlety of the fowler) the more they labour and ſtriue to eſcape, the more they are entangled and enſnared. So that if any man would retaine his precious liberty, hee muſt carefully auoide the immoderate loue of carnall delights, and euen ſtop his eares againſt the bewitching tunes of theſe pleaſing Syrens, that hee bee not allured and caught in this vnrecouerable thraldome. And if with importunity a preſent of voluptuous pleaſures be forced vpon vs; let vs with the wiſe Emperour not keepe them them from our ſelues, and the vſe of others, whom wee deſire to continue in a generous and free diſpoſition: but careleſly caſt them away to be enjoyed by ſuch Helots & ſlaues, as are of a baſe qualitie and ſeruile nature, as better beſeeming them, than ſuch as profeſſe the glorious libertie of the ſonnes of God. Eſpecially, conſidering that as they take away the freedome of men, ſo much more the libertie of Chriſtians, making them to become the ſeruants of ſinne, and ſlaues of Sathan; and conſequently vtterly vnable to doe ſeruice vnto God: for they who are addicted to voluptuous pleaſures, are ready to attaine vnto the ſinfull fruition of them, by neglecting all good duties which they owe vnto God, and to fall into any ſinne which will bring delight: and ſo by continuall cuſtome, their pleaſures doe ſo weaken and ſeize vpon them, that thoſe things which formerly they did of will, are now forced vpon them by vrgent neceſſitie, they being vtterly vnable to doe any otherwiſe. And therefore to conclude this point, if we would not loſe the liberty both of men and Chriſtians, and ſubject our ſelues to a ſeruile eſtate, and moſt ſlauiſh condition, let vs not ſet our hearts vpon, nor immoderately loue theſe worldly vanities, but vſing them as though wee vſed them not, let vs ſtand faſt in that libertie wherewith Chriſt hath ſet vs free, and place our affections vpon the ſweet and comfortable graces of Gods holy Spirit, and the eternall joyes of his heauenly Kingdom, wherein we ſhall be honoured, inriched, and delighted, without any impeachment to our freedome and libertie.

Hieron. ad amicum. Tom.4.

Ageſil pud Plut. Lacon.Ap thegm.

The fourth euill which abundance of theſe worldly things bringeth, is, that they expoſe thoſe that haue them to the enuy and hatred of thoſe who are about them: for ſuperiours ſpite at them becauſe they come ſo neer them; and inferiours enuie them becauſe they are preferred before them; & equals hate them, becauſe they are matched by them; whereas they ought (as ſelfe-loue maketh them beleeue) to haue had great pre-eminence: which maligning ſpite, and fretting enuy continue ſo long, as they continue in their worldly happineſſe; neither is there any meanes to be freed from them, but by loſing their proſperitie and becomming miſerable. Thus the higher a man is aduanced in Honours and Preferments, the more commonly he is maligned, and the greater his glory is, the greater alſo is his enuy. Yea, and that which is worſt of all, thoſe often who are honoured with outward complement, as cap and knee only, haue inward grudges borne them from the very heart, and though they haue but falſe glory, yet they haue it for true enuie. The which is more bitter and ſpitefull, if their ambition whereby they haue raiſed themſelues vp, haue plainly appeared in their aſpiring. For (as one ſaith) ambition when it breaketh out into impudencie, doth loſe its efficacie, and when this wicked affection groſſely appeareth, it taketh no effect. And therefore ambition being the mother of Hypocriſie, doth loue ſecret corners, and, as impatient of the light, it lurketh in darkneſſe: but when it lieth loweſt it looketh higheſt; like one in the bottome of a Well both darke and deepe, who is better inabled hereby to ſee the higheſt Stars, with a quick and ſtrong ſight, than they who ſtand on the top of a Steeple. For the ambitious man knoweth, that if hee haue many witneſſes who are able to giue teſtimony of his pride, it is the next way to hinder him of his deſired Honours, ſeeing the more glory is affected, the leſſe it is apprehended and obtained, when the affectation is diſcerned: for there is nothing more inglorious, than to aſpire vnto glory. An example whereof wee haue in in the Apoſtles Iames and Iohn: for howſoeuer the reſt were ſo ambitious, that there was a great ſtrife amongſt them who ſhould be greateſt, yet becauſe the aſpiring ambition of theſe two Brethren did more groſly breake out in their ſuite made to our Sauiour, to ſit on his right hand, and his left in his Kingdome; they hereby expoſed themſelues to the great diſdaine of the reſt of their fellowes. But howſoeuer this Honour attained vnto by ambitious aſpiring is moſt maligned and enuied; yet that glory and preferment, which commeth either by inheritance or deſert, wanteth not its ſhare of enuie and hatred; men being herein naturally like night Bats and Owles, who cannot without ſome impatiencie, and grudging, looke vpon the bright beames of their neighbours glory, or aduancement. Thus Caine could not indure to haue Abel preferred before him, though he were farre more worthy of preferment. And the Patriarkes pined themſelues with enuie, becauſe Ioſeph was deſeruedly preferred in his Fathers loue: and were filled with ſpite and diſdaine, when as hee did but dreame of his future Honours; which afterwards (they not being able to containe it any longer) did burſt out into cruell reuenge. Thus was meeke Moſes enuied and maligned, because God had aduanced him in place of gouernment aboue the reſt; and that not only by Corah, and his fellow Conſpiratours; but euen by his owne Brother, and Siſter, Aaron, and Miriam, who were next vnto him. And thus though Saul, for his deſerts affected, and greatly aduanced David, yet when hee dimmed his glory, and in the womens Song was preferred before him; Saul hath ſlaine his thouſand, and Dauid his ten thouſand; hee was filled with wrath and enuie towardes him, and greedily thirſted after his bloud. The like alſo may be ſaid of worldly riches, which Bernard, ad Epiſcop. Aquit. Epiſt.127.

Luke 22.24.
*Mat.*20. 21,24.

*Gen.*4.

*Gen.*37.4,11.

*Numb.*16.3. and 12.2.

1.*Sam.*18,2,8.

which when they abound, expoſe their owners to enuie and hatred: and the fatter that men grow in their eſtates, the leaner the enuious man waxeth when hee looketh on them. An example whereof we haue in Iſaac, who no ſooner was inriched with ſheepe and heards of Cattell, but preſently the Philiſtims, among whom hee liued, enuied at him. And thus great Land-lords are enuied by their poore Tenants, when they behold their large Lordſhips; thus one Neighbour enuieth to another his better market, richer ſoyle, and more fruitfull crop; and thus among Merchants hee is moſt ſpited at by his fellowes, who hath made the moſt proſperous Voyages, and hath with vnexpected ſpeed attained vnto abundance of wealth. Finally, howſoeuer a man would thinke that worldly pleaſures were ſo baſe and contemptible, that they were beneath the reach of enuie which looketh vpward, and hath its ſight alwayes fixed on high objects; yet when theſe carnall delights, which are in their own nature low, are aduanced and extolled by mens ouer-partiall judgements and opinions, they alſo preſently become the marke of Enuie; euery one being ready to ſpite at their neighbours, when they ſee them wallowing in theſe earthly pleaſures; eſpecially if themſelues want neceſſaries, notwithſtanding they tire both bodie and minde with painfull labour. Now the reaſon why the abundance of worldly benefits is thus accompanied with Enuie and Hatred, is, becauſe being finite, there is but a certaine meaſure of them; ſo that the more ſome abound, the more of neceſſitie muſt others want: and into the more parts theſe earthly things are diuided, the ſmaller ſhare muſt euery one haue, to whom they are thus diſtributed. And therefore men louing and ſetting their hearts vpon theſe vanities, doe enuie and grudge that others ſhould enjoy that which they deſire; becauſe their hauing it, is the cauſe why they want it, or at leaſt why their portion is the leſſe, ſo as they cannot haue it in that quantitie which they could wiſh; ſeeing a finite and limited proportion or quantitie, muſt of neceſſitie become ſo much the leſſe in the ſeuerall parts, by how much the whole is more often diuided. And therefore ſeeing worldly proſperitie and the abundance of theſe earthly things, do bring as much enuy when wee haue them, as miſery when wee want them; and will ſcarce counteruaile with their profit and benefit, the diſcontent which they bring with them through this malignitie and ſpite, eſpecially when this malice and enuie, being armed with power, is ready continually to make anothers happineſſe a ſufficient cauſe of quarrell, and to take ſharpe reuenge, becauſe they preſumed to receiue the Worlds proffered fauours; let vs not too much affect theſe maligned vanities, but wholly ſet our hearts vpon thoſe heauenly Honours, joyes, and treaſures, which being infinite, are not diminiſhed when they are communicated to many; but are rather infinitely multiplied and increaſed by this communion, euery one hauing them wholly to himſelfe, and by vertue of their perfect loue enjoying them wholy in euery one of their fellow Saints & Brethren. So that ones fruition of theſe glorious joyes, is ſo far from procuring anothers want, and enuie vnto themſelues; that the more they are in number, the more their joyes are multiplyed; for the more they loue, the more their joyes are increaſed, and the more they are increaſed by this communion, the more they loue.

§. Sect.
That wo things ar cauſes of contentio diſcord.

The fifth euill accompanying theſe earthly things, is, that as they procure ſecret enuie, ſo alſo they are the common cauſes of open enmitie, diſcord and contention; and that not only between ſtrangers, but euen the deareſt friends, and neereſt kinred; Brother falling out with Brother, and the Father with the Childe, when this bone of worldly vanities, as the matter of contention, is caſt amongſt them. So the Apoſtle Iames ſaith, that wars, contentions, and bitter enuying one another, proceed from theſe carnall luſts, which fight in the members of greedie Worldlings, whereby one coueteth that which another enjoyeth, and are filled with enuie and indignation, when they faile of their deſire. For when men haue ſet their hearts on theſe earthly trifles, & haue made them their Idols, louing them more dearely than Ionathan Dauid, yea, than the ſaluation of their own ſoules; then all inferiour loues muſt needes giue place, and when they croſſe the other are turned into ſpite and hatred. And from hence it commeth that Worldlings are ready to loſe their friends, for the getting of theſe worldly vanities, to neglect all duties which they owe to kinred and acquaintance, when they hinder their hopes, and will not ſtand with their carnall deſires; to circumuent them by fraud & deceit, and to offer wrongs and injuries, injuſtice, and all kind of oppreſſion, that they may by diminiſhing their eſtate increaſe their owne, and ſeaze into their hands as a prey thoſe things which they thus dearly loue. Which when the other, who affect them as much as they, do once diſcerne and perceiue, they become mortall foes, burning in hatred and deſire of reuenge, and defending their owne with all their power, as much now for hatred of them who would rob them of their jewels, as for the loue which they beare to theſe things themſelues. As then this loue of earthly things, doth take away that communitie, which ſhould be among friends; whileſt euery one deſireth to haue a proprietie in the things which hee affecteth, both in reſpect of their poſſeſſion, and alſo of their fruition and vſe; ſo doe they with

Iames 4.1.

with eagerneſſe, proportionable to this loue, defend this proprietie; and becauſe their right is ſometime ambiguous, and doubtfull in it ſelfe, and ſometime in their opinion onely (ſelfe-loue caſting a vaile before their eyes;) they fall into emnitie and contention, both challenging a right and proprietie vnto the things they loue. Which contentions and vnfriendly brawles can no otherwiſe be auoided, than either by not hauing, or not immoderately louing the matter or occaſiō of their diſcord. Thus Honours are the cauſes of emnitie amongſt men, whileſt they ſtriue who ſhall haue them, or detract from one anothers prayſe, or doe not giue expected commendations; or are ready to ſupplant their beſt reſpected friends when they ſtand in their way, and hinder their riſing; not ſticking to vſe all fraud and deceit, lying and diſſembling, nor to commit any outrage, wronging and oppreſſing, killing and deſtroying, thoſe who being ouerthrowne, may inrich them with their glorious ſpoyles; or doe by their ſtanding againſt them keep them back from enjoying their ambitious deſires. Wherein they make no difference of friendſhip or kinred; for if once they bee poſſeſſed and haunted with this proud furie, they are ready to make warre againſt their owne Brethren, to ouerthrow their Family, and profeſſe open emnitie againſt their owne Fathers, if they doe but ſtop them in their eager purſuit of Honour and Preferment. So alſo what ſo great cauſe is there of emnitie and contention, as worldly riches? Which being immoderately loued, doe cauſe men to offer any wrong or injury vnto their Neighbours, which may further them to the fruition of that which they ſo much affect. For whileſt all deſire to haue them in abundance, and in reſpect of their limitted quantitie they muſt of neceſſitie be but in the poſſeſſion of a few, hence it is that they continually ſtriue and contend, who ſhall haue the pre-eminence of ſeizing vpon, and poſſeſſing this Golden Bootie. And becauſe ſelfe-loue ſo blindeth men that euery one thinketh himſelfe worthieſt, and judgeth his leaſt ſhew of title, the beſt right; they are ready to incroach vpon their Neighbours, and to intitle themſelues vnto their poſſeſſions; if they be ſtrong enough ſeazing vpon them by force and violence; or if they want this tyrannous and ouer-bearing power, they will endeuour ſecretly to circumuent them by fraud and deceit; or openly vnder colour of Law to prey vpon their eſtates. Neither is there any thing more common than this, among couetous Worldlings; vnto whom riches is the fuell of their contentions, which being ſet a fire with their burning concupiſcence, flame out into wrath and emnitie. So that (as one ſaith) if they had not juſt men among them, which whileſt they ſtriue to make peace and part theſe contending theeues, doe become a Bootie vnto them both, they would deuoure one another with their eager contentions; like famiſhed wilde Beaſts, which with mortall furie would, when hunger pincheth them, fight with thoſe of their owne kind, that after the conqueſt they might prey vpon them, if there were not ſome harmeleſſe Lambes neere vnto them, which part this ſtrife, by becomming a more eaſie prey vnto them both. And as this is to be daily obſerued amongſt ordinary Neighbours, ſo no where more commonly than amongſt moſt intimate friends, and neereſt kinred, where by reaſon of their intercourſe of dealing, or occaſion of diuiding their conjoyned right; (euery one being to haue that portion which their Predeceſſours left them) there are vſually the moſt hot contentions and moſt implacable emnitie. Yea, this ſtrife and diſcord is not only cauſed whileſt men labour to rob one another of their right, but euen when they prouide for them in abundance, and only for a time keepe them backe from the enjoying theſe rich poſſeſſions, which they ſo eagerly couet. In which reſpect it may bee truly ſaid, that he who gathereth much, maketh his Heire his enemy; it being a ſufficient quarrell and cauſe of emnitie, that hee liueth ouer-long, ſo as hee cannot Vulture-like prey vpon him; and the greater his gaine ſhall bee after his Predeceſſours death, the greater is his griefe becauſe he is not dead alreadie; and the greater his joy when hee is departed. Neither is this onely to be obſerued amongſt Worldlings, but euen among Gods faithfull Seruants, who as they are the more corrupted with the loue of riches, ſo are they more apt vpon their occaſion, to raiſe Sutes and contentions one againſt another; as wee may ſee in the example of the Corinthians, who for this corruption are reproued by the Apoſtle. The like may be ſaid of voluptuous pleaſures, which being immoderately loued are the common cauſes of diſſention, when as one man encroacheth vpon anothers delights, and vſeth any meanes to reſtraine him from theſe pleaſures, which he ſo fondly affecteth, that hee is readie in a mortall quarrell to hazard his life, rather then to be depriued of that which his ſoule ſo entirely loueth. And therefore ſeeing theſe worldly things, which in themſelues are ſcarce worth the deſiring, are the common cauſes of ſo much jarring diſcord, and implacable emnitie, let vs not ſet our hearts vpon them, but vpon Gods ſpirituall graces, which the more they abound among men, the more alſo is their loue and peace increaſed; and on the heauenly joyes of Gods Kingdome, wherewith all being fully ſatisfied, there can be no cauſe of emnitie about them. Yea, becauſe euery one ſhall haue ſo much, that hee can hold no more; and yet through the perfecti-

Chryſoſt. in Epiſt. ad Eph. 4 Hom. 9. Tom. 4.

1. Cor. 6.

on of our loue ſhall enjoy the happineſſe of all others; therefore the more they haue, the more we ſhall loue them, being (as it were) the rich treaſuries of our joyes, and the meanes whereby they are infinitely multiplied by communication; whereas they vnto which we haue a proprietie, are ſo great in reſpect of vs who are full of them, that they doe not admit of any increaſe.

§. Sect. 13. That worldly things expoſe their owners to innumerable dangers.

Laſtly, the more men abound with theſe wordly benefits, the more ſubject they are to innumerable dangers, becauſe euery one is ready to doe them a miſchiefe, not onely out of their enuie and enmitie, which they beare towards them in reſpect of their great proſperitie; but for the loue that they haue to their eſtates, which maketh them moſt ready vpon al occaſions to deſtroy the owner, either that the object of their enuy being remoued, they may be freed from this pining diſeaſe, and grow into better liking; or that being deſtroyed, they may prey vpon them, and take into their hands the things which they poſſeſſed, as Ahab did Naboths Vineyard. To which purpoſe the Wiſe man ſaith, that the proſperitie of fooles deſtroyeth them; not only as it encourageth them in the wayes of ſinne, which bring eternall deſtruction to their ſoules, but alſo as it expoſes their perſons and eſtates to a temporall deſtruction herein this life. For who in the time of peace are ſo much endangered to the trecherie and falſhood of ſycophants & ſlanderers, as they whoſe proſperitie maketh them a fit prey to be ſeazed on? For whereas they neuer regard thoſe who are of meane qualitie, as being the object rather of pittie, than of enuie, and can with their ſpoile bring no profit; they bend all their forces againſt thoſe who are in a proſperous eſtate, making them guiltie, becauſe they are rich; and thinking it a ſufficient quarrell againſt their peace and ſafetie, becauſe they haue ſomething in their poſſeſſion which they deſire to ſeaze vpon, they being readie to ſeeke their deſtruction not ſo much for hatred to their perſons, as for loue to their riches, pleaſures or preferments, that they may out of their ruine raiſe their owne eſtate. Like vnto Hunters which purſue the ſilly Beaſts, hauing no other quarrell vnto them, but becauſe they preſume euery day to weare ſuch rich Furres, as are fit for Kings on their greateſt Feſtiuals: or vnto Fiſhermen, which make a prey of the poore ſhel-fiſh, for the precious pearle which they keep in their weake holds, as better beſeeming Princes ſitting on their Royall Throne, than the worthleſſe Muſcle which tumbleth in the mud. So likewiſe in common calamities, who are more expoſed to dangers, than they who are moſt noted, and moſt enuied? And who are more in the eye and enuie of all, which are readie to deſtroy, than they who haue high places, and great wealth? It is not the poore Cottager, but the rich Alderman that inticeth the forraging Souldier to the ſpoile: it is not the ſilly Pioner or common Souldier that is the marke of the cunning Musketiere, but the gallant Captaine, and great Commander: and in bloudie Battailes the death of a good Leader is more deſired by his enemies, than of his whole company: and the life of the King or Generall of the field is more ſought for, than of halfe the Armie. And as the skilfull Archer doth not make choice of the leaſt and dimmeſt marke (or though he ſhould, were not like to hit it) but of that which is faireſt and brighteſt, becauſe it ſeemeth to inuite the eye, and to giue vnto him ſome hope of hitting: and as the cunning Marke-man letteth paſſe the raſcall Deere, and leuelleth his killing arrow at the fatteſt in the Heard: ſo the more flouriſhing a mans eſtate is, and the more goodly ſhew he maketh in the eyes of men, the fairer mark he is for miſchiefe to ſhoot at, and the likelier he is to be hit, and deadly wounded with the piercing arrowes of armed enuie and powerfull malice; ſeeing like the Glow-worme hee is ready in the night of danger to diſcouer himſelfe with his owne remarkable brightneſſe, ſo as hee cannot flie the purſuer, but lighteth (as it were) a Candle for the deſtroyer to find him. So that a mans life and ſtate is neuer in more danger of being Eclypſed, than when they are in the full of proſperity; nor hee euer more in perill to bee catched and inſnared in the nets of miſchiefe, than when he is ſecurely preying vpon theſe alluring baites. For he hath many Corriuals in his loue, who would willingly by his death make a paſſage for their hopes; and he cannot want danger who enjoyeth alone, that which is deſired of many; ſeeing the loue of his eſtate procureth hatred to himſelfe. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that all thoſe temporall benefits with which the World ſeemeth to pleaſure his Fauourites, are rather dangerous ſnares to catch vs, than ornaments to adorne vs; in which whoſo reſteth and repoſeth any confidence, hath more pride, than cauſe of ſecuritie. And as theſe worldly things doe expoſe vs to the aſſault, and lay vs open to the wounds of enemies; ſo when they doe ſtrike and pierce vs with their enuenomed arrowes, theſe wounds which they make are more deepe and deſperate. For whereas a man loſeth a ſmall eſtate with ſmall griefe, becauſe there is but little loſſe, and that eaſily repaired and recouered; theſe great eſtates being ruined bring alſo great ſorrow; becauſe there is much loſſe, and no hope of riſing and reuiuing left, ſeeing they haue had ſo deepe a downfall, from ſo lofty and high a ſtanding. And as they hazard vs to be ſpoiled of our liues and liberties by open enemies; ſo they much more endanger vs to more ſecret and pernicious foes, pleaſing

Prou. 1. 30.

Senec.
Troade.

Tom.
dib. cap.

pleaſing Paraſites, and ſmoothing flatterers; whoſe ſpeeches deliuered by falſhood, and receiued with ſelfe-loue, tend to the robbing vs of all vertue, and ſpirituall grace, and to the vtter deſtruction both of our ſoules and bodies; for it is this honey of worldly proſperitie which inticeth theſe hungry flyes to come vnto vs; which whileſt they ſucke, they defile vs with their flatteries, and emptie vs of all good, that they may fill their owne bellies.

Whereby it appeareth, that theſe worldly things which men ſo fondly affect, doe not free them from dangers, but rather expoſe them to innumerable perils both open and violent, and ſuch alſo as are treacherous and ſecret; which wee ſhall yet more plainly diſcerne if wee conſider ſome particulars. For who ſeeth not that thoſe who are aduanced to the higheſt pitch of Honours, are daily indangered to the greateſt downfals? And wheras they who ſtand on the plain ground, are not likely to fall; or if they doe, ſuſtaine no hurt? they who are carried to the top of the high pinacle of preferment, cannot faile their footing, but they are indangered by a grieuous fall to be mortally bruiſed. Vnto which they are daily ſubject, both through hatred which men beare to their perſons, and for their loue to their places & preferments; for ouer-topping all their inferiours with ſterne pride, and by their commanding and ouer-ruling power forcing in them a wefull reſpect; by being thus ſeruilely feared, they alſo find cauſe of fearing, hauing endangered themſelues to all whom they haue wronged by pride, tyrannie, and injuſtice, who watch but for a day, and fit opportunitie of practiſing cruell reuenge. Or if they haue no quarrell to their perſons, yet the loue which they beare to their Honourable Preferments, maketh them willing and ready to ſupplant and ouerthrow them, when as they conceiue but the leaſt hope of riſing by their fall.

In reſpect whereof they who are aduanced to theſe high places are fitly compared to thoſe, who with great labour and difficulty climbe vp to the top of ſome high Promontorie, and ſteepe rocke; where they are not onely in danger of falling, by their owne ſlips, but alſo are expoſed to ſtormes and tempeſts, and endangered to be ſtrucken and blaſted with thunder and lightning. For daily are they in perill of periſhing by ſecret conſpiracies, or open violence, like vnto lofty Turrets in the time of a ſiege, which are either battered by force, as being the faireſt marke for the Canon to play vpon, or vndermined with ſubtiltie. For in the time of trouble and common calamitie, theſe great Potentates haue the ſame priuiledge that high trees haue in the furious ſtorme, which are through their height ſhrowdly ſhaken, if not quite ouer-turned and rooted vp, when the low ſhrubs are out of danger, or that which great fiſh haue aboue the little frie, when they are taken in the ſame net, who are reſerued for the Dreſſer, being fit to feed vpon, and to benefit the taker; whereas the ſmall Ones are caſt againe into the water, becauſe they are vnprofitable and of little worth. An example whereof wee haue in Zedechiah, who being ouercome, had his ſonnes ſlaine before his face, and afterwards his eyes put out, and carried into captiuitie, when the poorer ſort of people were ſet at libertie, and left behind to dreſſe the Vines, and till the Land. And in the time of peace and ſecuritie, when treacherie is plotting, and rebellion intended, they haue the Royall Prerogatiue of drinking firſt, if not alone, of poyſoned cups. Neither are theſe deadly potions drunke out of earthen pots, or wooden diſhes; but out of ſiluer plate, or cups of Gold.

1.King.25.7,12 Sed nulla aconita bibuntur fictilibus: tunc illa time cum pocula ſumes gemmata, & lato Setinum ardebit in auro, Iuven. Satyr. 10.

§. Sect. 15. That riches bring with them many dangers. Diuitiæ illæ quas putatis plenas eſſe deliciarum, pleniores ſunt periculorum, Aug. in Pſal. 9. Serm. 1. Tom. 10.

The like alſo may be ſaid of riches and abundance, which are ſo farre from ſecuring their Owners from dangers; that they more than any thing elſe expoſe them to them. For they are the hoped hire, and inticing baites, which encourage and allure Theeues, Slanderers, and powerfull oppreſſors in the time of peace to ſpie all aduantages, and to bend all their policie, might and malice againſt thoſe who abound with them; that bringing them to deſtruction, they may make their goods a prey, not ſticking at all to kill their bodie, that they may ſeize vpon their Golden Fleece. And as the Wolfe and Butcher doe make choice of the fatteſt of the Flocke; ſo both the deceiuer and the deſtroyer chuſe them who haue the fatteſt ſtates, letting them paſſe by vntouched who being an vnprofitable prey, will not helpe to enrich the ſpoilers; and therefore the Prophet pronounceth a woe againſt them who load themſelues with thicke clay, becauſe they ſhall riſe vp ſuddenly that ſhall deuoure them; and awake who ſhall ſtirre and vex them; and they ſhall bee their prey. In which reſpect the poore eſtate hath aboue the rich the priuiledge of ſecuritie; for whereas they may ſleepe ſoundly, and without feare of perill, in a ſlender built Cottage, hauing no other guard than their owne pouertie, and a doore latch, which they alſo vſe, rather to keepe out beaſts and ill weather, than theeues and robbers: they who abound with riches are neuer without danger, or at leſt feare of ſpoyling, though they lie vnder the ſafe cuſtodie of ſtone wals, double doores, ſtrong lockes, bolts and barres, which can neither be picked or put back with cunning, nor yet broken with force and violence. And whereas the poore man being on the high way alone euen in the darkeſt night, will ſing merrily before the thiefe, because his Habak.2.6,7.

Optimum munimentum domus paupertas, Senec.

Nudum latro tranſmittit. Etiam in obſeſſa via pauperi pax eſt, Senec. Epiſt.14.

Chryſoſt. in Luc 16. de Lazaro conc.1.& in Hebræos cap.10.Homil. 19.

pouertie hath procured his Paſport, and hath made the robber either his friend to pittie him, or a careleſſe enemy, who therefore alone maligneth him, becauſe he cannot haue a quarrell to his purſe; the rich can ſcarce trauell at noone day ſecurely without company; and hauing this helpe to backe him, oftentimes he groweth jealous and fearefull of his guard. And as they thus draw dangers vpon them, ſo when they come, they make them leſſe able to eſcape them: for whereas poore men are alwayes in readineſſe and fitly prepared for flight; hauing nothing elſe but themſelues to carrie, and may goe which way they will vnknowne and vnregarded, neuer troubling their heads in thinking what to carrie, or how to conuey it, but onely how they may eſcape; the richer ſort cannot ſtirre but they haue many eyes to obſerue them; and louing their wealth as well as their liues, they cannot find in their hearts to leaue it all behind them, though they doe not know how with any ſafety to diſpoſe of it, ſeeing carrying it with them it is both a clogge to hinder their flight, and a ſtrong motiue to cauſe their enemies to purſue them with greater eagerneſſe. And as the ſhip heauily laden with rich wares doth allure the Pyrate to haue it in chaſe, and is hindred alſo with her heauy burthen from making away from her cruell purſuer, ſo that it is impoſſible to eſcape; whereas another which hath no other waight but her owne ballaſt, ſaileth by ſwiftly and ſecurely, hauing nothing in her to intice a robber, nor giuing him any hope of fetching her in with his beſt ſpeed: ſo hee who hath little fleeth in time of danger cheerefully and ſecurely, hauing neither theſe golden clogges to burthen his body; nor care and griefe to oppreſſe his minde; ſo as he neither groaneth vnder his beloued load, nor grieueth for that which he hath left behind him: whereas he who hath worldly abundance is troubled with all theſe impediments; being turmoyled with his carriages, and ſorrowing for that which hee could not carrie, and equally caring for that which hee hath loſt, and for that which hee ſtill hath; which though it be ſo much that it bringeth toile to his body, and trouble to his minde, yet nothing grieueth him ſo much, as that he hath not more cauſe of toile and trouble. In reſpect of which difficulties that riches bring in eſcaping dangers, one compareth rich men to Cities without wals, which haue abundance of wealth to allure the enemy to the ſpoile, but no ſtrength to make reſiſtance; or like vnto thoſe who being purſued for their liues, doe flee away with long ropes tied to their legges, or with ſide garments, which euery ſtep they are ready to tread vpon, and catch a fall; whereby their ſpeed is hindred, and they betrayed into their enemies hands. Whereas they who are but in a poore eſtate, like vnto thoſe who are naked or lightly clad, eaſily ſlip out of the enemies hand, when he hath nothing to hold by, and being eſcaped, can haſt away with nimble ſpeed.

§. Sect. | That v | ous plea | are the | of dang

Finally, voluptuous pleaſures expoſe men to innumerable dangers, whileſt they arme all againſt them who are Corriuals with them in their delights; and alſo make them leſſe able to reſiſt and ſtand in their owne defence, ſeeing they both weaken the body, and effeminate the minde, as before I haue ſhewed. And therefore ſeeing theſe worldly things are ſo full of dangers, and hazard their Owners to ſo many miſchiefes, let vs labour to auoid theſe euils: and if wee cannot be perſwaded to follow his counſell who aduiſeth vs to keepe nothing in our poſſeſſion which the betrayer and ſpoyler may take away to his great gaine; and to haue as little as may be about vs to allure the thiefe; becauſe few or none thirſt after mans bloud only for it ſelfe, and almoſt all more reckon vpon the profit, than thinke on their quarrell; yet at leaſt let vs poſſeſſe them with moderate loue, and following the Apoſtles admonition, let vs haue them, as though wee had them not, keeping them with cold affections; and parting with them when they wil needs be gone with cheerefull mindes. And let vs labour aboue all things to furniſh our ſelues with Gods ſpirituall & ſauing graces, knowledge, faith, affiance, patience, a good conſcience, and the reſt, which will be armour of prooſe againſt all perils, and ſoueraigne medicines and ſalues to cure thoſe wounds and hurts, which by any aduerſe accident ſhall happen to pierce vs. And let vs ſet our hearts and affections on our heauenly joyes and euerlaſting treaſures, daily labouring in the vſe of all good meanes, to be more and more aſſured of them; ſeeing enjoying them, wee ſhall not bee in danger of any enemy; but be ſecurely happy, and out of the perill of all aſſailants.

Nihil ha | quod ca | ... | poſſit, &c. | nec. Epiſt

1.Cor.7.31.

Chap. XXXIV.

Of the manifold ſpirituall euils which worldly things bring to thoſe that ſet their hearts vpon them.

